THE EDITORS of the AMERICAN PREACHER, in compliance with the requeft of a very fincere friend to this work, think proper to explain to the public the true purport of the Fifth Article, inferted in the preface to the first volume. The object, aimed at, is entirely political, and has reference fimply to the eeconomy of the UNITED STATES, in furnishing themselves with books as productions of their own, rather than to be dependant on foreign importation. The idea was intended to be furficiently explained in the last claufe of the article—" by encouraging " the publications of our own country."

The Editors are fo far from an inclination to fhut the door againft the introduction of literary or religious improvement from any country, that they intend, themfelves, in due time, to folicit, and hope to receive CONTRIBUTIONS to this work from all countries where Chriftianity prevails, and where its Minifters may be difpored to build with us on the foundation already laid.

In execution of the plan, already adopted, as it refpects the United States, the Editors would inform their Reverend Brethren of the different denominations of the Christian Church, that the door continues open for the reception of fuch CONTRIBU-TIONS as they may be difposed to make for the promotion of this work.

The whole contribution will be held as a SACRED DEPOSITE, from which this work will be felected, from time to time, in fuch manner as will be judged to give weight, order, and dignity to the SUCCESSIVE VOLUMES.

On the first day of January next, by the leave of Providence, a felection will be begun for the FOURTH VOLUME, which may be expected out in the course of the enfuing year.

Be thou an example of the believers, in word; in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

THE great importance of the office of golpelminifters, and the neceffity of their difcharging every part of duty with the ftricteft fidelity, clearly appears from the particular attention which the fcriptures have given to this fubject.— The New Teftament not only abounds with commands and exhortations, which illustrate this obfervation, but the two epiftles to Timothy, and that to Titus, were written with this professed defign; that the nature of the office, and the duties of it, Vol. III. A might be fully underftood. This the infpired author himfelf afferts, when he tells Timothy, in the chapter before that which contains our text, Thefe things write I unto thee, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillow and ground of truth.

Accordingly, in thefe epiffles we find the character delineated, which thofe ought to poffefs who are employed in this facred work, and the whole duty of the fcripture-bifhop minutely pointed out, and most pathetically urged upon him. Amidit a variety of important observations on this fubject, our text is introduced. Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

I beg the candor and attention of this reverend and refpectable audience, whilft I endeavor to explain this precept; and then fhew of how much importance it is, that minifters conduct agreeably to its import.

In attempting to explain this precept, almoft the firft idea which will firike the mind of an attive reader, is its great extent. Gofpel minifters are the gift of Chrift to his church, defigned to be made ufe of for her enlargement and fpiritual improvement. That they may answer these purposes, and accomplish every defign of their appointment, they are bere commanded to become living patterns of that most holy religion, which they are to preach to others. From the example and laws of the great head of the church, they are to derive all the rules of their lives; and fo clofely to adhere to them, as to become daily copies for the imitation of every member of the flock, over whom the Holy Ghoft hath made them overfeers. Be thou an example of the believers. This is the general duty upon which the apofile enlarges, by defcending into the particular branches of 'that exemplary conduct, which it behoves minifters ever to maintain, in word, in converfation, in charity, in fpirit, in faith, in purity.

Some suppose that the apostle, by the word, here intends the familiar conversation of ministers with their people, on fuch fubjects as occasionally come to view, in their common intercourfe with them; and, by conversation, their general behavior and conduct. But this construction neither appears a natural one, nor does it preferve a proper diffinction, between the feveral particulars here mentioned. Others, whofe opinion is much to be preferred, fuppofe that, by the word, the apostle means the word of truth, the doctrines which are according to godlinefs. And the original not only confirms this opinion, but the obvious importance of right fentiments in the public teachers of religion, and the ruinous tendency of error in fuch characters, render it more than probable that this must be the true construction. The experience of the Christian church, in every age, loudly proclaims the fatal effects of examples of errors in ministers. And it is a mortifying reflection, that truth obliges us to confels, that most of the errors that have prevailed in the world, have owed their origin to the clergy. This melancholy fact, forefeen by the fpirit of infpiration, it is not improbable, might be the reafon why the apostle was fo particular, as to give it in command to ministers, to be examples of orthodoxy-to be careful to maintain the true gospel, unmixed with erroneous alloy; and fo ftrictly to adhere to the facred oracles, that none may ever have an opportunity of pleading their examples, to juftify them in making fhipwreck of the faith. For if they, whole office it is to teach and defend the truth, become the friends and vouchers of error, it is not to be expected but that numbers will follow their pernicious ways, by means of whom the way of truth will be evil fpoken of.

If then, we are to fuppofe, that the apoftle, in his first particular, requires that ministers become examples to the flock, by being patterns, as well as defenders of gospel-truth it will be natural to conclude, that by being exemplary in conversation, he intends such a general course of Chrstian conduct, as will be worthy of the daily imitation of their people. An exemplary conversation, in this view of it, includes a strict attention to Christian practice—a behavior that shall be a constant expression of fincere piety towards God—of all focial affections and virtues towards men, according to the feveral relations we fland in to them; and of temperance, fobriety, and all the virtues of that felf-government, which the fcriptures enjoin. Nor can I think it improper to obferve, that the exemplary converfation, fpoken of in the text, refers not only to our public, but to our more private conduct.— It requires that we become patterns of the conjugal and parental virtues, as well as of thofe which refpect fociety, confidered in a more extensive view. Thefe, though virtues more confined, and exercifed within a narrower circle, are yet very imporportant in their confequences, and muft doubtlefs make a part of what is included in a good converfation.

The third branch of that exemplary behavior which is enjoined in the text, the apoftle exprefies by the word charity. And as the fame word, both in the original, and our traflation, is made ufe of in the 13th chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, it may well be prefumed, that it is ufed in the fame fense in both passages. In the place last mentioned, he tells us, that charity is the great principle of true religion, that in which a gospelholines fummarily confists, and without which every other attainment is in vain, and will profit a man nothing. He goes on to observe, that it will fill us with a spirit of patience and forbearance, incline us to be flow to wrath, and ready to forgive injuries; that it will influence us to be kind unto all men, and to feek the good of others, even to the injury of ourfelves. That if we are endowed with it, we fhall be inclined to interpret doubtful things in the beft fenfe; be afflicted both with the misfortunes and mifconduct, even of enemics; rejoice in the good of all; and laftly, that this grace will never fail, but accompany the faint to glory, and be enlarged and perfected when faith fhall be fwallowed up in open vifion, and hope be converted into full enjoyment.

If then, as appears to be fact, the word charity is ufed in the fame fenfe in our text, the command will ftand thus: Let that holy love, which is the fum of all true virtue, dwell in your hearts, and direct your daily conduct. Give yourfelf up fo entirely to its influence, that they, for whofe fouls you watch, may ever behold in you a ftriking example for their imitation. Let them ever be able to difcover the nature of true holinefs, by an attentive obfervation of your life.

What the apoftle intends by commanding minifters to be examples in fpirit, may, we believe, be learned by attending to the ufe of that word in fome other places of fcripture. In the 12th chapter of his epiftle to the Romans, where he is urging on them the neceffity of practical religion, after directing them to be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another, he adds, Not flothful in bufinefs, fervent in fpirit, ferving the Lord. This fervor of fpirit, it is obvious is a zeal for the glory of God, accompanied with vigor and activity in the divine fervice. And among feveral other excellencies, which make up that amiable character that is given of the eloquent Apollos, it is faid, That being fervent in SPIRIT, be (pake and taught the things of the Lord. That is, his heart was warmly impreffed with a fenfe of the importance of divine truth, filled with zeal for the glory of his God, and the good of his fellow-men; and the fruit of all this was great diligence in his important calling. From a comparison of our text with these scriptures, it appears most probable that, by the word spirit, the apoftle means fervor of fpirit, the zeal of true piety, inclusive, perhaps, of the fruits of the fpirit, which the fame apostle enumerates in the 5th chapter of his epiftle to the Galatians. Admitting this construction, it is as if he had faid to Timothy, it is highly unbecoming any Christian, much more a minister of the gospel, to appear with a fpirit of indifferency towards his religion; or carelefs as to the fuccefs of the Redeemer's kingdom. Do you then fet an example to all believers in your zeal for this important caufe. Be fervent and active in the discharge of all the duties of the ministry; and abound in all the fruits of the spirit, that others may be led to a like diligence in their ftations, and to a like concern for the caufe of Zion:

Faith, which is another word made use of in the text, may be confidered either in its original nature, as it respects divine truth more generally confidered, or more particularly for that act, by which the believer accepts of the Mediator, and complies with the offers made to him in the golpel. Both the nature of the command here given, and the connexion lead us to confider it in this place, a-. greeable to the first of these views; as including, not only a firm belief of the divine existence and unlimited perfection, but an unshaken confidence in the truth of the doctrines, promifes and threatenings of divine revelation. In this general fenfe, the apostle tells us, that faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not feen. It gives fuch a prefent fubfiftence to the mind of the Chriftian, of all future bleffings, as imparts the fame confolations in kind, as will flow from the actual poffession of that good which is the object of his hopes. And it communicates to him-fuch a convincing evidence of the truth of things invifible to the bodily eyes, that they have the influence of undoubted realities. By this faith, the ancient worthies, mentioned in the chapter before alluded to, were led to a holy indifferency towards earthly enjoyments, and a chearful acquiefcence in that state of affliction, and in those uncommon fufferings to which a faithful adherence to the caufe of true religion exposed them. They confidered this world as not their home; declared themfelves but pilgrims and fojourners in it; and effeemed the reproach of Chrift, greater riches than the treafures of the whole earth. Such an unshaken confidence in the truths of divine revelation; fuch an entire dependance on the promifes made in the gofpel, must be most ornamental to the ministers of religion, and the influence of fuch an example most falutary to the spiritual interest of mankind. And fuch, we cannot but suppose, is enjoined in that clause of the text, now under consideration.

The laft branch of an exemplary conduct, mentioned in the text, is purity, which includes the ftricteft chaftity, together with univerfal holinefs both in heart and life. Be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

The feveral particulars which have now been briefly remarked upon, include all the divine, chriftian, human, and focial virtues. And it is farther to be obferved, that in order that minifters may become examples in thefe virtues, it is not only neceffary that they practice them in fome degree, fo as to fecure themfelves from the reproach of immorality; but they muft be fo eminent in them, as that it may be eafy for beholders to notice their piety. They are commanded to be copies of a good converfation. And as it is expected that the copy will exceed the imitation; fo the neceffity of minifters becoming pre-eminent in every Chriftian virtue, is here fully expreffed.

But we now proceed to fhew the great importance of fuch a conduct in the ministers of the gospel, as is fully agreeable to the true import of Vol. III. B our text. This we hope will appear from the following confiderations.

In the first place, it is the command of him whose ministers they are. The precept of the text is, Be thou an example of the believers. A command of the fame import the apostle repeats to Titus, In all things shewing thyself a pattern of good works. And in the chapter before that which contains our text, A bishop muss be blameles, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to bospitality—And of good report among them which are without, left be fall into reproach, and the snare of the devil. The same virtues are again required of ministers in the 1st chapter of the epistle to Titus.

If then the command of Chrift requires them to be blamclefs, and efpecially if it demands of them the maintenance of an unblemifhed reputation among those who do not belong to the Chriftian church, doubtlefs it binds them to be exemplary in every virtue; fince this is the only way to support a good character, both with those who are without, and those within. All that is implied in an exemplary conduct, is explicitly demanded of them on the most awful penalties; so that they cannot neglect it without the groffest discontor to their master, and the utmost danger to themselves.

Moreover, the exemplary conduct of which we are fpeaking, is abfolutely neceffary to a minifter, in order to his maintaining a confiftency of character.

Ministers are the ambassadors of Christ, fent by him to their fellow-men to make known the gofpel, to explain its doctrines, and enforce a compliance with it, by a proper prefentation of all its arguments and motives. Now then we are ambaffadors for Christ, as though God did befeech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. They are the stewards of Christ's family, to difpenfe, agreeably to his directions, the rich treafures of his word and ordinances. Let a man fo account of us as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Their business is to instruct their fellow-men in the knowledge of divine truth, and to urge on them the obligations they are under, not only to repent and believe the gofpel, but to practife all the different branches of godlinefs and humanity. To instruct, reprove, rebuke, with all long-suffering and dostrine. In a word, they are the public guardians of religion, fet for the defence of the gofpel, and under every facred bond to employ their utmost abilities, for the promotion of evangelical piety. In fuch an important character, they are called to act, and should they fail of becoming living examples of that religion which they teach to others, the inconfistency of their conduct, with their profession, would strike the mind of every beholder. And the keen reproach with which St. Paul filences the Jews, would justly apply in this cafe, and might be reafonably expected from every mouth. Thou, therefore, which teacheft another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest a man shall not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that fayest a man shall not commit adultery, dost thou commit adultery? Thou that abborest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege? Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law, dishonorest thou God?

LEWIS.

The inconfistency of character in an unexemplary minister, is too obvious to be concealed from the weakeft eye, and too fhameful not to procure him general contempt. Surely, if the obligations of religion are binding on any man, it must be on its public teachers. They are under, not only all the common bonds of duty, by which others are bound, but the additional ones which arife from the facred nature of their office. If they fhould neglect the duties incumbent on them, or practice the oppofite vices, the penetrating eye of the public will quickly difcern it, and reproach their inconfiftency. There is no way for an unexemplary minister to support a confistency of character. His life daily belies his profession, and contradicts his inftruction. An exemplary life only can fave him from this abfurdity. And the more eminent he is in this, the more ornamental and diffinguishing will be the difplay of his felf-confiftency.

But we proceed farther to obferve, that an exemplary conduct, in ministers, is necessary to the credit of religion.

The public reputation of any cause, either civil or religious, depends very much on the conduct of its principal abettors. If they maintain a dignity of character, worthy of the profefied importance of the caufe they are defending, they may rationally expect both to procure respect to themselves, and to add credit to their caufe. But if they condescend to an opposite conduct, they will affuredly bring dishonor on themselves, and on the caufe in which they profess to be engaged.

These observations apply particularly to the fubject now before us. Ministers are the professed fupporters of Christianity; they have entered on this fervice as volunteers, and are confidered as its principal defenders. And if the honor of every caufe depends on the conduct of its leaders, the honor of Christianity, in the view of the world at large, must be intimately connected with that of its minifters. If they support an amiable character, and walk before their flocks in every thing that is lovely, pure, and of good report, they will not fail of adorning their religion in the view of mankind. Although men are by nature difaffected to the gospel, yet they will view it with a fort of reverence and admiration, when they fee its teachers, adding to their important instructions, a life of ftrict conformity to those divine precepts, which they explain and inculcate on others. This is the only way by which ministers can comply with that command of our Lord-Let your light fo fine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

LEWIS.

And if an exemplary conduct in ministers is so honorable to religion, and tends fo much to promote its reputation, we way affure ourfelves, an opposite conduct must be equally reproachful. It is impossible for the teachers of religion to neglect their own perfonal piety, without exposing themfelves to contempt. And impoffible thus to expofe themfelves, without wounding religion. This observation is not founded on bare probability; the scripture furnishes us with an instance, that proves it an undoubted fact. When the fons of Eli abandoned themselves to vice, their impious conduct led the people of Ifrael to abhor the offerings of the Lord. This is mentioned by the infpired hiftorian, as a peculiar aggravation of their guilt. And the experience of every age can teftify, that the dishonor of religion has been the unfailing confequence of a neglect of piety by its minifters.

But we pass on to observe, that a life of conformity to the precept of our text, is neceffary in ministers, in order to the fucces of their labors.

It is readily granted, that the efficient caufe of a fuccefsful ministry, is the spirit of God operating on the hearts and conficiences of men. And that without these influences, the most able and faithful minister may labor in vain, and spend his strength for nought. A Paul may plant, and an Apollos water, but it is God alone who can give the increase. But still in perfect confistency with all this, fidelity in ministers, as a mean, has its influence. And the more learned, pious and laborious ministers are, the greater is the probability of their fuccefs. For although the Holy Ghoft is as truly the author of the application of falvation to the fouls of men, as Chrift is of the purchase, yet means are nevertheless made use of in accomplithing this great work. The truth feelingly impreffed on the confciences of finners, convicts them of their guilt. In a view of the great evil of fin, they are led to repentance; and from a difcovery of the infinite excellency and all-fufficiency of the Mediator, arifes the grace of true faith. Every Chriffian virtue is exercifed in a view of some divine truth. And ministers are made use of as the inftruments of prefenting thefe truths to the minds of their hearers. Sinners are convinced and converted, and true Chriftians edified and quickened by a preached gofpel. And if fo, the more clearly and plainly ministers declare the truth, the more clofely they apply it to the confcience, and the more laborious and faithful they are in every part of their duty, the greater is the probability of their proving fuccefsful.

Furthermore, if any exertions of a minister can increase the probability of his fucces, a holy life must certainly have its influence; for no motive is better calculated to strike and engage the mind of every beholder. It is a lesson of instruction which the weakest can understand, and the most ignorant feel. It is the language of actions which needs no explanation. A method by which a minifter may preach every day; and through means of which, he may explain to his people the.true import of every other fermon. In the exemplary conduct of a good minister, evangelical piety appears in real life, adorned with all the force which living example can give; whereas the best fermons are apt to be viewed as deferiptions of mere abfract virtues, which too many hearers take the liberty of fuppofing have no real existence. But when these fermons are accompanied with a corresponding life; when the preacher copies his own preaching, and exhibits a pattern to his flock of all those graces and virtues, which he inculcates on them, every objection to a life of firict religion muft be filenced, and every motive to holy living fet in a most advantageous point of light. And in that cafe, every thing is done to increase the probability of fuccefs, that the most benevolent exertions can effect. Such faithfulnefs in preaching and living, the gospel, we believe, is ever attended with a greater or lefs degree of fuccefs, according to the fovereign pleafure of him, who only can fecure the increase of what his ministers have planted, and watered with painful labors.

On the other hand, where an exemplary life is wanting, and the duties of religion neglected by its public teachers, every prospect of a successful ministry at once disappears. Although an irreligious minister should be possessed of the most splendid abilities-though he should be master of the most commanding eloquence, and tho' he should preach the truth, yet, unlefs a miracle of divine grace prevented, the contagion of his ill example would prove a ftronger fupport to indifferency, and irreligion, than all his powers to perfuasion could be to the cause of true piety. A finful world will much fooner imitate his life, than pay a proper attention to his inftruction. The inconfistency between his life and preaching will grieve the pious, harden the fecure, eftablish the infidel in his infidelity, and fill the minds of finners in general with prejudice against the truth. In fuch a fituation, what can be expected, but a fwift declenfion of true religion?

These observations may be farther confirmed by an appeal to facts. Religion has ever been at its loweft ebb, when ignorance and vice have been the prevailing character of the clergy. If we reflect, we shall find that this was the cafe with the Jewish church. When the priefts faid not, where is the Lord? When they that handled the law knew not God. When the pastors transgreffed against him, and the prophets prophefied by Baal-then it was that God delivered by his prophet that ftriking testimony of their apostacy. Be aslonished O ye heavens at this, and be borribly afraid! be ye very defolate, faith the Lord. For my people have committed two evils; they have forfaken me, the fountain of living VOL. III. C walers, and bewed them out cifterns, broken cifterns, that can hold no water !

Precifely the fame evils have accompanied each other in the Chriftian church. In the dark ages, and especially in the tenth, and feveral following centuries, it is well known, that the clergy were not only flupidly ignorant, but fcandaloufly immoral. They neglected the duties of their station, and became the ringleaders of almost every vice. The confequence was, the Christian religion was in a manner loft. Low superstition, accompanied with a pompous flow of unmeaning and inlignificant ceremonies, took the place of that fimple and unadorned worship, prescribed in the New Tellament. At the fame time, vice and ignorance, in their most alarming forms, prevailed amongst all ranks, and triumphed over fallen piety. And in every age, in proportion as the clergy have themfelves neglected practical religion, iniquity has abounded, and the love of many waxed cold.

From the foregoing obfervations, the importance of exemplary lives in the ministers of the gospel fufficiently appears. It is evident from its being the express command of their divine mafter—from its absolute neceffity to confistency of character—to the credit of religion—to the fuccess of their labors, and from the fatal effects, which an opposite conduct never fails to produce. Each of these confiderations, separately viewed, are of great weight, and, unitedly, they fet before us the frongest obligations, and most forcible motives to the constant exercise of that piety enjoined in our. text.

We are here then naturally led to infer the great importance of the ministerial character.

If gospel-ministers are the ambassadors of Christ -if they are fub-pastors under him the chief shepherd-and if the honor of religion, and the fuccefs of the gospel among men, depend so much on their fidelity, the great importance of the office they fustain follows as a necessary consequence. And it becomes every one, who has taken upon him this character, to realize, that he acts in an office, in which the everlasting interests of beings bound for immortality are deeply concerned. In as much as I am an apostle of the Gentiles, fays Saint Paul, I magnify my office. A high fense of the importance of our character, as gospel-ministers, is really neceffary to fidelity in the difcharge of our duty .---Without it we shall be in danger of relaxing into careleffness and inattention; for a low opinion of our office must naturally lessen our views of the importance of its duties; and the more inconfiderable we view any duty, the lefs attention we shall certainly pay to it. Nor can I believe, that a high fense of the importance of our office-characters has any tendency to excite that pride which is fo unbecoming the ministers of the lowly Jefus. On the contrary it will infpire humility, as it will dictate a proper sense of our obligations, and of the number, nature and great folemnity of the duties incumbent on us.

Again, from the foregoing remarks, we may infer the neceffity of the ftricteft fidelity, in the introduction of candidates into the gofpel miniftry.

If the office we are speaking of is of such great importance-iffomuch, under God, depends on the abilities and faithfulness of ministers, furely the utmost vigilancy ought to be used, to guard this facred employment from the approach of the ignorant and irreligious. One who is unfit for the ministry, either through want of proper information, or a religious deportment, will be likely to do more injury to the caufe of Christianity in general, and to the churches in our communion in particular, than numbers of the most deferving and faithful can do good. And as ministers are fet to guard the door of entrance on this office-as they are commanded to commit this truft to faithful men, and to lay hands fuddenly on no man, too much attention to the abilities, fentiments, and religious character of those we induct into the miniftry can not be given.

Finally, we fee in the foregoing obfervations, that the minifters of Chrift are laid under most folemn obligations to maintain a life of frict religion. They are bound by the commands of their mafter, not only to take heed to their doctrines to preach the pure gofpel—to fhun every error, and rightly to divide the word of truth; but when they have done all this, to enforce it by holy living.

Suffer me then, my fathers and brethren, to call up your attention to this all-important part of duty. And the more fo, as we live in a day when striking examples of piety feem peculiarly neccffary to ftem the oppofing current of vice and immorality. When wickedness is boafting of her conquests, and religion is pushed out of company by a train of fashionable vices; if we flould give way, or like the wife virgins in the parable, fleep with the foolifh; fhould we not have reafon to tremble for the fafety of the ark; and to expect that the torrent of vice, already defcending on us, will yet in a more awful manner, overfpread our land? Senfible, as I truft we are, of the importance of the conteft, let us make a vigorous fland; and by fhining examples of piety, as well as feafonable alarms from the defk, let us attack the vices of the age, and shame them out of countenance. Some of the principal motives to all this, though well known, and I doubt not realized, may yet be mentioned with propriety. The honor of God, the interest of the Redeemer's kingdom, the falvation of immortal fouls, together with the prefent comfort and future eternal felicity of ourfelves, all confpire to prefs on us a life of the most exemplary piety. And if any motives can affect us, certainly these must fire us with holy zeal, and arm us with Christian fortitude, to run the delightful road of God's commands.

May that all gracious master whom we ferve, and whole grace exceeds our highest thoughts. grant us those aids of his spirit which are necessary to enable us to fhine as lights in the world. May he profper our labors, and fucceed our examples, for the conversion of finners, and the edification of faints. And when he has done ferving himfelf of us here; when he has made us the happy instruments of great good to his Zion, may we have his prefence in the hour of death, and from the teftimony of a well-informed confcience, be able to adopt that most confolatory triumph of St. Paul. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them that love his appearing.

TRUE RELIGION.

BY

ALEXANDER MACWHORTER, D. D. Minister of the First Presbyterian Church, Newark, New-Jersey.

JAMES III. 17.

But the wifdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify.

THE Saviour of the world, in the dawning of the gospel, predicted, that there should arise false Christs and false prophets, and shew great signs and wonders, infomuch that, if it were possible, they should deceive the very elest. That men should cry, fome, Lo, here is Christ! and others, Lo, there! This prophecy, for the confirmation of the truth of Christianity, has been fulfilled in every period of the Christian era. But perhaps, in no feason and in no part of the globe, hath it received stronger illustration, than it doth in the present time in this western world. Has there been an age in which greater numbers of fects and parties, and variations of parties, have exifted than the prefent? Yet, if there be any in this affembly in these defultory days of levity, wandering, feparation and unfteadinels, who are fincerely feeking religion, and defiring to know wherein it confifts, or what it is, here is an infallible defcription of it, given by the infpired apoltle James. A man who had fweet experience of its power, and a certain understanding of its happy effects. The apostle in this chapter, in order more ftrongly to fhew wherein true religion lies, points out many deviations from it in its profetfors; and at length, more fully and clearly to characterize it, he introduces two forts of wildom; a wildom which defcendeth not from above; and a wifdom that is from above.

The former wildom which is from beneath, he thus delineates. It is earthly, fenfual and devilifb. This, with propriety, may be flyled carnal wildom, or a delufive religion, which like the hypocrite's hope, will fail its poffeffor, when God takes away his foul. This wildom is deferibed in its origin and fruits. Its fource is negatively intimated. It defeendeth not from above, that is, from heaven, or from God; therefore, the fountain of it must be in earth, or hell, or both. Its delineation fully declares this, when it is affirmed to be earthly and devilifb. It is carnal, worldly, covetous, hoarding. Whatever garb it may put on; it feeretly hates noblenefs, generofity, charity and kindnefs. It is fenfual; propenfe to all fleshly gratifications, to intemperance, flothfulnefs, and uncleannefs, as far as thefe fenfual indulgences may not be'checked or prohibited by the fuperior influence of meannefs and avarice. It is devilifh, malicious, cunning, crafty and deceitful. This is the nature of that wildom or religion which is from beneath. What other ftreams can be supposed to flow from such a source, than those St. James mentions, to wit, bitter envyings, strife, boafting and falfhood ? Envyings, with ftrict juftnefs, are termed bitter, because they are so in their operation and confequences. Envy, what a bitter corroding paffion ! Solomon of old, pronounced it, the rottenness of the bones! It is like scaled bones making their way through ulcerated flefh. Envy fometimes gives uneafinefs to its object, but always torments the breast in which it is harbored. What ftage in life is free from this unhappy temper? The great envy the greater; the middling rank those before it; the poor, the rich, the foolish, the wife; and the lowest class of the human species has a thousand objects, against which their feeble envy is directed, and from which it rebounds to invigorate their mifery.

Strife, is the next fruit of this carnal religion, and it receives in all its exertions, ftrong reinforcements from envy. Where firife is, there is confusion and every evil work. He loveth tranfgression, that loveth strife. It is aided by pride, and their combination often create a world of mischief. Vol. III. D

MACWHORTER.

Who can enumerate the evils which ftrife introduces into families, neighborhoods, congregations, towns, and even nations? Alienation of affections, reproaches, flander, wars and bloodfhed, generally take their origin from ftrife and envy.

Boafting is another effect of this inferior wifdom. Glory not, faith our apoffle. He well knew how congenial boafting or glorying is to our nature, from whence it fprings; and it is of the higheft importance to be guarded againft it. Of all kinds of boafting, there is none produces a more loathfome odium than a perfon's boafting of his religion.

The apoftle mentions fallehood as a further fruit of this unhappy earthly and fenfual religion. Lie not againfl the truth. Lying is a bafe vice, but never more fo, than when it falls from the lips of high profeffors, or is accompanied with the appearances of great fanchity.

Having thus defcribed the religion that is from beneath, the infpired penman proceeds to direct our attention to another fort of wildom in the words of our text. But the wildom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify.

The term wifdom, in fcripture, is frequently used to express precisely the fame thing that we mean by religion. This is generally the use of it in the Proverbs of Solomon, and in his other writings. The pfalmift employs it for the fame purpose when he fays, So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our bearts unto wisdom; that we may devote ourfelves to the fludy and practice of true religion .- This is the evident fenfe of it in this chapter, and especially in this verse before us. The reason, perhaps, why the inspired writers chofe fo often to express religion by the word wifdom was, because real religion or piety confists greatly in knowledge, difcretion, and prudence, which are the eminent conftituents of what we commonly call wifdom. Knowledge is fo effential a part of religion, that it is faid, They who know God are born of him; and, Those who know Jesus Christ bave life eternal. Mere knowledge is not fufficient of itfelf to conftitute wildom without prudence and difcretion alfo. It is not every knowing man that is a wife man. It is not enough for a man to have a large fhare of religious knowledge in speculation, but he must be able, and actually make a right improvement and application of his knowledge, in order either to be truly wife or good. A perfon must not merely be acquainted in theory with the character of God, the nature of his government, the fall and finfulnels of man, the method of falvation by a glorious Redeemer, &c. but the knowledge of these things must have a fuitable influence upon his heart and life, fo that his temper, difposition, and practice are reduced to the obedience of the gospel. When his knowledge is directed by prudence and difcretion, in fuch a manner, whereby he becomes employed in holy exercifes and holy duties, then may he be properly denominated wife or religious. Who is a wife man and endued with knowledge among you? Let bim shew out of a good conversation bis works with meekness of wisdom. Indeed, none in a scriptural fense, can be deemed truly wife or knowing, who have not acquainted themfelves with God-who. have not known and felt their deplorable flate by nature and practice-who have not cordially acquiefced in the plan of falvation, revealed in the gofpel, and devoted themfelves to godly contemplations, and to the works of righteoufnefs. All the knowledge, befides this, which the world ftyles wifdom, is foolifhnefs with God.

Having mentioned thefe few things to manifest that the term wisdom, in our text, expresses the fame idea with the phrase true religion, I shall now proceed to consider its origin and fruits, as they are here exhibited before us.

First, we are here taught, that true religion is from above. It is of a heavenly and divine original; it cometh down from the Father of Lights. All who are fanctified are faid to be the workmanfhip of God, whole glorious and principle dwelling is in the heavens. Chrift Jefus, the great author of religion, came down from above. The Holy Ghoft, the comforter and fanctifier of all that believe, defcendeth from on high. The oracles of truth—the words of eternal life—the law and the gospel are likewise from the same source: Holy men, by the infpired influences of heaven, were moved to write and speak those things. When God is pleafed to make effectual application of his word or providences to the awakening and convertion of a foul, this precious grace defcends from above. Thus all wildom, religion, grace, and goodness are of a heavenly and divine original; and that, which is from any other fountain, is not that religion or wifdom which will fave the foul. Hence it is faid, The Lord giveth wifdom; out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding. But this being a thing generally allowed, that all true religion proceeds from God, or defcends from above, I would not fpend time in laboring this point, but proceed to confider its nature and fruits, as here described.

We have it reprefented to our view in eight branches or particulars; a fhining groupe of conftituents. All the heathen writers combined could not produce fuch a conftellation of virtues. He, who laborioufly cons their mighty works, will no where find fuch a collection; and when he has turned over and fpread abroad their mountains of rubbifh, no fuch beautiful gems ftrike his eager fight ! Attend to the divine defcription. It is pure, peaceable, gentle, eafy to be entreated, full of mercy, good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify.

The first constituent or branch of true religion, or that wifdom which is from above, is purity. It.

is first pure, without any undue mixture of maxims or aims that would debafe it-it is free from grofs iniquities or moral defilements-not allowing habitually of any known fin, but studious of virtue and holinefs, in all manner of conversation. The original word, which is here rendered pure, fignifies also chaste and modest; therefore this term expreffes a fweet, modeft, decent, chafte, and pure deportment, arifing from right principles and proper views. When true religion is here characterized as pure, we must not from hence concerve that a religious perfon is inftantly made perfez, that he feels no more the motions of corrupt inclinations and affections; and is no longer guilty of fin, but only that he receives a pure principle or bias. whereby he is enabled to check his evil propenfities, to govern and reftrain his corruptions, fo that fin hath no longer that dominion over him which it formerly held. This principle, received in regeneration, tends to fill the foul with defires after, and will at last iffue in, perfection. Some may here refer to the interrogation of the royal preacher, faying, Who can fay my heart is clean? I am pure from my fin? It is a fad and humiliating truth, there is none doth good perfectly, no not one-there are none whofe hearts or lives are completely clean or perfectly free from fin, yet through the boundlefs riches of divine grace, there are many who can rejoice in God, who giveth them the victory over their corruptions, and enables them to foil their spiritual adversaries. As none ought to carry their opinions of religious purity to fo great a height as . perfection in this life, on the other hand, every one may eafily obferve, that there is fomething more intended hereby than a bare abstinence from the outward and großs acts of criminal fenfuality. There is more meant than an unimpeached character or a fair external behavior before men. Men may be, and often are outwardly orderly and regular in their carriage, and yet poffefs no real and vital piety .---Our Lord speaks of some who had this beautiful and ornamented conduct, that were the reverse of fincerity and purity. He reprefents them under the ftrong figure of whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outwardly, but within are full of dead men's bones, and of all uncleannefs. Wherefore they, who are the fubjects of this purity which defcendeth from above, are first made pure in heart. Bleffed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God; bleffed are the undefiled in the way, &c. These look upon all intemperance, injustice, difhonesty, and fenfuality. as forbidden by God, waring against the foul, condemned by the gofpel of Chrift Jefus, and standing in arrayed opposition against their eternal interest. The fear of God, love to the precious Redeemer, a pleafure and delight in propriety, integrity and uprightnefs, lead them to hate evil. A fixed averfion of the foul from iniquity, is a cardinal conflituent of true purity. The hearts, the thoughts, and inclinations of the carelefs and fecure, are entirely disposed to finful pleasures, and fenfual gratifications. They are governed by pride, am· bition, covetoufnefs, cuftom, inconfideration, vanity, or fome base lust or other. Hearken to St. Peter's declaration, Their eyes are full of adultery, and they cannot ceafe from fin. Or shall we go farther back into antiquity and retail the account found there; Every imagination of the thoughts of their heart is only evil continually. But when true religion enters the foul, and takes poffeffion of it, another turn to the temper, bias and difpolition is given. The thoughts and inclinations of the heart become now prevailingly fixed upon God and divine things, upon the honor of Jefus, the advancement of his kingdom, and their own imimmortal interefts. The breathings of the newborn foul are, Lord, create in me a clean beart, and make me of pure bands. They are now full of holy purpefes, defires, and wifhes. They long for the entire mortification of the deeds of the flefh, to yield themfelves up foul and body to the fervice of God, and to be holy and pefect as he is holy and perfect. The heart being thus initiated into purity by the incorruptable feed of divine principles fown from above, true religion will then difplay itfelf in a purity of life, by avoiding those things, which may difhonor God, wound the confcience, or injure the facred caufe of real piety. Its votaries will-avoid, as far as poffible, all loofe, profane, and vicious company. They will not take the abandoned, and notorioufly wicked for their chofen companions. They will hate the ftains on the forehead, and the garments fpotted by the flefh.

Mer

They will be governed by a dictate of common fense, arising from the gleam of nature's light, when the fame is adopted and confirmed by divine counfel, knowing by experience, That evil communication corrupts good manners. Intemperate paffions, inordinate appetites, they will diligently guard againft. Drunkennefs, with all its beaftly train, they will carefully fhun. The exhortation of our Saviour, with a fweet and an abiding influence, refts upon their minds. Let us walk bonefily as in the day, not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness. The impurity of revelling, rioting; the baseness of chambering, and wanton looks, wanton hints, words and behaviour, must not put the prefent theme of modely and challity to the bluth. Every thing which wears the afpect of uncleannefs, difhonor, difhonefty and unrighteousness, will be objects of their peculiar detestation. A ribaldry of conversation will be the abhorrence of their fouls; they will not indulge themfelves in filthy communication or filthy speaking, nor will they patiently bear it in others. Railing, whifpering, backbiting, reviling and flandering, wound their pure feelings. They cannot allow their own tongues this unkind and unchriftian latitude, and their fouls are often pained with fuch eballitions from the mouths of others. Their defire is fo pure, that they would wish to speak evil of none; and when they are called by authority, or a just occasion, it is with uneafiness they undertake the difagreeable tafk. Your talking, glorying, boafting, fault-finding profeffors, who deal around them an unbridled tongue in rafh judgings, cenfures, obloquy, pious hints, religious innuendos, lamentable reports, and ear-whifpered dirty tales, are bafe Chriftians, and nuifances in fociety, both civil and ecclefiaftical. They are the reverfe of that modefty, purity and chaftity, here fo beautifully recommended. The conftituent branch, the effential nature, or the firft fruit of true religion, or the wifdom which defcends from above is, that it is pure. Wherefore, baving great and precious promifes, let us cleanfe ourfelves from all filtbinefs of fiefh and fpirit : Cleanfe your bands ye finners, and purify your bearts ye double-minded.

The second line in this beautiful picture of true religion is, that it is peaceable. 'First pure, then peaceable. Peace follows after fpiritual purity, stands connected with it, and depends upon it. Those who are truly wife, will endeavor to preferve peace where it exists, restore it where it is broken, and recover it where it is loft. Peace, how charming, how entertaining, and captivating. to the pure mind! In families, neighborhoods and focieties, where this heavenly wifdom governs men, it renders them peaceable. The diffinguished features of a truly religious man are, that he is peaceable, and a peace-maker; he loves peace; peace is his atmosphere; he dwells in peace; and the benign rays of peace flow from him as beams from the fun. Our exalted Mediator, styled the wildom of the Father, is called our peace. An honorable branch of the name of the Most High is, that he is the God of peace. True peace is the purchase of Chrift Jesus, and an effect of the operation of the fpirit of grace. The great defign of heaven, in the whole scheme of our redemption. was to accomplifh and promote peace; peace between an offended God and offending man; peace of confcience; and peace between the children of men. The great bleffedness of the celestial state is, that all is harmonious, tranquil and peaceable there. We are commanded, as far as possible, to live peaceably with all men. Follow peace and bolinefs without which no man can fee the Lord. The truly religious are not addicted to strifes and contentions; they do not indulge boifterous paffions and furious heats; they are peaceable, being governed by the religion of peace. They neither offer wrong to others, nor bitterly revenge wrong when offered to themfelves. They know it to be their wifdom to be harmlefs and innocent; when they are reviled not to revile again; not to return railing for railing. They have made their peace with God by faith in Chrift Jefus-They preferve peace of mind in a diligent discharge of all Christian duties; and endeavor to keep a confcience void of offence. They promote peace among their fellow-men; maintain it in their families, cultivate it in their neighborhoods; and the eftablishment of it in church and state, affords them the highest pleasure. They are opposed to schifms, rents and divisions,

They well know that Cain, who feparated himfelf. and went out from the prefence of God, had a mark fet upon him: as alfo those mentioned by St. Jude, who feparated themfelves, were branded with being fenfual, not having the (pirit. They attend to the commandments of heaven, which require them to mark those who cause divisions. The pious are not only peaceable themfelves, but they will be ftriving to be peace-makers, in order that they may be partakers of the bleffings, and interefted in the promifes of Christ, when he fays, bleffed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God. From these things, it is manifest, that all are far from true wildom, who love to live in differences, and cherifh contentions; who prefer throwing oil into a flame rather than water. Many feem as if they cared not whether church or state, or fociety profpered, or was deftroyed, provided their corrupt humors might have room to difplay themfelves and be gratified. But, how far is this temper from the religion which is from above !

Thirdly, This heavenly wifdom is gentle. The term gentle fignifies patient, eafy, moderate. It is rendered moderation—Phil. iv. 5. Let your moderation be known to all men. It is translated patient, I Tim. ili. 3. It difpofes men to treat others with kindnefs, opennefs and candor; to bear with their infirmities; to pafs over many injuries as if unnoticed; to forgive offences; and to interpret all things for the beft. It is a fweet, equal and placid spirit. Gentleness stands in opposition to harshness, feverity, cruelty, incivility and acrimony. To be gentle, is not to fland upon the extremity of right, not to be punctilioufly rigorous in fractions of property, not cenforious in judging, not furious in opinion, not rude or overbearing in converfation. He, who is governed by this gentle and heavenly religion, will be fair, calm and equal. He will not kindle into a flame about the precife and perfect boundaries of righteoufnefs with those with whom he has dealings; he will yield in doubtful and fmaller matters, and recede in fome things from what he imagines his right, for the fake of love and peace. Virtue and vice fland firongly and eternally diftinguished one from another, yet the exact time of feparation cannot certainly be determined in a thoufand inftances. Virtue and vice in this refpect may be compared to the colors of the rainbow, which are ftrikingly difcriminated, yet to fix the perfect line of diffinction between color and color, or mark where the one color ends and the other begins, is impossible to the keenest eye, and the most accurate observer. We are commanded not to be righteous overmuch. The truly gentle man will be avoiding bitter, unneceffary and rigorous cenfures. He will be putting the most candid, charitable and favorable constructions upon the foibles and weakneffes of others that they will poffibly bear. Gentlenefs, like charity, hopeth all things, believeth all things, and covereth a multitude of failings. Where differences in fentiments take place, he will not wilfully urge his own opinions beyond their weight, nor wreft his adverfary's beyond their intention. He will carefully shun, as far as possible, all vain disputings and wranglings. He will not fet himfelf as the standard of rectitude and perfection, engroffing all converfation where he comes, and deciding as a mighty judge in every matter. He is rather ready to let his moderation and gentlenefs be known to all, in all things; patiently and fweetly instructing them who oppose themselves, and receiving with all tenderness the weak in faith, tho' not to doubtful difputations. Wherefore let us all put on the ornament of a meek, quiet, patient, moderate and gentle foirit. Bleffed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

Fourthly, the wifdom which is from above is eafy to be entreated. It is of an ingenuous facility, and difpofes the fubject of it to be readily perfuaded or prevailed upon to forfake that which is evil and to follow that which is good. It is true, there is an eafinefs and perfuafiblenefs which is culpable and bafe, but it is not a blamable pliability to yield ourfelves to the perfuafions of divine truth, and to the juft defires and reafonable requefts of our fellow-creatures. Many are fo felf-willed, obfinate and perverfe, that they will not relinquift their purpofe, when others around them imagine that they muft, and do feel the glaring conviction. A fool in his own conceit is wifer than feven men who can render a reason. But all those whose hearts have been rendered docile, tractable, and eafy to be entreated by divine grace, are of a very different temper. Although they are determinately fixed in their averfion from that which is finful, yet they are eafily entreated to receive divine truth, and readily fubmit to their duty. The unjust judge himself was recommended, in a fort, by our Lord, for his being won by the widow's importunity. The religious will eafily yield to the entreaties of others when better reason is discovered. Job would not despife the counsel of his fervant-Mofes was perfuaded by the advice of Jethroand David was prevailed upon by the entreaties of a woman. Many, after sufficient conviction of what is right is administered to them, will not drop their purpofe, but either with a fulky obftinacy, or an outragious fury, adhere to their affertions. But those who are made wife from on high, are not felf-willed, but eafily entreated.

Fiftbly, the wildom which is from above is full of mercy. The truly pious are disposed to every thing that is kind, benevolent, charitable, and good; feel compassion for the miserable—inclined to relieve those that want, and to forgive those who offend. Some are ready to apprehend clemency a disgrace, as if it argued men void of fortitude and spirit; but in the divine judgment it is quite the reverse; It is the glory of a man to pass over a transgression! It is Christianity to pardon and forgive, but it is grossly wicked to be malicious and revengeful. The religious man will feel a tender compatiion for tranfgreffors, eafily pafs over and forgive offences offered to him. He thinks of his own innumerable trespasses against God, for which he hopes for compassion and forgiveness, and that it would be enormoufly cruel in him, not to forgive the little trespasses of his brethren of mankind. A Chriftian fympathy arifes in his foul, when he beholds objects of diftrefs. At feafons he enters into the feelings, pains, and fickness of the afflicted. He does not avoid the chambers of anguish. He submits to the force of this divine counfel; To bim that is afflitted pity should be shewed from bis friend. In a special manner, when he perceives any poor or in want, he will not be over inquifitive how they came into fuch circumftances. but his foul will be drawn out to deal his bread to the hungry, according to his ability and their neceffity. Whofo hath this world's goods, and feeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compaffion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? He who is wife to falvation knows, on the one hand, the benediction which Chrift pronounced-Bleffed are the merciful, for they fall obtain mercy; and on the other, he trembles at the denunciation of our apostle-They shall have judgment without mercy, who have shewed no mercy. Therefore, my brethren, let us be all attention to the exhortation of St. Paul to the Coloffians-As the cleft of God, put on bowels of mercy.

The fixth conftituent of true religion is, that it is full of good fruits. Full of mercy and good fruits.---The defcription rifes upon us. Religion is not a barren tree, but brings forth in abundance; and the fruits which it produces are good; fuch as promote the glory of God, and the highest interest and happiness of man. Herein, faith our Lord to his followers, is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, fo shall ye be my disciples. By good fruits are undoubtedly meant all the outward duties of piety and righteoufnefs which we owe to God and our neighbor. Thus religion will always produce morality and good works. In vain we make a flow of religion and hope for the bleffings of it without good morals. Good works are effential to true religion in all adult perfons. The latter cannot exift without the former. Let your light fo fhine before men, that others, feeing your good works, may be induced to glorify their Father which is in heaven. This is the great end of their renovation or conversion. They are the workmanship of God, created unto good works. This was a principal defign of Chrift's coming into the world-of his humiliation and passion, that be should purify to himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Hence it is abfolutely certain, that the fubjects of this heavenly religion must be, in some confiderable measure, habitually adorned with good fruits.

A feventh property of this excellent wildom is, that it is without partiality. The Greek term fig-Vol. III. F nifies being without a partial, wrangling, fuspicious, judging temper; fo that there is no English word fully expressive of the original. The really pious will not be guilty of bafe wrangling, undue furmises, or unreasonable sufpicions; they will not be given to hafty or partial judging, refpecting perfons, through outward splendor or party affection. They are not fuch as those described by St. Jude, who have men's perfons in admiration becaufe of advantage. They do not fuspiciously enquire into the faults of others, nor deal partially among men. They effeem and treat every one according to his apprehended worth, and carry themfelves fuperior to the mean fpirit of partiality, uncandid conjecture, and deftructive cenforioulnels. Uprightnels, integrity, candor, and honor attend them in all their commerce with mankind. But,

Eightly, The laft branch of this beautiful delineation of true religion is, that it is without hypocrify. It wears no mafk, difguife or decentfulnefs. Thofe managements and practices which the world count wife, confifting in craft and guile, it cannot away with. It is fincere, open, fleady, and uniform and confiftent with itfelf. Carnal men oftentimes pretend to be what they are not; and many of them for ftrange purpofes will pretend to be religious, but they cannot poffibly hold out, or act uniformly to the end; and when the irregularity of their conduct flafhes the conviction of abfurdity and inconfiftency upon them, they will fometimes drop the mafk and appear what they always really were. But the truly good man's principal care is, to be what he feems-The defires of his heart are to be devoted to God in Chrift in fincerity-to walk in duty with a true mind, and to do the things which are honeft in the fight of all men. He intends not, by a profession of Christianity, to impofe upon God, the church, or mankind. His love to God and his neighbor is without diffimulation, abhorring that which is evil, and cleaving to that which is good. Honefty and faithfulnefs dwell with him. Chicanery, cunning, tricking, and artfulnefs enter not into his habitation. An undiffembled fincerity marks all his conduct, and fhines in all his conversation. The pure breathings of their hearts are, to be able to fay with the great doctor of the Gentiles, Our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly fincerity, not with flefbly wifdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world .- Let us fee that we have that faith which is unfeigned, and love not only in word and tongue, but in deed and in truth.

I proceed to close this fubject with a very brief improvement.

1. It must awaken in every mind fentiments of forrow and lamentation. Alas! if these things be fo, how small the number of the truly pious or good! How few, how very few can the most extensive charity observe, who are first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eafy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without bypecrify ! May we not justly take up the lamentation of the weeping prophet, and fay, O that our bead were waters, and our eyes a fountain of tears, that we might weep day and night, over the flain of the daughter of our people; over decayed love, loofe morals, and wafted religion ! Is it not a melancholy truth, that many in all the affemblies of our people are treacherous men; they bend their tongues like their bow for lies; they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and know not me, faith the Lord ? What ferious mind, without pain, can contemplate mankind, and behold one wallowing in all impurities, another governed by angry and peace-deftroying paffions; one addicted to knavery and difhonefty; a fecond outraging the facred laws of truth; a third indulging himfelf in grofs intemperance; a fourth belching out torrents of profanity, &c. Tears ran down the Pfalmift's eyes when he beheld men tranfgreffing God's law. How fhould true Chriftians mourn over the abominations which every where, almost, abound in these days of degeneracy !

2. This doctrine naturally leads us to examine and try ourfelves, whether we poffers that wirdom which comes down from above, or whether we are the fubjects of true religion as deferibed in the divine oracles. God has iffued this injunction, Try your ownfelves. Wherefore, let us bring ourfelves to this touchftone of fincerity. Of what fort is our religion? Is it the wifdom from beneath, which is earthly, fenfual, devilifh, full of envy, malice, confufion, and every evil work? Or, is it the wifdom that defcendeth from above, that is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and eafy to be entreated, full of merty and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify. Our Saviour affirms, The tree is known by his fruits. What fruits does our religion produce? Let us folemnly bring ourfelves to this doctrine, as to a criterion, by which we may learn our real flate and character.

Are we pure? Are our hearts purified by divine grace? Are we oppofed in heart to fin, and do we abhor all moral defilements? Do we avoid evil company, vicious converfation, and prohibited indulgences? Do we delight in God; meditate on things holy and fpiritual; flriving to keep our minds pure and pious? Is Chrift Jefus, and the way of falvation through faith in his blood precious to us?

Are we peaceable? Cultivating peace with God; following the things which make for peace among mankind; maintaining peace in our confciences, families, neighborhood and church? Do we avoid wrath, angry difputations and contention?

Are we gentle ? Are we moderate, patient, meek, modeft, harmlefs and inoffenfive ?

Are we eafy to be entreated? Eafily perfuaded to that which is rational, decent, just and proper? Are we readily induced to forfake that which is wrong, and to practice that which is good?

Are we full of mercy? Tender, kind, and compaffionate? Ready to forgive those that offend, to pity the wicked, feel for the diffreffed, and relieve the poor and miferable?

Are we full of good fruits? Do we make it an object of our attention to do good to all as we have opportunity? Are we diligent and careful in the performance of duty towards God and man? Are we doing juftly, loving righteoufnefs and practifing firit honefty? Are we rich in good works, and do others feeing our works glorify God?

Are we without partiality? Are we free from groundlefs fulpicions, evil furmifings, rafh judgings, underhand dealings, finitter and partial decifions? When we are called to fpeak or act, do we perform our duty without favor or affection?

Are we all this, without hypocrify? Are we what we feem to be, or what we profefs and pretend? Are we, as far as we know our own hearts, unfeigned and fincere in all our conduct before God and man?

What matter do these reflections afford for humiliation, repentance and amendment? Those who have ground of hope towards God, let them be quickened to increase in every Christian virtue, and in every branch of piety. Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Let hypocrites drop their masks, and impure finners awake to consideration. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let bim return unto the Lord and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Paftor of the first Congregational Church, New-Haven, Connecticut.

EPHESIANS iv. 3-6.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the SPIRIT in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one SPIRIT, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one LORD, one faith, one baptism; one GOD and FA-THER of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all.

W E shall confider, Firfl, The union recommended in these verses. Secondly, The various confiderations which are used to enforce it.

First, Of the union itself. Endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

In the two preceding verfes, the apostle befeccheth the professor of Christianity to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith they are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-fuffering, forbearing one another in love. The unity of the spirit is, therefore, Vol. III. G kept by meeknefs, forbearance, humility and love among profeffors: It is kept in the bond of peace. Their conversation is as becometh the gospel, when they stand fast in one spirit—are like-minded one towards another, according to Christ Jesus, and with one mind and one mouth glorify God.

With a view to this object, the unity of the fpirit, the apostle faith, We that are strong, ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleafe ourfelves. For the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. The true members of it follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another. They who have the most improved knowledge of Christianity, the justeft fentiments of Christian liberty; should walk charitably towards their brethren who are weak in the faith, and would be flumbled or offended were an unreftrained use of Christian liberty infisted on, or an unreferved declaration made of religious opinions, well known to be true from the best information. Our Lord postponed faying many things to his apostles, because they could not bear them. For the fame reafon St. Paul directs, Haft thou faith? Have it to thyfelf before God. Let not your good be evil spoken of. Christian charity dictates much condefcenfion to the infirmities of our brethren, who, from education or otherwife, are not in a prefent capacity to receive fome particular truths. Neither fhould the weak allow themfelves to judge and cenfure the ftrong, who ftand or fall to their own mafter. It is no excufe for an uncharitable judgment, that fuch judges are not well informed. Perfecutors are feldom, if ever, well informed. Will their ignorance warrant perfecution? The head of the church hath taught us to judge others by their fruits, not by the inward perfuafion of their minds. In respect of the latter there will always be a difference. This difference may confiss with equal capacity and integrity on both fides, and equal care to exhibit the fruits of Christianity, of which charity is the greatest.

Let every man be fully perfuaded in his own mind: This is the unalienable right and duty of every Chriftian. Certainly then they may be differently perfuaded. Notwithstanding this difference, they must keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace. This they will do, if they are meek and lowly, and poffefs Christian charity. The unity of the fpirit, therefore, doth not mean unity of opinion. Religion is a reasonable service: It is founded in perfonal perfuafion. Our own opinion, not another's, must govern our own profession and actions. This is the equal and common privilege of all Chriftians: The exercise of it should not destroy or impair Christian charity. It is a material branch of charity, to entertain candid fentiments of different denominations; to believe that they may have the prefence of Chrift as well as we. They may be best edified in their form of worfhip, we in ours. What the apostle exhorts to is, union in affection, in endeavors to promote the spirit of Christianity; not uniformity of outward profession; not perfect agreement in fentiment. This is impossible, men's minds being differently formed, there being fuch variety in their temper, education and circumstances. Christian charity doth all things to edification. The beft proficients in Christianity fay, with our apostle, All things are lawful for me, but all things edify not. He would not eat in an idol's temple, left he fhould wound and defile the confcience of a weak brother. Whether ye eat, or drink, or what foever ye do, do all to the glory of God. Give no offence, neither to the Fews, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the church of God: Even as I please all men in all things, not seeking mine own profit, but the profit of many, that they may be faved. Actuated by this fpirit of condefcenfion and love, Christian pastors will make themselves servants to all that they may gain the more. To the weak they will become as weak, that they might gain the weak. They will adopt no mode of public teaching, which doth not, cannot edify; but will rather fpeak to the edification of a Christian assembly, than gratify a fondnefs for unintelligible difquifitions. Jefus came to preach the gospel to the poor. He faid, If any man will do the will of God, he shall know of the doElrine. A religion which cannot be underftood by every upright mind, cannot be the religion of Chrift, who was anointed to preach good tidings to the meck. A religion which contracts and imbitters the temper, cannot be his who came to preach peace and good will to men.

The union which we are confidering is that which the fpirit of Chrift infpires, which efpecially fubfifts among his difciples, and which diffinguished the primitive believers, who were of one beart, and of one foul. The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-fuffering, gentlenefs, goodnefs, faith, meekness, temperance. It is the fame as the apostle. faith of charity, which suffereth long, and is kind, envieth not, vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itfelf unfeemly, feeketh not her own, is not eafily. provoked, thinketh no evil; but hopeth all things, endureth all things. Charity edificth-it covereth a multitude of fins. Thus is the unity of the fpirit kept in the bond of peace. The defcent of the fpirit on Jefus in the form of a dove, was an emblem of the fpirit of his religion-an inftruction to his followers to be harmlefs as doves. If, therefore, there be any confolation in Christ, any comfort of love, any fellowship of the spirit, any bowels and mercies. If profeffors have the fame love, being of one accord, of one mind, nothing will be done through strife, or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind; they will esteem others better than themselves, being kindly affectioned, and with brotherly love, in honor preferring one another; looking not, every one on his own things, but every one on the things of others. This is the mind which was in Chrift Jefus-this the union whereby those, who call on his name, walk worthy of their vocation.

Were Christian union no other than that which takes place among those who happen to think alike on religious fubjects, fuch was the union among the Pharifees. Christians should confider each one his own miftakes and prejudices; that others have equal right, and may have as good reafon to differ from him as he from them; that errors in judgment are confiftent with integrity of heart. The apostles of our Lord, of whom he faid, ye are clean through the word I have spoken unto you, did not apprehend, at that time, that he must die a facrifice for fin. They supposed that the Jewish ritual must be incorporated with Christianity, and that circumcifion must first prepare the Gentiles for admiffion into the Christian church. The spirit afterwards guided them into the knowledge of truths, which they could not admit during Chrift's. perfonal ministry. Hence his ministers and difciples fhould imitate the maxims of condescension and prudence, on which their master proceeded, would they keep the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace. Him that is weak in the faith receive ye. Follow after the things wherewith one may edify another.

"But must we, for the fake of peace, facrifice the truth? Is union to be kept with fuch as are not found in the faitb?" We answer, if any Christians fuppose their own fentiments are the fandard of truth; that all who differ from them must be unfound in the faith; their claim cannot be admitted. To fuppofe that their creed is fundamental to all, is to fay, "We, and we only, are always in the right."

Further, Is the difference between them and others, (whom they do not allow to be Christians) about the practical or the speculative parts of religion? The fundamentals, according to our apoftle, are faith towards God, as propitious through a Mediator; repentance from dead works; the admiffion of Chriftianity, upon the confirmation of it by the Holy Ghoft fent down from heaven; joining ourfelves to the body of Chrift by baptifm; the refurrection and judgment. These are differently expressed in the text by the terms one body, and fpirit, and hope; one Lord, faith and baptifm; one God and Father. Such are the principles of the doctrine of Christ. These being laid as the foundation, we are to go on to perfection-to build up ourfelves, and edify one another. Whofoever confents not to these is unsound in the faith. Whosoever confents to them, and doth not contradic them in his life, is fundamentally right. He embraces found doctrine, according to the fcriptures. He may not, therefore, be excluded from our charity. For we can know from the fcriptures only what is found doctrine. Whatever a man's faith may be, if not accompanied with love to God and man, his religion is vain. These two commandments comprehend the law and prophets, and the whole of Christianity. They who do not cultivate the fpirit of love, have abundant reafon to fuppofe, that their zeal favors more the things of men than those of God. Have they not also much reason to fuspect that their faith is wrong, fince it doth not work by love? Since they do not give diligence to add to it patience, godlinefs, brotherly-kindnefs, and charity which never faileth. Charity will not, except it be on the fureft evidence, think and pronounce that others err fundamentally concerning the truth. The beft are deficient in charity, and also in faith. A good Christian laments the languor of kind affections to his fellow-men and fellow-difciples, and improves all means for enlivening and improving the flame of love. He alfo laments the weaknefs of his faith, his mental darknefs and prejudices, and prays, Lord help my unbelief-increase my faith. We should earnestly contend for the faith as it is delivered to us in the facred scriptures, the pillar and ground of truth. We . fhould fland fast also in the liberty of private judgment, walking charitably in the exercife of it. We fhould compare fpiritual things with fpiritual, and allow our brethren to do fo, not judging their liberty by our confcience. Or if they thus judge us, shall we imitate this exceptionable part of their character? Let us rather suppose that they may be Christians notwithstanding, and thus shew unto them the more excellent way.

That is truth which the fpirit hath declared to be fo in the facred fcriptures. And every Chriftian must determine for himfelf what the fense fense of the scriptures is, by comparing one part with another, and using all the best helps to direct his judgment. To extend or deny our charity to others, according as they admit or reject our confruction of the scriptures, is no mark that we are impartial enquirers after truth. If the unity of the fpirit depends on unity of opinions, there can be none on earth. The apostle might as well have exhorted us to be angels as to keep the unity of the fpirit in this fenfe. Chriftians may have respectful fentiments of each other, and have fellowship with one another, as having obtained like precious' faith: They may love as brethren, and unite their endeavors for the advancement of the caufe of their common Lord: They may be agreed in the vital parts of religion, confiftently with great variety of opinion in regard to the form, and in the explication of fome doctrinal points: They may be agreed, that there is one body, one Lord, one faith, one baptifm, one God and Father of all: They may, be actuated by one fpirit, and have one hope. If agreed thus far, what hinders their keeping the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace?

D- A- N- A.

This reminds us, fecondly, of the various confiderations wherewith the gospel enforceth Christian union.

The first is, There is one body. The Christian church is compared to the natural body. The head of the body is Christ. Professors stand in a similar relation to him, and to each other, as the members Vol. III. H of the body to the head, and to one another. As the body is one, and hatb many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; fo alfo is Chrift. Every real difciple of Chrift is a part of this body, whatever his talents, education or rank in life, of whatever nation, or whatever clafs of profeffing Chriftians. Some would confine the church or body of Chrift to fuch as embrace their fentiments. But in the exercise of Chriftian humility and love, they would not reflrain wisdom and grace to themselves. Is this the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace?

In the natural body, the most feeble and least honorable members are neceffary. The foot may not fay, becaufe I am not the hand, I am not of the body. The eye cannot fay to the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head to the feet, I have no need of you. In the natural body, if one member fuffer, all the members fuffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. So we being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another. The whole church through the world needs the gifts, encouragement and fupport of all the numerous parts, into which, for mutual convenience or edification it is divided; while different denominations need the countenance of each other, and the whole collective body of Chrift. Particular professors also of each denomination have occasion for the concurring aid of the communion to which they belong, and of all, whether of the fame or a different communion, wherever difperfed, that the golpel may have free courfe. The goodnefs of the author of nature appears in the variety, dependence and fubordination of the parts of the human body; in the connexion, proportion and harmony of the whole. The gondness of the head of the church appears in the rank and endowments of its officers and members. The gifts and graces of all the various parts, and of each individual, operating together, the church will appear in health and beauty. No part is felf-fufficient, nor may conduct towards the other parts, or the whole, as though it had no dependance or connexion. Every part, and every member, should confider its relation and obligations to other parts and members, and aim to edify and be edified by them. Collected ftrength will beft defend the body of Chrift against the common enemy. Do profeffors agree in this, that the body of Christ is one? Then let all the members lay themfelves out to edify and increase it. No man ever yet hated his own flesh. Is there any more reason for hatred among the members of the Christian church? Doth every man nourifh and cherifh his own flefh? And should not the members of Christ's body, of his flefh and bones, by love ferve one another, confidering their common profession as a relation like that of affinity or blood? The partial regards shewn by different societies of Christians to their own communion, their zeal to propagate their own fentiments and way of worship, to the neglect of our common Christianity, favors fomewhat of Judas's care for the poor. To fuch as think it a waste of the precious ointment to attend to the common interest of Christianity, supposing every thing lost which doth not immediately advance their own communion, the words of Christ are applicable: Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will, ye may do them good: But me ye have not always.

Again : There is one Spirit-the guide, fanctifier and comforter, in whom all real Chriftians believe, The love of the (pirit is a farther reason for Christian union. For by one spirit have we all been baptized into one body. This is the fpirit by which we all have accefs to the Father, the fpirit which helpeth our infirmity; by which we are ftrengthened with might in the inner man, and rooted and grounded in love; to which we owe our heavenly birth; which witheffeth with our fpirit that we are children of God; through which we wait for the hope of righteoufnefs by faith; and the fruit of which is in all righteoufnefs and goodnefs. Divers are the gifts of the fame spirit. Being agreed in our belief in the cternal spirit, one of the facred three, shall we not keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace?

Again: We are called in one hope—the hope of an inheritance in that world where they are made perfect in love. That we have all the fame hope of a better refurrection, is a forcible motive to be of one heart and foul, and live in peace. If the love of God is fhed abroad in our hearts; if we have the firft-fruits of the fpirit, and wait for the adoption, the redemption of the body, fhall we not rejoice in the gifts, reputation and influence of all who have the fame hope? Shall we not affift them in the Chriftian life, and be thankful for their affiftance? Shall we not unite our endeavors with theirs for the furtherance of the gofpel which brings life and immortality to light? Are we fellow-heirs, and of the fame body, and partakers of the fame promifes, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chrift? Let us endeavor to keep the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace.

To proceed: There is one Lord-even Chrift, whom all profeffors agree to call their Lord and master. He is the head of the body. The members are complete in him. In him dwelleth all fulnefs. Thus far all are agreed. It should then be the concern of all to keep united to him, and grow up into him in all things, from whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compatted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love. It is of like moment, therefore, that the members have the fame care one for another, as that they be united to, and derive conftant communications from, their common head. Brotherly love is the best evidence of a vital union and communion with him. If he is Lord, is there a propriety in exalting any of his fervants into his place? Hath he not cautioned, Call no man master? Hath he not faid, All ye are brethren? Shall we then give to any of our brethren the honor which he claims? It would be alike carnal on our part to give, and on their part to receive, this honor. It would be a fource of envy, strife and divisions, instead of godly edifying. The unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace could not be kept. Is there one Lord? One head of the church ? Our bufinefs is to preach Chrift Jefus Lord, not ourfelves. What then must we think of the member who would assume the place and prerogatives of the head? Who fhould undertake to make terms of communion for his fellow-members, give law to them, fit in judgment upon them, and open and thut heaven? Such an one was foretold to arife in the Chriftian church, who should fit in the temple of God, claiming divine prerogatives. That man of fin, the fon of perdition, hath been revealed, as all proteftants fuppofe. And feeing he opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; feeing also that the Lord shall confume him with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy him with the brightness of his coming, let protestants beware that they do not affume dominion over the faith of Christ's disciples. It behoves protestant pastors to renounce the fpirit as well as fuperflition of Rome. Not as being lords over God's beritage, but being enfamples to the flock-belpers of their jay.

Further : There is one faith-the faith of our Lord Jefus Chrift. For he is the author and finisher of our faith. He hath not left in his church authority in matters of faith. Our faith is one; for, in the first place, there is but one facrifice for fin, one advocate with the Father, one Mediator between God and men, Jefus Chrift. There is falvation in no other. The apoftle is arguing on the common principles of those who acknowledged his divine miffion. No other was crucified for 1s. No other maketh interceffion for tranfgreffors. In no other is God reconciling a loft world to himfelf. Either Christianity is not a divine revelation, or the redemption in Chrift Jefus is the only way of justification. This was revealed to the ancient church. All the promifes pointed forward to him: He was ordained before the foundation of the world, to reftore our apostate race. The way of falvation hath been but one from the fall till now. Abel by this faith offered to God an excellent facrifice. Abraham faw Chrift's day. The Mofaic institution had patterns of heavenly things. The fpirit of Chrift was in all the prophets, who teftified of his fufferings and glory. The just lived by the fame faith, in general, before his coming as fince. The Christian dispensation is defigned to gather together in one the children of God.

Moreover, our faith is one, as the terms of falvation are the fame for all. These terms are faith and repentance—faith working by love; repentance denoting a conscience purged from dead works. In this respect there is no difference. All the heirs of falvation have the fame spirit of faith. They confide in the promifes, which in Chrift are yea, and amen, unto the glory of God. They are renewed in the fpirit of their mind. They agree in building the fame foundation laid in Zion, and in having the fame mind which was in Chrift Jefus. For if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of bis. There are fundamental truths, wherein all good Christians are agreed. These the text mentions. These are mentioned Hebrews vi. 1, 2. Would you know the foundation principles of Chriftianity, fearch the scriptures which were given by infpiration of God.-Thefe contain the faith delivered to the faints. Forfaking thefe, Chrift is divided, and the faith of him is no longer one. Forfaking thefe, our faith doth not fland in the power of God, but in the wildom of men. If we agree to acknowledge that Jefus is the Son of God and Saviour of the world, and that faith and repentance are the terms of falvation, fhould we not endeavor to keep the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace? Can we have faving faith, or true repentance, if we do not follow after charity?

DANA.

Further: There is one baptifm. We have all been baptized in the fame name. Our baptifm fignifies that we have put off the old man, and put on the new; are dead and rifen with Chrift. Among the marks of the old man are pride, hatred, variance, emulations, strife, and whatever is opposed to Chriftian edification. But they who have put on the new man, are kind one to another, tender-heart_ ed, forgiving one another, followers of God as dear children, walking in love, as Christ also loved us. By baptifm we become members of his church. For when he commiffioned his apoftles, he faid, Go, teach all nations, or make disciples, as the original word imports. They were to make difciples by baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoft. If the disciples of Jesus are members of his church, then baptized perfons are. And who are members, if disciples are not? What is the advantage or meaning of baptifm, if the fubject is not hereby brought into the Christian church? The disciples of Jesus, by the engagements of their baptism, are to observe all things he hath commanded; of which humility and love are chief. Of both thefe he hath left them the brightest pattern. A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples. How nearly the interest of Christianity is concerned in the maintainance of this fpirit of union and love among its profeffors, further appears from our Lord's prayer for all who embrace the faith of him. That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they alfo may be one in us: That the world may believe that thou hast sent me. Would we, therefore, verify our baptifm into Chrift, we must keep the unity of the spi-VOL. III. 1 rit in the bond of peace. For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body.

Laftly: There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all. We have all one father, and are children of the fame family, as one God hath created us. We alike live, and move, and have our being in him. The Father of the great family in heaven and earth is not willing that any of his offspring fhould perifh. His compaffion to the children of difobedience is reprefented by that of the father in the parable to his prodigal fon. He hath revealed himfelf as the God and Father of our Lord Jefus Chrift, in whom he hath abounded towards us in all wifdom and love; in whom believers are filled with all the fulnefs of God. Doubtlefs he requires the children of his family to dwell together in unity; to imitate the example of their parent. His mercy towards us is great, as the heaven is high above the earth .--Those who are born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God, evidence their divine extraction by bowels of mercies, kindness, bumility, meekness, forbearance, forgivenefs and charity. Above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness. And let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which alfo ye are called in one body.

Thus the apoftle's reasoning ftands: There is one body, and one fpirit, and one hope; one Lord, one faith, one baptism; one God and Father of all. Therefore keep the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace.*

* Chriftian condefcention perfectly confifts with having fixed principles, with holding fast our profession. It differs, therefore, from giving up or difguifing religious principles in complaifance to the deniers or contemners of them; from flattering men in er-ror; from complying with their vices. Such is the civility of this world. But the confcience of the real Chriftian bears witnefs to his fimplicity and godly fincerity. Every confiftent Protestant must suppose that his own communion is most conformable to the New Testament: In this view he must prefer it. But must he, therefore, deny the validity of Christian administrations in other communions? Is there in all wife and good men the fame knowledge? May they not differ in fome points which they respectively judge important? And may they not agree, at the fame time, in the spirit of the gospel, the fruits of righteousneis and the faith which worketh by love? Do they fay to each other, " Stand by, " thyfelf, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou art?"---Every doctrine which we embrace, though a Christian doctrine, may not be a part of the foundation. If the teaching or avowal of it, in prefent circumftances, would be miftaken or ill-improved, difturb the peace of Chrift's church, or wound any true Chriftian, what do we learn from our Lord's inftruction and example in fuch a cafe? New wine may not be put into old bottles, nor a new piece of cloth fewed upon an old garment, as we would not rend either .--Our Lord gradually prepared the minds of men to admit his doctrine. He did not attack prejudicate opinions in a direct and warm manner. He fpake much in parables. His reproofs were introduced with the circumspection which the application of difagreeable truths require. Indifcreet modes of explaining fome Chriftian doctrines or offenfive terms and expressions, have been an occasion of the most melancholy separations. What schifm hath been made in the body of Chrift by the attempts of fome of his difciples to establish uniformity? By the imposition of rites and ceremonies? By the contention of different denominations for their own peculiar fentiments, as though thefe were the common doctrine of falvation? What usurpation is this? Zeal is a Christian grace: But let it be according to knowledge; otherwife we fight against God, while we think to do him fervice. We may not be indifferent or cold in his cause; nor may we offend his children. . The further we condefeend in things harmlefs, the greater profpect is there that we may correct any unhappy miftakes of others; and gain them over to the truth. Should we be miftaken in thinking them to be good Chriftians, will charity be imputed as a fault? Should they be really fuch, and yet anathematized by us, it had been better that a mill-ftone were hung about our neck, and we caft into the fea.

Perfons of fuperior rank, abilities and piety peculiarly promote the Chriftian improvement of others, by attention to their particular Imprefied with these confiderations, the disciples of the bleffed Jesus will take much pains for the union and edification of his church, the confirmation of its members, and enlargement of its boundaries. They will rejoice when the univerfal church prospers, and will lament corruptions and divisions. They wish to promote the spirit of Christianity rather than any one form of profession. For they believe that there may be the power of godlines under different forms.

Particular Chriftian focieties have many opportunities by love to ferve one another. A regular difcharge of their mutual duties would promote the common caufe of the gofpel. Being children of God without rebuke, in the midft of a crooked and perverfe nation, they would at leaft cut off occasion from fuch as feek it, and may be inftrumental in turning finners from the error of their way. Keeping the unity of the fpirit, their prayers for the prosperity of Chrift's kingdom will be more fervent, and afcend with greater acceptance. The temper and circumftances, mifapprehenfions and prejudices. He muft be an unfkilful pilot, who oppofeth the current "when the "tide runs high in the channel, inftead of coaffing it along the "fhore, which is the fhorteft and fafeft way to the point he would "gain."

It better becomes us to fludy the fpirit of our religion, to cultivate it in outfelves and promote it in others, than to bind heavy hurdens, and lay them on our fellow-fervants. Those who are as a city on an hill, fhould be lights in the world. The truth or importance of doctrines in religion must be effimated by their practical influence. Confequently, that fystem is wrong, which is prejudical to holinefs, peace and love. It is immaterial whether we do or do not fee wherein the fophistry lies: Being contrary to holinefs we rguft reject it.

falutary influence of their Christian spirit would fpread. By their means the gospel would run and be glorified, while they would experience the pleafure of brethren dwelling together in unity. We may whenever we will, and in various ways, do good to, and receive good from, the body of profeffors with whom we statedly worship. But if Chriftian charity be wanting, the nearer our connexion, and the more constant our intercourse, the more prejudicial to our fpiritual interests. Being members, not only of the fame general body of Chrift, but more nearly connected also by the fame form of profession, and attending Christian inftirutions together, the members of particular churches have special advantage to instruct, exhort, watch over, admonish and comfort one another. Churches divided cannot fland, any more than kingdoms or families.

Whenever we meet to record the dying love of our Redeemer, we profefs our charity to one another, as well as our faith in him. Hence the facred fupper is called the COMMUNION of the body and blood of Chrift. Our general temper, and treatment of one another, fhould therefore be fuch as will difpofe us for fellowship in breaking of bread and prayers. The crofs of Chrift is defigned to flay all enmity, pride and felf-fufficiency in man. If thefe have posseftion of our hearts when we meet at his table, our coming together must be for the worfe, not for the better. When Chrift is fet forth as crucified before our eyes, our brotherly love, as well as our love to God and gratitude to the Saviour, fhould kindle into a flame, which the floods of temptation cannot quench. When we remember how we have been loved, can we love too much? When we remember how much is forgiven us for Chrift's fake, can we forgive too much? Shall we be indulgent to our own faults, and fevere to the faults of others? Our Lord prayed for them that crucified him, Father, forgive them. He made the only plea that could extenuate their fin: They know not what they do. Are we confcious to no faults in ourfelves? Thou who canft fay that thou art finlefs, go and judge thy brother.

Have we never difcovered, that we have embraced wrong opinions? That time and opportunity, change of fituation and circumftances, have changed our views? That we have contradicted ourfelves? If we have not made this difcovery, we must have been deficient in examining. If we have often found that we have erred, can we make no allowance for others? Or are we fure that they now err more than we do ourfelves? Our want of charity may be as criminal at leaft as their miftake in judgment. On a change of circumftances we, perhaps, fhould fee as they fee. Why then do we marvei, that they do not fee as we do?

Good and needful is St. Paul's advice to every profeffor, not to think of himsfelf more highly than be ought, but soberly. Having different talents and opportunities, let us confider one another to provoke unto love and good works. As members of one body, having different offices, let us make no fchifm in it, either by cutting off others from it, or feparating ourfelves without caufe from other members. So far as any profeffors do either of thefe, they have not the fpirit. Let us build up one another on our most holy faith, keeping ourfelves in the love of God, and praying for the peace of Jerufalem. Jerufalem is builded as a city that is compact together.

- Extraordinary and ordinary gifts have been beflowed for the edification of the body of Chrift, till we come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. The redeemed of the Lord, brought to glory, will make up one fociety with angels who have ministered for their falvation. Behold the bleffed fociety in heaven, each one made perfect in love. There Paul and Barnabas have no diffention. The fons of Zebedee incur not the indignation of their fellowapostles by asking for precedence. Christians do not think it reprehensible that their brethren did not follow them. They fee how much they were mistaken in attempting to propagate their mafter's religion by the fword, or calling for fire from heaven for the purpofe. They who might entertain the idea of a pure church on earth, and took pains to feparate the tares from the wheat, there at least know, that it is the province of the omnifcient judge to gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. Numbers will fit down in that kingdom, while fome who would have excluded them, fhall be thrust out: There Ephraim doth not envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim. The mutual prejudices, mistakes and offences among different claffes, and even among brethren of the fame focicty, on earth, are laid afide in heaven, as the follies and difputes of childhood are when we attain to manhood. Doubtless many will meet in that world of love, on terms of perfect friendship, who cannot worship together in this world; who, perhaps, mutually shut the kingdom against each other. That name which diffinguished the disciples at Antioch, the only name whereby we must be faved, this name, and not another, will there be celebrated by all the cholen and faithful. Worthy is the lamb that was flain, to receive power, and riches, and wildom, and Arength, and honor, and glory and bleffing. Amen.

SERMON XLV.

A CHRISTIAN CHARACTER THE BEST DEFENCE OF CHRISTIANITY.

1 PETER iii. 15, 16.

But fanctify the Lord God in your hearts: And be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear; Having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ.

S T. PETER begins this chapter with particular directions for the conduct of Christian profession fundry relations. He proceeds to a general exhortation respecting their treatment of one another. Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as bretbren, be pitiful, be courteous; not rendering evil for evil; but contrariwife, blessing. To enforce this general and that Vol. III. K more particular advice, he ufeth the following argument: For be that will love life, and fee good days, let bim refrain bis tongue from evil, and bis lips that they speak no guile. Let bim eschew evil, and do good; let bim seek peace, and ensue it. For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and bis ears are open to their prayers; but the face of the Lord is against them that do evil. And who is be that will barm you, if ye be followers of that which is good? Should any be fo unreasonable as to perfecute them for righteoufnefs' fake, the aposs be befeecheth them, be not difmayed by the rage of the perfecutor; but fanctify the Lord God in your bearts: And be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meeknefs and fear.

The meaning is not, that Chriftians fhould enter on the defence of the principles of their religion, whenever or by whomfoever demanded. They may not caft pearls before fwine. They fhould be always furnifhed with a fatisfactory reafon for that hope, which, in cafe of perfecution, will juftify them in facrificing the profpects of life, and life itfelf. Unbelievers might call it folly and madnefs to confent to fuch a facrifice. Having no hope themfelves, they would fuppofe there could be no poffible compenfation for the lofs of the world. But our faith contains the hope of eternal life, and therefore overcomes the world. Confidering the felf-denial it requires, we have occafion to be rooted and grounded in the faith, in love to the truth. The apoftle here inftructs us, that the beft reafon we can give of a well-founded hope, is, a temper and conduct formed on the principles, maxims and profpects of Chriftianity, and the pattern of its author. Santlify the Lord God in your hearts—having a good confcience—a good converfation in Chrift. Profeffors would thus be always able and prepared to make a rational defence of their hope. This would be a good anfwer to every one who might afk a reafon of it. Thus the foes to their religion, inftead of having matter of accufation against it and them, may approve and venerate both.

Be ready to give an answer to every one that asketh a reason of the hope that is in you. This may be understood, either, first, of an enquiry into the general evidences of our religion: Or fecondly, the grounds of our own hope of falvation, admitting the truth of Christianity. These are different enquires. Those who profess Christianity may indulge a falfe hope: Its truth depends not on the character of its profeffors. Since then the apoftle fpeaks of fuch an anfwer to the enquirer, as will evidence our own hope to be founded on a rock, the words may be a direction how to answer fuch as afk a reafon of our perfonal hope, grounded on the Christian profession. A fatisfactory answer may be given why we fuppofe the religion of Jcfus to be true, while we ourfelves hear his fayings, but do them not, and therefore, build on the fand. Now while our own hope is that of the hypocrite, we do not give fuch reafon of it, as we are here commanded to give. A Christian character, is the only evidence of that hope, which maketh not ashamed.

What I therefore propole for prefent difcuffion is this point, that a Christian character is the best commendation, and defence of the Christian religion.

First, This is the most important evidence to ourselves.

Whatever moral evidence we may have of the truth of Chriftianity-how well perfuaded foever we may be of its truth, fpeculatively confidered, it is of no moment, unlefs we have found it, in our own experience, the wifdom of God, and the power of Goa-unless he bath fbined in our beart with the light of the knowledge of his glory in Christ. Separate from this fanctifying influence of the gofpel-this inward witnefs of its truth, our faith is no other than a bairen speculation. A good confeience is neceffary to our own hope in Chrift, if not to our defending, by way of argument, the foundation principles of his religion, and his divine miffion. Arguments in defence of Christianity have most force, and appear with best grace, when they come from fuch as thew, that they believe it themfelves, and think it important, by exemplifying the fpirit of it. This is our rejoicing, the testimony of our confcience, that in fimplicity and godly fincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have our conversation in the world.

Indeed, a good understanding of the doctrine of Christ, may much depend on men's love to the truth. When their deeds are evil, they love darkness rather than light. But every one that doth truth, cometh to the light. This might be one reason of the injunction, Santtify the Lord God in your hearts.— Such as thus fanctify him, will probably be better furnished with the evidences of Christianity; better able to give a reason why they believe it. Other things being equal, their knowledge of it and its evidences will be clearer. At least they shall not be left to any fatal mistakes. Whereas those who receive not the love of the truth, but have pleafure in unrighteousness, are given over to believe a lie.

Suppofe the religion of Jefus is improved as a means of opening the eyes of the blind, of unftopping the ears of the deaf, of quickening the dead; is not this the juft inference, that an inflitution thus honored and bleffed is from heaven? Doth our faith make the children of wrath, partakers of a divine nature? Doth it afford the peace which paffeth understanding? the hope which is as an anchor to the foul? From this renovation after the divine image, this peace and hope, may it not be fafely concluded; that the gospel, which is the mean of fuch a change, fuch joy in believing, fuch a lively hope; is the wildow of God, and the power of God? If Jefus was not the light of the world, the Chrift of God; who hath delivered them from the power of darkness? Who hath redeemed them from the prefent evil world? From the power of fatan and fin? From the bondage to which they must otherwife have been fubjected through fear of death? They could not deliver themfelves. The god of this world could not deliver them: He is not divided against himself. If then, their faith overcomes the world, and triumphs in death, the excellency of the power is of God. It is a teftimony to the truth of the gospel, that they are made meet for heaven, and account the fufferings of time unworthy to be compared with the glory to be revealed. In the feal of the fpirit the Chriftian hath the earnest of his inheritance above and the best reason for his hope.

Secondly, The Chriftian character is the beft evidence others can have that our hope is wellfounded.

It comforts and edifies our fellow-difciples. They have good reafon for their charitable judgment of us when they behold our good converfation in Chrift. They rejoice beholding his image in us. We fhew them that, our religion is not in word, but in power. They glorify God for his grace in us, and are encouraged, firengthened, and quickened by our example. Our Lord hath left his difciples this rule by which to judge profeffors— By their fruits ye fhall know them. Times of perfecution, fuch as the primitive, beft fhew who are fincere, and who are hypocrites. But the general rule of trial is the fame in all times. The fruits of the fpirit fhew the hopes of profeffors to be wellfounded; the works of the flefk, fhew their foundation to be falfe. Every grace may, indeed, be counterfeited: But till the counterfeit appears, it muft be received as genuine. We fhall not be condemned by our judge for the charity which thinketh no evil, which hopeth all things.

They who fear the Lord, fpeak often one to another. No doubt their difcourfe frequently turns on the hope that is in them, and the grounds of that hope. Thus they take fweet counfel together.

But the apoftle, in exhorting Chriftians to be ready always to give an anfwer to every man that a/keth a reafon of their hope, feems not to have fo much in his view the anfwer they fhould give to one another, as to unbelievers; to them that are without.— And he intimates, that a Chriftian converfation would be this anfwer.

First, To the candid enquirer, it would be a fatisfactory reason.

Secondly, It would filence the fcoffer.

Thirdly, It is an answer equally in the power of all fincere professors to give.

Firft, It must be a fatisfactory answer or reason to the candid enquirer. Such enquirers admit the principles of natural religion, and are well-withers to the caufe of morality, and the interefts of mankind. I may add, they admit a conviction of human guilt and pollution, and the confequent neceffities of our nature. Those who plead for the fufficiency of human reafon, must yet acknowledge that fin and mifery are in the world, and call for a remedy. To suppose that man was originally created finful and miferable, confifts not with any juft notions of his creator, or a moral government. He is, therefore, now in a state of apostacy. . And the important queftion is, Can he be reftored? Not a fingle example can be produced to fnew, that he hath light and ftrength to reftore himfelf. Hath any one discovered by the light of nature that God will forgive? Has any one pointed out a way of forgivenefs whereby the guilty and condemned may find reft? Hath any one, by the ftrength of nature, delivered himfelf from the pollution and power of fin? The wifeft and beft in the heathen world knew not God, and were addicted to the groffeft forms of idelatry.

But admitting that fome conjectures might be made that God would pardon fin, and afford his aid to the finner; fhall fuch conjectures be compared with a declaration of the way and terms of pardon by a meffenger from heaven? Chriftianity lays claim to be fuch a declaration. The author of it declared, that he came down from heaven. It is befide our purpofe to enquire, how he was approved by a voice from heaven, by his mighty works, by his refurrection, and the powers wherewith he endowed his first disciples. Nor do we urge the propagation and fuccefs of the gofpel, wherein the foolith confounded the wife, and the weak the mighty. Nor do we mention prophecy, which is the teftimony of Jefus, and the fulfilment of which, from age to age, continually fupports and ftrengthens the caufe of Chriftianity. Neither do we mention the internal frame of this religion. These confiderations must have much weight with the difcerning and candid. But in this place let us only attend to the good conversation in Cbrift, of which the apostle speaks, and which he reprefents as an anfwer to fuch as afk a reafon of the hope of Chriftians. Their mafter was holy, undefiled and feparate from finners, meek and lowly, intent on the glory of God and good of mankind; when reviled, he reviled not again, but learnt obedience by what he fuffered, and fealed the truth of his doctrine with his blood. They have the fpirit of Chrift, and follow his fteps. They are blamelefs and harmlefs, children of God without rebuke, and shine as lights in the world. They do good to all, as they have opportunity; are patient in tribulation, fland fast in the Lord, walk in love, and count not life dear, fo that they may finish their course with joy. The whole affemblage of Christian virtues may have no beauty to minds overclouded with fuperflition, or puffed up with pride. But the fair examiner, being of no party, withing that truth, piety and charity may VOL. III. Ι.

prevail, obferving the good converfation of the profeffors of Christianity, their meeknefs, humility and charity, their patience in well-doing, amidst all temptations and dangers, will think well of their religion, and conclude it came from heaven.

The Christian is not insensible to the enjoyments and fufferings of the world : But he fhews a comparative indifference to thefe, becaufe he hath hope of immortality. Having acquainted himfelf with God according to the gofpel, he holds on his way, through honor and difhonor, whether he abounds or fuffers need, and rejoiceth evermore. Let the unbeliever remark his ferenity and hope, how he is more than conqueror in all things, difplaying the beauty of holinefs in every relation and condition-Can the unbeliever fuppofe that the Chriftian would thus live above this world, if not endowed with power from on high?-if not guided by divine counfel? If no other than common temptation happens to the Chriftian, still his heavenly conversation will be a good defence of his faith to all impartial inquirers. That faith is doubtlefs the beft, which hath the beft effect on the temper and life. The world can judge only from the fruits of the Chriftian profession, in different relations and circumstances; whether those who affume this profession fanctify the Lord God in their hearts. Shall it be once fuppofed, that the pattern of undiffembled piety and univerfal charity which Jefus exhibited, and which all his true difciples copy in their measure, could be founded in imposture? It would be unjust to infer, from the bad lives of profeffing Chriftians, that their religion is falfe, unlefs it could be first shewn, that their lives were no worfe than their profession. If neither this, nor the example of its author, countenance fuch a life, then the hope of those who thus live, hath no fupport or encouragement from their profession. On the other hand, when the fanctifying influence of the gofpel is apparent in all holy conversation, will any candid perfon, any one who confiders what he owes to his own character, calumniate it, or fuch worthy profeffors of it? If the real members of this kingdom are diftinguished for righteoufness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoft, doubtlefs the kingdom which Jefus fet up is divine, for God loveth righteoufnefs, and hateth wickednefs. God is love.

Secondly, A Chriftian converfation is beft adapted to put fcoffers to filence. If fuch, walking after their own lufts, will not admit conviction; yet their mouths muft be ftopped, when they have no evil thing to fay of profeffors; when they can only fay of them, that they are Chriftians. If this be a reproach, let them glory in it; as a pious man of old, whofe determined enemies found no occafion againft him, except concerning the law of his God. . In an age when Chriftianity is fet at nought, it behoves its friends to cut off all occafion of offence. This they will beft do by imbibing the fpirit, and walking in the fleps of their mafter. This will be a constant reprehension of the scoffer. While he employs ridicule, to fhame them out of their religion, he may be put to fhame by their exemplary life. At least this is the most probable mean of putting gainfayers to filence. Undiffembled piety and goodness command effeem and reverence. The Christian virtues of meekness, patience, forgiveness of injuries, love of enemies, rendering good for evil, are fo amiable, that those who have no pretenfions to them cannot but commend them in others. By an emulation to difplay this excellent character, the Christian takes from a foe to religion all bis armor. Or fuppofe the foe to be fo shameless and hardened; fo immerfed in fenfuality, or fo wife in his own eves, that even fuch a reason as this, in behalf of the Chrittian hope, doth not reform or convince. Suboofe that the fhafts of raillery are still pointed again't Chriftianity, and its friends: In what way can thefe fhafts be avoided or repelled; if not in that of which we fpeak ?- The way which the apoftle fo earneitly recommends? With this armors the Christian will stand collected and firm. None of the weapons of the reviler can hurt him. From diffolute manners, or speculative pride, men hate the light. When one cavil is answered, they have others at hand. It fully accounts for their unbelief, that they wish Christianity not true. But wifd.m is justified of ber children. The weapons of their warfare are mighty, and pull down all ftrong holds. When the gospel apparently hath this effect, it carries that evidence, which none but an enemy to the truth, to society, and himself, will gainsay.

Hence it greatly concerns all, who affume the Chriftian name, to wreft from the hand of the infidel the moft deadly weapon he hath to deftroy our faith; the vicious lives of profeffors. Hereby, Chrift is wounded in the houfe of his friends more deeply, than by all the reproaches of his open enemies. The reproaches of an enemy may be borne; but those of a friend fink deep. Shall then the professed friends of the cross furnish its revilers with matter of reproach? God forbid!

Thirdly, The defence of Christianity, which our fubject recommends, is equally in the power of all fincere professors. It depends not on great abilities, or any exterior diffinction. In this way the learned and ignorant may alike give a reason of their faith and hope. Simplicity and godly fincerity, a conversation, becoming the gospel, is a character which may be poffeffed indifcriminately by men of high and low degree, of fuperior or inferior parts, by the rich and poor of this world, by every free-man and every bond-man. They are not all under advantages to make the fame improvement in this character; but the reality of it is alike attainable by all ranks and ages. For unto every one that hath shall be given, and be shall have abundance. Every man is accepted according to that be bath. Every one that afketh, receiveth. The apoftle's exhortation in the text belongs, therefore, to all who affume the Christian profession. Through the divine influences, which ever accompany the gofpel dispensation, they may fanctify the Lord God in their hearts, keep a good confcience, and walk worthy of their holy vocation. Grace is neither restricted to, nor doth follow, distinction of birth, talents, education, or fortune. Are the wife, mighty and noble, and only fuch, called, and chofen, and faithful? All are alike infufficient of themfelves. But God worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleafure. This is an argument to all to work out their falvation with fear and trembling. The angel faid to Gideon, The Lord is with thee, Ibou mighty man of valor, go in this thy might .--This language may be accommodated to the work of our falvation.

The fceptic may throw objections in the way of a fincere Chriftian, which the latter cannot anfwer. But if he hath not talents to reply to fpeculative difficulties, his Chriftian life is a better defence: It fnews that his religion is the power of God to falwation. What would the objector more? Would any reafoning, however ftrong, convince, if this doth not? Suppofe you underftood all myfteries, and all knowledge, and could fpeak with the tongue of feraphs; but are defitute of the fpirit of Chriftianity, could you fo effectually plead its caufe as one whofe life adorns it? Could you fnew that your own hope is well-founded? If not, how could you give a reafon of your hope? It is a reafon of this which is afked. Your anfwer, then, muft be fuch as fhall afford the enquirer grounds to believe that you are a real Chriftian. You muft fhew him by your example, that Chriftianity is the wifdom from above, first pure, then peoceable, gentle, and eafy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrify.

On the whole: The real Chriftian bath the witnefs in himself, that his religion is true, and therefore rejoiceth in hope. He edifies, comforts, and ftrengthens his brethren. He fatisfies the ingenuous enquirer. He takes the furest method to stop the mouth of calumny. But the formal profeffor, in proportion to the excellency of the religion he profeffeth, experiences felf-reproaches on account of his opposition to it in heart and life. He can have no other than a fluctuating hope. Winds and florms will shake and overthrow his foundation. He is a flumbling to good men. He tempts the enquirer to suspect the truth of Christianity. He ministers occasion of triumph to the infidel and fcoffer. It must needs be that offences will come; but were to him, by whom they come.

- Our religion inftructs us to be wife as ferpents, and harmlefs as doves; to become all things to all men, fo far as integrity will permit. Chriftian candor, condefcention and benignity, meeknefs of wifdom, patience and forgivenefs of injuries, conduce to remove prejudices against Christianity, and to give all ranks and characters honorable thoughts of it and its friends. If a temper and conduct fo irreprehenfible and beneficent, should not exempt either it or them from perfecution, full they must hold fast faith and a good confcience. Whatever the opinion or treatment of the world may be, the approbation of God and hope in Christ are to be regarded at any expence. Do those fanctify God in their hearts, who, terrified by the perfecutor, fwerve finally from the faith? Doubtlefs the good Christian will perfevere. Looking to Jefus who endured the crofs, he will not revolt through perturbation of mind; but do and fuffer for him, not fearing them that kill the body. Surely then he will stand fast in the Lord, and bring forth fruit with patience, when no fuch days of tribulation attend his profession. Animated by the example of Chrift and hope in him, having experienced the power of his refurrection, being made conformable to his death, temptations will be refifted, whether from inward corruption, or the cuftoms of the world, or the fpirits of wickedness in high places. With the advantage of the beft rules, the brightest example, exceeding great and precious promifes, the real Chriftian's path fhines more and more. Bleffed is the man that endureth temptation: For when he is tried he shall receive a crown of life.

We proceed to the ules of the preceding difcourfe. First, Every professor of the gospel, should acquaint himself, according to his ability and opportunity, with the principal evidences of the religion on which his eternal hopes are built. Common Christians have faculties and means to judge in this cafe. They cannot neglect their faculties and advantages, and be guiltles. The facted oracles are before them, and exhibit evidence which can be apprehended by men of plain fense. The faith of every Christian should stand in the power of God, not in the wisdom of man. One is our mafter, even Christ. An effectual way to establish error and tyranny is to demand, Have any of the rulers believed otherwise?

Again, In giving a reafon of our hope, it behaves us to have particular regard to the apostle's direction. He directs us to do it will meeknefs and fear.

We fhall thus express our fense of the nature and importance of Christianity. Its author was meek and lowly. Its cause is the cause of purity, unity and charity. Its disciples are known by their love to one another. They know not what spirit they are of, when they think to propagate their religion by cöercion. This is not to answer with meekness and fear: It is not to fanctify the Lord God in our hearts. We may contend, yea, we may contend earnessly, for the faith delivered to the faints; and yet preferve the spirit of love, humility and condescension, which diffinguished the author of our faith. The wrath of man worketh not the Vol. III. righteoufnefs of God. How hath Chriftianity been debafed by the emulations, feparations and enmities of its profeffors? the warmth of their difputes? the abfurd, licentious and impious doctrines for which they have contended? The common caufe hath been facrificed to profelyting zeal—a zeal for peculiar modes and human fyftems.

The friends of Christianity should endeavor, by their good conversation in Christ, to edify and build up one another; to compel those to come into his church, who believe in him, but neglect to confess him; and to convince unbelievers. The unworthy carriage of communicants is a great hindrance to the free course of the gospel. Their own hope in Chrift, his honor, and the fpiritual interests of others are nearly concerned in their walking worthy of their vocation. Suppose fome vigilant enemy ready to make the most of our faults, that he might ruin our reputation; what would he fingle out, were he fully acquainted with our character? Let us examine, amend the past, and be more circumspect for the future.

Further, we infer the delution of thole whole hope and rejoicing are founded on transient impreffions, and imaginary private revelations. Leaving the apostolic rule which hath now been confidered, and following their own dreams, how can fuch give a good reason of their hope? What proof that there is not a lie in their right hand? To the law, and to the tessimony: If they speak not according to this word, there is no light in them. The teffimony of a well-informed conficience to our good conversation in Christ, is the foriptural ground of hope and joy in him.

Again, if Christianity be true, it is rejected at an infinite hazard. It treats of the recovery of a loft world. It promifes pardon, grace and glory to them that repent and believe : it denounceth the wrath of God, everlafting deftruction, on the impenitent and unbelieving. If this religion be true, there is falvation in no other than Jefus Chrift. If it be not true, where shall an apostate world look for falvation from fin and wrath? Wherewith shall they come before the Lord? What fhall they offer for the fin of their fouls? Suppose the martyrs of Jefus have all been deluded, they might still be far happier men in life, and at the clofing fcene, than their perfecutors. But admitting they have not been deluded, their fufferings were furely unworthy to be compared with their reward in heaven. If Christianity is no fable, the disbelief of it will be irretrievable ruin. Were its evidence, therefore, much lefs than it is, a wife man would not venture to reject it. There is at least a prefumption, a poffibility, that it may be true. It can do no man any wrong. The falvation it offers is inconceivably great. It at leaft claims attention. Were the evidence for it no greater than that against it, the believer embraceth the most fafe fide. This reason, were there no other, will determine every wife man. The infidel, confequently, is a fool. If he rejects our religion without examination, he dishonors his own understanding. Doth he dishonor it lefs, if, having asked and received a reafon of our hope, he is not perfuaded to be a Christian? What objection can any man of reason have to the Christian character? Now upon this character our text puts the defence of Christianity. Some of the greatest philosophers have profeffed it, and been its brigheft ornaments. The defences of it, in one age and another, fhew that it can boaft of friends who have been and are the lights of the world. We do not deny but that men of talents have embraced the fide of infidelity: But we demand whether these have been the friends of virtue and piety? Whether they have been worshippers of God? or have not rather lived without God in the world? We with that the revelation of Jefus Chrift may be fully examined. It requires no other than a reafonable fervice. It commands us to prove all things. But the infidel, wife in his own conceit, imagines bis reason can fathom the depths of infinite wifdom. He denies what he cannot fearch out. He doubts-and doubts-and doubts. At length he calls in queftion every thing without; and laft of all, his own existence. On men of this cast neither arguments nor example can make impreffion.

Hope maketh not afbamed—the hope of those who, are julified by the faith of Christ, and have peace with God, in whofe hearts his love is fhed abroad by the Holy Ghoft. They glory in tribulation, being fealed with that Holy Spirit of promife, which is the earnest of their inheritance. Have they any reason to be afraid or ashamed? They have put off the old, and put on the new man. They were children of wrath, but are now heirs of glory. Beholding the glory of the Lord, they have been changed into the fame image. They once knew not the way of peace, but they now know it, becaufe they know whom they have believed, and that he will keep what they have committed to him. Angels applaud them. The Father of angels regards them as his jewels. Who are they that deride them? Men loft to truth and virtue, honor and good breeding-men lightly effeemed and abhorred by God-the heirs of shame and everlafting contempt, who at the revelation of Jefus Chrift will cry to the rocks and mountains to hide them from his prefence : Shall men who deny the Lord that bought them, and fay in their heart, there is no God-fhall fuch make the believer ashamed of that Saviour who endured the contradiction of finners, defpifing the fhame of the crofs, for our fakes? Rather rejoice, O believer! and be exceeding glad, though fuch revile and perfecute. For the Lord knoweth them that are his. If we be dead, we shall also live with him. If we suffer, we shall alfo reign with him.

Finally, Let us examine closely whether our hope is that of the heirs of promife. They all purify themfelves as Chrift is pure. The mercy of God in him is the only refuge of the guilty. Hereby we are entreated to prefent our bodies a living facrifice holy, acceptable to him. If we have prefented this facrifice, we are not conformed to this world, but transformed by the renewing of our mind. We call Jefus Chrift our hope. Are we fenfible of his amazing friendship, and the returns it demands? Are our faith and love fuch as many waters cannot quench? Are we more than conquerors through him that loved us? Do we ftrive against the fin that eafily befets us, and give all diligence to make our calling and election fure? Is there no occasion of stumbling in us? Are his name, caufe and disciples never reproached through our example? Do we fhew Chriftian valor in their defence? Thus may we know the hope of his calling, and the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the faints.

Do any mourn the removal of friends, who had this hope in life and death? What confolation is this in your grief? Blefs God that you do not mourn as others who have no hope. Hear the rod, and who hath appointed it. Gird up the loins of your mind, be fober, and hope unto the end. Follow thofe who inherit the promifes. Redeem time. Depend lefs on earthly comforts. Set your hope more entirely on the promifes of God, which in Chrift are yea, and amen. Learn a more entire refignation to God. Look diligently left any man fail of his grace. Make fraight paths for your feet. Be fincere, and without offence till the day of Chrift; being filled with the fruits of righteoufnefs, which are by Jefus Chrift unto the glory and praife of God.

To conclude: The foundation of God ftandeth fure. Therefore, if ye fuffer for righteoufnels', fake, be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled: But fanctify the Lord God in your bearts, and be ready always to give an anfwer to every man that afketh you a reafon of the hope that is in you, with meeknefs and fear.

SERMON XLVI.

ON THE PERSPICUITY OF THE SCRIP-TURES.

BY

JOSEPH LATHROP, A. M.

Minister of a Congregational Church, West-Springfield, Massachusetts.

2 CORINTHIANS III. 12, 13.

We use great plainness of speech; and not as Moses, who put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadsastly look to the end of that which is abolished.

THE apoftle fpeaks not of the writings of Mofes in general, much lefs of all the ancient fcriptures; for in many parts of them, as great plainnefs of fpeech is ufed, as in the New-Teftament. Mofes was an eafy familiar author. His hiftory is written with an engaging fimplicity; and his moral precepts are expressed with perfpiculty and precifion. The reference is only to that part of the Mofaic law, which typified the Saviour. Here Vol. III, N 106 LATHROP.

only hung the vail; and here only lies the comparifon in the text.

The appearance of the Son of God in human flefh—his fufferings for the fins of men—his refurrection from the dead, and the admiffion of Gentiles, as well as Jews, to a participation in the benefits of his mediation, were prefigured by various ceremonies, as well as foretold in prophecy. Of thefe things fuch a knowledge, as was neceffary to faith, hope, and repentance, was attainable under the Mofaic difpenfation; but a more diffinct knowledge may be acquired under the gofpel. An event in exiftence will be clearer than in prediction. An object in open view will be better underflood, than it would be by defcription.

It is no reproach on the Mofaic writings, that the way of falvation could not be fo perfectly learnt from them, as it may from the gofpel; for this difference neceffarily arifes from the different circumftances of the time.

The Jews, indeed, formed very unworthy conceptions of the gofpel difpenfation. But their mifapprehenfions were principally owing, not to the obfcurity of the Mofaic, or prophetic writings, but to the blindnefs and prejudice of their own minds. So the apoftle obferves, in the words following the text. The children of Ifrael could not fleadfafly look to the end of that which is abolifhed; but their minds were blinded: For unto this day remains the fame vail untaken away, in the reading of the Old

LATHROP.

Teflament; which vail is done away in Chrift. But even to this day, when Mofes is read, the vail is upon their heart. Neverthelefs, when it, Ifrael, shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away.

The apoftle here declares, that the gofpel is communicated with great plainnefs, in diffinction from a figurative myftical manner of communication.

My defign is to illustrate this point, and then to correct fome misapprehensions, which many have entertained concerning it.

The gospel is a revelation from God. The great defign of it is to bring falvation to fallen men, by teaching them the attainableness of it-the way in which it was procured, and the terms on which it will be granted. For the fame reason, that God would give us a revelation, he most certainly would give us one which may be underftood. A greater affront can fcarcely be offered to the wifdom and goodness of God, than to suppose the gospel is written with fuch defigned obscurity and myfticifm, in the things which immediately concern our duty and falvation, that it needs another revelation to explain it. The apostle, in our text and elfewhere, most expressly declares the contrary .---We all, fays he, with open face, behold, as in a glas, the glory of the Lord. Divine things are fo plainly laid before us in the gospel-revelation, that we may fee them there, as a man fees his own face in a glass. We have renounced the hidden things of difbonefly-not walking in craftinefs-not bandling the word of God deceitfully; but, by manifestation of the truth, commending ourfelves to every man's conscience in the fight of God. It was his earnest defire and prayer, " that God would open to him a door of utterance, to speak the mystery of Christ, that he might make it manifest, as he ought to speak."-And it was his gratitude and joy, that as the word of God had been made manifest by the preaching committed to him; fo the favor of the knowledge of God was manifested in every place, by the preaching of the apostle. A clear and perspicuous manner of communicating divine truths he efteemed to be of fuch indispensible necessity, that he made it a distinct fubject of discourse in his first epistle to the Corinthians. He there inculcates on the public teachers in the church, that, as they were fpeaking to men, they were not in the Spirit to Speak prophecies . but to utter with the tongue things eafy to be understood -to fpeak in a manner adapted to the understanding of the hearers for their edification and comfortto manifest the truth fo clearly to the confcience, that even the unlearned and unbelievers may be judged and convinced, and fo falling down may worship God .--One, who only fpeaketh mysteries in the spirit, he compares to a trumpet, which, giving an uncertain found, warns none to prepare for battle. And he professes, that he had rather speak five words in the church with his understanding, fo as to teach others, than ten theusand words in an unknown tongue. As he did, fo ought every preacher to feek that be may excel to the edifying of the church.

In opposition to certain mystical teachers, who carly crept into the Christian church, the apostle John introduces his first epistle with a declaration, that he and the other apostles had always adapted their instructions to the common fense and understanding of mankind. That which we have feen and heard, and which our hands have handled of the word of life, we declare unto you, that ye may bave fellowship with us: For the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and we shew unto you that eternal life, which was manifested to us. And these things we write to you, that your joy may be full. This then is the meffage, which we have heard, and declare to you, that God is light, and in him is no darknefs. And if we fay, that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth. And on account of that clear diffinct manner, in which the facred oracles reveal divine and fpiritual things, they are called a light, and compared, not only to a lamp, which guides a traveller's feet by night, but to the fun, which gives day to the hemisphere, and fheds light and heat on those who fit under his friendly beams. The heathens, destitute of revelation, are defcribed as fitting in darknefs, and in the region and fhadow of death, and as feeking the nearest objects, not by vision, but by feeling after them, if haply they may find them. But God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, has bleft our eyes with the light of the glorious gospel of Corift, and has shined into our bearts to give the light of the knowledge of his glory in the face of Jesus who is the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person.

It is not denied, that there are fome things in the fcriptures hard to be underftood. Prophecies muft, in their nature, be obfcure, till they are elucidated by the event. Their general intention may be obvious, but the particular circumftances of the grand event foretold will remain unknown, till the event itfelf brings them to view.

Some of the doctrines of religion, as the diffinction of Father, Son, and Spirit in one deity—the union of the divine and human natures in Jefus Chrift—the refurrection of the dead, and the inflant change of thofe who fhall be found alive at the coming of Chrift, are too deep to be fathomed by the line of human intellect. They are difcovcred as far as it is neceffary for us to know them; and, perhaps, as far as language can difcover them to fuch beings as we are. But ftill they remain incomprehenfible to us, not through unneceffary obfcurity in the manner of revelation, but by reafon of the fublimity of the fubjects, and our own imperfection.

There are many particular paffages in revelation difficult to be explained; and after all our enquiries, ftill doubtful in their meaning; not becaufe they are improperly expressed, but because certain cuftoms and ufages alluded to, are now unknown. It fhould, however, be always remembered, that no doctrine or duty of religion depends on a fingle paffage, much lefs on a doubiful paffage of fcripture. Be the fenfe of the uncertain text what it may, ftill the great articles of Chriftianity remain clearly ftated, and firmly fupported elfewhere. Only let us govern ourfelves by that which is plain, and a few inexplicable texts will never endanger us.

In all things neceffary to eternal falvation, the facred writings are fufficiently intelligible and clear. What the Pfalmift fays of the divine law, may with equal truth be applied to the golpel. The law af the Lord is perfect, converting the foul: The testimony of the Lord is fure, making wife the fimple: The commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes.

The doctrines of the incarnation of the divine Savior, and of his fufferings for the fins of fallen mortals; the doctrines of a univerfal refurrection —a righteous judgment, and an eternal retribution, are declared as ftrongly as language can express them, and revealed as clearly as the nature of the fubjects will permit. The neceffity and the nature of repentance toward God, and faith toward Jefus Christ; the duties and virtues of piety and devotion—of justice, charity, peace, and condefcension—of humility, patience, temperance, and felf-denial, are stated for plainly, repeated fo often, inculcated in fuch a variety of phrafes, and illustrated by fuch pertinent inftances and examples, and most of them fo familiarly exhibited in the life and character of the divine Redeemer, that no perfon of common understanding, while he reads with honest attention, can miftake them.

But then we must remember, that in fearching the fcriptures, we are not to take fingle detached paffages by themfelves, and fhape them into a conformity to our own pre-concerted fcheme. We are to confider the infpired writer's difcourfe in its natural coherence—obferve the dependance of one part on another—compare fpiritual things with fpiritual, and purfue the enquiry, not with a fixed determination to eftablish a favorite plan, but with an upright intention to difcover the will of God. Thus we fhall be led into all truth. If any man defire to do his will, he fhall know of every doctrine proposed, whether it be divine, or whether it be the invention of men.

Now this being admitted, which is a certain and undeniable truth, that the facred writers have used great plainness of speech, we may hence rectify feveral dangerous errors, which many have entertained concerning the scriptures.

1. Our fubject exposes and confutes the very great mislake of those, who fuppose that the foriptures in general, even in the historical, doctrinal, and practical parts of them, are not to be under-ftood literally, but contain some secret, myfical fense: distinct from the literal.

This notion is directly oppofite to the express words of the apostle in our text. We use great plainness of speech; and not as Moses, put a vail on his face. We all with open face behold, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord. If the apofiles had concealed, under a vail, the facred doctrines of religion; if they had hidden a spiritual, under a literal meaning; how could it be faid, they used great plainness of speech, in dictinction from the ritual law, which reprefented, by types and figures, a Saviour to come? The contrast evidently shews, that the obvious, literal fenfe of the facred writings is, in general, the true fenfe, and we are to look for no other. Figures and fimilitudes are often ufed by all good writers; not to conceal their meaning, but to exhibit truth in a more clear and ftriking light. Comparifons and parables frequently occur in the facred writings; but the defign and tendency of them is to illustrate spiritual things, and make them plainer to the apprehension; or to give them an eafier entrance into, and deeper imprefion on the heart. And they are either immediate= ly explained, or elfe are in themfelves fo eafy and obvious, that common fense cannot fail to underftand and apply them.

To suppose that the scriptures are a mere enigma and allegory, not to be underflood literally, but according to fome curious, far-fetched interpreta-VOL. III.

tion, is to render them nugatory and ufelefs. They can, on this fuppofition, be no rule of faith or practice; but every man's fancy muft be his rule; and the beft expositor of the Bible will not be the man, who has the foundest judgment, the purest heart, and the most improved understanding; but he who has the most teeming invention, and the wildest imagination. At this rate of interpreting it, we shall make it speak any thing and every thing, and confequently we can depend upon nothing.

In the times of the apostles, as we learn from fome intimations in their writings, as well as from the writings of the Christian fathers, there were certain heretics who went into the myftical way of treating religion. They denied Chrift's real incarnation, death and refurrection, and the literal refurrection of the dead. They taught that Chrift came not in the flefh, and that the refurrection was already paft. They pretended that these things were only visionary and ideal. The apostle John plainly alludes to these heretics in his first epistle. Beloved, believe not every spirit, or every man who boafts that he is guided by the fpirit; but try the spirits whether they are of God; because many false prophets, pretending to be under the direction of the spirit, are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the fpirit of God. Every fpirit, who confeffeth that Jefus Christ is come in the flesh, is of God; but every Spirit, who confesseth not that Jefus Christ is come in the flefls, is not of God. Jude doubtlefs alludes to the fame perfons, when he fpeaks of certain dreamers who defile the flefb. They imagined that all religion confifted in the inward feelings and exercifes of the mind, and belonged only to the fpirit -that the flesh had no concern in the religion of man here, and would take no fhare in the happinefs of man hereafter. Hence they defiled the flesh; took an unbounded licence to indulge the motions, and gratify the inclinations of the flefh. Read, with attention, those two epistles, and you will find perfons of this description opposed and condemned.

But you will tell me, Paul himfelf often calls religion a mystery, and fays, Great is the mystery of godline/s-we speak the wisdom of God in a myslery: the bidden wisdom.

But will you hence conclude, that the gospel is a hidden mysterious scheme of religion? Only read, in connexion, the paffages alledged, and you will fee that nothing could be farther from his intention.

There are, as we have observed, certain grand and aftonishing doctrines in the gospel; incomprehenfible indeed, but not unintelligible. You cannot, by fearching, find out God; you cannot fathom the depth of his counfels; yet there is fuch a thing as the knowledge of God's character and We may know what is neceffary to be will. known; but we cannot ftretch our minds to grafp that which is, in its nature, incomprehenfible.

It is however, in a fenfe ftill different from this, that the gofpel fcheme is called a myftery; as you will eafily fee, if you attend to the feveral places where this word is ufed.

The apostle fays to the Ephesians, To me is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unfearchable riches of Chrift, to make all men fee what is the fellowship of the multery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, that now might be known the manifold wifdom of God. This mystery, this manifold wildom, thefe unfearchable riches, are things, which, from the beginning of the world, had been hidden in the purpose of God; but were, by the preaching of the apollies, fo clearly made known, that all men could fee them. The difpenfation of providence in the falvation of mankind by Jefus Chrift, is called a myftery, with respect to that time when it was hidden in God's fecret purpofe; but not with refpect to the time when it was declared and revealed, fo that all men might fee and know it.

In his epiftle to the Romans, the apoftle calls his preaching a revelation of the mystery, which was kept fecret fince the world began, but now is made manifest; and by the scriptures of the prophets is made known to all nations for the obedience of faith. The great work of redemption by Chrift, and the calling of all nations to thare in this redemption, was a mystery in former ages, being hidden in God's counfel, and not fully difcovered evento Jews, much lefs to Gentiles. But fince the coming of Chrift, it is no longer a myftery. It is now manifelted and revealed by the preaching of the apofiles, as well as by the fcriptures of the prophets, to all nations, as well as to the Jews.

What the principal doctrines are, which this glorious myftery comprises, and which are now made known for our faith and obedience, the apostle has shewn in his first epistle to Timothy. Great is the myslery of godlines: God was manifest in the fish, justified in the spirit, seen of angels, preached to the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.

Again the apoftle fays, I fleto you a mystery; we floall not all fleep, but we fhall all be changed. Can we fuppofe that the apoftle fhewed them fomething, which ftill remained a mystery after he had fnewed it. No, that would be a contradiction: But he fnewed them that which had been a mystery before; how those would be disposed of who were found alive at Christ's coming.

In his first epistle to the Corinthians, he tells them in what light they were to view the preachers of the gospel. Let a man fo account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. His meaning furely is not that they were to preach mystically; preach things which would remain mysteries after they had been preached them : but that God had committed to them the dispensation of the doctrines of the gospel, which, as faithful stewards, they were to distribute by manifesting them to all men.

Further he fays, We fpeak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory. But then he adds, God bath revealed it to us by his spirit, that we might know the things that are freely given us of God, which things we speak. This mystery was that which had been hidden, but was now revealed and known to the apostles; and this they spake, that others also might known it as well as they.

I need not refer to other paffages. It is fufficient to obferve in general, that the word mystery, is commonly used in the fame fense, throughout the New Testament, and especially in St. Paul's writings; not to fignify fomething which is full unknown, but fomething which had been unknown, and was now made manifest. To know the mystery of the kingdom of God—not to be ignorant of the mystery—to understand all mysteries—to see what is the fellowship of the mystery—to bold the mystery of faith—to acknowledge and make known the mystery of the gospel, are phrases which so frequently occur, that no doubt can remain concerning the fense in which the word is used.

Our bufines then is to read and fearch the scriptures, and to attend on the dispensation of the golpel, in the way of God's appointment, that we may understand that great mystery of godlines, which was unknown to the early ages of the world, and is ftill unknown to many nations of the earth; but is revealed and manifefted to us by the fcriptures of the prophets, and more fully by the fcriptures of the apoftles, who ufed great plainnefs of fpeech. Let us contemplate with gratitude, and receive with joy the riches of divine grace. Let us give all diligence to fecure a fhare in that great falvation, which was purchafed by the Redeemer's blood, and is now in the diftinguifhing mercy of our God, clearly revealed, and freely offered to us.

II. Our text fhews the great miftake of thole who imagine, that the fcriptures cannot be underflood without fome fpecial, immediate difcovery from the fpirit of God.

To prevent misapprehensions, I would observe, we are no lefs dependent on the grace of God in the concerns of religion, than on his providence in the bufinefs of common life; and we need the kind direction and affiftance of his fpirit in fearching the fcriptures, as well as in the other ordinary duties of religion. But then the guidance of the fpirit, in this matter, is in a way of aid to our natural faculties, not in a way of revelation. It is by opening the understanding, fixing the attention, bringing to remembrance-and removing prejudices against the truth; not by immediate discovery and communication. We are, therefore, to lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, to put on meekness and buntbleness of mind, and to fearch the scriptures with careful attention, and not to expect that, without our enquiry, the truth contained in them will be immediately revealed.

If the fcriptures are written plainly, why may we not, by the proper use of our faculties, underfrand thefe, as well as other plain writings? The only difference is in the averfion of a corrupt heart to divine and spiritual truths, and in the confequent inattention, forgetfulnefs, prejudice, and neglect of enquiry. Let this averfion be removed or fulpended, and attentive enquiry take and there will be no more difficulty in underflanding the holy writings, than common writings. All then that we can suppose the spirit of God to do in this cafe, is to awaken a fense of the importance of divine things, and open the heart to attend to them. When this is done, there will be fuch a proper use of our faculties, as will lead us to a competent knowledge of revealed truths, without an additional revelation.

The apofile, fpeaking of the great doctrines of the gofpel, fays, God batb revealed them to us, the apofiles, by bis fpirit; for the fpirit fearcheth all things, even the deep things of God—which things we alfo fpeak; and we use great plainness of speech. But to what purpose have they to plainly fpoken the things which were revealed to them by the fpirit, if ftill we need to have them revealed to us by the spirit, as much as if they had never been spoken? If we cannot understand this written revelation, without another to explain it, how shall we underfland the explanatory revelation without a third? We may as well be in doubt concerning the fecond, as the first; and, at this rate, there will be no end of revelation; and after all, we may not know; whether we understand any of them.

The apostle John fays, Beloved, believe not every fpirit, but try the fpirits whether they be of God. But how shall we try them? He adds, Hereby know we the spirit of God: Every spirit, who confesset that Fefus Christ is come in the flash, is of God. Every fpirit, whole dictates correspond with the plain doctrines of the gospel, is divine. But every spirit, who confesset not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh; is not of God. Every fuggestion which contradicts the divine oracles, is from a false spirit. The apostle, you fee, makes the word of revelation the ftandard, by which you are to try and prove every fpirit. But tell me how you will use this as a test and rule of trial, if you cannot understand it without an immediate discovery from the spirit? Are you to learn the meaning of the word from the spirit, and, at the fame time, prove the truth of the fpirit by the word? Must you not know your rule, before you can apply it to measure things unknown? Are you not to act as rationally in religion, as in the ordinary affairs of life? Whatever fuggestion of your own minds; whatever doctrine of your most admired teachers, contradicts the revelation, which God has already given, conclude P it to be falfe. Never fuspect that the spirit of God contradicts itself.

The opinion in question, you see, must be falfe; and a little attention will convince you, that it is as fatal as it is falfe. It at once fets afide the ufe of the divine oracles, and leaves you without a guide. It lays you open and defenceless to every dangerous delufion. If once you conclude that the word of God can be underftood only by immediate difcovery, you will naturally take every impulfe and fuggestion, whether from fatan or your own fancy, to be a heavenly dictate; and no rule will you have by which to examine it. You will drop all religious enquiry, and give yourfelf up to the fatal guidance of internal impreffions, or of the instructions of those, whose daring pretensions lead you to imagine, that they are taught by the fpirit of God. Thus you will become an eafy prey to every wicked and fubtile deceiver, and will foon fall into ftrong delufions to believe a lie. When you render your bible ufelefs by fubftituting fomething elfe in its place, you have loft all your fecurity. You are liable to be driven about with every wind of doctrine-by the flight of men-by the impulfe of imagination, and by the artifice of feducing fpirits. In cafe of doubt, you will have nothing to which you can recur but your own feelings; and thefe will only firengthen the deception, and you will wax worfe and worfe, deceiving and being deceived.

Fix then on this as a grand and leading principle, that the word of God is a fufficient rule of faith and practice, and that this is fo plain, that, with God's ordinary affiftance, it may be underftood by proper attention and examination. Adhere invariably to this rule, and immediately reject whatever you find inconfiftent with it, or not capable of being fupported by it.

3. Another error, fimilar to, and growing out of the former, which our text plainly confutes, is, that natural or unregenerate men are incapable of underftanding the fcriptures.

It will be neceffary diffinctly to flate this point, that my meaning may not be mifapprehended.

It is granted, in the first place, that men of corrupt and vicious hearts understand not divine truths in their excellence and importance; or, to speak more properly, they have not that fensible, realizing view of the certainty of them, and their own vast and immediate concern in them, which is neceffary to give them a practical influence.— To use the apostle's expression, They receive not the love of the truth. They receive it not as the word of God, and therefore it worketh not in them effectually, as it does in them who believe. But they may have a rational, dostrinal knowledge of the religion taught in the gospel. Their speculative opinions may be just and scriptural. They may have as good a stock of Christian knowledge in their heads, as many of the regenerate, though it does not in the fame manner influence the heart:

It is farther granted, that a holy and upright heart is a great help in gaining a doctrinal knowledge of the fcriptures. A carnal and vicious man is apt to neglect the means of knowledge, or to attend upon them in a negligent manner. His vices naturally prejudice him against the truth, and difpose him to overlook or pervert it. While the golpel condemns and urges him to renounce his favorite fins, he is under a powerful temptation to relax its doctrine and precepts, that he may indulge his iniquities with lefs apprehension of danger .--But the honeft and pure heart loves the truth, and readily embraces it, when it is fairly propofed with its evidence. So that, I fay, the good man ftands fairer to gain a right doctrinal knowledge of the fcriptures, than any of a vicious heart.

There is, however fuch a thing as a natural man's having juft fentiments of religion, and a good underftanding of the great doctrines of the gofpel. As in the renewed there are remaining corruptions, which may expose them to fpeculative errors in the lefs important things of religion; fo fome unfanctified men, by a certain natural opennefs of mind, accompanied with a good education, may be fecured from grofs and capital miftakes. And those corruptions and prejudices, which naturally oppose the truth, may, by the awakening influence of the divine foirit, be fo far reftrained and fufpended, that conviction will enter, and truth gain their affent. If the fcriptures are written with plainnefs, the fame natural powers, which underftand other things, may, with due application, ununderftand thefe.

Saint Paul fuppofes, that a man, who has no charity, and who, in religion, is no more than a mere tinkling cymbal, may yet understand all myfteries, and all knowledge, and speak on divine subjects with the tongue of an angel. Speaking of himfelf and other apostles, he fays, By manifestation of the truth, we commend ourselves to every man's confcience in the fight of God. But how could they, in their preaching, manifest the truth and commend it to every man's conscience, if finners understood not their meaning? He enjoins Timothy, to instruct with meckness them who oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledgement of the truth. But would Tomothy's meek inftructions convince of the truth those who could not understand him?

The apofile to the Hebrews speaks of some, who, after they have been enlightened, and have tasked the good word of God, fall away, and are never renewed again to repentance. These doubtless are unregenerate men, for they fall away to destruction; but they were enlightened, and had tasted the good word of God. Certainly they had a doctrinal knowledge of it; yea, they felt fome influence from it also.

The apofile Peter tells us of fome, who had efcaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jefus Christ, and yet are again entangled therein and overcome. They had fuch a knowledge of the gofpel as to be very obfervably influenced and reformed by it. They escaped the pollutions of the world. But they were still unrenewed. They are again, not only entangled, but overcome. And their last state is worse than the first. It is added, It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteousness, than, after they had known it, to turn from the boly commandment.-They knew the way of righteoufnefs, and yet turned from it. There are those, who know their Lord's will, and do it not, and who will, therefore, be beaten with many stripes.

Saint Paul, in his inftructions to the prophets in Corinth, fays, If all prophecy, i. e. fpeak with perfpicuity; and there come in, into the affembly, one who believeth not, or one unlearned, he is convinced of all—he is judged of all—and fo falling down he will worfhip God, and report, that God is in you of a truth. The unlearned and the unbeliever may underftand, and be convinced by the doctrines of the gofpel, when they are plainly propofed.

Farther, The apostles James and Peter expressly teach us, that Christians have been begotten by the word of truth, and born of this incorruptible feed. But how can the word be a means of effecting this change, if it cannot be understood before the change is effected? By the law is the knowledge of fin. But in order to its producing this knowledge, it muft itfelf first be known. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. There may then, before faith, be a knowledge of the word of God.

When Felix heard Paul reafon of righteoufnefs, and temperance, and a future judgment, he trembled. Did not he understand the preacher?—How came he elfe to tremble?

When Peter, on the day of Pentecost, proved by plain arguments taken from the ancient fcriptures, and by recent acts known to all, that Jesus, who had been crucified, was both Lord and Christ, his hearers felt the conviction: They were pricked in their heart.

But enough, and more than enough has been faid, to fhew, that the notion, which we are oppoling, is directly contrary to the tenor of the gofpel. A little attention will convince you, that it is alfo pregnant with most dangerous confequences.

Admitting it to be true, the conclusion is, there is nothing incumbent on finners in order to their conversion—it is vain for them to read the gospel, or hear it preached—there is no possibility of their gaining any religious knowledge before their conversion, and it is preposterous to feek any. Reafon has nothing to do in matters of religion, and revelation, indeed, but very little: But men must wait for immediate dictates from on high.

Farther, if none but gracious perfons understand the scriptures, then a right understanding of them is an evidence of grace. Well-every man who has formed any opinion at all, naturally concludes, that his own opinion is right; confequently he will conclude himfelf in a state of grace, because he knows the truth. And if we make this a teft of grace in the heart, we shall condemn every man as a finner, who thinks not precifely as we do. Our minds will be fast closed against farther light. We shall be obstinately tenacious of our own sentiments, right or wrong. If we fall into an error, we fhall never part with it. Arguments from fcripture will avail nothing to our conviction; for we are fpiritual-we judge all things, and will be judged of no man.

But here it will probably be alledged, the apoftle Paul himfelf, in his firft epiftle to the Corinthians, ii chap. 14 verfe, fays, The natural man receivetb not the things of the fpirit of God, for they are foolifbnefs to him, neither can be know them, becaufe they are fpiritually difcerned, but he that is fpiritual judgetb all things.—From this paffage fome have inferred, that no unregenerate man can have a right underftanding of the doctrines of the gofpel. But this inference fo palpably contradicts the plain texts already adduced, that it can by no means be admitted. Only attend to the fcope and connexion of the apoftle's difcourfe in this chapter, and his meaning will no longer be doubtful. He is fpeaking of the neceffity of revelation, in order to our understanding the nature of the gospel-dispenfation, which was a mystery hidden from former ages, but was now made known to the apoftles by the Spirit, and by them was plainly preached to mankind. In confirmation of the necessity of revelation, he fays, The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God .- The man, in a flate of nature, he who has nothing to guide him but natural reafon and human wifdom, He receiveth not the things of the spirit; the things revealed in the gospel by that spirit, which was communicated to the apoftles; For they are foolifbacfs to him; being deftitute of that pomp and parade of human wifdom, by which the wife men of the world captivated their hearers; neither can be know them, by any fagacity or fludy of his own, becaufe they are (piritually difcerned; they are above the difcovery of human reason, and discovered only by revelation. He does not fay a natural man cannot know them when they are difcovered; but he cannot know them before they are difcovered by that revelation, which the fpirit communicated to the apofiles, and which they preached to others.

Yea, further, the doctrines of Jefus Chrift feemed foolifhnefs to many, becaufe they were not taught according to the wifdom of the world, by deductions of human reafon. The apoftle fays, The Greeks feek after wifdom—we preach Chrift cru-Vol. III. Q cified-to the Greeks foolifhnefs, but to them who are faved-the wildom of God. A man under the power of a carnal mind, and filled with a vain conceit of his own fuperior knowledge and goodnefs, difcerns not in the gospel-scheme of falvation, that heavenly wifdom and excellence, which a humble, penitent foul perceives and admires. His fpeculative opinions of the gofpel may be right; but the pride and corruption of his heart prevent him from receiving it with approbation and love. The unregenerate and the regenerate may both understand the doctrines of the gospel alike-may quite agree in their speculative fentiments about themmay be equally found and orthodox in their opinions; and yet they have a different relifh and affection for these doctrines. The former, opposed to them in the temper of his heart, difcerns no fuch excellence in them, as to yield to their power and influence. The latter loves, embraces and obevs them. The effential difcriminating difference between them lies not in their knowledge of, and opinions about religion; but in their practical regard and affection to it.

4. Our fubject teaches us the true method of preaching the gofpel.

The preacher, after the example of the apoftles, muft use great plainness of speech, and by manifestation of the truth, commend himself to every man's conficience in the sight of God; lay before his hearers divine truths, with convincing perfpicuity; reafon with them out of the fcriptures, and from the principles of natural religion; open to them the doctrines and precepts of revelation, by a judicious collection, and fair illustration of pertinent paffages; and urge them home on the confcience by well-chosen arguments.

The method of fome declaimers, to allegorize the plainneft paffages, and turn every literal text to a myftical fenfe, however it may amufe the ignorant and injudicious, and raife in their minds an admiration of the fpeaker's knowledge and grace, contributes nothing to improve the underftanding, or to mend the heart. It is a criminal abufe and perversion of the divine word, adapted only to mislead the blind, and beguile unstable fouls. Such preachers turn away from the truth, and are turned unto fables,

5. You learn from the preceding obfervations, in what manner you ought to hear the word.

The gofpel is written with a plainnefs fuited to common underftandings. Hear the preaching of it, not with implicit credulity, but with honeft attention, judging for yourfelves what is truth. What is agreeable to the facred oracles, receive with readinefs, and obey with cheerfulnefs. What appears doubtful bring to the teftimony. What this condemns you must reject. Examine obfcure texts by those which are plain; prove speculative opinions by practical precepts.

To conclude: It concerns you to be well fettled in your religious principles, that you may not be carried about with every wind of doctrine. To this end fearch the fcriptures diligently and humbly, applying, in your enquiries, all proper affiftances. Revere the scriptures as a revelation from heaven, given to inftruct you, what you ought to believe, to be, and to practife. Make these the flandard by which to try every doctrine and every fpirit. Bear in mind this thought, that religion is a rational thing, defigned to make men wife, good and happy. Remember that it confifts not in wild fallies of imagination, or vehement transports of paffion; but in a calm, steady view of divine truths, influencing the temper and life; and whenever it takes poffession of men's hearts, renders them like to God in holinefs; gives them approving apprehenfions of his character; directs them to a uniform love of him, hope in him and obedience to him; disposes them to justice, peace, candor and beneficence toward mankind; fubdues their lufts and worldly affections; forms them to fobriety, mecknefs and purity; and makes them better men in all changes of condition, and in all relations of life. In fhort, confider, that religion is a folid, and an amiable thing; and they who poffefs it, are really excellent and fubftantially good.

Guided by thefe fentiments, you will eafily diftinguifh between truth and error. Let the plain fenfe of fcripture, not the fuggeftions of fancy, or the opinions of men, be your directory. Enquire with humility and integrity, with a defire to know, and refolution to do the will of God, fervently imploring the guidance of his good fpirit. Thus will your enquiries be fuccefsful; for the meek be will guide in judgment; the meek be will teach bis way,

SERMON XLVII.

THE PROFITABLE HEARER OF THE WORD OF GOD.

BY

ABRAHAM BEACH, D. D.

One of the Ministers of the Episcopal Church, in the City of New-York.

LUKE VIII. 18.

Take beed, therefore, how you hear.

I T is our happinefs to live in a Chriftian land, to be bleffed with fabbaths and fanctuary opportunities, to have the word of God continually founding in our ears, faying, this is the way, walk ye in it. Under fuch advantages, it is natural to expect we fhould be holy in all manner of converfation; that intemperance, profanenefs, and every fpecies of iniquity would be forever banifhed from among us, and crying and complaining no more heard in our ftreets; for thefe are the fruits which our moft holy religion always produces, wherever it is received in truth and fincerity. Why then it is natural to afk, does not the Chriftian world more refemble that holy mountain of the Lord, foretold by the prophet, where nothing fhall hurt or deftroy? Why are many profeffing Chriftians as much devoted to vicious indulgences as if they never heard of the gofpel? No other anfwer can be given to thefe queftions than this, becaufe they either fpurn from them the invaluable bleffing, or receive it with a carelefs indifference.

To those who are elsewhere employed in trifling amusements, or in scenes of riot and diffipation, of what consequence is it that the glad tidings of falvation are published every Lord's-day in our churches? Nor is it of much more advantage to those who hear without a desire of being benefitted. There is, indeed, this difference between them, one, deliberately, throws himself out of the way of instruction, while the other, by attending the public institutions of religion, may receive serious impressions when he least expects it.

A great multitude, induced many of them by no other motive than curiofity, being collected to hear him; our Saviour wifhed to turn their curiofity to fome account, and to lead them from being barely hearers, to become doers of the word. With this benevolent intention he introduced the parable of fower, of which, the words of the text are the application.

It was natural for him to take his allufions principally from rural scenes and avocations, because Judea, the scene of his ministry, was inhabited by the defcendants of the Patriarchs, a people wholly occupied in the business of agriculture. They continually faw the fuccefs of their labors, they faw the feed which they fowed in their fields, fome fall by the way-fide, fome on a rock, and fome among thorns; they naturally expected the first would be trodden down, the second, wither away, and the other be choaked; and that none but what fell on good ground, and was carefully attended to, would yield any increase. To those people, therefore, nothing was more eafy than the application of the parable.

That no more fruit is produced among profeffing Christians, where the feed of God's word is continually fcattered abroad, must be owing to their not preparing their hearts to receive it, to their not attending to it with proper affections and dispositions, and to their neglecting to cherish it afterwards. All this is naturally inferred from the parable; for no fault is found with the feed that came down from heaven, nor with the fower of it, for he was the fon of man; nor is there a word mentioned of inclemency of weather, blaft, mildew or drought, or any other impediment to retard the feed in its growth.

That there is fufficient efficacy in the word of God to answer all the ends of our falvation, is evident from the prophet's beautiful defeription of it. As the rain cometh down, and the fnow from heaven; and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth and R

maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give feed to the fower, and bread to the eater; fo shall my word be that goeth out of my mouth, it shall accomplish that which I please, it shall prosper in the thing whereto I fent it.

But however plenteoufly fhowers may fall from heaven, or how efficacious foever they may be in caufing the earth to yield its increafe, when they defcend on a cultivated field, they can produce no fuch falutary effects, when they fall on a rock, or on a hard and obdurate foil.

In the fame manner, though the word of God fhould drop on us as the rain, and difil as the dew, as the fmall rain on the tender plant, and as the fhowers on the grafs; if our hearts are not prepared to receive it, if we hear it with a cold indifference, or fuffer it to be diffipated by the cares and vanities of the world, we cannot expect any beneficial effects from it.

We all know it to be the duty of a Chriftian, regularly to attend the public ordinances of religion, not only to offer our fupplications to the throne of grace, but to hear the great truths of the gofpel explained and inculcated; but we do not confider how much is implied in this duty. I am perfuaded that the want of attention to this circumftance, more than all other obftacles put together, impedes the progrefs of the gofpel.

When we are about to execute a particular bufinefs relating to our temporal concerns, a little meat that perifheth, or glittering duft perhaps, that every puff of air may diffipate, we think it a matter of importance, we enter on it with all the vigor of our minds, and purfue it with fteadinefs, with pleafure and delight. But with what languor do we fometimes enter on a bufinefs which concerns every thing dear to us in life, and what is infinitely more, our happinefs throughout the ages of eternity? I wifh, therefore, to call your attention to a fubject which appears an important one, the neceffary requifites in a profitable hearer of the word of God.

In the first place then, before we enter the fanctuary, we should compose our minds to feriousnefs and meditation, we should discard every worldly thought, and confine our attention folely to ourfelves, and to that great and incomprehensible Being, whose immediate prefence we are approaching; we should call to mind that we are poor worms of the dust, created by his power, preferved by his goodness, and redeemed by his love; that all we have, all we are, and all we hope for is from him; that we are dependant upon him for every breath we draw, and accountable to him, for every thing we do.

If, with fuch fentiments of God, and of our dependance on him, we enter his houle, we shall feel no disposition to offer the facrifice of fools, or to indulge a levity of thought or behavior, which is always offensive to heaven, destructive of all the ends of religion, and abhorrent to every idea of common decency.—They are fentiments too that cannot fail of commanding our ferious attention to the duties before us, which is another requisite in the profitable hearer.

When our attention is called to fubjects the most folemn and important, and which concern our dearest interests, such as the infinite mercy of God, the graces and virtues of Christianity, the divine promifes; when we are affectionately warned to flee from the wrath to come, to prepare for death, judgment and eternity; inftead of liftening to them with reverence, fhould our thoughts wander to the ends of the world, should we return to our fecular employments, and go one to his farm, and another to his merchandize; though an angel from heaven were to preach to us, it would anfwer no other purpose than to increase our condemnation at the bar of God, where we must all appear fooner perhaps than we imagine, to render an account of the talents committed to our truft.

In order to receive any benefit from hearing the word of God, befides a due preparation of mind before we enter his houfe, and ferious attention in it, we must be possessed of a docile disposition, free from every kind of prejudice.

We never object to any thing we hear from the pulpit, if it corresponds with our favorite opinions, or is indulgent to our withes and defires; but the moment we hear any thing which interferes with them, or excites apprehensions with respect to our temporal interest, how natural is it to go out in fearch of objections, to put those objections in the most favorable point of light, and to stop our ears against the voice of the charmer, charm he never fo wifely?

When our bleffed Saviour was upon earth, multitudes preffed round him from every quarter, listened with raptures to his eloquence, and looked up to him with reverence; but the inftant he preached to them the difagreeable doctrine of laboring not for the meat that perisbeth-of taking up the crofs, and following him through afflictionsthrough fcoffs and infults, and all the horrors of an ignominious death; they turned their backs upon him, and walked no more with him. And is there nothing of this temper remaining in the world? When honor, glory and immortality-when pleafures infinitely greater than eye hath feen, ear heard, or hath entered into the heart of man to conceive, happen to be the fubject of the preacher, we liften to him with pleafure; but when he tell us of that indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish which await every foul of man that doeth evil; if we do not feel inclined to turn our backs upon him, we, at least, with to put off to a more convenient feafon fuch gloomy reflections.

That the impenitent tranfgreffor fhall be banifued from the prefence of the Lord, and dwell forever where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, is attefted by the fame authority—the fame infallible fpirit of God, that promifes endlefs and unfpeakable happinefs to the true followers of Jefus; and yet we frequently fee one of thefe doctrines taken and the other left—one believed and the other not. Unlefs fuch prejudices are weeded out, they will infenfibly grow up, and choke every good feed that is fown.

The profitable hearer endeavors, by the grace of God, not only to free himfelf from any partialities refpecting the doctrines of the gofpel, but the preachers of it likewife. He will receive the word with meeknefs, and a fincere defire of improvement, whoever delivers it, or however plain it may be, and unadorned; knowing that when unadorned, it is frequently adorned the moft.

It is not an idle curiofity—an itching ear—the hope of an hour's amufement, or a criticifing difpofition that brings him to the houfe of God, but a fincere defire of growing in grace—of hearing his duty, in order to practice it. With fuch a difpofition, he will receive fome benefit from even the meaneft of our difcourfes, but without it the beft feed will be fowed in vain.

Whatever be the fubject of the preacher, the profitable hearer confiders whether he cannot, fome way or other, apply it to himfelf. If any particular vice is reprehended, inftead of looking round for an object on whom he may fix it, his attention is confined altogether to himfelf, and he ferioufly asks his heart, whether he is not himself guilty of it.

Should any Chriftian duty be explained and ineulcated, he fends forth to heaven a filent ejaculation for grace, and fervently prays that God would incline his heart to perform it; or, fhould the wonders of redeeming love be the theme, his heart expands with gratitude to the Saviour of the world, and he earneftly inquires how he may become a partaker of his great falvation.

Should the glories of heaven be difplayed, he fends forth ardent afpirations after them—fhould the road to it be pointed out, he carefully imprints it on his mind, and determines fleadily to purfue it—to guard against the least deviation from it, or loitering on the way.

When the feed of God's word falls on ground thus prepared to receive it, it will fpring up, fpread abroad its branches, and produce the fruits of righteoufnefs in a well-ordered life and converfation. But, how difcouraging must it be to preach to the unprepared, the inattentive, or the prejudiced? To fow the feeds of virtue by the way-fide, on a rock, or among thorns?

To preach the doctrine of mortification and felfdenial to the thoughtlefs, gay voluptuary—to recommend it to a mere man of the world, to take off his affections from it—to love his enemies—to do good to those who hate him—to be meek and lowly— in honor preferring others to himfelf, is only plowing the fand, and fowing feed on the water.

To be profitable hearers of the word, it is neceffary, not only to prepare our minds, by fuitable reflections, to give our ferious attention, and to diveft ourfelves of every kind of prejudice; but that we come with an honeft intention of being doers, as well as hearers, of the word. Without fuch an intention, we may fit with pleafure to hear the gofpel, and yet fuffer every good imprefiion, like the feed which fell on ftony ground, to wither away.

When wrapped into future times, the prophet foretold the bleffings of the Meffiah's kingdom, and the rapid increase of it in the world, he reprefents the Gentiles calling on each other in fuch language as this; Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in bis paths. It is not fufficient that we go up to the mountain of the house of the Lord, or that he teach us of his ways, we must walk in his paths. Let no one, then, judge of his proficiency in religion by the number of fermons he has heard, but by the graces and virtues of Chriftianity, which are implanted and growing up within him; for he may be affured, that, unlefs his attendance on a preached golpel incline him to be more honeft and upright in his dealings-more fober and temperate more peaceable, friendly and benevolent—more difengaged from this world, and more intent on his preparation for anothor, he has heard to no manner of purpofe.

Much is required of a minister of the gospel; he must be faithful in his master's fervice—must endeavor to awaken careless finners by the terrors of the Lord—perfuade them, by the mercies of heaven, to return and live—and to recommend to all men the religion of a crucified Saviour by every mean in his power. But, after all his perfuasions —after all his entreaties—after all his warnings, it will remain with themfelves to determine whether they will profit by them or not.

If, then, fo much is required in order to become profitable hearers of the word, we fee the neceffity of looking up to God to help our infirmities, and to renew us in the inward frame and temper of our minds. Without his grace, all our endeavors will be fruitlefs; but we have the fatisfaction of knowing, that if we afk in fincerity, we fhall never be denied; the author of our religion having affured us, that God will not fail to give his holy fpirit to thofe who afk him.

Finally, My beloved brethren, if ye wifh to be profitable hearers of the word of God, let no unworthy defigns accompany you to his houte.— Come to it as Chriftians, with charity, with humility, with an honeft heart; and, above all, with a determined refolution to practife what you hear. Then you will always hear as you ought to do; and the feed fown in your hearts being watered by the dews of heavenly grace, will bring forth an abundant increase of piety and virtue, of comfort and fatisfaction to yourfelves in this life, and of unfading glory in that which is to come.

S

SERMON XLVIII.

THE BARREN FIG-TREE.

B Y

ALEXANDER MACWHORTER, D. D. Minister of the First Presbyterian Church, Newark, New-Jersey.

MARK XI. 12, 13, 14.

And on the morrow, when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry, and feeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon, and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet: And Jefus anfwered and faid unto it, no man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his difciples heard it.

FRUITFULNESS in religion, love, faith, humility and devotion towards God; purity, temperance and chaftity towards ourfelves; and righteoufnefs, truth, mercy and charity towards our neighbors, are of infinite importance. Not bringing forth fruits meet for repentance, barrennefs, or unprofitablenefs, are heinous evils indeed. They difhonor God, fruftrate the defign of the bleffed gofpel, injure fociety, and entail certain ruin upon the immortal foul. This we have finely illustrated, and stongly enforced in this history before us, of our Lord's destruction of the barren fig-tree.

Before we proceed to the intention of Chrift Jefus in this transaction, and the use which we ought to make of it, fome observations may be made upon the objections which have been offered to this relation. As St. Matthew relates this ftory, there is no difficulty attending it whatfoever. He informs us what our Lord did with refpect to the fig-tree, without adding any circumftances of the action. But St. Mark has occasioned fome perplexity, and many evil remarks from prejudiced readers, by his more particular and circumstantial account. He has added two expressions, from which the enemies of Christianity have endeavored to give a difadvantageous idea of its author. To what St. Matthew fays of this fact, St. Mark fubjoins these two circumstances ; the one, If haply be might find any thing thereon; and this other, for the time of figs was not yet.

By the firfl of thefe expressions, it appears that the expectations of our Lord were raifed by feeing a fig-tree afar off, he hoped to relieve his hunger, fupposing there might be fruit on a tree, which promifed fo well at a distance. But, when he came to it, be found nothing but leaves.—Here this quession has been reproachfully asked, to the flumbling of the weak, and the distress of the fincere, "How can

" this confift with the divinity and perfection of " Jefus Chrift, that he fhould be deceived or mif-" taken?" But this may be eafily folved. Outward objects made the fame impreffion upon our Saviour which they did upon other men. In common life he acted as men ordinarily do in fimilar circumfiances. Therefore, the fig-tree prefented to his fight when he was hungry, raifed in him the defires and fenfations it would have done in another. Hunger was a fenfation our Lord felt in common with other men. It was a natural appetite, and to be fatisfied in the ufual way. He never wrought miracles when there was no need of them, or no important end to be answered by them. Hence, we find him fending his disciples to buy provisions; he afks water to drink of a Samaritan woman, &c. Our Lord, notwithstanding he thought it no robbery to be equal with the Father, and did claim equal homage and worship, and was a divine perfon, yet was truly and really man; fubject to all the appetites, infirmities, and imperfections proper to human nature, fin only excepted.

In this view, we can eafily explain that observation of St. Luke, relating to our Saviour, That he increased in wisdom and stature; that is, he improved in body and mind; he grew wife—he advanced in knowledge and understanding, as he advanced in years. He acquired human knowledge as others do in a way of observation, experience, reafoning and reflection. Jefus Chrift, as man, was not born with a fund of knowledge, or with all that flock of ideas which he was ever to have.

Thefe remarks plainly obviate the difficulty.— No imperfection can be imputed to our Lord from what is here faid in this paffage, only fuch as is the neceffary confequence of human nature. Though his knowledge, as man, was not abfolutely perfect, it can no more be a diminution of his character, than it can to any other perfon, that his fcience is not infinite.

I have not gone into these observations on the imperfections of the human nature in Christ, merely to folve the difficulty in this text, but to place this fubject in a just and true light. A proper idea of this matter will render many apparent difficultics in fcripture easy and plain. The want of attention here often leads to confusion in the minds, and discourses of some, while they feem to talk and think as if the human was swallowed up in the divine nature.

The knowledge of Chrift may be confidered in a threefold view; as divine, human and infpired. His divine knowledge, as God, is infinite and infallible—his human, as man, was limited, uncertain, and acquired by degrees—his infpired knowledge was alfo partial, and communicated to him at feafons.

In relation to the first fort Simon Peter must be understood to speak, when he ascribes all knowledge to Jefus, even of the fecrets of the heart.— Lord, thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee.—Of his human knowledge St. Mark here speaks in our text. His prophetic knowledge, mentioned in many places, is plainly confirmed in the beginning of the revelation. The revelation of Jefus Christ, which God gave unto bim.

Further, It is proper to be remarked, with regard to the actions of our Saviour, they were often done upon very different motives from what appeared at first to the spectators. His actions, as well as his difcourfes, were defigned for inftruction. There was often a moral in his behavior, as well as in his parables. When he girded himfelf with a towel and washed his disciples feet, he had more in view than merely to cleanfe them. His intention was to teach them humility, condefcenfion, kindnefs, love, and a train of virtues, in the most moving and fenfible manner. Yet they did not take his defign, till it was expressly explained to them. Thus is the cafe before us; he went to the fig-tree not merely to fatisfy his hunger, but to inftruct his disciples throughout all ages; to teach them, who were present with him, the future deftiny of Jerufalem for their mifimprovement of the most diftinguished advantages; and all others, the danger of barrennefs, and the abfolute neceffity of fruitfulnefs in the ways of God. This was not adverted to by the difciples, till our Lord explained his conduct. From hence, in this transaction, attending to all the characters our Lord fuftained, it is evident, he was neither deceived nor miftaken. He might have known it was barren, and have gone to it for this reafon, to illustrate his purpofe, and exhibit the great evil of barrennefs in religion to all mankind.

The fecond difficulty imagined in the text is derived from these words, The time of figs was not yet. Therefore, fome prejudiced readers of the New Testament, have triumphed in an objection found here to Chriftianity, as though it abfolutely demolished the whole system. As if the total fum of evidence, in favor of the Chriftian religion, was really confronted and fet afide by the ignorant and fuperficial force of a fingle remark. Our English translation of these words is, perhaps, not fo happily expressed, but the original is plain, obvious, and eafy to every candid and fair mind. The time of gathering in the figs was not yet. That is, they were now ripe on the trees, fit for use or to eat, but not yet carried in, or laid up in their flores. Now could there poffibly be either folly or weaknefs in expecting to find fruit proper upon this tree, which had leaves as other fruit-bearing trees, and looked green and flourishing at a distance. We have another precifely fimilar phrafe ufed by St. Matthew, which has never been objected to by any, because plainly translated. The time of the fruit. The fruit was ripe, the feafon of harveft come, therefore, the hufbandman fent his fervants to receive the fruits of his vineyard; but he alfo was mistaken or disappointed.*

I fhould not have made these remarks for the removal of seeming difficulties in our text, only for the fake of some, who are extremely fond of objections against the scriptures, and defirous of improving every little thing in criticism, or in their chronology, to weaken, if not to destroy their pretensions to a divine original.

We fhall now attend to the moral fenfe and defign of our Saviour, in this action of defiroying the barren fig-tree, and the improvement which we ought to make of it.

To illustrate the intention of our Lord in this action, it may be observed, that the prophets in the Old Testament, to express their prophecies and the comminations of heaven against the Jews, employed not only words, but such symbolical actions, as did in the most lively manner, paint their Vol. III.

* Kairos buchoon, and Kairos toon Karpoon, Matt. xxii 34. are phrafes communicating precifely fimilar ideas, and with regard to time or feafon, the ideas are the fame. Both of them fignify the feafon of harveft, or the time of gathering in the refpective fruits. I thall only mention one authority, out of many, in fupport of this interpretation. It is Dr. Macknight, in his Harmony of the Four Gofpels, vol. 2, page 104.—" Kairos buchoon, properly figni-

"fies the feafon of gathering figs, as Kairos toon Karpoon, Matt: "xxi. 24. fignifies the feafon of gathering the fruits. In conftru-"ing this paffage, the latter claufe mult be joined with the words, "be came if haply he might find any thing thereon: for the Evange-"lift tells us, that the feafon of gathering figs was not yet come, "to fhew that none had been taken off the tree, and confequently "having its whole produce upon it, there was nothing improper "in Christ's expecting fruit then," folly, their stupidity, fin and punishment. This, Jefus, who taught fuperior to men, and aftonifhed them with his doctrine, imitates in this branch of his conduct. It is evident, that by the fig-tree, is intended the Jewish nation, the then church and people of God, who had long enjoyed the means of grace, and the most eminent privileges, both civil and facred; its barrennels fignifies their unfruitfulness, their ingratitude, baseness, rebellion, backfliding, and wickednefs; by Chrift's curfing it, is pointed out their awful doom, their extermination as a kingdom, their excision as a church, and their total ruin and difperfion through all nations. They, who were once the most favorite people of heaven, became the most contemptible people on earth. Are the favages in our wildernels, the inhabitants of Ethiopia, or the Hottentots upon the African steril shores; are any of these fo hated, fo perfecuted, fo evil entreated, or fo defpised, as the barren, ejected, and dispersed Jews? Look upon the fig-tree, it withers, dies, and is no more; look upon the Jews for feventeen hundred years and more, and you are ready to fay they are damned.

This horrid ftate of the Jews, a people favored of heaven above all nations of the earth, had been often delineated by their Meffiah in the ftrongeft images, and in ftriking parables of obvious application. An inflance of which let us felect from the twenty-first chapter of Matthew.

". A certain householder planted a vineyard, manured and hedged it, furnished it with every convenient building, every utenfil, and every apparatus; in this fair and inviting situation be rented it to tenants; and when the time for receiving his income came, he fent his fervants to collect it; the tenants having lived well, and by this time finding themselves rich, they supposed themfelves the lords of the manor; they stood ready to difpute title; they beat one fervant, killed another, foned a third, and drove them off the land. Other servants were fent, the fame treatment, and worse ensued. Lastly, be fent his fon, in rational expectation that he would awe. them into reverence and fubmission. But they were too far gone in wickedness to be reclaimed. When they beheld him, their wicked hearts exulted, faying, this is the heir, come, let us kill him and possels. No fooner is their borrid refolve formed than executed." Our Lord applies this ftinging parable in a pointed address to the Jews. What is proper for the Lord of the vineyard to do to those men? Their guilty confciences constrain them to answer. He will miferably destroy those wicked men, and let it out to others who will render him the fruits in their seasons. Then faith Jefus to them, this justice will God perform; the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof.

This fame thing the prophet Ifaiah had long before predicted, and in the most beautiful, moving, and eloquent manner represented. Attend to the picture he draws. My well-beloved bath a vineyard in a very fruitful bill; be fenced it, gathered out the fiones thereof; planted it with the choicest vine; built a tower in the midst of it; and also made a wineprefs therein; and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes. And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah; judge, I pray you betwixt me and my vineyard! What could have been done more for my vineyard that I have not done in it? Therefore, I will utterly destroy it and lay it waste; there shall come up briars and thorns in it; and the clouds shall rain no rain upon it. Thus the house of Israel was barren, wicked, and unprofitable, and destruction to the uttermost came upon them.

Having thus illustrated our Lord's intention in this action of blasting the barren fig-tree, it is eafy to collect what instruction it affords, and what use we ought to make of it. The slightest consideration of it will ferve to teach us these two lessons.

I. That where God grants eminent bleffings, and affords the means of grace, he reafonably expects the fruits of holinefs.

II. That unfruitfulnefs under the bounties of heaven, and the light and ordinances of the gofpel, is a dangerous and evil condition. Our Saviour's coming to the tree to feek fruit, fully fuggefts the one; and his curfing it for its barrennefs, the other.

In respect to the first, when God bestows his favors, he expects proper and fuitable returns;

where he grants the means of grace, the gofpel and its ordinances, he reafonably expects the fruit they are calculated to produce. How is it to be wished, that the generality of Christians were more fenfible of this! If we lived more deeply under this impression, we should maintain a more lively fenfation of the neceffity of holinefs and virtue; there would be hopes then we would make it more ferioufly our fludy and care to comply with the obligations of religion. Multitudes in the prefent day feem fo regardless of practical piety, that it is to be feared they adjust their opinions to their conversation and conduct. They feparate the branches of religion, and reduce its importance in fuch a manner, that their minds are quiet and eafy, though their lives are exceedingly irregular. One, who is notorioufly intemperate in drinking, yet he declares himfelf an honeft man in all his dealings; this renders all peaceable and fafe within. Another is addicted to profane fwearing; but he thinks no harm, and is charitable, kind and benevolent, and this fupports his hope. A third, covetous, griping, and unjuft; yet he prays, goes constantly to church, and his feat is never empty at facrament; his peace is joy, and his hope affurance. A fourth carries a bitter, cenforious, falfe, flandering and backbiting tongue; but he was convinced and converted in mode and form, at fuch a time and place; therefore, his mountain ftands ftrong, and his comfort cannot be shaken by little immoralities. A fifth is mean, churlifh, peevifh, trou-blefome, and vexatious to his family and all around him; but he can tell an excellent flory of experiences, therefore, his conficience calmly bafks on the mountains of tranquility, without any painful fears or doubts. Thus deluded man poifes virtues againft vices, balances down immoralities with greater religion, calms the furges of his conficience, and floats down the current of perdition.

If, my brethren, we attend more to reafon and revelation, and lefs to the falfe dictates and prejudices of our own corrupted hearts, we fhould furely be better Christians. We should be effectually convinced that God has immoveably fixed the uniform religion and obedience of his rational creatures at too high a value to difpenfe with any branch of them. Univerfal holinefs and righteoufnefs are of fuch infinite moment with God, that he fent his only begotten Son to fuffer and die for the world, in order that men should be made holy, and reduced to the obedience of the laws of rectitude and purity. With this view he has granted the revelation of his will-his fabbaths, statutes and the means of grace. He inftructs by his wordadmonishes by his providence-alarms by his threatenings-allures by his promifes, and deals with us by his holy fpirit. Surely God has high defigns in conferring rich temporal mercies, and fpiritual immunities, privileges, and bleffings upon his people and his church. It is that they may be fruitful, rich in good works, pure and holy in all manner of conversation.

Does the hufbandman plow and fow without view to a crop? Does he dig, manure and drefs his vineyard without expectation of fruit? God is often, in holy writ, compared to a hufbandman; the reafon is obvious, and the above queries fufficiently fuggest it. Can we suppose that the majesty of heaven, who does not fuffer the abuse of temporal mercies to pafs unpunished, will not refent the misimprovement of spiritual and heavenly things? Did he difplay the light of his glorious gofpel only that a rebellious and obstinate world might shut their eyes against it, and harden their hearts? Did he give his Son, his only begotten Son, that the Jews and Gentiles might first shed his blood, and the more impious and ungrateful Chriftians afterwards trample on it as an unholy thing? Does he beftow his fpirit to move upon the heart merely to be quenched and grieved?-Surely such conduct is a contradiction of heaven, and a reception of its grace in vain.

Are there any expectations of God, in confequence of his beftowment of great and eminent bleffings, improper or unreafonable? Is it not infinitely juft and fit that he fhould expect a due improvement of the means and advantages we enjoy? That we fhould be grateful for his benefits? That we fhould love him, and render him the moft chearful duty and obedience of heart and life? That we fhould walk by the light of his revelation, believe in Chrift, fubmit to the gofpel, renounce fin and the world, and be no longer flaves to them?

Thefe things are the dictates of reafon and fcripture. Our wickednefs cannot hurt God, nor our righteoufnefs profit him; yet an holy God expects the fruits of holinefs from us. How often does the bleffed Saviour compare his word to feed, and his hearers to ground, which he pronounces ... good or bad according as it does, or does not bring forth fruit?—The gofpel every where teftifies that the great end of all the benefits of God the Father and God the Son to men, is, that being made free from fin, and become the fervants of God, they flould have their fruit unto bolinefs, and, in the end, everlafting life.

Now, my brethren, look into your hearts and lives. You enjoy all the means of grace and falvation. Are you made better by them? You have the word of God to read, and it is abundantly preached unto you. Do they make any proper impreffion upon your hearts, are you fanctified by them? Are you awakened to any ferious concern about your fouls? Do you make confcience of prayer and the duties of piety and devotion? Are you diligent in moral and relative duties? Are you peaceable neighbors, comfortable friends, good husbands, affectionate wives, faithful parents, dutiful children, kind masters, and obedient servants? Are your hearts thus established in grace, your lives fhining in godlinefs, and your fruits the fruits of righteoufnefs?

After all the pains of heaven, and the mercies God hath bestowed upon you-after all the love of God—the fufferings of Chrift—the flrivings of the fpirit—the labors of minifters, and the prayers and tears of parents, are there not many of you full under the power and dominion of fin, in the gall of bitternefs, and bonds of iniquity? Remember, O finners, your day of grace and mercy will come to an end! If you fpend the refidue of life, as that which is paft, who can paint the horror of the ruin and deftruction which will be your fate? Your meditations ought to be infinitely interefted in thefe things. This will be readily difcerned, and glare like fun-beams from a fea of glafs, in the next obfervation; that,

II. Upon Christ's curfing the fig-tree, it was immediately blafted, and perifned from the roots, From hence we infer, that barrenness or unfruitfulnefs, under the bleffings and ordinances of the gospel, and the means of grace, is an awful and dangerous State. Hear what St. Paul fays in this cafe; The earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dreffed, receiveth bleffing from God; but that which beareth thorns and briars is nigh unto curfing, whose end is to be burned. Attend to the words of our Lord, the deciding and final judge of the conduct of men. Behold, thefe three years, I come feeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none; cut it down: why cumberet it the ground? Oh! how foon may a poor careless finner be hardened into a reprobate fenfe, and hurled into irretrievable wo! Soon the day of grace may fet, and rife with you no more for ever! You may exhaust eternity in excruciating groans, That the harvess is pass, and the summer is ended, and we are not faved.

Behold, O carelefs finner, the barren and fallen leaves around you! How many are drying up from the roots, and dropping into the invisible world? Some dying in a miferable-fome in a doubtful ftate; fome in the full career of their fins, and others amidst the purposes of future repentance .--Doft thou, O barren sinner, dare the justice, omnipotence and jealoufy of Almighty God? Or doft thou still foolishly prefume on despifed grace and infulted mercy? He who fpared not the angels who fell-who spared not his only fon, will he spare you, O flúpid Christians, who perfist, in defiance of light, to defpife his grace and mercy? He that fpared not his chofen people, the feed of Abraham, Ifaac, and Jacob his friends :- What? Shall the quettion drop from my lips? Will he fpare and fave you?-No. The blinded mind, and even the feared confcience muft fpurn the thought. Alas! is the indignation of heaven-the wrath, tribulation and anguish from the eternal king lost, as the paffing wind, upon you? Have the torments of hell no terror? Aroufe, O barren foul! open thine eyes! shake thyself! flee destruction, before thou art inwrapped in liquid sheets of endless flames!

If preaching, and the other ordinances of God, cannot effect your adamantine hearts, and bring forth the penitential refolve, and induce you, in fincerity, to yield up your hearts to the bleffed Jefus, to walk in the ways of righteoufnefs, and to become fruitful Christians, attend the dying rooms of barren fouls, clofing their eyes upon all terrestrial things! Follow them in your contemplations to the land of darkness; and, in your retired moments, confider their final doom, and alk yourfelves, where is it probable they are gone? See how friends and relatives bend over the departing life; they render ftrong groans for weak; they figh at the intervals; they reftrain their own breath to hear the departing-the long intermitted gafp returns no more! Loud laments fill the chambers-open the creaking, groaning doors-flash through the inferior apartments-burft forth in horrid peals, and follow the barren spirit down to eternal perdition! -Now is the accepted time-now is the day of falvation-is the laft voice to gofpel reprobates this fide hell!

Lord, have mercy upon us! Amen.

ON HONESTY.

BY

ALEXANDER MACWHORTER, D. D. Minifter of the First Presbyterian Church, Newark, New-Jersey.

HEBREWS XIII. 18.

We trust we have a good conscience, in all things, willing to live honesfly.

THAT kind of beauty, which arifes from harmony and proportion, is in no writings fo vifible or fo perfect as in the holy fcriptures. The religion therein revealed to mankind, is a fyftem of perfect and univerfal order and harmony. There is fuch a facred connexion between the truths and duties, fuch a regular dependance of one part upon another, that any difadjuftment or neglect of one, mars the general fymmetry, and produces a meafure of deformity and confusion. There is a just and univerfal tendency in the whole, to the fame uniform effect and end; and every particular truth and duty unites to promote the ultimate defign of the whole. In this fystem, there is no interference in the feveral branches of truth or duty; one truth or duty does not juftle out another; each has its proper place and proper confequence; and, therefore, calculated in infinite wifdom to anfwer the general and great intention, which is the glory of God and the perfection and felicity of intelligent creatures. Thofe truths and duties, which relate to God, ftand as the first principles of the fystem; thofe, which relate to ourfelves and our neighbor, arife as infallible and neceffary confequences from thefe. And fo ftrict and certain is the connexion, that the whole is injured by an infringement of the confequences, as of the principal parts.

Thus is true religion described in the facred oracles; and thus it is when transferred to the heart by the operations of the Holy Spirit. Religion in the heart, in fome good degree, corresponds to religion in the word, as face answers to face in a As the truths and duties of religion, glafs. promote picty to God, and an holy regard to the Lord Jefus Chrift, fo they also produce a due refpect to, and a practical observance of every focial virtue. Hence, how beautiful and amiable is a truly religious character! One branch of religion doth not exclude another; a Christian's respect and duty to God is fo far from injuring, that above all things it promotes his duty to his neighbor. It is the divine commandment, that he should love bis neighbor as himfelf; and he that loveth God, will keep bis commandments.—On the other hand, duty and refpect to his neighbor, or the practice of focial duties will never preclude or diminifh his regard to God, or the duties of devotion. Every duty holds its proper place in the general fystem. Love to God, and faith in Chrift Jefus, oblige us to treat our neighbor with propriety; and our honeft and virtuous conduct towards our neighbor will never allow us to enjoy the approbation of our own minds, or to have a good confcience, without a fupreme regard and duty to God.

From this view of things, it is evident that all appearances of religion are defective and wrong, which do not promote the duties incumbent upon us in our focial connexions as men and chriftians. The more religion reigns in the heart towards God, the more love and duty will increase towards our neighbor; with more care and diligence will the focial duties be cultivated and difcharged. That religion, which is of the operation of God, purifies the heart from the old leaven of malice, wickednefs, dishonesty and unrighteousnefs, and forms the foul to the love and practice of candor, charity, goodnels, integrity and uprightnels. All religious affections and exercifes, unaccompanied with the moral virtues, are delutive and fpurious. Holinefs and focial virtue are infeparable in the nature of things, and in the revelation of heaven to man. The former cannot exift without the latter, nor can the latter be genuine and durable without the former. Some perfons in great zeal and apparent warmth in religious and devotional exercifes, will fpeak meanly of morality and focial virtue, and others again will cry up morality and focial duties as all in all. But both these are deviations from that real religion which fecures peace of confcience and leads to everlasting life, The holy scriptures teach us, that the practice of piety, godlinefs, focial virtue, and morality, are all beautifully connected, and go hand in hand. They no where admit of fuch notions of religion as exclude morality, nor fuch a preference and practice of morality as weakens or fupercedes the obligations of religion in its most exalted branches or spiritual exercises. Each must possels its due influence on the Chriftian life in all proper exercife, frames and practice. Accordingly we find our Lord and his apoftles always inculcating the duties of both tables upon their hearers. Our divine Redeemer, when he exhibits a comprehensive view of the whole duty of man, and of the requisitions of heaven, does it in this manner. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyfelf. And the great St. Paul, the supposed author of this epifile • to the Hebrews, who was eminent for his difplaying and dwelling upon the doctrines of grace, is no -less diftinguished for his enforcing the focial virtues, and enjoining the duties of morality. He re-· commends them in general, agreeably to the example of his mafter, in love to our neighbor; and he enlarges throughout his letters upon every particular branch of focial and relative duty. And here, in the words of our text, with great propriety and energy, he recommends the virtue of honefty .---This is a part of Christian morality of a superior kind. Without it we cannot expect the favor of God, the friendship and efteem of mankind; nor peace in our own minds, in moments of fober reflection. When the apostle hopes, with regard to himfelf and thefe Hebrew Christians, that they had a good confcience, he ftrongly intimates that the goodness of their confcience arose from the difposition they had to practife this amiable and neceffary virtue. We trust we have a good conscience; in all things, willing to live honefly. Sincere defires and endeavors to live honeftly; both procure a good confcience, and are evidences of it. A good confcience is a fweet companion and a continual entertainment; it brings in a large revenue of tranquillity, fatisfaction, joy and confolation to the breast in which it dwells, under the frowns of the world, and all the varying afpects of divine providence.

Honefty is a Christian virtue of a very general hature; it extends to all the relations which take place among the children of men. But, in particular, it refers to our commerce; bargains, promifes and dealings, one with another. It is truly a melancholy recollection, that there are fo many violations of this virtue among mankind, efpecially among them who name the name of Christ; and have thereby obliged themfelves to depart from all iniquity. The confiderations by which it is recommended to us, from reafon and religion, however convincing and numerous, are not always powerful enough to imprefs the confcience, and hold us to the fleady observation of honefly in our conduct. Such is the degeneracy of human nature, and fo deeply are the feeds of depravity implanted in our fouls, that flight occasions oftentimes prove victorious temptations to difhonefty, weaken our regards to righteoufnefs, and lead us to injure our fellow-creatures. But to render our consciences more tender-to enable them more faithfully to perform their office-to caule us to avoid and abhor difhonefty more, and to ftrengthen our resolutions in favor of integrity, let us, a little, in the

Firfl place, open the fountains from whence difhonefty flows.

Then, fecondly, mention fome confiderations and motives to induce us to be confcienciously honest in all our employments, bufiness and conversation.

Firft, In order to illustrate the excellency and importance of this virtue of honefty, we fhall point out fome of the fountains from whence the oppofite vice flows, or fome of the chief caufes of difhonefty. Oppofites frequently illustrate each other to great advantage. The beauty and charms of Christian virtue gain strength by arousing, in us, an indignation and abhorrence of mean, bafe and immoral practices. Honefty will appear more noble, honorable and God-like, by awakening a proper difguft and hatred of the odious deformity of difhonefty.

With regard to the chief fprings of difhonefty, they may be contemplated both in a general and particular view. Under a general confideration, difhonefty arifes from the fame common fource with all other kinds of abominations and iniquities. It arifes from the awful depravity and corruption of the human heart, which is deceitful above all things, and defperately wicked; and from whence, according to our Lord's account, proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falfe witnefs, blafphemies. An evil fountain, indeed, that fendsforth fuch ftreams of pollution!—But the more particular caufes of difhonefty are fuch things as thefe.

1. Slothfulnefs, idlenefs and an averfion to labor and the bufinefs of our calling. In fome, this vice may be confidered, in a meafure, as conftitutional. They are naturally flothful and fluggifh. They incline to do nothing with a proper fpirit, either ferviceable to themfelves or others. In others it is contracted and acquired. They are naturally active enough; but, by improper management, by indulgence of a wandering fancy, by contracting a fondnefs for company and folly, they become impatient of application to bufinefs; they feel a reluctance to the confinement of labor and of their occupation; industry is relinquished; an inattention to their word, and a breach of promiles follow. These are in great danger of practifing dithonefty in one fort or another. They offer a thousand untrue, dishonest and shuffling excufes to their employers for not having done their. work-they lofe their cuftom-their circumstances become prefling and uneafy-they can obtain credit no longer-they must have a livelihoodtherefore, recourfe must be had to fome dishonest methods to obtain it. Hence they are tempted to over-reaching, cheating, defrauding, pilfering, and even, perhaps, to notorious theft and robbery.-They imagine evil upon their beds, and fludy fchemes of dishonesty. This was the unhappy cafe of the unjust steward. To work he had not been used, and to beg he was ashamed; hence he refolves immediately to practife knavery and difhonefty. Behold, how readily evil devices occur to a proud man averfe and difused from labor .----The forfaking of industry is the abandoning of honefty. How many are there whole honor and pride would be mortally wounded by returning to their trades or manual labor, and yet in the full gratification of their pride, and in confiftence with their honor, falfely fo called, they can be guilty of the most crafty, lying-and villanous practices. O honor! how art thou proftituted and perverted! The greatest dishonor and disgrace to human nature must now be submitted to, rather than an honeft and honorable application to the business of our callings. If our notions of religion fhould become as wild and extravagant, as the notions of many are of honor, it will foon come to pass that the greatest villain will be deemed the most religious man.

Industry, and a careful attention to our employments in life, are of effential importance to true, honor and honefty; and they are equally fo to real religion and Chriftian morality. Idlenefs is an exuberant fountain of a multitude of evils. It, contains not a tint of virtue or pièty. It is an evil, pure and unmixed : It contains not a fpice of religion, morality, honor or honefty. What muft be the ftreams flowing from fuch an avernian fource? All polluted, odious, and to be detefted Let every Chriftian turn away his head with abhorrence of the idol of indolence, Attend to St. Paul's addrefs to the fauntering Christians in Theffalonica. We bear there are some among you that walk diforderly, and work not at all, but are bufy, and yet idle bodies; we command and exbort fuch by our Lord Jefus Christ, that with quietness, they work and eat their own bread, and those who will not work; What does he fay? Does he grant them an allowance of difhoneft and fhifting contrivances; No, they should starve, they should not eat.

Now, my brethren, let us abhor idlenefs and lazinefs as odious vices, and the fources of horrid evils in time and in eternity. Let us be peculiarly careful to innure ourfelves, and form our children to habits of application and induftry. Let us oblige them to a fleady attendance upon their fchools, and to fuch bufinefs as every year of their age is capable of. The great bulk of mankind are made or ruined, in foul and body for ever, before they are eighteen years of age. Hence, the wifeft flates, the most religious churches, and most chriftian governments, have employed their chief and principal care upon children and youth. Train up a child in the way wherein he flould go, and when be becomes old he will not depart from it.

The fecond fountain and caufe of difhonefty is avarice or covetousness. The influence of this vice hurries many perfons into a thoufand wicked and unrighteous practices. This unbounded defire of getting cannot be removed but by difhonest gratifications. Hence people are tempted to take what is not their due, or withhold what is due to others. They purfue dishonest measures to pinch from, or over-reach those with whom they deal. It is to this horrid root of bitternefs, the false balance and deceitful beam owe their invention. Hence the feller puts off damaged wares for good, and the buyer, falfe money or counterfeited currency. This avaricious temper difpofes the tradefman to work up bafe materials in a flighty manner, and to impose upon the ignorance and credulity of his employer. This caufes one to take the advantage of the prefent neceffity of another, and obliges him either to difpofe of, or purchafe at an improper value. Covetoufnefs tempts perfons to prevaricate, truckle, flatter and lie in their dealings; to break their promifes, and delay their payments to their cuftomers or creditors. The fame difhoneft humor makes men bring in extortionate bills, and overcharge for their fervices. What a world of iniquity, difhonefty and injustice flow from this awful fource! Here we fee the propriety of the frequent cautions we have from Chriftianity, to betware of covetoufnefs.

A third fountain of difhonefty originates in luxury and extravagance. When perfons live above their income, and their expences exceed their circumftances; when they attempt to fhine at home and abroad in pomp and equipage, with those of better business and superior fortunes : What can be the confequence? Bankruptcy or difhonefty must be the necessary issue. From hence they borrow without defigns of payment, and run into debt without a rational profpect of difcharging it. Many fupport their prodigality at the expence of their creditors, and the ruin of their families. This vice drives fome to gaming, and other practices of bad report, with a view of hafty and difhoneft gains; and thus it becomes an awful fource of difhonor, wretchedness, and mifery.

Fourthly, Another fountain of diffionefty I shall mention, is pride and felfishness. These had a deep share in the first transgression, and probably had great influence in the fall both of angels and men. Thefe produce difhonefty towards our brethren of mankind of every fort; but more efpecially in regard to their perfons and reputation. Pride tempts men to refule due refpect to their fuperiors, to be haughty to their equals, and to fhow a fupercilious contempt of their inferiors.— Selfithnefs cannot bear the preference of another —It grows uneafy, and fwells into diffatisfaction at his advancement or profperity: It is hard to treat a proud and felfith man with reverence, fubmiffion and obeifance. When you are obliged to bow and cringe before him, and bite the lip, it is not in nature or grace, not to defpife him in your inmoft foul.

It is pride alfo that raifes envy at the growing fame of a neighbor, and induces to the fpreading abroad of difhonorable things to his difadvantage. It takes an ill-natured fatisfaction in feeing him mortified or brought down. Pride and felfishnels often produce a malicious and revengeful temper, which is frequently an origin of much difhonefty. Malice and revenge form a deteftable character, and near a-kin to hell. It is impossible, without horror, to relate the dreadful extremes these paffions will carry perfons to, in whom they prevail. They often flick at nothing, however difhonorable, thocking and inhumane, for their gratification. They direct to flandering, backbiting, ftabbing another's good name. They deftroy the peace of neighborhoods, diffolve the bonds of friendship, break afunder the ties of blood, and affinity, fcatter abroad firebrands, arrows and death, apd work dishonesty with greediness, and feel the tormenting pleafure which the dainned enjoy. Let fome unhappy occasion open this fource of ill, immediately all the faults, infirmities and blemisses of a worthy and good character will be proclaimed and aggravated; his best, most Christian and beneficent actions will be misseprefented and debased; confidences disregarded; fecrets blazed and publissed; and the whole course of nature set on fire. Behold dishonesty, what a horrid spectre! It creates damnation in the foul, and turns earth into hell. Let us quit the odious and awful object, and proceed—

Secondly, To bring forward fome confiderations and motives to induce us to be conficientioufly honeft in all our employments, bufinefs and converfationi with our fellow-men.

Can we now think a difhoneft thought, contrive a difhoneft fcheme, or be guilty of a difhoneft action? Confider the right every man has to enjoy his own, by the laws of nature, reafon, religion and fociety, in respect to his perfon, property and character. These bleffings are the benefact ons of heaven to all. Their right to the undiffurbed posseftion of them is founded upon the grant of the God of nature and of grace. To hesitate about the title of the lawful owner's quiet enjoyment of them, is to dispute the right of the fupreme and Vol. 111.

independent proprietor, the Lord Almighty. Therefore, all fraudulent and difhoneft practices, from the evil thought in the mind to the higheft acts of outrageous violence, are a reversion of the orders of heaven, a condemnation of equity and wisdom, and an invasion of the throne of God. It is as a poet inimitably expresses himself in another case, to "Snatch from his hands the balance and the rod, "Rejudge his justice, be the God of God."

Will the Almighty Sovereign fee his creatures and his children rifled of their immunities and bleffings, which his goodnefs and bounty hath conferred upon them, and not conceive refertment? Will he not whet his glittering fword, and his hand lay hold on vengeance? Let all difhoneft perfons tremble; the eternal God will affert his own prerogative, and maintain the facred rights of honefty.

Further confider, fincerity and honefty are the very bonds which hold fociety together. The religious obfervation of thefe virtues are the great means to advance its real interefts. From whence it is plain, that the neglect or difufe of them, muft deftroy the advantages of fociety, and threaten its very exiftence. A difhoneft perfon is a public nuifance, and may be viewed as a common enemy to mankind. None are fafe from injuries who have any commerce or dealings with him. Can there be fuch monfters in nature as profelling Chriftians, and yet difhoneft men? They fap the foundations of church and flate, and are more dangerous than open and declared foes. An avowed enemy may be an honeft man, but a deceitful friend cannot. What fociety, either civil or religious, can be fecure, where difingenuity and difhonefty are practifed by its members? Can we hold fuch in effimation, or think favorably of them? How contrary is difhonefty to the treatment we with and expect from mankind? We refent it, when done to ourfelves; how fhould we avoid it in all our traffick with others? Let us never, in any instance, act a dishonest part, or be guilty of a conduct contrary to humanity, reason and chriftianity.

Laftly, Confider the practice of diffionefty is prohibited in a thoufand inftances in the word of God. The divine wrath is revealed against it, both in his declarations, and in many examples recorded in the facred history. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, faith the Lord thy God, Ye shall not sheal nor deal falsely, nor lie one to another. Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbor nor rob him. The wages of him that is bired shall not abide with the all night until the morning. Ye shall do no unrighteousnefs in judgment, in weight, or in measure. A just balance and just weights shall ye have. The royal preacher informs us, That an unjust weight is an abomination to the Lord. Wo to him, faith the most high by the prophet, who buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wr ng; who useth his neighbor's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work. What doth the Lord fay to Christians, by the apostle James, of dishoness gains? Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them skall be a witness against you, and shall cat up your fisch as fire. Ye have beaped up treasure together for the last days. Behold the hire of the laborers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth, and the cries of them which have reaped, are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth.

Read the vengeance of heaven against dishonest men. Confider the end of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness. Behold the fate of an oppreflive and dishonest Pharaoh. What infincerity, forfeiture of honor, breach of promises, and cruelty formed his character! And how was his kingdom deluged in blood by the flaying of the furst-born; and himself and his whole host overwhelmed in the Red Sca! View the dogs licking the blood of Ahab, in the very place where he shed innocent blood, that he might dishonestly possible himself of his neighbor's vineyard. But there would be no end of retailing horrid instances of this kind.

Let us turn our eyes to our divine mafter upon this head, contemplate his conduct, and the defign of the holy religion he inftituted. Plain and folemn are his commands upon the mount, as alfo on other occasions, that honefly be practifed between man and man. He has given us an admirable, eafy and univerfal rule of honefty, in that ever-memorable and golden maxim, All things what foever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them, for this is the law and the prophets. How beautiful, excellent and obvious to application is this divine direction! What a fystem of Christianity is here! And whole codes of morality cannot express more. Do unto all as ye would defire they fhould do unto you, were you in their circumftances, and they in your's, then you will be honeft men and good Chriftians. Dreadful is the curfe which Jefus pronounces upon the difhoneft religionists of his day. Wo unto you Scribes and Pharifees, bypocrites, for ye pay ty be of mint and annife, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith ! that is, ye are neither charitable, honest, nor true believers. Your neglecting honefty towards your fellow-creatures under the specious pretences of high religion, much devotion, and long prayers, will only bring down more awful vengeance upon your devoted heads. God bates robbery and injustice, he abhors difhonefty. even for burnt-offerings. The covetous and extortionate are flut out of heaven, and the unjust and difhonest of every complexion thall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Confider the fweet, the bleffed, and perfect example of Jefus, the mighty Lord and Saviour of the world. Behold him fubmitting to virtuous honefly—rendering to all their dues—tribute to whom tribute was due—cuftom to whom cuftom —fear to whom fear; and univerfal love and benevolence to all mankind. He rendered tribute to Cæfar, fubjected himfelf in all duty to his earthly parents, loved his brethren, and practifed, in all things, the most unstained honefly and perfect righteoufnefs.

The great defign and tendency of the gofpel is to infpire us with an inviolable attachment to piety, morality and the moft exalted honefty. Does not the grace of God, which hath appeared unto all men, teach us to deny all ungodlinefs, and every worldly luft, and to live foberly, righteoufly and godly in this prefent evil world? Can they pretend to be Chriflians—to be followers of the pure and holy Jefus, and form expectations of the celeftial rewards, who live in deceit and infincerity, and practife injuffice and difhonefty? Difhoneft men are a blemifh to Chriftianity, and a difgrace to our holy religion.

Now from the confiderations and motives laid before us, let us all be exhorted, my dear brethren, to be perfons of integrity, uprightnefs, and frict juffice. Let us be honeft men—let us keep confciences void of offence towards God and man let us have a good confcience, in all things willing to live honeftly. Whatfoever things are true, whatfoever things are beneft, whatfoever things are juft, wbatfoever things are pure, whatfoever things are love# ly, what foever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

Perfons are often cenfured in our churches for drunkenness, fornication, &c. but who is ever cenfured for difhonesty, a crime of a deeper dye? Men may be guilty of a thoufand things which are not fair and upright, and no notice taken of them.-Yea, they may deceive their neighbor-impofe upon him-prove false to their word-break their promifes-withhold his dues, and not only pafs uncenfured, but be charitably deemed by many as pretty good Chriftians, though none will truft them as firictly honeft. Let us abhor all mean, low and double dealings: Keep yourfelves far removed from fuch evil practices. Attend to honorable industry; be diligent in your callings and occupations, but make not haste to be rich. Let us be careful to keep our children employed, and our youth to bufinefs. I would be far from debarring youth from just and rational recreations. But there is a wide difference between proper recreations, and fauntering, mifchievous idlenefs.-Remember, industry prevents much vice; is a fecurity to good morals, and the hand-maid of religion.

Let us beware of avarice in ourfelves, and guard all under our care, whether children, apprentices or others from evil company—from luxury, pride and extravagance as far as in our power. What fills our goals, but lazines, folly, an aversion from work, extravagance, prodigality and drunken bargains? The truly unfortunate, the frugal and induftrious, who arife not above their bufinefs, and yet by adverfe providences are carried to thofe apartments of calamity, are very few. What caufes the maffy chains to clank in our gloomy dungeons, but horrid difhonefty?—I forbear the purfuit of the rifing awful ideas.—Where can I find a paufe in this exuberant theme?--I muft break off, though to finifh the fubject is impoffible. Indulge me to leave it in the fertentious counfel of the prophet. And Oh! that it might be indeliably written as with the point of a diamond upon each of your hearts! Do juftly, love mercy, and walk bumbly with God.

May this counfel form our character, and evidence our hopes of glory. Amen.

UZAL OGDEN, A. M.

Rector of Trinity Church, in Newark, New-Jerfey.

N this folemn occafion, I fully expected, and hoped, that my reverend and very worthy brother, the minifter of this church, would, from this place, have addreffed you; his neceffary abfence, however, from town, almost the whole of this week, and other circumstances, prevented him from the difcharge of that facred fervice, which has devolved on me. Though, through my abfence alfo, from this place, but a few hours have elapfed fince I was requested thus to appear before you, a fense of duty would not fuffer me to decline the request, even under the difadvantages which attend fo fudden a notice to difcharge fo important an office. It is not the applause of men I covet; and while I folicit the candor of this large

VOL. III.

* Delivered at Newark, in the new Prefbyterian Church, May 6, 1791, at the execution of WILLIAM JONES, for the murder of SAMUEL SHOTWELL. and refpectable audience, I affure them that I shall not attempt to deliver an elaborate discourse; but beg leave to lay before them a few serious facts and observations, which may have a tendency to cause the present solemnity to have its desired effect.

The words of facred writ which occur to me as pertinent to this occafion, you will find in the ixth chapter of the book of Genefis at the 6th verfe. Whofo fheddeth man's blood, by man fhall his blood be fked.

Without any further observations, I shall,

I. Confider the nature of murder.

II. Attend to fome of its caufes.

III. Notice the punishment due to murder.

IV. Regard the ends of this punishment.

First, I am to attend to the nature of murder.

It is a crime, it may be obferved, which, with us, nothing can excufe. If a man is injured in his property, reputation or perfon, the law of this land of freedom and good government, will afford him redrefs.

Murder is expressly forbidden by the laws of Gol and man. The Almighty, in great mercy, hath guarded the lives of men, the works of his hands, by the most positive injunctions. In Exodus xx. 13. we thus read; Theu fhalt not kill; and our Saviour fanctions this divine authority by repeating it, Matt. xix. 18. Thou shalt do no murder; thou shalt not commit adultery, &c. The man, fays God, who shall murder his brother shall be punished. At the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man. And, to name no more places, from the great number which might be cited, in the words of our text, God, very particularly, forbids this crime under the pain of death. Whofo fheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be fbed. It is worthy of remark, that still further to prevent the perpetration of this fin, under the Mofaic dispensation, even the beast that killed a man was to be put to death; and of those animals which it was lawful for men to eat, they were prohibited to eat the blood, because it was the life of them.

Murder, fuffer it further to be obferved, is an offence of great magnitude against both God and man; it bids defiance to all authority, human and divine. In the words following the text, a reason is given why this crime should not be committed; for, in the image of God made he man. Man is not only the creature of God, but the only being, on earth, upon which he instamped his heavenly image; to destroy this image from the earth, is to take from it every thing that is godly; this muss be an heinous offence; it is a manifest opposition to a the will of heaven; and though God fays, I have made man for my glory; the murderer, by his condust declares, (with regard to one individual at least) man shall not exist : God shall not be glorified by him! Against fociety or the state, the offence is great. A ftate is composed of individuals; and unjuftly to take away the life of an individual, is a fort of treason against the community at large; it is an attack on the commonwealth. and it deprives the flate, for ever, of a fellow-citizen; of all his time, talents and ufefulnefs, and, therefore, in fome degree, leffens its power and respectability. Against a family, the evil is often more fenfibly felt, and cannot be compensated. Who, but God, can reftore to the aged father and mother, the fon of their love? or, to the affectionate wife, the companion of her bofom? or, to the, helpless children, their father, their counfellor, and fupport? With refpect to the party murdered, how enormous is the crime! It robs him of the most valuable thing on earth, life; precipitates. him, prepared or unprepared, into the world of fpirits; for ever fixes the flate of his foul, and to him the most ferious confequence may be, death eternal!

Under this head, I fhall only further notice, that fuch is the crime of murder, that human nature revolts at the very idea of it; that, in the divine effeem, it may be committed in thought as well as by deed; and that, even by the laws of our land, it may be perpetrated, when fome may flatter themfelves, though their murderous deed fhall be proved, yet, by the law, they cannot be convicted. It is a circumstance that merits attention, (as appeared on the trial of the unhappy culprit prefent) that perfonal, politive testimony of one or more witneffes, is not neceffary, to ground the charge of murder. If fuch evidence was neceffary, as was juftly remarked, by one of the counfel in behalf of the State, whofe life would be fafe? for murder is generally committed in fecrecy .--Circumstances alone, when clear and strong, are fufficient to convict of this'offence; particularly, as the honorable court observed, should a perfon be found to have fuddenly expired in a room, and, at that inftant, fhould a man iffue from thence, with a fword reeking with blood, this circumftance would be fufficient to affix on him the charge of murder. I mention this to apprize the ignorant and vicious of a fnare they may fall into, while infenfible of danger!

As the crime of murder is thus of great magnitude, and fo abhorrent to God and man, it may not be unufeful, as I purposed,

To attend to fome of the caufes of this fin.

This, I apprehend, is feldom or never committed, till men are greatly depraved; till all fenfe of moral goodnefs is almost totally effaced; until, vice, in them, reigns predominant; for fuch is the deformity of vice, in general, that the perfon not grown grey in iniquity, shudders at the very thought of committing it. But how does the repeated practice of evil obliterate from the mind, every virtuous fentiment, and render man, in point of moral goodnefs, but little fuperior, perhaps, to the infernal fpirits! Our Saviour regards incorrigible finners to be the children of their father the devil, whofe works they will do!

Among the vices which the foonest, and which, most effectually debase and pollute human nature, we may, perhaps, number profane swearing and drunkenness, which are often occasioned through a neglect of private and public devotion, and evil company.

When men are fo degraded, that they fear not God nor regard man, the immediate caufes of murder, in general, are, I conceive, the love of money; the expectation of fome earthly good, or the fpirit of revenge,

But before the murderer commits the awful deed, would he paufe a moment, and confider that the eye of God, at leaft, is upon him; that, thro' the juffice of divine Providence, the murderer, even in this world, feldom efcapes with impunity; and would he confider alfo, the prefent punifhment only, that awaits his guilt, how would he flee from the commiffion of fo attrocious a deed?

This leads me, next, to pay attention to the punishment of murder.

By the laws of God and man, the life of the murderer is required. No tears-no prayers-no penitence-no interceffion of others, nor any lefs punishment than death, can be accepted. Whofo sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed!-He that (miteth a man, fo that he die, fays the divine word, shall surely be put to death !- The murderer shall surely be put to death!-Ye shall take no faiisfaction for the life of a murderer. - If, in enmity, a man smiteth another with his hand that he dieth, he shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer. If a man hate bis neighbor, and lie in wait for him, and smite him mortally that he die, thine eye shall not pity him; but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood !- And how many threatenings hath God denounced against the murderer? The Lord, fays David, will abbor the bloody man! Bloody men shall not live out half their days. And murderers are numbered among those finners, who shall have their part in that lake of fire and brimstone, which burneth for ever and ever!

Their punifhment of temporal death, is truly awful. To be exposed to public fhame!—To be torn from mother, brother, fifter, every friend.— From every earthly good! To be cut off, as in the prefent inftance, in the flower of youth !* To go down with infamy to the grave, as a peft to fociety—as one unworthy of life,—how wretched the flate! Harraffed too by the terrors of a guilty confcience, from which he cannot flee; and, unlefs pardoned by God, through the merits of Chrift, to be covered with everlafting infamy; eternally to endure the anguith of remorfe, and all the effects of the divine difpleafure; to fuftain all the inconceivable miferies of eternal condemnation—how great the wo—how infupportable the thought! But fuch is juftly the doom of the impenitent murderer!

* The culprit was in the twenty-feventh year of his age.

But, is it enquired, Wherefore is he now punislined?

I shall, in the last place, attend to the answer.

Certainly he is not here punished to gratify a fpirit of malice or revenge! He is not held up as a spectacle of mifery that, by men, he may suffer infult, nor that they may rejoice in his mifery! Far from it!-But to imprefs on the minds of men a fense of the malignity of the crime of murder; to deter them from the commission of a deed fo horrid; and, therefore, the punishment is inflicted in the most public manner; That all Ifrael (that every perfon in the ftate) may bear and fear, and do not fuch wickednefs! The murderer is alfo punished, that the community may retain its dignity, and escape the vengeance of God. Blood, we read, defileth the land; and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it. For the honor, therefore, of our country and its laws; for the good and fafety of the commonwealth; and to avoid the frowns of a righteous and holy God, the awful fentence is executed; the facrifice cannot be difpenfed with; and, indeed, not to punish murder, when in our power, is, in fome degree, tacitly to approve of the crime, and to become partakers of the guilt!

Having thus, in a very fummary way, noticed the crime of murder-fome of the caufes of it-. its punishment, and the ends of this punishment, I shall proceed to improve the subject.

1. How fenfibly are we convinced, by every crime, but especially, by that of murder, of the depravity of human nature!-And how foon was this offence committed after the fall of man!-If human nature is thus depraved, while we perceive the neceffity of the holy religion of Jefus; admire its benign intention, which is to prevent every crime; to reftore men to purity, and to reconcile them to God-how grateful should we be for this difpensation of mercy; and what an holy abhorrence should be ours of those men, or those sentiments, which would fubvert the Christian religion, and introduce deifm, or licentious principles, in its stead!

2. It appears, from what hath been faid, how neceffary it is, if men regard their reputationtheir prefent and future happinefs, to revere the precepts of Christianity; and, especially, to avoid the indulgence of anger and drunkennefs; which are among those evils which lead to the perpetration of murder! How frequently and expressly are these fins forbidden?. Wo unto them that rife up ear-A 2

ly in the morning, that they may follow frong drink; that continue 'till night until wine enflame them ! We are affured that the drunkard shall not inherit the kingdom of heaven! And, fays Solomon drunkennefs, at the last, biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder. It deferves attention, that the unhappy effects of this vice were flagrantly manifest in these two causes, tried here fo lately, on indictments for murder. The two unfortunate men who died, were intoxicated in death; the man convicted of man-flaughter, was also intoxicated when he committed the fact; and the perfon who is now condemned for murder, was much addicted to liquor, and had fpent the night in revelling that preceded the day in which he flained his hands with blood!

With refpect to anger. Is it not enjoined, that Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart: Vengeance is mine and I will repay, faith the Lord. We are exhorted to put away all bitterness, anger and malice, to render not evil for evil; but to love even our enemies. And anger, faith the wise man, resteth in the bosom of fools.

3. If parents regard the profperity of their children, how fhould they teach them the principles of our holy religion; admonish them to avoid every vice; excite them by precept and example, to regard every duty; to remember their Creator in the days of their youth! Indeed, will not a different conduct be attended, in all probability, with the moft unhappy confequences; not only to the public in general, but to themfelves in particular; and have they not juft reafon to fear the vengeance of heaven for the neglect of parental duty? Was not the houfe of Eli judged for ever, becaufe his children made themfelves vile, and he reftrained them not ?

4. How thankful to heaven fhould be those parents, whose children are preferved from the power of vice; who do honor to religion; and are a bleffing to their country! How grateful, indeed, should be all who are kept from prefumptuous fins! But should we not remember, that the wages of every fin, unrepented of, will be death eternal!

5. How fhould impious youth be warned by this unhappy example of evil, without delay, to forfake their fins, and to flee the wrath of God to come! Had this unfortunate man revered the dictates of reafon and religion; had the pious admonitions of his mother been properly regarded, might he not have been ornamental to human nature and to religion; been a ufeful member of fociety; borne the name of his father with reputation; been a crown of rejoicing to his widowed, aged mother; fupported her feeble fleps in the decline of life; lived in happinefs, and died in honor!— But, ah! through the indulgence of vice; through the forgetfulnefs of his God, how awfully the reverfe! Will you not, O youth! turn from his example in righteous indignation !—What would tempt you to take his place, to endure his punifhment? —Let his folly, then, teach you wifdom; his indifcretion, infpire you with prudence !—Shun the fatal rock on which he fplit to his deftruction !— For the honor of Chriftianity;—for the reputation and profperity of the ftate, and as you regard your own reputation and happinefs in this world, and in the next; and for the confolation of your parents alfo, be exhorted, be entreated, to forfake the thorny way of vice, and to tread the peaceful, happy path of virtue!

6. Turn your eyes, my brethren, and behold,a moment, the weeping, the difconfolate mother!Pity her wo! Sympathize with her in her diftrefs!Defpife her not; add not to her grief!

I have, laftly, to addrefs a few words to you, fir, who are now the victim of juffice !---Unhappy man!--For you we feel; for you we mourn!--Through the prevalence of vice, your heart became eftranged from God! In ficknefs, you formed refolutions of amendment; but, I fear, in your own ftrength; for they vanifhed like the morning cloud or early dew; Thus you became more and more hardened in iniquity? God, in juft difpleafure, feemed almost totally to have forfaken you! Not having his fear before your eyes, by an indulgence of the paffion of anger and revenge, you have murdered an inoffensive, harmlefs neighbor !--You fay, that you did not mean to take his life; that you had not murder in your heart! But, at leaft, was not your conduct towards him lawlefs, cruel, barbarous! In the effimation of God and man, it was murderous !- You honeftly, however, confess the crime! You wifh finners may take warning by your example! You own the justice of your fentence! You are now to explate your offence, agreeably to the express command of God, with your blood!___ While the hand of justice is raifed for execution, we lament your fate; we deplore your wretchednefs!-Nothing confoles us but your penitence!-You fay, you have fpread your fins before God! That you heartily bewail them! That your only refuge is in the blood of Chrift! That God hath fpoken peace to your foul! That you believe your pardon is fealed in heaven! That your whole trust is in the mercy of God, through Christ! That you are refigned to your fate, and that you will leave the world with affured hopes of acceptance with God, through the righteoufnefs of the merciful Saviour !

We hope your expectations of heaven are rational, fcriptural! But, be not deceived! The adverfary of fouls is fubtle! If you die in delufion you are lost for ever; must endure the miseries of eternal condemnation!

But if your hopes of falvation are just, how great and happy will be your change in a few moments! Bonds you will exchange for heavenly freedom! Infamy for honor! Pain for pleasure! Death for life! You will add to the trophies of divine grace! With ithe murderous Manassah, and other finners, you will join in the praises of redeeming love!

You certainly have no reafon to defpair of the mercy of heaven! Chrift came not to call the righteous, but finners to repentance! The broken and contrite beart will not be defpifed by the God of compafion!— Eleffed are those who mourn, for they shall be comforted! And if even fome of the murderers of Chrift embraced the faith, and found mercy, wherefore should you defpair of falvation? For them Chrift prayed; because with God there is mercy and plenteousness of redemption!

To God's tender mercy, through Chrift, we commit you; and in your behalf, we humbly addrefs the throne of grace!

TRUST IN GOD.

ISAIAH l. 10.

Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his fervant, that walketh in darknefs, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God.

I T is faid of every real believer, that he walks by faith and not by fight. If this is true, it will follow, that his faith muft be exposed to a variety of trials, while he continues in a world of fenfe. These trials arise from the state of his own mind—from his outward condition—from the state of the world with which he stands connected, and from the mutual influence of all these, one upon another. From this situation it is easy to see, that there are few duties, for the exercise of which, a good man will have greater or more frequent occasion, than that of trust and reliance upon God.

Truff is the duty and the refuge of the needy—of the dependent—of the weak—the timorous, and the diffreffed. How many are included under one or more of these characters; or rather, who is it that can fay he is altogether excluded?

Agreeably to this, we need but open the facred volume, to perceive how frequent the exhortations are to truft in God, and how many views are given us of his power, wildom, mercy and faithfulnefs, to encourage us to an unfhaken reliance. At the fame time, I am forry to fay, that there are few duties which are more imperfectly underftood by many profeffing Chriftians. Even pious perfons often fin both on the right hand and on the left, that is to fay, both by diffidence and prefumption. I have, therefore, laid hold of this opportunity, and made choice of this paffage of scripture, in order to open and illustrate a little this important duty of a fervant of God. How feasonable it is you will eafily perceive, for in the facrament of the Lord's Supper we have fet before us Chrift Jefus the unspeakable gift of God-the great pledge of his love, and the great foundation of our reliance upon him, not only for his faving mercy in general, but for every neceffary bleffing in our way to eternal reft.

This paffage of fcripture is alfo well fuited to the fubject. It was fpoken to the Jews in a lax and defolute age, when many had turned their backs upon the fervice of God—had deferted his brdinances, and defpifed his fervants, which is always an occafion both of affliction and temptation to his own children. This appears from the first words of the chapter. For thus faith the Lord, where is the bill of your mother's divorcement, whom I have put away? and which of my creditors is it to whom I have fold you? Behold, for your iniquities you have fold yourfelves, and for your transgreffions is your mother put away. As also from the 3d and 4th verses. I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make fackcloth their covering. The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that Ishould know how to speak a word in feason to him that is weary.

In difcourfing further on this fubject, it is pro-

I. To open a little the character and flate of those who are called upon and exhorted to trust in the name of the Lord.

II. To explain the duty of truft, and point out the foundation of it.

III. To apply the fubject for your instruction and comfort.

In the first place then, 1 am to open a little the character and flate of those who are here called upon and exhorted to truft in the name of the Lord.

Their defcription is as follows: Who is among you that feareth the Lord, and obeyeth the voice of his fervant, that walketh in darknefs, and hath no light? Vol. III. B 2 let him trust in the name of the Lord, and stay himself npon bis God. It will help us to enter into the fpirit and meaning of the prophet's words, if we keep in view the state of the Jewish church, hinted at a little ago. Who is among you; that is, if there is one or more-if there is a small felect number in the midst of general corruption and depravity, who have kept their garments unpolluted, though iniquity abounds, and the love of many waxeth cold; That feareth the Lord? You know it is common in fcripture to defcribe religion in general by fome particular leading branch of it. The fear of God is often made ule of for this purpole, as in that palfage, there shall be no want to them that fear bim. It may, therefore, fignify those who have a fincere and unfeigned regard to the commandments of God, and have chosen him as their portion and hope. Those who defire and deferve to be diftinguifhed from the profane defpifer-the fecure formalist, or the difguised hypocrite. Those, in a word, who are, and who defire to appear, to ufe the strong language of scripture, upon the Lord's fide in every ftruggle, and who refolve with Jofhua, that whatever others do, for their part they will ferve the Lord.

But I cannot help thinking, we may alfo, with great fafety, explain the words in a clofer and ftricter fenfe, and fuppofe, that by fearing the Lord is to be underflood a due reverence for his infinite majetty, a humble veneration for his facred authority. This is a most excellent fence or guard to the conficience in an evil time, and a noble prefervative from the spreading infection and infinuating poifon of prevailing or fashionable fins. It is also the usual character of a defolute age to have cast off fear, to treat the most facred things with fcorn, and to look upon that holy folicitude to avoid fin, which appears in the carriage and language of a child of God, as a mark of meannels or weaknels of mind. In such an age, one who fears God is well described by the prophet Isaiah. But to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at my word.

• The next part of the character is, and obeyeth the voice of his fervant; that, is to fay, is willing to hearken to the meffage of God by the mouth of his fervants. The words of the text, no doubt, may be confidered as primarily referring to the infpired prophets, who bore an immediate commiffion, miraculoufly attefted from God. Many, even of thefe, were fet at nought, their meffage derided, and their perfons infulted, when they attempted to ftem the tide of prevailing vice, or. boldly denounced the divine vengeance against high-handed finners. But the fincerely pious obeyed their voice. I shall make no fcruple to apply this to ourfelves, and the prefent age. Our bleffed Redeemer hath eftablished in his church a flanding ministry, and the regular administration of ordinances. And though we have this treasure in earthen veffels, yet in no other way doth he now communicate his will, and vouchfafe his prefence to his people, but by the reading and hearing of his word, and attendance upon his inftituted worfhip. It will, no doubt, therefore be a part of the character of a good man, that he will love the ordinances, and obey the voice of the fervants of God, that he will confider him who hath fent them, and receive inftruction, not as the word of man, but as it is in deed and in truth the word of God.

On the other hand, when iniquity prevails, when irreligion and profaneness lift up their heads, one of the most usual concomitants, and one of the furest proofs of it is, a neglect of ordinances, and contempt of those who are concerned in their administration : How far this is at prefent the cafe, I leave to yourfelves to judge. While I fpeak this, my brethren, I do by no means defire to fee an ignorant people distracted by the gloomy terrors of fuperstition, or led blindfold by the enchanted cord of implicit faith. But fure I am, there is an extreme on either hand, and those who truly fear the Lord, will honor the perfons, and obey the voice of fuch as plead his caufe and fpeak in his name. You may reft affured, that though they neither deferve nor claim any authority on their own account, yet fo long as they fland in the divine councils, and fpeak the divine word, their meflage will be attended with this awful fanction, He that despiseth.

you despiseth me, and be that despiseth me despiseth bim that sent me.

The last part of the character here drawn, which lays the foundation for the fubsequent direction is, that walketh in darkness and hath no light. Darkness and light, befides their literal, have often a metaphorical fense in scripture. They are, indeed, used with a good deal of latitude and variety. But I think their metaphorical fignification may be reduced to thefe two general heads. 1. Sometimes light fignifies knowledge, and darknefs fignifies ignorance-as in Eph. v. 8. Ye are fometimes darkness but now are ye light in the Lord, walk as children of light. Acts xxvi. 18. To turn them from darknefs unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God. Job xxxvii. 19. Teach us what we shall fay unto bim, for we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness. 2. Sometimes darkness fignifies diftress or trouble, and the correspondent fignification of light is deliverance and joy, as 2 Sam. xxii. 28, 29. And the afflicted people thou wilt fave, but thine eyes are upon the haughty that thou mayeft bring them down, for thou art my lamp, O Lord, and the Lord will lighten my darknefs. Job xix. 8. He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass; he hath put darkness in my paths. Pf. xcvii. 11. Light is fown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. Efther viii. 16. And the Fews had light and gladness, and joy and honor.

None of these services is to be excluded in the paffage before us. Believers may walk in darkness.

when ignorant or uncertain as to what nearly concerns them, as well as under diffrefs and trouble ... They have also a mutual influence upon, produce, and are produced by one another. For illustrating this a little more particularly, obferve, that a good man may walk in darknefs. 1. When he is in doubt or uncertainty as to his interest in the divine favor. 2. When he is under the preffure of outward calamity. 3. When the flate of the church is fuch, that he cannot understand or explain, in a fatisfying manner, the course of divine providence. These particulars I have it not in view to enlarge much upon, but only to explain them fo far as is neceffary to lay a foundation for what shall be afterwards offered on the duty to truft in God.

1. Then, a good man may walk in darknefs when he is in doubt or uncertainty as to his intereff in the divine favor. I apprehend that fome meafure of hope in God's mercy is effential to true piety, and not only the right, but the poffeffion of every child of God. Faith and defpair are beyond all queftion inconfiftent. Faith and hope are infeparable. Yet certainly the excellent ones of the earth may be fometimes involved in great perplexity and doubt. This is plain from fcripture examples, from daily experience, and from the nature and reafon of the thing. How violent a ftruggle do we often find the Pfalmift David in, between hope and fear? O my God, my foul is caft down in me; therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the bill Mizar. How many do we fee every day under a fpirit of bondage, who, though they still cleave to God as their portion, yet are often full of fears, and feldom dare confidently affirm their interest in, or relation to him. And indeed how can it be otherwise? While we are here, our fanctification is but imperfect; and alas! with regard to many, it is often hard to determine, whether we should not write upon it, mene tekel, as effentially defective.

Sin feparates between God and his people, and caufes him to hide his face from them. Nay, fometimes, though there be no particular, or provoking crime as the caufe of his controverfy with them, he may withdraw from them the light of his countenance to exercife their vigilence, or to try their patience. I know, my brethren, that the diftress of ferious souls, when mourning after an absent or an angry God, crying to him in fecret, and following hard after him in his ordinances, is by many treated with the highest degree of contempt. But furely, if peace of mind from a wellfounded hope of the divine favor, is the greatest of all prefent bleffings: And if this, from the variablenels of our own conduct, is fometimes more, fometimes lefs ftrong, and fometimes wholly fufpended; when this last is the case, it must occasion inexpreffible concern, and there can be no greater evidence of irreligion and impiety than to call it in question.

2. A good man may walk in darkness when under the preffure of outward calamity. This, in a real believer, is never wholly feparated from the former. Even in itfelf, indeed, no affliction for the present is joyous but grievous. The diforders of this feeble frame, poverty and straitness of provifion, unjust flander and reproach, must be deeply and fenfibly felt by every good man, even as he is a man. To this may be added, the loss of relations, and concerns for the fufferings of others of every kind, which is always most distressing to the best and tenderest spirits. But outward calamities by those that fear God, are felt most fensibly when they are confidered as the rod of his anger, and bring fin to remembrance. When he vifits his own children with any of his fore judgments: When he follows them with breach upon breach, they are ready to fay, Surely be is fetting me up as a mark for his arrows, he is counting me his enemy .--They are often at a lofs to underftand the caufe of his controverfy with them; and they alfo find it often extremely difficult to bring their minds to a patient and fubmiffive refignation to his holy will. To those who know their duty, and defire through divine grace to comply with it, it is no fmall difficulty to be obliged to ftruggle with a rifing and rebellious heart within, as well as fuffering from without, and to be alternately calling in queftion, the certainty either of the love of God to them, or of their love to him.

3. A good man may fometimes walk in darknefs from the afpect of Providence, and the state of the Redeemer's kingdom. The works of God are fought out of them who have pleafure in them. But when they are not able to penetrate the depths of the divine counfels, this becomes often a fource both of diffrefs and temptation. When wicked men are fuffered to profper at their will-when the good are oppreffed by the power and tyranny. or perfecuted by the malice of their enemieswhen the most generous attempts for the revival of truth and righteousness are rendered abortivewhen the professing fervants of God are divided into parties, or marshalled under names, and their zeal made to fpend itfelf in unneceffary, finful and hurtful contentions-when offences come, and those of the highest profession or attainments are fuffered to fall into grofs crimes, by which the mouths of enemies are opened to blaspheme; then may, and must we adopt the words of the Pfalmift-Pf. lxxiii. 10-14. Therefore, his people return bither; and waters of a full cup are wrung out unto them: And they fay, how doth God know? and is there knowledge in the most High? Behold, these are the ungodly who prosper in the world; they increase in riches Verily, I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning.

I proceed now to the fecond and chief thing propofed from this paffage, which was to explain the Vol. HI. C 2 duty of truft in God, and to point out its foundation.

Trust, in the most general view we can take of it, may be thus explained. It is a reliance or confidence in God, that however difcouraging appearances may be for the prefent time, yet, by his power and wifdom, our defires and expectation shall take place, whether as to deliverance from trouble, or the obtaining of future bleffings. When we can attain this happy frame of fpirit, it is an inconceivable relief and eafe to the mind under fuffering, and is excellently expressed by the Pfalmist-Pf. Iv. 22. Caft thy burden upon the Lord, and he shall fustain thee, he shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. Let us then endeavor to explain the grounds of this as diffinctly as poffible. And God grant that it may be done not only in a clear, but in a folid and fatisfying manner, fo as to affift you in the practice of real and vital religion.

I have already faid, that our expectation is from the power and wifdom of God. May we, then, reafonably expect, is it our duty to believe, that we fhall receive all that we defire, and that is within the reach of divine power and wifdom? Thefe have no bounds at all. We know that nothing is too hard for the Almighty. He doth according to his will in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth. This fuggefts to us that there is fomething more neceffary, in order to lay a proper foundation for truft, viz. his goodnefs to make our expectation probable, and his promife to make it certain. Even created beings can often do what they will not. This holds particularly with regard to God, whole power is directed in its exercife by his goodnefs, and limited by his wifdom. His goodness, in general, encourages us to go to him with a peradventure, or who can tell whether he may not be gracious? But in order to make our truft both diftinct and ftrong, we must go to his promise for he is faithful and keepeth covenant and truth for ever. Truft then, my brethren, refts ultimately on the promife. It must be precifely commenfurate, or of the fame extent with the promifes, Whoever doubts or calls in question the certainty of what God hath promifed, is chargeable with diffruft; and whoever expects to receive, in kind or degree, more than he has promifed, is fo far guilty of prefumption. This is the general rule, and I think it carries fuch evidence with it, that every one must be sensible it is just, who hath heard it with any measure of attention.

But the great difficulty yet remains, which is, to apply this rule to the various cares that occur in the fpiritual life, and to tell any particular perfon what it is his duty firmly to believe, and hope he fhall receive from God, and what it would be prefumptuous and fimple in him to fix his expectation on. This is plainly of the greater importance, that the more particular our truft is, as to the object of defire, it is the more powerful a fupport to the mind. At the fame time it frequently happens, that the more particularly our defires are formed, the foundation of our hope appears the more uncertain and queffionable. On this account you may obferve, that it is of the greateft moment to underfland the nature and tenor of the promifes; or rather, indeed, to explain the foundation of truft, and to explain the nature and tenor of the promifes is one and the fame thing.

For this end, it may be proper to diffinguish the promises of God, as to futurity, into two heads, absolute and conditional. By absolute promises, in this place, I understand only those that are fo in the most unlimited fense, that is to fay, revealed as a part of the fixed plan of Providence, fufpended on no terms but what all, of every character, may expect will certainly come to pafs. Such are the promises after the flood, that summer and winter, feed time and harvest should not fail-the coming of Christ in the flesh at the fulness of time, to the ancient Patriarchs, and to us-the downfall of Antichriftthe prefervation of a church on earth, let its enemies be or do what they will-thecalling of God's antient people, the Jews, and the coming of Christ to judge the world at the last day. These are all called promises in scripture, and so far as they can be of any use to the people of God, either for direction in duty, or reftraint from fin, or confolation under trial, they are to be depended on, in the most absolute manner, for they reft upon the certainty of the holy fcriptures, and the truth of the unchangeable God, who is not a man that be fould lie, nor the fon of man that be fould repent.

TRUST IN GOD.

ISAIAH 1. 10.

Who is among you that feareth the Lord, that obeyeth the voice of his fervant, that walketh in darknefs, and hath no light? let him truft in the name of the Lord, and flay upon his God.

H AVING, in a former difcourfe, opened the character and flate of those who are called upon, and exhorted to trust in the name of the Lord, and entered upon the fecond thing proposed; which was to explain the duty of trust in God, and to point out its foundation; and having in this view confidered the nature of absolute promises— I proceed,

2. To confider the nature and use of conditional promifes. These I am obliged, for greater diftinctness, to divide into three different heads.—1. There are promifes made to perfons of fuch or fuch a character, or in fuch or fuch a ftate.—2. There are promifes, the performance of which is fufpended on our compliance with fomething previoufly required, as the condition of obtaining them.—3. There are promifes, not only fufpended on both the preceding terms, but upon the fuppofition of fome circumftances in themfelves uncertain, or to us unknown. Let us confider each of thefe with care and attention.

1. There are promifes made to perfons of fuch or fuch a character, or in fuch or fuch a state. which are, therefore, to be applied, and refted on. according as the evidence of our being of this character, or in this state, is clear or obscure. In this I have particularly in view, the bleffings of falvation, the pardon of fin, peace with God, the fpirit of fanctification, and a right to everlasting life. Thefe all lie in an unbroken chain, and infeparable connexion, and might have been more briefly expressed, by an interest in Christ the Saviour, who is the author, fource and fum of these bleffings; for all the promifes of God in him, are yea, and in him amen, to the glory of God by us. Let no judicious attentive hearer be furprised or diffatisfied, that I have ranked thefe among conditional promifes, for you may observe that I have expressed myfelf thus, they are promifes made to perfons of fuch or fuch a character, or in fuch or fuch a ftate. In this, they certainly differ from the promifes properly abfolute, mentioned above. It is far from my intention to do injury to that fundamental truth, that falvation is by grace. I effeem that doctrine which proceeds upon a felf-righteous fystem, to be contrary to the word of God, and most pernicious to the fouls of men. There is nothing at all required in fcripture to be performed by us, as a purchasing or meriting condition. Every gracious act of the divine government, in our favor, is the fruit of the Redeemer's purchafe, and every holy disposition wrought in us, is the effect of his Almighty Grace. But it is certain at the fame time, that in order to our accepting those bleffings, we must be truly and deeply humbled, and fee ourfelves to be incapable and helplefs. We must be unfeignedly willing to renounce all claim of merit, and accept of falvation as it is offered in the gospel; that is, in its full extent, and in the free and fovereign manner of its communication. So far, furely, we must fay, the promifes of the gospel are conditional, or wholly pervert the word of God. I know of no promifes then to the unbelieving and impenitent, unlefs you call that a promife, that they shall have their portion in the lake of fire that burneth with brimftone : and that the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever.

Hear it, my dear brethren, it is the needy, thirfly, fensible foul that is invited to come and find reft. Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters; and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come buy wine and milk without money and without price. Come unto me all ye that labor and are beavy laden, and I will give you rest. If any shall think fit further to fay, that the very deftination of the veffels of mercy, is of God's fovereign pleafure, that conviction itself is by a day of his power, and that faith which interefts us in Chrift's righteoufnefs is his gift : I agree to the whole, but observe, that it is improperly introduced here. No use can poffibly be made of the divine decree in the application of the promifes. It is inverting the order of things. Can any man fay, I truft in the mercy of God, becaufe I have been ordained to everlasting life? No man can derive comfort from this, till by his effectual calling it is published, and begins to be accomplifhed; and then he may look back with wonder and gratitude to that everlafting love, by which he was chosen in Chrift before the foundation of the world. Can you judge of the fruit of a tree by looking upon the root? No, but you judge of the ftrength and deepnefs of the root, by the fulnefs of the fruit, and the vigor and verdure of the branches. From an improper mixture of what belongs to the fecret will of God, and what belongs to us, as our duty, much error and confusion arifes,

Now, my brethren, as to the application of these promifes of pardon and peace, the humbled finner, the man among us, who walketh in darkness and hath no light—who is burdened with a fense of guilt, and discouraged by the threatenings of the law, the accufations of confcience, and the pure and holy nature of God ; who, perhaps, has all this aggravated by diffrefs and trouble, is called to truft in the name of the Lord, and flay him-, self upon his God. He is invited to confider and reft on the extent of the call, the immutability of the promise, and the riches of divine grace. If he is fo far from pleading any merit in himfelf, or being diffatisfied with the plan of falvation laid down in the gospel, that he is making every thing an argument against himself, and dare not lay hold of, or appropriate fo unspeakable a mercy: This is just the effect of distrust, and he is called, in the ftrongeft manner, in the text, to trust in the name of the Lord, and stay upon his God. With how many gracious affurances for this purpole is the fcripture filled. John vi. 37: All that the Father hath given me shall come to me, and him that cometh unto me I will in no wife cast out. Heb. vii. 25. Wherefore he is able also to fave them to the uttermost that come to God by him, feeing be ever liveth to make interceffion for them. Rev. xxii. 17. And the spirit and the bride fay, Come. And let him that heareth fay, Come. And let bim that is athirf come. And whofsever will, let bim take of the water of life freely. All things, Chrift excepted, are to be renounced to the all-fufficiency of a Redcemer, to be the foundation of our hope. The penitent will fay with the apostle. Phil. iii. 8. Tea, doubtlefs, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus VOL. III. D 2

my Lord: for whom I have fuffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteous fnels which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, even the rightcous fnels which is of God by faith:

2. There is a fecond class of promises, the performance of which is fufpended on our previous compliance with fomething required as the condition of obtaining them. In thefe we are not only called to accept of the divine mercy, but commanded to obey the divine will. The order in which I have placed thefe, will, I hope, prevent you from mifunderstanding or mifapplying what may be faid on them. This class includes all the promifes in fcripture regarding the daily progrefs of a believer in his fanctification and conformity to God, as well as the increase of his comfort and peace. I am fenfible, that as the reconciliation of a finner to God, and his right to what is called in fcripture the promife of eternal life, is of free and unmerited mercy, fo, no doubt, all the inferior or fubordinate promifes flow from the fame fource, nay, in a certain measure, they are entirely upon the fame footing with those formerly mentioned; that is to fay, final perfeverance, real growth in the fpiritual life, and neceffary comfort, are the fure and purchased portion of every one that is born of God. Rom. viii. 29. For whom he did foreknow, be also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. But in the distribution of those gifts, particularly in their meafure, there is not only an unknown regard to the good pleafure of God, but a known and eftablished regard to our conduct in duty. Thus the abundant fupply of the fpirit is the fruit and return of diligence in prayer. Matt. vii. 7. Ask and it shall be given you, seek and ye shall find, knock and it shall be opened unto you. See also Ezekiel xxxvi. 25. compared with the 37th. Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean from all your filtbinefs; and from all your idols will I cleanse you, &c. Thus saith the Lord, yet for all this will I be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them. Thus also inward consolation as well as outward fecurity, is expressly promifed as the effect and reward of uniformity and diligence in duty. Ifa. xxxii. 17. And the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and affurance for ever. As the counterpart and illustration of this, you fee, that a departure from the path of duty brings on the threatened, or, perhaps, I ought to call it, the promifed rod of correction. Pf. lxxxix. 30-33. But if his children Shall forfake my law, and not walk in my judgments; if they break my flatutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I visit their transgressions with a rod, and their iniquities with stripes. Nevertheles, my lovingkindness will I not take from him, nor suffer my faithfulnefs to fail. In the fame manner, Ifa. xl. 30, 31. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount in with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary—they shall walk and not faint. Agreeably to all this, you know, our bleffed Lord preferibed watchfulness and prayer as the great prefervatives against temptation, and whoever expects eitherspiritual strength, or comfort, while he relaxes his diligence in the way of duty, is guilty of that fin, which is called in scripture, tempting God; and shall affuredly meet with a dreadful disappointment.

My brethren, as much of the daily exercife of real believers regards their progrefs in fanctification and their peace and comfort, it is proper that you fhould carefully attend to the tenor of thefe promifes, and to what ought to be your reliance upon them. I fhall fum up, in a few particulars, what I apprehend to be of most importance.

1. Truft in thefe promifes implies felf-denial, and a deep fenfe of your own weaknefs. Thefe promifes would be unneceffary and fuperfluous were we not infufficient of ourfelves for any thing that is good. Truft in God ftands directly oppofed to all felf-dependance. Prov. iii. 5. Truft in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not to thine own. underflanding. How jealous God is, if I may fpeak fo, of the honor that is due to him in this refpect, may be feen from the many foul and fhameful crimes into which he permitted fome of his beft faints to fall, when they were off their guard, by floth, or ftill more provoked him by pride and prefumption. Noah's drunkennefs, Mofes's paffion, David's adultery and murder, and Peter's denial of his mafter. 1 Cor. x. 11. 12. Now all thefe things bappened unto them for enfamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come. Wherefore, let him that thinket bhe flandeth take heed left he fall. For this reafon the apoftle Paul fays with great propriety, and with great force, which is equally applicable to himfelf and other believers, a feeming paradox. 1 Cor. xii, 10. For when I am weak, then I am firong.

2. As we are to put no truft in ourfelves, fo we are to exercise the most unshaken confidence of our being able to difcharge any duty or undergo any trial by the help of the Almighty .- Oh! how ready are we to fin on both hands? How often do we prefume upon our own ftrength and forget the neceffity of applying for divine aid?-And on the other hand, how prone are we to timidity or defpondence in difficult cases? When corruptions have long kept their ground, we are ready to dread their influence, and to make but little out of the promifes in fcripture, that we shall be made more than conquerors through him that loved us. We have learned, by fad experience, that in us dwelleth no good thing, and yet it is long before we will attend to the leffon that follows hard upon it, My grace is fufficient for thee, and my firength shall be made perfect in weakness.

3. As these promises are expressly made to the diligent, you must still remember that your own attention and application to duty is effentially neceffary, and that the affiftance promifed from on high, is always reprefented in fcripture as an argument and encouragement to diligence, and not a warrant or excuse for floth. Phillip. ii. 12. Work out your own falvation with fear and trembling. for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to de of his good pleasure. It is also well worthy of notice, that the fame prophet Ezekiel, who fays, chap. xxxvi. 26. A new heart also will I give you, and a new (pirit will I put within you, changes the form of his expression; and in another place, chap. xviii. 31, 32. fpeaks in the following terms; Caft away from you all your transgressions whereby be have transgreffed; and make you a new beart and a new (pirit: for why will ye die, O house of Israel? For I have no. pleasure in the death of him that dieth, faith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourfelves, and live ye. In confequence of this,

4. In the laft place, truft in God' will make us ready to acknowledge, that when we fail in duty, when we forget or break our refolutions, the fault is certainly in ourfelves. It is impoffible to excufe or juftify ourfelves in any degree, without laying the blame, in the fame proportion, upon God, and calling in queftion his faithfulnefs and truth. But whatever our treacherous hearts may finfully fuggeft, we are not ftraitened in God, but ftraitened in our own bowels. We find him pleading his own caufe, in this refpect, in many paffages of fcripture. Ifa. lix. 1. Behold, the Lord's band is not flortened, that it cannot fave; neither his ear beavy, that he cannot hear; but your fins have feparated between you and your God, and your iniquities have bid his face from you, that he will not hear. Upon the whole, truft in thefe promifes is no other than an humble and diligent application to duty, under a deep fenfe of weaknefs, and dependance on promifed ftrength, accompanied with a firm perfuafion, that in the name of the Lord we fhall tread down our enemies, and go on from ftrength to ftrength, till we appear before God in Zion.

3. Another class of promises are those that are fuspended, not only on the fame conditions with the two former, but upon some other circumstances in themfelves uncertain, or to us unfeen. Thefe are temporal mercies, or rather temporal prosperity, deliverance from prefent diffrefs, and abundance or affluence of outward enjoyments. Perhaps we may alfo add fpiritual confolation, and fensible joy in God. I find no temporal promise precifely fixed to the fervant of God but this: Bread shall be given him, and his water shall be fure ; and it is certainly his duty, in the most straitening circumstances, to maintain a confident dependance on the power and wifdom of Providence for neceffary fupply. I do not condemn those who, when reduced to extremity, have actually pleaded this divine promise, and against hope, have believed in hope; and I am perfuaded inftances have not been wanting of relief, furnished in a manner next to miraculous. But as to every other degree of temporal profperity, God hath referved it in his own hand to give or withhold it at his pleafure, that is, as he fees it will be most for his glory, and the benefit of his people. It is lawful then, my brethren, for you to endeavor to procure, by honeft industry, the increase of your fubstance, to look well to the state of your flocks and your herds, and to ask by prayer the bleffing of God upon your labors. It is lawful, and it is your duty by regularity and care, to preferve life and health, as well as to afk of the Father of your Spirits, recovery from ficknefs, or deliverance from any other kind of diffress. But you are not warranted to believe that thefe petitions shall be granted in hand, or in your own time and meafure; even though you afk them in fincerity with the prayer of faith. There may be reafons for withholding them, and yet you may be accepted in your prayers. An infinitely wife God knows best what is for your good, and he only hath a right to determine in what part of his own fervice; where and how long he shall employ you. Truit in God, therefore, in this refpect, implies a careful attention to the tenor of the promifes with regard to temporal mercics, and not to look for, or even, if poffible, defire what he hath not promifed to beftow.

If I am not miftaken, we shall find it of moment, upon this fubject, to observe, both what he hath not and what he hath certainly promifed. He has no where promifed that his own people fhall be the richeft or the greateft on earth; but he hath certainly promifed to blefs their provision, and affured them that a little that a just man hath, shall be better than the riches of many wicked. He has not promifed that they shall be free from fuffering; but he hath certainly promifed to fupport them by his own prefence under their diffreis. Ifa. xliii. 2. When thou paffeft through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire thou (halt not be burnt; neither (hall the flame kindle upon thee. The truth is, he hath promifed that all things shall work together for their good. In one word, they have indeed all mercies promifed, only they themfelves are not in a condition, at prefent, to judge what they may use with fafety, and what not. As the heir of an opulent estate, though - he is proprietor of all, yet is laid under reftraint while in infancy and nonage; becaufe he would foon ruin himfelf if it were committed to his own management; fo the believer, though an heir of God, and joint heir with Chrift, yet till he is meet for the inheritance, he must be at his Maker's and. Redeemer's disposal. Take in, therefore, only this limitation, and then fee his extensive charter. I Cor. iii. 21.-For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things prefent, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's. What then is VOL. III. E 2

the duty of a child of God? It is to breathe after more and more fubmiffion to the divine will, and to annex this refervation to every petition of a temporal nature, neverthelefs, not my will but thine be done. And oh! my brethren, how happy the perfon who hath feen the weaknefs of human judgment; who waits the intimation of God's will, before he will fuffer his defires to faften with eagernefs on any earthly comfort, and who endeavors to keep himfelf free from perplexity, by an humble and fubmiffive reliance on the all-fufficiency of God!

I observed in entering on this part of the subject, that spiritual consolation, or sensible joy in God, is to be confidered as a promife of the fame clafs, which must, therefore, be asked with fubmiffion, and is difpenfed according to the good pleasure of a gracious but fovereign God. I am fenfible, as has been formerly obferved, with another view, that fome degree of comfort neceflarily follows from a believer's relation to God, but many pious perlons feem to defire and to expect fenfible comfort in a higher measure than God fees it meet to give them, or, than is proper for them in the prefent state. It is with spiritual prosperity as with temporal, every one cannot bear it. Therefore, it is our duty still to be fensible that we have much more comfort and peace than we deferve, and as we defire and ftrive for greater degrees of it, to accompany thefe defires with much humility and refignation to the will of God.

I proceed now to the last thing proposed, which was to make a practical application of this subject for your instruction and direction.

1. From what has been faid, you may fee what judgment you ought to form of inward fuggeftions, and ftrong or particular impressions upon your minds. There are fome extremely prone to interpret a text of scripture, fuddenly fuggested to their minds, or any ftrong impression made on them, as an immediate meffage from God, to be directly applied to themfelves: Others, in oppofition to this, as enthufiaftical and vifionary, feem to give up every expectation of being able to fay with the Pfalmist, I blefs the Lord who hath given me counsel, my reins also instruct me in the night season. I beg, therefore, that you may observe, that the fuggestion of a passage of scripture, of itself gives no title to the immediate application of it, becaufe the great deceiver may undoubtedly fuggeft fcripture, as we find he could reason from it in our Saviour's temptation. We are, in every fuch cafe, to confider the tenor of it, if it be a promife or encouragement, that is, how and in what manner it may be fafely applied. If any thing happens to be fuggested that expressly fuits our prefent condition, either by fetting home the obligation of duty, with particular evidence upon the confcience, or pointing out the grounds of comfort, it ought to be thankfully acknowledged as from the fpirit of God. For example, if a perfon, under the power of a spirit of bondage, and fear of divine wrath, hath fuggefted to him any of the extenfive gracious aflurances of mercy to the chief of finners, it is his duty to lay hold of it. It is directly fuited to his condition, and would be the very thing that a wife and judicious paftor would : recommend to him for his relief. He may there-. fore, without hesitation, bless God for it, if it is . brought with power and efficacy upon his heart. In the fame manner, if a perfon under trouble. hath fuggefted to him any of the promifes of fupport under it, furely he ought, in the discharge of his duty, firmly to rely on the accomplishment of that part of the word of God. But in the reflex examination of a perfon's character or flate, to apply the fudden fuggestion of a promise or privilege, perhaps of a conditional nature, is certainly both finful and dangerous. Sinful, becaufe. without warrant; and dangerous, because leading. to delusion.

2. From what hath been faid, you may fee what it is that we ought to feek for, with the greateft earneftnefs, and may hope to obtain, with the greateft confidence. Recollect, I befeech you, the order in which I have mentioned the promifes of God as the objects of truft and reliance. First of all the promifes of falvation, deliverance from the guilt of fin, and a right to everlasting life; next whatever is neceffary to the prefervation and improvement of the spiritual life; and then in the third place; proper accommodation, and fuitable provision in our paffage through the prefent world. They are here ranked according to their value in r themfelves, and the value which we fhould put upon them, Let us, therefore, take care that we never violate this order, which is neceffary, not only because of their comparative value, but becaufe of their mutual influence one upon another. It is in vain for us to expect to attain to the habit or practice of holinefs, till we are united to God by faith in Jefus Chrift. All the promifes of the gospel are ratified in him. All the divine fulness is treasured up in him. Every divine gift is difpenfed by him. Therefore, he fays, John xv. 4. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear. fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. And the apostle Paul, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Christ; nevertheles I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the fleft, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himfelf for me.

In the fame manner nothing can be more preposterous, than to fix our affections upon temporal mercies, or our attention upon the promifes that relate to them, fo as to lofe view of our interest in God's favor, and the progress of our fanctification. All the temporal promises in fcripture are made to the children of God as such, and for carrying on the purposes of his grace in them.— Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need.

of thefe things. There is no promife in the whole volume of infpiration to the wicked and impenitent. There is no peace, faith my God, to the wicked. He will either rebuke them in his wrath and chaften them in his hot difpleafure, or give them up to a curfed, hardening, flupifying profperity, than which, no flate on earth is more to be dreaded.— Chriftian! never fuffer an anxiety about your outward flate to fupplant or go before, or even to be feparated from a concern, that you may not be found wanting when weighed in the balance of the fanctuary.

3. Let me befeech you to adore the wifdom, juftice and mercy of God, in the order he hath eftablifhed, according to the different nature of the promifes. That which is of most, nay, properly fpeaking, of unfpeakable value, and radically contains all the reft, is placed first in order, and offered in the most free and gracious manner, without money and without price. Salvation is preached to the chief of finners, and a Saviour held forth as able to fave to the uttermost all that come to God by him. Many uses might be made of this, but the fingle use 1 intend to make of it, at present, as connected with the duty of truft, is to filence the complaints of envy and impatience. How prone are many to look with an evil eye upon the more extensive possellions, and greater apparent outward comfort which others enjoy? Does it not aftonish you to think how much unbelief and ingratitude there is in those repining thoughts? Meannefs of rank, and poverty of state, are no hinderance at all to an interest in Christ, and a right to everlass life. Nay, the gospel is preached to the poor.— Many a Lazarus has been carried by the angels to Abraham's bosom, while the rich and luxurious have listed up their eyes in torments. Will you, can you, dare you then complain? Will you envy the man of the world, his stately palace—his ele_ gant furniture, and his fumptuous fare? What is the amplest portion in the present life compared with the fure mercies of David? What child of God would exchange with any wicked man a prifon for a palace, or a fcassfold for a throne?

I befeech you to add to all this, that, even with regard to prefent peace or comfort, there is no comparifon between a good man and a bad. Aman's life doth not confift in the abundance of the things which he poffeffes. This is a truth not only often repeated in the facred oracles, but written in the clearest and most legible characters in the hiftory of Providence.-Nay, even independently of virtue or religion itfelf, every human calamity, whether arifing from ficknefs, reproach, contention, fear, or ungratified defire, rages with greater violence in the higher, than in the lower stations of life. A vain and conceited monarch once fent to afk at an heathen oracle, who was the happiest man on earth? and met with a deferved difappointment in the reply. If we should put a question much more profitable as well as much more eafily refolved, in what rank of life the most exquisite human mistery has been found? I have no doubt but it ought to be answered upon a throne. Experience will always ratify the wife man's observation: Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith. A fanctified lot is an ineftimable treasure. The bleffing of God on a cruise of oil, and a pot of meal, is better than inexhaustible mines of gold and filver. What cause of contentment and patience to the child of God!

In the last place, you may learn, from what has been faid on the fubject, what is the plaineft, the fhortest, and, indeed, the only fure way to deliverance from diffrefs or calamity of whatever kind. It is to fly to the mercy of God through the blood of Chrift, to renew the exercifes of faith, in him, and, in proportion as it pleafes God, to fill you with all joy, and peace in believing; you will perceive every other covenant-bleffing flow clear and unmixed from this inexhausted fource. It will lead to repentance, humiliation and fubmiffion. The fanctified use of the affliction will be obtained, and this brings deliverance of itfelf; for no rod will be continued longer, than it hath answered its end. At any rate, when fuffering is neceffary, grace, to fuffer with patience, shall not be withheld. Would you have any more, and is not this remedy always at hand? Can the poorest man fay it is not within the reach of his purfe? It is, at once, effectual and universal. It was once faid in contempt of a worthy and pious minister, that he made fo much of the blood of Chrift, that he would apply it even to a broken bone. But bating what may be thought indecent in the expression, chosen on purpose to bring a good man into ridicule, the thing itfelf, I make bold to affirm, is a great and a precious truth. Faith in the blood of Chrift makes a man superior to all sufferings. It softens their aspect -it abates their feverity-nay, it changes their nature. When a man is under diffrefs or calamity of any kind, and confiders it only in itfelf, and independently of his relation to God, it retains its old nature, and taftes with all the bitternefs of the original curfe; but when it is confidered as limited in its nature-its measure, and its continuance by a kind Saviour, the believer fubmits to it with patience, as a part of his Creator's will; bears it with patience in his Redeemer's ftrength, and fometimes is enabled to embrace it with pleafure, as ferving to carry him to his Father's prefence. Is this going too far? No, my dear brethren; there are great realities to which the word of God, and the experience of his faints, bear united evidence. Many here prefent, I doubt not, have been witnefs of this truth, in the carriage of their relations now with God; and not a few, I truft, will repeat the testimony to fucceeding ages. I conclude all with that animated paffage of the apoftle Paul.-2 Cor. iv. 16, 17. For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is VOL. III. F 2 renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

QN THE LOVE OF MONEY.

BY

WILLIAM M. TENNENT, A. M.

Minister of a Presbyterian Congregation, Abingdon, Pennfylvania.

1 TIMOTHY VI. 10.

For the love of money is the root of all evil; which, while fome covered after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themfelves through with many forrows.

WE are here informed, that a fupreme attachment to the riches of this world, is an infurmountable obftacle in the great work of gofpel-falvation. Covetoufnefs is idolatry, and idolatry excludes from the kingdom of heaven— To free us, therefore, from the bondage, and guard against the baneful effects of this fin, many precepts and exhortations are given in the word of God. Thus we are commanded, Love not the world, neither the things which are in the world, with the most unequivocal and explicit declaration, if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in.

bim .- We are affured that the cares of the world, and the deceitfulnefs of riches, choak the word, and render it unfruitful .- We are taught that, in order to our becoming the true disciples of Christ, and posseffing the benefits of his purchase, it is neceffary that we should forfake bouses and lands, father and mother, brethren and lifters, husband and wife, in point of supreme affection-and it is strictly enjoined upon us, to seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and to lay up our treasure in beaven, that our bearts may be there alfo. As an argument of restraint from having our affections too much fer on the perishable objects of time, we are reminded that, as we brought nothing into this world, so we can carry nothing out.-Upon this ground, we are exhorted to be contented with moderate enjoyments; and the danger of erring from this rule, to the extreme of a too eager defire of worldly goods, is pointed out in the text.-But they that will be rich, fall into temptation and a Inare, and into many foolifs and burtful lufts, which drown men in destruction and perdition-For the love of money is the root of all evil : which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many forrows.

As a difcourfe, founded on this paffage, muft ftrike at one of the great idols of the world, and at the partial idolatry even of those who are of the household of faith, it may offend; but it is not defigned to offend, any farther than is absolutely neceffary to promote human happinels—and fo far may God grant that his word may offend; that it may prove quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and that it may be a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the beart.

It is a long time fince the prophet uttered that complaint with the tears of overflowing compaffion; Who bath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? The fame complaint, we who at prefent minister in holy things, have often occafion to make. For though the meffages of Jehovah shall not be lost, yet to many, it is to be feared, they have been, and still are, as the founding brass and tinkling symbol; and to fome of you, perhaps, they will be ultimately swift witness to aggravate your condemnation; for that fervant who knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himfelf, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes.

Among other caufes which prevent the fuccefs of the gofpel, and the eftablifhment and effects of gofpel-inftitutions, and which expose to many and great evils, we may place that of the LOVE OF MONEY—An undue attachment to the creatures of time, which the apostle stills covetous fuels, and erring from the faith of our Christian profession— This is the root of all evil.

To confider all the evils to which the fin mentioned in the text exposeth us, would draw out this difcourfe to an undue length; I shall, therefore, only mention a few of them, and then conclude the subject with a practical improvement.

I. The love of money is the root of all evil to the body-It urges men on to immoderate labors, and unfeafonable toils and watchings-Thefe exercifes, in their excefs, become at length an eftablifhed habit of life; for the covetous are not fatisfied with any addition of wealth; but the more they have the more they want-They join house to house, and field to field, and, after many additions, they have not enough-In the midfl of their sufficiency they are in straits .- And that they may get more, they are abundant in labors, and watchings, and diffracting cares .- There is no end of their labor, and they bereave their fouls of good. Hence often infirmities, weakneffes, and various diseafes, fometimes fucceed each other-Hence frequently the wrinkles and furrows of age are deeply impreffed before the ufual meridian of life-Hence aches and pains are ingrafted on the conftitution at an early period, and increase with those increasing cares, and over-much labor, which at the first produced them. The body floops under the burden which is unneceffarily affumed, and fooner becomes a prey to death; or, if it should be able to fustain the weight, which an excessive defire after worldly goods has created, yet in fome unforefeen moment, it may fall a victim to the rage of luft and paffion. The evil eye may excite the affaffin to give the mortal ftab, that he may poffefs the treafure—Befides, fome who will be rich, by unjuft means, fall into the fnare of bonds and imprifonment, and having become extreme offenders, the chains of their guilt drag them at length to the gallows, as their awful and difgraceful end.

The caution of wife king Solomon was written that it might be read, and confidered, and observ-My son, faith he, if sinners entice thee consent ed. thou not. If they say, come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without caufe: Let us fwallow them up alive as the grave, and whole as those who go down into the pit: We shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoils: Caft thy lot among us; let us all have one purfe: My fon, walk not thou in the way with them; refrain thy foot from their path: For their feet run to evil, and make baste to shed blood. And they lay wait for their own blood, they lurk privily for their own lives. Mark what follows: So are the ways of every one that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

The ways of those, who are less offenders by the love of money, resemble, in kind, if not in degree, the destructive courses of their more guilty brethren. The principle which guides their actions is the fame; and if it is not subdued, it must produce the ruin of the one as well as of the other.—

the degree of punishment will, indeed, be in exact proportion to the degree of guilt; but it is furely fmall confolation to reflect, that the punishment, we endure is not the greatest which God could inflict upon us. At the prospect of flaughtered legions, and fields flained with human blood, your horror-your compassion-your aftonishment are awakened; you tremble-you figh-you weep; you afk what was the caufe of fuch dreadfulfuch distressing effects. Hear the apostle James. From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lufts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not-ye kill and desire to have, and cannot obtain-ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye alk not-ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amis, that ye may confume it upon your luss. Thus is the love of money the root of many evils to the body. .

II. It is effentially injurious to the foul. It has a tendency to impoverifh and enfeeble the mind, and to debafe all its noble powers and faculties, which were formed for fublime employment; to give glory to God, and hold communion with the faints in light. Being of the earth, there is a natural propenfity in man to become earthly, and if we indulge to this propenfity, the images of earthly objects must be ftrongly imprefied upon the mind, and by a long and familiar converfe with them, the foul becomes fo united to them as never to leave them. They employ its fleeping as well as its waking thoughts; and thefe objects being of an inferior nature, they keep the mind low and poor, excluding from its view thofe objects of improving excellency, after which it was formed to afpire. This obfervation you may fee verified in the various ranks of men, which compofe fociety. In each you may fee men ignorant of almost every thing, except the art of getting and keeping money; and their undue attention to this art, and great improvement in it, is the caufe of their ignorance.

But the love of money is especially injurious to the foul, as it vitiates all its moral powers. It induces men to call evil good, and good evil; to put bitter for fweet, and fweet for bitler; to make gold their hope, and to fay to the fine gold, thou art my confidence, and to deny the God that is above. It raifes a wall of feparation between God and the finner, which it is difficult, and next to impossible to overpass or demolish. How bard is it for them who trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God? Jesus faid, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven. The difficulty to a covetous man of obtaining the special favor of God, and preparation for heavenly happinefs, increases in proportion to the ftrength of his defire after the goods of time, as his treasure. His worldly carnal defire and covetous thoughts, by long continuance, become fo confirmed, that there is, in the end, but little probability that they will ever be changed. In this cafe we can only fay, with God all things are poffible. At the fame time, the finner has reafon to dread that awful fentence, Let him alone, he is joined to idols.

Vol. III.

With what a folemn and grateful attention, then, should we listen to that most benevolent and gracious precept; Love not the world, neither the things which are in the world; for if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him? Why did Demas forfake Chrift? Why did Demetrius and his craftsmen raife a tumult against Paul for preaching againft idolatry? Why did Ananias and Saphira lie to the Holy Ghoft? Why did the Pharifees deride Chrift for fpeaking against covetousness? And why did the young man, whofe moral conduct was amiable, refuse, when commanded, to fell all his worldly fubftance and distribute it to the poor, and follow the Saviour, who had promifed him an incorruptible treasure in heaven ?- The fame answer equally applies to all. It was because the love of the Father was not in them-the love of money was rooted in their hearts. They loved this prefent world-they were covetous. Dreadful delufion, indeed! to hug the chains which must perpetuate our bondage-to prefer the gains of this world to the gains of godlinefs, at the awful hazard of an everlasting feparation from the congregation of the faints in light-from the affembly of angels, and the prefence of God! Such treasures as thefe, when they poffers the whole heart, are poverty and ruin of the most dreadful kind; for what is a man profited, if be gain the whole world and lose bis own foul? In the loss of the foul there is a total fhipwreck. Not fo much as a plank is left to bring the deluded adventurer to a peaceful and hospitable fhore. The billows of God's wrath overwhelm him, and he is drowned in destruction and perdition. See then, and remember, that the love of money is the root of all evil to the foul.

III. It is also very injurious to man as a member of civil and religious fociety. It induceth him to act only from felfish principles, and with a view to his own advantage, without regard to the profperity of others.' It restrains, and has a tendency to deftroy a spirit of liberality, and every noble and generous purfuit. It blinds the eyes fo that its devotees do not often fee human mifery, and those pinching wants, which, with the most plaintive voice, folicit for charity; or, it hardens the heart, and prevents the exercife of a beneficent fympathy and generous compassion. It prevents an attention to the public good, and those objects of improvement in which fociety is interefted, and which need the aid of all its members. I may fay, therefore, that the love of money is the root of all the evils of injustice. In fome it proves a temptation to theft and robbery--in others, it begets extortion and oppreffion-it compels them, by its poifonous influence, to keep falfe balances, and diverfe weights and meafures—a great and a fmall. In all thefe, and in many other refpects, it is injurious to man as a member of fociety; becaufe it unfits him to act up to the relation which he fuftains—it robs him of a good character, and expofes him to cenfure, and fuch punifhments, as men, in a civilized flate, have power, and are bound to inflict.

Society has a claim upon every member, for the improvement of all his gifts, talents and poffeffions, with an express reference to the good of the whole body; for no man should live to himself; and these cannot be withheld without manifest injustice; but injustice to the body, is injustice to each member of it; fo that for a man to be unjust to fociety, is to be unjust to himfelf. He cannot, by that parfimony which the love of money begets, injure the body, without fuffering with it, because he is a member of it. And if he is a member of Chrift's visible Church, his fuffering in this cafe is to be effimated by the value of those bleffings, temporal and fpiritual, which he might have obtained by a contrary fpirit, as well as by the weight of that wrath to which his guilt fubjects him. To them who honor the Lord with their fubftance, it is promifed, that their barns shall be filled with plenty-And they who are rich in good works, ready to diffribute, willing to communicate, are affured that they are, in this way, laying up in flore for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay bold on eternal life. You will not mistake my meaning, when I fay, that the Christian, by a parfimonious fpirit, fuffers much in the prefent life; I do not mean that he is always fensible of his loss, or diffreffed about it. Doubtless there are many Chriftians, from whom many bleffings are withheld, only for their partial indulgence to the fin which we have been confidering, who are, for the most part, composed, insensible to their loss, and, therefore, but feldom pained with felf-accufations for their folly. Their fields, under the fame tillage as formerly, produce but lean crops: They bave fown much, and bring in little-they eat, but have not enough-they drink, but are not filled with drink-they clothe themfelves, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Such events as these may happen to a people, as well now as two thousand years ago, where there is fimilarity of principle and practice. And they may happen without their once confidering the true caufe from whence they proceed-the refufal to honor God with their fubstance. It is not the defign of this difcourse to provoke, unlefs it be to fuch good works as shall make you honorable in your profession of Christianity upon earth, and, at the fame time, be a favorable fign that you are of the household of faith, and partakers of the image of the Saviour, who was most illustrious for a difinterested and steady attention to objects of public and general utility. -I have faid, that the professing Christian, by an indulgence to the fin in the text, may fuffer much in this prefent life; but what fhould efpecially awaken our fears is, that punifhment which awaits the impenitent in an after flate. No covetous man, who is an idolater, bath any inberitance in the kingdom of Christ and of God; for because of this fin cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Therefore we, who are of the day, should not be partakers with them.

And now to conclude this fubject-fince it appears that the love of money is the root of all evil to body and foul, and is exceedingly injurious to man as a member of civil and religious fociety; it is to be hoped that you are all ready, my hearers, to pass fentence against it; for I cannot suppose that any of you can, in judgment, approve of that difpofition of heart which is pregnant with fo many and great evils as have been mentioned-You do not hefitate to condemn the man who maketh hafte to be rich by injustice, fraud and oppreffion-You think it just, that he that removeth his neighbor's land-mark, fhould bear the curfe of heaven; and that he who oppreffeth the poor to increase his riches, should come to want-You despife the thief as the meanest character, and the daring plunderer, who, with violent hands feizeth upon his neighbor's goods; and judge that fuch persons merit perpetual confinement, or capital punishment. But do you condemn those cares which impair the health of the body, difturb the peace of the mind, choak the word, and hinder the fuccess of the gospel? Do you condemn a refusal to honor God with your fubstance when he calls for it, for the promotion and eftablishment of his kingdom, and intereft in the world? Do you condemn the want of public fpirit, liberality, and charitable difpofitions towards the poor and needy: and whatever has a tendency to cramp the human mind in its improvements, and prevent the happinefs of the focial state, with refpect to the prefent and future world? And does your practice correspond with those fentiments? If so, then you are free from that blame which is due to those who have an undue attachment to the goods of time; you welcome the meffages of the gofpel, and hear them without contempt of the speaker or his master, even when they are pointed against your idols-You haften to hear them, at the expence of fome wearinefs to the flefh, and of fome time from your worldly bufineffes and purfuits; and the fruit of your hearing is, that you are ready to every good word and work-Confequently you do not err from the duties of your Chriftian profession, neither have pierced yourfelves through with those many forrows, which are the effects of the fin which we have been confidering, and which in their confequences work death. But is this true? and is this a general thing? Here, even charity herfelf is filent-or if the speaks, the is obliged to put a negative upon the question. She fays it is not true of the whole, but only of a few-And we fear of but very few comparatively-and for the ground of this jealous fear, I beg leave to point you only to the fmall and partial facrifices of time and worldly bufinefs, which are made on week-days, in the private and public worfhip of God! How little time is fpent in reading the foriptures, and comparing the exercises of our hearts with this infallible rule, by which we are at last to be judged? What a fmall portion of your time is devoted to prayer? and with what reluctance do fome come out to hear the word, when the farm or merchandize must be neglected for that hour; whilft others refuse to hear or ferve, unless it be when the fervice cofts them nought. Where then is your friendship to the master whom you profess to ferve ?- Does your zeal for the things of Chrift's kingdom, kindled from the altar of God, confume that fpirit of worldlinefs which marks the character of the man who is the friend of the world, and the enemy of God?-What do you more than others? Publicans trefpafs upon the rights of the fabbath, by converfation unfuitable to the dayand are you free from this fin? Publicans are zealous to obtain the corruptible inheritance-and are you not imitators of them in this respect? Publicans turn their back upon the church, and difdain to worship the Lord God of Hosts, and to be governed by his precepts; and are not many of you lukewarm Christians, neither hot nor cold ; fuch as God has threatened to fpew out of his mouth? And is not one leading caufe of all this a too great love for this prefent evil world?

Brethren, remember that kind and folemnadmonition with which I fhall conclude, If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him-And if the love of the Father is not in him, he certainly has not the fpirit of Chrift; and if he has not the fpirit of Chrift, he is none of his; and if he is not his, he fhall not inherit his glory.

SERMONLIV.

The COMPONENT PARTS of CHRIST'S CHURCH, and the Advantages of UNION.

BY

NATHAN KER, A. M.

Minister of a Presbyterian Congregation, at Goshen, State of New-York,

EPHESIANS iv. 15, 16.

But, fpeaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint fupplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love.

THE church of Chrift, in various places of the New Teftament, is fpoken of as one body, of which Chrift is the head: and in no place is the union of the church more ftrongly expreffed than in the paffage we are now about to confider.

For in the 11th verfe, Paul fayeth, that Chrift gave fome, apofiles: and fome, prophets: and fome, evangelifis: and fome, paftors and teachers; for the perfecting of the faints, for the work of the minifiry, for the edifying of the body of Chrift: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the flature of the fulness of Chrift: That we benceforth be no more children, toffed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the flight of men, and cunning craftines, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

That is, Chrift hath given to the church, here called his body, the officers before mentioned, that by means of their ministrations, it might have an increase of light, love, faith and joy in God in all holy obedience, and might not be like children, easily imposed upon and carried away with erroneous doctrines: But speaking the truth in love, might grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ: From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compasted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body, unto the edifying of itself in love.

"Here is a manifelt allufion to the human body, which is composed of different joints and members, knit together by various ligaments, and furnished with nerves, tendons, and veffels of communication to and from every part of the body; which by these means is nourished, actuated and invigorated, and arrives to its full firength and stature."*

* Dr. Guife in Loc.

The plain fenfe of the text appears to be this, that we Chriftians, fpeaking the truth in love, fhould feek after an increafe in knowledge and grace, and then grow up in union with Chrift the head; from whom, or rather by whom the whole body, being orderly and firmly united together, every one in his proper place, by the affiftance which every part thus united, gives to the whole, according to the effectual operation of the holy fpirit, in the meafure in which it is given, to every part or member, maketh or obtaineth increafe unto the edifying of itfelf in love.

This truth we are taught in the paflage, and this we shall particularly attend to, to wit, That the church confisteth of a variety of parts, and that a union ought to be fought after between those parts. Here I shall,

I. Briefly confider the parts of which the whole is conflituted.

II. Shew how thefe parts are united fo as to conflitute one body.

III. Mention fome of the most important ends answered by this union: which I trust will illuftrate the truth that union ought to be fought after by the parts or members.

I. I am briefly to confider the parts of which the whole church is conftituted.

Here it will be natural to obferve, first, That Jefus Chrift, the eternal Son of God, who was made flesh, and dwelt among us, is the head of the church.

Secondly, The parts of which the church or body of Chrift is inftituted are, in a large view, all those fanctified fpirits of just men made perfect, who are in glory, together with all the churches of Jefus Chrift upon earth.

Agreeably to this, the apostle to the Hebrews, when enumerating their particular advantages as Christians, faying that they were come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly ferufalem, and to an innumerable company of angels. To the general affembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.

So alfo Paul fayeth, that God hath made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure, which he hath purposed in himself; that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in him.

Thus we have taken a comprehensive view of the church or body of Jefus Christ; part of which is in heaven, and part on earth.

We fhall now proceed to take a more minute furvey of the individual members, or fmaller component parts of the churches of Chrift upon earth; or fhew who they are.

Here I am led to fpeak of a matter, concerning which, many great and good men have differed.

Some fuppofe that it is the defign of Chrift, that none fhould be admitted into the church but thofe who are the fubjects of regenerating grace, and make a profession of their belief of gospel truths, and give credible evidence of their gracious flate, and their children.

Such plead, that the ordinances of the gofpel are feals of the covenant between God and gracious fouls; and that when unregenerate perfons come to their ordinances, they fet the feal to a blank.

That all unregenerate men are enemies to God and holinefs; and as holinefs is required prior to coming to ordinances, they cannot come for want of an effentially neceffary pre-requifite.

Such think this is taught in the gofpel, by the treatment he met with, who appeared at the mar-riage-feaft without a wedding garment.

As also by the infruction of Philip to the Eunuch, who faid See here is water: What doth hinder me to be haptized? And Philip faid, if thou believess with all thine heart thou mayest. And he answered and faid, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God; and immediately he was haptized.

In fhort, fuch take it for granted, that there ought to be in this world, as far as possible, a feparation kept up between the regenerate and un= regenerate.

Others fuppole, that all those ought to be admitted into the church with their children, whether regenerate or unregenerate, who do profess a belief of the effential truths of religion, and that they believe it their duty to comply with all the divine requisitions: That whenever they shall maintain heretical opinions, or in their external depoinment, shall walk contrary to the rules of the gospel, they ought, by the church, to be reproved and admonished, and if found irreclaimable, fuspended and finally cast out.

Thefe think that the ordinances of the gofpel are feals of God's covenant of promife, in which he manifefleth his gracious intentions, makes overtures and promifes, and fets his feal to thofe promifes, then affuring us of their validity, and calling upon us, in this flate of probation, where means are neceffary, to attend to thofe overtures and firm-fealed promifes.

And, in this view, fuch think God's covenant with Abraham is called a covenant of promife.

Thefe think that unregenerate men may be confidered and treated as members of Chrift's church on earth, as they conceive infant baptifm of divine appointment—that obfervation and experience evinceth that the posterity of believers are not all regenerate, and suppose there is no example or direction in God's word for caffing a perfon out of the church for other crimes, than herefy or overt acts of wickednefs.

256

In a word, that there are many members in Chrift's church on earth, who never were defigned for memberthip in heaven—that they are taught this by being directed to let the tares grow among the wheat; alfo, in the parable of the foolifh and wife virgins; likewife, where, by our Lord, the gofpel is compared to a great net, which caught of the fifthes, good and bad.

As allo, by the threatening to 'the branches, in Chrift the vine, which bring not forth good fruit; and by the Jews being informed, that they were broken off the good olive by unbelief, which fheweth, that though they had not regeneration and faving faith, yet they had enjoyed a flanding in the church.

Many truly valuable and fpiritual members of Chrift's church there have been, and ftill are, who think thus differently refpecting admiffion of members; and the wife, candid and liberal, in either fcheme, are ready to acknowledge difficulties in the plan they have adopted; and there are but few who think thefe differences in fentiment a fufficient reafon for breaking Chriftian or ministerial communion; efpecially, as all agree, that God requireth of all, fupreme love to himfelf, and repentance and faith in Chrift, and that without thefe, none, however otherwife qualified, can perform Vol. III. any duty acceptably; and thefe exercifes are what Chriftians and individuals are frequently exhorted to, and without which they must finally be lost.

Having dwelt fo long upon the diverfity of fentiment, may be confidered rather as a digreffion, and, therefore, I shall conclude this head, at once, by observing, that those proseffors, I have been describing, and their children are the individual members of whom the churches of Christ on earth are composed.

I now proceed to fhow,

II. How these parts are united, so as to constitute one body.

Here I think it would be proper,

First, To confider the union that fubfilts between the members, and Chrift the head. And,

Secondly, The union that taketh place between the members themfelves.

1. With respect to the union between the members and Christ the head, the following things are predicable, viz.

That it is of divine appointment that they who underftand and believe the truths of the gofpel, and make credible profeffion thereof, being baptized, fhall be confidered as fuftaining a connexion to Chrift the head of the church, that is, fuch a connexion as conftituteth memberfhip. 2. That all those who have not only the abovementioned union, but have received of his spirit, and are made holy, and so are become the children of God by faith in Christ, are united with him in affection and interest. These are made partakers of the divine nature, are become one with Christ, even as he is one with the Father.

The former union I confider as diffolvible; and, therefore, Chrift faith, Every branch in me that beareth not fruit be taketh away.

The latter I confider as an indiffolvible union, and agreeably to this Chrift affirms, He that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and I will manifest myself to him. And having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

I proceed now,

2. To confider that union that fublished, or ought to fublish, between the members themselves.

Paul, to the Corinthians, hath thefe memorable words, Now Ibefeech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord Jefus Christ, that you all speak the same thing; that there he no division among you; but that you be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

So alfo, Phil. iii. 16. Let us walk by the fame rule, let us mind the fame thing. And Phil. ii. 1, 2. If there be, therefore, any confolation in Chrift, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

From thefe, and many paffages of the fame nature, I am led to conclude, that it is of divine appointment that they, who agree underflandingly to make fubitantially the fame profession of effential gospel-truths, shall consider themselves as members of the one catholic church of Jesus Christ, though they may reside in different branches of the church, and at a great diffance. So that a common profession or confession of faith is the visible mean by which Christians become united.

3. They who are thus united, if they have received of the fame holy fpirit, by which their hearts are formed after the divine image; as they will most certainly love the Lord Jefus Christ fupremely, fo they will love one another as brethren; be united in affection.

Thus I have endeavored to fnew how the parts of Chrift's church are united fo as to form one body.

III. I fhall now proceed to confider fome of the moft important ends answered by fuch an union; which will illustrate this truth, that union ought to be fought after by the various parts or branches of the church.

1. Such an union is a compliance with the defign of Chrift, the head of the church, expressed by his apostles in fundry places, but particularly in the passage before-mentioned. I Cor. i. 10. Now I befeech you, brethren, by the name of the Lord. Jefus Chrift, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no division among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment. And, Let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same things. And, Fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord-of one mind. And, Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And the apostle affirms, that the body is not one member, but many. So that this is an undoubted truth, that the church is the body of Chrift, and that that body confifteth of many members. And thefe members being exhorted to union, and to avoid fchifms, fheweth that union is a compliance with the defign of Chrift, expressed by his apostles.

2. Such a union in profession, interest and affection doth greatly excite Christian endeavors to promote the good of the Church.

The welfare of the church is to be promoted, efpecially by the regular preaching of the word, which fuppofeth the receiving of the word preached—the administration and receiving of divine ordinances—the exercise of discipline and submisfion thereto. Pastors or teachers in the church suppose the there are fome to be taught. Administration of ordinances suppose there are some to whom the ordinances are to be administered. And rules suppose there are some to be ruled; accordingly, Christians are exhorted to obey them who have the rule over them.

And thus every member in his proper place, and according to the meafure of the gifts he hath received, is, with care and attention, to feek the good of the whole.

Agreeably to this doctrine, Paul tell us, That the eye can not fay to the hand, I have no need of thee; nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor, and our uncomely parts have more abundant comelines. For our comely parts have no need: But God hath tempered the boay together, baving given more abundant honor to that part which lacked; that there should be no schifm in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it.

3. Such an union in profeffion, intereft and affection, which will powerfully difpofe every member in his proper place, to do his duty, and fubmit to Chriftian counfels, admonitions, &c. will caufe the church to be, indeed, like a city fet upon an hill that cannot be hid; and thus beholders will be led to a conviction of their fin, and an acknowledgement of the truth. 4. Such an union among individuals, and particular branches of the general church, is most likely to guard against error; and we are to contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the faints. It also provides most effectually for the reproof and admonition of all the members and officers of the church.

Those who fin are to be rebuked before all; officers as well as members.

Paul directs Timothy that he fhould not receive an accufation against an elder, but before two or three witneffes.

5. The church being provided with proper officers, fuch union in profeffion, intereft and affection, provides for the inftruction of the ignorant, the fupport and comfort of the weak, the reclaiming of offenders of every character, the rejection of the obftinate, the reftraining of the corruptions of many, who will never be eternally faved, the forming of the elect for eternal life, and promoting God's glory.

A few inferences, among the many that might be drawn together with a word of exhortation, fhall conclude the difcourfe.

1. If the church of Chrift, in a large view, confifteth of all the spirits of just men made perfect in heaven, and all profeffors and their children on earth; then in our addreffes to the throne of grace, for our fellow-chriftians, we ought to extend our ideas; and we ought also particularly to remember, that one great end to be fought after, while enjoying membership here, is preparation for membership in the church above.

2. If those parts of the church are united by a common confession to Chrift the head, so that by profession before men they are entitled to membership; then much care is necessive in giving inflructions to the ignorant, that they may make an understanding profession; and if the holy spirit be necessive to form the members of the church to holines, in order to constitute an indiffolvible union to Chrift the head; then all church members may see the propriety of examining themselves, whether they have obtained the spirit of Chrift, as that they are one with bim.

3. If those who have agreed to make the fame confession of the effential doctrines of religion, and have received of the fame spirit to form their hearts after the divine image, are the one body of Jefus Christ, as Paul faith, there is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism; and if the valuable ends, that I have mentioned, are most likely to be answered by union, then we may infer the strong obligations that all are under to endeavor the edification of the church, and to preferve the unity of it.

4. We may, from the whole, infer, that those who break Christian and ministerial communion with those who, they acknowledge, hold the effentials of religion, and whom they believe to be real Christians, are guilty of schifm in Christ's church.

To conclude, Study the things that make for peace; endeavor to keep the unity of the fpirit in the bond of peace.

Do all in your power to promote the best intereft of Christ's church.

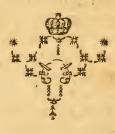

Remember there is no member fo weak or inconfiderable, but that it is neceffary to the completion of the body.

And O, my hearers! reft hot fatisfied with that union to Chrift which is diffolvible; the Jews of old prided themfelves in their external privileges, and covenant relation to God, but were broken off the good olive by unbelief: Thou fandeft by faith; be not bigh-minded but fear.

O l be not fatisfied until you have good evidence your hearts are renewed by the fpirit of Chrift, and you become one with him, never to be feparated; and he, as your glorioufly afcended head, grants you the effectual operations of his holy fpirit working in you, and caufing you to make increafe in knowledge, love, repentance, faith, and holy obedience, to your own fpiritual edification; and by the effectual workings of his fpirit, caufeth you to be really ferviceable to the edifying of the body of Chrift in love.

VOL. III.

As you expect on the Lord's-day approaching, to commune together at the Lord's table, remember part of the church is in heaven; Chrift the head is there, and a bleffed company of those who have been cleanfed by his blood and fpirit; part of the church is on earth, with Chrift and the members of his body: On earth you are now to hold communion; as one great end of this communion is, to prepare you to enter among the bleffed, the general affembly in heaven.-Be deligent in feeking communion with Chrift, that fo from him as your living head, you may derive those communications which are necessary to form you more and more after the divine image, and to render you ufeful in the spiritual edification of his body.

SERMONLV.

THE EVIDENCES OF A GENERAL JUDG-MENT FROM SCRIPTURE AND REASON.

BY

MATTHIAS BURNET, A. M.

Paftor of the First Church in Norwalk, Connecticut.

Асть хий. 31.

Because he hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness.

THOUGH the doctrines of a divine Providence, and future flate of rewards and punifhments have been generally believed in all ages, and among all nations of the world; yet in every age there have been fome who have denied them. Such there were in the days of the apoftle Paul; for while he waited for Silas and Timotheus, at Athens, we are told he was encountered by the Stoick and Epicurean Philofophers, the former of whom acknowledged a Providence indeed, but refolved it into fate, a blind neceffity, which deftroyed all the freedom of the will, and made their wife men little, if any thing, inferior to the Gods; the latter denied that the world was made by God, or governed by his Providence. They reprefented the Almighty as too exalted, too much taken up with his own fuperlative happiness to take any cognizance of the conduct or affairs of men, and placed the higheft happiness in fenfual gratifications. Thefe two learned and contrary fects encountered Paul, and hearing him fay much about Jefus, and the refurrection from the dead, they imagined he was a fetter forth of ftrange Gods; and as by the laws of Athens, no perfon was allowed to preach or bring in a new God to be worfhipped, without public authority, they took him and brought him before the Areopagus, the higheft court of judicature in Athens, to whom it belonged to determine in religious matters, that he might give account of the strange doctrine he had preached. St. Paul, therefore, standing up in this august affembly, and being commanded to speak, took occasion from an altar which he observed they had erected with this infcription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD-with great addrefs, to expose the gross idolatry and superstition of the Athenians; and at the fame time, in fublime and lofty language, to describe the character of the true God, and the nature of the worfhip to be paid him; declaring that the God whom they ignorantly worfhipped, was the God whom he preached, who made the world, and all things therein, who dwelleth not in temples made with hands, nor any furine of man's devifing, but is fo infinitely fuperior, and fo entirely independent, that he giveth life, and breath, and all things to all men, and, therefore, cannot be equalled by the wifest of mortals. But though he is thus exalted, and has borne long with the wickedness of men, as though he winked at, or took little notice of their folly, yet he was never unobservant of their conduct, but took particular cognizance of it; and now when fuch fuperior advantages of light and knowledge are granted by the publication of the gofpel; he in a more efpecial manner commandeth all men every where to repent of, and reform from all their fins, as they will answer it at that folemn and impartial day, which, in order to manifest the equity of his government, to reward the good and punish the bad, he hath appointed to judge the world in righteousnefs. At the times of this ignorance, that is, of those gross conceptions, which a great part of mankind, for a long time, entertained of his worship and government, God winked, faith the apostle; that is, acted as if he overlooked, and did not bear a general testimony against them--but now be commandeth all men every where to repent, because he hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness.

The doctrine plainly contained in the text is, that there is a folemn and impartial day approaching, when by the appointment of God, all mankind, convened in one general affembly, fhall be publicly judged, acquitted or condemned, and rewarded or punished in perfect righteousness.-----This is a doctrine confirmed by the whole tenor of. the fcriptures, both of the Old and New Teftament. The Old Testament, it must be confessed, is not fo clear and express on the head ; yet even there we find a variety of paffages, which not only decidedly speak of a future state of rewards and punishments, but which leads us to believe there will be a general judgment, or day of public decifion, when the whole world of mankind shall be affembled, and their respective trials and fentences openly held and declared in the prefence of all intelligences. The Lord cometh, faith the Pfalmist, to judge the earth; with righteoufness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity. I faid. in my heart, faid Solomon, God fhall judge the righteous and the wicked, for there is a time there for every purpose, and for every work. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil. These passages feem plainly to intimate that there is to be a day of public decifion of the final flate of all men, according to their character and deeds. But the New Testament puts the matter out of all doubt. Not only the words of the text, but a variety of other paffages both in the gospels and epistles declare this dostrine in the most express and decided terms. Our Lord, the judge himfelf, hath defcribed this folemn day and its transactions in all the awful pomp and majefty which language will admit. The Son of Man, faith he, shall come in the clouds of beaven in his own glory, and in the glory of his Father and all the boly angels with bim; and he shall fit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divides his sheep fram the goats; and he Shall set the one on his right hand and the other on his left; and the King shall fay to them on his right hand, come ye bleffed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world; and to them on his left hand he shall say, depart from me ye curfed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels ! To the fame purpofe, and in very fimilar language, the apostle Paul declares, that the Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from beaven; the Lord himself shall descend with the voice of the Arch-angel, and with the trump of God, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not bis gospel. Hence, in view of this folemn day, he speaks of impenitent finners, treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, who, he faith, will render to every man according to his works, in that day when, as Solomon in a paffage above quoted, long before, declared, he will judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to his gospel-when they must all sland before the judgment-feat of Christ, and every one give account of himfelf to God, and receive according to the deeds done in his body, whether good or evil. St. Peter faith, that the heavens and the earth which now are, are kept in store reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men-that is, as fome fuppofe after the judgment has paft, and their fentence is declared; this world which has been the fcene of their wickednefs, fhall be fet on fire, and they confumed in the general conflagration, which will be the prelude to that external or unquenchable fire, into which, our Lord faith, the wicked fhall be caft at the final judgment.

To this awful and terrible day, St. Jude faith, the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own babitation, are referved in everlasting chains of darknefs-When the Lord cometh with ten thousand of bis faints to execute judgment upon all, &c. And St. John, who had a revelation of what was to be in future, faw in his visions, all this awfully grand, and folemn procefs reprefented to his view, I faw, faid he, a great while throne, and him that fat on it, from whose face the earth and the heavens fled away, and there was no place found for them: and I faw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened, and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the book, according to their works, and the sea gave up their dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged every man according to his works. Thus we fee it is the plain and decided doctrine of revelation, that God hath appointed a day of general judgment, when all mankind shall be publicly tried and adjudged to happinefs or mifery, according to their refpective characters and deeds. And this doctrine, which is fo clearly and expressly declared by revelation, is also perfectly agreeable to reason; to which it is rendered credible, if not absolutely certain, from the three following confiderations.

I. From the very frame and constitution of the human mind, in which there is a divine fense or conscience, which assumes to itself a fovereign prerogative of judging, approving or condemning all the various motives of the foul, and the actions which proceed from thence. There is no perfon, I believe, who is not in fome degree confcious of this principle in himfelf, which dictates to him a great difference between moral good and evil; which directs and excites him to practife the one, and prohibits, checks, and fometimes reftrains him from doing the other. Yea, where the heart is not rendered ftrangely callous, and monftroufly depraved by habitual vice, it never fails to affect the foul with a pure and welcome joy at the recollection of any thing humane and generous; but with the fecret lashes and poignant stings of horror and remorfe for inhumanity and vice. No man ever departs from that standard of moral rectitude, which is established in his own breast, but he is punished with some degree of uneasiness. The man, who is guilty of injustice, cruelty, falfehood, diffimulation, intemperance, or uncleannefs, may, by various arts, fupprefs the voice of confcience, and elude its corrections for a time, yet there are feafons in which this principle will revive VOL. III. L. 2 within him, and affert its right of examining frictly his behavior, and challenging and condemning him for it. It will often fill him, not only with fecret shame and self-reproach for having acted unworthy of himfelf, but with diftreffing fears of what may be the confequence of his vices, from the juftly-roufed refentment of fome fuperior being, which, though it fall not on him in this life, may in that which is to come; elfe why do crimes unknown to all but God, and him that committeth them, afflict with fuch fevere flings of confcience? Why do frightful fpectres haunt the dark affaffin, and every fhadow imprint palenefs on his cheeks? Why are his nightly flumbers difturbed with dreary visions of the rack and executioner? Why doth he ftart from his couch, and in fad difmay, cry, "O mine enemy, haft thou found me?" Why does horror and difquietude of mind purfue him like an accurfed Cain, wherever he goes, till unable any longer to bear the upbraidings of a guilty confcience, and the pangs of a wounded spirit, he either lays violent hands on himfelf, or turns evidence against his own life? Is it only the fear of man that thus tortures his imagination? Surely no. It is the indelible character, written on the heart by the finger of the Almighty, pointing out a judgment to man. The foul, fecure of her immortality and future happinefs, would manfully bear the most excruciating pains from an earthly judicature, was it not for the dread of that more awful tribunal above, before which she must be arraigned. The thought of this, like the hand-writing on the wall to Belfhazzar, makes the whole frame to tremble-the knees to fmite one against another, and the foul, O dreadful thought! to wifh for annihilation .---This is no fanciful reprefentation, drawn by the pencil of an heated imagination, but what may be confirmed, by a great variety of examples, from fact and experience. The force of this principle of confcience has appeared, in fome very bad men, to be full as ftrong as I have reprefented it; forcing them to difclofe and bring to light fome of their most fecret acts of wickedness, and throwing them, when they had nothing to fear from any power or authority on earth, into the greatest agonies and convulfions, upon a mere view of their own guilt, and the fearful apprehensions of a future vengeance, ready to fall upon them; which apprehenfions have been fometimes fo ftrong in their minds, that, by all the efforts of their wit-by all the pleafures and amufements of the world, and by all the methods they could make use of, they could not fo stifle or bear them down, but they would give them extreme uneafinefs and torment.

This appears to be, in fome degree, the law of our nature, and infeparable from the very conflitution of mankind, however diverfified by place or education, that remorfe and uneafines fhould follow upon the commission of crimes. How can it be supposed that the Supreme Being, whose tender mercies are over all his works, fhould fo conftitute our frame-fhould place this confciencethis monitor of right and wrong in the human breast, merely to tease and torment it-to raise a perpetual war between reason and appetite? If fo, it is a question, as one faith, whether the brutes have not the better of man. " They are not kept in a constant ferment between fear and passionthey experience not those difagreeable qualms of fatiety and difgust, which attend, nor those poignant ftings which follow the guilty pleafures of human creatures; but man is only happy while the vehemence of his defire draws him off from himfelf, and prevents his reflecting upon his guilt and mifery; but the moment the object is enjoyed, the fense of his wretchedness returns, and fills his mind with remorfe and loathing." What gather we from hence, but that this invariable judgment of right and wrong, this univerfal approving or condemning of themfelves, according as men act agreeably or contrary to the law or tribunal of their own minds, ftrongly indicates a final judgment before their Maker. The very idea of fome things, as fit to be performed, and others not, argues fome immutable law or standard, according to which actions are denominated virtuous or vicious, good or bad; and a law even fuppofes fome perfon, who, with competent authority, hath ordained it; and confequently that he who hath made the law will be attentive to our actions. That our doing right will pleafe him, but our doing wrong will displease and offend him, is what we cannot believe without allowing that he will make his pleafure and difpleafure fenfible, in rewarding the good and punishing the bad; for it is abfurd to suppose, that the Supreme God, who is altogether amiable, should make man and not require his love; that he should give him a law as the rule of his actions, and yet be regardlefs whether he attended to, and observed it or not. This would be to deny himfelf-it would be faying, Though I have framed thee, I claim no prerogative over thee-though I am fupremely excellent and lovely, I defire not thy complacency and delight in me: Thy hatred is no crime. But this cannot be. Infinite merit and entire perfection require perfect love, and the want of it is an henious crime, and deferves a fuitable punishment.

This proves there must be a judgment or fuitable retribution fomewhere, either in this world or the next: But if we confider the nature of fome crimes, we fhall find them dyed with fuch aggravated guilt as no punifhment, inflicted in this life, can equal. Herod, for inftance, who raifed himfelf to the throne of Judea by fraud—who maintained the poffellion of it by the murder of the lawful heirs, his greateft benefactors—who blafphemed his God —profaned his temples—deftroying his priefts, and extirpating his fervants; who, to prevent the birth of the Saviour of men, or deftroy him, if already born, flew all the infants in Bethlehem and its environs, from two years old and under; and on his death-bed confcious how much like a tyrant he had acted, and how much joy his death would caufe, to force mourners at his burial, collected large numbers of Jews, fhut them up in prifon, and bound his fifter Salome, by an oath, to have them beheaded on the day of his death, that they, who would not weep for him, fhould weep for their flaughtered friends. Herod, I fay, thus black with guilt, would have fuffered but a very inconfiderable punishment, he would have made but an infinitely small fatisfaction for the murders he had committed, and the diffrefs he had brought on the innocent, even if, like Nebuchadnezzar, he had been deprived of his reafon, driven from among men, to eat grafs with the oxen, and afterwards reftored to his right mind, and condemned to die by tenfold more complicated wo than hiftory informs us he actually did. Since then, there are fome crimes, to which no punishment, inflicted in this life, can be proportionate; it follows, there must be some more fuitable recompence in a future state. All nations, even the most rude and barbarous, have, and do ftill look for fome fuch judgment to come. The fabled Elyfium of pleafant groves, mirthful friends, elegant banquets, and uninterrupted pleafures, which the ancients declare to be the allotment of the virtuous after death; and their tortures, the foul lake and dreary regions, fo fancifully defcribed by the poets, undeniably evince their belief of this truth. Hence, when St.

Paul preached of righteoufnefs, temperance, and judgment to come, before Felix, the Roman governor; though he was a heathen, and unacquainted with the Chriftian revelation on this head-Felix trembled. Paul might have preached till he was weary on the fubjects of righteoufnefs and temperance, and the governor would have been unmoved, if he had feared no after-reckoning; but when the apostle enforced his doctrines of righteoufnefsand intemperance, (each of which Felix had fragrantly violated) with the tremendous argument of a judgment to come-Felix trembled. This coincided with, and roufed all his fears. The cries of an injured husband, Azizus, the Emysenian king, whofe wife Drufylla he had feduced from his bed, and with whom he then lived in an adulterous commerce, rung in his ears, and called for vengeance against him; nay, the cries of an injured province, whole coffers he had unjuftly robbed, and whole people he had cruelly oppreffed, flung him with keen reproach. The proud Givema, fenfible of his crimes, and fearing a judgment to come, fhook with trembling on the throne of juftice-he who fat to judge, funk into the humble fituation of the prifoner Paul at the bar. His confcience cites him like a condemned malefactor before a more august tribunal; where he knows there is no fhuffling; but he himfelf, even to the leaft iota of his faults, obliged to give in evidence. His thoughts troubled him-he abruptly ftops the minister of Jesus in the midst of his fermon-his quivering lips with difficulty uttering, Go thy way, Paul, at a more convenient feafon I will call for thee. A judgment to come was a principle of his own a creed which all men allow, for all men, faith the apostle Paul, are a law unto themfelves, having the work of the law written on their hearts, their confciences, meanwhile, accusing or excusing one another, until the day in which God will judge the fecrets of men by fefus Chrift.

II. The prefent mixt flate, or unequal diffribution of happiness and mifery in this world, renders it exceedingly probable, if not abfolutely certain, that there will be a future judgment-a day in which a more equitable retribution of rewards and punifhments will take place. To fee one event happen to the righteous and the wicked, or to fee vice triumphant, and virtue perfecuted, without hopes of its ever being otherwife, not only robs the good man of one of his fureft anchors in time of trial and tempest, but casts an inextricable gloom upon the government of the Sovereign Ruler of the universe; and exhibits him in the light of an impotent, an unjust, or tyrannical governor; for we fometimes fee those, who according to all the rules we have of judging of characters, are the excellent of the earth-men of the greatest probity and goodness-who yet pass through this life under a variety of forrows and fufferings, from which many of the wicked are, in a great meafure, free. We lometimes fee the good man living in extreme penury and want, distressed even for the neceffaries of life, while the wicked enjoy plenty and abundance-their eyes stand out with fatness, as the Pfalmist expresses it-Yea, the good man is fometimes borne down and cruelly oppreffed by the wicked-he facrifices his fortune, his liberty, and his life, for the fake of a good confcience : while the wretch, who is the guilty caufe of all his calamities, riots in the plunder as though he was rewarded for his iniquity. To be convinced of the truth of this observation, cast your thoughts back to the treatment of those holy men, the prophets and apoftles, of whom the earth was not worthy; a brief detail of whofe fufferings we have in the 11th chapter to the Hebrews.-How were they diffreffed on every fide, even for the common neceffaries of life, and put to the most excruciating torture, for the fake of their religion ?- They had trials of cruel mocking and scourging, moreover of bonds and imprisonment-they were foned, fawn in fun_ der, and flain with the fword-they were destitute; afflisted and tormented. Reflect a moment upon the fad tragedy-the cruel butchery made of the Chriftians in the ten perfecutions under the Roman Emperor, and afterwards of the martyrs under the Papal Inquifition. How has every province been stained with the blood of religious men, and every foil fattened with flaughtered thoufands !

"The helplefs innocent (faith the elegant Mr. Burgh) is brought fast bound to the rack, where no Vol. III. M 2 friendly eye glances compaffion, no voice of comfort is heard; he kneels, he weeps, he begs for mercy by the love of God and the bowels of compaffion. The unfeeling monsters talk of herefy, and the profanation of their rights. The rack is prepared, the ropes are extended, the wheels are driven round, the bloody whip and hiffing pincers tear the quivering flesh from off the bones; the finews crack-the joints are torn in funder-the pavement fwims in blood. The blood-thirfty perfecutors glut themfelves with cruelty. No thunders roll, no lightnings blaft their guilty heads !" And can we fuppofe that a righteous God, who fits at the head of the universe, and beholds all these diforders, will fuffer fuch impieties to go unpunished, or fuch virtue unrewarded? To suppose it, is to suppose that he cannot, or that he will not rectify these diforders; either of which is impious and abfurd-for the very idea of a God, fuppofes him clothed with ftrict justice, and armed with almighty power-having a difpofition to do perfectly right to all intelligences, and ability to execute all his defires: therefore, according to his nature and difpofition, as he is the righteous God, fo he will judge and do righteoufly-rectify every apparent diforder, and treat or render to all intelligences according to their real character and work. But as we do not fee this done in the prefent state, but one event happening often to the evil and the good-or the good diffreffed and depreffed, while the wicked are profpered and exalted; we reafonably conclude there is fome future time or day approaching, when God will affuredly judge the world in righteoufnefs, and render a fuitable retribution to all men, according to their character and deeds. And that this judgment or trial will be held, and their refpective fentences proclaimed, in the most public manner, as intimated in a variety of paffages of facred writ, feems highly probable, becaufe,

III. It is not eafy to conceive how the juffice of God, in the refpective fentences of the righteous and the wicked, can otherwife be fo fully difplayed-Much of the wickedness of finners, lies hidden in the heart, and many of their crimes are committed in fecret-They fometimes put on the form and appearance of religion, as a mark to blind the eyes of the world-to answer some finifter ends-and with all their outward fhew and appearance of faints, are the most arrant hypocrites at heart. On the contrary, much of the goodnefs of the righteous also confists in the hidden life; the inward exercises of faith, love, purity, meeknefs, humility, holy mourning for fin, and refolute watchfulness and strivings against the power of temptation. Many of their good deeds of piety and charity are alfo done in private, without any other witnels than God and themfelves, or those who have been partakers of their beneficence .---Much of the true character both of the righteous, and the wicked; yea, of that which is the best part of the one, and the worft of the other, we fee then, is often unknown to the world; and how shall it be made known, and the justice of their respective fentences appear to all intelligences as it ought, but by fome public manifestation? How, according to all human conception, can this be fo well done as by a public judiciary procefs before the affembled Univerfe? Hereby, the virtues and graces of the righteous on the one hand-the repentance, faith and love with which they returned to God, embraced the Saviour, and fubmitted to his laws-On the other hand, the unbelief, impenitence, and incorrigible wickednefs of finners, by which they fhut their eyes against the light of the glorious fun of righteoufnefs, and refufed to receive, or be governed by him, will be fet in fuch a plain and firiking contraft, as will reveal and make their true characters most extensively known to all intelligences, who, with one voice, will acknowledge the juffice of the fentence, faying, Hallelujab, falvation, and glory, and bonor, and power, be to the Lord our God, for true and righteous are his judgments. From the whole, then, we conclude, that as even the light of natural reason leads us to believe that God will, in fome future flate judge, reward or punish, every man in perfect righteoufnefs, fo it is agreeable to reafon, as well as the exprefs declarations of fcripture, that this judgment ihall be paffed in the most public manner, in the words of the apostie, that God bath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteoufnefs when we must all appear before the judgment-feat of Christ—give account of ourfelves; and every work, with every fecret thing be brought into judgment.

I now proceed to make fome practical inferences and obfervations from the fubject, which, by the bleffing of God, may be influential to deter us from fin, and comfort our hearts, under all the trials and diforders of this changing fcene.

1. This doctrine of a judgment to come, clears up the mystery of divine Providence, and indicates the ways of God to man in many of the difpenfations of this life, which, without it, appear "puzzled in mazes, perplexed in errors-clouds and darkness reft upon them." To fee the good man emerging from the clouds of fpiritual ignorance, and the thraldom of fatan's power, rejoicing in the works of his Maker, his heart and his hand fill moving the fame way, to ferve the Lord; to fee him cut down in the bloom of life, in the midft of his ftrength and ufefulnefs, or fuffered to drag out his life in poverty, pain and diffrefs; while his wicked neighbor, who burfts the law's inclofure, robs the hireling of his wages, and oppreffes the widow and the orphan, is crowned with wealth, lives in eafe and luxury, and feels no pangs in his death; the facts alone confidered, give but a melancholy idea of the government of the Sovereign Difpofer of events. What gloomy thoughts are apt to overfpread the mind? How can it be confistent with the justice and goodness of God, we are ready to fay, thus to afflict his friends and favorites; and thus to profper his open and avowed enemies? Better to our fhort-fighted view it would appear, if profperity and happiness always immediately attended the righteous, and punishment and mifery the wicked. But a general judgment unravels the myftery, clears up the whole fcene, and makes it appear one wife extensive plan; when all difficulties which may at prefent perplex our minds, with respect to the ways of divine Providence shall be removed, and the wife defigns which we cannot now fathom or fee through, fhall be made known .- As eruptions, earthquakes and inundations denote the diffolution of the natural fyftem, and ficknefs and difeafe of the natural body, fo do the wickedness and impiety of man denote that the prefent flate of imperfection must ceafe; a flate of retribution take place, and every prefent diforder that appears to impeach the wifdom or justice of the divine government, be rectified. When instead of the reign of fin, it shall be the reign of God and perfect righteoufnefs. The pious man shall be no longer undistinguished from his impious neighbor : It shall be known and publicly revealed, who ferveth God and who ferveth him not. The impenitent and incorrigible finner shall receive the fruit of his wickedness, the just wages of his evil deeds, tribulation, anguish, and everlasting shame and contempt; and the righteous an exceeding great and eternal rewardglory, honor and immortal happinefs—infinitely out-weighing all they have done or fuffered for God in this life; and thus fhall God and his government be juftified to all intelligences.

2. This doctine of a future and general judgment affords matter of comfort and fupport to the righteous, to all who truly love and ferve God in every fituation of live. To confider that the good man is the conftant object of the divine care and protection, that however great his fufferings may be in this world of fin and imperfection, yet he is never utterly forfaken of God, but, in his lowest depreffion and greateft fufferings, he beholds him with an eye of approbation and tender regard, and hath promifed that all things, however diffreffing, shall work for his good; yea, that those prefent temporary evils, grievous and adverfe as they may be, or appear, shall work for him an exceeding, even an eternal weight of glory. This confideration, when drops of joy are few, and troubles many, bears up the foul with a divine fortitude. When loaded with unjust reproach, the good man's name is caft out and reviled; or when proud and powerful oppreffors vent their rage and crush him under their feet, then how fweet and comfortable is the thought, that his witnefs and avenger is in heaven, who will not fuffer his virtue always to be under a cloud of afperfion, nor the wicked always to triumph over him, but will bring forth his righteoufnefs as the morning, and his innocence as the noon-day. This, like an anchor to the foul, buoys him up in every adverfity and trial-makes him exult in agony, and pronounce even the flames and the gibbet a bed of rofes. In fhort, when fortune, friends, and every earthly comfort forfake, or are torn from the good man, then a righteous God his compassionate Father and just Judge, is his refuge and exceeding great reward. That God is righteous, and will judge the world in righteoufnefs, is his comfort and fupport in the darkeft hour of affliction and diffrefs. It was the firm belief of thefe heart-cheering truths which made holy Job, when laboring under a weight of woes, break out with fuch enraptured confidence. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, and though after my Skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I fee God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another. But take away this belief and this hope from the good man, and his fun hath fet in darknefs, and thickeft gloom overwhelms his foul.

3. This doctrine is matter of just terror to the wicked. It shews that vain are their hopes, and short will be their triumph. However they may now be exempt from every difasterous event, and flatter themselves that to-morrow shall be as today, and much more abundant—That God sees not nor regards their impiety, nor will call them to account for their iniquities; yet to their forrow shall they find, that long-fuffering is not forgivenefs. Though God acts for a time as though he winked at, or took little notice of their conduct, yet divine judgment, with no tardy steps, pursues, and fwift vengeance will, in the end, overtake them. One day is with the Lord as a thousand years. The Lord is not flack concerning his promise as some men count slackness, but is long-suffering to us ward, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. But the day of the Lord will come-that folemn and impartial day, which he hath appointed to judge the world in righteoufnefs, will come-it will come fpeedily and fuddenly, as a thief and a fnare upon the world. For, behold, I come quickly, faith the Judge, and my reward is with me, to give to every man according to his works. The Lord Jesus Christ shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and obey not his gospel. Then shall they be stripped of all they loved and delighted in, as dear in this world, and be made as completely miferable as they have made themfelves finful. Their true character shall be revealed, all their hidden wickedness and fecret crimes, yea, the very thoughts of their hearts shall be brought to light, publicly proclaimed and exposed to the just fcorn and contempt of all wife and good beings. Their own confciences fhall upbraid them with the justice of their doom, and fill them with the most painful inward remorfe and felf-loathing, for having acted fo mean VOL. III. N 2 and fhameful a part, fo unworthy of their rational nature, fo ungrateful to the best of benefactors, and fo destructive to their own fouls. This, like anever-dying worm, will ever gnaw at their heartftrings-like a barbed arrow pierce them to the quick. Thus fhall all who die in impenitency -rife to everlafting fhame and contempt, in the pain--ful fenfe of their own folly and basenes, and the just abhorrence of all good beings. With these reflections shall they go away into everlasting punishment-into the fire prepared for the devil and his angels; where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched! How vain then are all the attempts of finners to conceal their crimes from the eyes of men like themfelves, when the eye of God is upon them, all things open and naked to his view, who will one day reveal, not only their fecret actions, but the very thoughts of their hearts to the affembled univerfe.

How foolifh! yea, what madnefs is a life of fin, however profperous, which muft fhortly end in fuch exquifite, never-ending mifery! How much wifer was the conduct of Mofes in choofing rather to fuffer even affliction with the people of God, with a view to the recompence of reward, than to enjoy the pleafures of fin, which are but for a feafon; at longeft, foon to end and be fucceeded by pain and mifery; efteeming even the reproach of Chrift, upon fuch conditions, and all the indignities and fufferings, to which a fleady attachment to his caufe and people might expose him—a greater honor than all the glories of a crown, greater riches than all the treasures of Egypt.

4th. And lastly. If God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteoufnefs, when we must all appear and stand before the judgment-feat of Chrift, to give account of ourfelves, and receive according to what we have done, whether it be good or evil-then how just is the apoftle Peter's inference on this fubject. What manner of perfons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godlines? Looking for, as we are hastening to this great and folemn day of God, wherein, or at the conclusion of which, the heavens being on fire shall be diffolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. Of what infinite importance is it that we give all diligence, that we may be found of our judge in peace, without fpot and blamelefs? Senfible that we are finners, fallen guilty creatures, who have, in a thoufand ways, tranfgreffed the divine law, and thereby incurred the righteous displeasure of our Maker and Judge--How should the thought of this folemn day of reckoning lead us all to fpeedy, deep and fincere repentance for our fins. Convinced that rivers of tears can never wash away the stains of guilt, nor the deepest repentance cancel past obligations to, or atone for the tranfgreffions of a law, which requires perfect, finlefs obedience, in all respects, and at all times. How fhould the thought of this awful day of righteous judgment, engage us to fly to, and by faith, lay hold on the Lord Jefus Chrift, that we may, as the scripture expresses it, be washed in his allcleanfing blood, and be found in him, not having on, or depending upon, our own righteousness, which is incomplete and imperfect, but the righteousness of Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every foul that believeth .--- Affured, that without holinefs, no man shall fee the Lord, how folicitous fhould we be that our faith be a lively operative principle-working by love, purifying the heart, and overcoming the world. How careful should we be; how fhould we labor and ftrive to eradicate from our hearts every inordinate appetite and paffion, to cleanfe ourfelves from all filthinefs of flesh and spirit-perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord-to have our lamps trimmed and burning-all our graces in lively exercise, and ourselves in a condition of actual readiness, like men, who every moment expect the return of their Lord to judgment! This is the influence which it might reafonably be expected, the thoughts of this folemn event would have upon us all; and this influence it certainly would have, were the thoughts of it properly realized and brought home to the mind. It is plainly owing to inconfideration, the want of properly impreffing the mind, by frequent and ferious meditation, upon the certainty and folemnity of this interefting event, that men are fo little influenced by it. Did men verily believe, and properly realize, that the eye of God was conftantly upon them, and a folemn day fast hastening, when they must give account of all their thoughts, words and actions, it would certainly have a mighty influence to restrain them from every fin, and incite them to every virtue.

As the best improvement, then, of this discourse, let me exhort you to give these reflections due scope -ferioufly meditate upon the folemn fcene of the general judgment, and its awful transactions!-Anticipate the day in your thoughts, and imprefs the folemn representation, made of it in fcripture, deeply upon your minds,' as though it were now actually taking place. Think you faw the Lord Jefus Chrift, the appointed judge, in his own glory, and the glory of his Father, and all his holy angels with him, defcending in the clouds of heaven, with a fhout of triumph, raifed by millions of happy attendant fpirits, with the voice of the Archangel, and the trump of God, piercing heaven and earth with this awful and awakening call-Arife, ye dead, and come to judgment! At the word, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, fee countlefs myriads start from their grave-earth and fea, death and hell give up their dead-men of all nations, kindred and tongues-of all conditions and characters-the high and low, rich and poor, bond and free-the just and unjust-all stand before the bar of their judge, fitting on the throne of his glory, with anxious folicitude waiting their different fentences, already impreffed on their countenances by the fentences of their own hearts! Behold the books opened, and the dead judged out of the things written therein-the fecrets of all hearts made known, and crimes long covered, as in thick darknefs, now revealed as in open day! Imagine, O ye accountable creatures, ye faw all this, and fay, how will ye ftand the ftrict and folemn fcrutiny! Impreffed with thefe thoughts, take heed to yourfelves, left at any time your bearts be overcharged with furfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares; for as a fnare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all thefe things that come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man. Amen:

THE DESIGN OF CHRIST'S COMING INTO THE WORLD.

JOHNEWING, D. D.

And Provoft of the University of Pennfylvania.

JOHN VIII. 56.

Your father Abraham rejoiced to See my day, and he Saw it, and was glad.

TO a race of finful and wretched creatures, who expect deliverance from the ruins of their fall, and a reftoration to the favor of God, through the interpofition of the great Redeemer of mankind, nothing fhould appear a more proper fubject of meditation, than the glorious fcheme, whereby the benevolent Father of our Spirits has accomplifhed this important defign. It is the only fupport, which a guilty creature can have, who is in any degree fenfible of his perifhing condition, and has any juft apprehenfions of the favor or difpleafure of God. We find, that the faints of God, in all ages of the world, have fupported themfelves with the notices which God has been pleafed to give of his pardoning mercy, and of his gracious defign to deliver mankind from their wretched condition. The falvation of man, by a Redeemer, was the mercy which God promifed to the fathers; and although many ages paffed, after the introduction of fin into the world, before the appearance of the promifed Meffiah, during which time the bleffings of the gofpel, and the method of difpenfing them, were gradually fet in a clearer light, as the fulnefs of time drew near, in which the Sun of Righteousnels was to arife; yet still they trufted in the promife of a faithful and covenant-keeping God, that he would, in due time, raife up the GREAT DELIVERER for them. Adam and Abel, and Enoch and Noah became heirs of the righteoufnefs, which is by faith, having firmly believed that the promifed feed of the woman would, in due time, bruise the serpent's head, and destroy his usurped dominion among the children of men.

And Abraham too, the father of the faithful, was transported with an earnest desire (as the original should be translated) to see the glorious time of his appearance, and he saw it by an eye of faith, and was glad. He was comforted under the views of his guilt, and amidst the labors of his pilgrimage, by the prospect he had of this interesting event; while he firmly believed the gracious promise of God, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

As the fecret of the Lord might be with them that feared him, in a more peculiar and extraordinary manner, under that darker difpensation in which he lived, it is probable, that he had fome particular discoveries of this interesting event for his own private confolation; efpecially in that fingular trial of his faith, when he received the excruciating command from God; Take now thy for, thine only fon Ifaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burntoffering, upon one of the mountains, which I will tell thee of. It is probable, that his ready obedience to this unufual command was facilitated by fome private information, which he received at that trying conjuncture, that the facrifice then enjoined was a fymbolical representation of the method which God had determined to take for the redemption of mankind, by the facrifice, death, and refurrection of his own Son. An infpired interpreter affures us, that he accounted that God was able to raife bim up, even from the dead, from whence alfo be received bim in a figure, or fymbolical reprefentation.

And if Abraham, the father of the faithful, was transported with the distant prospect of that glorious day, when the Lord of Life should be made flesh, and take upon himself, not the nature of angels, but the feed of Abraham; how much more reason have we to rejoice in the goodness of a grasious Providence, which has determined our ex-Vol. III. O 2 iftence in that glorious day of gofpel-light, which the patriarchs and prophets defired to fee ?—When the angel announced the birth of our Saviour to the humble fhepherds in the fields; he affured them, that he brought them good tidings of great joy, which flould be fuch to all people. It is, indeed, the beft news that ever came from heaven, and lays the moft folid foundation for the joy and gladnefs of our degenerate world.

The more we confider the benevolent errand, on which the Redeemer came, and the glorious effects of his interpolition in our behalf, the more fhould our hearts overflow with undiffembled love and gratitude to our merciful Deliverer.

The whole human race was involved in the mournful confequences of our original apoftacy from God: Every mouth was ftopped, and all the world was guilty before God. We all, like loft fheep, had gone aftray, and were funk into the most melancholy state of ignorance and folly, guilt and bondage. We had blinded our minds and darkened our understandings by unruly appetites and paffions; effaced the original law of righteoufnefs, that had been written upon our hearts, and corrupted all our principles of action. Hereby we had degraded our natures, and fpoiled the beauty and harmony of our moral constitution. This disjointed and polluted flate of the mind must be neceffarily attended with a fatal alienation of heart from God, the fource of life and happinels-from his laws and government, and with a confequent inclination to fubmit to the ignominious flavery of fin and fatan. Hereby we became guilty before God, fubjected to condemnation, and delivered ever to fatan, the merciles executioner of the divine vengeance, to receive from him the just wages of fin, even death in all its formidable extent. In this miferable condition, we had no created eye to pity us-no created arm to bring us falvation, and must have funk for ever under the infufferable weight of the divine difpleafure, had not his bowels yearned over the ruined workmanship of his hands -had he not fent his Son to make an atonement for our fins, to refcue us from the bondage of fin and fatan, and to proclaim liberty to the captives, that the ranfomed of the Lord might return with joy upon their heads. Accordingly, he difpatched the Son of his bofom into our ruined world, with a commiffion from heaven to put away fin, by the facrifice of himfelf, and thereby to feal and publish a pardoning and justifying covenant by his blood.

With divine philanthropy he undertook the arduous miffion. He voluntarily fubmitted to the law of God, and paid an unfinning obedience to it, in its moft extensive requisitions, and thereby fulfilled all righteousness for us. He is every where represented, by the facred writers, as perfectly innocent, and free from every instance of moral guilt; holy, harmles, undefiled, and feparate from finners. Nay, farther, he not only obeyed the law of God in all its latitude, but he alfo fubmitted to its penalty, which we had incurred by our fins, and paid down his facred life as a ranfom for us. Hence he is faid, by the evangelical prophet Isaiah, to be wounded for our transgreffions, bruifed for our iniquities; to have the chastifement of our peace laid upon him, that by his firipes we might be bealed. He is faid to be delivered up for our offences -to bear our fins, or the punishment of them in his own body upon the tree-to make his life an offering for fin-to die, the just for the unjust-to be made a curje for us, when he knew no fin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him; and to have the iniquity of us all laid upon him, that by his death he might destroy death, and him that had the power of death, that is the devil, and bring us to God.

Now the most plain and obvious meaning of all these and fimilar expressions, that are every where to be found in the facred writings, is, that Jefus Christ fuffered the penalty that was due for our offences, and that he died in our stead a substituted facrifice for the fins of the world, that we might be delivered from the penalty of the broken law, and obtain the justification of life, through the redemption that is in him. And this doctrine of the vicarious fatisfaction of Jefus Christ is fufficiently confirmed by all those passes of for pture, in which he is called the Lamb of God, that taketh away the fins of the world, and is faid to be a facrifice for fin, as the great antitype of the propi-tiatory facrifices under the law, which had their accomplishment only in him. As it was impossible for them to purge the confcience, or explate the guilt of fin; and as they were only intended to prefigure the great atoning facrifice of Jefus Chrift, we muft conclude, from their being offered by finners, and their dying in their stead, that the death of Chrift, which is fo often, and fo exprefsly compared to them by the facred writers, was defigned to be confidered by us as a proper atonement made by him for the fins of the world. The writers of the New Testament have fcarcely left a fingle phrafe appropriated to the propitiatory facrifices under the law, which they have not expressly applied to the death of Chrift. Now the proper notion of a fin-offering under the law was this-the guilty perfon laid his hand on the head of the victim which he offered, confeffed his fins, and prayed, that the life of that innocent creature might be accepted instead of his own; hereby acknowledging the justice of God, in punishing his fin by his death, at the fame time, that he expressed his hopes in the divine mercy, through an atonement yet to be made. Now as it was impossible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away fin, or expiate its guilt, and it was, nevertheless, constantly used, by divine appointment, under the Mofaic difpenfation, what can we rationally conclude, but that they were instituted as types and figures of the atoning facrifice of Jefus Chrift, whole blood cleanfeth from all fin. If then, the facrifices under the Iaw were fubfituted in the room of the guilty perfon, by whom they were offered, and yet could not expiate his guilt, or purge his conficience, but only prefigured or pointed out the atoning facrifice of Jefus Chrift, whofe blood cleanfeth from all fin, we may reft affured, that he died in our flead, the juft for the unjuft, and bore the punifhment of our fins, in his own body, on the tree, that we might be delivered from our obligations to punifhment, and be entitled to eternal life, through the merits of his death.

Thus has he fealed a juftifying covenant by his blood, by which we are delivered from condemnation, and are treated as if we never had finned; being juftified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Chrift, whom God hath fet forth as a propitiation for our fins, through faith in his blood. For when God juftifies a finner, on the terms of the gofpel, through the atonement of Jefus Chrift, he is in the eye of God, and of the law, confidered as a righteous perfon, and is treated as a righteous perfon, being freed from condemnation, and having obtained a legal right to the juftification of life.

Hence he is invefted with the glorious prerogative of forgiving the fins of those whom he has redeemed by his blood. In confequence of his having undertaken and accomplished the arduous work of our redemption, God has exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remiffion of fins. The power of Chrift to forgive fins is a plain and intelligible doctrine, as every prince, from the nature of his office, muft have the prerogative of forgiving offences against his government. Remiffion of fins is afcribed in fcripture to the blood of Chrift, as, by its being shed, that covenant was ratified and sealed, which enfures pardon and falvation to all that believe on his name. So that when they are pardoned, on their repentance and convertion to God, they are faid to be washed and made clean in the blood of Chrift; because they are pardoned and justified, in virtue of that covenant, which was sealed and ratified by his blood,

But, that we may have a ftill clearer notion of the way, by which we become entitled to the benefits of the Redeemer's purchafe, let us attend a little to the precife meaning of our justification before God, through the merits of his Son.

The juftification of a perfon fuppofes, that a charge is brought againft him in open court, and that a plea is entered for him, either by himfelf or his advocate. If he is found innocent and not guilty of the charge, he is juftified, and cannot be properly faid to be pardoned; but if his plea is fet afide, as unavailable, and he is found guilty, he may be pardoned, but cannot be properly faid to be juftified. Now this is eafily applied in the affair of our juftification before God. When we are charged with the violation of the divine laws, we cannot deny the charge, and plead, not guilty; but must depend on the mercy of the judge for pardon and deliverance from condemnation. But although we fly to mercy for protection from the fentence of the law, yet this is not the whole of our plea. We plead an atonement made-a facrifice appointed, offered and accepted, and a covenant made by God himfelf, and ratified by the blood of his own Son. Upon this plea, pardon is difpenfed through a Mediator, who died for our fins, and rose again for our justification. So that gospel-pardon is forgiveness upon a plea, upon a covenant, and in a way that is confiftent with the juffice, as well as with the mercy of God; and, therefore, is justification as well as pardon. In a word, the Son of God has fo pleafed his Father, by his active and paffive obedience, that he has exalted him to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and remiffion of fins, and has given him authority to pardon penitent believers, and to justify the ungodly upon their conversion to God, and to bestow upon them eternal life, as the gracious reward of their obedience and fidelity in his fervice.

Yet still we are not to confider the propitiatory facrifice of Jefus Christ, as an incitement to the Father to forgive our fins, and to receive us into his favor, as though he had no compassion for us, until he was appealed by blood, and fostened by facrifice. No; he first loved us, when we loved not him, but were enemies to him by wicked works. It was the effential compaffion of his nature, and his unmerited love to the human race, that engaged him to find the Ranfomer for us, and to lay on him the iniquity of us all. For God for loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whofoever believes on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. Nothing but the eternal complacency of the divine mind in his own adorable scheme, which he has concerted for the redemption of mankind, could have induced him to accept of the atonement of his Son for us, when he might have infifted upon our fuffering, in our own perfons, the penalty of his violated laws. Accordingly, our Redeemer himfelf every where reprefents his miffion as from the Father, and fays, that be came to do the will of him who fent him. It is, therefore, an unworthy and injurious reprefentation of the invariable goodnefs of the Supreme Being, to fuppofe that he refufed to be reconciled to his offending creatures, until he was prevailed upon by the interceffion of his Son. But still his mercy and compassion for us must be exercised, in a way, that would fupport the authority of his laws, and the rectitude of his moral government ; and maintain the effential claims of his justice and his truth, and manifest his regard to the happines of his moral creation, in perfect confiftence with the exercife of his pardoning mercy. The atonement of Chrift is, therefore, to be confidered as a glorious provision of infinite wildom for the exercife of his mercy, in fuch a way as would vindicate the authority of his laws, and illustrate the wisdom, the justice, and the equity of his government, by awakening, in the minds of his rational creatures, an awful fense of his holy indignation against fin, and a proper reverence for his laws; or in the words of a facred writer, it is a gracious plan, whereby God can be just, and the justifier of those that believed on his Son.

We know not how far it might have countenanced a rebellion among his other rational creatures, and given them difadvantageous impreffions of the Supreme Lawgiver, to have feen a whole race of guilty rebels pardoned and received into favor, without any fatisfaction or atonement. But to prevent thefe ill impreffions, God has shewn, in this amazing plan of our redemption by his Son, fuch a holy abhorrence of fin-fuch a regard to the honor of his laws, and fuch a concern for the happiness of his moral creation, that he would rather give his own Son to be a propitiation for our fins, than not to condemn fin in the flesh; and that, when man had finned, nothing that mere man could do, fhould be of any avail, or of fufficient efficacy, to procure his pardon. When we fee, by this aftonishing plan of divine wifdom and grace, that God does not pardon even the penitent and reformed finner, but only on account of the blood of Chrift-when we fee fo much majefty and innocence given up to the tortures of the crofs in our flead; and when we fee ourfelves delivered from death and hell, by an expedient fo amazing as the death of the only begotten Son of God, it fhould certainly infpire us with the higheft reverence for the laws of God; with the greateft horror of fin, and with the warmeft gratitude to our divine Redeemer, whofe facred fide our fins have pierced, and whofe innocent foul our tranfgreffions have wounded. Such a view of our redemption muft alfo have a natural tendency to conftrain us, who are thus bought with the precious blood of the Son of God, to devote ourfelves to his fervice, and to live to him, who has loved us, and washed us in his own blood; and who has died for our fins, and rifen again for our justification.

Nothing is more evident, from the whole tenor of the New Testament, than that the defign of Chrift's dying for our fins, was not to free us from our obligation to holinefs, but rather to lay us under stronger engagements to obedience; and that according to the gofpel-covenant, none can expect to fhare in the benefits of the mediation and atonement of Jesus Christ, but such as turn from their fins, by a fincere and hearty repentance, and pay a cheerful obedience to his wife and good laws. The doctrine of Chrift's fatisfaction, when properly understood, as it is delivered in the New Teftament, is fo far from giving the least encouragement to fin, that its evident tendency is to impress the mind with a fenfe of its heinous malignity, and of the terrible difpleafure of God againft it. While he promifes pardon to the penitent, he has, at the fame time, provided, that it fhould be difpenfed in fur h a way, as would make an awful declaration of his hatred of fin, and vindicate the authority of his laws and government. What could have a greater tendency to prevent our abufing his mercy to licentioufnefs and vice, and to excite in us a holy fear of incurring his difpleafure, than to confider, that he would not receive the penitent finner into his favor, without a factifice of fuch inconceivable value, offered on their behalf, and that it was only on the merit of his fufferings that the covenant of grace was eftablifhed, in which God has gracioufly promifed to accept of our obedience, and to reward our fidelity in his fervice ?

How welcome, then, fhould the news of this great Deliverer be to the children of men! With what raptures of holy joy fhould we entertain the glad tidings, that unto us a Saviour is born, who is Chrift the Lord, and that the only begotten Sonof God has come into the world to put away fin by the facrifice of himfelf! Nay, farther, he came not only to deliver us from the punifhment of our fins, but alfo to make provision for our deliverance from the power of our corruptions, and to purify us to himfelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Knowing that it was impossible for us, while we were averfe to the laws of God, and difaffected to his government, to be reftored to his friendship, until the moral diforders of our fouls should be rectified, he came in the character of the great Phyfician, to heal our fpiritual maladies-to cure our depraved natures-to make us holy, as he is holy, and thereby to unite us to the Author of our beings and the fountain of our happiness. He came to strike off the fetters of our flavery, and to releafe us from the bondage of fin, and the captivity of fatan. He has entered into the house of the ftrong man armed, and bound him in chains. He has called to the prifoners with an awakening voice to escape for their lives, and, by his irrefiftible word, commanded them to go free. He came to put a ftop to his progrefs, in blinding and bewitching the minds of men, and by the amazing force of gospel-light, and the facred illumination of his holy fpirit, to turn us from darkness unto light, and from the power of fatan to ferve the living and true God.

Hence it is, that he employs his golpel to break the power of fin in the foul, and to turn the heart by a genuine conversion, from the love and practice of fin, to the love and practice of godlines. When his golpel, that divine word of power and of truth, enters into the heart, and changes its principles and temper, we escape from the dominion of fin and fatan, being made free from the law of fin, and becoming the fervants of righteoulnes. Now the truths of the golpel are calculated to produce this glorious change, as they are the most important and interesting of any that we can be acquainted with, and have a natural tendency to open the blinded eyes of our minds, and to make us wife unto falvation. The gospel of Christ fets before us, in the clearest and most striking point of light, the method by which alone we can efcape from that destruction which hangs over our guilty heads, together with the most alarming motives and confiderations, to engage us to fly from the wrath to come. And when it enlightens the mind and changes the heart, Jefus Chrift thereby delivers the foul from the bondage of corruption, to ferve God in newnefs of life. Such perfons are then faid to know the truth and to be made free by it. If the Son make you free, then are you free indeed. Now if liberty and an enlargement from an ignominious bondage be matter of joy and triumph, what reafon have we to blefs the Son of God, who by the inftrumentality of his gofpel, has given us the nobleft and most honorable freedom that any of the fons of Adam could ever boaft, whereby we are delivered from the power of evil habits, and vicious inclinations.

And that the gofpel may profper to the end, whereto he has fent it, even to the pulling down of the frong holds of fin and fatan, he has purchafed the holy fpirit to accompany the preaching of his word, that it may be brought home to the heart with divine power, and effectual energy. It is the office of the holy fpirit, in the facred economy of man's redemption, to take of the things of Chrift, his doctrines and precepts, his arguments and motives, and to fhew them to us in fuch a ftrong and convincing point of light, that they may transform us into the divine image, and bring our hearts and lives unto the obedience of the gofpel. When men's eyes, therefore, are opened by the fpirit of Chrift attending the preaching of his word, they are, by his efficacious grace, delivered from the bondage of fin and fatan, and translated into the glorious liberty of the children of God. And how fhould our hearts triumph in fuch a Saviour as this, who faves his people from their fins, both from the dominion and power of them, fo that they shall not reign in our mortal bodies ; and alfo from the ruinous confequences of them in the world to come !

Efpecially when we farther add, that he came not only to deliver us from the guilt and power and confequences of our fins, but alfo to procure for us immortal glory and bleffednefs. Herein all the fufferings of his life and death, and all the operations of his providence and grace, have their final accomplifhment. It is his efficacious will, that thofe whom the Father has given him to be redeemed by his blood, fhould be with him where he is, that they may behold his glory, and be happy in the manifeftations of his eternal love. Hence he has promifed to come again and receive them to himfelf, when he has fanctified them by his word and fpirit, and prepared them for an inheritance, with the faints in light; and that their falvation might be complete, he has promifed to unfeal the prifon of the grave, to call forth their fleep_ ing duft from the houfe of corruption, and to rebuild the whole man, in a glorious immortality and ineffable joy. When he expired upon the crofs, he conquered death, and him that had the power of death. And, therefore, at the appointed hour,' when he shall come in the glory of the Father with his holy angels, he will iffue the fovereign orders, that shall be heard through all the filent repositories of the dead, and fend forth his angels to gather his elect from the four winds of heaven. Clothed with their Redeemer's fpotlefs righteoufnefs, and made perfect in his glorious image, their mortal part shall put on immortality, and they shall hear the transporting fentence pronounced by the mouth of their Judge, Come ye bleffed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world! And when the grand folemnity of the final judgment is concluded, he will lead them forward, amidst the joyful acclamations of their elder brethren, to those mansions of eternal reft and peace, which he has prepared for them with his precious blood. Millions and millions of ages shall then roll on, while they are enjoying the fmiles of his countenance, and the ineffable manifestations of their Father's love; and when these are past and gone, their happiness is as far from ending, as it was the first moment of their introduction into the Paradife of God. Eye has not feen, nor ear heard, nor has it entered into the heart of man to conceive of the dignity, the happinefs or duration of their future inheritance. It is a portion large as their most extensive wishes, lasting as their immortal spirits, and worthy of God to beflow; and what should endear it still more to our affections, it was purchased at the expence of the precious blood of the only begotten Son of God.

APPLICATION.

Behold now, my friends, with awful joy and wonder, the stupendous scheme of divine mercy and grace through a Redeemer ! a world of rational beings refcued from over-whelming mifery, and made everlastingly happy, if their own incorrigibleness in fin prevent it not! And fay, what fentiments fhould this infpire?-Why, certainly fentiments of joy and gratitude too fervent to be concealed, and yet too big to be uttered ! If ever joy and exultation were reasonable in our degenerate world, it is certainly reafonable on the coming of the great Deliverer of Mankind, in whom all the caufes of joy and feftivity confpire. Let us therefore, with the transported Patriarch, be glad that we have feen the glorious days of the Son of Man, and rejoice in the God of our falvation; while we contemplate, by an eye of faith, a spectacle more august and glorious, than was ever exhibited in the world before. Behold the adorable Son of God travelling in the greatness of his strength, and mighty to fave-treading the wine-prefs of his Father's VOL. III. Q 2 wrath alone, explaining the fins of a guilty world, and fhutting up the folemn fcene with thefe comprehenfive words, Father, it is finifhed; the great, the ftupendous work is done; the univerfal facrifice is completed, whofe virtue and efficacy extends from the foundation of the world to its final conflagration, and which angels and men fhall contemplate throughout eternity, with wonder and aftonifhment, with joy and gratitude !

And can we, my friends, who are the fubjects of this marvellous grace, ever hear of this prodigious expence of divine goodnefs with a flupid infenfibility, or a cold indifference? Can we think of it without hearts overflowing with love and gratitude to that compassionate God, whose bowels of mercy yearned over the ruined workmanship of his hands, and therefore, provided the Saviour for us; and to that glorious Deliverer, who being in the form of God, humbled himfelf unto the death of the crofs, to raife us to the exalted privilege of becoming the fons and daughters of the most high God ?- If we honor and efteem the distant patriot, with whom we have no connexion, and from whom we can derive no advantage; how much more fhould we honor and love the great Redeemer; the benefit of whole actions and fufferings extends to all nations and to all ages? What are all the heroes and patriots that ever livcd, in comparifon with the Son of God? What are the bleffings which they have procured for their generation, in comparison with glory, honor and immortality? Lighter than vanity when laid in the balance with a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. They may indeed be an honor to the country in which they live, and procure for it fome temporary advantages; but our Saviour was born for the whole world, and his birth is glad tidings of great joy to all people; a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people I/rael. Hard and obdurate must that heart be, that can attentively confider this amazing plan of our Redemption, without feeling the lively emotions of gratitude, and without being constrained by the powerful efficacy of his love, to live unto him who first loved us, and washed us from our fins in his own blood.

And now, my friends, let me urge it upon your confciences, and my own, with all the importunity which a matter of fuch unfpeakable confequence demands, to enquire, with impartiality, whether ever the defign of Chrift's coming into the world has ever taken place, with refpect to our own fouls? Has the terrible difpleafure of God againft fin, manifested in the death and fufferings of his own Son, convinced us of its ruinous nature and tendency to fuch a degree, as to engage us to hate it as the abominable thing which the Lord hates; and as that which occasioned the unparalleled fufferings of our bleffed Redeemer? It is the vaines hope that ever deluded the fallen posterity of Adam, that you can possibly have an interest in his death as an atonement for fin, unless you also feel the power of his grace, renewing the heart, and turning it from the love and practice of fin, to the love and practice of holiness. For without boliness no man can fee the Lord.

He came into the world, not to make your repentence unneceffary, nor to releafe you from your obligations to obedience; but to render both your repentance and obedience acceptable through the merits of his atonement. He came to deliver you from the dominion, as well as from the punishment of your fins; and he never will accomplish one of these ends to any foul, but in conjunction with the other. So that those, who live under the unbroken dominion of fin in the heart, must inevitably fink down under the punishment of it, notwithstanding all that the Redeemer has done and fuffered for the expiation of it; nay, their punifhment will be greatly aggravated by all that he has done and fuffered for the redemption of man. We have not a ftronger demonstration of the unparalleled love of God for our degenerate world, in this marvellous plan of redemption, than we have of his utter abhorrence of fin, and of his unalterable determination to execute the fiercenefs of his tremendous wrath upon all the impenitent workers of iniquity. The compassionate Jefus, who bled and died upon Mount Calvary, to make an atonement for our fins, and to purchase the facred influences of his holy fpirit, to enable us to repent and believe, and live in newnefs of life, and is now befeeching finners to accept of them for thefe falutary purpofes, will one day appear in clouded majefty, and, with unalterable determination, command that those his enemies, that would not have him to reign over them, fhould be brought forth and flain before him.

And can you, notwithstanding all this, be deaf to all thefe arguments of love and terror, and force your way to destruction, through all these restraints which are intended, in mercy, to bring you to joys unutterable and full of glory? Will you have no compassion on your own precious and immortal fouls, until the last incurable wound be given, which shall feal you up in everlasting despair? How will you answer it to God, who has given his Son to redeem you from ruin? How will you anfwer it to Jefus Chrift, who expired upon the crofs, under every circumstance of humiliation and shame, to purchase eternal life for you, if you are found at last among the despifers of his grace? We appeal to your own confciences, that power which God has implanted in you, whereby you can look forward to eternity, and confider the confequences of your actions in another world; whether it be not inconceivably better to comply with the gospel-method of falvation, by faith and holinefs, than to wander on in the ways of your own heart, and in the fight of your own eyes, until you fall into the hand of the living God, and experience the irrefiftible power of his wrath! Would to God that we could prevail with finners to break off their fins by repentance, and humbly accept of life through a Redeemer on the terms of the gospel. But stronger arguments we cannot ufe. Nothing but the Almighty power of Divine Grace, and the quickening energy of the Holy Spirit, can bring the truths, the arguments, the motives, and the threatenings of the gofpel, with fufficient efficacy to the hearts of finners. To the grace and power of God, therefore, we commit you, and befeech you, by all the arguments of love and terror exhibited in the death and fufferings of the only begotten Son of God, that you would cry mightily to him, for the renewing and fanctifying influences of his holy fpirit, to create you anew to good works in Chrift Jefus; that it may be indeed a matter of joy to you that a Saviour has been born into the world. And let us all depend upon the merits of his death, and the efficacy of his atonement for the pardon of our fins, and for the communication of his grace, to enable us to comply with the terms of the gospel-covenant. And let it be the business of our whole lives, to teftify the gratitude of our hearts, for the love of God in Chrift Jefus, by adorning his doctrines in all things, that when he comes again without a fin-offering to judgment, we may be found of him. in mercy, and be admitted to dwell with him for ever in his heavenly kingdom. Amen.

I CORINTHIANS XVI. 13.

-Quit you like men-be strong.

A MONG the many comparifons ufed in fcripture to illustrate the Christian life, that of a fight or warfare is a principal one. To this the apostle evidently refers in the text. He addreffes the believing Corinthians, as a general would his foldiers, who expected immediately to engage with the enemy. We find nearly the fame words ufed by the Philistines, in exciting one another to battle with Israel; Be flrong, and quit yourfelves like men, O ye Philistines, that ye be not fervants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: Quit yourfelves like men, and fight. It is not improbable that the apostle had this animated speech in view; and if not, it was natural with the figure in his mind, thus to express himself. It is as though he had faid, "You are like foldiers in actual war; behave, then, not as children, who are weak and eafily intimidated; but exert that firength, courage, and fortitude worthy of men in an hour of trial and danger."

This exhortation is proper to be addreffed to Christians in every age; and it is now addreffed to you, my believing brethren: Quit you like men—be forong. I shall, First, mention the enemies with which you have to contend. Secondly, shew what is implied in the exhortation; and then conclude with some motives to encourage and animate you in the fight.

The enemies with which you have to contend, are generally ranked under these three class; the devil, the world, and the flefb.

First, The devil is a watchful, cunning and unwearied enemy. After his revolt from God, he feduced our first parents, and has thus brought the whole race into fin and mifery. Opposed himself to all goodness, he is become the tyrant and deftroyer of human kind. As a roaring lion he walketh about, feeking whom he may devour. Though we are not ignorant of many of his devices, yet it is impossible to tell either when, and in what way he will affail us, or to diftinguish precisely his suggeftions from the corrupt defires of our own hearts. With these he co-operates. He knows the frame of our bodies, and has near access to our spirits.— He prefents evil under the fpecious appearance of good. He fuits his temptations to the various difpolitions of men, and to the different periods in their lives. He leads to prefumption, and he drives to defpair. He withdraws for a time, and waits an unguarded hour, that he may attack with the greater fuccefs. Sometimes he fhoots, like fiery darts, dreadful and blafphemous thoughts, occafioning extreme uncafinefs and horror in the mind.

With this enemy, my Chriftian foldiers, you have to contend; a fallen fpirit, active, powerful, naturally fubtle, and long verfed in the practice of guile; not only, indeed, with one, but many; for though there is a great adverfary, the God of this world, yet under him hofts are marshalled, whom he leads to war. The apostle, in speaking of the Chriftian warfare, reckons those evil spirits to be numerous and powerful. We wresselve not against flesh and blood, but against principalities—against powers—against the rulers of the darkness of this world against spiritual wickedness in bigb places.

Secondly, The world is another powerful enemy. In this clafs we count the men of the world, and the things of the world.

The men of the world engage on the fide of the devil. By their allurements they entice to fin, and by their reproaches, deter from duty. Not to mention the furious perfecutions which they have fometimes carried on againft Chriftians, and from which we, in this age and country, are delivered, they are always dangerous. Their converfation and example are contagious. It requires no fmall refolution, at times, to withftand their fmiles, and encounter their frowns—to adhere fleadily and fingularly to duty when the cuftoms of the world all tend another way—to facrifice popularity, and venture even character for the caufe of religion.— It fometimes happens too, that thofe with whom the Chriftian is clofely connected are his greateft oppofers; when his foes are thofe of his own houfhold. In this cafe the danger is peculiarly great. From others he may withdraw, but with thefe he is obliged to aflociate.

Under the things of the world we count honors, profits and pleasures. How dangerous these are, we fee every day, in the fatal experience of others, and the flate of our own hearts. We need, and may lawfully enjoy a fhare of them, but they too often engrofs our affections and attention. The Chriftian is in the more danger from this quarter. becaufe he is called to engage in the purfuit of these, and under the appearance of duty, they lead him aftray. He is apt to fet a higher value upon them than they deferve, to repine under difappointment, and to be improperly elated at fuccefs; befides the temptation, there is to feek them by unjustifiable ways. We cannot ferve God and Mammon. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. The evil we have to fear is not from the things of the world, which are, in themfelves, good; but from that temper and conduct which they produce in us. This leads me to mention, Thirdly, That the flefb, by which is meant the corrupt nature, is the most dangerous enemy of all. The principle of fin is not fully fubdued in believers. This is the law in the members which wars against the law of the mind, and brings into captivity to the law of fin. Were it not for this, the attempts of fatan would be unfuccefsful. Were it not for this, the things of the world would have no dangerous tendency. Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed .-This is the traitor within the walls, which betrays us into the hands of the enemy. Could we fubdue this, we need not fear those without. The Chriftian, then, has to fight with himfelf. Remains of evil defires are still in his heart, and strive to prevail over him.

These are the enemies, my brethren, with which you are called to contend. Let not your hearts faint on the view of them; but, quit you like menbe ftrong. This exhortation implies, Firft, That you banish unneceffary fears, and engage in the warfare with boldness and resolution. So much fear of an enemy as leads to watchfulness and caution, is highly useful. To despise an enemy is often the way to be beaten. Peculiarly in the Christian fight, bappy is the man that feareth always. There is a fear, however, which depreffes the fpirits and hinders exertion. This ought to be laid afide. Discouragements increase the difficulties; fmall ones are then magnified, and great ones affume a most formidable appearance; whereas, if encountered with patience, firmnefs and perfeverance, those would vanish, and these lay aside their terrors. While an enemy is confidered as dangerous, he ought not to be deemed invincible. To defpair is to yield ground and encourage an attack. It is well known what advantage this temper gives fatan over believers, and how carefully he improves it. He then harraffes them with diffreffing thoughts, horrid fuggestions, and is only not permitted to drive them into final ruin. Believers, therefore, ought to maintain an undaunted courage and refolution.

Again, There is implied, that they fight in divine ftrength. In themfelves they are, indeed, weak, and wholly unequal to the conflict; but the grace of God is fufficient for them. Hear the holy challenge of the apoftle; If God be for us, who can be against us? Trufting in his power, and faithfulnefs to fulfil all his promifes in Christ, they ought to engage with their enemies. He hath provided for them an armour which is proof against every affault. In puting on this and managing it aright, fafety and victory are ensured.— My bretbren, fays the apostle, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of bis might. Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. Stand, therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the belmet of falvation, and the fword of the spirit, which is the word of God: Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the fpirit. Thus we fee that, as in the ancient mode of making war among men, there were pieces of armour to protect the whole body from injury, and weapons with which to affail, fo in the fpiritual warfare, believers are armed and encouraged to go forth in the ftrength of the Lord. It need: only be added,

Further, As implied in this exhortation, that they perfevere in the combat. If they withdraw, or ceafe their exertions, they will be overcome.— The enemies continue their hoftilities as long as believers are in this world. There is no reft or peace to them, but their whole life is a conftant warfare. Let not him, therefore, that girdeth on his harnefs, boaft himfelf, as he that putteth it off. Many, alas, who feemed manfully to begin the conteft, and continued it for a time, being allured by the things of this world, or deterred by difficulties, have given it over, and returned to their former flavery. Thefe are likely to fall a prey. He that fall endure unto the end, the fame fhall be faved. Let me now mention fome motives to encourage and animate you in this warfare.

First, Your cause is good and highly important. The apostle calls it the good fight of faith. Do men in the wars of this world, boldly venture their lives when perfuaded that their caufe is righteous? Much more ought Chriftians to encourage themfelves. They are engaged in the beft and nobleft of causes; on the fide of God, against every thing that is bafe, cruel, and oppreffive. No lefs depends on the part they act than eternal happiness or mifery. Do the men of this world fight for fading honors and emoluments? Is it for thefe that millions, in every age, have been flaughtered, and this earth covered with blood? And shall not Christians contend for an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away; for a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge, will beftow on every conqueror?-We admire the man, who, at the head of armies, has over-run nations, and spread his conquests far and wide; we almost adore him, who nobly withstands the ironhand of oppreffion, and fuccefsfully vindicates the infulted rights of human nature; but the Chriftian foldier is a more noble spectacle, a more glorious character. Though not furrounded with those external things which attract and dazzle the attention of mankind, yet he posseffes more true magnanimity, and more genuine worth. The judge of the universe approves, and exalted spirits behold him with wonder and delight. Should not then the goodnels of the caule, and the importance. of its iffue, as to yourfelves, encourage and animate you my believing friends? Mahomet promifed to his followers who fell in battle, immediate entrance into a Paradile; but to you, unerring truth hath given affurance of fulnels of joy and pleafures for evermore.

A fecond motive to animate you is, that you are engaged in the prefence of many spectators. You act continually in the fight of the great and glorious God. His eye penetrates into the inmost receffes of your hearts. He will be your impartial judge, and from his hand you will receive your reward, or your doom. How far angels are witneffes of our actions is not certainly known. They are, however, not uninterested in the redemption of man. At the birth of the Saviour they fang together in heavenly strains, and have been frequently employed on meffages of grace. We are expressly informed, that there is joy in heaven over one finner that repenteth; that the angels are all ministering (pirits, fent forth to minister for them who (hall be beirs of falvation. The apostle charged Timothy before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels.

The confideration of our being open to the view of those holy and exalted spirits, who have charge of us, and who earnestly defire our success, ought to inspire us with fortitude and resolution. Shall we behave meanly in the prefence of fuperior beings? Shall we difgrace ourfelves in the fight of heaven? Could we fuppofe them to feel the leaft uneafy fenfation, what grief and fhame must they fuffer on our account, when we act unworthy our character? Yea, what indignation, to fee creatures redeemed at an infinite expence, and with the most glorious prospects before them, complying with the temptations of fatan and the world, and yielding to the corrupt defires of their own hearts !

In the third place, You fight under Jefus Chrift, the captain of falvation. Are foldiers infpired by an attachment to their king? By a confidence in their leader? Surely believers may be of good courage, Jefus is the King of Kings. He is the author and finisher of faith. He leads you by his example, and encourages you by his words. Will you fuffer me to introduce here an example from hiftory, of the effect of the conduct and speech of an earthly king, before an engagement with his enemy? Or, is it not fuitable, and may we not compare great things with fmall ?- Henry the Fourth, of France, just before a battle, in which he obtained an entire victory, uttered a generous' prayer in a voice, and with a countenance that infpired all who heard and beheld him, with like magnanimity; then turning to the fquadron, at the head of which he defigned to charge: " My " fellow-foldiers," faid he, " as you run my for-" tune, fo do I yours; your fafety confifts in keep"ing well your ranks; but if the heat of the ac-" tion fhould force you to diforder, think of no-"thing but rallying again; if you lofe fight of "your colors and ftandards, look round for the "white plume in my beaver; you shall fee it " wherever you are, and it shall lead you to glory " and to victory." Examples of this kind fill the mind with great and noble ideas. We admire the man who, in the confcious integrity of his heart, boldly faces great and immediate danger, and infpires all around him with the like magnanimity. But, how little does every human example appear, compared with him who leads the armies of the faints; with him who conflicted with the powers of darknefs; with him who gave his life a ranfom; who, by his own power, rofe from the bed of death; who triumphantly entered into everlafting glory; and who is conducting his followers in fafety thither, through all the difficulties and dangers which furround them! What encouraging words are these, Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world. Becaufe I live, ye shall live alfo. Hear how he animates them from his celestial throne: To him that overcometh, will I grant to fit with me on my throne, even as I also overcame, and am fat down with my Father on his throne. Believers, your leader is great and fuccefsful; you fight under the banner of the crofs; the motto is LOVE; be not afraid, how ftern appearance foever your enemies may affume; for,

In the last place, You are fure of victory in the end. The prospect of fuccess tends greatly to. Vol. III. S 2 encourage in any undertaking; but in no earthly thing have you the fame affurance, as in your fpiritual warfare. You have the word of truth that you shall prove victorious. You are compassed about with a great cloud of witneffes from the beginning of the world till this day, who all declare that they have been more than conquerors through him that loved them. Your enemies are already fubdued fo far as that they can never recover dominion over you. Injure you they will, but cannot prevail; make opposition they will, but it is ineffectual. Jefus Chrift by his blood has atoned for your guilt; by his grace he purifies your hearts; and he hath spoiled principalities and powers, made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them; yea, he hath entered into heaven itfelf, now to appear in the prefence of God for you. Should not this confideration encourage and animate you ? He is a coward, indeed, who will not fight when fure of fuccefs; he has not the fpirit of a man, who will not withftand the fhock with victory in his view.

Let us remember at the fame time, that though the enemies are conquered, yet our own exertions are neceffary. In the Chriftian warfare we are confidered as rational creatures, and as free agents. Dependance on divine ftrength, and endeavors of our own are perfectly confiftent. If we fit down in negligence and inaction, we need not hope for victory. There are two extremes in this cafe, from one or other of which we are in danger, The one is the neglect of due watchfulnefs, and the attendance upon appointed means, thinking that God will do all for us; the other is a two great confidence in our own ftrength, and not relying on the ftrength of the Almighty. What God hath joined let us not put afunder. Look around you and fee the connexion eftablifhed between the means and the end; fee that the means are neceffary to attain the end; and that thefe are not fuccefsful without the divine bleffing. Believe that you must work out your own falvation with fear and trembling; and that God must work in you, both to will and to do of bis good pleafure, otherwife you work in vain.

Thefe motives furely are enough to keep you from difpondency, and to animate you against all your enemies. Your cause is good, and infinitely important. You contend in the prefence of God and the holy angels; and under the banner of Jefus Christ, who will lead you to glory and to victory.

Allow me, on this fubject, to expoflulate a little with you, my friends, who have never engaged in the Chriftian warfare. Think, for a moment, on the condition in which you are, and the awful confequences of it. You ferve the devil and your own wicked lufts. Thefe have dominion over you, and will lead you to inevitable ruin. You cannot now fully reconcile yourfelves to the fervice. There is that within you which tells you, that you are guilty, and expoled to the difpleafure of your Maker and Judge; but still you have neither will nor refolution to affert your liberty. The wages of fin is death. It now flatters and deceives you; it is, in the mean time, binding you fast, and you will, at length, be cast into utter darknels, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth. The Lord Jefus shall prove fuccessful over fatan and all who take part with him. You have joined the weakest fide. All enemies shall be put under his feet. Hear that dreadful fentence which hewill pronounce upon impenitent finners of our race, when he comes to judge the world in righteoufnels; Depart from me, ye curfed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and bis angels. If you now join on the fide of those rebellious spirits, you must expect to fhare in their punifhment.

My friends, there is yet hope. There is a treaty of reconciliation carrying on. Delay not to throw down the weapons of your rebellion. Flee from the camp of fatan. Come inlift under the banner of Chrift. He will reward you with glory, honor, and immortality. In juffice he might have refufed, before now, to liften to any propofals of peace but he is long-fuffering and patient. Come, and what is paft thall be forgotten. He will take away all iniquity, and receive you gracionfly.

Are there any here who formerly feemed to engage in the Chriftian warfare, and have returned again to the fervice of fin? What has been the reafon of this conduct? Did you meet with difficulties which deterred you? Or, were the temptations of fatan and the world too powerful for you? You have forfeited the name of foldiers. You are cowards and deferters. Go, ye difpirited men, we would not fight in fuch company. Separate you from the camp of Ifrael, that we may know who are our enemies. Or, rather, let me call upon you, my deluded friends, to return while mercy is offered. Return and difgrace the caufe no more. Return and retrieve the honors you have loft.— Quit yourfelves like men, and fight.

My believing brethren, to whom this fubject is more particularly addreffed, you have heard the enemies with which you have to contend; the duties to which you are called; and fome motives to encourage and animate you. Why fhould any of you fear? May not each of you, under difficulties, fay with the Pfalmist, Wby art thou cast down, O my foul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God. Or, may you not adopt his more confident language, and fay, The Lord is my light, and my falvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid? Though an hoft should encamp against me, my beart shall not fear: though war should rife against me, in this will I be confident. It may be but a ftruggle or two more, and the warfare is finished. After croffing the Alpine hills, would you now fit down in inglorious eafe? After fo many victories already obtained, and when the enemies fly before you, would you lofe the caufe for ever? No, if you have the fpirit of men—if you would not fubmit to the galling yoke of fin and fatan—if you would not fuffer the reproaches of your own confciences, and the cruel fcoffs and infults of tormented ghofts in their dungeons of eternal darknefs—if you regard the glory of the great God—the love of a dying Saviour, and the inconceivable joys of heaven, yield not to the power of your enemies. Watchye, fland faft in the faith, quit you like men—be flrong.

THE VALUE OF THE SOUL.

MATTHEW XVI. 26.

For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own foul? or, what shall a man give in exchange for his foul?

AL POTENTIAL

T HE candor with which our Lord treats hiso difciples upon all occafions, is a high evidence of his fincerity, and no inconfiderable evidence of the divinity of his miffion. He not only tells them what they have to hope for, but what they have to fear, if they would be his fincere followers. He ftates the terms of their difciplefhip to them with great fincerity, whenever a favorable opportunity offers; nor does he on any occafion flatter their vanity.

An inflance of this we have in the verfe but one that precedes our text: Then faid Fifus to bis difciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny bimfelf; and take up his crofs and follow me. The neceffity, however, of being his difciples, hard as thefe terms may appear to a fecure and profane world, is urged in the next verfe, from the danger of neglecting the duty, and the benefits arifing from a compliance therewith. For whofoever will fave his life shall lofe it; and whofoever will lofe his life for my fake shall find it.

This fame duty is recommended and enforced in the words of our text, from the nature of the lofs fuftained by those who do not thus deny themfelves for Christ, take up the cross and follow him. For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own foul? or, what shall a man give in exchange for his foul?

You will eafily perceive, my brethren, our Lord's argument in the text, to induce us to be his difciples, is founded on the ineftimable value of the foul. It is of more worth than a whole world. To gain a world and lofe a foul, is to fuftain an irreparable lofs; for what fhall a man give in exchange for bis foul? The mode of our Lord's exprefition evidently implies, there is nothing that can be given in exchange for a loft foul; and the reafon is obvious, becaufe there is nothing in all the world that equals our precious foul in value; no, nor all our world put together, for what is a man profited if he fball gain the WHOLE WORLD, and lofe his own foul.

Our Lord fuppofes, in the text, for the fake of illustration, what, indeed, has never fallen to the lot of any one man; that could he poffers the whole world, its whole fovereignty and wealth, its whole honors and enjoyments of every nature, and that to the highest degree poffible, they would be a vain purchase at the expence of his foul.

What then must be the folly of those who fell their fouls for fo fmall a share of any of these?— Who fell them for a thing of nought!

What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or, what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

What I propose from the words, by the aids of the Spirit of Grace, is,

I. Confider the value of the foul in a few particulars, contraction for the state of the state

II. The nature of the lofs fuftained by those, who lofe their precious foul.

III. The danger of lofing it.

Let us inquire, the second second second second

I. Wherein does the value of this precious foul appear?

By the foul I mean, that rational and immate. rial principle that is in each of us, by which we are diftinguished from the brutes that perish, and become wifer than the fowls of heaven. This foul is the offspring of God. Every foul of the human race receives its being immediately from him, without the intervention of any laws whereby it is propagated. He is in the most proper sense of the term, the Father of our Spirits. It is the obfervation of an eminent divine, that while all other beings were created by a fingle let them be, and, lo, they were, the facred Trinity is reprefented as fitting in council on the creation of man. Thus, Gen. i. 26. Let us make man. It was not his body that was the subject of this confultation; for there are many bodies in the material universe as curious in their formation, and, perhaps, as glorious in their nature, as the body of man; and which, therefore, would have as juffly merited the confultation of heaven. It was this immaterial and precious foul, as united to the body.

But to proceed: The high value of this foul appears,

1. From its nature and capacity.

I have just faid that it is fpiritual and immaterial in its nature. It does not confist of fuch großs and material parts as our bodies do; it is hereby raifed far fuperior to them, and all the material univerfe, and becomes a partaker of the fame kind of being with the angels of heaven; for they are fpirits.— Who maketh bis angels fpirits. Yea, more, it is a partaker of the fame kind of being with God himfelf, for Gad is a fpirit. This, therefore, befpeaks its high dignity and ineftimable value.

And from this fpirituality of its nature is derived its capacity. It is capable of knowing God; not, indeed, in a perfect manner; for fuch is the infinite glory of the divine nature and perfections, that he cannot be fully known by any of his creatures. None by fearching can find out God-none can find out the Almighty unto perfection. But the foul of man is capable of knowing fomething of the nature, the character and perfections of the Supreme Jehovah-That Jehovah from whom all our happinels, as intelligent creatures, is derived, whofe favor is life, and his loving-kindnefs better than life.

This rational foul is alfo capable of knowing God's works—the fun, the moon, and the flars, which his fingers have framed. It is capable of knowing the various ranks of creatures in their feveral gradations—" Down from infinite to thee, "from thee to nothing," Many of thefe it has ranged into claffes, and gone far in explaining their nature and their laws: And O the wonders of wildom, power, and goodnefs it has diffeovered in them! The works of God, both in creation and providence are among those mirrors in which we behold the glory of the divine perfections.

For the invifible things of him, from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead. The beavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth his handy-work. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. But it is this rational foul that enables us to see this glory, and render the honor of it to the great God.

This foul of ours is that also which constitutes us the fubjects of moral government. We are hereby capacitated for knowing truth and error, fin and duty, and for rendering a rational obedience to the divine law. We hereby become capable of rewards and punifhments; in a word, capable of the whole fystem of duty, which is due from our race to God, and capable of all its confequent happinels. And this happinels is elernal. in its duration, as well as rational in its nature.----For these fouls of which we speak, are in their very nature immortal. You have heard that they are immaterial-they have nothing in them that tends to diffolution-they fhall furvive the ruins of the body-furvive this world itfelf, especially in its prefent form-bear date with an unwafting duration; and exift while God himfelf exifts.

This is a property of the human foul of the higheft moment to be attended to, and which inftamps an infinite value upon it—it is immortal. When yonder fun fhall have grown dim with age —when the moon and the ftars fhall enlighten our world no more, thefe fouls of ours fhall exift, and flourish in eternal youth. From hence the foul derives it capacity of enjoying God, and of being happy in his immediate prefence for ever. And this, too; greatly tends to illustrate the transcendent excellence of its nature.

RODGERS.

- And furely that must be highly valuable which is thus fpiritual in its nature, immortal in its duration, and capable of fuch extensive knowledge usefulness and happiness.

2. The value of the human foul appears from the price that was paid for its redemption. This was none other than the blood of the Son of God.— Forafmuch as we know that we were not redeemed with corruptible things, as filver and gold, from our vain converfation received by tradition from our fathers, but with the precious blood of Chrift, as of a lamb without blemifk and without fpot. The apostle calls the price of our redemption the blood of God. Feed the church of God, which be bath purchased with his gwn blood.

The perfon who fhed this blood was God as well as man. He was that divine perfon, who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God. There is not a perfection of the divine nature, however effential to deity, or incommunicable to the creature, but what belongs to him, as well as the Father, and to him in the fame fenfe with the Father. This is he who affumed our nature into a perfonal union with his divine. How glorious the fight! Deity and humanity conjoined in one mysterious perfon, and yet fo as to preferve each nature diffinct from the other. This was he who fulfilled all righteoufnefs for us, by a life of the most perfect obedience to the precepts of the law. This was the perfon who hath redeemed us to God by his blood. And did our time admit of confidering here the nature of those fufferings our Lord endured previous to his death, and in dying on the accurfed cross for us, it would greatly tend to enhance the value of this price in our effimation.

I thall only obferve, at prefent, that they include all the agonies of Gethfemane—all the infults he endured from thence to Mount Calvary, and all the exquisite anguish of the cross, until he cried, It is finished, and gave up the ghost. But all this, my brethren, ferves to illustrate the high value God fets upon that foul which he hath redeemed at fo expensive a rate. Would God give the Son of his love to all that ignominy, fuffering and death, to redeem a thing of nought? Verily no.

3. The difplay of the perfections of God, exhibited in the plan of faving loss fouls, through Jefus Christ, tends greatly to illustrate the value he puts upon them. This plan was laid from all eternity. Then it was the facred Three concerted and covenanted with each other respecting this important business, and each perfon in the adorable Trinity took his part in the divine delign, and engaged for its execution in the fulness of time.

DUP IN THE

Thus it was, God loved us with an everlafting love. I have loved thee with an everlafting love; therefore, with loving-kindnefs have I drawn thee.— But what was it they deliberated upon? Whether they would fave loft finners? No, this was gracioufly fixed. It was the way, the manner of doing it, fo as to fecure the honor of God's moral government, and exhibit the glories of the divine character in a proper point of light. The propofals of mercy and claims of juffice would feem to oppofe each other.

Mercy was inclined to fave the finner, while justice infisted upon his death, as the proper demerit of his fin.

Holinefs too had its claim upon the finner, and abfolutely forbad his falvation, unlefs conformed to the divine image; while truth infifted upon the execution of the threatening of the law on the tranfgreffor. But in the plan of faving men through Jefus Chrift, all thefe feveral claims are answered, and glorioufly harmonize. God can now be just, and the justifier of him who believeth in Jefus.

The mercy of God is illustrated in that the finner is faved. The justice of God, in the fatisfaction made by Christ's obedience to the precepts of the law, and his fusfering its penal fanction, in the manner you have just heard, as the finner's furety. His bolines, not only by the obedience of our Lord's life, which, indeed, is one of the brightest difplays ever made of it; but also by that purity of heart and manners, to which this plan of falvation recovers us, by the agency of the fpirit of grace. His truth is illustrated, by the full execution of the threatenings of the law, in all their dread extent, though not on the finner's own perfon, yet on the perfon of his furety; and his faithfulnefs in the fulfilment of his promifes to the divine Mediator, and to every true believer in and through him; while the wifdom of God fhines with diffinguished luftre, in concerting and executing a plan that unites all these feemingly parring interefts; a plan that fo fully provides for fecuring and illustrating the divine honor, and the faving of loft men. Thus, mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have killed each other.

From this brief fketch you fee what a mirror of divine glory the plan of our falvation through Jefus, Chrift, is. Here, we all with open face behold, as in a glafs, the glory of the Lord. Here, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God fhines in the face of Jefus Chrift. But what is all this about? Whofe falvation are the three perfons of the adorable Trinity thus planning and executing? That of fallen angels? No; that of human fouls. It is their falvation which exhibits this glorious difplay of the divine perfections and character. And O, in what an important point of light does this fet this foul of man! How ineftimable its value, about whofe falvation not only every perfon in the Trinity, but overy attribute of the divine nature, is thus, fome how or other, employed, and in and by which it is glorified!

4. The provision God has made for the recovery of this foul to bis image, and a capacity of enjoying bim as his portion, is a further evidence of its high value: He has given us the facred fcriptures, as a rule both of faith and manners. We are here taught all that is neceffary for us to know and believe, to the faving of our fouls. We are here taught the whole compass of our duty to God, our neighbor and ourfelves. Taught, that denying ungodlinefs and worldly lufts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this prefent world. Thus, all scripture being given by inspiration of God, is profitable for dostrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousnefs; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnified unto every good work. And in this refpect, among others, the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the foul; the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wife the fimple. And you will pleafe carefully to obferve here, that the truths contained in the facred fcriptures, are the great means cholen and appointed by God for effecting our perfonal holinefs. To this accords our Lord's prayer for his difciples.-Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth.

It is for the fame end the ordinances of the gofpel are inftituted. This is one great end of the fabbath, and all its appointments. It is, that we may, by thefe, hold an intercourfe with God while Vol. III. U 2 in this life, and thus be trained up for holding the most delightful communion with him in glory .---We read, that faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. That faith by which our hearts are purified, made like God, and we trained up to a meetnels for the inheritance of the faints in light. For the fame gracious purpole has God appointed the gofpel-ministry, which is represented by the apostle, as among the richest of our Lord's afcention-gifts. When he afcended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. And he gave fome apofiles, and fome prophets, and fome evangelists, and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the faints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man; unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Chrift. But I must not omit adding here, that as all theie were but means, and, therefore, could not effect any thing in themfelves, God has provided the holy fpirit for rendering them effectual. This is the part he affumed in the plan of our redemption. Hence he is ftyled the Spirit of Holinefs; and we are faid to be faved by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, which be fled on us abundantly through Jefus Chrift our Saviour; and this great work is elfewhere flyled, the Sanctification of the Spirit, because of his agency in effecting it. But O! the rich variety of influences the fpirit flieds on his people, for this purpole, and the rich variety of graces he forms in them! But does not all this befpeak the value of the foul, for whofe fanctification and happiness this glorious provision is made? Yes, furely.

5. The nature of that happine fs which God has provided for the human foul beyond the grave befpeaks its high value. It is a happine is derived from the immediate prefence and enjoyment of himfelf; a happine is that flows from the most clear, diftinguishing and enlarged views of the perfections, the character, the government, and Christ of God. There we shall no more fee, as through a glafs, darkly, but face to face; we shall no longer know in part, but we shall know even as also we are known.

The precision and extent of the knowledge of the redeemed of the Lord in glory is expressed, Rev. xxii. 4. by feeing God's face. And they shall fee bis face.

It is a happinels that arifes from the most perfect conformity to God, in point of moral purity. The spirits of just men are, in that state, made literally perfect; holy as God, who hath called them, is holy. That which is in part is for ever done away, and that which is perfect is now come.

This knowledge of God and conformity to him, are the fources of that enjoyment of him which confummates the happinefs of the redeemed of the Lord. For there, in that world,—in that bleffed flate, God bimfelf will dwell with them, and they fhall be bis people, and God bimfelf fhall be with them, their God. So the words lie in the original. Rev. xxi. 3. (i. e.) God bimfelf will be with them, exhibiting and manifefting bimfelf unto them, as their fupreme bleffednefs; in all the ways that the feweral powers of the foul, now arrived at the fullest maturity, both in a natural and moral view, can poffibly receive or enjoy him.

This is that happinefs which Chrift has purchaled for us; and which he has prepared and taken poffeffion of in the name of his people. Whither the forerunner has for us entered, even Jefus, made an high-prieft for ever, after the order of Melchizedec.

Thus it appears to be a happinefs that is derived to us from God through Chrift, and which is enjoyed in the fame heaven of glory he inhabits.— One of his laft petitions for his people was, Father, I will that they alfo whom thou haft given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou haft given me. And him the Father always heareth.

Once more, it is a happinefs of the fame kind with that which the human nature of our Lord himfelf enjoys. The redeemed of the Lord become at laft, beirs of God, and joint beirs with Cbrift. From all which it appears to be a moft perfect and an everlafting happinefs—a happinefs equal to our higheft capacity of enjoying, and that for ever.— But all this befpeaks the value of the foul, which is capable of this happinefs, and for which it is prepared at fo expensive a rate, by a wife and a gracious God.

6. The reward God promifes and confers upon fuch as win fouls to Chriss, bespeaks their high value.- They, who are brought home to God, shall be a crown of glory, and a fruitful fource of consolation, in the day of Chriss, to those who have been the means of their conversion. For what, faith the apostle, is our bope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Chriss at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy.

It requires no fmall fhare of wifdom and fagaci_ ty to discharge this great trust aright; for be that winneth fouls is wife. But for their encouragement God promifes, That they that be wife shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever. Many and great are the difficulties which lie in the way of the faithful minister's proper discharge of his office; but thefe rewards are hung up before him as a prize at the end of his course, to encourage him to diligence-to zeal, and to faithfulnefs in his work. And even, though Ifrael be not gathered, yet shall be be glorious in the eyes of the Lord. But furely God would not fo highly encourage the taking pains to fave fouls, and thus reward them, even when they may prove unfuccefsful, unlefs thefe fouls were of infinite value in his fight.

7. The joy which the conversion of a foul to God occasions in heaven, is no inconfiderable evidence of its, bigh worth in their estimation.

Our Lord expressly affures us, Luke xv. 7, That there is joy in beaven over one finner that repenteth.— And so important is this truth, and so worthy of our attention, that it is repeated verse 10, Like350 RODGERS.

wife, I fay unto you, there is joy in the prefence of the angels of God over one finner that repenteth. And to illustrate and confirm this interesting truth, he gives us the instructive parable of the Prodigal Son, in the fubfequent part of the chapter. The joy of the father on the return of his fon, which concludes the parable, is beautifully illustrative of the divine and heart-felt pleasure, which the finner's return to God through Christ spreads through the whole heavenly world—angels and spirits of just men made perfect.

On the other hand, the conversion of fouls is matter of chagrin and mortification to the hofts of hell. And to this, as its true fource, are we to afcribe those many and cruel perfecutions, of one kind and another, that have been raifed against the faithful ministers of Jesus, in the different ages of the church.—Whatever may be pretended, it is because they are the instruments, employed by God, for refeuing fouls from the fnare of the destroyer. And this malignity of fatan against them is increased by their being fuccessful in this great work.

Thus the joy of heaven, and the chagrin of hell, upon the finner's conversion to God, unite in illustrating the value of the human foul.

8. The folicitude and activity of both worlds, beavon and hell, about the foul of man, befpeaks its high worth. The one is engaged for its falvation, and the other, with all its accomplices, is intent upon its ruin.

Heaven is engaged for the falvation of the human foul. Agreeably hereto, God has laid a plan for our recovery, as you have already heard under a preceding particular. The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, each one bears his part therein; and this plan has been not only laid, but executed and revealed in the facred oracles, and the great bleffings it contains are daily applied to the fouls of men, in the administration of the gospel and its ordinances.

God is in Chrift reconciling the world unto himfelf, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation.

Chrift, in his mediatorial character, is daily carrying on the great work of our redemption. Him bath God exalted with his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to give repentance to Ifrael, and forgiveness of fins. Who is even at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us.

The Holy Spirit is continually employed in recovering depraved men to the divine likenefs.— The angels of heaven are also employed in the fame bleffed work. For, are they not all ministring fpirits, fent forth to minister for them who shall be beirs of falvation.

1352 RODGERS.

The ministers of Christ too are engaged in the fame glorious bufinefs. They are ambassiadors for Christ, as though God did befeech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.

Pious friends have their hearts fet on the fame great end, the falvation of the fouls of those who are dear to them. For this they infruct them, ad_ wife them, pray for them, and weep over them. In a word, all heaven, and all its allies, are employed in the fame important work, that of faving fouls.

And on the other hand, all hell is bufied in deftroying precious fouls. Hence the devil is ftiled our adversary. Be sober, be vigilant; because your adverfary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about. feeking whom he may devour. His business, his daily employment, is to defeat, to the utmost of his power, the gracious defigns of God, upon our loft world. In this he is aided by many powerful accomplices. For we wrefile not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. He is also affitted by thousands of our degenerate race, who inlift under his banner, and powerfully aid him in all his infernal defigns, in a variety of ways, I may not stay to enumerate.

But why all this folicitude and activity to fave, or to deftroy the human foul? Verily it is, because it is a prize worth the contending for; a prize worthy the ftruggles of heaven and hell!

And are thefe the fouls that men in general efteem fuch things of nought?-About the future happinels of which they are fo perfectly indifferent? What folly! What madnefs! And are there not fome of you, my brethren, thus indifferent about your fouls? Wholly unconcerned about what becomes of them after death? What fayeft thou, confcience? And is this rational? Do thefe fouls, these precious souls merit no more attention than you beftow upon them?-And tell me, ye fons of riot and profaneness, are your stolen pleasures, or your avowed debaucheries, a fufficient compensation for the lofs of your rational, immortal fouls? -I appeal to your understandings-I speak as to wife men, judge ye .- I leave the decifion with your judgment and confciences; but remember, you are to decide for an eternity. AMEN.

THE DANGER OF LOSING THE SOUL.

BY

F.

JOHN RODGERS, D. D.

One of the Ministers of the United Presbyterian Churches, New-York.

MATTHEW XVI. 26.

For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own foul? or, what shall a man give in exchange for his foul?

WE have already confidered the value of the foul, in a few particulars. Let us now proceed to confider,

II. The nature of the lofs fuffained, by those who lofe their fouls, in the fense of the text.

By the lofs of the foul here, we are not to underfland, its annihilation, its ceafing to exift, but its exclusion from God, and its banifhment into a flate of mifery. The lofs of which we treat, is not the lofs of exiftence, but the lofs of happinefs; and which, confidering the nature of the foul, is a much heavier lofs than even exiftence itfelf; for it would be better not to be, than to be in a flate of infupportable and endlefs mifery. And this lofs is,

1. An entire lofs. It is the lofs of every thing that can, in the least, contribute to its comfort; Yea it is the lofs of the very capacity of enjoying happiness in God, the only possible fource of happinefs to us, after this world is gone. For the perfon who lofes his foul, in the fense of my text, lofes every trace of moral goodness, and is in the fame flate of depravity with the devils themfelves. But how affecting a cafe this! In this world, when a man loses his fortune, he has perhaps his honorleft; if he lofes both, he may still have his health left; if he lofes all thefe, he may yet have friends; if thefe too are loft, he may have a God to fweeten all the forrows of life. But to lofe the foul, is to lofe all; to have nothing left, but an existence in circumflances infinitely worfe than non-exiftence; and what adds to the mifery, is, that-

2. It is an irreparable lofs.

There are few losses we fustain in this life, but may be repaired, in a greater or less degree. If a merchant loss by one voyage, he may gain by another; if a farmer loss by one crop, he may gain by another; if we lose one friend we may get another; and fo with a variety of the other bless of this life. But the man who loss his foul, has no possible method of repairing his loss, left. In this life, this mediatorial hour, God is upon treating terms with us; but when life is ended, and the foul once loft, there is no method of repair; the treaty of peace is then for ever broken off, and all hope loft. From hence it follows, that it is

3. An eternal lofs.

The mifery it entails shall be commenfurate with eternity itself. I am not infensible, my brethren, that there have been fome few, now and then, in different ages of the church, who have taught the final restoration of the whole human race, to a state of happines, in fome period or other of their existence; and that this fentiment has been lately revived in our land.

Our time does not admit of our entering into a particular confideration of this doctrine, fo unfounded in fcripture, and fo unfriendly in its tendency, to the interefts of piety and morality. I fhall only make the two following remarks upon it at prefent.

First-That all agree, men must be made good, before they can be made happy. The reigning power of fin, and happines in the enjoyment of a God of unstained purity, are, at first fight, utterly incompatible with each other. But how is this goodnes to be effected after death? The friends of universal falvation fay, by the finner's fuffering in the future world, the punishment due to his fins in this. But this takes for granted, what is neither true, nor admitted, that punishment will cure moral evil. It would be no difficult tafk to fhew, 1 that this is neither the nature, the defign nor thetendency of fuffering; nor is it in any inftance the effect, unlefs rendered fo by the fpirit of grace .--The benefits which at any time arife from afflictions, which are readily admitted, flow wholly from this fource.-They are, at beft, but the means in his hand for effecting these good purposes. If punishment works this good effect, we must fuppofe, the devils are, at leaft, fomething better than they were near fix thoufand years ago, when they were caft into the prifon of hell. But who fuppofes they are? Or if any do, what evidence have they that this is the cafe? You will pleafe alfo to remember here, that while the finner is fuffering, -in the future world, the punifhment due to his fins in this, he is still finning in that state, and, therefore, ftill becoming more depraved-more unlike God, as well as running deeper and deeper in debt to divine justice. He is, in every view, getting farther and farther from God and true goodnefs, inftead of approaching nearer to them,

I have just hinted what deferves a more particular mention, and what, at the fame time, merits your fpecial notice—that the remedy God has provided and revealed in the gospel, for the cure of moral evil, and the recovery of the foul to true goodnefs, and the only remedy, is the fpirit of God.

You have already heard, in a preceding difcourfe, that this was the intereffing part he took in the plan of our falvation, through a Mediator; and that agreeably to this, the renovation and the fanctification of the human heart, are uniformly afcribed to him, and to him alone, in the facred oracles. To be regenerated is to be born of the fpirit; and the after-progrefs of this good work in the foul, is the fanttification of the fpirit, becaufe effected by him. To afcribe, therefore, this good work to the efficacy of fuffering is highly derogatory from the honor of the fpirit, as the fpirit of holinefs; it is to afcribe that to inferior caufes, that can only be effected by his almighty arm; and to give the glory to the creature, which is due alone to the Creator.

The fecond remark is, that the declarations of God, in his word, are most pointed and express against the doctrine of an universal restoration; or, in other words, they teach us, that the misery of the wicked in the future world, will be everlasting. Among the numerous instances of this kind I shall only mention the following.

Our Lord, in that brief but inftructive account of the judgment of the great day, which you have in the 25th chapter of Matthew, from the 31ft verfe, introduces the judge as addreffing the righteous in the following language: Then shall the king Jay unto them on bis right hand, come, ye bleffed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. And the wicked he addreffes in the words that follow. Then shall be fay alfo unto them on the left hand, depart from me, ye curfed, into EVERLASTING FIRE, prepared for the devil and bis angels. And he concludes the whole account thus. And these shall go away into EVERLASTING FUNISHMENT, but the righteous into life eternal.

My brethren, it is neceffary you should be informed here, that the words in this laft verfe, the one in the first claufe, which teaches us the duration of the mifery of the wicked, and that in the last clause, which teaches us the duration of the happinefs of the righteous, which all agree to be eternal, are precifely the fame in the original language. Can any then fuppole, the Saviour, the leading trait of whofe character, upon all occafions, was undiffembled faithfulnefs, would use the fame words in the fame verse, in two different senses, nay; in opposite fenses, on a subject of such infinite moment to the fouls of men, as the final iffue of the general judgment, without giving the leaft hint of it? That in the one cafe he fould mean a limited time, and in the other an endless eternity, and yet conceal these different meanings under the veil of the most profound fecrecy and filence? How could fuch conduct be reconciled with common honefty? But this must be the case, upon the principles of the friends of universal falvation .--For nothing can be more express and unequivocal than the declaration of our Lord, that the mifery of the wicked shall be of the fame duration with the happinels of the righteous, and that both the one and the other shall be EVERLASTING.

You will please to observe, further, that these two states are contrasted with each other in the text before us, and contrasted in this very point of view, as to their duration. This appears from the face of the words, These shall go away into EVERLASTING PUNISHMENT, but the righteous into life eternal.

To fay the nature of the fubject fuggefts the different fenfes, in which we are to understand the original word here ufed, though our Lord gives no hint of it, is begging the question. This is the very thing that is denied, and which has never yet been proved.

I fhall only add, we are affured in a Theffalonians i. 9. That the wicked shall be punished with EVERLASTING destruction from the prefence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. This is that which infuses the bitter ingredient, despair, into the cup of Jehovah's indignation. No hope—no hope no hope through an endless eternity.

III. I am to confider the danger of thus lofing the foul.

This danger is great, and arifes from various fources; but all our time admits of, at prefent, is briefly to touch upon the few following.

I. The state in which we are by nature.

The facred oracles uniformily represent this as a flate of spiritual death. And you hath be quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins. Every foul, by reason of fin, is, in a sense, in a lost state already, that is, they have loft the favor of God; they are, by nature, children of wrath. They have loft the image of God. Having the understanding darkened; being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their. beart. From the former arifes the neceffity of being justified freely by God's grace, through the redemplion lbat is in Jefus Chrift; and from the latter, the neceffity of being renewed in the spirit of our mind. Agreeably to this, every unbelieving finner is represented as under an actual sentence of condemnation to fuffer the pains of eternal fire. He that believeth not is condemned already; because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God. He that believeth on the Son bath everlasting life; and he. that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath. of God abideth on him.

You will, therefore, perceive, that it is only for finners to continue in that flate, unpardoned and unrenewed; and they are inevitably loft to all eter_ nity; and the danger there is, that they may continue in this flate, appears,

2. From the many obstructions that lie in the finner's way, to a recovery to the favor and image of God. I cannot stay to enumerate these, much less to illustrate them at large in this place. I shall only mention the following. The blindness of the human mind—the estrangement of the heart from. God; nay more, its enmity against him—the unfaithfulnels of the confcience, and the various depravity of the affections; all thefe are properly of an internal nature—they are obstructions that arife from ourfelves. But beside these, such is the power and influence stan, the adversary of our souls; has in obstructing the sinners recovery to God, and affecting his ruin, that he is styled the Prince of this World. For the prince of this world cometb and hath nothing in me: And, also, the God of this world. In whom the God of this world bath blinded the minds of them which believe not, less the light of the glorious gospel. of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them. He is, for his cunning, called the Old Serpent, and for his malice, the Devil and Satan.

Now when you confider the power, the cunning, the malice, and the industry of fatan and his accomplices, that are continually employed in ruining the fouls of men, the danger of their being loft is greatly heightened.

Again. This world is another fruitful fource of obftructions in the finner's way to eternal life.— The corrupt opinions of the world—its vicious examples—its fmiles—its frowns—its neceffary and lawful cares—its riches—its honors—its amufements, with all its various pleafures, lawful and unlawful, all, all contribute, by reafon of our depravity, to heighten the finner's danger of lofing his foul.

3. This danger appears from the many ways in and by which the foul may be loft. The principal of these are, ignorance of God, and of spiritual and eternal things-carnal fecurity, and indifference refpecting the falvation of our fouls-a prefuming on the abfolite mercy of God, without proper regard had to the atonement of Chrift-hypocrify . and formality in religion-the imbibing of fuch falfe principles, as are incompatable with gofpel-holinefs, particularly the principles of infidelity-the neglecting of God's public ordinances, which never fails, if perfifted in, to iffue in the ruin of the foul -procraftination, or putting off the bufinels of our fouls to some future time; this is the usual, and, alas! too, frequent bane of youth; to which we may add, the many ways of open profahenefs; fuch as drunkennefs-uncleannefs in all its various forms-curfing and profane fwearing-lyingdishonesty in dealing with each other-fabbathbreaking-contempt of God and facred things, with every other species of vice; all and each of thefe may be confidered as fo many different paths which lead down to the chambers of eternal death -fome more fecret, and fome more open; and which ferve to illustrate the danger of losing the foul; which danger is not a little heightened by the confideration of the immediate and fatal influence. fome of these things must have, from their very nature, upon the ruin of the foul.

4. This danger appears, from the great difficulty

I THE HALL I DIT LOS

The state of the state of the

1. 1.3 2.2

Nothing lefs can effect it than the almighty arm of God, and to this it is uniformly afcribed in the facred oracles. The bent of the foul, by nature, is against its own recovery, as appears from the internal obstructions in the way to it already mentioned.

The cafe of the finner may be juftly compared to that of a perfon deprived of his reafon, who refufes to ufe the means prefcribed for his recovery, however judicious; or who counteracts them to the utmost of his power, or both. The charge of our Lord against the Jews of old, is equally just with respect to every unbelieving finner under the gofpel. Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life. And befides this, all earth and all hell are oppofed to the finner's recovery to God, as you have heard in its place. If ever, therefore, it be effected, it must be by the arm of the LORD GOD OF HOSTS.---And now put all these confiderations together, and your felves being judges, is not the danger of lofing your precious fouls great?

But it is time, I fhould finish the subject by a few practical reflections upon what has been faid. And you will casily perceive, that,

1. whether we confider the value of the foulthe nature of the ruin to which it is exposed, or the danger it is in of falling into this ruin, all confpire to teach us the evil nature of fin-that fin which exposes this precious foul to all this ruin.-- My brethren, fin is not that triffe men in general effeem it. It has loft us the divine favor, and juftly exposed us to the displeasure of heaven—it has loft us the divine image, and rendered us wholly unfit for the enjoyment of the God of holine(s—it is the procuring cause of all the numerous and complicated evils of this life.—For as by one man fin entered into the world, and death by fin; fo death paffed upon all men, for that all bave finned.

" If every individual of our race," fays a pious divine, "that has ever existed from Adam down to " our day, were collected into one mighty heap, " and an inquest held upon them, fin would be " found to be the murderer." But this is not all, for we are affured that those who perfift in the ways of fin, shall be punified with everlasting destruction from the prefence of the Lord, and from the glory of bis power .- Must it not then be an evil and a bitter thing to fin against the Lord? Would to God that I could imprefs each one of you, and my own foul with yours, with a proper fense of the evil and deftructive nature thereof, that we might be hereby excited to hate it in a fuitable manner, to turn from it to God through his Son Jefus Chrift, and to maintain a careful and constant guard against it.

2. How indebted are we to rich grace for a Saviour from the ruin, which the lofs of thefe precious fouls involves?—a ruin of which we are in fo much danger. God might have paffed by our race, as he paffed by the fallen angels, and have left us to perish in our unnatural rebellion against him, as he left them. But O! the riches of redeeming love! Having laid his plan in the eternal councils of peace, he was pleafed to execute it in the fulnefs of time, by fending bis Son into our world, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of children. Herein, indeed, is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and fent his Son to be the propitiation for our fins. And let Gethfemane tell-let the fcenes of infamy and infult, through which the Saviour paffed, from thence to mount Calvary, tell-and let Calvary itfelf, and the crofs tell what the price of our redemption coft the Son of God. Here is love that many waters could not quench! Love that all the billows of Jehovah's wrath could not drown! Love ftronger than death !- My brethren, let this love of God and his Son Chrift, constrain you to estimate your fouls in a proper manner, and flee from the wrath to come, upon the plan of the gofpel.

3. This fubject teaches us the precious nature of the ordinances of the gofpel. I particularly mean here the inftitutions of God's public worfhip on the fabbath, the word and facrament.— Thefe are the means he has inftituted and ordained for the recovery of loft fouls to the divine favor, and their reftoration to his holy image. For after that, in the wifdom of God, the world by wifdom.

knew not God, it pleafed God, by the foolifbuefs of preaching, to fave them that believe. And you elfewhere read, that faitb cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. The great truths taught in the faithful preaching of the word, and in the administration of the gofpel-facraments, are the means the holy fpirit ufes for thefe gracious purpofes; they are the means by which he effects and promotes that change in the heart and life, in which gofpel-holinefs confist; and the duties there taught are the guide of the Christian's life.

I befeech you, therefore, my brethren, that you effimate thefe ordinances of God—thefe inflitutions of mercy, in a fuitable manner; adore God for them—rejoice in them, as your ineffimable privilege—make confcience of attending upon them from fabbath to fabbath; but above all, fee that you improve them for the great purpofes of your perfonal purity, your comfort in the ways of God, and for holding a delightful intercourfe with the Father of your Spirits while here upon earth, that you may be prepared for dwelling with him in glory.

4. We are taught by this fubject the folemn nature of the charge committed to those who have the care of fouls.—This is the charge of gospelministers. Hence that apostolic injunction; Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves; for they watch for your souls, as they that must give an account; that they may do it with joy, and not with grief, for that is unprofitable for you. The value of the fouls committed to their care, fhews the importance of the charge. They are of more worth than a world. For what is a man profited if be shall gain the whole world and lose his own foul? Or, what shall a man give in exchange for his foul?

It farther appears from the high danger finners are in of lofing thefe fouls, as already illustrated, and from the awful nature of the lofs when fuftained. All thefe unite in shewing the necessfity of watchfulnes, diligence and faithfulnes in the ministers of Jefus Christ. I befeech you then, my brethren, let us have your pity and your prayers, your countenance and your affistance in the difcharge of our great trust. Be ye belpers together by prayer for us.

Parents alfo have a folemn charge in the fouls of their children, and mafters and miftreffes in the fouls of their fervants. Be entreated then to inftruct them with care—to watch over them—to pray for them and with them—and to fet an example of piety and good morals before them.

I only add once more.

5. The important truths you have heard, loudly call upon finners to awake out of their fecurity --to fhake off their floth---to feek the Lord while he may be found, and to call upon him while he is near. Think, O think of the numerous and probable ways by which men may lofe their precious fouls, and by which they are daily lofing them, and that for ever!—And is there no danger of your lofing your fouls, in fome one or other of thefe ways? Paufe a moment upon this important queftion! It is too important to be trifled with, and too intereffing to be delayed! Your fouls—your precious fouls are at flake!

Thefe truths alfo call upon profane finners of every clafs and defeription to break off their fins by repentance, and turn unto the living God, through his Son Jefus Chrift. They addrefs you, O finners! in the following authoritative, yet tender language of infpiration. Awake, thou that fleepeft, and arife from the dead, and Chrift fhall give thee light.— How long, ye fimple ones, will ye love fimplicity? and the forners delight in their forning? and fools hate knowledge. Turn ye at my reproof; behold I will pour out my fpirit unto you—I will make known my words unto you. As I live, faith the Lord God, I have no pleafure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: Turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O houfe of Ifrael!

Do not wonder that the ministers of Jefus addrefs you with folemnity and tendernefs—that they mingle tears with their entreaties, when befeeching finners to have mercy upon their precious fouls. Indifference in fuch a cafe would be the height of abfurdity in us, and the greatest cruelty to you. Now then, we are ambaffadors for Chrift, as though God did befeech you by us, we pray you in Chrift's flead, be ye reconciled to God. And may this be the effect of the prefent addrefs, through the riches of free grace in Chrift our Lord. Amen and Amen.

A SAVIOUR was early revealed. Immediately after the fall the promife was given to our first parents, in a short, but very comprehensive sentence against the server. I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy feed and her seed: it shall bruise thy head, and thom shalt bruise his heel. This was afterwards gradually unfolded through all the preparatory discoveries of succeeding ages; and its important meaning illustrated by many additional declarations, which all pointed to the bleffed Redeemer.

* This Sermon was preached, July 4, 1790, in the new, or middle Dutch Church, which had been ruined during the war, and having been repaired, was that day dedicated anew to the fervice of God. 374

LIVINGSTON.

A character fo fingular and eminent, ought to be fully afcertained by every mark of diffinction. His church must know at his coming, for what end he appeared, and be able to difcriminate him from all others. To answer this purpose, the wifdom of God is confpicuous, in feparating Ifrael as a particular nation, to preferve the truths of revelation, and be the peculiar people from whom the Saviour, as to the flefh, was to fpring, who is God over all, bleffed for ever more.

But to fet apart a nation, in fuch a manner as to prevent a mixture with the reft of mankind, and answer the great defigns respecting the Meffiah, it was neceffary a government fnould be conftituted of a very fingular kind : a government, which would bind the confcience in religion, as well as the conduct in civil affairs: A government, in which the church and state would be perfectly incorporated, and the members of both focieties become united under the fame code of laws. This could only be done by a theocracy. No human conflitution could poffibly effect it .--The facred rights of confcience can never be delegated by any people to their rulers; nor can the magistrate affume the prerogative of enforcing uniformity in doctrines or worship, without injuftice and tyranny.

Fifty days after the departure of the children of Ifrael from Egypt, they arrived at Mount Sinai. There the covenant was formally ratified, between God and them; and their government completely organized. On that occafion, an august display of the divine prefence was made, superior to any that was ever before exhibited on earth, or will probably be again, until the Lord shall defeend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the arch-angel, and with the trump of God. There were thunderings and lightenings and a thick cloud upon the mount, and the voice of the trumpet exceeding loud, and Mount Sinai was altogether on a sinoke; because the Lord descended upon it in fire, and the swole mount quaked greatly.

From the midst of this tremendous scene, the fum of the moral law was aloud proclaimed to Ifrael. The remaining parts of the legiflation, at the express request of the people, were communicated to Mofes first, and, by him, brought down to them. The words of the text, which follow fhortly after the ten commandments, are a promife annexed to the law, which refpected the altar. An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shalt facrifice thereon thy burnt offerings, thy sheep and thine oxen: In all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee and blefs thee. A gracious promife! calculated to direct the Ifraelites to an acceptable fervice, and encourage them to perfevere in their faith and worship: but a promise which refers to the church under the New-Teftament difpenfation, as much as to that under the old .--

There is but one Saviour, and one covenant of grace, whereby finners can obtain eternal life.— There is alfo but one church, founded on that covenant, however various it may have been in its outward forms. Whatever was, therefore, an effential promife of that covenant to Ifrael, is equally fo to us; and, in this extent, I fhall now confider the text.

There is, perhaps, no paffage in the facred oracles more applicable to our prefent fituation, or better fuited to excite in your minds proper exercifes upon this folemn occasion. In all places where I record my name, I will come unto thee and blefs thee. Words, replete with inftruction and comfort! Words, which clearly determine what conflitutes a true church, and what bleffings we may hope to obtain in the fanctuary! Confident as I am of your usual attention, I need not fear trefpaffing upon your patience, while I difcufs a fubject, in which you are deeply interested, and for meditating upon which, with eager expectations, you are now expressly come. The Lord bear witnefs to his own word, and make it the first fruits of a plentiful harveft, in this house! To un--derstand the text, it will be necessary to know,

I. What is meant by recording the name of the Lord in any place. And then,

II. The import of the promife, I will come unto thee and blefs thee. Both these, in a humble dependence upon divine aid, I purpofe to explain, and apply.

First—I must shew you what is meant by the Lord's recording his name in any place. GoD has not left himself without a witness. The invisible ibings of him, from the creation of the world, are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead. The brightest evidence of his existence and attributes, are engraven on every object around us. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth forth bis handywork. But something particular is defigned in the text. The name of the Lord is mentioned with fingular emphasis; and some places are diffinguished from others, by their relation to that name. Let us investigate both these.

I. With respect to the former; by the NAME OF THE LORD is often understood, God himself, or the display of his infinite perfections in those works, whereby he makes his being and nature known.— Thus Pfalm xx. I. The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble, the name of the God of Jacob defend thee. So Pfalms xxix. 2. xxxiv. 3.—I Tim. vi. I. And thus also in the third precept of the decalogue:— Thou fhelt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. But the NAME of the Lord, when used in a particular reference to the covenant of grace, always respects God confidered as a REDERMER; and expresses his divine perfections, as they are glorioully displayed in the falvation of finners. This is afcertained from that memorable paffage in the 34th chapter of Exodus, where the Lord is faid to have proclaimed his name to Mofes. And the Lord defcended in the cloud, and flood with him there and proclaimed the NAME OF THE LORD; and the Lord paffed by before him and proclaimed, the LORD, the LORD God merciful and gracious, long-fuffering and abundant in goodnefs and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, and transferfions, and fins, and will by no means clear the guilty.

This was the bleffed name implied in the firft promife of a Saviour in paradife, and was the only foundation on which the worthip of finners could be built. In the earlieft ages of the world it was thus underftood, Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. As foon as their numbers were fufficiently increased, they began, as a church, in a public manner, to worthip the Lord, As A gob of SALVATION, through the promifed Meffiah.

The knowledge and profession of this facred name continued in the world, until infidelity and wickedness had gradually effaced the truths of revelation, and threatened, at last, wholly to extirpate the worship of God. Noah, who was a preacher, and heir of the righteoufness which is by faith, preferved the treasure. He conveyed it to his posserity, who furvived the flood; and revealed religion was univerfally acknowledged, until ignorance and enmity a fecond time made a formidable opposition; and mankind began again to degenerate into idolatry and profaneness.

The calling of Abraham, and entailing the promile upon his family, fecured the doctrines of grace, and perpetuated the true worthip of God. To that patriarch the Lord confirmed his name.-Fear not Abram, I am. thy shield and exceeding great reward—I am GOD ALMIGHTY—a God unto thee, and to thy feed after thee. Upon the feparation of A-. braham to a special interest in the promise, two: great privileges were granted to him. The first was, that, according to the flefh, he fhould be the father of the Meffiah, who was the life of the covenant, the origin and caufe of all the bleffings contained therein. The fecond was, that the faith of Abraham, whereby he became perfonally interefted in the covenant, should be a pattern of the. faith of the church in all generations; fo that none fhould ever be real members, or partake of its bleffings, but by the fame faith which Abraham exercifed. It is upon account of this, that he is the father of all them that believe, and the beir of the world. It is in this refpect that, in the covenant made with him, the basis of the church, for all future ages, was fixed. Wherever that covenant is effablished, and with whom soever it is confirmed, there is a church, and to them all its effential privileges appertain.

It was the diffinguished happiness of Israel to enjoy these privileges. Notwithstanding the frequent inflances of depravity in that nation, there were always some, and often many among them, who poffeffed the faith of their father Abraham, and inherited the bleffings of the covenant. Previous to the departure of the people from Egypt, the NAME OF THE LORD was expressly made known and explained, as the foundation of the whole Mofaic economy. And Mofes faid unto God, behold, when I come unto the children of Ifrael, and shall say unto them, the God of your fathers hath fent me unto you, and they shall fay unto me, what is his name? What Shall I fay unto them? And God faid unto Mofes, I AM THAT I AM: And be faid, thus shalt thou fay unto the children of Ifrael; I AM hath feut me unto you. And God faid, moreover, unto Mofes, Thus (balt thou fay unto the children of Israel, the Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob bath fent me unto you: this is MY NAME for ever, and this is my memorial unto all generations. Of this Ifrael was again admonished, Exodus xxiii. 20, 21 -with which compare 2 Cor. iv. 6. It was alfo enjoined upon the high-priests continually to put that name, by their very forms of bleffing, upon the people-Numb. vi. 27.

There is no neceffity of detaining you with any obfervations upon the particular titles, by which it hath pleafed God to diffinguish himself in the Old or New Testament. The word JEHOVAH is the most expressive, and is absolutely incommunicable. It denotes his effential and independent being, and has an immediate relation to the covenant of grace. It points, with all the others, to the fame important centre, and defignates the Supreme as a reconciled God in the Mediator. This is the fum and fcope of divine revelation. This is his name, and this is his memorial. Believers, under the old difpenfation, confidered it in that light. When they mentioned the name of the Lord, as a plea, or an invocation in prayer, they comprised, what we now intend, by naming the Redeemer, or calling upon God, as the God and Father of our Lord Jefus Chrift. All, therefore, that is implied in the redemption of finners, and which is, perhaps, expreffed in feweft words, by faying with the Pfalmift-Pfalm lxviii. 19. that God is THE GOD OF OUR SALVATION, is meant in the text. This is the name here defigned-a name much forgotten, or corrupted among other nations, but manifested to Israel as the great object of their faith and worship, and committed to them as a deposite of infinite value.

2. Let us now fee in what refpects that name may be faid to be recorded in any place.

The words might be rendered, in all places where I shall fix the memory of my name: or, in all places where I shall make my name to be invoked. The Chaldaic paraphrafe has it, in every place where I shall make my majesty to dwell. The phrafe, agreeably to either of these translations, evidently refers to the public worship of God, and has respect both to the place when, and the manner in which it was to be celebrated. The blessing was not indifcriminately located in every fpot where any of the tribes might determine to fix a fanctuary; nor did God promife to be propitious to every kind of worfhip they might choofe to celebrate, but only to fuch place, as he fhould defignate, and fuch worthip as fhould be performed according to his appointment.

It is well known, that the tabernacle was the  $p^{l}ace$  of public worfhip, which God, exclusively of all others, determined for the Ifraelites, while they were in the wildernefs. After they had poffeffion of the promifed land, the ark of the covenant was lodged at Shiloh, and there, for a long while, the people celebrated divine fervice. When the temple was finished, Jerufalem was fixed upon as the permanent feat. To that place the tribes were obliged to go up, and thrice every year all the males were there to appear before the Lord. After the captivity in Babylon, the priviliges of the fanctuary were again reftored. A fecond temple was built by Zerubbabel, and Ifrael continued to worfhip at Jerufalem until the Meffiah came.

If you now enquire, bow the name of the Lord was RECORDED in all these places, and by what means it might be faid that he made himself to be there remembered as the God of Salvation? We refer you, for a general answer, to the genius and fcope of the Mosaic institution. The covenant of Sinai, that whole dispensation, was not only subordinate to the covenant of grace, but it had an immediate refpect to the Meffiah, and was fubfervient to his coming. The types and ceremonies the religious rites, and all the various parts of their worfhip, were inftituted of God himfelf, for the express purpose of confirming the faith of his church, and they all pointed to the bleffed Jefus, as the end of the law. By these, therefore, the name of the Lord was recorded in Ifrael, and the worfhip, performed in the fanctuary, ferved to perpetuate the memory of Jehovah as the God of Salvation.

range. If a man ont fair, where

But this great end was more especially attained by the SACRIFICES and burnt-offerings, which formed an effential part of the daily worfhip in Ifrael. Abstractly confidered, and without any reference to the divine appointment, there is, indeed, nothing inftructive, or even rational, in fpilling the blood of a beaft, or offering either: the vegetable or animal creation as a part of religious fervice .---It is eafy for infidels, upon the fubject, to fhew their emnity against revealed religion by arguing: " The extreme folly of fuppofing God thould ever " be pleafed with the mere wafte of his own pro-" ductions; or, in the cafe of animal facrifice, in " particular, thould confider as an act of accepta-" able religion, the destruction of a life, of which " he had fo exquifitely provided for the continu-" ance. That, while the very idea of a divine Be-• ing implies in it fuch a fuperior excellence of na-" ture, as to be wholly out of the reach of our good " offices, the general notion of facrificing is alto-"gether as extraordinary as it appears to have " been universal in the world." But however ftrange and improper facrifices may appear to fuperficial observers; yet, when they are confidered as commanded of God, and calculated to reprefent and confirm the great benefits he deligned to confer upon finners, through the Saviour, they muft be acknowledged to be a rational and divine fervice. They cannot, it is true, be ingrafted by the religion of nature into the worfhip of finless crea-Had man not fallen, a victim had never tures. bled: "The idea of an expiation, where there is no guilt, is incompatible. But the religion of finners is founded upon the relation they fuftain to God as their Redeemer. They cannot approach him without a mediator and the intervention of an atonement. A facrifice, therefore, either in the type or the archetype, is abfolutely effential in their worfhip. It was a confcioufnefs of guilt which prompted the defire of fatisfying divine justice by fome offering, or rather a tradition refpecting the Saviour, which was the fource of facrifices among the heathen nations, and the practice cannot be accounted for upon any other principle. But in Ifrael, where the truths of revelation were preferved, and facrifices had the fanction of a new and immediate appointment, they constituted a noble and inftructive part of divine worfhip. Believers were then looking for the appearance of the promifed feed, who was not yet come. What could be better calculated to affift their faith-to effablish their hope, and inftruct them in the method of falvation, than to be commanded of God to substitute a bloody offering in their own flead, and thus tranffer the legal guilt and punishment upon a facrifice? In this act of worfhip, the bleeding lamb and fmoking altar directed them to the promifed furety, the precious Lamb of God, who, by his fufferings and death, was fully to atone for his people, and, by one perfect facrifice, became the author of falvation unto all that obey him. Thus, by the manner in which the folemn worship was celebrated in those places, the Lord recorded his name in Ifrael, as a God of Salvation. In this way the faints of the Old Teftament-difpensation had their graces drawn into exercife. They lived by faith; and the apostle, in his epiftle to the Hebrews, affures us, that they alfo died in faith, not baving received the promifes, but bav-'ing feen them afar off, they were perfuaded of them, and embraced them.

When the Meffiah came, a new dispensation commenced. The object for fetting apart a diftinct nation, under a theocracy, was fully obtained. The neceffity of a fingular government no longer existed. The separating wall was confequently broken down, and the peculiarities of the Mosaic worthip and polity were totally abrogated. Now there is no diffinction of nations, nor is there any place particularly affigned by divine appointment for public worthip. The hour cometh, faid our Lord to the woman of Samaria, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at ferusalem, worship the Father; the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and truth, for the Father seketh such to worship him. Wherever the people of God unite in spiritual worship, the blessing is secured. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I, in the midst of them. A gracious word! which reaches to every place where his children may be engaged in the duties of religion; and extends the text, in its fulless the dispensation, as much as formerly, to the tabernacle or temple, to Shiloh or Jerusalem.

But what conflitutes a church within the meaning of the text? The mere affumption of the title without poffeffing the effentials requifite to give existence to a true church, will furely not fuffice. It is possible to have the form of godliness, and yet to deny the power thereof. It is poffible to retain the name, and yet to depart even from the form, fo far, that little or nothing of the doctrine or worship peculiar to Christianity is found .--This renders it neceffary to enquire, what it is records the name of the Lord in any place of worship under the New Teftament, and by what unerring characteristic fuch a place may be diffinguished from all others? Let it fuffice upon this important and extensive enquiry, in order to reduce it to the limits of the prefent hour, to reply, first, in a negative view; that the name of the Lord, un-, der the present economy is not recorded-by types. and fhadows, the facrifices and legal ordinances which formerly conftituted a proper and acceptable fervice. The law was given by Mofes, but grace. and truth came by Jesus Christ. A free, a filial, and a fpiritual worfhip is most fuitable to the privilege and dignity of the New Testament-church. Again, it is not any exclusive national establishment, or the partial favor of civil rulers, that can constitute a church. Denominations, in principle and worfhip very contrary to each other, have been adopted in different nations, without obtaining thereby the leaft weight in the fcale of truth or becoming the church of Chrift becaufe they were the church of the magistrate. An union between the church and state, however artfully contrived to fuit the genius of civil government, or ingenioufly defended to apologize for ufurped privileges, is, under the prefent difpenfation, abfurd and impossible-it is of human invention, and has often proftituted the most facred things, by making them fubfervient to mere political views, to avarice, or the lust of domination. Again, it is not the magnificence of a building, the fhew of wealth, or any oftentatious ceremonies, which can record the name of the Lord among a people. The house is not the church, and parade is not worship. These may all originate from improper principles, and be monuments of pride and fuperftition, instead of an acceptable service in spirit and in truth. Laftly, it is not a worfhip dictated folely by the religion of nature, or the legal fpirit of the covenant of works, without an immediate and particular regard to the bleffed Mediator, that can poffibly commemorate the God of Salvation. Wherever the diftinguifhing truths of the golpel are omitted, or flightly paffed over, and focial duties, however important and neceffary, are only inculcated to the neglect of what we owe to God, and to the Saviour; there the moft effential and conflituent parts of a New Teftament-church are wanting; and fuch places of worfhip are not within the promife of the text. The name of the Lord is not recorded there.

But, in a politive view, if you enquire in what it confifts, or where it may be faid the facred name, under the New Testament, is recorded ? We reply-it is there where the doctrines of grace, and what effentially relates to the falvation of finners, through the imputed righteoufnefs of the precious Saviour, are firmly believed and openly profeffed. It is there where thefe truths are plainly and boldly preached by the ministers of the gospel, and divine worship is conducted upon evangelical principles. A crucified Jefus, and eternal life in him, conftitute the glad tidings of great joy. To be renewed by the Holy Spirit, to repent of fin, and believe in the Son of God, are the great reguifitions and promifes of the gofpel : and felfdenial, humility and holinefs in all its branches, are the fruits of that faith which works by love; and purifies the heart. Where thefe truths are faithfully taught, and where thefe things are experienced and practifed, there is a church. There the name of the Lord, as a God of Salvation, is recorded. A church thus conftituted, although attended by the poor, although affembled in a building deftitute of colonnades, engravings and ornaments, is more glorious, more acceptable in the fight of God, than the most stately temple, and illustrious audience, where these doctrines are not honored. To this permit me to add, (and the bare mention of them must fuffice) the due administration of the facraments; and, an impartial ufe of the keys of discipline in excluding unworthy members. Wherever all these are found, whether in a thronged city, or a wafte foreft, amongft the higheft, or the loweft ranks in fociety, there God will meet with his humble fupplicants, and make them joyful in his house of prayer. To fuch worfhippers the promife in the text is made, and to all fuch places he will come and blefs his people.

Before we proceed to confider the precious promife, it deferves our notice, upon this first part of the fubject, that while the things we have been speaking of are to be viewed as matters of duty, with respect to us, they are primarily to be confidered as originating wholly from God, and must be received as his gift. I record my name, faith the Lord—And it is fo—it is of his fovereign goodwill that a Saviour is provided for fallen men and not for fallen angels. It is of the Lord that there is a church preferved on earth, notwithftanding all the opposition of the gates of hell; and it must be afcribed to his grace, that in any place, and among any people, his truths are faithfully preached, and fpiritual worship is celebrated. I might add, it is of him that a people find a pure defire to build a house for his fervice; and it is he, in his good providence, who puts it in the power of their hands to finish the work. Except the Lord build the bousse, they labor in vain that build it. But let us attend to the promise, and confider, II. The import of these words, I will come unto thee, and bless thee.

The bleffing of the Lord is always upon his people in every place. He hears their prayers in fecret, and in their families. He has never faid to the feed of Jacob, feek ye me in vain. But to public worfhip peculiar mercies are annexed. He loves the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob. For the Lord bath chofen Zion—he bath defired it for bis babitation. This is my reft for ever—here will I dwell, for I have defired it. I will abundantly blefs her provision: I will fatisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priefts with falvation, and her faints shall shout aloud for joy. The ordinances of his houfe are positive inftitutions for promoting his glory in the world. Thefe he has appointed as the ordinary means for converting finners, and edifying his faints; and thefe, in an efpecial manner, he will own and blefs.

1. I WILL COME-this is the promife: I will come where I record my name. God is never abfent-be compasseth our path and our lying down, and is acquainted with all our ways. He is not far from every one of us, for in bim we live, and move, and have our being. He is no local deity, like those of the idolatrous heathen. He is confined to no fpot-the heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footstool. All nature is his temple-all fpace his abodeevery living thing is the workmanship of his hand, and his providential care and tender mercies extend over all his creatures. But he is near to his people in a fense more exalted, than the ordinary cares of Providence imply. He is their reconciled God and Father; they are his chofen whom he loves-his treafure-his jewels; a people formed for himfelf, to thew forth his glory. He is faid, therefore, in the ftyle of fcripture, to come to his church, becaufe he there gives the most diffinguishing proofs of his gracious prefence, and exhibits the most unequivocal evidences of his love and divine approbation. Remarkable to this purpofe are the promifes with refpect both to the tabernacle and the temple. In relation to the former, fee Exodus xxix. 43, 44, 45. And there I will meet with the children of Ifrael, and the tabernacle shall be fanctified by my glory. I will fanctify the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar: I will fantify alfo both Aaron and his fons, to minister to me in the priest's office. And I will dwell among st the children of Israel, and will be their God. In regard to the latter, 2 Chron. vii. 12--15, 16. And the Lord appeared to Solomon by night, and faid unto him, I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself for an house of sacrifice. Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine cars attent unto the prayer that is made in this place. For now have I chosen and fantified this house, that my name may be there for ever, and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

A cloud by day, and a pillar of fire by night were tokens of the divine protection to the whole camp of Ifrael. These directed the people in the wildernefs where to bend their courfe, and when to pitch their tents. But the ark of the covenant, with the mercy-feat between the cherubims, were the AUGUST SYMBOLS of the more immediate prefence of God in the fanctuary. Under the New Teftament, agreeably to the prefent spiritual economy, the divine prefence is not accompanied with fuch visible emblems; but it is not the lefs real, efficacious, and comfortable. In both difpenfations the name of the city remains JEHOVAH SHAMMAH, the Lord is there. The bleffed Redeemer, fince his refurrection and triumphant afcenfion, is no more on earth, with respect to his human nature, but with respect to his Godhead, majefly, grace and spirit, he is at no time absent from us. At his departure he faid—lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world—And it is even fo. The amen—the faithful and true witnefs ftill holds the flars of his church in his right hand, and walks in the midfl of the golden candleflicks. The fprings of Zion are all in him; and glorious things for ever continue to be fpoken of the city of God—the Higheft himfelf fhall eftablifh her, and God is known in her palaces for a refuge. All this is implied in the text before us, and expreffed in one general term —I WILL BLESS THEE. Let us examine this fecond part of the promife.

2. The bleffing here intended cannot refer to fenfual enjoyments, nor mean the riches, pleafures and comforts of this life. Our Emmanuel holds out no Mahometan paradife to his followers, nor is his kingdom of this world. The church of God is formed on nobler principles, and for higher purposes-Bleffings of a superior nature are in store for her. The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. Great peace have all they who love his law; but they may, neverthelefs, fuffer great tribulation, and be exposed to many afflictions here.-Under the theocracy, civil and domestic mercies were promifed, but thefe were only the appendages of the covenant of grace fuited to that difpensation, and constituted no part of its effential benefits. The promife in the text refers principally to SANCTU-ARY BLESSINGS. Those great and good things be-VOL. III. C 3 fore-mentioned, for the obtaining of which the ordinances of the fanctuary were especially inftituted.

That the Lord conferred these bleffings upon his church, under the Old Testament, is evident from his word. Notwithstanding the provocations of Ifrael, and the fevere judgments which their fins very frequently brought upon them; yet he remembered his covenant, and his prefence was not wholly removed. The oracles of truth were preferved inviolate, and spiritual Israel, the elect people of God in each fucceeding generation, were converted, comforted, and finally faved. When the old difpenfation had done its work, it refigned over to the new, the memory of the facred name, and a glorious ERA commenced. Zion rejoiced in her fudden prosperity, and became invested with extensive bleffings. What these bleffings are, as they refer to us, is of more importance now to afcertain.

The apoftle fums up the whole, in faying to the Ephefians—He bath bleffed us with all fpiritual bleffings, in beavenly places, in Chrift Jefus. And with respect to fanctuary privileges, he afferts the fuperior excellency of the New Testament above the Old, to the Corinthians—If the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteoussies exceed in glory. The veil is done away in Chrift, and we all, with open face, beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord; are changed into the fame image from glory to glory, even as by the fpirit of the Lord. The borders of Zion are now enlarged the church is no longer as a child under age, but enjoys a glorious liberty—accefs is opened into the bolieft by the blood of Jefus—by a new and living way which he hath confecrated for us. Believers obtain the neareft approach to heaven, which, on this fide of the world of fpirits, will, or can be granted.— The New Teftament is the laft and higheft economy of grace, and its holy inftitutions are amply fitted to prepare the faints for the immediate vifion and fruition of God in glory.

But it is neceffary to defcend to particulars, and enquire, with refpect to gofpel-churches, "when "the Lord may be faid to blefs his people where "his name is recorded," agreeably to the import of the text? Without enumerating all the mercies comprifed in the promife, let it fuffice to anfwer:

1. The Lord bleffes his churches, when he gives them a pure and faithful MINISTRY—when he raifes up men, who have experienced the power of the truth upon their own hearts; who believe what they preach, and fhudder at making the pulpit the theatre of their own praife, or private intereft.— He fends a bleffing when he fends laborers into his harveft, who, unbiaffed by worldly fears and hopes, continue refolute in every part of duty, inflexibly honeft, and exemplary in their converfation. Such men were promifed: I will give you paftors according to my beart, which fball feed you with knowledge and understanding. Thine eyes shall see thy teachers. Such men are bleffings to the churches. By taking heed to themfelves, and all the flock, they hold forth the word of life, with the prospect of fucces, and will have cause to rejoice in the day of Christ; that they have not ran in vain, neither labored in vain. It is by the ministry of men, it pleases God to call finners to his communion, and accomplish his defigns of love. He has committed the treafure of the gofpel into earthen veffels, that the excellency of the power may appear to be from him. The gifts, therefore, for the ministry, which the exalted Saviour bestowed from his throne, are represented by the apofile, as a principle bleffing conferred upon the church. When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts to men. He gave fome apofiles, and fome prophets, and fome evangelist, and some pasiors and teachers, for the perfecting of the faints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Chrift.

2. The Lord bleffes his church when, in his good providence, he preferves his people together in mutual PEACE, and prevents confusion, animotities and fchifms. Behold, how good and how pleafant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity; it is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the fkirts of his garments. As the dew of Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the bleffing, even life for ever more.

3. But especially he bleffes his people in the place where he records his name, when he beftows that bleffing of all bleffings, the HOLY SPIRIT .--When be pours water upon him that is thirfly, and floods upon the dry ground. Then the light of Zion breaks forth as the morning, and her health springs forth speedily. The wilderness is glad; the desert rejoices, and. bloffoms as the rofe. This brings the truth with power to the confciences of finners-alarms the carelefs and profane, and directs them, agreeably to the written word, to fly for refuge to the hope fet before them. 11 This establishes his own people in their most holy faith-calls forth their graces into exercife, and enables them to adorn the doctrines. they profes, by a holy life and conversation. He comes with a bleffing, when be breathes upon the flain, that they may live; when he makes his houfe a Bethel, administers confolation to his mourners, and grants them fellowship with the Father, and with bis Son Fefus Chrift. Thefe, and what is infeparably connected with thefe, conffitute the principal bleffings conferred in the fanctuary. Thus his children, who are born in Zion, are fed by the ordinances, as in green pastures. Thus they are enabled to go from frength to flrength, until they fhall appear without fpot or wrinkle, prepared to. join the general affembly and church of the firstborn, which are written in heaven. But I must not omit.

4. The protection AND DEFENCE of the Most High, whereby he preferves his churches in the enjoyment of their privileges, and continues his bleffing from the fathers to the children. The Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Zion, and upon her affemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a defence.-This shall be written for the generation to come, and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord. The children of thy fervants shall continue, and their seed shall be established before thee. While his name continues to be faithfully recorded, his churches may expect the continuation of the bleffing. But if they become luke-warm, if they depart from the faith, or degenerate into immoral practices, they have reafon to fear a sufpension, if not a total loss of the promiled mercies: And wo to a people when God departs from them! The meffage brought by Azariah the fon of Oded, is replete with instruction, and very alarming. Hear ye me Afa, and all Judah and Benjamin ; the Lord is with you while ye be with him; and if ye feek him, he will be found of you; but if you forfake him, he will forfake you. Agreeably to this rule, God addreffed the peeople, Jer. vii. 12. Go ye now unto my place which was in Shilob, where I fet my name at first, and see what I did to it. for the wickedness of my people Israel. Those, therefore, who enjoy the gospel, must not be bigb minded but fear. For if God spared not the natural branches, the feed of Abraham according to the flefh, but broke them off because of unbelief, let Gentile finners take heed, left he alfo fpare not them .--

What was addreffed to the church of Ephefus, Rev. ii. 5-7. may be confidered as fpokento all in a fimilar fituation: Remember, therefore, from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or elfe I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. He THAT HATH AN EAR, LET HIM HEAR WHAT THE SPIRIT SAITH UNTO THE CHURCHES.

After explaining the fubject, it only remains, before I proceed to the application, that I detain you a few moments, in fhewing the actual accomplifhment of the promife in the text. That it was verified under the Old Teftament, we have fufficiently feen; and the outlines of its fulfilment under the new, are eafily drawn.

At the beginning of the difpenfation, on the day of Pentecoft, the name of the Lord was glorioufly recorded. He came agreeably to his promife, and difpenfed his bleffing. Three thoufand were converted under one fermon; and thefe were only the first fruits of a great and plentiful harveft. Throughout the whole primitive gofpelministry, the most evident tokens of the divine prefence, and a concurring bleffing, were uniformly exhibited. God was with his fervants, and bore them witnefs with divers figns and wonders, and there were added to the church daily, fuch as should be faved.

In every fucceeding age the great Jehovah has remembered his inheritance. The bleffing has been more copious at one time than another, but the promife has never totally failed. Under the perfecutions of Imperial Rome, the Lord did not withdraw from his afflicted Zion. He gave his people ftrength equal to their day. He made the blood of the martyrs to prove a feed to the church; and caufed the gofpel finally to triumph, againft all the powerful efforts of Pagan fuperfition and cruelty.

During the long and dark period of anti-chriftian tyranny, when a train of fiery trials attended the faithful followers of the Redeemer, the prefence of the Lord was abundantly experienced, and the promife fweetly accomplifhed. His little flock, hemmed in on every fide by devouring wolves, obtained, in their pious affemblies, fuch confirmations of their faith, and fuch exalted confolations and encouragements, as rendered the church of Chrift, even while groaning under the fierceft hatred of the church of Rome, a witnefs for the truth expreffed in the text.

Since the happy reformation, in different nations where his name has been recorded, the Lord has often manifefted his glory and majefty, by aftonifhing difplays of his prefence and power in the fanctuary. And where the rich out-pourings of his fpirit have been fufpended, he has ftill continued, by his more ordinary bleffings, to be as the dew unto Ifrael. At all times he has fulfilled his gracious promife, and made himfelf known in Zion, as a God of Salvation. In this teftimony, his people on every coaft, and in every age, unite. This alfo we ourfelves can witnefs this day. With us his name is recorded within thefe walls—he has formerly afforded us his prefence. Here, in this very place, as well as in our other fanctuaries, he has often come and difpenfed his bleffing.

I have fhewn you what we are to underftand by the name of the Lord, and what is implied in his recording that name in any place. I have alfo pointed out the peculiar bleffings promifed to the fanctuary, and the faithfulnefs of God in accomplifhing his word. Suffer me now to apply the fubject. And,

First, We learn, " that the Son of God, from " the beginning to the end of the world, gathers, " defends, and preferves to himfelf, by his fpirit and "word, out of the whole human race, A CHURCH, " chosen to everlasting life, and agreeing in true This church is but one, confidered in " faith."* its relation to the exalted Redeemer, the Head and King of Zion. It confifts of many members. Millions are already in heaven, and conffitute that part which may be called the church-triumphant. Millions are now on earth, who compose the churchmilitant. And millions more will yet be gathered, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. Interefting observations might be deduced from this fubject, respecting the love of God towards his Vol. III. D3 South people—the fafety of Zion—the communion of faints, and the difcipline and government of the church. It might be proper, alfo, to attend to the marks of a true church—the diftinguifhing characteriftic of a member, and the peculiar obligation upon all who enjoy the privileges of the fanctuary to preferve them pure, and to be found faithful.— But it is impoffible at prefent to enter upon thefe. I can only remind you, that you have feen it is not a mere form of words, or any ceremonies in the vifible church that can dedicate a temple to God, or render any building a confecrated fanctuary. Nothing lefs than recording the name of the Lord, by found, evangelical doctrine, and worfhipping in fpirit and in truth, can infure the bleffing.

* Heidelb. Catech. fect. xxia

Secondly, We learn, there is forgivenefs with our God, that he may be feared; and thus a foundation laid for TRUE AND SPIRITUAL WORSHIP. The great object of religious adoration is clearly revealed, and a glorious way opened for our return to him. All the angels in heaven worfhip God, and they ceafe not day nor night in afcribing the homage, praife and thankfgiving, which are due to his holy name. Should we not, then, effecm it an unfpeakable bleffing and honor to be permitted to join in fuch exalted fervice? Ought we not to rejoice in liberty of accefs to the Father of our Spirits, who, in fovereign mercy, has made himfelf known as the God of Salvation? It is in this faith, and with views and exercifes founded upon thefe principles, that we adored the great Jehovah in those prayers, with which divine fervice was just now opened in this house; and with this worship, in spirit and in truth, HIS NAME IS NOW RECORDED in this place.

Thirdly, We fee, that the doctrines of the golpel, like their divine Author, are the fame yesterday, to day, and for ever. Larger measures of knowledge, and of the Spirit, may have been granted under one difpensation than another, but the nature and properties of faving-faith are ever the fame. The great Redeemer has always been precious to his people; and, in their Emmanuel, all the faints have ever found both righteousness and ftrength. Know then, my brethren, the God of your Salvation; and remember, that the PERFECT RIGHTEOUSNESS OF CHRIST is the fole meritorious caufe of the justification of a finner, and the bafis on which every bleffing in the SANCTUARY, as well as all your hopes for eternal life, are founded .--This righteoufnefs the Son of God has wrought out, by his active and paffive obedience, for all his people: This they receive by faith; and this the Father imputes to them, as he imputed to Chrift their fins. He who knew no fin, fays the apostle, 2 Cor. v. 21. was made fin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. But how was Chrift made fin for us? Not furely by partaking in our depravity, nor having any fin inherent in himfelf; but, by having our fins imputed to him, that he, as a fin-offering and facrifice, might atone for them. In like manner we are made righteous in him, not by any inherent righteoufnefs in ourfelves, but by having his righteoufnefs imputed to us. The name by which he was known, under the Old Teftament-dispensation as well as the New, is the Lord OUR righteousness. Jer. xxiii. 6. But in what way can the righteousness of Christ become ours? It must be fo inherently or imputatively-There is no other alternative. But, is it inherently ours? Certainly no, for it is expressly opposed to all inherent righteoufnefs in us, Phil. iii. 6. Nor can that be inherent in us, which was performed by Chrift. It is, therefore, ours by imputation. Wherefore God is faid to IMPUTE righteoufnefs without works. This is that righteousness of God which is manifested without the law, being witnessed by the law and the prophets. This is the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe. By faith we are justified, in as much as we receive the offered falvation by the hand of faith. Through faith we are faved, as there is no other way of appropriating to ourfelves the rightcoufnefs of the furety, than by believing in him. But it is not for faith, nor any other work performed by us, or even graces wrought within us, that we obtain pardon for fin, and a right to eternal life. In the Redeemer alone God is wellpleafed, and for his fake alone is become the God and Father of all who are united to his Son. Faith is his gift, and every grace is beftowed by him.---

This infures his glory in our justification, and is the only productive principle of fanctification in heart and life-of that inherent holinefs which conffitutes moral rectitude, and without which no man can fee God. Thefe are the doctrines we profess and believe. " We believe the Holy Ghoft. "kindleth in our hearts an upright faith, which " embraces Jefus Chrift with all his merits, ap-, " propriates him, and feeks nothing more befides "him. Therefore, we justly fay with Paul, that " we are justified by faith alone; or, by faith without " works. However, we do not mean that faith it-" felf justifies us, for it is only an instrument with "which we embrace Chrift our righteoufnefs .--"We believe that our falvation confifts in the re-" miffion of our fins for Jefus Chrift's fake, and that " therein our righteoufness before God is implied. "As David and Paul teach us, declaring this to " be the happiness of man, that God imputes righ-" teoufnefs to him without works; and, therefore, " we always hold fast this foundation, ascribing all " the glory to God, humbling ourfelves before " him, and acknowledging ourfelves to be fuch as " we really are; without prefuming to truft in any " thing in ourfelves, or in any merit of ours, rely-" ing and refting upon the obedience of Chrift " crucified alone, which becomes ours when we " believe in him. This is fufficient to cover all " our iniquities, and to give us confidence in ap-" proaching to God; freeing the confcience of " fear, terror, and dread. We believe, it is fo far

" from being true, that this juftifying faith makes " men remifs in a holy and pious life, that on the " contrary, without it they would never do any " thing out of love to God, but only out of felf-" love, or fear of damnation. It is impossible that " this holy faith can be unfruitful in man-it is a " faith that worketh by love, and excites man to the " practice of those works, which God has commanded " in his word."* It is by preaching thefe evangelical truths the name of the Lord, as a God of Salvation, is this day recorded in this houfe. And now witnefs thefe walls! which have often reverberated the joyful found of peace on earth, and good-will to men. Witnefs ye columns! and thou lofty arch! renewed and decorated with that fimple magnificence which becomes a temple under the New Testament. Witness ye angels! who, while invifible to us, are ministering spirits, fent forth to minister to the heirs of falvation, and who rejoice in the purity of our worship, and the conversion of finners. And O! be thou alfo witnefs exalted King of Zion! who holdest the stars of the church in thy right hand, and whole eyes are as a flame of fire; witnefs thou, if ever falfe doctrines are taught in this houfe-if ever we refuse to reverence thee! Great God of Abraham, our God and Father, to whom this building is again confectated! Let thine eyes be open toward this house night and day, even towards the place, of which thou hast faid, my name shall be there. Make the priefts' lips to keep knowledge, and teach them to feek the law at thy mouth. Purify the fons of Levi, and purge them as gold and filver, that they may always offer unto the Lord an offering in righteoufnefs.

To thefe great purpofes this building was formerly devoted, and for thefe important ends it is now raifed from its ruins. But the mention of RUINS calls back our thoughts to past fcenes, and prefents difagreeable ideas to our minds. When destruction is caufed by the immediate hand of heaven-by earthquakes, ftorms, or fire, we are filent before God, and dare not reply. But when men have been the inftruments, it is difficult, although proper, to look up to the over-ruling power, and forget the interpolition of the means. I dare not speak of the wanton cruelty of those who destroyed this temple, nor repeat the various indignities which have been perpetrated. It would be eafy to mention facts which would chill your blood! A recollection of the groans of dying prifoners, which pierced this ceiling; or the facriligeous fports and rough feats of horfemanship* exhibited within thefe walls, might raife fentiments in your minds that would, perhaps, not harmonize with those religious affections, which I wifh, at prefent, to promote, and always to cherifh.

The Lord has fufficiently vindicated our caufe, and avenged us of those who role up against us.—

* This church was, during the first part of the war, made a prifon, and afterward turned, by the British ttoops, into a ridingfchool.

He girded our Joshua for the field, and led him, with his train of heroes, to victory. Heaven directed our councils, and wrought deliverance.— Our enemies themfelves acknowledged an interposing Providence, and were obliged to fay, the Lord hath done great things for them, while we repeated the shout of praise, THE LORD HATH DONE GREAT THINGS FOR US, WHEREOF WE ARE GLAD.

Through the long avenue of dangers and perplexity, while difcouragements, like dark clouds, were hovering all around, who could penetrate the gloom, and forefee, that God would fo foon bring order out of confusion-fo foon difmiss the horrors of war, and grant an honorable peace-a perfect revolution? Where was it ever feen, excepting -only in Ifrael, that God took a nation out of the midft of another nation, with such a mighty hand, and a stretched out arm? Who could have predicted, that from -fuch indigested materials, with fuch short experience, and within fo few years, an efficient, liberal, and pervading government would have been formed?-A flation and rank is now obtained among the nations of the earth; and, if the full enjoyment of civil and religious liberty is a conftituent part of focial happinefs-if the profpects of the rifing importance, ftrength, and greatness of our new empire, are of any weight in the scale, we may fafely pronounce ourfelves, at this day, to be the happiest nation in the world. A nation where all the rights of man are perfectly fecured. With-but a monarchy-without hereditary nobility, and without an hierarchy. Hail, happy land! A land of liberty !--- of fcience !--- of religion ! Here an undisturbed freedom in worship forms the first principle of an equal government, and is claimed as a birth-right, which none of our rulers dare call in queftion, or control. Here no fect is legally preferred with exclusive prerogatives-the chief magistrate worships as a private citizen, and legislators, by their influential example, not by penallaws, prove nurfing fathers to the church of Chrift. In this happy and elevated fituation, the ruins of our temples, and all we have fuftained, appear a price too fmall to mention. We are more than compenfated. We have forgiven, and we forget past injuries. God has abundantly made up for all our former griefs. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream .--Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with finging. We are a happy people-we feel and know that we are fo. The labors of the hufbandman prosper, and there is plenty in all our borders. Commerce is enlarged, and public credit established. The education of youth is univerfally patronized, and there is no complaining in our freets.-In fafety we fit, every man under his own vine and fig-tree, and there are none to make us afraid .----With fufficient room to accommodate nations, and a government adequate to all the important purposes of fociety, we are not only at ease ourfelves, but extend our arms, and cordially invite an oppreffed world to come under our fhade, and fhare in our happinefs. Happy is that people that is in fuch a cafe! yea, happy is that people whose GOD IS THE LORD!-Whether we shall continue thus happy, will greatly depend upon our wifdom and juffice-our industry and manners, but principally upon our faithfully recording the name of the Lord. According to the measure in which the religion of the bleffed Jefus is honored and prevails, our land will be truly happy, and our liberty fecure. This holy religion establishes the purest morality, and inculcates the reciprocal obligations which members of fociety are under to each other: It engages men of all ranks, by the higheft fanctions, confcientioufly to fulfil the duties of their flation; and it is, without controverfy, the furest pledge of the divine protection. The maintenance of this. in its purity, will most effectually establish our invaluable bleffings, and as this declines, our ruin will haften. See the rule of Providence with refpect to nations, Jer. xviii. 9, 10. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my fight, that it OBEY NOT MY VOICE, then I will repent of the good wherewith I faid, I would benefit them.

While others, at our political anniverfary, in their animated orations, employ all the powers of eloquence, to confirm your love of liberty, and, by enraptured views of civil bleffings, touch with transport all the springs of life; I defire, with plainnefs of speech, but with a zeal becoming a minister of the gofpel, to raife your views to heaven, and perfuade you wifely to improve your precious privileges. Seven years are not yet elapfed fince we returned to this city in peace. And lo! in lefs than feven years, two ruined churches have been, by us, repaired. The Lord hath ftrengthened our hands, and given fuccess to our efforts. Let a humble fense of our dependance upon him, and a recollection of his numerous mercies, call forth lively gratitude upon this occasion. Blefs the Lord, O my foul, and all that is within me, blefs his holy name. Blefs the Lord, O my foul, and forget not all his benefits. It is, my brethren, a circumstance which, upon our part, is altogether fortuitous, but it deferves your notice, that, in the direction of Providence, you have more than one object, upon this memorable Fourth of July, that claims your attention. While you glow with patriotic ardor for your country, and pour out fervent prayers for its rifing honor and happinefs; you are also exulting that the gates of this house are again opened to you. Enter into his gates with thank/giving, and into his courts with praise; be thankful, unto him, and bless his name. With ardent prayers, and folemn vows, I know you now unite with me in this facred exercife; and may your ardent prayers, and folemn vows be ratified in heaven! But fuffer me, in faithfulness, to warn you against . the deceitfulness of your hearts towards God; and to charge you to mingle a holy fear and trembling, this day, with our rejoicings. Remember Shiloh

-remember what has already befallen this houfe, and never forget that you have to do with a holy God, who is jealous for his honor and worfhip.---Holinefs becometh the houfe of God for ever; and all who name the name of Chrift must depart from iniquity. Keep, therefore, thy foot when thou goeft to the houfe of God, and be more ready to bear than to give the facrifice of fools. When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it, for he bath no pleasure in fools. Pay that which thou hast vowed.

With what humble awe and pious reverence fhould minifters of the gofpel engage in the fervice of the fanctuary! Upon us, my venerable and refpected colleagues, a new burthen is this day laid —to us a new door is opened! I congratulate you on this aufpicious occafion, and hope we may view it as a token for good from the Lord. Let it encourage us to perfevere and become more faithful in preaching a crucified Jefus, and inciting this people to worfhip God in fpirit and in truth. But where is our LAIDLIE!* Where is now that bold herald of the gofpel, who feared not the face of man, nor courted the applaufe of fellow-worms!— He fpoke with authority, and what flowed from his heart, reached the hearts of others. How often from these heights of Zion have his words dropped as the rain, while finners trembled and faints rejoiced. But he is gone, and refts from his labors! His name still furvives, and he, being dead, yet speaketh. Excuse this tribute of affectionforgive this tear, which I owe to the memory of a man, who was once dear to me, as a fellow-laborer in this house, and whose ministry was highly acceptable, and greatly bleffed to this people. From the example of those who proved faithful in their day, let us, my worthy colleagues, be prompted to the most vigorous exertions in the fervice of our master. May you be long spared in mercy to the church! and, when the lips, which now addrefs you, are mouldering in the tomb, O may you live to record the name of the Lord, and be the happy instruments of building that spiritual temple which is founded upon the prophets and apoftles, Jefus Chrift himfelf being the chief corner-ftone! Late, very late, after gaining many feals to your ministry, may you clofe your exemplary and ufeful lives in peace, and obtain the crown of righteoufnefs! The bleffing of the God of Salvation be upon you!

* The Rev. Doctor. Archibald Laidlie was born and educated in Scotland. He was ordained, in 1760, a minister in Flushing, in Zealand. The Dutch church in New-York finding it necellary to have divine fervice performed in English, called him for that purpose, and he arrived here in March, 1764. He was a man of genus, learning, and eminent piety—a very infructive, bold, and animated preacher; and his indefatigable labors were eminently teled of the Lord. He died of a confumptive illness at Red-Hook, in Officber, 1779, during our exile from the city.

The aged men who were prefent at the dedication of the fecond temple wept at the remembrance of the first. But, bleffed be God! you, who worshipped in this house formerly, have no cause for weeping on that account. This house is reflored to its former splendor, and the Lord has exceeded our highest expectations. We have no reason to weep for the house, but we may weep and be ashamed for the hardness of our hearts; for the want of faith and gratitude-of love and holinefs. Many bitter tears might alfo be fhed, when looking around, we find fo many wanting, who ufed formerly to worship with us in this place. Alas! how many parents-how many hufbands and wives -how many children and friends, have gone down to the filent grave fince laft we affembled in this house! But I may not indulge the mournful recollection. The joy of the Lord is to be our ftrength this day. May you, my brethren, be fpared to go up with the multitude to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise: May you live to see his power and glory in the fantuary, and your fouls be fed as with marrow and fatness! The Lord bless you with all fpiritual bleffings in Chrift Jefus!

You who are young, behold the goodnefs of God in providing the means of grace, and bringing the gofpel in its purity to you! Remember to whom we have dedicated this place. The once crucified, but now exalted Jefus, is Lord of this houfe. Here his name is recorded. See to it that you never defile his temple; make not his houfe a houfe of merchandize, nor fell his truths. Yet a little while and we fhall bid adieu to ordinances and to you. But we rejoice in the prospect of leaving you the rich treasure of a faithful profession and fpiritual worfhip. Preferve with anxious for licitude the precious inheritance. It is your life, it is the pledge of all your mercies. Improve the means. Search the fcriptures. Underftand the doctrines you profefs. Reft not in a name to live, but look unto Jefus and find life and peace in him. Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketb you a reason of the bope that is in you with meekness and fear. Beware of ever being ashamed of Chrift. Sin not away your privileges, and provoke not a holy God to withdraw his prefence and bleffing.

It is not, my children, without very tender emotions, that we look around and confider you as our dearest hope; our highest joy; the rising pillars of the church and flate. Soon you are to fucceed us in the duties we now strive to fulfil. Very foon you will have to bear the facred burthen which will devolve from us to you. I charge you, in the fight of God, to be faithful. Be faithful to your country; be faithful to the church. Forfake not affembling yourfelves together. Record the blefsed name. Continue to record it, that God may dwell with you, and with your children's children, as long as the fun shall endure. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold the heaven, and the heaven of beavens cannot contain him, how much lefs this boufe which we have built? The heaven is indeed his throne, and the earth is his footstool, but here is the houfe that we have built unto him, and here is the place of his reft. May it ever be a houfe of prayer! A houfe of praife! A houfe of bleffings! Peace be within thy walls, and profperity within thy palaces. For my brethren and companions' fake, I will now fay, PEACE BE WITHIN THEE. Becaufe of the boufe of the Lord our God, I WILL SEEK THY GOOD. Great King of Zion, fill it with thy glory! When writing up the people, let it be counted that many were born here, and here trained up for that houfe, which is not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; blefs all thy churches! let Ifrael be faved! and from the rifing of the fun, even to the going down of the fame, let thy name be great among the Gentiles. In every place let incenfe be offered unto thy name, and a pure offering ! AMEN.
