

OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

C. B. Malsworth - Mansfield

THE BOOK OF
THE TWELVE
MINOR PROPHETS,

TRANSLATED FROM THE ORIGINAL HEBREW.

WITH

A COMMENTARY,

CRITICAL, PHILOLOGICAL, AND EXEGETICAL.

BY

E. HENDERSON, D. D.

WITH

A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF THE AUTHOR,

BY

E. P. BARROWS,

HITCHCOCK PROFESSOR IN ANDOVER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

Unam quandam ac certam et simplicem sententiam ubique querendam esse. — MELANCHTHON.

ANDOVER:
WARREN F. DRAPER.
BOSTON: GOULD AND LINCOLN.
NEW YORK: JOHN WILEY.
PHILADELPHIA: SMITH, ENGLISH & CO.

1860.

BS1560
HA

02825

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1859,

BY W. F. DRAPER,

In the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the District of Massachusetts.

ELECTROTYPED AND PRINTED

BY W. F. DRAPER, ANDOVER, MASS.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.

---

THE increasing demand for the English edition of Dr. Henderson's Commentary on the Minor Prophets, suggested an application to the author for permission to reprint it in this country. The following note contains his very kind and courteous consent:

MR. DRAPER:

Dear Sir,—

Impressed with a sense of your honorable conduct in consulting me prior to the reprinting of a cheaper edition of my Commentary on The Minor Prophets, I feel no hesitation in granting you the sanction you desire, on the terms specified in your letter of November 4, 1856.

I remain, dear Sir,

Yours truly,

E. HENDERSON, D. D.

MORTLAKE, Surrey, Nov'r 20, 1856.

P. S. Enclosed you will find a list of corrections, copied from my husband's memoranda. S. H.

Not only have the corrections referred to been made in the present edition, but it was found desirable, also, to verify all the quotations in the Oriental languages, so that the whole work has now been thoroughly revised. This, with other causes, has contributed to delay the publication till the present time. We have to regret that, meanwhile, the venerable author has ceased from his labors, and passed to his reward.

It seems fitting that a short biographical sketch of his useful and eventful life should accompany this volume, as a tribute to his memory among those who will receive the benefits of his studies and labors, but who may not have access to the full biography prepared by his friends.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH OF THE AUTHOR.

---

THE lamented death of the author of the present Commentary occurred while the plates were in process of preparation for an American edition of the work. It seems highly proper, therefore, that a brief sketch of his life and character be prefixed to it. The writer of this, not having access to original sources of information, has drawn his materials from the "Memoir of the Rev. E. Henderson," by his daughter, Thulia S. Henderson, which has lately been published in London.

EBENEZER HENDERSON was born on the 17th day of November, 1784, at Dunfermline, an ancient borough in the eastern part of Scotland, situated in the county of Fife, a little north of the Firth of Forth, and well known as the residence of Anne of Denmark, and the birth-place of King Charles the First. He was the youngest son of George and Jean Henderson. His father was an agricultural laborer, and belonged to the Secession-body of Scotch Presbyterians. "Two years at Dunfermline," the memoir tells us, "and one year and a half at Dunduff, formed the sum-total of his schooling" in the days of his boyhood.<sup>1</sup> Then, at twelve years old, it was resolved that he should be initiated into some trade. But it happened to him, as it has to others whom Providence had foreordained to fill religious and literary spheres, that one attempt after another proved abortive. First he was placed with an elder brother to learn the trade of a clock-and-watch-maker. But here he staid only long enough to gain such an insight into the craft as was afterwards of no little use to him in his missionary wanderings, where recourse to a professed artisan for the rectification of his time-piece was impossible. He was next placed as an apprentice to a boot-and-shoe-maker for the space of three years. Of his progress in this business nothing is known. Only it is certain that "he had not yet found the niche in which he was to take his stand."

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 13.

For this a spiritual preparation was needed. This, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, he received in the deep religious awakening that took place in connection with the labors of Robert and James Haldane, the latter of whom visited Dunfermline in company with Mr. Aikman.

“A saw-pit at the top of Chalmers’ Street, and an open place in Woodhead Street, are remembered in connection with various out-door preachings to an assembled multitude. Many of the ungodly were awakened, and the godly were stirred up to works of good-doing. Sunday Schools were established, and they rapidly flourished. Of the ‘six’ that are recorded as having been in a prosperous state within the parishes of Dunfermline as early as 1798, there was one in which were enrolled the names of Ebenezer Henderson and Douglas Cusine (pronounced Cousin),—the two who are remembered as having borne the palm for diligence and attention.”<sup>1</sup>

This little incident shows the original aptitude of our author for the pursuits of a scholar. The precise time of his first open profession of religion is not known. But there is abundant evidence that from this period he devoted himself with all his soul to the service of Christ. The needful preparation for future duty was freely granted him in the Seminary in Edinburgh, which had been originated, and was still supported, by the generosity of Mr. Robert Haldane. The course of instruction was brief, extending only through two years. But this was then thought to be the utmost that was compatible with the urgent demand for home and foreign laborers. “Dr. Henderson always urged the importance of a prolonged collegiate course; and doubtless felt that had his own preparatory studies been of longer continuance, he might have gone forth better equipped for his work.”<sup>2</sup> So speaks the memoir; to which may be added, that it was only by a severe and long process of self-training, continued after he left the Seminary, that he was enabled to qualify himself for the work of a translator of the holy Scriptures, and a commentator on their contents, in which he became so distinguished. The class of 1803—the fifth in order of institution—was the one which he joined. We need not be surprised when we find one of his surviving fellow-students bearing testimony that he was at that time “more of a linguist than a theologian; more given to literature than to divinity.”<sup>3</sup> No one can read his commentaries, so rich in oriental lore, without perceiving at a glance that it was the side of sacred literature rather than of systematic theology to which he was drawn by the natural affinities of his mind. To him the memoir justly applies the remark made of one of his contemporaries, the late Rev. Alexander Dewar: “He could comprehend and seize the leading features of a complicated question, though he rarely, if ever, dealt in barren abstractions; strong, broad good sense was a distinguishing element of his mind; he was a man of facts and fundamental principles."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 17.

<sup>2</sup> P. 23.

<sup>3</sup> Rev. James Kennedy, of Inverness.

In the vacations the seminary students were sent out on preaching-tours. We find him in the summer recess of 1804 appointed to visit the Orkney Islands, which lie off the northern extremity of Scotland. Thus was inaugurated that remarkable series of northern missions to which the providence of God, contrary to his own original intentions, had appointed him.

In the second year of his seminary life he was called to the foreign service, in the following way: The Rev. John Paterson, pastor of a church at Cambuslang, and the Rev. Archibald McLaey, pastor at Kircaldy, having been invited by the two Congregational churches in Edinburgh to go forth as missionary agents, resigned their charges, and came to Edinburgh for a brief course of preparatory study with special reference to the service to which they had devoted themselves. Their destination was India. But Mr. McLaey being by the circumstances of his family detained at home, Mr. Paterson's friends urged him to select from among the seminary students a man for his colleague. As he surveyed the assembled class, he said of Mr. Henderson, then but twenty-one years of age, and with whom he had no previous acquaintance, "This is the man for me." Thus commenced between the two missionaries a lifelong friendship. As soon as Mr. Henderson made known his willingness to embark in this cause, his services were accepted, and the missionaries elect were set apart by the imposition of hands, with prayer and fasting, at an evening service in the Tabernacle, Leith Walk, on August 27, 1805.

But God, who understood perfectly the sphere in which these his two servants could best labor, had destined both to a northern instead of a tropical field. Here the following extract from a letter which he wrote on the subject some twelve years later, is perfectly in place:

"When I originally devoted myself to the Redeemer's service, and entered on a course of study preparatory to engaging in it, I had no specific station or sphere of labor in view; but was determined, in reliance on his promised grace, cheerfully to proceed to whatever place he should be pleased to point out to me, whether at home in my native country, or among the heathen in a distant land. Accordingly, when our dear brother Paterson requested me to accompany him to India, it was a matter of no great difficulty for me to give my consent to his proposal."<sup>2</sup>

This delightful passage shows that he was willing to be guided. And let it be said, for the encouragement of all youthful candidates, that God will certainly guide all who are willing to be guided, into the field in which they can serve him to the best advantage. The two missionary brethren had marked out India for their field, but God sent them into northern Europe.

The directors of the East India Company were at that time, as is well known, hostile to missionary labors among the people whom they ruled. Messrs. Carey and Marshman, with some coadjutors, were indeed carrying on their good work without molestation, but with no open sanction on the part of the directors. Such a sanction the Messrs. Haldane openly sought for themselves and others, and were decidedly refused, and the door was thus closed to their intended enterprise. "The British possessions," says the memoir, "were not approachable by a Christian missionary in a British vessel. But there were Danish ships in which such men could embark; there were Danish settlements where they could effect a landing, and whence they could proceed to some neighboring districts, whose governors might be disposed, if not to sanction, at least to ignore the efforts that might be made."<sup>1</sup> They accordingly repaired to Copenhagen, in the hope of securing a passage thence to Serampore. But here disappointment awaited them. One vessel only was to sail that season, and every berth was preëngaged. They offered to go in the steerage; even that was full.

Meanwhile they found all around them a field white for the harvest. Although as yet ignorant of the Danish language, they had already commenced a service in the English tongue the second Sabbath after their arrival. Next they procured the translation into Danish of a tract entitled "The One Thing Needful," and forthwith set it in active circulation. Their English congregation increased, and they had secured, early in November, the translation and printing of one thousand copies of the "Great Question Answered." Still hoping to be able the ensuing spring to embark for Serampore, they earnestly urged upon their friends at home the importance of not leaving their present field unoccupied when they should be withdrawn from it. In reply they received a letter informing them that but one of the two fields, India or Denmark, could be at present occupied, and urging that they should consent to remain in their present position. They complied; and thus they found themselves, without any planning of their own, inaugurated into the Danish field. The two friends soon separated, Mr. Paterson remaining in Copenhagen, and Mr. Henderson going to Elsineur.

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 41.

At Elsineur he gave lessons, in private families and classes, in the English language, while at the same time he sedulously devoted himself to the acquisition of the Danish, and the other northern languages, which, when once mastered, would greatly enlarge the circle of his influence. As the sphere of his vision widened, he turned his thoughts towards Sweden, and he and his companion determined to gain satisfactory information concerning the spiritual condition of this kingdom, as well as of Denmark. Mr. Henderson repaired to Helsingburgh in the southern part of Sweden, with a supply of religious publications. Next, he and his colleague journeyed through Skonen, leaving tracts at Lund and Malmö, in the hands of such as were likely to translate them into Swedish. After this they undertook an exploring tour in Denmark. Crossing the Great Belt and the Little Belt, they advanced as far as the Moravian settlement at Christiansfeld, in Schleswig. In one respect this journey was of striking importance, by bringing them personally into connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society, and also turning their attention towards Iceland. Learning that the Fünen Evangelical Society was purposing to print two thousand copies of the New Testament for their long-neglected fellow-subjects in Iceland, they ventured to suggest that five thousand instead of two thousand should be the number struck off for the first instalment. The Danes not having courage for this, it was determined that assistance should be sought from London. The two friends accordingly wrote directly to the managers of the Bible Society in the British metropolis, who agreed to defray the cost of the additional three thousand copies.

The war which took place in 1807 between England and Denmark, compelled the two missionaries to withdraw to Sweden. Mr. Henderson took up his residence at Gottenburgh, while Mr. Paterson proceeded to Stockholm, where he was eminently successful in organizing systematic efforts for the circulation of Swedish Bibles and tracts. The ensuing summer of 1808, the two friends travelled in Sweden and Lapland, inquiring into the state of the parishes, and scattering the seeds of divine truth. Having reached Tornea, at the head of the Gulf of Bothnia, they entered Finland, and, turning around the gulf, proceeded till they were close upon Wasa, when the approach of a Russian army compelled them to a hasty retreat back around the head of the same gulf. In October they reached their respective stations, after a journey of two thousand three hundred miles. This tour gave them an affecting insight into the spiritual wants of the people. In many parishes there was on an average only one Bible in every eighth house,—the wealthy and middle classes only being able to possess a copy, while the cottagers remained, from poverty, destitute of this treasure.

During all Mr. Henderson's residence in Denmark and Sweden, he was, along with his missionary labors, busily prosecuting his studies in Hebrew and Greek, as well as in German, Danish, and Swedish. We have already seen how he first became interested in the enterprise for furnishing Iceland with the word of God. Of the five thousand copies of the Icelandic New Testament that had been printed, as noticed above, fifteen thousand had been sent off before the breaking out of the war between England and Denmark. The remaining three thousand five hundred were lying in store, ready for shipment. For some time the prosecution of the enterprise was unavoidably interrupted. But at last, in 1810, it seemed possible to resume it. The Bible Society having authorized one of the two missionaries to visit Iceland in person, while the other should forward the printing of the Bibles that were to follow, Mr. Henderson was designated for the tour in Iceland. This occasioned a preliminary visit to England, where he spent the summer of 1810 among his old friends. He returned to Sweden in October, but various circumstances delayed his visit to Iceland, so that he was at liberty to spend two years more at Gottenburgh.

“It was early in the year 1811, and probably as the result of arrangements made with the Edinburgh publisher, or with some Edinburgh friend, when in Scotland during the previous summer, that Mr. Henderson’s earliest literary production, the first fruits of his German studies, left the press; viz., a translation of Roos’s ‘Exposition of Daniel.’”<sup>1</sup> The rules laid down by Roos as canons for the interpretation of prophecy were adopted and adhered to by Dr. Henderson to the last; and thus this initial work seems to have exerted an important influence upon him as an expounder of prophecy.

But to return to the Icelandic Bible. Mr. Paterson was about to start for Russia on a Bible mission, and it became necessary, to expedite the work, that Mr. Henderson should obtain leave of entrance into Denmark, and then repair to Copenhagen, where he could urge on the printer and the reviser of the press in their daily work. His application the King of Denmark referred to the Chancery. The Chancery, after some delay, sent the petition back to his majesty, with a strong recommendation that it should be granted, and the royal assent was accordingly given. But annoying delays occurred in connection with the printing that remained to be done, as well as heavy expenses arising from the depreciation of the Danish currency, and the exorbitant war prices charged upon every article of food.

“The two years which were thus spent by him in the Danish capital, would have been tedious, had there not been great facilities in that city for the continuance of other labors. The translation of ‘The Warning Voice,’ and ‘The End of Time’ into Icelandic, was effected beneath his eye, as also that of the tract entitled ‘Serious Considerations’ into Danish. In preparation for his contemplated journey, he was studying the language and ecclesiastical history of Iceland."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 84.

So the memoir; and in addition to this, it adds that he was also prosecuting vigorously the study of Hebrew. "A Morocco Jew," says he, in a letter dated Dec. 1, 1812, "who has a beautiful pronunciation, reads a Hebrew chapter with me the one day, and I read an English chapter with him the other. I begin to speak a little with him in Hebrew."<sup>2</sup> Having received a suggestion from his friend Mr. Paterson, when on a visit to him in Sweden in March 1814, that when his Icelandic mission was completed he "might find bible-work to do in the regions to the north and west of Russia," he immediately began to turn his attention to the languages of those regions. About the same time, also, we find that he began the study of Arabic. He speaks of it as "remarkably easy, the structure being so much like the Hebrew, and there being so many Hebrew words in it." "The Grammar," he says, "will be an easy task. Its richness in words will be the principal difficulty."<sup>3</sup>

An object which Mr. Henderson earnestly desired to see effected before leaving the country was the organization of the earliest Bible Society in Denmark. This good work he was permitted to see accomplished under very favorable auspices, one of the rooms of the episcopal palace being offered for the purpose, and the meeting being attended by several men of high eminence. Soon after "this launching of Denmark's life-ark," all the needful preparations having been at last made, Mr. Henderson embarked for Iceland on the eighth of June, 1814. "The freight of Bibles," says the memoir, "had been subdivided, and the several packages forwarded during the spring to seven of the principal Icelandic ports, — an arrangement adopted by reason of the difficulty that would have attended their transmission across the interior of the island. The treaty of Kiel, in January 1814, had effectually done away with the restrictions and risks incident to the late war; and the Icelandic ship-owners had displayed a patriotic liberality in conveying the books free of expense."<sup>4</sup> After a five weeks' passage, he arrived in safety at Reykiavik, on the south-western coast of Iceland, and was well received by Bishop Vidalin, by his step-son, Sysselmand Thorgrimson, by Mr. Knudsen the Danish merchant, and several men of note in the Icelandic metropolis.

Mr. Henderson's printed account, entitled "Iceland, or the Journal of a Residence in that Island,"<sup>5</sup> is so copious, and so well known to the public, that it is not necessary to enter into the details of his journeyings. Suffice it to say, that in three journeys, each from Reykiavik as a point of departure, he explored the whole island, travelling not less than two thousand six hun-

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 117.

<sup>3</sup> P. 132.

<sup>5</sup> In two vols. 8vo. Edinburgh, 1818.

<sup>2</sup> P. 118.

<sup>4</sup> P. 137.

dred miles, ascertaining the spiritual condition of the people, and everywhere making efficient arrangements for the distribution of the word of God.

“In almost every hamlet there was new proof that such effort was needed; in each hamlet, proof also that the effort would meet with response on the part of willing purchasers. Here was a parish in which a folio Bible, greatly injured by use, had all its defective pages accurately supplied by the pen of a common peasant; and there another, whose lent copy had so long been retained by the islanders of Grimsey, that the right of its possession had become a disputed point. One copy in an island; two in a parish; twelve among two hundred people; six among two hundred and fifty; a clergyman seeking for seventeen long years to possess a copy of his own, and hitherto unable to secure the treasure; peasants who had offered, but offered in vain, to the amount of five-and-twenty shillings for a copy;—such are the incidents that crowd upon the page. The Testaments sent over in 1807 and 1812, were traced to their destination, but were found to have gone a very little way towards meeting the extensive demand. * * * The general intelligence of the people rendered their need of Scripture the more obvious. In a parish of four hundred, where all who were above eight years old had been taught to read, there might well be a universal desire for the Book of books.”<sup>1</sup>

In the month of July, 1815, the initial steps were taken at Reykiavik which resulted in the formation of the Icelandic Bible Society, an institution which still exists, and, according to the latest communications, received several years since, had issued in all above ten thousand Bibles and Testaments. Having finished his work of exploration, Mr. Henderson sailed for Copenhagen, where he arrived Sept. 6, 1815. In bringing to a close the notice of this visit to Iceland, it is pertinent to add, that, while zealously and energetically executing his commission as agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, he improved every opportunity to make himself acquainted with the remarkable natural phenomena of that wonderful island.

“He, in consequence, visited and inspected with ardent and indefatigable zeal the awfully sublime, yea, often terrific scenes, which abound in that land of volcanoes, in which often a strange conflict is seen between the elements of fire and water—between boiling hot springs and all the cold and freezing changes of snow and ice. There we find our traveller climbing up and descending mountains, standing between thundering masses of melting lava and rushing floods, and exhibiting an indomitable courage, amounting, in the opinion of his hardy Icelandic guides, to almost a provocation of dangers so immediate and threatening, that even a spectator at a distance could scarcely refrain from mingled feelings of admiration of his courage and calm self-possession, amidst surrounding scenes of horror, and of disapproval and condemnation of a spirit of presumption, exposing health and life to needless risk and sacrifice. * * * Yet this very boldness, nay, rashness, enabled him to witness and describe scenes which few, if any, of his predecessors in travel had dared to approach so near, and to observe so closely.”<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 155.

It should be added that Mr. Henderson, being a good Icelandic scholar, was thus enabled freely to converse with all classes of the native population, from the learned clergy and gentry to the illiterate farmer and day-laborer. “Thus joyfully and manfully proceeding on his errand of mercy, he was treated by high and low, by the clergy and the laity, in the most respectful manner. He was most kindly and hospitably entertained, often accompanied part of the way by those who had afforded him in their houses every accommodation and comfort in their power; or provided with safe guides, and dismissed with prayers, benedictions, and other affecting marks of the liveliest gratitude and Christian affection, by our Icelandic brethren,—and which they desired to evince to one who had been sent to them from a far distant nation as a messenger of peace, and an angel of mercy, with the gift of that Holy Book, which had already proved to millions, and would in time to come prove to generations yet unborn, an inexhaustible source of the purest instruction, and the most solid consolation.”<sup>2</sup>

From his return to Copenhagen in September 1815, to October of the following year, Mr. Henderson was assiduously employed in journeying through Denmark and the adjacent regions of Pomerania and northern Germany, being, as he expressed it, “constantly on the wing.” Wishing for a season of rest, he had already bespoken his passage to Leith, in Scotland, with the hope of spending some time among his friends at home, when he received notice of an appointment to visit St. Petersburg, on an agency for the British and Foreign Bible Society. A letter written to Mr. Paterson under date of October 22, 1816, gives a delightful revelation of his feelings in view of this sudden change in his plans, and of his whole-hearted devotion to the cause of Christ. He says:

“What a complete change has instantaneously been effected in my plans! I imagined my continental labors were at a close for this season; had spent about eight days with my friends here in Altona; bespoke my passage on board one of the smacks for Leith; made every needful preparation for my departure, and was fondly dreaming of domestic enjoyments, when all at once I heard a voice behind me saying, ‘This is the way, walk ye in it.’ I ‘turned to the voice that spake unto me,’ and behold, my path was plain before me. Instead of Edinburgh, I was to regard St. Petersburg as the place of my destination. On Sabbath last, after preaching my first sermon on

<sup>1</sup> Rev. Dr. Steinkopff, as quoted in memoir, p. 105.

<sup>2</sup> Dr. Steinkopff, as quoted above, p. 106.

Lot's wife, I received two letters from London, one five, the other only six days old, urging the necessity of my repairing without a moment's delay to St. Petersburg, with the view of strengthening your hands in the work of the Lord."<sup>1</sup>

Of course he complied without hesitation, and wrote to the committee in London: "Had I not come to the determination instantly to comply with your request, how could I have borne the cutting reflection, 'Demas hath forsaken me, having loved the present world?'"<sup>2</sup>

In the middle of December we find him in the Russian capital, where his labors, after he had been duly initiated by Mr. Paterson (who was preparing for a temporary absence), date from about the commencement of the year 1817. Here he entered upon "another man's line of things made ready to his hand," for Mr. Paterson was an efficient Bible agent.

"The task was multiform. It consisted in seeing to the corrections of the proofs as they left the press, and in superintending the town-issue of those Scriptures, or portions of Scripture, that were already in stock; in transmitting copies, when needful, to the associations already formed in various parts of the empire, and in corresponding with the Astrachan and other missionaries about the translations or reëditions that were yet needed. French, Greek, Moldavian, Georgian, Calmuc, and other Bibles were in progress. Archimandrites and princes had to be consulted; translators had to be conferred with; paper, types, and binding had to be cared for; the depôt to be looked after; and committee-meetings, of several hours in duration, to be attended."<sup>3</sup>

How efficient was the Russian Bible Society at this period, may be inferred from the fact, that in a letter dated St. Petersburg, June 8, 1817, Dr. Henderson states that from the establishment of the society, to the present time, its committee had "either published, or engaged in publishing, no fewer than forty-three editions of the sacred Scriptures, in seventeen different languages, forming a grand total of one hundred and ninety-six thousand copies."<sup>4</sup> Much of the success of the good cause he attributes to the warm patronage then extended by the Emperor Alexander to the Bible cause.

An incident that occurred during this visit to St. Petersburg deserves a passing notice, as a further illustration of his self-denying missionary spirit. He received in January 1817 a very urgent and unexpected call to join the mission which had been projected by the London Missionary Society to the town of Irkutsk, in Siberia. Immediately he set apart a day for solemn self-examination and prayer with reference to his duty. The record he has left of this, shows how deep down into his soul the true spirit of Christianity had penetrated. The result of this prayerful deliberation was a decision to go on

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 205.

<sup>2</sup> P. 205.

<sup>3</sup> P. 208.

<sup>4</sup> P. 219.

the mission, though he thereby renounced the fondly-cherished hope of a visit to his native country. But scarcely was this determination formed before he was called to reconsider it, on account of the strenuous efforts of the Bible Society to retain him in their employment; and this cost him a severer struggle than the first. But, with the same simplicity of purpose with which he had formed the resolve to go on the Irkutsk mission, he renounced it, and continued his labors in the service of the Bible Society.

During the residence in St. Petersburg that has just been noticed, he received from Copenhagen a document, sealed with the triangle and the seven-stringed lyre of the Scandinavian Literary Society, nominating him one of its corresponding members. In the month of June following, a diploma was forwarded from Kiel, conferring upon him the title of Doctor in Philosophy.

The return of Dr. Paterson, in August, left him at liberty to revisit his native land, where he arrived in December, taking Stockholm, Copenhagen, and other places belonging to the field of his former labors, on his route.

The earliest news that reached Dr. Henderson upon his return to England was the tidings of his mother's death. His father's decease had occurred during his Icelandic explorations. Repairing to Edinburgh, he wrote the concluding part of his work on Iceland, and superintended the printing of the same. In the end of April, 1818, his volumes left the press, bearing a dedication to Prince Christian Frederic, of Denmark. So favorably were they received, that a second edition was soon called for, and an abridgment was published at a later date in the United States.

Soon afterwards (May 19) he was united in marriage to Miss Susannah Kennion, the daughter of Mr. John Kennion, in whom he found a companion of cultivated mind and congenial spirit, every way worthy of himself. The ensuing summer he spent in travelling for the Bible Society through England and Scotland. On Monday, Sept. 28, he, with his companion, set sail from Leith, on his third continental journey. It was intended that after revisiting the Hanoverian and Holstein auxiliaries, he should winter at Copenhagen, then pass, viâ Norway, to St. Petersburg, and finally take up his abode at Astrachan, on the Caspian Sea, where rooms were already assigned him in the Mission House, and whither the bulk of his luggage was at once forwarded, to await his expected arrival. Such was the plan. He was now in the zenith of his popularity and influence as a Bible agent, and to human appearance everything promised a favorable issue. But, as in the beginning of his missionary career, so now he had to learn once more that God's ways are not man's ways. To him it happened, as it has to many other eminent servants of God, that, in the full tide of success, a series of reverses was to be encountered, by which his Christian activity should be turned into another channel, where, doubtless, God saw that his labors could best subserve the cause of his kingdom. When, in carrying out the plan above sketched, the time had arrived for his long-planned journey to Norway, he started from Gottenburgh on this expedition "in a small country conveyance, so low built that its structure naturally suggested a notion of perfect security. "It is hardly bigger than a wheelbarrow; if it were upset, you could scarcely be hurt, was the remark casually made."<sup>1</sup> But he had that very day to learn that

"Safety consists not in escape
From dangers of a frightful shape."

About mid-day, the little vehicle was upset, and the traveller's shoulder and the radius of the fore-arm were dislocated and otherwise injured. Unable to bear the motion of a carriage, he was conveyed to the river near by, and taken back along the Gotha Elf. Eventually, the bones in the fore-arm lost their power of flexion and rotation, and the delay which the accident had occasioned left no time for the journey to Norway.

Dr. Henderson proceeded to St. Petersburg, which place was reached on the 11th of September, 1819. The studies which occupied the closing months of 1819, like those of the preceding winter at Copenhagen, consisted in the mastering of the Turkish, Tatar, and Persic languages, all of which would be needed for his anticipated Astrachan labors, upon which he hoped to enter the ensuing season. But a delay of a whole year was occasioned by the death of Dr. Paterson's wife, which made it necessary that the bereaved husband should have a temporary respite from his services at the Russian capital. It was not till March 1821 that Drs. Paterson and Henderson could arrange to start with Mr. Seroff, one of the committee, on their projected visit of exploration. Leaving St. Petersburg, they proceeded, by Novgorod and Tver, to Moscow; thence, by Kalouga and Koursk, to Pultawa, the field so fatal to the Swedish hero; thence, by Tchernigov and Kiev, to Odessa, on the Black Sea. After this they made an eight days' Crimean trip, spending the Sabbath at Akhtiar, the modern Sevastopol. Thence they journeyed eastward to Taganrog, on the Sea of Azof, where Dr. Henderson was seized with an ague which clung to him with pertinacity during all the remainder of his journey. Crossing the Don, they entered Asia, and finally reached the long-looked-for Astrachan on the 13th of August, where a great part of Dr. Henderson's furniture and library were awaiting his permanent residence.

Starting again from Astrachan, on the first of October, on their way towards Persia, they crossed the Caucasian mountains; but, when they had advanced as far as Tiflis, their expedition was brought to a close by a difference of opinion between them and the Bible Society, which resulted in their tendering their resignation as its accredited agents. This had respect to Ali

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 239.

Bey's Turkish version of the New Testament, with which the two friends were dissatisfied on grounds the validity of which was afterwards recognized, at least in a practical way, by the managers of the Bible Society. Recrossing the Caucasus, and ordering the goods which had arrived at Astrachan to be repacked and sent to St. Petersburg, they hastened back to the Russian capital, which they reached early in February 1822. Here they were immediately retained in the service of the Russian Bible Society. To this Dr. Henderson devoted the last three years of his residence in Russia. It was not long before symptoms of a deep-laid scheme of opposition to the Bible cause began to manifest themselves. The plot, according to Dr. Paterson, embraced not only Greek ecclesiastics, but others of high eminence, among whom he names Metternich, the great Austrian diplomatist. To trace the history of this conspiracy against the word of truth, would be out of place in the present brief notice. How successful it was in the end, we all know. The Emperor Alexander remained personally friendly to the agents; but so limited had become the operations of the society, with no prospect of any enlargement in the future, that, in the spring of 1825, Dr. Henderson sought and obtained, through Prince Galitzin, the emperor's permission to resign his office. No time was lost in making arrangements for the homeward voyage, and on the 5th of July, 1825, he and his were safely landed in the British metropolis. Dr. Paterson tarried a little longer, but he too was compelled to withdraw; and upon the accession of the Emperor Nicholas, all operations at the Bible House were speedily suspended, at least so far as concerned the distribution of the Scriptures to Russian subjects. "It only remains to be hoped," adds the memoir, "that the day may come when the second Alexander shall emulate the Christian graces and religious benevolence of the imperial relative whose name he bears; and that the house of Romanoff may yet be linked with Russia's highest and best prosperity."<sup>1</sup>

It ought to be added that, during his last three years' residence in St. Petersburg, the Ethiopic was the language to which Dr. Henderson particularly devoted himself.

"Among his papers, and dated April, 1823, is a neatly-executed collation of St. John's Gospel, in the Ethiopic, as preserved in manuscript in the Public Imperial Library. His standard of comparison was the Ethiopic of the London Polyglott, and each instance of a various reading appears to be noted down in its order."<sup>2</sup>

But he did not content himself with being simply a student of God's word, and an agent for its distribution. He sought opportunity to preach it also. Turning his attention to the English sailors at Cronstadt, he began to preach

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, pp. 299, 300.

<sup>2</sup> P. 276.

there regularly beneath the Bethel flag, going out on Saturday and returning on the Monday's boat. The interest which he thus felt in seamen was cherished after his return to his native land, and he was often employed in advocating their cause on the platform or from the pulpit.

With Dr. Henderson's return to England, his missionary labors, extending over a term of twenty years, were brought to a close. We are now to contemplate him in the character of a teacher and an author. The decease of Rev. Dr. Bogue, in October 1826, left vacant the Theological Tutorship of the Missionary College at Hoxton, which was under the supervision of the Directors of the London Missionary Society. On the recommendation of several friends, Dr. Henderson was invited to take provisional charge of the missionary students, until some permanent arrangement could be made. Here he so approved himself to the Directors, that, in the following spring, they agreed on inviting him to accept the permanent tutorship in that institution. Thus, by one of those easy movements which are so characteristic of God's providential government, he was quietly inducted into an office for the fulfilling of whose duties he had been for years unconsciously qualifying himself. It was not, however, without hesitation, that he consented to occupy this responsible situation. In a letter addressed to the treasurer of the society, while the question of his acceptance was still pending, he says :

"Though I can truly say that nothing would give me greater delight than to be in any way instrumental in preparing missionary candidates for the great and weighty office towards which their attention is directed, I do feel the duties and responsibilities attaching to the Theological Tutorship to be of so very serious a nature, that I should consider it the height of presumption in a mere stripling like myself to think of undertaking the task.

"Surely, my dear sir, the Directors are not aware that the course of study which I enjoyed before leaving Scotland was extremely limited; and that during the twenty years I have spent in foreign parts, my time has been so completely occupied with business of an altogether desultory kind, as to preclude the possibility of my giving any attention to the study of systematic theology."<sup>1</sup>

That the objection thus ingenuously stated by him was in itself weighty, need not be denied. The fact, however, that he so felt its weight, is the best evidence that the Directors acted wisely in disregarding it. Had he been one of those men who are always boasting of their limited advantages in early life, instead of assiduously occupying themselves, as he did, in making amends for what was then deficient by the diligent improvement of all the means at their disposal, he would not have merited the confidence of the Directors. But, understanding that he was one who could master any subject to which he gave close attention, and who would spare no pains to fit himself for the conscientious discharge of any duty he might be prevailed on to undertake, they, by their deputation, overcame his scruples, and induced his consent. He brought to his work not only a true missionary spirit, but also a rich fund of experience. Hence he was able to enrich his lectures with apposite and forcible illustrations, which gave pointedness and weight to the maxims that he inculcated. First of all he sought to elevate the standard of piety among the missionary students. "The business," said he, "on which you go forth is of so unearthly a nature,—it has so immediately to do with God, the souls of men, and the eternal world,—that except you are influenced by motives drawn from these sources, you must inevitably fail of becoming efficient laborers in the missionary field. It is not to learn languages, translate books, or introduce the arts and sciences of civilized life, that you go to the heathen. Whatever of this description may engage your attention, is merely subordinate and accessory. You go to instruct, to win, to save souls. To this everything must bend; to this everything must be laid under contribution. * * * And can you possibly expect to prove successful in such an enterprise, to enter heartily into it, or prosecute it with enthusiasm, vigor, and perseverance, if your spirit be worldly, and your affections low and grovelling?"<sup>1</sup> While thus giving, as was meet, the foremost place to the culture of the heart, he assiduously strove to foster a taste for theological and linguistic acquirements. The following extracts, from the pen of one who had access to Dr. Henderson's class-room, will best illustrate his characteristics as a teacher:

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, pp. 307, 308.

"As a teacher, he brought nothing into the class-room which had not been carefully and even elaborately prepared. * * * It was rather his intense application and indomitable industry, than any extraordinary talent, that distinguished him. If by genius is meant the undoubted possession of the creative or inventive faculty, then genius was not the property of my friend. If anything, he was rather wanting in imagination. * * * He never indulged much in illustration, and his illustrations never partook of the daring of genius. But if, on the other hand, 'genius is the instinct of enterprise,' and if the instinct of enterprise is labor, then, in this sense, my honored friend was the possessor of this mighty gift. * * * As Dr. Henderson was not a man who lived without a purpose, so neither was he a man to spend his hours without a plan. His time was faithfully divided; and in each division he had his self-appointed round of duties and engagements, to which he devoted himself with unwearied and strenuous perseverance. His lectures were the result of extensive reading and careful investigation. * * * He excelled in weighing evidence, and impressing upon it its relative value. His discrimination was clear, and his judgment was sound. He was wholly free from theory and speculation. He dealt with fact, not with fiction. He searched for data, not for opinions. His conclusions rested on the most solid basis. His theology was rather scriptural than scholastic; and his prelections were rather practical than brilliant. * * * In the Oriental languages, and in Biblical criticism, Dr. Henderson was at home. As a philologist, he had few equals in this country. He composed a Hebrew Grammar of his own, and allowed the students to copy it piecemeal from his own manuscript; and in the reading and interpreting of the Hebrew Scriptures he revelled with unbounded delight. Equally wide and correct was his acquaintance with the cognate languages, and this knowledge eminently qualified him for a freer and more independent exhibition of the sacred text.

“Himself a man of intense application and labor, and knowing from his own experience that there is no other path to success and to eminence, he loved the men who were willing to make the effort and endure the toil of an ascent. If he did not, like the immortal Chatham, trample difficulties under his feet, he could, in the exercise of a purer faith, at least smile at them. Sloth and sluggishness were alien to his own nature, and he had no sympathy with idleness in his students. * * * He had a high appreciation of merit. Like every one possessed of richer gifts and wider attainments, he was a man of generous soul; and wherever he discovered the buddings and burstings of superior talent, he had at command his word of encouragement, or his smile of approval. He was not lavish in his expressions of praise; but his whole manner embodied more than words; it was only in those cases in which the proofs of neglect and idleness were too plain to be denied, that his fine open brow ever became darkened with a frown, and that his utterance became more sharply pointed, and his words fell with a keener edge. Dr. Henderson was a strict disciplinarian, and so far as his influence reached, nothing was allowed to invade the majesty of law. He believed in God, and therefore he believed in order. Yet this never chilled those warmer charities which have their seat and centre in the heart.”<sup>1</sup>

After four years of labor in the Missionary College at Hoxton, Dr. Henderson received, in Feb. 1830, an appointment to the Theological Tutorship in the Ministerial College at Highbury. This he accepted without hesitation, as it opened to him a wider sphere, and he knew that the missionary directors were contemplating the discontinuance of their institution, the number of missionary candidates not being such as to warrant the outlay incurred, and the different ministerial colleges being disposed to facilitate the entrance of missionary students within their walls.

His connection with the college at Highbury was continued till the spring of 1850, when, upon the amalgamation of the three metropolitan colleges at

<sup>1</sup> Rev. Robert Ferguson, D.D., as quoted in the memoir, pp. 323—327.

Homerton, Coward, and Highbury, his labors as a teacher in a public institution were brought to a close. Of his services at Highbury it is only necessary to say that they were of the same general character as those at Hoxton. "He never forgot at Highbury," says his biographer, "that he had been tutor at Hoxton. It was seldom that he had not missionary students in one or other of his classes. Over all such he kept a jealous watch, lest their pulpit popularity should tempt them to retract their pledge, and withdraw their hand from the plough. For the benefit of such, he was always ready to spare an extra hour, if tuition in some Oriental language might be of profit to them in their future career."<sup>1</sup>

Dr. Henderson's hospitalities to foreigners are well known, and remembered with great delight. Many were the literary men, especially from the western hemisphere, who enjoyed the pleasure of his society for a few hours of profitable intercourse.

In 1852, two years after his removal from the tutorship at Highbury, Dr. Henderson was induced to undertake the pastorate of the Independent Congregation of Sheen Vale Chapel, at Mortlake, in Surrey. Upon the discharge of his pastoral duties he entered zealously, and with great delight. To preach Christ crucified was his chosen work, and during the whole period of his tutorship, he had continued it as he had opportunity. But the service evidently exceeded his present strength. In September, 1853, after having held the pastorate for only a year and a quarter, he was compelled to relinquish it, and take his place as a private member among his people.

From this time his health and mental vigor gradually declined, till, on the 16th day of May, 1858, he peacefully departed from this life, at Mortlake, the scene of his closing public labors, when he had now attained the age of seventy-three years.

It remains to take a brief survey of Dr. Henderson's labors as an author, especially as a commentator, in which character he is best known in the United States.

During his labors at Hoxton he found time to carry through the press his "Biblical Researches and Travels in Russia." To the Congregational Magazine he became a contributor, and occasionally furnished articles or reviews, drawn for the most part from materials that were lying ready for use. At Highbury he prepared and printed an elaborate examination of the celebrated passage, 1 Tim. iii. 16. It was entitled, "The Great Mystery of Godliness Incontrovertible." Upon the republication, in 1833, of "Buck's Theological Dictionary," he prepared for it five hundred new articles, while the already existing notices on Christian sects were carefully brought up to the date of this re-issue. Abbott's "Corner Stone" underwent revision at his hand, and the English editions of Prof. Stewart's Commentaries also passed under his eye. In 1836 appeared his well-known treatise on "Divine Inspiration," which has passed through several editions. At a later period, after his labors at Highbury had been brought to a close, he superintended the republication of five works from the pen of the Rev. Albert Barnes, prefixing prefaces of his own to two of them, viz., the Commentaries on the books of Job and Revelation. The other works were, "Notes on the Book of Daniel," "The Way of Salvation," and "Essays on Science and Theology."

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, pp. 348, 349.

Passing by other works of minor importance published or edited by him, we come to his Commentaries. The first of these, on the Prophet Isaiah, appeared in the year 1840, when the author was now fifty-six years of age. It was the result of long, patient, earnest study. This book had sometimes formed the basis of his readings with the fourth year's class at college, and he justly felt that something further was needed in the way of elucidating it. Vitringa was too prolix; Lowth far from satisfactory, and abounding in many needless and conjectural emendations of the text. The modern German commentaries were all more or less tainted with neology; and the commentaries of Barnes and Alexander, in this country, had not yet appeared. It is stated by the biographer that "some four or five years seem to have been occupied in the actual compiling of the volume."<sup>1</sup> This commentary, like all the succeeding, he terms, "critical, philological, and exegetical." In the first of these departments, criticism of the sacred text, he steadfastly abides by the ordinary text, where there is no overwhelming amount of manuscript evidence in favor of some other reading. In his philological remarks he makes an abundant yet sober use of the cognate languages, relying, first of all, on a collation of the several passages in which a given word occurs in the sacred text, and having recourse to the cognate tongues only as a supplementary aid. In the exegetical department it is his aim to evolve the exact scope and force of the prophetic declarations as at first uttered, and under a full view of the circumstances that attended their utterance.

The same general characteristics belong to the present commentary on the "Minor Prophets," which appeared next in order, in the year 1845. This is the most learned and elaborate of all his works. In the wonderful diversity of style and manner by which each of the twelve Minor Prophets is so clearly distinguished from all the rest,—a diversity very apparent in the English version, but displaying itself in its full beauty only to him who reads them in the original,—Dr. Henderson's pen found a fine field of exercise, which it did not fail to improve in a very thorough way. It is stated by the biographer that the popularity of this work among the students of the sacred text "has been fully as great as was that of his 'Isaiah,'—among the Americans even greater."<sup>1</sup> This is due partly, perhaps, to its greater intrinsic merit, but still more to the paucity of commentaries on the Minor Prophets, that unite rich and varied learning with the pure evangelical spirit.

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 390.

It was after his retirement from Highbury that his commentaries on Jeremiah and Ezekiel appeared—the former in 1851, the latter in 1855. These are of a less elaborate character.

"The Commentary on Jeremiah contained, as it required, a proportionately smaller number of notes than had been needful in the preceding volumes. But the notes which it did thus contain have been deemed by no means inferior to those of an earlier date, either in thought or expression. * * * The five lamentations, or elegies, of the prophet, are appropriately included in the work."<sup>2</sup>

Of the book of the prophet Ezekiel it can hardly be said that for its full illustration it required fewer notes than Isaiah or the Minor Prophets. The brevity of Dr. Henderson's commentary on this book is ascribed in the biography to the fact that "the tide of life was receding, and the fulness of life's labors was diminishing."<sup>3</sup> It must not be supposed, however, that the matter which it contains is of an inferior quality. It embodies the results mainly of his previous investigations, stated in a clear and perspicuous manner, though the biblical student could wish for fuller discussions of some points.

To the above sketch, drawn from the materials furnished by the biography, with only here and there the addition of a passing reflection, it may be proper to add, by way of independent judgment, a single general criticism on Dr. Henderson as an expounder of prophecy. In perusing his commentaries, not a few will feel that he carries to an unwarrantable extent the principle of restricting the prophetic declarations and delineations to specific events. This makes necessary the assumption of very abrupt transitions backwards and forwards, where it would seem that the principle of a progressive fulfilment—"first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear"—would have the double advantage of being in harmony with all that we know of the plan of God's government, and also of carrying the interpreter consistently through passages in which the near and more remote future are manifestly blended. For example, in Isa. 4 : 1, the reference is undeniably to judgments near at hand ; in the verses that follow, the future glory and safety of the church are exhibited as following and effected by the mighty judgments of Jehovah coöperating with the efficacions working of his Spirit. Both passages are closely connected by the introductory words of verse 2 : In that day.<sup>1</sup> Dr. Henderson, in his commentary, makes a distinct chapter to begin with verse 2, remarking that, "having depicted the wickedness of the Jews, and the awful judgments with which it would be punished, the prophet devotes this short chapter (chap. 4 : 2—6) to an announcement of the glory and felicity of the Church in the time of the Messiah." His note on the two introductory words is the following : "2. בְּיָמֵי הַהוּא, at or after that period. The prep. בְּ does not always strictly express what is contained within any given time or space ; it also points out nearness, society, or accompaniment, that which is in connection with, or which follows upon something else. In prophetic vision, the two states of adversity and prosperity were so closely connected, that one period might be said to comprehend them both." The meaning of the last clause, taken in connection with what precedes, seems to be that the two states of prosperity and adversity are connected to the prophet's vision, because he does not discern the wide interval of time which actually separates them. Would it not be a more exact statement to say that the prophet sees the two states of prosperity and adversity in connection, because they are thus connected in their inmost nature, being both parts of one indivisible whole, viz., the progress of God's people through severe discipline, to peace and universal victory ; that, therefore, the predicted calamities which should befall the Jews in connection with their first captivity, though having a true historic fulfilment, yet stand as the representatives of like calamities to be repeated in their history, and that of the Christian Church, which is their true heir, as often as their sins shall make it necessary ; and that the promised future glory of God's people, though having its perfect accomplishment only in the latter days of the Christian dispensation, yet includes in itself all previous deliverances and enlargements from the prophet's day onward, even as the perfect day includes in itself the morning dawn which ushers it in, and is a part of it ?

<sup>1</sup> Memoir, p. 417. The present is a reprint from the English edition, with the exception of some few corrections furnished by Dr. Henderson himself. With the exception of the Ethiopic, the quotations from the cognate languages with which the commentary abounds, as also those from the Greek and Latin, have been corrected by a comparison with the original sources.

<sup>2</sup> Memoir, pp. 433, 434.

<sup>3</sup> P. 454.

To take another example : Dr. Henderson rightly regards Ezekiel's temple-vision as a symbolic representation, the model presented being ideal, not that of an actual structure to be literally realized in all its details in the coming future. But for limiting its direct reference to the resettlement of the Jews in their own land, and the literal restoration of their sanctuary privileges and sacrificial institutes in the metropolis of Canaan, he seems to have no good warrant. The resettlement of the land of Canaan, and the rebuilding of the city and temple after the captivity, were only a part, and a very small part, of the "good things to come" which the vision shadowed forth. Its fulfilment belongs to the whole history of the church from Ezekiel's day onward, and it will be completed only in that yet future day when God shall make good to the uttermost his ancient promise: "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted! behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors, and lay thy foundations with sapphires. And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of precious stones. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children."<sup>1</sup> Then shall the name of that spiritual city of God be called, in the fullest sense of the words, "THE LORD IS THERE."

<sup>1</sup> בְּיָמֵי הַהוּא .

Such would be the general criticism which we should offer on Dr. Henderson's commentaries. At the same time we should warmly commend them to the diligent study of the Biblical scholar, as rich sources of instruction and profit.

<sup>1</sup> Isaiah 54: 11—13.

GENERAL PREFACE.

---

THE Minor Prophets are first mentioned as the Twelve by Jesus the Son of Sirach.<sup>1</sup> Under this designation, they also occur in the Talmudic tract, entitled Baba Bathra; <sup>2</sup> and Jerome specifies, as the eighth in the second division of the sacred books of the Jews, The Book of the Twelve Prophets, which, he says, they call Thereasar.<sup>3</sup> Melito, who is the first of the Greek Fathers that has left us a catalogue of these books, uses precisely the same language.<sup>4</sup> That they were regarded as forming one collective body of writings at a still earlier period, appears from the reference made by the proto-martyr Stephen to the Book of the Prophets,<sup>5</sup> when quoting Amos v. 27. The same style is employed by the Rabbins, who call Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Twelve, the Four Latter Prophets.<sup>6</sup> They are also spoken of as one book by Gregory Nazianzen, in his poem, setting forth the component parts of the sacred volume.<sup>7</sup>

At what time, and by whom they were collected, cannot be determined with certainty. According to Jewish tradition, the collection of the sacred books generally is attributed to the men of the Great Synagogue, a body of learned Scribes, said to have been formed by Ezra, and continuing in existence till the time of Simon the Just, who flourished early in the third century before Christ. In the opinion of many, Nehemiah completed this collection, by adding to those books which had already obtained a place in the canon, such as had been written in, or near his own times.<sup>8</sup> If this actually was the case, it cannot be doubted that he must have availed himself of the authority of Malachi in determining what books were really entitled to this distinction; and this Prophet, who was the last in the series of inspired writers under the ancient dispensation, may thus be considered to have given to the canon the

<sup>1</sup> Καὶ τῶν δώδεκα προφητῶν τὰ ὅσα ἀναδάλοι ἐκ τοῦ τόπου αὐτῶν. Ecclus. xlix. 10.

<sup>2</sup> שְׁנֵי עָרַר.

<sup>3</sup> תְּרֵי עָרַר; or, as it is generally contracted, תְּרֵי עָרַר.

<sup>4</sup> τῶν δώδεκα ἐν μονοβίβλιῳ.

<sup>5</sup> Καθὼς γέγραπται ἐν Βίβλῳ τῶν προφητῶν, Acts vii. 42.

<sup>6</sup> עַרְבָּיִם נְבִיאִים אַחֲרֵי-נְבִיאִים.

<sup>7</sup> Μίαν μὲν εἰσιν ἐς γραφὴν οἱ Δώδεκα
 Ὡσὲ κ' Ἀμῶς, καὶ Μιχαῖας ὁ τρίτος, Ἐπεὶδ' Ἰωήλ, εἶτ' Ἰωνᾶς, Ἀβδίας,
 Ναούμ τε, Ἀββακούκ τε καὶ Σοφορίας,
 Ἀγγαῖος, εἶτα Ζαχαρίας, Μαλαχίας,
 Μία μὲν οἶδε. Carmen xxx. iii.

<sup>8</sup> — Καὶ ὡς καταβαλλόμενος βιβλωδῆμην, ἐπισυνήγαγε τὰ περὶ τῶν βασιλέων καὶ προφητῶν, καὶ τὰ τοῦ Δαυὶδ, καὶ ἐπιστολὰς βασιλέων περὶ ἀναδεμάτων. 2 Macc. ii. 18.

sanction of Divine approbation. Within a century and a half afterwards, they were translated into Greek, along with the rest of the sacred books, and have ever since obtained an undisputed place among the oracles of God.

To these twelve prophetic books the epithet "Minor" has been applied, simply on the ground of their size, compared with those which precede them, and not with any view of detracting from their value, or of representing them as in any respect inferior in point of authority.

The books are not arranged in the same order in the Hebrew and Septuagint texts, and in neither is the chronology exactly observed, as may be seen from the following table, in which the mean time is assumed as the basis of the calculation :

HEBREW.	LXX.	CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER.
1. Hosea.	1. Hosea.	1. Joel . . . . . about 865 B.C.
2. Joel.	2. Amos.	2. Jonah . . . . . " 810
3. Amos.	3. Micah.	3. Amos . . . . . " 790
4. Obadiah.	4. Joel.	4. Hosea . . . . . " 750
5. Jonah.	5. Obadiah.	5. Micah . . . . . " 730
6. Micah.	6. Jonah.	6. Nahum . . . . . " 710
7. Nahum.	7. Nahum.	7. Zephaniah . . . . . " 630
8. Habakkuk.	8. Habakkuk.	8. Habakkuk . . . . . " 606
9. Zephaniah.	9. Zephaniah.	9. Obadiah . . . . . " 590
10. Haggai.	10. Haggai.	10. Haggai . . . . . " 520
11. Zechariah.	11. Zechariah.	11. Zechariah . . . . . " 520
12. Malachi.	12. Malachi.	12. Malachi . . . . . " 440

Newcome, Boothroyd, and some other translators, have adopted the order which appeared to them to be chronologically correct; but in the present work that is retained which is found in the Hebrew Bible, and followed in the Vulgate, in all the authorized European versions, and in those of Michaelis, Dathe, De Wette, and others, simply on the ground of the facility of reference, which the other arrangement does not afford, but which is practically of greater importance than any advantage derivable from the change.

The Minor Prophets have generally been considered more obscure and difficult of interpretation than any of the other prophetic books of the Old Testament. Besides the avoidance of a minute and particular style of description, and the exhibition of the more general aspects of events only, which are justly regarded as essentially characteristic of prophecy, and the exuberance of imagery, which was so admirably calculated to give effect to the oracles delivered by the inspired Seers, but which to us does not possess the vividness and perspicuity which it did to those to whom it was originally exhibited, there are peculiarities attaching more or less to each of the writers, arising either from his matter, or from the manner of its treatment, which present difficulties of no ordinary magnitude to common readers, and many that are calculated to exercise the ingenuity, and, in no small degree, to perplex the mind of the more experienced interpreter. We are frequently led to guess historical circumstances from what we otherwise know of the features of the times, and sometimes we have no other means of ascertaining their character than what are furnished by the descriptive terms employed in the predictions themselves. Though in such cases general ideas may be collected respecting the persons or things which are presented to view in the text, yet we want the historical commentary which would elucidate and give point to its various particulars. The accounts contained in the books of Kings and Chronicles are frequently too brief to furnish us with a key to many of the prophecies which were fulfilled during the period which they embrace; while the pages of profane history only slightly touch, if they touch at all, upon events which the scope and bearing of the predictions determine to periods within the range of subjects professedly treated of by its authors.

Against none of these prophets has the charge of obscurity been brought with greater appearance of justice than against Hosea, whose prophecies are obviously, for the most part, mere compendia, or condensed notes of what he publicly delivered, though preserving, to a considerable extent, the logical and verbal forms which characterized his discourses. Besides a profusion of metaphors, many of which are derived from sources little accordant with the dictates of occidental taste, we find in his book a conciseness of expression, an abruptness of transition, a paucity of connecting particles, and changes in person, number, and gender, to which nothing equal occurs in any of the other prophets. The visions of Zechariah also are not without their difficulties; but these arise, not from the language, which is remarkably simple in its character, but from the symbols which represent certain historical scenes and events.

The period of time within which the authors of the books flourished, includes the entire prophetic cycle of more than four hundred years — Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, having also lived in it. It is unquestionably the most eventful in the history of the Hebrews. It embraces the introduction of image-worship, and that of Phœnician idolatry, with all its attendant evils, among the Israelites; the regicidal murders and civil wars which shook their kingdom to its centre; the corruptions of the Jewish state in consequence of its adoption of the idolatrous practices of the northern tribes; the Assyrian and Egyptian alliances; the irruption of the Syrian, Assyrian, and Chaldean armies into Palestine; the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities; the Persian conquests; the release of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land; and the state of affairs at Jerusalem during the governorship of Nehemiah. Upon all these various events and circumstances, the predictions, warnings, threatenings, promises, and moral lessons, have, in a multiplicity of aspects, a more or less pointed and important bearing. Events subsequent to this period likewise form the subjects of prophetic announcement — such as the progress of Alexander the Great; the successes of the Maccabees; the corruptions which prevailed in the last times of the Jewish state; the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; the dispersion, future conversion, and restoration of the Jews; and the universal establishment of true religion throughout the world. Intermingled with these topics, and giving to each a significance and interest which it could not otherwise have possessed, are some of the clearest and most illustrious predictions respecting the Messiah, in his divine and human, his sacerdotal and suffering, and his regal and all-conquering character that are to be found in the Old Testament.

It is impossible seriously to peruse this collection of prophetic writings without discovering the Omniscient Eye to which all future events, with the most minute of their attendant circumstances, are present; the Omnipotent Arm, which, in the most difficult cases, secures the accomplishment of the Divine purposes; the glorious attributes of Jehovah as the Moral Governor of the universe, and the special Friend and Protector of his people; the deep depravity of the human heart; the multiform phases of moral evil; and the just retributions which befall mankind in the present state of existence. These, and numerous subjects of a kindred nature, furnish abundance of matter "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness," which, while it is able to make "men wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus," is also admirably fitted to "make the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 15—17.

The principles on which the Author has proceeded in preparing the present work are the same by which he was guided in composing his Commentary on the Prophet Isaiah. It has been his great aim to present to the view of his readers the mind of the Spirit as expressed in the written dictates of inspiration. With the view of determining this, he has laid under contribution all the means within his reach, in order to ascertain the original state of the Hebrew text, and the true and unsophisticated meaning of that text. He has constantly had recourse to the collection of various readings made by Kennicott and De Rossi; he has compared the renderings of the LXX., the Targum, the Syriac, the Arabic, the Vulgate, and other ancient versions: he has availed himself of the results of modern philological research; and has conducted the whole under the influence of a disposition to place himself in the times of the sacred writers—surrounded by the scenery which they exhibit, and impressed by the different associations, both of a political and a spiritual character, which they embody. In all his investigations he has endeavored to cherish a deep conviction of the inspired authority of the books which it has been his object to illustrate, and of the heavy responsibility which attaches to all who undertake the interpretation of the oracles of God.

In no instance has the theory of a double sense been permitted to exert its influence on his expositions. The Author is firmly convinced, that the more this theory is impartially examined, the more it will be found that it goes to unsettle the foundations of Divine Truth, unhinge the mind of the biblical student, invite the sneer and ridicule of unbelievers, and open the door to the extravagant vagaries of a wild and unbridled imagination. Happily the number of those who adhere to the multiform method of interpretation is rapidly diminishing; and there cannot be a doubt, that, in proportion as the principles of sacred hermeneutics come to be more severely studied, and perversions of the word of God, hereditarily kept up under the specious garb of spirituality and a more profound understanding of Scripture, are discovered and exposed, the necessity of abandoning such slippery and untenable ground will be recognized, and the plain, simple, grammatical and natural species of interpretation, adopted and followed.

CONTENTS.

---

	PAGE
✓ HOSEA . . . . .	1
JOEL . . . . .	87
✓ AMOS . . . . .	123
OBADIAH . . . . .	183
✓ JONAH . . . . .	196
MICAH . . . . .	216
NAHUM . . . . .	264
HABAKKUK . . . . .	285
ZEPHANIAH . . . . .	320
• HAGGAI . . . . .	340
ZECHARIAH . . . . .	354
MALACHI . . . . .	440

H O S E A .

PREFACE.

RESPECTING the origin of this prophet nothing is known beyond what is stated in the title, ver. 1. If, as is now generally agreed, Jeroboam II. died about the year B. C. 784, and Hezekiah began to reign about B. C. 728, it would appear from the same verse that the period of his ministry must have embraced, at the very least, fifty-six years. To some this has seemed incredible, chiefly on the ground that his prophecies are comprised within the compass of fourteen brief chapters. It must be remembered, however, that the prophets were not uninterruptedly occupied with the delivery of oracular matter. Sometimes considerable intervals elapsed between their communications, although there can be no doubt that, having once been called to the office of public teachers, they devoted much of their time to the instruction of the people among whom they lived. Besides, there is no reason for believing the contents of the book are all that he ever uttered. They constitute only such portions of his inspired communications respecting the Israelites, as the Holy Spirit saw fit to preserve for the benefit of the Jews, among whose sacred writings they were incorporated.

Hosea was contemporary with Isaiah, Micah, and Amos, and, like the last-mentioned prophet, directed his prophecies chiefly against the kingdom of the ten tribes.

From the general tenor of his book, and from the history of the times contained in the Books of Kings, he manifestly lived in a very corrupt age. Idolatry, a fondness for foreign alliances, civil distractions, and vice of every description abounded, the impending judgments on account of which he was commissioned to announce.

Though he occasionally mentions Judah, yet the entire scene is laid in the land of Israel, where, there can be little doubt, he lived and taught.

With the exception of the first and third chapters, which are in prose, the book is rhythmical, and abounds in highly figurative and metaphorical language. The diction is exceedingly concise and laconic; so much so, that Jerome justly describes him as "commaticus et quasi per sententias loquens." The sentences are in general brief and unconnected; the unexpected change of person is of frequent occurrence; number and gender are often neglected; and the similes and metaphors are frequently so intermixed, that no small degree of attention is required in order to discover their exact bearing and force. He is more scanty in his use of the particles than the other prophets, which adds not a little to the difficulty of interpreting his prophecies. In many instances he is highly animated, energetic, and sublime. Of all the prophets he is, in point of language, the most obscure and hard to be understood.

CHAPTER I.

This chapter contains the inscription, ver. 1; a representation of the idolatrous kingdom of Israel under the image of a female, whom the prophet was ordered to marry, but who should prove false to him, 2, 3; and of the punishment with which it was to be visited, by the symbolical names of the prophet's children, together with a distinct intimation that the kingdom of Judah should not be involved in the same destruction, 4-8. It concludes with a gracious promise of the joint restoration of all the tribes, and their flourishing condition in the land of their fathers, subsequent to the Babylonish captivity.

- 1 THE word of Jehovah which was communicated to Hosea, the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah; and in the days of Jeroboam, the son of Joash, king of Israel.
- 2 The beginning of the word of Jehovah by Hosea. Jehovah said

1. The kings here mentioned are those specified in the inscription to the prophecies of Isaiah, with the addition of Jeroboam, the son of Joash, commonly called Jeroboam the Second, to distinguish him from the son of Nebat. This monarch carried on very successful wars with his northern neighbors, and recovered out of their hands the territories of which they had taken possession; but though thus signally prospered, as an instrument in the hand of Jehovah, he was a wicked character, and greatly promoted idolatry in Israel. See 2 Kings xiv. 23-28.

By הַבָּר, word, is meant the prophetic matter contained in the book. Thus the Targ. שֶׁתִּנְּחַם נְבוֹזָאָה. — הָיָה is commonly rendered "came" in such connection, but it seems preferable to retain its usual signification, only adding another verb, as communicated, imparted, or such like, to suit the English idiom.

2. הַבָּר is equivalent to הָבָר and is rendered as a noun in the LXX., Targ., and Syr. It occurs in the absolute form הַבָּר, Jer. v. 13, with a similar reference to inspired matter. Some have attempted to show from the words הַבָּר הָיָה הָיָה that Hosea was the first of the prophets employed to convey Jehovah's messages to his ancient people; but contrary to the import of the words, which merely refer to the commencement of the prophecies of Hosea. For the use of the preposition בְּ in such connection, see Numb. xii. 2; 2 Sam. xxiii. 2. Comp. ἐν προφήταις, Heb. i. 1.

The transaction here described, and that narrated chap. iii. 1, are clogged with almost insuperable difficulties; and, as may be expected, have given rise to very different modes of interpretation. By most commentators, the things specified are considered to have actually taken place in the outward history of the prophet. Others, as Abarbanel, Kimchi, Maimonides, Ruffinus, Ecolampadius, Marckius, Pococke, and recently Hengstenberg, regard the whole in the light of internal prophetic vision; while Calvin, Luther, Osiander, Rivetus, Daneus, Rosenmüller, Hitzig, and others, treat it as a species of parabolical representation, in which the prophet appropriates to himself imaginary circumstances, aptly fitted to impress the minds of those whom he addressed with a sense of their wickedness, and the punishment to which it exposed them.

To the last of these opinions it may justly be objected that the language, "And Jehovah said to Hosea, Go," etc. is identical with that used Is. vii. 3, viii. 1, xx. 2; Jer. xiii. 1-7, xviii. 1, 2, xix.;

3 So he went and took Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim, and 4 she conceived, and bare him a son. And Jehovah said unto him, Call his name JEZREEL; for yet a little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will 5 cause the kingdom of the house of Israel to cease. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

anticipative as to the relation of the prophet, though typical of what had already taken place on the part of the ten tribes. Viewed as a kingdom they are represented as a mother; and as individual subjects of that kingdom, they are spoken of as her children. The plural אִישׁ וְאִשָּׁתוֹ is emphatic, as אִישׁ וְאִשָּׁתוֹ אֵינֶם, etc. Comp. רָבִיבָה וְזַנִּינִים, chap. iv. 12, and ii. 4. That they are otherwise to be identified appears from the use of תָּקַח, take, which properly applies only to the female, but here governs both nouns, as Jerome observes, ἀπὸ κοινού. The reason of the symbolic action is assigned at the close of the verse—the atrocious conduct of the Israelites in renouncing the pure worship of Jehovah, and ad-dicting themselves to idolatry. Comp. Lev. xvii. 7; xx. 5, 6; Hos. iv. 12. אֶרֶץ, the land, is put, by metonymy, for its inhabitants. The preposition מִן has here the force of a negative, which strongly expresses the state of separation which had taken place.

3. That the names Gomer and Diblaim are to be taken symbolically, as Hengstenberg interprets, does not appear. His exposition of them is fanciful, as is that of Jerome, who takes pretty much the same view. The use of לוֹ, to him, i. e. to Hosea, proves that the child was not of spurious origin. The word is wanting, indeed, in three of Kennicott's MSS., and one of De Rossi's, the Complut. edition of the LXX., the Itala, and the Arab.; but the omission in all probability originated in an attempt to render the phraseology conformable to that of verses 6 and 8.

4, 5. יִזְרְעֵל, Jezreel, i. e. God will scatter, from זָרַע, to scatter, disperse, as in Zech. x. 9; Targ. מִבְּרֵיטָא. It was otherwise the proper name of a city in the tribe of Issachar, on the brow of the central valley in the great plain of the same name, and the royal residence of Ahab and his successors. It was here Jehu exercised acts of the greatest cruelty, 2 Kings x. 11, 14, 17. These acts were speedily to be avenged in the extinction of the royal family, and the entire cessation of the Israelitish state. It had been announced to Jehu that his sons should occupy the throne till the fourth generation, 2 Kings x. 30. Two of these generations had passed away by the time of the prophet—Jeroboam being the great grand-son. In the following generation, the prediction received its accomplishment. By the "bow of Israel" is meant her military prowess, which was completely subdued by the Assyrian army. The valley here mentioned, afterwards called Esdraelon, was famous for the battles fought there from the most ancient times. It consists of the broad elevated plain which stretches from the Jordan to the Mediterranean, near Mount Carmel, and is well adapted to military operations. Accordingly, Dr. E. D. Clarke observes, "Jews, Gentiles, Saracens, Christian Crusaders, and Anti-Christian Frenchmen, Egyptians, Persians, Druses, Turks, and Arabs, warriors out of every nation which is under heaven, have pitched their tents upon the plains of Esdraelon, and have beheld the various banners of their nations wet with the dews of Tabor and Hermon." It was, therefore, natural that the Israelites should endeavor to make a stand against the Assyrians in this valley; but being overpowered by numbers were obliged to succumb to the enemy. Of this discomfiture, and the consequent dispersion of the ten tribes, the name of the prophet's son was symbolical.

6 And she conceived again, and bare a daughter; and He said to him, Call her name LO-RUHAMA; for I will no more have mercy upon the house of Israel, but will utterly take them away. But I will have mercy upon the house of Judah, and will save them by Jehovah their God, and will not save them by bow, nor by sword, nor by battle, nor by horses, nor by horsemen.

8 And she weaned LO-RUHAMA, and conceived, and bare a son. And He said, Call his name LO-AMMI; for ye are not my people, and I will not be yours. Nevertheless the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which can neither be measured nor numbered; and it shall be, that instead of its having been said to them, Ye are not my people, it shall be said to them, Ye are the children of the living God. 11 Then shall the children of Judah, and the children of Israel, be

6, 7. לֹא רִוְחָמָה, Lo-RUHAMA, i. e. unpitied. לֹא נָשָׂא elsewhere signifies to forgive; and were the verb preceded by the copulative ו, it might be so rendered here, only supplying the negative אֵל from the preceding clause; but as כִּי, but, excludes such repetition, the phrase must be rendered as in the translation. LXX. ἀντιμισθόμενος ἀντιτάξομαι αὐτοῖς. Syr.

כָּסַף מִיָּמִיךָ לְנַפְשִׁי. Vulg. oblivione obliviscor eorum — reading נָשָׂא, which is found in De Rossi's MS. 596, at first hand, instead of נָשָׂא. The kingdom of Israel was never more to be restored, though, in conjunction with the Jews, the scattered Israelites were to return to Canaan after the Babylonish captivity, ver. 11. It was to be very different with the Jewish power. Though likewise attacked, and threatened with utter extinction by Sennacherib, they were mercifully delivered by a divine interposition, without all human aid. And though they were afterwards carried away to Babylon, their civil polity was restored, which was not the case with the Israelites. מִלְחָמָה, war, stands elliptically for מִלְחָמָה אֲנָשֵׁי, warriors.

8. The mention here made of the weaning of Lo-Ruhamah, seems designed rather to fill up the narrative, than to describe figuratively any distinct treatment of the Israelites.

9. לֹא אֲמִי, Lo-AMMI, i. e. not my people, further sets forth the rejection of the ten tribes by Jehovah. Nothing could have been better calculated to make an impression upon the minds of his countrymen, than for the prophet thus to give to one child after another a name strongly significant of the disastrous circumstances to which they should be reduced. Instead of לֹא אֲמִי, I will not be yours, i. e. your God, Houbigant and Newcome would read לֹא אֵל-הֵיחָם, I am not your God: but though the antithesis is common, it admits of an ellipsis, just as in Ezek. xvi. 8, there is an ellipsis of הָאֵל. Comp. Ps. cxviii. 6. The MSS. and versions exhibit no variation.

10, 11. These verses contain a gracious promise of the recovery of the descendants of the Israelites, along with those of their brethren the Jews, at the termination of the Babylonish captivity. Though entirely and for ever broken up as a distinct kingdom, yet, during the period of their residence in the regions of the East, whither they were to be transported, they should greatly multiply, and afterwards be reinstated in the privileges of adoption, as members of the theocracy. The eleventh verse teaches the reunion of all the tribes, and their return under Zerubbabel to their own land. That this prince is meant by the ראש אֶתְרָה, one head, must be maintained, gathered together, and they shall appoint for themselves one 12 head, and shall come up out of the land. For great shall be the day of Jezreel. Say ye unto your brethren, AMMI; and to your sisters, RUHAMAH.

since the Messiah, who is by many supposed to be intended, is nowhere spoken of as appointed by men, but always as the choice and appointment of God, אֲרָץ, land, signifies, in this connection the country of Babylon, not excluding those other regions of the East in which the descendants of the different tribes were found. יִזְרְעֵל, Jezreel, is obviously used here in a different acceptation from that in which it is taken ver. 4. That of sowing is alone appropriate. Industrious should be the period when the tribes should again be sown in their own country. Comp. chap. ii. 22, 23; Jer. xxxi. 27.

The principle on which part of ver. 10, and chap. ii. 23, are quoted, Rom. ix. 25, 26, and 1 Pet. ii. 10, seems to be that of analogy. As God had taken pity upon the ten tribes, who had become heathens, as it respects idolatrous and other practices, so he had pitied the Gentiles who had been in the same circumstances. What was said of the one class was equally descriptive of the other.

CHAPTER II.

The prophet proceeds in this chapter to apply the symbolical relation described in the preceding. He calls the Israelites to reform their wicked conduct, 1, 2: threatens them with a series of calamities, the effect of which should be their repentance and return to the service of Jehovah, 3-15; and promises a gracious restoration to his favor, and the enjoyment of security and prosperity in their own land, 16-23.

- 1 Contend with your mother, contend;
- 2 For she is not my wife,
Neither am I her husband:
That she may remove her lewdness from her face,
And her adulteries from between her breasts.

1, 2. The individual members of the Israelitish state are here summoned to urge upon their nation the consideration of its wickedness in having departed from God. Of these the nation of the ten tribes was the אִמָּה, mother. Cocceius, Dathe, Kuinoel, and Rückert, render כִּי, that, and interpret: Argue the point with your nation, and show her that in consequence of her wicked conduct all relations between us have ceased. The casual signification of the conjunction, however, seems preferable. The words which it introduces form a parenthesis; and יִזְרְעֵל, which, though future, is to be rendered potentially: that she may remove connects with רִיבָהּ, contend ye. The וְ is, as frequently to be taken τελευκῶς. The repetition of רִיבָהּ is emphatic, as ducite in Virgil:—

“Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnin.”

By זִנְיֹנִים וְנִאֲפָסִים, fornications and adulteries, are meant the tokens or indications of lewd character:—boldness of

- 3 Lest I strip her naked,
 And set her as in the day when she was born,
 And make her as the desert,
 And make her like a dry land,
 And cause her to die with thirst.
- 4 Upon her children I will have no mercy,
 For they are lewd children.
- 5 Because their mother hath committed lewdness,
 Their parent hath acted shamefully;
 For she said: I will follow my lovers,
 That give me my bread and my water,
 My wool and my flax, my oil and my wine.

countenance, and an immodest exposure of the breasts. Both forms are reduplicate, to express the enormity of the evil. What the prophet has in view is the reckless and unblushing manner in which the Israelitish nation practised idolatry. The LXX. have read מַפְנֵי, "from my face;" improperly in this connection, though a similar phrase occurs elsewhere.

3. A striking accumulation of synonymous denunciations for the purpose of describing the state of complete destitution to which the idolatrous Israelites would be reduced by the infliction of divine judgments. They should be placed in circumstances analogous to those in which they had originally been in Egypt. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 4; xxiii. 25, 26, 28, 29. For מִדְּבָר comp. Jer. ii. 6.

4. Individuals might expect that they would escape, and not be treated as the nation in its collective capacity; but Jehovah here declares, that he would treat them according to the demerits of their individual wickedness. For בְּנֵי מִלְכֵי זְנוּנִים, ch. i. 2. The second noun is, as frequently, used adjectively.

5. בי, since or because, and לְבָבָהּ, therefore, ver. 8, correspond to each other, the former marking the protasis, the latter the apodosis. The second בי introduces parenthetically an illustration of the statement made at the beginning of the verse. הַרְהָהּ is the feminine participle of הָרָה to conceive, be pregnant, Comp. הַזְּרֵתִי, Song iii. 4. According to the Jewish exegesis, הַרְהָהּ, Gen. xlix. 26, is used of male progenitors. The Targ. and Jarchi suppose teachers to be here meant; but the term is merely a synonyme of מִס, mother, in the preceding hemistich. Interpreters are not agreed respecting the rendering of הַרְהָהּ. In most instances in which the word occurs it certainly has the transitive signification; but here the intransitive seems more appropriate. Comp. Jer. vi. 15, where it is explained by כִּי הִזְעֵבָה עָשׂוּ. Comp. also הַרְהָהּ, הַרְהָהּ, as Hiph. intransitives. The paragogic הַרְהָהּ, elongating the future, is expressive of a decided purpose, desire, or bent of mind; it is my settled determination to follow those who richly supply my wants in return for my religious services. מִזֵּבֵי, lovers, which is here employed metaphorically to denote idols, is seldom used except in a bad sense. This interpretation, which is that of Joseph Kimchi and Abarbanel, is more in keeping with the symbolical character of the prophecy, than that suggested by the Targ. בְּנֵי זְנוּנִים, which takes the word in the sense of idolaters, or idolatrous nations, such as Assyria, etc. Comp. as strictly parallel, Jer. xlv. 17-19. The language indicates complete alienation of heart from Jehovah, the only giver of all good, and a blind confidence in, and devotion to the service of idols. The articles specified comprehend both the necessaries and the luxuries of ancient Hebrew life. שֶׁמֶן, oil, is much in use among the Orientals, both in its simple

- 6 Therefore, behold! I will hedge up thy way with thorns,
And will raise a wall, that she may not find her paths.
- 7 And she shall eagerly pursue her lovers, but she shall not overtake them;
And shall seek them, but shall not find them:
Then shall she say: I will go and return to my first husband,
For it was better with me than than now.
- 8 Because she knew not that it was I that gave her
The corn, and the new wine, and the oil;
And furnished her abundantly with silver and gold,
Which they made into images of Baal:
- 9 Therefore I will take back my corn in its time,
And my new wine in its season;
And I will recover my wool and my flax,
Designed to cover her nakedness.

state, and as compounded with other ingredients. It is specially applied as ointment to the body after bathing. Comp. Psalm xxiii. 5; Prov. xxi. 17.  $\text{יִשְׁתָּי}$  denotes here all kinds of artificial drink, being used in distinction from water. The Aldine edition of the LXX. reads  $\delta \text{ οἶνός μου}$ ; but the usual reading is  $\text{πάντα ὅσα μοι καθήκει}$ , with which the Targ. and Syr. agree. The word occurs, Ps. cii. 10; Prov. iii. 8; and is evidently derived from  $\text{הִשְׁתָּי}$ . Arab  $\text{سقى}$ ;

Eth.  $\text{ሰብሶ}$ : to make to drink, to water.

6. For  $\text{ה}$  in  $\text{הִשְׁתָּי}$  the LXX. Arab. and Syr. read  $\text{הִשְׁתָּי}$ , but most likely in order to produce uniformity in the use of the affix. The metaphor here employed is borrowed from the condition of a traveller whose progress is interrupted by a hedge thrown across his path, or who can no longer pass through the gap of an enclosure which used to be in his way; and who is consequently reduced to straits and difficulties. Turned out of his accustomed course, he is bewildered, and strives in vain to extricate himself. Comp. Job xix. 8; Lam. iii. 7, 9.  $\text{גִּדְרָה}$ , a wall, is pointed  $\text{גִּדְרָה}$ , in the editions of J. H. Michaelis, and Jahn, and this punctuation Hengstenberg attempts, without success, to defend. The wall means the external hindrances which the captivity interposed between the ten tribes and the objects of their idolatrous attachment.

7. Convinced by bitter experience of the folly of idolatry, the Israelites would renounce it, and return to the service of Jehovah.  $\text{הִשְׁתָּי}$  is intensive, and expresses the ardor of the pursuit. The Vau in  $\text{הִשְׁתָּי}$ , marking the apodosis, points out the consequence or result of the failure — a resolution to turn from idols to serve the living God. It might be rendered so that, but not in order that, as Manger proposes.  $\text{אָז}$ , then, designates the period previous to the apostasy of the ten tribes, when in reward for external obedience, they enjoyed temporal blessings. Thus the Targ.  $\text{אָרְי שָׁב לִי בַד הַגּוֹיִתִּי פִלְתִּי אֶתְּנָה$ .

8, 9.  $\text{וְ}$  and  $\text{וְ}$  at the beginning of these verses stand in the same relation to each other as  $\text{בִּי}$  and  $\text{לְבָבְךָ}$ , verses 5th and 6th. Before  $\text{אֶתְּנָה}$  supply  $\text{אֶתְּנָה}$ . By  $\text{בְּצִלְבָּא}$ , Baal, the prophet means "images of Baal," the singular being used collectively for the plural. Comp. ch. viii. 4, where  $\text{עֲצָבִים}$ , idols, correspond to  $\text{בְּצִלְבָּא}$  in the present case. Hitzig would restrict  $\text{אֶתְּנָה}$ , understood, to  $\text{זָהָב}$ , gold, supposing the golden calves set up at Bethel and Dan to be meant; but, as it does not appear that the name of Baal was ever applied to them, his interpretation is groundless. See chap. viii. 4; which also clearly proves that by  $\text{אֶתְּנָה}$

- 10 And now I will expose her vileness before her lovers,
 And none shall deliver her out of my hand.
 11 And I will cause all her joy to cease;

בְּצַבֵּי we are not to understand the consecration of the silver and gold to the service of Baal, but the actual conversion of these precious metals into images of that idol, or at least into plating with which to cover such as were made of wood. 2 Chron. xxiv. 7, to which Secker appeals in favor of the former meaning of the phrase, is also to be so understood. The rendering of Gesenius, "which they offered to Baal," is equally objectionable; the phrase בְּצַבֵּי, when thus used, being referred to sacrificial victims. Targ. בְּצַבֵּי עֲבָדֵי לֵאֱלֹהֵי אֲרָם. Hengstenberg attempts to support the position that consecration is meant; but his reasons are altogether futile. The very passage which he quotes as parallel (Ezek. xvi. 17, 18,) is directly opposed to his exegesis of the phrase. Baal was perhaps the most ancient of all the gods worshipped in the East. He was, according to Dr. Münter, the representative of the sun, the generative power in the eastern mythology, and had associated with him Astarte, the female power, which was viewed as representing the moon. Gesenius, however, is of opinion, that under these names the planets Jupiter and Venus were worshipped. See on Isaiah xvii. 8. From the frequency with which his name occurs in compound Phœnician names, as Hannibal, Hasdrubal, etc., the worship of Baal appears to have been common among that people; and from them, especially the Tyrians, it was borrowed by the Israelites. Mention is made of this idolatry in the time of the Judges, see chap. ii. 11, 13; iii. 7; vi. 25; it became prevalent even in Judah in the days of Ahaz; and, though abolished by the pious king Josiah, was revived by Manasseh. In Israel it rapidly gained ground after the introduction of the worship of the golden calves by Jeroboam, and reached its height in the reigns of Ahab and Hosea. The verb שׁוּב, to return, turn back, is frequently used adverbially. So here שׁוּב וְלָקַחְתִּי, I will again take away, or take back, i. e. deprive of. The meaning is, that instead of reaping the fruits of the earth, etc. as they expected at the usual season, they should be trodden down, consumed, or taken away by the Assyrian army under Shalmaneser. Jehovah vindicates his right to the various articles specified, because they had been bestowed by his providence; calling them his, with obvious reference to ver. 5, in which Israel had called them hers. The land and all it contained were specially his. בְּצַבֵּי; Arab. نَصَل, liberatus fuit, expresses the idea of rescuing or recovering what was unjustly held. The ב in בְּצַבֵּי denotes end or purpose, and is quite in its place; so that there is no necessity, with Houbigant, Dathe, Horsley, Newcome, Boothroyd, and others, to change it into צ, out of deference to the LXX. who render τοῦ μὴ καλύπτειν.

10. בְּצַבֵּי occurs only in this place, but is obviously equivalent to בְּצַבֵּי, atrocious, shameful, detestable wickedness. Targ. בְּצַבֵּי, her shame, LXX. τὴν ἀκαθαρσίαν αὐτῆς; Syr. حِدْشَمَتِهَا, nudatio in malum, pudenda. Cast. ; Arab. عورتها, her nakedness. Occuring in immediate connection with the preceding עֲרֹוּת, nudity, it conveys the superadded idea of obscenity, i. e. by metonymy, the results or consequences of idolatrous conduct, a complete destitution of all the necessaries of life. Comp. Jer. xiii. 26; Nah. iii. 5. This exposure was to be made in the very presence of the idols which Israel had served, none of which should be able to afford deliverance. By a prosopopœia, the idols are first endowed with the faculty of vision, and then their utter imbecility is strikingly set forth. שׁוּב, not only signifies man, but any one, and is frequently used of inanimate objects. In connection with שׁוּב, it signifies none.

11, 12, explain the denouncement made ver. 10. The country was to be desolated by the invading armies, and all

- Her festivals, her new moons, and her sabbaths,
 And all her appointed assemblies.
- 12 I will also lay waste her vines and her fig-trees,
 Of which she said: They are my hire
 Which my lovers have given me:
 I will turn them into a forest,
 And the beasts of the field shall devour them.
- 13 I will avenge upon her the days of the Baals,
 On which she burned incense to them;
 And decked herself with nose-rings and trinkets,
 And followed her lovers,
 And forgot me, saith Jehovah.

the festivities and seasons of religious observance were to cease. The different terms here employed are those by which the seasons of worship, etc. appointed by Jehovah in the Mosaic law, are designated; but it is not hence to be inferred that such were observed according to his appointment. The Israelites professed to worship him, but, at the same time, served other gods. While from habit they continued to keep them as portions of time unappropriated to the ordinary occupations of life, they were doubtless converted into seasons of carnal indulgence. The nouns are those of multitude, and must be rendered in the plural.  $\text{הַבָּצֵק}$ , and  $\text{הַתְּבַשֵּׁל}$ , are likewise to be taken as collectives, or rather, as Horsley suggests, plantations of vines and fig-trees. These should be left uncultivated on the removal of the inhabitants into foreign regions. Comp. Is. v. 6; vii. 23, 24.  $\text{הַבָּצֵק}$ , like  $\text{הַתְּבַשֵּׁל}$ , is used only of the hire of a harlot, and is peculiarly appropriate in this connection. Thus Tanchum on chap. viii. 9; —  $\text{הוּא מַא בִּידֵל-לְהַזְנִיּוֹת מִן הַמְּעֵל}$

17, 18. The wild beast is here to be taken literally, and not figuratively, as Abarbanel does, — supposing the heathen invaders to be meant.

13.  $\text{הַבָּצֵקִים}$ , the Baals, i. e. the idols which they had set up to Baal in the cities and different parts of the country, as well as in their private houses. Hence the names Baal-Gad, Baal-Hermon, Baal-meon, etc. By  $\text{הַבָּצֵקִים הַתְּבַשֵּׁלִים}$ , are meant the days specially devoted to the celebration of idolatrous rites. To cause grateful odors to ascend from the altars, was considered peculiarly acceptable to the objects of worship. It appears to have originated partly in the gratification afforded by agreeable smells, and partly in the custom of burning perfumes in rooms, etc. with a view to purify them from noxious vapors.  $\text{הַבָּצֵקִים}$  and  $\text{הַתְּבַשֵּׁלִים}$  appear to be employed here to denote female ornaments generally; though strictly taken, the former commonly signifies such rings as the oriental females wear in the nostril. See on Is. iii. 21.  $\text{הַבָּצֵקִים}$ , from  $\text{הַבָּצֵק}$ , to be smooth, polished; Arab.  $\text{حلي}$ , ornavit monilibus mundo suo (mulierem),  $\text{حلية}$ , mundo ornata, denotes a trinket, necklace, or the like. According to Firuzabad:  $\text{مَا يَزِينُ نَحْمَ مِّنْ مَّصْبُوغِ الْمَعْدَنِيَّاتِ لَوْ الْحِجَارَاتِ}$  quodcumque ornamentum vel e metallis conflatum, vel e lapidibus pretiosis confectum. Rosenm.; the Syr. and Targ. have pearls. That courtesans decked themselves with the most costly ornaments they could command is mentioned by Juvenal, Sat. vi. :—

“*Mæchis foliata parantur;
 Emitur his quicquid gracilis huc mit-titis Indi.*”

The prophet has in view the gay ornaments in which the Israelites decked

- 14 Nevertheless, behold! I will allure her,
 And, though I lead her into the desert,
 Yet I will speak soothingly to her.
- 15 And I will grant her her vineyards from thence,
 And the valley of Achor for a door of hope :

themselves on idolatrous holidays. Their entirely abandoning themselves to the service of idols, and their dereliction of the God of their fathers, are brought forward at the conclusion of this description of their conduct, in order to heighten the aggravation of their guilt, and render the announcement of the kindly disposition of Jehovah towards them, at the beginning of the following verse, the more surprising.

14. לְכֹן cannot with any propriety be rendered "therefore" in this connection, if the following words are to be regarded as promissory of good, and not as containing a further threatening of punishment. And that they are to be so regarded, the subsequent context sufficiently shows. This particle must therefore possess the force of the Arab.

لكن

verumtamen, but yet, notwithstanding, nevertheless. It thus marks the unexpected transition from threats to promises, as Is. vii. 14; x. 24; xxvii. 9; xxx. 18, et freq.—פָּתַח, of which מִפְּתוֹחַ is the Piel participle, signifies to open, be open, easily persuasible; hence in Piel, both in a good and a bad sense, to persuade, allure, prevail upon by suitable inducements. It is here necessarily to be taken in the sense of inducing or gaining over to that which is good, by the use of soothing and persuasive means, as the concluding words of the verse יִדְבַרְתִּי אֲלֵי-לְבָבָהּ abundantly prove. As the Israelites were to be forcibly removed from their land by the king of Assyria, there is a singular want of propriety in assigning to פָּתַח, in פָּתַח לְבָבָהּ, its usual copulative power. It is obviously to be understood exceptively, or as introducing a kind of parenthetical sentence, expressive of what was to take place in the history of the ten tribes previously to their conversion from idolatry; and which, though it might seem severe, was indispensable for the attainment of that object. For this signification of פָּתַח, See Ruth ii. 13; 1 Sam. i. 5; Eccles. ix. 16; Mal. ii. 14; and other instances in Noldius, No. 46. Bauer thinks the desert between Assyria and Judea is meant, through which the Israelites were to be conducted on their release; Döderlein, Theol. Biblioth. explains it of Judea itself, at that time desolate and waste. I imagine the country of Babylon is intended. Jehovah is here said to do what he would employ the Assyrians in doing. For the phrase לְכֹן עַל לְבָבָהּ, see Is. xl. 2. When reduced to circumstances of affliction in the countries of the East, whither they were to be carried, Jehovah declares that he would administer consolation to them; holding out to them the cheering prospect of restoration, on their repentance to their native land.

15. The Israelites had altogether forfeited their possessions; nor could they acquire a new right to them except in the way of a fresh grant from the Lord. This grant he here promises them, as he had of old promised Canaan to their fathers when in the wilderness. מִצִּדְדֵי, thence, means, returning from the wilderness; just as מִצִּדְדֵי indicates the homeward direction of the exiles. To take מִצִּדְדֵי as a particle of time, which Gesenius proposes, is less suitable. "The valley of Achor" lay in the vicinity of Jericho, and was noted in the sacred history for the judgment inflicted upon Achan. From Is. lxx. 10, it appears to have been a fertile and pleasant region; and on this account alone it is thought by Calvin, Zanchius, Rivetus, and others, to be referred to by our prophet. Most of the Rabbins, however, and after them, many Christian interpreters, consider allusion to be made to the name, which signifies trouble or molestation, and to this I incline. This valley had proved very inauspicious to the Hebrews on their former entrance into Canaan. They had been forced to turn their backs before

- And she shall sing there, as in the days of her youth,
 Even as in the day when she came up from the land of Egypt.
 16 And it shall be in that day, saith Jehovah,
 That thou shalt call me, ISH;
 And shalt no more call me, BAAL.
 17 For I will take away the names of the Baals from her mouth,
 And they shall no more be remembered by their name.
 18 And I will make a covenant for them in that day
 With the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven,
 And with the reptiles of the ground;

the native inhabitants, and their hearts melted, and became as water, Josh. vii. 5, 8, 12, 24, 26. But on their return from the captivity, the exiles would pass through it with the undisturbed expectation of a peaceable and joyful occupation of the country. By דַּלְתֵי הַקֹּדֶשׁ, a door of hope, is meant a hopeful entrance into the holy land. — לְעֵבְרָה, the LXX. Syr. Arab. and Symm. take in the signification to be humbled or afflicted; and this idea is adhered to by Grotius, who combines it with that of singing: "Intellige autem carmen fletus et precum;" but that of celebrating the Divine goodness in songs of gratitude and joy, better suits the connection. The ה in הִנֵּנִי, as before observed, indicates the homeward direction of the exiles — yet not without special reference to their approach to the valley of Achor. The point of comparison, as it respects the singing, seems to be the Song of Moses at the Red Sea. As the people then united in celebrating the goodness of Jehovah displayed in their deliverance, so should the returning Israelites do, on again taking possession of their native land.

16, 17. The word בַּעַל, Baal, had originally been used in its unexceptionable acceptance of husband, and is thus applied to Jehovah, Is. liv. 5; but as it had become common in its application by the Israelites to the heathen deities which they had worshipped, and besides, conveyed the idea of possession and rule, rather than that of affection, God here declares that in future he would be called ישׁ, Ish, the name more usually employed to express the relation of husband, and which was not liable to the same objections: —

"Sic mihi servitium video, dominamque paratam, Jam mihi libertas illa paterna vale."
Tibullus, lib. ii. Eleg. 4.

Before ישׁ, two MSS. the LXX. Aq. Syr. insert לְ; while two MSS., and originally seven more, and four printed editions, omit it after תִּקְרָא. — בְּבָעַלִּים, is not here to be taken as a plural of excellency, but is used, according to its strict import, to denote the different images of Baal worshipped by the Israelites, such as Baal-Gad, Baal-Ammon, etc. Comp. Exod. xxiii. 13; Zech. xiii. 2. The prophecy was fully accomplished at the return from the Babylonish captivity.

18. Such should be the security of the returned exiles under the immediate care and protection of Jehovah, that every thing capable of injuring them should be rendered perfectly harmless. The irrational animals should be restrained, as if under the bond of an inviolable compact; and the Assyrian armies should no more attack them. Some understand the former part of the verse figuratively — the different creatures there specified denoting men corresponding to them in disposition; but the language is rather to be regarded as hyperbolic, being merely intended to heighten the effect. Comp. Job v. 23; Ezek. xxxiv. 25. Before הַבְּהֵמָה, supply בְּלֵי, or אֲנָשִׁי, as in chap. i. 7. Targ. יִבְדֵּה אֶת־הַבְּהֵמָה. — אֶשְׁבֹּר מִן־ is a pregnant phrase, meaning, I will break and remove away from. שֶׁבַע is here expressive of the

- The bow, and the sword, and the battle, I will break and remove from the land,
 And will cause them to recline securely.
- 19 I will also betroth thee to myself forever;
 I will even betroth thee to myself with righteousness and with justice,
 And with kindness, and with tender compassion.
- 20 Yea, I will betroth thee to myself with faithfulness:
 And thou shalt know Jehovah.
- 21 And it shall be in that day,
 I will respond, saith Jehovah, reclining posture in which the orientals indulge whenever they are released from active exertion. At the time predicted there would be no enemy or danger to break in upon their repose.

“*Ipsæ lacte domum referent distenta capellæ
 Ubera, nec magnos metuent armenta leones.
 Ipsa tibi blandos fundent cunabula flores.
 Occidet et serpens, et fallax herba veneni Occidet, Assyrium vulgo nascetur amomum.*” Virgil, Eclog. iv.

19, 20. אָרַשׁ signifies to contract a matrimonial alliance, and is here specially selected in order to impress the minds of the Israelites with a sense of the distinguished character of the Divine benignity. Though they had rendered themselves totally unworthy of his regard, he declares that he would treat them as if they had never apostatized to idolatry. He would form a new conjugal relation, as with a female in her virgin state. The triple repetition of the verb expresses intensity of desire, and gives the strongest assurance to the party to which the promise is made. לְעוֹלָם, for ever, is to be taken as Gen. xiii. 15; Exod. xxxii. 13; Is. xxxv. 10. The several particulars here enumerated further discover, by the amplification which they form, the great kindness of Jehovah to his people. By “righteousness” and “justice,” is meant every equitable obligation which God could be expected to place himself under in the new conjugal relation — all that the Israelites could possibly expect in the way of supply from their Divine protector. To these, however, are added “kindness,” and “tender compassion,” which express the strong internal affection from which the former should proceed, and the high degree of interest which God would take in his recovered people. To remove every doubt from their minds, he crowns the whole by a gracious assurance that his engagements should be “faithfully” performed. רַחֲמֵי, τὰ σπλάγχνα, lit. the bowels, but commonly employed figuratively to denote tender affection or love. Horsley’s interpretation of the terms in application to our Saviour, is, like most of his exegesis, in the highest degree fanciful, being totally unsupported by the scope and connection of the passage. The knowledge of Jehovah here predicated is not speculative, or a bare intellectual acquaintance with his character, but experimental, or that which results from the actual enjoyment of his love. Instead of אֲנִי-יְהוָה, twenty-six MSS., originally thirteen more, now two, and perhaps other two, two editions, supported by the Vulg., read אֲנִי יְהוָה, i. e. they shall know that I am Jehovah.

21, 22. One of the most beautiful instances of prosopopeia to be found in Scripture. Comp. the address to the Nile in Tibullus, lib. i. Eleg. vii. ver. 25:—
 “Te propter nullos tellus tua postulat imbres, Arida nec pluvio supplicat herba Jovi.”
 While second causes have here their

- I will respond to the heavens,
 And they shall respond to the earth, 22 And the earth shall respond to the corn, and the new wine, and the oil,
 And they shall respond to Jezreel.
 23 For I will sow her for myself in the land,
 And will have mercy upon LO-RUHAMAḤ,
 And will say to LO-AMMI, Thou art my people;
 And they shall say, My God!

appropriate place allotted to them, as so many connected links in the chain of Divine Providence, the sovereign influence of the Great First Cause is strongly asserted by the emphatic repetition of אָנֹכִי, I will respond to, or answer. It must, however, be observed, that this verb does not occur the first time in one of Kennicott's MSS.; it has originally been wanting in another of De Rossi's; and is omitted in the LXX. Syr. and Arab. One of De Rossi's MSS. omits אָנֹכִי אֲנִי אָנֹכִי entirely; and another, the second יִזְרְעֵאל originally.—יִזְרְעֵאל, Jezreel, here means that which God hath sown, i. e. his people whom he had scattered, but whom he would again restore to their native soil. Comp. chap. i. ver. 4, and 11.

23. וְ is causal, introducing a declaration which is designed to account for the appropriation of the name Jezreel at the end of the preceding verse. The metaphor is agricultural. The rest of the verse contains a repetition of what is promised, chap. i. 10.

CHAPTER III.

This chapter contains a new symbolical representation of the regard of Jehovah for his people, and of their condition at a period subsequent to their re-establishment in Canaan at the return from Babylon. The prophet is commanded to become reconciled to Gomer, though she had proved unfaithful to him, as predicted chap. i. 2, ver. 1. He obeys the command, and purchases her from the individual with whom she was living in adultery, but stipulates that she was to wait for a lengthened period before she could be restored to the enjoyment of her conjugal rights, 2, 3. In the two last verses, the symbolical proceeding is explained of a long period during which the Hebrews were to live without the celebration of their ancient rites, and at the same time be free from all idolatrous practices. The direct prediction respecting their conversion to the Messiah, ver. 5, clearly proves, that their condition during the present dispersion is intended.

1 AND Jehovah said unto me: Go again, love a woman beloved

1. וְיָדָה, again, obviously refers back to chap. i. 2. The transaction here commanded, bearing so near a resemblance to what is enjoined in that chapter, has occasioned nearly the same diversity of interpretation. To me there appears no consistent method of explaining it but that which assumes an identity of the

by a friend, yet an adulteress, according as Jehovah loveth the children of Israel, though they have turned to other gods, and 2 love grape cakes. So I bought her to myself for fifteen pieces female here specified with Gomer, whom the prophet had previously married. For, first, such construction is absolutely required by the analogy. It was Israel that stood in the relation of wife to Jehovah from first to last. No other nation was admitted to the same relation. Secondly, the female is one already married, but who had proved unfaithful; which was precisely the case with Israel. Thirdly, except she had been the prophet's own wife, who had become unfaithful to him, there would be no point in comparing his love to her with that borne by Jehovah to idolatrous Israel. Fourthly, a command to love the wife of another man, who, notwithstanding her infidelity was still attached to her, would be totally repugnant to every idea of moral justice and propriety. Lastly, the command is not קח, take, as in the former instance, chap. i. 2, the usual formula by which marriage is expressed; but אהב, love, i. e. renew thy kindness to her; receive her back into thy house and make kind provision for her. This view of the passage is decidedly adopted by Ewald in his Propheten des Alten Bundes, recently published.

The words אֶהְבֶּהּ אֶת־אִשְׁתֵּי־רֵעִי, are equivalent to, "Go, love thy wife, to whom, though an adulteress, thou art attached;" but the indefinite form אִשָּׁה, a wife, is purposely selected, instead of אִשְׁתִּי, thy wife, in order to intimate the state of separation in which they lived. For the same purpose רֵעִי, a friend or companion, is used, and not אִשְׁתִּי, her husband; it being here employed not so much as a term of endearment, as indicating that, whatever might be his disposition towards her, they were not living on the same terms as formerly. Comp. for this acceptance of רֵעִי, Jer. iii. 26. The LXX. mistaking the word for רַעִי, evil, and taking אֶהְבֶּהּ for the Benon. אֶהְבֶּהּ, render ἀγαπῶσαν πορνῆρά; for which the

Syr. has ܐܝܢܐܢܐ ܕܢܝܘܢܐ ܕܢܝܘܢܐ

ܘܨܘܠܐ, an adulterous woman who loveth evil things. The words אֶהְבֶּהּ and אֶהְבֶּהּ, are to be connected with רֵעִי, and not with אֶהְבֶּהּ. The kind feeling of the prophet towards his faithless wife corresponded, as a type, to the love of God towards the idolatrous Israelites. The sentence just quoted in part, as well as the words אֶהְבֶּהּ, form only two out of numerous instances in which Hosea uses the language of the Pentateuch, as Hävernick has shown in his Handbuch der histor. crit. Einleit. in das A. T. 1 Theil. 2 Abtheil. p. 608. אֶהְבֶּהּ, have been variously interpreted. LXX. πέμματα μετὰ σταφίδος or σταφίδων, baked meats with raisins. Aq. renders the former word by παλαιά, evidently reading אֶהְבֶּהּ. According to the Hexap. Syr. Theod.

adopts the same rendering: ܐܝܢܐܢܐ

ܕܠܐܬܝܢܐ. Symm. ἀκάθρους; Vulg.

vinacia uvarum; Syr. ܐܝܢܐܢܐ ܕܢܝܘܢܐ placenta wis passis condita. Junius, Tremellius, and others, have flagons of wine, as in our common version. The word אֶהְבֶּהּ is employed by Jonathan in his Targ. on Exod. xvi. 31, to express the meaning of אֶהְבֶּהּ, a flat cake. The most probable derivation is from אֶהְבֶּהּ, to press, compress; and the meaning will be, pressed cakes of dried grapes. Such cakes are highly esteemed in the East, on account of their sweet taste, and doubtless formed part of the offerings presented to idols, and afterwards eaten at idolatrous feasts.

2. Because the purchase of wives was not uncommon, as it still is, in eastern countries, (See Michaelis on the Laws of Moses, Art. LXXXV. Grant's Nestorians, p. 214; Perkins's Eight Years in Persia, p. 236,) most expositors have supposed that such a transaction is intended in this place. The fact, however, that the price here specified, one half in

3 of silver, and for an homer and an half of barley. And I said unto her: Thou shalt remain for me many days; thou shalt not commit lewdness, nor become any man's; and I also will remain 4 for thee. For the children of Israel shall remain many days money, and the other half in grain, was the exact amount of what was allowed for a female slave, Exod. xxi. 32, induces the belief that the payment was made by the prophet for the liberation of his own wife, who had become the property of the person with whom she had been living in adultery. The sum was too parsimonious to have been given as a dowery. The signification of buying as attaching to כָּרָה, is sufficiently established by Deut. ii. 6, and Job xl. 30, and the use of the Arab. كَرَى, Conj. vi. and viii., conduxit rem, LXX. ἐμισθώσαμένη. Hengstenberg's attempt to explain it here of digging, in the sense of boring the ear in token of a state of slavery, is unsuccessful. A לֶתֶּהֶק, according to the Rabbins, contained fifteen seahs, or half an homer. Theod. γομὸρ ἀλφειῶν; Symm. θύλακος κριθῶν; but the other Greek versions, ἡμίκορον, half a cor, which was equal to an homer. The LXX. unaccountably have νέβελ οἴνου. The repetition of כָּרָה, is not unusual in Hebrew, but the abbreviated form of expression is better English.

3. יָשֵׁב properly signifies to sit, but likewise to dwell, remain, etc. לֹא תִדְוָנִי explains its meaning here to be a refraining from all cohabitation with others. לֵךְ, and אֶלְלֵךְ, are correlates; and אֶנִּי forms an antithesis; "while I, on the other hand," etc. As the wife of the prophet was to continue for a long time in a state of separation equally from paramours and from her husband, and he was likewise to form no connection with any other woman, so the Israelites should long live without serving either false gods or Jehovah; while, on his part, he would enter into no national relationship to any other people. This application of the symbol is distinctly marked by כִּי, and by the resumption of יָשֵׁב, ver. 4. The choice of the fuller preposition אֶל, in אֶלְלֵךְ, in preference to לֵךְ, seems designed to express the strength of affection with which the symbolical female was still to be regarded; consequently the powerful inclination of the Lord towards his unfaithful people.

4. This verse describes a period of great length, during which the Israelites were to have no civil polity, either under regal or princely rule; no sacred sacrifice; no idolatrous statue; no mediating priest; and no images or tutelary deities. This period cannot be that of their dispersion previous to the return from Babylon; for the restoration of the wife of the prophet prefigured the restoration which took place on that return, agreeably to chap. ii. 19, 20, 23. It is true that when they were brought back along with the Jewish exiles, the Israelites had no more any civil or ecclesiastical polity of their own; neither did they relapse into idolatry: but still, as in common with their brethren, they were subject to the same political rule, and offered their sacrifices to Jehovah at Jerusalem, it follows that the days here predicted must be those which have succeeded to the times of the Asmonean dynasty, or the dispersion consequent upon the final destruction of Jerusalem. During the protracted period of more than eighteen centuries, (יָמֵי רַבִּים) they have been precisely in the circumstances here predicted—separated from idolaters, and professedly belonging to Jehovah, yet never acknowledged by him in a church relationship. They have neither had a civil ruler, nor any of the consecrated offices and rites of their ancient economy. Thus Kimchi on the passage, ואלה הם ימי הגלות שאנחנו בני היום ואין לנו לא מלך ולא שר מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל כִּי בְרִשׁוֹת הַגּוֹיִם אֲנַחְנוּ וּבְרִשׁוֹת מַלְכֵיהֶם וּשְׂרֵיהֶם — "And these are the days of our present captivity, for we have neither king nor prince of Israel, but are under the rule of the nations, even under the rule of their kings and their princes." This interpretation, which alone suits the views furnished of the subject by the without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without a statue, and without an ephod, and without images.

5 Afterwards the children of Israel shall return, and shall seek Je-prophet, overturns the hypothesis of Dr. Grant, that the Nestorian Christians are the remains of the ten tribes. It cannot properly be said of them that they have continued קִיּוּמֵי רַבִּיִּים, in a state of separation from God, for they received the gospel in the earliest ages of Christianity. Some explain קִיּוּבָה, both of legitimate sacrifices and of such as were offered to false gods; but the grouping of this term with מַצְבֵּה, a statue, as אֶפְדוֹד, ephod, following, is with תְּרַפִּיִּים, teraphim, clearly shows that the prophet meant the former restrictively. Kimchi briefly explains: אֵיךְ זָבַח לֵאלֹהֵי וְאֵיךְ מַצְבֵּה לֵאלֹהֵי, "without sacrifice to God, and without an image for idolatrous worship." From the prohibition Lev. xxvi. 1; Deut. xvi. 22, and the history, 2 Kings iii. 2; xvii. 10; x. 26, 27, it is manifest that מַצְבֵּה does not stand for altar, as the ancient versions render it, but denotes a statue or image of some false deity. Comp. Micah v. 13. אֶפְדוֹד, the ephod, was that part of the high priest's dress which was worn above the tunic and robe. It consisted of two pieces which hung down, the one in front over the breast, and the other covering the back, and both reaching to the middle of the thigh. They were joined together on the shoulders by golden clasps, set in precious stones, and fastened round the waist by a girdle. In the breast part was the הַשֵּׁטֶן, or pectoral, containing the Urim and Thummim, by which divine responses were vouchsafed to the Hebrews. According to the Jews, the ephod in its complete state ceased with the captivity: for they specify the Urim and Thummim among the five things with respect to which the first temple differed from the second. LXX. iepareia, priesthood, which I doubt not the Hebrew term was intended metonymically to denote in this place. תְּרַפִּיִּים, the teraphim, were penates, or household gods. They were used at a very early period, as appears from the history of Rachel, Gen. xxxi. 19, 30, 32, 34, 35. Comp. 1 Sam. xix. 13; 2 Kings xxiii. 24; Ezek. xxi. 21; Zech.

x. 2. That they were not only kept as tutelary deities, but also consulted for the purpose of obtaining a knowledge of future events, appears from several of the passages just quoted. Hence the rendering of the LXX. δῆλων. The etymology of the word is altogether uncertain.

5. At a period still subsequent to that of their existence in the state just described, the Israelites (now amalgamated with the Jews,) are to be converted to the true worship and service of Jehovah, under the spiritual reign of our Saviour, the promised Messiah. To him they will then submit themselves, and richly enjoy the blessings of divine grace, communicated through his mediation. That דָּוִד, David, here means neither the royal house of David, nor any human monarch of that name who is yet to reign over the Jews, as some have imagined, but the great Messiah himself, appears evident from Scripture usage. See Is. lv. 3, 4; Jer. xxx. 9; Ezek. xxxiv. 23, 24; xxxvii. 24, 25. As the name properly signifies The Beloved, it quite accords with ὁ ἀγαπητός, Matt. iii. 17, and ὁ ἠγαπημένος, Eph. i. 6. Thus the Targ. וְיִשְׁמְעוּן לְמִשִּׁיחָא בְרִי דְדָוִד, "And they shall obey Messiah the Son of David." The following is the Rabbinical interpretation:—אֲמַרְיָ אֵיךְ מַלְכָּא מְשִׁיחָא אִם מִן חַיִּיא דְדִד שְׁמִיָּה וְאִם מִן [דְּמַלְכֵיהּ] הוּא דִד שְׁמִיָּה. "The Rabbins say, that He is the king Messiah; whether he be of the living, his name is David, and whether he be of the slain, his name is David." Berachoth Jerus. in Raym. Martini Pugio Fidei, Fol. 277. See also the Rabbinical Commentaries on the above passages in Ezekiel. The use of פֶּתַח דָּרֵךְ אֶל־יְהוָה, and not מַפְתָּי, or מֶךְ, is intended to show that the fear here specified is not of the kind which "hath torment," and which causes those who are under its influence to recede from its object, but such fear as attracts or induces them to approach to it. This the addition וְאֶל מַבּוֹ, "and to his good-hovah their God, and David their king; and they shall tremblingly hasten to Jehovah and to his goodness in the latter day.

ness," clearly shows. Comp. Micah vii. 17. As, however, the idea of fleeing or hastening from danger is also implied in verbs signifying to fear, I have rendered the words so as to include both. In this way Rabbi Tanchum:

ויִּבְרָחוּ אֵלָיו מִכָּל מַיִסָּף

"They shall flee to him for help from all that may be feared." Comp. Jer. xxxi. 12. LXX. ἐκστήσουται ἐπὶ τῷ Κυρίῳ καὶ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀγαθοῖς αὐτοῦ. Ewald renders, und werden beben zu Jahve und zu seinem Gute, u. s. w.; and Hitzig explains, bebend in freudiger Erwartung werden sie herbeieilen. While on the one hand the Jews, under the influence of alarm, shall be excited to flee from the wrath to come, they shall be attracted by the display of the divine goodness in the mediation of Christ, to confide in Him for all the blessings of salvation. אֶתְרִיחַ הַיָּמִים, the last of the days, i. e. the days of the Messiah, as the Rabbins interpret the phrase. See on Is. ii. 2, where Kinchi says expressly, כֹּל מְקוֹם שֶׁנֶּאֱמַר בְּאַחֲרֵית הַיָּמִים הוּא יְמוֹת הַמְּשִׁיחַ "wherever it is said, 'In the last of the days,' it means the days of the Messiah."

CHAPTER IV.

The prophet now addresses himself more directly to the castigation of the flagrant evils which abounded in the kingdom of Israel during the interregnum which followed upon the death of Jeroboam, and the reigns of Zechariah, Shallum, Menahem, and Pekahiah. He calls the attention of his countrymen to the divine indignation, and the causes of it, 1, 2; denounces the judgments which were about to be executed upon them, 3; describes their incorrigible character, especially that of the priests, 4-11; and expatiates on the grossness of their idolatrous practices, 12-14. A solemn warning is then given to the members of the Jewish kingdom not to allow themselves to be influenced by their wicked example, 15-19.

1 Hear the word of Jehovah, ye children of Israel!

For Jehovah hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land;
Because there is no truth, nor kindness, nor knowledge of God in the land.

1, 2. The initiatory words are those of Hosea, summoning attention to the divine message which he was commissioned to deliver. בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל is equivalent to בְּיַד יִשְׂרָאֵל, ch. v. 1; שִׁבְטֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, ch. v. 9; and frequently יִשְׂרָאֵל and אֲרָרְיָם; and all these different epithets are used of the kingdom of the ten tribes in contradistinction to יהודה and בית

יהודה, which designate the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. רִיב signifies here ground of complaint, or judicial proceeding. LXX. κλίσις. The wickedness which abounded is first set forth negatively, and then positively, under certain items; and the infinitive absolute is employed with great effect, as expressing more emphatically, by its abstract form,

- 2 There is nothing but swearing and lying,
And murder, and theft, and adultery;
They have burst forth,
And blood reacheth to blood.
- 3 Therefore shall the land mourn,
And every one that dwelleth in it shall languish;
With the beasts of the field and the fowls of heaven;
The fishes of the sea also shall be removed.
- 4 Yet let no man contend with, nor reprove another;
For thy people are like those that contend with the priest.
- 5 Therefore thou shalt fall by day,
And the prophet also shall fall with thee by night;
And I will destroy thy mother.

the heinousness of the evils described. The force of this I have given in a free translation. Ewald improperly limits the signification of the verb פָּרַץ in this place to the act of breaking into houses; but the metaphor seems rather to be taken from the bursting forth of a torrent, which, in its progress, spreads wider and wider, and sweeps all before it. The plural form דְּמַיִם, blood, has also a degree of emphasis, signifying much bloodshed. What the prophet means is, that murder was so common, that no space was left as it were between its acts. LXX. ἀμαρτα ἐφ' ἀμαρσι μίτρογονσι. Coverdale, one bloudgiltynes foloweth another. And Ritterhusius powerfully in his poetical metaphor:—

“— sic sanguine sanguis
Truditur, et scelerum nullus finisve modusve est.”

See 2 Kings xv.; Micah vii. 2.

3. Comp. Is. xix. 8; xxiv. 4; Joel i. 10, 12, אֶמְצֵלָהּ, in the Pulal. Conj., is usually employed after אֶבְרַל, in order more forcibly to describe the calamitous state of a country. בְּ here signifies with, extending to, accompanied by, and includes what follows in the general predicate. Comp. Gen. vii. 21. אֶקַּח, is cognate with אָבָק, and signifies to gather up, away, back, take away, as well as simply to collect together, Zeph. i. 2, 3. LXX.

ἐκλείψουσιν; Syr. ; Targ.

יָדוּעָרֶיךָ.—ים, signifies not only what we call the sea, but any lesser collection of water, as pools, and even rivers. See Is. xix. 5.

4. לֹא is here prohibitory, and not simply negative, as some have rendered it. The introduction of the sentence by אַף, yet, nevertheless, is designed to show the hopeless character of the persons spoken of. All reproof on the part of their friends or neighbors generally would prove fruitless, seeing they had reached a degree of hardihood, which was only equalled by the contumacy of those who refused to obey the priest, when he gave judgment in the name of the Lord, Deut. xvii. 12. The passage is thus quite plain, and requires no transposition or emendation of the words as adopted by Houbigant, Newcome, and Boothroyd. מְרִיבֵי מְרִיבִים אֵת כִּתְּךָ is the same as if it were אֵת מְרִיבֵי מְרִיבִים, Comp. אֶבְרַל בְּבֹרֵךְ, chap. v. 10. All the ancient versions, except the LXX. and Aq. read אֶקַּח. The Hexap. Syr. has חֲסָא? מֵ? מְכוּ.

5. By a sudden transition to the second person, the prophet addresses himself directly to his guilty people, and predicts their utter destruction. אֵיךְ, Kimchi, Drusius, Ecolamp. Grotius, and Ewald, improperly render “to-day.” As contrasted here with לַיְלָה, night, it is equivalent to אֵיךְ, by day. Comp. Neh. iv. 16. That the article is not repeated before לַיְלָה, may be owing to the common adverbial use of this noun without it.

- 6 My people is destroyed for lack of knowledge;
 Because thou hast rejected knowledge,
 I will also reject thee, so that thou shalt not be a priest to me;
 Because thou hast forgotten the law of thy God,
 I also will forget thy children.
- 7 According to their increase, so they sinned against me;
 I will change their glory into shame.
- 8 They devour the sin-offering of my people,
 And long for their iniquity.

The false prophets by whom the Israelites had been encouraged in wicked practices should render them no assistance in the season of calamity, but should be themselves involved in the same common ruin.  $\text{הָיִינוּ}$ , the LXX. renders  $\delta\mu\lambda\omega\sigma\alpha$ ; and several translate, "I have reduced to silence;" but the verb is obviously used in the sense of destroying, as  $\text{נִדְמוּ}$  is, ver. 6. Comp. Zeph. i. 11. By  $\text{אִמִּי}$ , thy mother, the Israelitish state is meant, of which the citizens were the children. See chap. ii. 1. Thus Kimchi, Jerome, Grotius, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, and Maurer. Others, as Cornelius à Lapide, Houbigant, Capellus, Poccocke, Bauer, and Newcome, suppose the metropolis to be intended.

6.  $\text{מִבְּלִי הִדְרַעַת}$ , having here the article before the noun, and occurring in connection with  $\text{הִדְרַעַת}$ , immediately following, is not to be taken in the sense of unexpectedly, as  $\text{מִבְּלִי דַעַת}$  is, Is. v. 13, but strictly means that destitution of the true knowledge of God which was the source of the sins now about to be punished. This ignorance is principally charged upon the religious teachers of the nation, each of whom is directly addressed in  $\text{אֲתָה הִדְרַעַת מֵאַסֵּה}$ . Thus Pagninus, O sacerdos; which Dathe also inserts in his text. The persons addressed pretended to be priests of Jehovah, though they taught the people to combine with his worship that of pagan deities, or at least that of the golden calves, which, no doubt, paved the way for the universal spread of idolatry in Israel. The position adopted by Horsley, that the Jewish high-priest is intended, does not suit the connection. The third  $\text{א}$  in  $\text{הִדְרַעַת}$ , is not found in a great number of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., nor in some of the earlier printed editions; in others it is marked as redundant, and some few have  $\text{אִמִּי אִמִּי}$ . The antitheses in this verse are pointed and forcible.  $\text{בִּי}$  is understood as repeated in  $\text{וְתִשְׁכַּח הַיְהוָה}$ , and  $\text{וְ}$  before  $\text{אִשְׁכַּח$ .

7. As the priests are obviously the nominative to the verbs in the three following verses, and form the subject of discourse in that which precedes, they must likewise be the persons spoken of in this. It has been queried whether the increase was in number, or in wealth, power, etc. Michaelis thinks the latter is meant? still the former may be included, in harmony with the mention made of their children, ver. 6. In proportion as they multiplied in numbers and grew in influence, they promoted the increase of idolatry: but the wealth and dignity ( $\text{כְּבוֹד}$ ) which they acquired, and which they thus prostituted, should be destroyed by foreigners, by whom they would be carried into captivity.  $\text{בְּרִבֵּשׁ}$ , and  $\text{בְּבִיזָה}$ , form a slight paronomasia.

8.  $\text{וְתִשְׁכַּח הַיְהוָה}$  here signifies sin-offering, as it frequently does in the Levitical code. So Kimchi; and it is thus rendered in Poccocke's Arab. Ms.  $\text{قربن خطاه}$   $\text{قومي ياكلون}$ ; and Castalio, piculo. The priests greedily devoured what the people brought for the expiation of their sins; and instead of endeavoring to put a stop to abounding iniquity, only wished it to increase, in order that they might profit by the multitude of the victims presented for sacrifice.  $\text{וְלִפְתָּה נַפְשָׁהּ}$ , to lift up the animal soul for any thing, means to lust after it, long, or have a strong desire for it, Deut. xxiv. 15; Jer.

- 9 Therefore it shall be, like people, like priest ;
 I will punish them according to their ways,
 And requite them for their deeds.
- 10 For they shall eat, but shall not be satisfied ;
 They shall commit lewdness, but shall not increase :
 Because they have ceased to regard Jehovah.
- 11 Lewdness and wine and new wine take away the heart.
- 12 My people consult their stock ;
 Their staff announceth to them :

xxii. 27.  $\text{וְכִּי}$  in  $\text{וְכִּי־שָׁמַר}$ , is used distributively to express the fact that such was the character of each of the priests. The reading  $\text{וְכִּי־שָׁמַר}$ , found in ten MSS., originally in seven more, and perhaps in one, and supported by the LXX. Syr. Targ. Vulg. and Arab., most probably originated in emendation. Not unfrequently a proposition commences with the plural, and ends with the singular, and vice versa.

9. Comp. Is. xxiv. 2. The rank and wealth of the priests would not exempt them from sharing the same fate with the rest of the nation.

10.  $\text{וְיִשְׂמְרוּ־לָהֶם}$  is a resumption of  $\text{וְיִשְׂמְרוּ}$ , ver. 8.— $\text{הַזֶּה־הוּא}$  is here used intransitively as in ver. 18, v. 3, and is to be understood literally of the sensual indulgences of the Israelitish teachers, as the verb  $\text{יִשְׂמַר}$  shows. For the signification to abound in children, as attaching to this verb, see Gen. xxviii. 14. Saadius, Arnold, (Blumen althebraisch. Dichtk.) and Horsley, disjoin  $\text{לְשֹׁמְרֵי}$  from the preceding verb, and connect it with the following nouns, thus :—

“They have forsaken Jehovah,
 Giving heed to fornication,” etc.

But, notwithstanding the apparent force of the bishop's remarks, there is something so repugnant to Hebrew usage in the combination  $\text{וְיִשְׂמְרוּ־לָהֶם}$ , to observe fornication, and wine, and new wine, that it is altogether inadmissible. Though the verb  $\text{שָׁמַר}$  may in no other passage take  $\text{יְהוָה}$  for its object, yet it takes  $\text{הַבְּלִי־שָׁמַר}$ , lying vanities, i. e. idols, Ps. xxxi. 7 ; Jonah ii. 9 ; in which latter passage it is connected with  $\text{עֲזָב}$ , as in the present case. The division of the words found in our common version is that of the Hexap. Syr.  $\text{וְכִּי־שָׁמַר}$  ;

$\text{וְכִּי־שָׁמַר}$ , and the Slavonic ; and is approved by Michaelis, Tingstadius, Newcome, Dathe, Boothroyd, De Wette, Hitzig, and Ewald.

11. This verse has the appearance of a moral adage. The influence of habits of impurity and intoxication in blunting the moral feelings, and weakening the intellectual powers, is a well-established fact in the history of man.

“Nox et amor vinumque nihil moderabile suadent ;

Illa pudore vacat, liber amorque metu.”

Ovid.

“Nox, vinum, mulier ; nihil perniciosus adolescentulo.”

Plaut.

There can be little doubt that the prophet has specially in view the impure and bacchanalian orgies which were connected with the Syrian idolatry. For the prevalence of drunkenness in Ephraim see Is. xxviii. 1 ; Amos iv. 1.

12. The LXX., and most versions which follow them, connect  $\text{עֲזָבֵי}$  with  $\text{לָהֶם}$ , at the end of the preceding verse ; a mode of construction adopted by Michaelis and Dathe, but otherwise disapproved by modern translators. The Syr. Targ. and Vulg. divide properly. Hosea here adduces proofs of the mental hebetude to which the sinful practices of the Israelitish people had reduced them — their application to their wooden idols and images for oracular counsel, and their use of rhabdomancy or divination by

- For a lewd spirit hath caused them to err ;
 They have lewdly departed from under their God.
 13 They sacrifice on the tops of the mountains,
 And offer incense upon the hills ;
 Under the oak, and the poplar, and the terebinth,
 Because their shade is pleasant :
 Therefore your daughters commit lewdness,
 And your daughters-in-law adultery.
 14 I will not punish your daughters when they commit lewdness,
 Nor your daughters-in-law when they commit adultery ;
 For they themselves go aside with harlots, rods. Leo Juda: "ligno suo oracula quærit." That by  $\text{עץ}$ , wood, is here meant an idol made of such material, the connection shows. Comp. Jer. ii. 27: x. 8; Hab. ii. 19.  $\text{עֵצֵי מַנְיָה}$  is properly a shoot or twig, then a rod, walking staff, etc. Occurring as it does here, in reference to an idolatrous or superstitious practice, it denotes such a staff employed for purposes of divination. Some have been of opinion that it is to be taken as strictly parallel to  $\text{עֵצֵי}$ , and that a staff is meant which had the image of some god carved upon it; but the use of the phrase  $\text{אֲנִי אֶגִּיד לְךָ}$ , announceth, pointeth out, shows that a divining rod is meant. Rhabdomancy (ραβδομαντεία) was very common among the ancient idolaters, as it has been in later times in different countries of the East. The ancient Arabs consulted their gods in this way, taking two rods, on one of which was inscribed God bids, and on the other God forbids, and drawing them out of the case into which they were put, acted agreeably to the direction which first came forth. See Pococke, Specimen. Hist. Arab. p. 327. Maimonides quotes an ancient book entitled Siphri, in which a diviner is defined to be one who takes his staff, and inquires, Shall I go? or, Shall I not go? The Runic wands of the Scandinavian nations, on which were inscribed mysterious characters, and which were used for magical purposes, appear to have originated in the more ancient divination of Asia.  $\text{רוּחַ קְדוֹנִימִים}$ , lit. a spirit of whoredoms, i. e. a powerful impetus to commit acts of idolatry. Instead of the simple form  $\text{הַתְּשִׁיבָה}$ , some few MSS. the Babyl. Talmud, the Syr. Vulg. and Targ. read  $\text{הַתְּשִׁיבָה}$ ; while the LXX. and Arab. read  $\text{הַתְּשִׁיבָה}$ . For  $\text{אֲנִי אֶגִּיד לְךָ}$ , comp. Numb. v. 19, 20; Ezek. xxiii. 5; and ἔπαυδος, Rom. vii. 2.

13. Mountains and hills were selected by idolaters on which to erect their altars, and offer their sacrifices, on account of their supposed proximity to the host of heaven, which they worshipped. That this custom was very ancient, appears from the prohibition, Deut. xii. 2. For imitating it, the Hebrews are frequently reproved, Is. lxxv. 7; Jer. iii. 6; Ezek. xviii. 11.  $\text{יְבוּבָה}$ , being in Piel, expresses the eagerness and frequency with which the Israelites offered their idolatrous sacrifices. They also selected groves of oak, terebinth, etc., for purposes of superstition and idolatry, under whose umbrageous cover they might at once be screened from the heat of the sun, and indulge in lascivious practices. The sacrifice of female virtue which was required in the religious service of the Phœnician goddess Astarte, seems clearly to be referred to in this and the following verse.  $\text{לְבָבָה}$ , LXX. λευκή, the white poplar, from  $\text{לָבַן}$ , to be white.

14. Kuinoel, and others, taking  $\text{אֲנִי}$ , as standing for  $\text{אֲנִי}$ , read the first part of the verse interrogatively, which is not unsupported by examples in Hebrew usage. It seems better, however, to understand it here as a simple negative, and the meaning to be that, as the parents and husbands indulged in the flagitious practices here described, Jehovah would not make examples of the females, or suffer them to be punished, as if they alone

And sacrifice with prostitutes :

And as for the undiscerning people, they shall be overthrown.

15 Though thou, O Israel, art lewd,
 Yet let not Judah be found guilty ;
 Come ye not to Gilgal,
 Neither go ye up to Beth-aven,
 Nor use the oath, " Jehovah liveth."

were guilty ; but would punish with condign punishment their natural protectors, who not only abandoned them to seduction, but themselves rioted in the same wickedness. Thus Munster: "Durissimè animadvertant in parentes et sponso, ut filie et sponse eorum puniunt videantur esse extra pœnam." The transition from the second to the third person, for the purpose of more graphically exhibiting the subject of discourse, is not without examples. See Is. xxii.

16. The use of the separate pronoun כָּךְ, also adds to the emphasis of the language. פָּרַד, in Piel, strongly marks the studied withdrawal of the Israelites from the assembled throngs, to such places as were devoted to scenes of impurity ; while נָבַד, in the same conjugation, signifies in this connection, to commit lewdness as an act of idolatrous devotion. Between זָנַת, and קָדַשְׁתָּהּ, there seems to be this difference, that the former were ordinary females who prostituted themselves for gain, but the latter those who devoted themselves to the service of Astarte, by offering their persons to be violated in her temples at the sacred festivals. See Selden de Diis Syris, Synt. ii. cap. 2 ; Herodot. lib. i. cap. 199 ; Euseb. Vit. Constantin. lib. iii. cap. 35 ; Spencer de Leg. Heb. lib. ii. cap. 22 and 23 ; Lucian de Dea Syra. Of this latter term, the mas. קָדַשְׁתָּהּ, catamites, occurs, 1 Kings xiv. 24 ; xv. 12 : xxii. 47 ; and in the ancient book of Job, chap. xxxvi. 14, which shows at how very early a period such abominations obtained. It likewise occurs in both genders in the prohibition, Deut. xxiii. 18. To these practices the LXX. doubtless had respect in rendering the word τετελεισμένων, initiated. Its derivation from קָדַשְׁתָּהּ, to be sacred, consecrated, or destined to the service of the temple, confirms our interpretation.—בֵּית־אֵלִים ; Syr.

נָבַד, concitavit ; Arab. لَبَطَ, conjecit in terram aliquem, in Niph. to be cast down, overthrown, or the like. The verb occurs only here, and Prov. x. 8, 10, where see Schultens.

15. A solemn warning to the Jewish kingdom to beware of mixing itself up with that of Israel in the practice of idolatry. Here נָבַד, to commit lewdness, is again used figuratively. נָבַד, properly signifies to contract guilt, or become subject to its consequences. גִּלְגַּל, Gilgal, was a town situated between the Jordan and Jericho, near the confines of the kingdom of Samaria. It was regarded as a holy place as early as the days of Joshua, chap. v. 15 ; and sacrifices were offered there to Jehovah in those of Samuel, 1 Sam. x. 8, 13 ; xv. 21, 33. In process of time, however, it came to be converted into a place of idolatrous worship, Amos iv. 4, 5 ; Hos. ix. 15 ; xii. 11. בֵּית־אֵלִים, Beth-aven, i. e. the house of vanity or idols, a name given by the minor prophets, by way of contempt, to Bethel, i. e. the house of God, a place sacred to true religion in the time of the patriarchs, and the judges ; but afterwards selected by Jeroboam as the principal seat of the worship of the golden calves, 1 Kings xii. 29, 32, 33 ; xiii. 1 ; Amos iii. 14 ; vii. 10, 13 ; Jer. xlviii. 13. It originally belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, but was taken by that of Ephraim, Judges i. 22-25. That there was a city of the name of Beth-aven near to Bethel, appears from Josh. vii. 2, which may have suggested the appropriation of the name to the latter. LXX. οἶκον ἑλίου, reading ἡλί, the native name of Heliopolis, Δ. and Symm. οἶκον ἀνοφελῆ ; Theod. οἶκον ἀδικίας ; and with this the Arab. agrees بيت الظلم, the house

- 16 Since Israel is refractory, like a refractory heifer ;
 Jehovah will now feed them, like a lamb in a large place.
 17 Ephraim is joined to idols ;
 Leave him to himself.
 18 When their carousal is over they indulge in lewdness ;
 Her shields are enamored of infamy.

of iniquity. Comp. Amos iv. 4 ; v. 5. From the warning here given to the Jews not to participate with the Israelites in their idolatry, it is evident the prophecy was delivered at a time when they were comparatively free from that evil. The prohibition not to swear by the formula יהוה קח, respects the combination of the divine name with those of idols, or the profession of attachment to Jehovah, if the persons addressed were guilty of idolatry. Comp. Zeph. i. 5. That it was otherwise lawful to use it, appears from Jer. iv. 2. Comp. Deut. x. 20.

16. The metaphor is here taken from a heifer that obstinately refuses to be yoked. Thus the Syr. ܩܘܢܐ ܩܘܢܐ;

ܩܘܢܐ. For the force of קָרַר, comp. Deut. xxi. 18. The latter hemistich contains the language of irony. As lambs are fond of ranging at large, but are in danger of being lost or devoured, so God threatens to remove the Israelites into a distant and large country, where they would be separated from those with whom they associated in idolatrous worship, and thus be left solitary and exposed as in a wilderness. The phrase רָעָה בְּקוֹרְהָב, to feed in a large place, is elsewhere used in a good sense, Is. xxx. 23.

17. אֶפְרַיִם, Ephraim, as the most numerous and powerful of the tribes, and that in which the kingdom was established, is put for all the ten. קָרַבְוּ, to be joined, closely united, adhere to, to be allied to by voluntary choice, Gen. xiv. 3. In this last sense the term is here used. The Israelites had voluntarily addicted themselves to the service of idols, and thus identified themselves with their interests. While the word עֲצֻבֵיהֶם, idols, suggests the idea of their being merely the fabrication of human labor, it also intimates the pain or sorrow resulting from idolatry. The root has both significations. קָרַבְוּ strongly implies the obstinacy and incorrigible character of the ten tribes, and indignantly abandons them to their fate. They are irreclaimably devoted to the gods of the heathen : let them take their own way, and reap the consequences of their perverse choice. Their case is desperate. Comp. Jer. vii. 16 ; Ezek. xx. 39. Thus Tanchum, Jarchi, Kimchi, Calvin, Tarnovius, Zanchius, Coverdale, Drusius, Lively, Leo Juda, Poccocke, Kuinoel, Michaelis, Tingstadius, Newcome, Stuck, and Ewald. Others, as the Targ. Jerome, Mercer, Diodati, Grotius, Rosenmüller, Maurer, etc., regard the words as simply containing a warning to the inhabitants of Judah to keep aloof from, and take no part in the idolatries of the Ephraimites. The LXX. ἔθρεκεν αὐτοῦ σκάνδαλα, reading הִנֵּה in the preterite, and supplying the idea of idols from the preceding part of the verse.

18. Before כִּי, the particle אֲנִי, when, is to be supplied, which in poetry, for the sake of conciseness and energy, is frequently omitted. For the acception past, passed away, over, etc. comp. 1 Sam. xv. 32. כִּי מִרְ-הַמֵּתָה. Horsley, Ewald, and some others, are of opinion that כִּי means vapid, degenerated, sour, etc., but less aptly. The meaning is, that no sooner were their computations over than they indulged in excessive lewdness. Instead of כִּי שָׂבְעוּ, their drink, drinking bout, one of De Rossi's MSS. has originally read סוֹבְאִים, drunkards ; another אֲבָאִים, their host ; and one of Kennicott's סַבְאִים, Sabeans ; but none of these variations suits the entire construction of the verse. The LXX. strangely, ἡρέτισε χαναναίους, which the Arab, as usual, follows. The impurity in which, when inflamed with 19 The wind hath bound her up in its wings,

That they may be ashamed of their sacrifices.

liquor, they indulged, was most probably connected with the worship of Venus. To express the excess to which it was carried, the verb is first put in the infinitive absolute, and then repeated in the finite form.  $\text{הָבֹי}$  is not separately expressed in the LXX, the Arab. or in either of the Syriac versions; though it cannot hence be inferred that it was not in the Hebrew text. It is wanting, however, in three of Kennicott's MSS. If it did not originate in some copyist having written the two last syllables of the preceding word over again, it must be regarded as having originally formed part of that word in the reduplicate form  $\text{בָּהָבֹי הָבֹי}$ ; in which, not only is the second syllable of the verb repeated ( $\text{בָּהָבֹי הָבֹי}$ ), but the pronominal sufformative is retained in the middle of the word, and the first radical ( $\text{א}$ ) rejected on that account in the reduplication. Such form is of extremely rare occurrence:  $\text{צָמַדְתָּנִי}$ , lit. they destroy, destroy me, Ps. lxxxviii, 17, being the only other instance of the kind with which I am acquainted. In this way the form is partly accounted for by the ancient Jewish grammarian Abuwalid Ibn Jannahi, as quoted by Pococke. What confirms this view of the reduplicate form is the use of  $\text{הָבֹהֲבִים}$ , a gemination somewhat resembling it, by our prophet, chap. viii. 13. The rendering give ye, as if it were the imperative of  $\text{יָהֵב}$ , proposed by Abenezra and Kimchi, and adopted by our translators, is not so suitable to the connection. Maurer; mirifice amant ignominiam: Ewald; es lieben lieben schmach seine Schilde. Kuinoel very unjustifiably omits  $\text{הָבֹי}$  in his Heb. Text.  $\text{קִלְיָן}$ , shame, a collective abstract noun, expressive of the infamous acts connected with idolatrous worship.  $\text{מָגְנִים}$ , shields, are tropically used for princes, as the natural protectors of their people, here and Ps. xlvii. 10. The feminine suffix  $\text{הָ}$ , refers to  $\text{אֶרְצָם}$ , understood; the inhabitants being meant.

19. By an expressive figure, borrowed from the sudden force with which any thing is carried off by the wind, the prophet announces the suddenness and violence with which the ten tribes should be removed from their land. The combination  $\text{רִגְוַי רִגְוַי}$ , wings of the wind, is too firmly established in Hebrew usage, see Ps. xviii. 11; civ. 3, to allow either of the acceptations spirit or vanity being given to  $\text{רִגְוַי}$ , or that of borders to  $\text{בְּרִיחַי}$  in this place.  $\text{רִגְוַי}$  being of both genders, accounts for the masculine of the verb, and the feminine pron. affix. For  $\text{אֶרְצָם}$ , two of De Rossi's MSS., and the Vat. and Alex. copies of the LXX. read  $\text{אֶרְצָם}$ , which gives no suitable sense. In the distant countries of the Medes, by whom all image-worship was held in abomination, the exiles would be brought to a due sense of the wickedness and absurdity of their conduct.  $\text{וְיָרִבְשׁוּ}$ , is used  $\text{τελευτῶς}$ . Jer. xlviii. 13. Sacrifices are here put by synecdoche for the whole system of idolatry in which they indulged. For the reading  $\text{מִמְזִבְהֵיהֶם}$ , of their altars, adopted by Newcome, there is no authority except the Targ. and  $\text{δύο}$ .

CHAPTER V.

This chapter commences with an objurgation of the priests and the royal family, as the principal seducers of the nation to idolatry, 1, 2. Then follows a description of the unblushing wickedness of the people, interspersed with denunciations of impending punishment, 3-7. The approach of the divine judgments is ordered to be proclaimed, and their certainty declared, 8, 9. The prophet then abruptly turns to the two tribes and a half whose guilt and punishment he denounces; yet so as to show that his predictions were chiefly directed against the northern kingdom, the rulers of which, like those of Judah, instead of looking to Jehovah for deliverance from civil calamities, applied in vain for foreign assistance, 10-14. The 15th verse sets forth the certainty and the beneficial effects of the divine judgments.

- 1 HEAR this, O ye priests!
 And hearken, O house of Israel!
 Give ear, O house of the king!
 For the sentence is against you,
 Because ye are a snare at Mispah,
 And a net spread upon Tabor.
- 2 The apostates slaughter to excess,
 But I will inflict chastisement on them all.

1. בֵּית יִשְׂרָאֵל, house of Israel, i. e. the ten tribes. בֵּית הַמֶּלֶךְ, house of the king, i. e. the king and his court. From the references made to the idolatry and punishment of Judah in this and the following chapter, it would appear that the king whom Hosea had specifically in view was Pekah, the son of Remaliah; since it was in the reign of Ahaz, who was contemporary with him, that idol worship was carried to such a height in that kingdom as to call for the calamities inflicted upon it by the confederate forces of Israel and Syria, as well as by the king of Assyria. By מִשְׁפַּח הַמֶּלֶךְ is not meant, as the Targ. interprets, followed by Abenezra, Kimchi, Abarbanel, Pagninus, Junius, Tremellius, and others, that it belonged to them to know and execute justice, but that the judgment or punishment was directed against them. They had merited it, and it was now coming upon them. LXX. πρὸς ὕμᾱς ἐστὶ τὸ κρίμα. Thus most Christian expositors. מִשְׁפַּח, Mispah. As there were several places of this name, some degree of uncertainty attaches to it as occurring here; but as the object of the prophet seems to be to set forth the means employed for seducing the whole of the ten tribes to idolatry, it is more probable that he had in his eye Mispah of Gilead, on the east of the Jordan, just as he specifies mount Tabor to the west of that river. See Judges x. 17; xi. 29.

On both of these elevated positions false worship had been established for the purpose of ensnaring the inhabitants of the adjacent regions. The means employed to bring them over to it are compared to the snares and nets used for catching birds and wild beasts upon the mountains. By metonymy, the leaders of the people are spoken of as such nets and snares, because of their bad example, and the influence which they otherwise exerted for evil.

2. שָׁחַת, slaughtering, the infinitive absolute, with הַפָּרָגוֹעַ, to kill, for food or sacrifice. Here, from its close connection with the preceding verse, it has the latter signification. Some think murder is meant; but this is less likely, though the verb is also used in this sense in other places. שָׁחַתוּ הַמִּזְבֵּי, lit. they deepen to slaughter, i. e. by a peculiar idiom, they slaughter to excess, kill an immense number of sacrificial victims. Comp. הִשְׁחִיחוּ סָרְהָה; Is. xxxi. 6. שָׁחַתוּ, apostates, the Beñoni participle of שָׁחַת, to turn aside, decline from the right way, apostatize; as הִשְׁחִיחוּ, scoffers, from שָׁחַח, to scoff. Comp. Ps. xl. 5, הִשְׁחִיחוּ אֲפֹסְתֵי בְּהֵמָה, those that turn aside to falsehood; and עֲשֵׂה-סָרְהָה, Ps. ci. 3. Two or three MSS., the edit. of Soncin., and a few others, have ס instead of ש, in our text.

Syr. אֲסַחֵם, seduxit, מִסְחִיחוּ, declinatio, apostasia. The idolatrous

- 3 I know Ephraim,
 Israel is not hid from me;
 Surely now thou committest lewdness, O Ephraim!
 Israel is defiled.
- 4 They frame not their deeds
 To return to their God;
 For a lewd spirit is within them,
 And they regard not Jehovah.
- 5 The pride of Israel testifieth to his face;
 Therefore Israel and Ephraim shall fall through their iniquity;
 Judah also shall fall with them.

Israelites multiplied their sacrifices in order that they might enjoy prosperity under the protection of the deities to whom they offered them; but Jehovah here declares that none of them should escape the punishment which he was about to inflict upon them. Before מִנְסֵךְ supply אֶהְיֶה. The ancient versions are here greatly at fault, from their authors having supposed that the reference to hunters is still continued in this verse.

3. Ephraim, as distinguished from Israel, means the tribe of Ephraim, from which most of the apostate kings sprang, and in which idolatry most abounded. By Israel the other nine tribes are meant. As having incurred the more aggravated guilt, the former is here addressed in the second person. Two of Kennicott's MSS. indeed, and one of De Rossi's, originally read הִזְנִיתָ; and one of Kennicott's has נִשְׁמַתָּה for נִשְׁמַתָּה, but both are, in all probability, from the hand of correctors. הִזְנִיתָ is here used figuratively. The polluting influence of the Ephraimites was felt through the whole nation. To express an assertion more strongly the Hebrews put it first in the form of an affirmative, and then in that of a negative. עֵתָּה, now, is not without emphasis; pointing out the undeniable fact that they had been the cause of the spread of idolatry.

4. The language now changes to the plural, to express the character of the people generally. By some מִנְסֵכֵי is construed as the nominative to יִתְּנֵם, and rendered, their deeds do not permit them, etc. Thus the Syr. Abenezra, Drusius, etc.; and among the moderns, Horsley, Tingstadius, Manger, Kuinoel, Stuck, Maurer, and Ewald. But in order to establish this construction, we should have to read יִתְּנֵם or יִתְּנֵם, "permitted them," the accusative of the person always following the verb in such case. See Gen. xx. 6; Exod. iii. 19. In the present instance נָתַן is used in the sense of placing, ordering, framing, like שָׂם and שָׂיַת, as it is given in the common version, and rendered by Tanchum, Leo Juda, Mercer, Tamovius, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Noyes, and Hitzig. The meaning is, that the Israelites did not reform, did not so regard their wicked practices as to abandon them and return to the pure worship of Jehovah.

5. That הִזְנִיתָ means to testify for or against any person or thing, is obvious from its use, Gen. xxx. 33; Job. xvi. 8. It is properly a Judicial phrase, and refers to the testimony given by a witness, either for or against another, according to circumstances. The rendering to be humbled, which is that of the LXX. Syr. Targ. Jarchi, and recently of Michaelis, Newcome, Noyes, and Maurer, cannot be philologically sustained. The addition בְּפָנָיו, to his face, gives emphasis to the phrase, openly, publicly, in such a manner that he himself may see it, without the adduction of further evidence. That גִּבְוֹתָא signifies pride, insolence, notwithstanding what Horsley asserts to the contrary, is sufficiently apparent from Prov. xvi. 18, and Is. xvi. 6. I should rather think, however, that by the term as here used, we are to understand the objects of which the ten tribes were proud, their

- 6 With their flocks and their herds,
They may go to seek Jehovah,
But they shall not find him:
He hath withdrawn from them.
- 7 They have proved false to Jehovah;
For they have begotten strange children:
Now shall a month destroy them and their portions.

splendid or magnificent idols, etc. As Jehovah is spoken of as יְהוָה יָצָק, the excellency, or boast of Jacob, Amos viii. 7, so the idols might be called יְהוָה יָצָק, the excellency, or proud boast of Israel. They gloried in them as the objects of their confidence and attachment. These very gods, by their utter impotence, bear open witness that they could afford no help to those who trusted in them; so that their worshippers could not but have been convinced of their folly, if their hearts had not become morally obscured by the practice of iniquity. The religion itself (עֲוֹנוֹתָם, their iniquity,) from which they expected safety, would prove the cause of their ruin. The words are repeated with a similar reference chap. vii. 10.

The concluding line of the verse contains an abrupt and unexpected application of the threatening to the Jews. As they had suffered themselves to be influenced by the example of the Israelites, they should also share in their punishment. The respective captivities of both are here threatened. On comparing this threatening with chap. iv. 15, it appears to have been delivered at a period considerably subsequent to that which is there spoken of, when the evils of idolatry had made some progress in the southern kingdom. To express more strongly the certainty of the event, the verb כָּשַׁל is put in the preterite; whereas it had simply been used in the future יִכְשַׁל, in reference to the Israelites.

6. The idolaters are here told that though in the hour of calamity they might bring their flocks and herds as propitiatory sacrifices to Jehovah in order to avert the punishment, it would be altogether in vain. יָצָק signifies to draw or put off any person or thing, to withdraw one's self. Comp. the Arab.

خلص, salvus evasit, progressus est, and خلع, extraxit, exiit. Pococke's

Arab. MS. has الله خلع معوثته الله منهم, God hath withdrawn his help from them. The Israelites and Jews could no longer reckon on the divine presence, and the effectual aid which that presence implied.

7. The prophet seems here to allude to the mention made of בְּנֵי זָנוּיִם, and בְּנֵי זָנוּיִם, lewd children, chap. i. 2; ii.

4. זָרָה, strange, foreign, is selected in order to show that the idolatry was the result of intercourse with foreigners. The verb בָּגַד, to act unfaithfully, is also used of the breach of the matrimonial covenant, Jer. iii. 20. This idea is expressed in the Arab. MS. of Pococke, بعهد

الله غدروا, they have broken the covenant of God. בָּגַד has here the signification of itaque, and marks the consequence of the conjugal infidelity just specified—the production of a race of idolaters. The relation of the words is well expressed by Stuck: “quoniam Deo infideles sunt, propterea liberos peregrinos habent.” עַתָּה, now, is here to be taken not as determining the exact point of present time, but the speedy and certain arrival of the event. The term חֹדֶשׁ, month, has greatly, and, in my opinion, very unnecessarily perplexed interpreters. Houbigant at once cuts the knot by an arbitrary emendation: עַתָּה אֲבִלֵם חֹדֶשׁ, omnino est legendum אֲבִלֵם החסל, nunc igitur absumet rubigo. He appeals to the ἐποσθῆ of the LXX. as his authority; but ἐποσθῆ signifies mildew, with which תְּכַיִל, a locust, the word he proposes to substitute for חֹדֶשׁ, has no manner of affinity. That the same word which

- 8 Blow ye the horn in Gibeah,
The trumpet in Ramah;
Raise a shout at Beth-aven;
He is behind thee, O Benjamin!
- 9 Ephraim shall become desolate
In the day of punishment;
Among the tribes of Israel
I have made known that which is sure.

is now in the Hebrew text was found in it in the time of Aquila, is evident from his rendering it νεομηνία. Symm. and Theod. have μην. Michaelis, Dathe, Kuinoel, and Stäudlin, give to the word

the signification of the Arab. حدث

what is new and unexpected, and explain it of a sudden calamity. Most moderns take it in the sense of new-moon. i. e. either at the feast of the new moon, when the Israelites were assembled to worship; or, at that time their calamities should commence. It seems most natural to abide by the usual meaning of the term, and consider the prophet as announcing, that within the space of one month they should be visited with merited punishment. The calamity predicted seems to have been that occasioned by the invasion of Tiglath-pileser, who ravaged the country, and carried into captivity the tribes of Reuben and Gad, the half-tribe of Manasseh, and that of Naphtali, besides the inhabitants of several cities in other parts of the country, 2 Kings xv. 29; 1 Chron. v. 26. That Judah also suffered on this occasion, see 2 Chron. xxviii. 19-21. חֵצְיָהֶם, their portions, are commonly interpreted to mean their possessions or property; but I should rather think the prophet has in view their idols, whom they regarded as the authors of their possessions and enjoyments. See Is. lvii. 6, and my Comm. on that verse.

8. An alarm is ordered to be given to the southern kingdom of the approach of the enemy. The verse intimately coheres with the foregoing, and is not to be taken for the commencement of a new prophecy, as Jerome, Abarbanel, Michaelis, Dathe, Manger, and others, suppose. The difference between the שֹׁפָר and the קֶרֶן seems to be, that the former was the same as the קֶרֶן, horn, being made of the curved horn of animals, Josh. vi.

5, 6, 8. Arab. شِبُور, lituus foraminibus instructus; whereas, the latter was made of metal, such as the two silver trumpets which were employed for convoking the congregation, Numb. x. 2; from חֵצֵר, Arab. حصر, in angustiam

redegit; angusto pectore predictus fuit. Gesenius considers the word to be an onomatopoeic, imitating the broken pulse-like sound of the trumpet, (hâtzot-zêrah,) like the Latin tarantara, and the German trarara. Their shape and size may be seen in the representations of the arch of Titus. Comp. Jer. iv. 5; Joel ii. 1; Hos. viii. 1. The LXX. render גִּבְעָה, Gibeah, and רָמָה, Ramah, τοὺς βουνούς and τῶν ὑψηλῶν, as if heights or elevated places in general were meant; but they are to be taken as proper names, just as Beth-aven and Benjamin are. They both lay in the tribe of Benjamin, see on Is. x. 29, as did also Bethel, here called Beth-aven. See on chap. iv. 15. Before אֶחָדָם subaud. אֹיֵב, the enemy "is behind thee," i. e. close upon thee. The fifth Greek version has κατὰ νότου σοῦ, to the south of thee; but if the local signification were at all admissible, the west is the only sense in which the word could be understood.

9. Having apprised the Jews of the danger with which they were threatened, the prophet returns to describe the calamity which was to be inflicted upon the ten tribes; and in the course of the following verses directs his discourse to the two kingdoms alternately. The nominative to יִשְׂרָאֵל is יִשְׂרָאֵל, implied in יִשְׂרָאֵל.—יָדוּעַ, primarily means proof

- 10 The rulers of Judah are like those who remove the boundary ;
I will pour out my wrath upon them like water.
- 11 Ephraim is oppressed,
He is crushed in judgment ;
Because he consented,
He followed the order.
- 12 I am as a moth to Ephraim,
And as rottenness to the house of Judah.
- 13 And Ephraim saw his sickness,
And Judah his wound ;

or demonstration, from יָבֵחַ, to be before one, be clear, obvious ; in Hiph. to place before one in the way of evidence, convince, convict, and then rebuke, chastise, punish. The word is synonymous with מִנְהוּסָר, ver. 2. The latter hemistich of the verse shows that the ten tribes were the scene of the prophet's ministry. נִשְׁמָנָה, the feminine used for the neuter.

10. By the "princes" or "rulers of Judah," king Ahaz and his courtiers are intended. For בְּמִסְרֵי גְבוּל, comp. דְּעִיר מְסִיג גְבוּל יִרְעָה, Deut. xxvii. 17 ; אָרְרָה מְסִיג גְבוּל יִרְעָה, Prov. xxii. 28 ; xxiii. 10 ; Job xxiv. 2. It was reckoned a flagrant offence to remove the marks by which the divisions of property were defined. The language seems to have become proverbial to designate unprincipled conduct. What the prophet here reprobates appears to be the means adopted by Ahaz and his supporters to introduce idolatry into Judah. See 2 Kings xvi. 10-18. If the ב be regarded as the Caph veritatis, it will strongly express the fact that these princes had actually removed the boundaries which separated the true religion from the false. Divine judgments are frequently compared to the overflowing of water from a river. שָׁפַךְ, to pour out, expresses the fulness of their iniquity. Comp. Zeph. iii. 8. שָׁפַךְ, prop. effervescence, flowing over, also denotes the greatness of the punishment.

11. רֵבִיזוֹן מִשְׁפָּט, the genitive of cause, broken in pieces by the judgment, or punishment inflicted. צָו refers not to any divine commandment, but to the order issued by Jeroboam to worship the golden calves, 1 Kings xii. 28-33. Such an order his subjects were bound by higher authority to have resisted ; but they readily complied with it, and thus became prepared to indulge in all the gross idolatries to which this worship proved the introduction. From the circumstance that the LXX. have rendered the passage ὀπίσω τῶν ματαίων, after vanities, it has been conjectured that they read שָׁפַךְ instead of צָו ; but it is more likely they intended to give the sense of the whole, rather than the signification of this particular word. They are followed by both the Syriac versions, and in part by the Targ. Jerome, on the other hand, has read the same letters which now stand in the text ; for he renders sordes, pointing the word צָו, and regarding it as merely a contracted form of צוּא צוּא, filthiness.

12. The reference in שָׂץ, Arab. عَنْزَة, moth, is to the consumption of garments, Ps. xxxix. 12 ; Is. l. 9 ; in רֵקָב, rottenness, to that of wood. See Job xiii. 28, where both words occur together as here. The LXX. freely render the former by παπαχή, the latter by κέντρον. The meaning is not that God was regarded as the moth and rottenness, i. e. with disgust ; but that he was the author of those judgments by which the idolaters should be consumed.

13. רָאָה, to see, has here the sense of feeling, experiencing, as in the phrases to see life, death, good, evil, etc. מָוֵד, lit. a bandage, from דָּרַר, to compress, bind as a wound, see Is. i. 6 ; hence, as here, a bandaged wound, corresponding to הַיָּגִי, sickness, disease, in the other member of the parallelism. For the use of such metaphors in application to the state of

Then Ephraim went to Assyria;

He sent to the hostile king;

But he could not cure you,

Nor remove your wound from you.

14 For I will be like a lion to Ephraim,

And like a young lion to the house of Judah;

I, even I will tear the prey, and depart;

I will carry it away, and there shall be none to rescue.

15 I will depart, I will return to my place,

Till they suffer punishment;

political affairs, comp. Is. i. 5, 6, iii. 7; Hos. vi. 1, vii. 1. After  $\text{יְהוּדָה}$ , supply as its nominative,  $\text{יְהוּדָה}$ : Judah, from the preceding part of the verse, which forms an alternate quatrain; the third line connecting with the first, and the fourth with the second.  $\text{יָרִיב}$  is not a proper name, but an appellative, signifying one who contends, is contentious, hostile; from  $\text{יָרִיב}$ , to strive with, quarrel, contend. The form is the apocopated future, and is contracted for  $\text{יָרִיב}$ , he that acts hostilely. Tanchum  $\text{מֶלֶךְ}$ $\text{יַחְצָמ}$ , the king that contended.

Comp.  $\text{יְהוּדָה}$ , Joiarib, Neh. xi. 5. Aq.  $\text{δικαζόμενον}$ ; Symm.  $\text{ἐδικαον}$ , or  $\text{ἐδικαυ-τῆν}$ ; Theod.  $\text{κρίσεν}$ . Jerome, ad regem ultorem. De Wette, Der könig der rächen soll. That the king of Assyria is meant there can be no doubt. See chap. x. 6. He was ever ready to mix himself up with the affairs of neighboring states, in order to extend or consolidate his gigantic empire, and was justly regarded by the Hebrews as their most powerful adversary. The application made by the northern kingdom was that which took place in the reign of Menahem, when that monarch sent to Pul a thousand talents of silver for the purpose of engaging him on his behalf, 2 Kings xv. 19. But this alliance proved of no real value; for the subsidy was raised by oppression, and in the course of the following reign, Tiglath-pileser invaded and depopulated great part of the country, ver. 29. The embassy from the kingdom of Judah was that sent by Ahaz to Tiglath-pileser, when attacked by the united kings of Syria and Israel, 2 Kings xvi. 7, 8; 2 Chron. xxviii. 21.  $\text{יָרִיב}$  as a verb, occurs only in this place; but a noun derived from it is used Prov. vii. 22, in the sense of healing. If we may judge from the Syr.  $\text{ܐܘܪܝܒܐ}$ , recedere, fugere, Aph. liberare, it properly signifies to remove, relieve, and so with respect to a wound, to heal. LXX.  $\text{οὐ μὴ διαπάσῃ}$ ;

Syr.  $\text{ܐܘܪܝܒܐ}$ , neque sanabit.

14. No effort to recover a state of prosperity while the anger of Jehovah was excited against them, could possibly succeed.  $\text{יָרִיב}$ , the black lion, and  $\text{יָרִיב$ , the young lion, are frequently employed to convey the ideas of strength and ferocity, Ps. xci. 13. The reduplication  $\text{יָרִיב}$  is, as usual, emphatic. Comp. Is. xliii. 25; xlvi. 15.  $\text{יָרִיב}$ , prey, is understood after  $\text{יָרִיב}$  and  $\text{יָרִיב}$ .

15. As God's coming to a people, and being with them, implies their experiencing efficient protection and aid, so his withdrawal of his presence implies the deprivation of these blessings.  $\text{יָרִיב}$ , like many other verbs, has a sensus pregnans; conveying not only the idea of contracting guilt, but of suffering its consequences. The latter idea seems clearly to be conveyed in this passage. The Rabbins, indeed, and after them, Glassius, and many others, attempt to attach to the verb the superadded signification of acknowledging, which is that adopted by our translators; but it is by no means supported by Lev. iv. 22; v. 5; Zech. xi. 5; the passages usually adduced in proof. " $\text{יָרִיב}$ ", to seek the face of any one, means to strive to obtain his favor. See 1 Kings

Then will they seek my face :
When they are in trouble, they will seek me early.

x. 24; Prov. xxix. 26. The phrase prayer. Comp. Dan. ix. 3.  $\text{רָחַץ}$  is occurs very frequently in the Psalms, in synonymous with  $\text{שָׁחַב}$ , but is only used reference to application to Jehovah in in poetic diction.

CHAPTER VI.

The nation, in both its divisions, is here introduced as taking up language suitable to the circumstances described in the concluding verses of the preceding chapter, 1-3; but however appropriate it was to the condition of the people, that it was not the result of sound and thorough conversion, appears from ver. 4, in which they are expostulated with on the ground of their inconstancy. Notice is then taken of the means, both of a moral and a punitive nature, that had been employed for their recovery, 5, 6; their deceitful and wicked conduct, especially that of the Israelites, is placed in a strong light, 7-10; and a special denunciation of punishment is directed against the Jews, who flattered themselves with the hope that whatever might befall the northern tribes, no calamity would happen to them.

- 1 COME, let us return to Jehovah,
For he hath torn, but he will heal us ;
He hath smitten, but he will bind us up.
- 2 He will restore us to life after two days :

1, 2. It has been disputed whether these words be those of the prophet exhorting his countrymen to repent and turn to God, or whether they are to be regarded as employed by themselves to give expression to their feelings of penitence, their confidence in God for deliverance from punishment, and their resolutions of amendment for the future. The latter appears, from the bearing of ver. 5, to be the preferable interpretation. The intimate connection of the words with the preceding context, and the repetition, in part, of its language, induces to the conclusion that the same subject is here continued, viz. the castigation of the Hebrew kingdoms on account of idolatry, and the effect produced by it. This connection the ancient versions have endeavored to establish by inserting a word corresponding to  $\text{רָחַץ}$ ; though it is not found in any Heb. MSS. From the apparent agreement of the language of ver. 2, with the circumstances of time connected with the death and resurrection of our Saviour, many interpreters, as Lactantius, Tertullian, Origen, Jerome, Augustine, Luther, Oecolampadius, Mercer, Riberus, Tarnovius, Hammond, etc., have maintained that it is to these respect is had in the prophecy. I fully concur, however, in the judicious remarks of Calvin on this interpretation, "Sed sensus ille videtur mihi nimium argutus. Et semper hoc spectandum est nobis, ne volitemus in aëre; placent argutæ speculationes primo intuitu, sed postea evanescent. Ergo quisquis volet proficere in Scripturis, semper hanc regulam teneat, ut solidum sit quicquid colligit sive in"

On the third day he will raise us up,
And we shall live before him.

3 Then we shall know, we shall strive to know Jehovah:

Like the dawn, his going forth is fixed.

Yea, he will come to us like the rain,

Like the latter rain, which watereth the earth.

prophetis, sive in Apostolis." The exegesis of Grotius, Horsley, and many others, who regard the words as primarily applicable to the Jews, and secondarily, or allusively, to the resurrection of Christ, is equally unsatisfactory. The simple meaning of the passage is, that on their conversion from the service of idols to that of Jehovah, the Hebrews should experience the removal of the national calamities with which they had been visited; the nation which had been reduced to a state of political death would be resuscitated, and enjoy a renewal of its former prosperity. From the metaphor of disease, ver. 1, there is in ver. 2, an advance to that of actual death, and a consequent resurrection, in order to place their present and also their anticipated condition in a more striking light. For the use of the latter metaphor in application to the national affairs of the Jews, see Is. xxvi. 19; Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14. וַיְהִי בַּיּוֹם הַשְּׁלִישִׁי, on the third day, is expletive of אַחַר יָמִים, after days, i. e. two days; LXX. μετὰ δύο ἡμέρας. That a short period is meant, appears from two and two three being used to denote a few, or very few, 1 Kings xvii. 12; Is. vii. 21, xvii. 6. Comp. Luke xiii. 32, 33. The afflicted Hebrews confidently hoped that their punishment would be of brief duration, and that God would assuredly restore them to the enjoyment of his favor. Such enjoyment is expressed by לִפְנֵי פָנָיו, before him, experiencing his presence and blessing. The phrase contrasts with that employed chap. v. 15, and indicates the result of בְּקָשׁוֹ שָׁבַר, there predicted.

3. In וַיִּדְעוּ וַיִּשְׁתְּדְּלוּ לְדַעַת יְהוָה, there is a rise from a resolution simply to acquire a true knowledge of Jehovah, to a determination to make such knowledge the object of earnest and unwearied pursuit.

The ו of the elongated futures marks this bent or inclination of mind. To separate the verbs, and connect the former with the preceding verse, as Horsley does, would quite destroy the force of the prophet's language. At the same time the ו at the beginning of the verse is inferential, intimating that what follows would be the result of the divine interposition on behalf of the Hebrew people. Some few MSS. insert ו before וַיִּדְעוּ, to be fixed, established, certain. As certain and delightful as the dawn of the morning would be the coming forth of the favor of Jehovah after the dark night of adversity. This beautiful metaphor is taken from the sunrise. See, for such application of מִצְוֵה, Ps. xix. 7. The other images were peculiarly appropriate in Palestine, where rain falls seldom, except in spring and autumn. At these seasons it is heavy, and greatly contributes to the fertility of the soil, on which account its bestowment was regarded as among the most necessary of temporal blessings, and its absence a source of awful calamity. The former, commonly called יָרֵחַ, or מִיָּרֵחַ, the darting rain, from the root יָרַח, to dart, cast, etc.; here שֶׁמֶט, the rain, by way of eminence; the heavy, violent rain, as the word properly signifies. It falls from the middle of October till about the middle of December, and is called the early or former rain. LXX. ἄρσιμος, because the Jews commenced their year at that time. It prepares the ground for the reception of the seed. וַיִּדְעוּ, the latter rain, LXX. ἄψιμος, falls in the latter half of February and during the months of March and April, just before the harvest; from which circumstance it receives its name—שָׁבַר, signifying to gather or collect, the late fruit. Comp. שָׁבַר, to collect, Syr.

- 4 What shall I do to thee, O Ephraim !
 What shall I do to thee, O Judah !
 For your goodness is like the morning cloud,
 And like the dew which early departeth.
- 5 For this cause I have hewed them by the prophets,
 I have slain them by the words of my mouth :
 Thy judgments went forth like the lightning.
- 6 For I desired mercy and not sacrifice ;
 And the knowledge of God, rather than burnt offerings.

נְחִמָּה, serotinus. Before יְהוָה supply
 אֱלֹהֵינוּ.

4. That the declarations contained in the preceding verses are not to be viewed as divine promises, but express the hopes and resolutions of the afflicted Hebrews, appears from the affecting expostulations here addressed to them, and the description of the temporary and evanescent character of their boasted reformation. Like a tender parent who is anxious, if possible, to reclaim a wayward child, Jehovah asks what other means could possibly be employed for the recovery of his rebellious people. They had been tried both with mercies and judgments, but without effect. Comp. Is. v. 4-7. רַחֲמֵי properly means kindness, benignity, mercy; here piety, religion, as Is. xl. 6.

Syr. بصحة صبح, your goodness; Pococke's Arab. MS. دينكم, your religion. Theodoret not inaptly gives the meaning thus: ἡ παρ' ὑμῶν γενομένη μεταμέλεια πρόσκαιρος ἐστὶ, καὶ οὐ διαρκής. In Palestine, and other countries of the same latitude, the dense clouds which cover the heavens during the morning are all gone by nine or ten o'clock; and the dews, however copious, early disappear. מְצִיבָה is here, as frequently, to be taken adverbially; early, in the morning. As the cognate Ethiop. በሰዓል: signifies to carry a burden, and beasts of burden are usually loaded in the morning, the Hebrew מְצִיבָה came in Hiphil to signify the doing of any thing at an early hour. מְצִיבָה is not to be construed with אֱלֹהֵינוּ, but with בְּצֵל.

5. The severity of the threatenings communicated through the instrumentality of the prophets is compared to the incisions made in stone or wood with the axe, and those made in the human body with the sword. Comp. Is. xi. 4; Heb. iv. 12. After יְהוָה supply אֱלֹהֵינוּ. To make the pronominal affixes agree, the LXX. Syr. and Targ. read מִשְׁפָּטַי, "my judgments," and so likewise Dathe, Kuinoel, Boeckel, Newcome, Boothroyd, and Ewald, instead of מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, "thy judgments." Vulg. judicia tua. Hexap.

Syr. כימלתא. There is no variety in the MSS., except that one of Kennicott's, and originally one of De Rossi's, have מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, "thy judgment," in the singular. The reference of the affix is to הָיָה, ver. 4; and the meaning is, the judgments which belong to thee, which thou deservedst, and which were inflicted upon thee. The genitive is that of object. Comp. מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, 1 Kings xx. 40; מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, Jer. li. 9; and especially מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, Zeph. iii. 15. Thus Lyranus: "penæ tibi inferendæ." מִשְׁפָּטֶיךָ, though future, is modified by the preceding preterite, and is to be rendered accordingly. אֱלֹהֵינוּ has here the sense of lightning, as in Job xxxvii. 3, 15. The LXX. Syr. Targ. and Arab. supply אֱלֹהֵינוּ before אֱלֹהֵינוּ. Sudden and awful as the lightning were the inflictions of merited punishment upon the idolatrous Hebrews.

6. רַחֲמֵי means here true piety, of which mercy or charity is only a branch. אֱלֹהֵינוּ corresponding to it in the second member of the verse, likewise means a practical knowledge of God, in opposition to that which is merely speculative. Comp. Jer. xxii. 16. The present is one

- 7 But they are like men that break a covenant :
 There they proved false to me.
 8 As for Gilead, it is a city of evil-doers ;
 Marked with footsteps of blood.

of several passages in the Old Testament, in which the comparative worthlessness of ceremonial observances is taught. See Is. i. 11-17; Ps. xl. 7-9, l. 8-23; Mic. vi. 6-8. Comp. Matt. ix. 13. xii. 7.

7. Translators and commentators have been greatly divided respecting the precise meaning of  $\text{בְּרִית}$  as occurring in this passage. Some, as Jarchi, Jerome, Leo Juda, Castalio, Grotius, Clarius, Manger, Tingstadius, Newcome, Rosenmüller, Boothroyd, and Stuck, regard it as a proper name, and suppose the reference to be to the conduct of Adam in transgressing the divine commandment; while Kimchi, Munster, Vatablus, Tremellius, Beza, Drusius, Lively, Calvin, Rivetus, Piscator, Zanchius, Ecolampadius, Mercer, Lowth, De Wette, Maurer, Hitzig, Ewald, etc., take it to be an appellative, and interpret the passage of the treacherous violation of contracts among mankind. In favor of the former view, it is alleged, that it places the guilt of the Israelites in a much more aggravated light; and Job xxxi. 33, Ps. lxxxii. 7, are appealed to in proof of a similar allusion. It is, however, very doubtful whether there be any such allusion in these passages; and as to the force of the comparison, it seems sufficiently supplied by supposing men in general to be understood, who break the engagements into which they have entered with each other. The Israelites had treated God as if he had been one of themselves, and as if the sanctions of his covenant were as little to be regarded as those of ordinary contracts were by men of unprincipled character. If we except the three passages in question, it is universally admitted that there is no other, after the first chapters of Genesis, in which  $\text{בְּרִית}$  is used as a proper name, or in which any reference is made to our first parent. The absolute and indefinite form too in which  $\text{בְּרִית}$  occurs, (comp. on the other hand  $\text{בְּרִיתִי}$ , "my covenant," chap. viii. 1.) shows, that both this noun and the preceding verb  $\text{עָבַר$ , stand in immediate relation to  $\text{בְּרִית}$ , which, as very frequently, is a collective, and is thus used instead of a plural, which it nowhere exhibits. It may also be objected to the first mentioned interpretation, that nowhere in Scripture is God said to have entered into a  $\text{בְּרִית}$ , or covenant with Adam. The obligations under which he was placed are represented as those of a  $\text{מִצְוָה}$ , command or interdict, rather than any of a federal nature.  $\text{בְּאֵדֹם}$ , like Edom, the reading proposed by Michaelis, has found no supporters. Before  $\text{עָבַר$ , supply  $\text{אֶפְסָר}$ , of which there is frequently an ellipsis in Hebrew poetry. See Noldius, p. 103.— $\text{שָׁם}$ , there, points graphically to the northern or Israelitish kingdom as the principal scene of idolatrous defection, and anticipates the regions more specifically referred to in the two following verses.

8.  $\text{גִּלְעָד}$ , Gilead, is the nominative absolute, and is here the designation of a city, in all probability Ramoth-Gilead, the metropolis of the mountainous region beyond Jordan, and south of the river Jabbok, known by the name of Gilead, Josh. xxi. 38; 1 Kings iv. 13. It was here that Jacob and Laban entered into a solemn covenant with each other, Gen. xxxi. 21, 23, 25. Burckhardt found ruins of cities on two mountains in that region, still known by the names of Djebel, Djelaâd, and Djelaûd, one or other of which may have been that here mentioned. It was one of the cities of refuge, Deut. iv. 43; Josh. xx. 8; but appears from the present passage to have afterwards become notorious for idolatry and bloodshed. Some would restrict  $\text{אֲנִי עֹבְדֵי אֱלֹהִים}$  to idolaters, in imitation of the LXX. who render ἐργαζομένη μάταια; but it seems better to take the phrase in its more enlarged meaning, as including all manner of wickedness. Of this, indeed, idolatry has ever been found to be the fruitful parent. Various expla-

- 9 As troops of robbers lie in wait for a man,
So is the association of priests:
They commit murder in the way to Shechem;
Yea, they practise deliberate crime.
- 10 In the house of Israel I have seen what is horrifying;
There is the lewdness of Ephraim;
Israel is polluted:
11. Also for thee, O Judah! a harvest is appointed.

nations of עֲקָבִים have been advanced; but the simplest is that which regards it as signifying traced, from עָקַב, the heel, step, print of the foot, and describing the marks or traces of blood left by the feet of the murderers who resided there. Syr.

سَمَكَلَانِ دَبْحَانِ, stained with blood.

Jewish Span. immunda de sangre. To what historical facts the prophet refers we have no information, except perhaps that contained in 2 Kings xv. 25, from which it appears that fifty of the inhabitants of Gilead were implicated in the regicidal conspiracy against Pekahiah.

9. שֶׁכֶם, Shechem, was another city of refuge, situated between Ebal and Gerizim. It still exists under the name of نابلس, Nablos, and has, from very ancient times been the seat of the religious community of the Samaritans. Having been for a time the residence of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 25, its inhabitants became so corrupted, that the priests resident there banded together, waylaid, and murdered with impunity the persons who were fleeing to the asylum for refuge. The ה in שֶׁכֶם is that of direction, and connects in sense with הָרֶגֶץ. The interposition of the verb יִרְצָחָהּ between these two nouns occasions no difficulty, since we have instances of nouns in construction being separated. See Gen. vii. 6; Is. xix. 8; Hos. xiv. 3. Our common version, and many others, following the Targ. בְּתוֹךְ הָרֶגֶץ, one shoulder, translate שֶׁכֶם with one consent, which well suits the connection; but is not borne out by Hebrew usage—the term occurring but once, Zeph. iii. 7, in this metaphorical acceptance, and then not שֶׁכֶם as here, but שֶׁכֶם אֶרְצָה. הַבִּי is generally considered to be an imitation of the Chaldee form of the Infin. in Piel, from הָרַבַּח, to wait, lie in wait for; but it seems more likely to be the abbreviated form of the Piel Participle מַרְבֵּיחַ, the מ being dropped, as in חַבֵּחַ, Eccles. iv. 2, and in several instances of the Pual Participles. See Gesen. Lehrgeb. p. 316. שֶׁכֶם אֶרְצָה will thus form the genitive of object. Three MSS. substitute ה for י; and instead of the prepositive ב, three MSS. and three printed editions read ב. Before הַרְבֵּיחַ there is an ellipsis of בְּן, corresponding to ב in מַרְבֵּיחַ.—זָמָה is used to denote presumptuous or deliberate wickedness, from זָמַם; Arab. سَم, proposuit sibi, to form a purpose, lay a deliberate plan of action; chiefly employed in a bad sense. LXX. ἀνομία. Hitzig, Unthat.

10. שֶׁכֶם אֶרְצָה, LXX. φρικώδη, occurs under the forms שֶׁכֶם אֶרְצָה and שֶׁכֶם אֶרְצָה, Jer. v. 30, xxiii. 14, xviii. 13. It is explained immediately after of the atrocious idolatry which, through the influence of the tribe of Ephraim, had spread itself over the whole kingdom of Israel.

11. For the various interpretations which have been given of this verse see Tarnovius or Pococke. Ewald is the only modern that adopts branch as the rendering of קָצִיר, as Kimchi proposed, and explains it of the introduction of idolatry into Judah. How Horsley could assert that harvest is used in a good sense, as an image of the ingathering of the people of God, is inconceivable. See Jer. li. 33; Joel iii. 13; Rev. xiv. 15–20. Nowhere in prophecy does it appear to be used in this sense. In all probability, the punishment predicted is that recorded, 2 Chron. xxviii. 6–8. שֶׁכֶם is here used impersonally. Instead of הַבִּי, four MSS. originally two more, the Targ. and two old editions, read לֵא. The words בְּשׁוּבִי שָׁבוּת עִמֹּי have no meaning, if connected with the preceding, which form a concise apostrophical warning to the Jewish kingdom. They must, therefore, be transferred to the following context, with which they will be found to be in harmony. Thus Moerlius, Michaelis, Jahn, Eichhorn, Kuinoel, Stuck, De Wette, and Boothroyd, divide.

---

CHAPTER VII.

The prophet continues his description of the wickedness of the ten tribes. Regardless of Jehovah, they persevered in falsehood and violence, 1, 2; flattered their rulers, and thereby obtained their sanction to their nefarious conduct, 3, 5; and indulged to the utmost in licentiousness, 4-7. The murder of their kings successively is predicted, and their hardness and folly are further set forth, 7-10. The prophet next adverts to their fruitless application for assistance to Egypt and Assyria, and their equally fruitless, because false professions of return to the service of God, 11-16.

-
- 1 WHEN I reversed the captivity of my people,
 When I healed Israel,
 Then was the iniquity of Ephraim revealed,
 And the wicked deeds of Samaria;
 For they practised deceit;
 The thief entered,
 And the banditti plundered in the street.
 2 And they considered not in their heart,

1. Some would render בְּשׁוּבִי שָׁבוּת עִמֹּי, "When I again lead my people into captivity;" but altogether contrary to the established usage of the language. See Deut. xxx. 3; Ps. xiv. 7; Jer. xxxi. 23; Zeph. iii. 20. The words are explained by the following כִּרְפָּאִי לְיִשְׂרָאֵל, when I heal Israel. ב and כ frequently alternate with each other, when used of the time at which any thing is done. The restoration here mentioned is in all probability that of the two hundred thousand Jewish captives, to which reference is made 2 Chron. xxviii. 8-15. The conduct of the Israelitish rulers upon that occasion held out some hope of improvement in the character of the nation, and a consequent change in the Divine conduct towards it; and this expectation was confirmed by a temporary cessation of the judgments of God, during which they might be said to have been healed; but it was soon entirely frustrated by the open increase of wickedness among them. וְנִגְלָה has the force of then, on the contrary, become more manifest, etc. For Samaria, see on Is. xxviii. 1. Being the metropolis of the ten tribes, it was the head spring of that corruption of manners which overspread the kingdom. וְרִבּוּא and פָּשַׁט בְּרוּיָן describe the acts of violence that were committed by breaking into and plundering private houses, and those which were perpetrated on persons in the streets. The reference is not to foreign enemies, as Horsley and others expound, but to lawless Israelites.

2. For the phrase בְּלֵב בְּלֵב, comp. the

That I remembered all their wickedness :

Now their deeds encompass them ;

They are before my face.

3 With their wickedness they cheer the king,

And with their falsehoods the princes.

4 They are all adulterers ;

They are like an oven, heated by the baker ;

Who resteth from heating it,

From the time he kneadeth the dough,

Until it be leavened.

5 On the day of our king,

Arab. قال في قلبه, and قال في

نفسه; and our, say to one's self. Ps.

xiv. 1, et freq. Instead of לִבִּי, the form exhibited in the printed text, "to their heart," ten MSS., originally seven more, now one, perhaps another, and the Complut. Bible, read לִבִּי, "in their heart." One of De Rossi's MSS. states in the margin that the latter reading is found in other copies. It is also supported by the Syr. Vulg. Targ. and Arab. versions. Both forms describe internal or mental conversation, only ל indicates an endeavor to persuade. So far were the persons spoken of from bringing themselves to act on the conviction, that God was privy to their wicked deeds, that they evinced the contrary disposition. Still, however, the phrase may best be rendered by think, consider, or the like. To the words

מִעֲלֵי יָדָם, two interpretations have been given. They either mean, that the evil practices of the Israelites crowded round them as so many causes of punishment, as enemies surround and shut up the object of their attack; or,

that they crowded about them as so many witnesses to reveal the wickedness of their character. The latter would seem, from the following words, to be the true meaning.

3. Their rulers, instead of repressing, took delight in the immoral and irreligious conduct of the people.

4. In this connection, מִנְאַשִׁים is to be taken in its literal signification. Comp.

Jer. ix. 1, xxiii. 10. For the conjecture of Stuck, that the word was originally מִנְאַשִׁים, baked or cooked, there is no foundation. To place the violent and incontinent character of their lust in the strongest light, the prophet compares it to a baker's oven, which he raises to such a degree of heat, that he only requires to omit feeding it during the short period of the fermentation of the bread.

Such was the libidinous character of the Israelites, that their impure indulgences were subject to but slight interruptions.

Comp. ἀκαταπόστους ἀμαρτίας, 2 Pet. ii.

14. בְּעֵרָה, in the feminine agrees with תַּנּוּר, which is of common gender. The latter word Gesenius derives from the Aram. נור, to smoke, and נור, fire.

Comp. the Arab. تنور and Syr. تَنْوَر, fornax, clibanus. The oven here referred to is not the pitcher-oven of the Arabs, but the larger kind, pretty much like our own, which was, as it still is, used in public bake-houses. בְּעֵרָה מִנְאַשִׁים is elliptical for burning, having been kindled

by the baker. Before יִשְׁבֹּת supply אֶשׁ.

The meaning is, who only ceaseth from heating, etc. Most interpreters take מִנְאַשִׁים in the sense of stirring, rousing up, etc., and apply it to the stirring of the fire in the oven; but it is preferable to regard it as the part. of עֵיר, Arab. عار, to be hot, burning; hence in Hiph. to cause to burn, heat, etc. Thus the LXX.

ἀπὸ τῆς φλογός. The interpretation from the city, given in the Syr. Targ. and Vulg. is altogether inappropriate. For the feminine form of the Infin. תַּנּוּרָה,

Comp. חֲמֵלָה, Ezek. xvi. 5.

5. By יוֹם is meant a festal day; either that of the king's birth, or, as the

The princes are sick with the fever of wine ;
 He stretcheth out his hand with the scoffers.
 6 For though they approach with their heart warm as an oven,
 Yet it is in their plot ;
 Their baker sleepeth all the night ;
 In the morning it burneth like a blazing fire.

Targ. Jarchi and Kimchi give it, that of his inauguration. The preposition ב is understood. Michaelis thinks the reference is to the accession of a new king to the throne. Instead of מְלִכֵינוּ, our king, twenty-two MSS. and the Syr. read מְלִכֵינוּ our kings; LXX. ἡμέραι τῶν βασιλείων ὑμῶν. הִתְחִלָּנוּ is used intransitively. The LXX. Syr. Targ. Vulg. Abarbanel, Leo Juda, Newcome, Michaelis, and Boothroyd, refer this verb to the root תְּחַלַּל; but, not to insist on its requiring in such case to be read הִתְחִלָּנוּ, there is something so intolerably tame in the rendering, "The princes began to be heated with wine," that it cannot be admitted as the language of the prophet. Besides, תְּחַמְמוּ would likewise require to be changed into תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, which would produce an anomalous infinitive. תְּחַמְמוּ, bottle, less agrees with מ following than תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, heat. Comp. Arab. حمية حمية.

תְּחַמְמוּהוּ is an instance of the construct state with a preposition intervening between the nouns. Comp. תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, Ezek. xiii. 2; תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, Is. li. 21, and see Gesen. Lehrgeb. p. 679. The words mean the heat or fever produced by intoxication. While the courtiers thus indulged to excess, the monarch, forgetting his dignity, participated in their cups, and joined in their scoffs. Because תְּחַמְמוּהוּ occurs nowhere else, Houbigant would have it changed into the usual form תְּחַמְמוּ, most uncritically. Comp. תְּחַמְמוּהוּ and תְּחַמְמוּהוּ. Aq. χλευαστῶν; LXX. less properly, λοιμῶν. The reduplicate form is intensive, and expresses the awfully profligate character of the persons described.

6. I consider the prophet to be continuing in this verse his description of the abandoned courtiers, in imagery borrowed from that introduced ver. 4. In their intercourse with the monarch, they approached him with the warmest professions of loyalty; but in private they were scheming how to get rid of him. The ringleader waited till he could conveniently carry the plot into execution: and speedily they effected the nefarious purpose. Were it not that all the ancient versions render תְּחַמְמוּ as a verb, I should have been inclined to point it תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, and translate, "For their inward part is like an oven; their heart is in their plot." Comp. וְהִתְחַמְמוּהוּ, Jer. ix. 7. The rendering I have given, however, equally suits the connection. Though there is no word in the text corresponding to "warm," its insertion in the translation is fully justified by the comparison in בְּתַנּוּר, like an oven, and the intensive force of תְּחַמְמוּ in Piel. That this verb ever signifies to make ready or prepare, I do not find. All attempts to justify the rendering of the LXX. and

Syr. ἀνεκαθήνησαν, <sup>ص</sup>ص, by the conjectural readings תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, and תְּחַמְמוּהוּ, have proved abortive. According to the Hexapla, Symm. (חַמְמוּ),

Aq. and Theod. (חַמְמוּ), read as we now do; as did likewise the Targ. אֲתַחְמְמוּהוּ. — אֲשֵׁיהֶם, their baker, (many MSS. and various printed editions have אֲשֵׁיהֶם, which may also be regarded as a singular form, י taking the place of the third radical ה, as in other nouns or participles derived from verbs in "ה,) the Targ. and Syr. render יְרוּגָהוּן, <sup>ו</sup>ו, as if the reading were אֲשֵׁיהֶם, their anger. Ἐφραῖμ, found in the LXX. shows that the former must have been the reading of the MS. which they used, as the latter could not have so easily been mistaken for this proper name. אֲשֵׁיהֶם, which Dathe proposes, and Kuinoel

- 7 They all glow as an oven,
They devour their judges;
All their kings have fallen:
None among them calleth unto me.
- 8 Ephraim mixeth himself up with the nations;
Ephraim is a cake unturned.
- 9 Strangers devour his strength,
But he knoweth it not;
Yea, gray hairs are sprinkled upon him,
Yet he knoweth it not.

adopts into his Heb. text, nowhere occurs in the sense, ira, furor, eorum. By "their baker" seems to be meant the leader of the conspiracy, whom some suppose to be Menahem, others Shallum, 2 Kings xv. 10-15; but I should rather infer from what is stated ver. 7, that the prophet includes all the conspiracies which took place in Israel. Having prepared the rest of the conspirators, he, like the baker, abided his time, when, of a sudden, the plot burst forth like a flame.

7. Comp. 2 Kings xv. בָּלֵם, all of them, corresponds to בָּלֵם, ver. 4. רָחֵמוּ is the future in Kal of רָחַם, to be warm, hot, etc. The prophet still continues the comparison. As the fire in the oven devours the fuel, so the persons spoken of destroyed those who were in authority. לִפְנֵי is not to be taken in the sense of falling off or apostatizing from God, as Jerome, Ribera, Menochius, Tirinius, and some others interpret, but in that of falling by the hands of murderers. This, אֲכָלוּ, they devour, in the preceding hemistich, shows. The source of the evil, however, lay in apostasy from Jehovah, which had reached such a height, that none implored the Divine aid even when in calamity.

8. Ewald renders יָהֲבֵנִי, veraltet, "hath become old," which might seem to derive some support from the latter part of ver 9; but the verb can, with no propriety, be referred to any other root than בָּלַל, Arab. بَلَّل, madefecit, com- mistus fuit, Syr. ضَلَّ confudit, to mix by pouring, mix, confound. LXX.

συνεμύγνυτο. Syr. اَلْمَسْكَب, Targ. אֲתִעְרַבָּה. Comp. Psalm cvi. 35, where אֲתִעְרַבָּה בְּגוֹיִם is similarly used of promiscuous intercourse with idolaters. That such intercourse generally, including the adoption of their idolatrous practices, and not specifically the entering into leagues with them, is meant, appears from the following clause, in which, to express the worthlessness of the Ephraimitish character, the people are compared to a cake, which, from not having been turned, is burnt, and good for nothing. The Arabs bake their bread on the ground or hearth, covering it with hot embers, and turning it every ten minutes or quarter of an hour, to prevent its being burnt. When neglected it is unfit for food, and is thrown away. Such was the state of the apostate Israelites. They had corrupted themselves, and were only fit for rejection. LXX. ἐγκρυφίας, bread baked in hot ashes, Cyril, τῶν ἐπὶ λίθοις ὀπτομένων ἄρτων.

9. זָרִים, strangers, foreigners, i. e. the Syrians, Assyrians, etc. See 2 Kings xiii. 7; xv. 19, 20; xvii. 3-6. The state, drawing to its close, without the fact being observed by its citizens, is compared to a person on whose head gray hairs begin to make their appearance, without his becoming sensible of the approach of age.

"Sparsere et nigras alba senecta comas." Propertius.

10-12. A repetition of part of chap. v. 5, which see. Though the apostate Israelites had abundant proof of the

- 10 The pride of Israel testifieth to his face,
 Yet they turn not to Jehovah their God,
 Nor seek him for all this.
- 11 Ephraim is like a silly dove, without understanding ;
 They call in Egypt, they go to Assyria.
- 12 As they go, I will spread my net upon them,
 I will bring them down like the fowls of heaven :
 I will chastise them,
 As it hath been heard in their assembly.
- 13 Woe unto them ! for they have wandered from me ;
 Destruction unto them ! for they have rebelled against me.
 Though it was I that redeemed them,
 Yet have they spoken lies against me.
- 14 They cry not to me with their heart,
 But howl upon their beds :

inefficiency of their idols, yet they returned not in the exercise of true repentance to God, who alone could deliver them in the hour of trouble, but formed alliances with foreign powers in the delusive hope of protection. The simplicity of the dove is proverbial. Thus the Arabs, ليس شي ابله من

الكمام, there is nothing more simple than the dove. The word בלי is here, however, used in a bad sense, as בלי לב, without heart, i. e. without understanding, shows. The point of comparison is the inconsiderate flight of the dove from one danger into another; from the alarm which makes her leave her abode for the net of the fowler. Such would be the case with the Israelites. Jehovah had distinctly announced to them, that foreign alliances would prove their ruin; yet they heedlessly rushed into destruction. אצורה stands either for אצורה or אצורה. The spreading of the net refers to the taking of birds that are on the ground; the bringing down, to those that are in the air, by the use of missile weapons. Instead of the Hiphil אצורה, which occurs only here, the Soncin. edit. of the Prophets, and some few MSS. read אצורה in Piel, which may also be interpreted causatively. בשבע לילה, lit. according to the report to their assem-blly, i. e. the public congregations, to which the Divine messages were delivered. God had given them sufficient warning by Moses and the prophets. The versions vary in rendering the last word, which has given rise to the conjectural readings בלי לב, בלי לב, and בלי לב. Aq., however, renders, κατὰ ἀκοῆς τῆς συναγωγῆς.

13. That אין is denunciative and not plaintive, the following אין plainly shows. אין is often used of the flight of birds that wander from their nest, see Prov. xxxvii. 8; Is. xvi. 2; Jer. iv. 25; and is here employed with reference to the silly dove, ver. 12. The redemption from Egypt, and that which, in numerous instances, they afterwards experienced, Jehovah adduces in aggravation of their guilt. Their preferring the service of idols to that of the true God, was not merely a practical denial of his all-sufficiency, but a violation of the solemn pledge which they had given of undivided obedience to his law, when, as stated, chap. vi. 1-3, they professed to return to him.

14. When pressed down by the calamities which their sins had brought upon them, they cried to God for deliverance, but without any genuine repentance or sincere resolution to obey him in future. על-מטבתיהם, upon their beds, i. e. in the night-season, when their anxiety pre-

- For the sake of corn and new wine they assemble;
 They rebel against me.
 15 Though I instructed them, and strengthened their arms,
 Yet they devised evil against me.
 16 They may turn, but it is not to the Most High;
 They are like a deceitful bow;
 Their rulers shall fall by the sword, vented them from sleeping. יִתְגַּדְּדוּ, the LXX. reading יִתְגַּדְּדוּ, render κατερέμυνοντο, they cut themselves, supposing that in token of grief, or like the maddened priests of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 28, they inflicted wounds upon their bodies. This is also, in all probability, what the Syr.

translator intended by . But though יִתְגַּדְּדוּ is found in six MSS. has been in eight more originally, and is the reading of two early editions, one of which is the Soncin. of 1486, it is not sufficiently supported to warrant its adoption into the text. The Targ. Abul-walid, Jarchi, Abenezra, Kimchi, Munster, Piscator, Leo Juda, Junius, Tremellius, Boothroyd, Resenmüller, Maurer, and Gesenius, support the textual reading, and render congregate. This decidedly agrees better with the following יִסֹּרוּ בִּי. Instead of returning to Jehovah, the Israelites assembled before their idols to propitiate them by sacrifices, in order to obtain a fruitful harvest. Lee renders, they become withdrawn, withdraw themselves, i. e. for idolatrous purposes. To mark more strongly the atrociousness of their apostasy, בִּי, "against me," is employed, instead of מִיָּמִי, of "from me," the preposition that otherwise follows סִי, which is frequently used of apostasy from God to idolatrous practices. The whole phrase is in this case best rendered by rebel against, as in our common version.

15. יָדָה does not signify to bind, but to chastise or instruct. The LXX. instead of rendering the last words of the preceding verse, have ἐπαίδευσθησαν. Pococke's Arab. MSS. وانا اذبت. Those whose character is here described, had been instructed not only by words, but also in a more severe manner, by the judgments which had been inflicted upon them; but that the former kind of instruction is meant, seems clear from the phrase יָדָה זְרוּעַ, to strengthen the arm, i. e. to impart strength or power for the performance of any undertaking. Comp. Ezek. xxx. 24, 25, where both the impartation and the deprivation of such power are mentioned. What the רַע, evil, or wickedness was, which they cogitated, is not specified; but it most likely consisted in some new idolatrous alliance, such as that with Egypt, referred to in the next verse. LXX. πονηρὰ; Targ. בִּישָׁךְ, evil things.

16. יִשׁוּבוּ לֹא עַל, "convertunt se ad non-summum, i. e. ad non-deum, collect. non-deos, i. e. ad deos fictos, vanos." Maurer. Thus also Gesen. in voc. עַל. Comp. for the use of this idiom, Is. x. 15, note. Hosea, who is fond of brevity, uses here and chap. xi. 7, עַל, instead of the longer form עַל-יָהוָה, Most High. Kametz is used instead of Pattach, on account of the accent. Arab. علو altus, excelsus fuit, to be high in dignity. عال, aitus, Pococke's Arab. MS. in chap. xi. 7. العالي; Syr. ܐܢܫܐ, God; one of De Rossi's MSS. אֵל. What the apostate Israelites worshipped, so far from being the Most High, was the direct opposite — wood or stone, the produce of the earth. The LXX. ἀπεστρέψασαν εἰς οὐδὲν, and Syr. ܐܢܫܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ to the same effect, though giving the sense rather than an exact translation. The Latin translation of the Syr. nulla de causa, is quite erroneous. Most moderns, less aptly, take עַל in its adverbial

On account of the insolence of their language:
This shall be their derision in the land of Egypt.

acceptation, and render, they return not upwards; which yields, however, nearly the same meaning. Thus Rosenmüller, Winer, Manger, Stuck, and others. Newcome's conjectural emendation, לֹא יִיָּצֵל, that which cannot profit, has not been approved; while the translation of Dathe, Penitentiam agunt, sed non sinceram, though approved by Kuinoel, Tingstadius, and others, is not borne out by Hebrew usage. רַחֲמֵי רַחֲמֵי some render a slack bow, supposing that its inutility, owing to the absence of elasticity, is what is intended; but false or deceitful better suits the connection, and Ps. lxxviii. 57; and the reference is to something faulty in the construction of the bow, which causes it to shoot or throw out the arrow wide of the mark. Root רָמַה, Arab. رمى, jecit, projecit; to throw, shoot, etc. "There seems no ground for the opinion of Gesenius, that the phrase is used poetically for treacherous bowmen, who feign fight in order to deceive. The Israelites hypocritically pretended to turn to Jehovah, but their actions took a different direction. Comp. רַחֲמֵי רַחֲמֵי, a deceitful tongue, Ps. cxx. 2, 3. The insolence (Aq. and Symm. ἐμβρόμησιον,) of their language doubtless consisted in their proud boast of Egypt as a source of protection from the Assyrian invasion, which God was about to bring upon them. עֲצֵזָה, their derision, i. e. the subject of derision to the Egyptians, to whom they should in vain apply for help. Comp. 2 Kings xvii. 4; Is. xxx. 1-7, though the latter passage is immediately directed against a contemporaneous application on the part of the Jews.

CHAPTER VIII.

The prophet announces the sudden irruption of the Assyrians, 1; by whom the Israelites were to be punished, on account of their hypocrisy and apostasy, 2, 3; their illegitimate government, and their idolatry, 4. He then exposes the folly of their idolatrous confidence, and predicts their captivity, 5-10; remonstrates with them for their devotion to the worship of idols, in opposition to the express and numerous prohibitions of the evil contained in the divine law, 11, 12; and insists that their pretended service of Jehovah, while in reality they forgot him, so far from being of any avail to them, would only bring destruction upon them, 13, 14.

1 Put the trumpet to thy mouth;
"Like an eagle against the house of Jehovah;"

1. It is not unusual for the prophets without naming the invading foe, to announce his approach. See Is. xiii. 2. The words שַׂפְּרָה לְלִשְׁתְּךָ, to thy palate the trumpet! are singularly abrupt, and indicate the suddenness of the threatened invasion. לִשְׁתְּךָ, palate, is here, as Job xxxi. 30, Prov. viii. 7, put for the mouth. Comp. chap. v. 8. The LXX. (εις κολπον αυτων, ως γη) appear to have read

- For they have transgressed my covenant,
They have rebelled against my law.
2 They may cry to me: "O my God;
We — Israel — acknowledge thee."
3 Israel hath rejected what is good;
The enemy shall pursue him.
4 They made kings, but it was not from me;

אֶל הַקָּם בְּעֵשֶׂר, which makes no sense. The following words בְּנִצְטָר עַל-בֵּית יְהוָה, which contain the announcement, are equally abrupt. The point of comparison is the rapidity of flight for which the eagle is celebrated, and which is frequently employed to denote the speedy approach of an enemy. Comp. Deut. xxviii. 49; Jer. iv. 13, xlviii. 40; Lam. iv. 19. בֵּית הַיְהוָה, the house of Jehovah, cannot here mean the temple at Jerusalem, which is otherwise so designated, since the threatenings are specially denounced against the kingdom of the ten tribes. It must, therefore, be taken to denote the people of Israel, the whole nation viewed as the family or church of God. Comp. chap. ix. 15; Numb. xii. 7; Heb. iii. 2; just as the christian church is called the house of God. 1 Tim. iii. 15, and of Christ, Heb. iii. 6. For עָבְרוּ בְּרִיתִי, comp. chap. vi. 7. The nominative to עָבְרוּ they have transgressed, is בֵּית יְהוָה, the family, i. e. the members of the church, of Jehovah. The Israelites had violated the obligations of the theocracy. בְּרִית and הוֹדָה are synonymous.

2. יִזְעָקוּ is the future used potentially and not with irony. אֵלֵהי, "O my God," is construed as a distributive with the plural verb — each of the persons spoken of being regarded as using the language. Inattention to this has led the Syrian translator to render,  O our God.

יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, is in apposition with יְהוָה, we acknowledge thee, and not the nominative to יִזְעָקוּ, from which it is too far removed. It is entirely omitted in the LXX. Syr. and Arab. as it is in one of Kennicott's MSS., and originally in one of De Rossi's יִשְׂרָאֵל, O God

of Israel, the conjecture of Houbigant, is unnecessary. The present position of the word is more in keeping with the style of Hosea, and the use of it well agrees with the vain confidence which the unbelieving Israelites were ever prone to place in their relation to the patriarchs.

3. זָנָה, Arab. , corruptum fuit et fatuit, to be corrupt, loathsome, and to reject as such. To treat as loathsome what was truly excellent, such as the worship of God and the practice of religion, argued an awfully depraved state of moral feeling. The use of יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, finely contrasts with that made of it in the preceding verse. טוֹב, good, is, by Jerome, Abenezra, Kimchi, and others, taken for God himself, who is described as טוֹב וְיָמִיט, good and doing good, Ps. cxix. 68. Deum summum bonum, Ecolampadius. It seems, however, to be used in a more general acceptance. Before אֵיבִיב there is an ellipsis of the illative בְּיָבֵן. Forty-seven of De Rossi's MSS. and two more by correction; eight of the most ancient, and sixty-two other editions; the Syr. Vulg. and Targ. read יִרְדָּפוּ instead of יִרְדָּפוּ, exhibited in the Textus Receptus. See De Rossi's Scholia Critica.

4. Some think the kings and princes here referred to were Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah, Hoshea, and such of their partisans as were invested with authority; but from the allusions made in the following verses to the origination of image worship in Israel, it is more probable that the entire series of Israelitish kings and rulers is intended. Though in the providence of God, and agreeable to the declaration of Ahiah the prophet, the ten tribes revolted from the house of David, and set up a separate and inde-

They set up princes, but I acknowledge them not :
Of their silver and their gold they have made for themselves idols,
In order that they may be cut off.

- 5 Thy calf, O Samaria! is abominable;
Mine anger burneth against them :
How long shall they be incapable of purity?
6 For it came from Israel,

pendent kingdom, yet they were actuated merely by rebellious motives, and had no regard to a divine sanction, 1 Kings xi. 31-39, xii. 20. יָדַע, signifies not only to know, but also to approve of that which is known, regard, allow, own. Job. ix. 21, xxxiv. 4; Ps. i. 6, et freq.

LXX. καὶ οὐκ ἐγγνώρισαν μοι. Syr. לֹא
אֶסְתָּכַנִּי and did not acquaint me, i. e.

held no communications with me upon the subject. The Heb. however, will not bear this interpretation. ו in both cases before אֵל, has the force of a relative, which must either be adopted in translation, or the personal pronoun must be supplied. For their conversion of their silver and gold into idols, comp. chap. ii. 8. לְמַעַן does not appear ever to be taken in a retrospective sense, and so to be referred to what goes before, but is always used with direct reference to what follows. לְמַעַן יִבְרַח is, therefore, to be rendered, in order that they may be cut off; not so that they shall, etc. Comp. Jer. vii. 10, xlv. 8. In all such cases the preposition is employed to give peculiar emphasis to the subject. The Israelites could not seriously, or in reality, have intended their own destruction, but they acted as if they had; and it would assuredly overtake them. The nominative to יִבְרַח may either be Israel, understood; or it may have respect to the people collectively.

5. The calf of Samaria was not any set up in that city, but that set up at Bethel with another at Dan, or both, if we take the noun as a collective, which its inhabitants, and those of the country generally, worshipped. The metropolis appears to be used here by synecdoche for the whole land occupied by the ten tribes;

but, at the same time, there can be little doubt that its inhabitants were pre-eminent in their devotion to idolatry. עֲבֹה, is used in its primary acceptation, to be loathsome, abominable. See on ver. 3. Such construction is preferable to that which would make עֲבֹה the accusative to עֲבָה, assuming יְהוָה understood to be the nominative, or that in our common version, which makes it the nominative, and Samaria in its pronominal reference the accusative. The introduction of the worship of the golden calves by Jeroboam, in imitation of Apis, at Memphis, and Mnevis, at Heliopolis, which he must have seen during his residence in Egypt, paved the way for the imitation and adoption of the gross idolatries practised by the Phœnicians, Syrians, and Chaldeans. אַף יְהוָה, the anger of Jehovah burneth, is an anthropopathic mode of expression of frequent occurrence in the Hebrew Scriptures, denoting the unconquerable opposition of God to all moral evil, and the severity of the punishment with which it is visited. בָּא, against them, i. e. the Israelites who worshipped the golden calves. עַד-מָתַי לֹא יִבְרַח, how long shall they be incapable of purity? i. e. how long shall they be obstinately attached to the impure service of idols, and reject the means by which they might be recovered from its stain and punishment.

6. The golden calf had its origin in Israel: it was not made by any of the surrounding idolaters. The ו in וְהָאֵשׁ is emphatic. וְהָאֵשׁ, שָׂבִיבִים יְהוָה, shall be or become flames, i. e. shall be burnt. שָׂבִיבִים is a ἕπαξ λεγ. and has no root in Heb.; but comp. the Arab شَبَّ, accendit ignem, شَبِيب, ardor, flamma. As the calf was made by man, so it should by man be converted

- The carpenter made it ;
 It is not God :
 Surely the calf of Samaria shall become flames.
- 7 Because they have sown wind,
 They shall reap the whirlwind.
 They shall have no stalk ;
 The growth shall produce no grain ;
 Should it peradventure produce it,
 Strangers shall swallow it up.
- 8 Israel is swallowed up ;
 They are now among the nations,
 Like a vessel in which is no delight.
- 9 For they went up to Assyria,
 Like a solitary wild ass :
 Ephraim hath given the hire of love.

into fuel for the flames. It consisted, in all probability, of wood, thickly overlaid with gold. When taken as a present to the king of Assyria, (see chap. x. 6,) instead of being worshipped or held in respect, it would be stripped of the gold, and consigned to the flames. The LXX. followed by the Arab. Horsley, and Newcombe, improperly translate בִּי מִיִּשְׂרָאֵל, év τῷ Ἰσραήλ, في اسرائيل in Israel, and join the words to those of the preceding verse.

7. סוּפָתָה is the emphatic form of סוּפָה, a tornado, whirlwind. Leo Juda, magnum turbinem. Comp. אִמְתַּח, Exod. xv. 16 ; יִשְׂרָאֵל, Ps. iii. 3. The nominative to לֵי is יִשְׂרָאֵל, understood ; but it is best to take it collectively, in harmony with the plural of the preceding verbs. Observe the paronomasia in בָּלִי צַמְחָה יִשְׂרָאֵל. The Israelites should be unsuccessful in all their undertakings ; and whatever partial gains they might acquire, would be eagerly seized by the Assyrians.

8. What Hosea had just foretold is here realized in prophetic vision. He sees them in a state of exile — the objects of contempt to their oppressors. Comp. Jer. xxii. 28.

9, 10. הֵצֵא, to go up, is elsewhere used of foreigners coming to the land of Israel ;

but is here employed with singular propriety of the Israelites going to Assyria, to intimate their depressed condition, and their acknowledgment of the superiority of the Assyrian power. The reference is not to their going into captivity, but to the embassy which they sent for the purpose of obtaining aid from that quarter. אֶצְרָרָה stands for אֶצְרָרָה הַזֶּה, the of of direction being omitted. The point of comparison in the "wild ass" is his untractableness, and his disposition to take his own way, in consequence of which he forsakes the society of others, and loves the solitariness of the desert. See Job xxxix. 5-8. Thus it was with Israel. Despite of all the councils and warnings given them by the prophets, they persisted in entering into foreign alliances. תַּנְיָה, to give presents, hire, etc. is purposely chosen, to convey the idea of a violation of the marriage contract by unlawful commerce with another party — the derivatives אֶתְנָן and אֶתְנָה, properly denoting a gift or reward given to a whore. See on chap. ii. 12. The aggravation of the evil is signified by representing the female as offering these rewards to her paramours to induce them to commit lewdness, instead of her being prevailed upon by presents made by them. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 33, 34. Though in Hiphil, the verb has here the same signification as in

- 10 Yet though they have hired among the nations,
 I will now gather them;
 And they shall suffer in a little
 By reason of the tribute of the king of princes.
 11 When Ephraim multiplied altars to sin,

Kal. אֱהָבִים, lit. loves, a plural not in use in English. Jerome, who renders, numera dederunt amatoribus, either read אֱהָבִים which is found in one of De Rossi's MSS., or he took אֱהָבִים in a concrete sense, as our translators appear to have done, for which there is no necessity. Instead of יִהְיֶה at the beginning of ver. 10, two of De Rossi's MSS. the LXX. Syr. Vulg. Targ. and Arab. read יִהְיֶה, as if from יָהָרָה; according to which, the Israelites are represented as delivered over to, or placed in the power of the nations. The fifth Greek version, however, has ἀλλὰ καὶ ὅταν μισθώσῃται ἔθνη, which is preferable, as it is most likely that the prophet repeated the verb he had just used, and as the other rendering is less suited to the connection. עָהָה, now, i. e. shortly. Comp. מִנְעַם immediately after. The suffix in אֶקְבֹּצֵם, "I will collect them," belongs to אֲהַבֵּם, the nations, and not to the nominative to יִהְיֶה, or the Israelites. קָבַץ is used in Piel in a bad as well as in a good sense. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 37. Thus Kimchi and Abarbanel. Instead of affording any assistance, the Assyrians would be collected against the apostate Israelites, invade their land, and carry them into captivity. Into that state of suffering, imposed upon them by the king of Assyria, they were shortly to be brought, as a punishment for their idolatrous desertion of the true worship of God. וְהָחֲלִי מִנְעָם מִפְּשָׁא מֶלֶךְ שָׂרִים has been variously interpreted. Gesenius renders, "and they (the hostile nations,) shall presently set them free from the burden of the king, i. e. from his oppressive yoke;" but without any suitable sense — the whole passage being of a comminatory nature, and not promissory of good. וְהָחִיל, the Hiph. of חָלַל, has nowhere the signification of loosing or setting free. Nor is there any propriety in taking it in the usual sense of beginning, and so construing it with מִנְעַם, as if the latter word were the infinitive of the verb מִנְעַם, to be diminished. The ancient versions refer to חָלַל, as the root, in the sense of waiting, desisting from, etc. LXX. κοπδουσαι. Symm. μενούσιον. Theod. διαλείψουσι. Syr.  Vulg. quiescent. And in this reference I concur, especially as ten MSS. and forty-four editions, read וְהָחֲלִי without the Dagesh in the Lamed; only I would abide by the signification, to be in pain, affliction, which is that given to the verb in our common version. Such construction alone suits the connection. By some שָׂרִים אֲהָבֵם are considered to be an instance of asyndeton; and twenty-one MSS. and originally ten more, the LXX. Aq. Syr. Vulg. Targ. and Talm. Babl. supply the copulative ו before שָׂרִים. So Kimchi, Mercer, Piscator. Grotius, Houbigant, Dathe, Michaelis, Kuinoel, Newcome, Tingstadius. It has been doubted, however, whether, according to this resolution of the word, they should be referred to the native king and princes, or to those of Assyria. Some, as Maurer, take them to be the nominative to וְהָחֲלִי, and make the sense end with מִנְעָם, the burden or tribute, supposing the heavy taxes imposed by the Israelitish rulers to be intended. The best sense is brought out by reading שָׂרִים אֲהָבֵם in construction, the king of princes, and applying the phrase to the king of Assyria, who had many kings and princes subject to his sway. Comp. Is. x. 8. Thus Pococke's Arabic MS., Leo Juda, Drusius, Jun. and Tremel., Piscator, Eichhorn, Boeckel, Goldwitzer, Hitzig, and Ewald. The מִנְעָם, burden, was the tribute exacted by Menahem, and paid to Pul, amounting to a thousand talents of silver, 2 Kings xv. 19-22. Comp. מִנְעָם, tribute money, 2 Chron. xvii. 11.

11. By multiplying altars, in opposi-

- They became to him altars to sin,
 12 I may prescribe for him the numerous things of my law ;
 They are treated as a strange thing.
 13 As for my sacrificial offerings,
 They sacrifice flesh and eat it ;
 Jehovah accepteth them not :
 He will speedily remember their iniquity,
 And will punish their sin :
 They shall return to Egypt.

tion to the express prohibition, Deut. xii. 13, 14, the Ephraimites not only contracted great guilt, but paved the way for the introduction of other sins. Syr.

כְּמִתָּהּ זָמָּה, ad crimen ingens.

There is an easy but beautiful variation in the repetition of the words. As used the second time, זָמָּה possesses considerable emphasis. Comp. for a similar instance of varied repetition, Is. xxvii, 5. It shows how much the mind of the prophet was affected by the wickedness of his people. Some suppose that there is a play upon the double meaning of זָמָּה as signifying to sin, and to be punished for sin, just as our Lord uses vékpoi in two senses, Matt. viii. 22 ; but the second signification cannot attach to the verb in this connection.

12. כְּרִיבֵי הַחֹב, Keri חֹבֵי חֹב, is continuative and potential, and is equivalent to, I have prescribed, I still prescribe by my prophets, and I may go on prescribing ; it will be of no avail. Keri רִבֵּי in many MSS. רִבֵּי, the plural of רֵב, which is properly the infinitive of רָבַב, to be great, numerous, etc. Here the idea of number is evidently designed to express the abundant provisions God had made in his written law, and its enforcement by the prophets, against the commission of idolatry. According to the Chethiv רִבֵּי, we should render, "I may prescribe to him my laws by myriads ;" Ewald, by thousands ; Hitzig, by ten thousands,

The Syr. ܟܪܝܒܝܘܬܗܘܢ. Targ.

סְגִי אֶת אֲרֵבֶיךָ. Vulg. multiplices leges meas. Pococke's Arab. MS. عترة

شريعتي Aq. πληθυσμένους νόμους.

Symm. πλήθος νόμων μου. חֻמֵּי, statutes, are understood. חֵשֶׁב signifies not only to think, regard, etc., but also to treat in a manner corresponding to the estimation in which a person or thing is held. Tan-

chum, يطرحونها كالغريب الذي

لا يغرّبونه اليه they reject them like a strange thing to which no regard is paid.

13. חֹבֵי הַחֹבֵי form the nominative absolute. חֹבֵי הַחֹבֵי my gifts, or offerings, i. e. such as they professedly offer to me. The word is contracted for חֹבֵי הַחֹבֵי, and is derived from חָבַב, to give. It seems preferable to abide by this usual signification of the verb, which it has likewise in Aramaic, Arabic, and Ethiopic, than to follow Kimchi, who refers the noun to a root חָבַב, to which he assigns the signification to burn, scorch, roast ; or Ewald, who, appealing to the Chald.

חֹבֵי, and the Arab. حَبَب and حَبَب renders, raw offerings.

חֹבֵי הַחֹבֵי is a more choice term for חֹבֵי חֹבֵי, or חֹבֵי חֹבֵי. For the reduplicate form, comp. אֶתְחַבְּבֵנִי, chap. iv. 18 ; which word the LXX. Syr. and Targ. appear to have followed in this place ; of which Hitzig seems to approve. Aq., observant of the gemination, renders, θύσας φέρε φέρε θυσιάδουσου.

Symm. θύσας ἐπαλλήλους. Theod. θύσας μεταφορῶν ἐθύσασαν. Jehovah rejected the sacrifices that were offered, not according to his own appointment, but to gratify the carnal appetite of the worshippers. Reference is had to the sacrifices offered to him, as represented by the golden calf. In חֹבֵי חֹבֵי is a meiosis.

14 Because Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and built temples,
 And Judah hath multiplied fortified cities;
 Therefore will I send a fire into his cities;
 And it shall consume the palaces of each.

עֲתָה, now, is here used in the sense of speedily, shortly. From the references made chap. ix. 3, 6, xi. 11, it is clear that the last clause of the verse predicts the actual return of a number of the Israelites to Egypt, whither, in all probability, they fled when the kingdom was broken up by the Assyrians. The threatening pointedly reminded them of the depressed condition in which their ancestors had been in that country. Comp. Deut. xxviii. 68. The LXX. add, καὶ ἐν Ἀσσυρίοις ἀκρόπολιν φάγονται; but the words are wanting in the Aldine edition, and in seven MSS. They have evidently found their way into the text from chap. ix. 3, where they stand in accordance with the reading of all the Heb. MSS.

14. ו in וַיִּשְׂבְּחוּ marks the protasis; in

וַיִּשְׂבְּחוּ the apodosis. The וַיִּבְנוּ were doubtless idolatrous temples erected after the models of those in use among the Syrians and Phœnicians. See, for the word, my note on Is. vi. 1. Though idolatry had not made the same progress in Judah, the inhabitants nevertheless evinced a want of confidence in Jehovah by fortifying a number of cities, to which they trusted for defence. The masculine suffix in בְּעָרֵי refers to Judah; the feminine in אֶרְמוֹנֵי הָעִיר to each of the cities, taken singly. Ewald strangely asserts, that the words of this verse appear to have been inserted from some book of Amos no longer in existence! Compare, however, for the latter distich, Jer. xlix. 27; Amos i. 4, 7, 10, 12, 14, ii. 2, 5; and see note on Amos i. 4.

CHAPTER IX.

The prophet checks the propensity of the Israelites to indulge in excessive joy on account of any partial relief from their troubles, 1; predicts the failure of the crops, etc. in consequence of the Assyrian invasion, 2; their removal to Egypt and Assyria, where they should have no opportunity, even if they were inclined, to serve Jehovah according to their ancient ritual, 3-5; and the hopelessness of their returning to enjoy the property they had left behind, 6. He then announces the certain infliction of the divine judgments, and points out the true character of the false prophets, by whom the people had been led astray to their ruin, 7, 8. Illustrative references are next made to the early history of the Hebrew nation, accompanied with appropriate comminations couched in varied forms, in order to render them more affecting, 9-17.

1 CARRY not thy joy, O, Israel! to exultation, like the nations,

1. לֹא תִשְׂבַּח בְּגִיבֵי הַגּוֹיִם, lit. rejoice not to exultation. The LXX. Syr. Targ. and

Vulg. read לֹא תִשְׂבַּח בְּגִיבֵי הַגּוֹיִם, exult not; but contrary to the usus loquendi, which requires

- 4 They shall not pour out wine to Jehovah,
 Neither shall their sacrifices please him ;
 They shall be to them as the bread of mourners,
 All that eat thereof shall be unclean :
 For their bread shall be for themselves ;
 It shall not come unto the house of Jehovah.
- 5 What will ye do on the day of assembly ?
 On the day of Jehovah's festival ?
- 6 For, behold ! they go away from destruction,
 But Egypt shall gather them, Memphis shall bury them ;
 As for their coveted treasuries of money, nettles shall possess them :
 Thorns shall be in their tents.

4.  $\text{הַיַּיִן}$  is used of the pouring out of wine for a libation, Gr.  $\sigma\pi\acute{\epsilon}\nu\delta\epsilon\iota\nu$ . Exod. xxx. 9.  $\text{עָרַב}$ , properly to mix, mingle, came to signify, sweet, agreeable, pleasing, from the circumstance, that what was pleasant to the taste, often consisted of mixed ingredients.  $\text{לֶחֶם אֵיִם}$ , bread, or food of sorrows, i. e. such as was eaten by mourners for the dead, and consequently regarded as unclean, on account of the contact in which they were supposed to come with the dead body. See Numb. xix. 14, 15, 22 ; Jer. xvi. 7, 8 ; Ezek. xxiv. 17 ; Hagg. ii. 12, 13. Instead of feasting upon the sacrifices as their fathers had been accustomed to do, when they slew them according to the law, which was always an occasion of joy, they should be placed in circumstances in which no such sacrifices could be offered, and no such feasts enjoyed. Their food should all be common— $\text{לֶחֶם נַפְשָׁם}$ , for their soul, or life, i. e. merely for its sustenance ; not fit to be presented to the Lord. Thus Schmidius, Grotius, and others.

5. In captivity they would find it impossible to observe their solemn feasts—a great aggravation of their punishment. Comp. chap. ii. 11. The exposition of Jarchi, Abenezra, Kimchi, Mercer, Capito, and others, according to which, the day of punishment, represented under the idea of sacrifice, is meant, cannot be sustained.

6. The prophet here specially describes those Israelites who should take alarm at the invasion of the country by the Assyrians, and flee for safety into Egypt. They imagined that their stay there would only be temporary ; but it is predicted that they should no more return to their possessions, and be buried in their fathers' sepulchres, but should die in the land, and have their interment among the mummies of Egypt. For Memphis is the great necropolis of that country, see my note on Isaiah xix. 13.  $\text{וְקָבְצָה}$ , to gather, is here used in reference to the removal of the soul at death, into the world of spirits, and is equivalent to  $\text{וְקָבְצָה}$ , Numb. xx. 26, or the full phrases  $\text{וְקָבְצָה אֶל־אֲבוֹתָיו}$ , and  $\text{וְקָבְצָה אֶל־עַמּוּהוֹ}$ , to be gathered to one's people or fathers, which is always spoken of as something different from death and burial. Comp. Jer. viii. 2 ; Ezek. xxix. 5, in which latter passage  $\text{וְקָבְצָה}$ , and  $\text{וְקָבְצָה}$ , are used as synonyms. According to the signification of the cognate Arab. verb.  $\text{قبضه cepit}$ , apprehendit manu rem, it conveys the idea of God's taking away the soul.

Hence the phrase  $\text{قبضه الله}$ , mortuus est, literally, God took him ; and  $\text{قبض}$  simply, mortuus est (ad Dei misericordiam delatus). Freytag. When it is said that Egypt should gather and Memphis bury the Israelitish fugitives, the meaning is that they should be removed out of this world, and that their bodies should be buried there. The personification is employed, as usual, for the sake of effect.  $\text{בְּרָצוֹן}$ , desire, covetousness ; that which is the object of desire, what is covetable, coveted, from  $\text{רָצוֹן}$ , to desire, covet. As

7 The days of punishment are come,
 The days of retribution are come;
 Israel shall know it:
 The prophet is foolish,
 The man of the spirit is frantic,
 Because of the greatness of thy punishment,
 And because the provocation is great.

the verb יִיָּשָׁע has a plural suffix, this noun is here to be taken as a collective, and rendered in the plural. The idea of treasury is supplied by the connection. כֶּסֶף is used generally of money, as in most other places, when זָהָב, gold, is not combined with it. Targ. בֵּית הַמֶּלֶךְ בְּכֶסֶף הָיוּ, the house of their desirable money. Symm. τὰ ἐπιδουμήματα τοῦ ἀργυρίου αὐτῶν. Others, less aptly, explain the words of houses, palaces, etc. adorned with silver. On leaving those treasures which they could not carry with them, the Israelites would naturally bury them in the earth, which accounts for the very significant phrase, "the nettles shall inherit them." For the combination קִימוֹשׁ or קִימוֹשׁ and הָרוּהוּ, comp. Is. xxxiv. 13. The whole verse is miserably translated by the LXX.

7. בְּבִקּוּרָהּ, visitation, punishment. Comp. Is. x. 3; 1 Pet. ii. 12. יָדָעוּ, shall know experimentally. By the נְבִיאִים is obviously to be understood in this place, the false prophet or prophets by whom the people of the ten tribes were seduced from the right worship of Jehovah, who taught them to worship the golden calves, and otherwise encouraged them in their idolatrous practices. Thus Pococke's Arab. MS. المِدْعَى نُبُوَّةً, he that pretends to prophesy; and Kimchi, נְבִיאֵי שֶׁקֶר, lying prophets. With this, the phrase אִישׁ הָרוּהוּ, the man of the spirit, is synonymous; one pretending to inspiration, or professing to deliver oracles under the influence of a divine efflatus. LXX.

ἄνθρωπος ὁ πνευματοφόρος. Syr. ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܠܡܐ, the man that is clothed, or endowed with the spirit, only adding by way of explanation, but erroneously, ܐܝܢܐ ܕܥܠܡܐ, of folly. Comp.

Mic. ii. 11. אִישׁ הַלֵּלָהּ רִנָּתָהּ; 1 Cor. xiv. 37. εἴ τις δοκεῖ προφήτης εἶναι ἢ πνευματικός; 2 Pet. i. 21, ὑπὸ πνεύματος ἁγίου φερόμενοι; and see my Lectures on Divine Inspiration, p. 25. מְשֻׁעַ, insane, frantic; Arab.

سجع, locutus fuit rhythmicè, to speak in an impassioned manner, like an inspired poet; hence, from the violence of the gesticulations, tones, etc., to act like a madman, to be mad, insane. Comp. Jer. xxix. 26, where מְשֻׁעַ and אִישׁ מְרִנָּבָא are synonymous. The meaning is, that the pretenders to inspiration, by whose false predictions of uninterrupted prosperity the people had been deluded, should be convicted of folly, and reduced to a state of absolute frenzy by the infliction of the divine judgments upon the nation. Hosea introduces this declaration respecting the Israelitish prophets parenthetically, thereby giving force to his own prediction of impending calamity. The affix in עֲזִיבָהּ refers to יְשֻׁעָה, to whom the prophet turns in the way of direct address. עֲזָרָה means here, not the crime, but its punishment. Comp. for this signification of the term, Is. v. 18, and my note there. In יְרִבָּהּ subaud. כִּי, because. The adjective יְרִבָּהּ, is here placed before its substantive for the sake of emphasis. See on Is. liii. 11. From the use of שִׂטַּח in the sense of hating, evincing hostility, etc., there can be little doubt that the derivative מְשֻׁטָּח, which occurs only in this and the following verse, has the signification of hostility, provoking conduct, provocation. That of snare or trap, which Gesenius assigns to it, is not borne out, even by the Syriac ܫܘܬܡܐ, which signifies vinxit, compe-divit, but not to ensnare. Comp. the Arab. سطات, acies gladii; acutiores et

- 8 Ephraim expecteth help from my God ;
 The prophet is a fowler's snare in all his ways :
 The cause of provocation in the house of his god.
- 9 They have deeply corrupted themselves,
 As in the days of Gibeah ;
 He will remember their iniquity,
 He will punish their sins.
- 10 I found Israel, like grapes in the desert ;
 Like the first early fruit of the fig tree, at its commencement, fervidiores hominum. LXX. μανία ; Aq. ἐγκόσσησις ; AΛΛ ἐκστασις ; all of which convey the idea of great excitement, and yield support to the interpretation I have given. The idolatrous practices of the Israelites are meant, by which they provoked the righteous indignation of Jehovah.

8. בְּיָמָיו אֶפְרַיִם, are not in construction, and to be rendered as in most versions, "the watchman of Ephraim," to justify which construction various modes of exegesis have been resorted to ; among others that of Horsley, who would have the watchman to be Elijah. Nor can the rendering of Ewald be sustained, who gives the passage, Ein Späher ist Ephraim gegen mein Gott. "Ephraim is a spy against my God." When עַם signifies against, it follows verbs of more active import. E. schaut nach Weissagen aus neben meinem Gott ; "Ephraim looks for prophecies besides my God," — the rendering of Hitzig, is equally objectionable. I quite agree with Gesenius and Lee, in assigning to צָפָה in this place the signification of looking out, expecting, as in Ps. v. 4 ; Lam. iv. 17, in Piel. עַם, with, is used elliptically for מֵעַם, from with, i. e. from. A similar ellipsis undeniably occurs Job xxvii. 13. זֶה חֵלֶק אֲדָם רָשָׁע מֵעַם אֱלֹהִים, this is the portion of the wicked man from (עַם, with,) God, as appears, not only from the synonymous phrase מִצְדֵי אֱלֹהִים, "FROM the Almighty," in the corresponding hemistich, but from the actual use of מֵן, from, in the parallel passage, chap. xx. 29. What the prophet asserts is, that the Ephraimites indulged in expectations of good from Jehovah, notwithstanding their dereliction of his worship in its pure and legitimate forms, and their adoption of the idolatrous practices of the heathen around them. In this they were encouraged by the false prophets, who caught them by their ensnaring doctrines, as is declared immediately after. בְּיַתְיָוָה is here used in the same acceptation as in the preceding verse, only there is a metonymy of the effect for the cause. By בְּיַתְיָוָה, "the house of his god," is not meant the temple or people of the true God, but the temple or temples in which the false worship was performed, which the prophets here reprobated were specially active in promoting.

9. עָמְרוּ שְׁחָדָה, an instance of the constructio asyndeta. The former of the two verbs is to be rendered adverbially. For its use before infinitives, see on chap. v. 2. Mercer, "Quam corruptissimi sunt." שְׁחָדָה may either be taken intransitively, or שֶׁחָדָהוּ, שֶׁחָדָהוּ, or the like, must be supplied. So great was the depravity evinced by those whose conduct the prophet here describes, that it could only be paralleled by the atrocity of the inhabitants of Gibeah, specified Judges xix. 22–30.

10. יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, here means the ancestors of the Hebrew nation. It has been asked, "How could God be said to find the Hebrews in the wilderness, since he conducted them into it from Egypt?" To remove the difficulty, some very unwarrantably explain the wilderness of Egypt itself ; but others connect בְּצִדְדֵי בָר, בְּמִדְבָּר, like grapes in the desert, and explain מֵצֵא of finding by experience, trial, etc. Such they were, proved themselves to be, in my judgment. And this seems to be the proper division and interpretation of the words. At the same

- I regarded your fathers ;
 But they came to Baal-peor,
 And separated themselves to the object of shame ;
 They became abominable, like the object of their love.
 11 As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away, like a bird ;
 There shall be no birth, no womb, no conception.
 12 Yea, though they should rear their children,
 I would take them away from among men ;
 But woe to them ! when I depart from them.

time מָצָא מִצָּא בְּאֶרֶץ מִדְבָּר occurs in reference to the same subject, Deut. xxxii. 10, where the verb must be taken in the sense of reaching with sufficient aid. Comp. the Eth. ወለሰ: venit; Arab.

מִצָּא, perduxit, tractavit, negotium; and chap. xiii. 5; Jer. xxxi. 2. The point of comparison in the verse is the delight with which a traveller enjoys grapes found in a desert, in which they were unexpected, and where they served most opportunely to quench his thirst; or the early fig, which is accounted a great delicacy in the East. When Jehovah entered into covenant with the people of Israel at Sinai, they were regarded by him with delight, being free from idolatry, and engaging to adhere to his service. Comp. chap. xi. 1; Jer. xxxi. 3. The scene, however, was soon changed. הִמָּזָה, illi, these very persons. At Baal-peor, they proved faithless, and indulged in the very atrocities of which their posterity were guilty in the days of the prophet. For the transactions referred to, see Numb. xxv. 1-5. Priapism, which Hosea justly characterizes as in the highest degree abominable, was the worship peculiarly acceptable to the god of Peor. See Calmet and Winer in voc. — נָזַר signifies to separate one's self from any person or thing, and also, followed by ל, to separate or devote one's self to some religious object. Hence the substantive נִזְרִי, a Nazarite, נָזַר consecration. בְּשֵׁת is the abstract for the concrete, and denotes the obscene or shameful idol which the Moabites worshipped. שִׂקֵּי צִוִּים, lit. abominations, but used here adjectively, loathsome, abominable. בְּאֶרֶץ is properly the substantive, אֶרֶץ — the points being changed on account of the suffix. Vulg. facti sunt abominabiles sicut ea, quæ dilexerunt. The Hebrews became as abominable as the impure idol whose rites they celebrated. הַעֲבוּר שְׂקוּץ הוּא שְׂקוּץ, he that serveth an abomination, is himself an abomination. Kimchi's MS. note in Poocke.

11, 12. אֶפְרַיִם, Ephraim, is of the nominative absolute, which gives prominence to the name, and its signification. As for Ephraim, אֶפְרַיִם, from אֶפְרָה, to be fruitful Gen. xli. 52, such may be his name, but, etc. בְּבוֹד, glory, is in contrast with בְּשֵׁת, shame, in the preceding verse. The lewd and idolatrous conduct of the Israelites should meet with a fit retribution. Instead of having an increase of children, that might grow up and become the glory of the land, those who might now be accounted such should speedily be removed into Assyria, and there would be nothing but sterility to characterize the nation. The preposition ב, prefixed to the three last substantives, is privative in signification. בְּטֶן, womb, stands here for pregnancy, or for the fetus in the womb. The order of the words presents an instance of the gradatio inversa. אֶמֶת הַשָּׂבִיל, among men, as אֶמֶת הַשָּׂבִיל, "thy mother shall be childless among women," 1 Sam. xv. 33. Ewald and Hitzig translate בְּשִׁטְתִּי, when I look away from them, contending that we should read ש instead of ש; but no MS. is thus pointed, and the present punctuation is so far supported by the LXX. (ἡ ἀράξ μού, i. e. בְּשִׁטְתִּי), Aq. Vulg. and Targ. Three MSS. and one edit. have בְּשִׁטְתִּי, to which בְּשִׁטְתִּי is doubtless here equivalent. Many instances occur of the substitution of ש for ס, and vice versa.

- 13 I see Ephraim, like Tyre, planted in a pleasant place ;
 But Ephraim shall bring out his children to the murderer.
 14 Give them, O Jehovah! — what wilt thou give?
 Give them a miscarrying womb, and dry breasts.
 15 All their wickedness is in Gilgal;
 Surely I have hated them there:
 On account of the wickedness of their deeds,
 I have driven them out of my house ;
 I will love them no more :
 All their princes are rebels.
 16 Ephraim is smitten, their root is dried up ;
 They shall produce no fruit :

The meaning is, when I withdraw my protection from them ; no longer showing them any favor, but delivering them over to their enemies. For the abortive attempt of Lyra to prove a corruption of the passage by the Jews, and to palm upon the rendering of the LXX. ἡ σάρξ μου ἐξ αὐτῶν, the doctrine of the incarnation of the Messiah, see Poccoke.

13. After רָאִיתִי אֶפְרַיִם supply רָאִיתִי, from the following לְצִוֵּר רֵאִיתִי לְצִוֵּר. Though רָאָה commonly governs the accusative, yet, in Ps. lxiv. 6, it is followed as here by the dative, without any difference of signification. LXX. εἰς Θήραν, reading, צִוֵּר, instead of צִוֵּר. Aq. Symm. ἀνερότομον ; Theod. πέτραν ; Arnoldi, and after him Hitzig, would derive צִוֵּר from the Arab. صور, as signifying the Palm ; but it only signifies the root of that tree, or describes it as small in size, an acceptance which would ill suit the present connection. Ewald renders, Bild, image or likeness. The point of comparison is the beautiful situation of Tyre. See Ezek. xxvii. 3, xxviii. 12, 13. The notion of planting seems to have been suggested by the name of Ephraim. See on the preceding verse. The territory occupied by that tribe, and several of the other nine, was distinguished for its beauty and fertility ; and the prosperity of its inhabitants, who traded extensively with the Phœnician ports, was only surpassed by Tyre herself. Yet the fruit of this lovely region was only to be produced in order to its being destroyed. The inhabitants were to be slain in great numbers with the sword. The ל before the infinitive in לְהַצִּיֵּא, is future in signification, indicating what was about to be, or would be done.

14. These words strongly mark the effect produced upon the mind of the prophet by the contemplation of the wickedness of his people. In holy ardor of soul, he feels himself excited to imprecate what he had predicted ver. 11. Some, less appropriately, render צָוֵה, not as an interrogative, but as signifying that which, i. e. give them whatever thou wilt. Barrenness was accounted a great misfortune among the Jews.

15. For Gilgal, see on chap. iv. 15. Being one of the chief places of idolatrous worship, the wickedness of the nation might be said to be concentrated in it. When God is represented as hating the wicked, it must be understood in regard to the odiousness of their moral character and his infliction of positive punishment upon them on account of it. Hitzig considers שָׂנֵא to be here used inchoactively. For the sense in which בֵּית הַבַּיִת, house, is to be taken, see on chap. viii. 1. Hatred and love are contrasted as here, Mal. i. 2, 3. In שָׂרִיָּהֶם סִרְרִיָּהֶם is a paronomasia.

16. The figurative language here employed is suggested by the meaning of the name Ephraim, as in verses, 11, 13. הַצִּוֵּר is in the future, while הַבַּיִת and הַבַּיִת are in the preterite, to mark the state of unfruitfulness as following upon

Yea, though they should beget children,
I will kill the beloved of their womb.

17 My God will abhor them,
Because they have not listened to him :
They shall be wanderers among the nations.

the injury done to the tree. The resolution of the figure in the latter half of the verse possesses much force. Most of the MSS. and some few editions read, with the Keri, בל instead of בלי, which occurs, however, before a verb, Job xli. 18. For בל, comp. on בל, ver. 6.

17. Though the pronominal affix in אלהי is omitted by the LXX. and Arab. and one of Kennicott's MSS., it is, in such connection, more in the style of Hosea than אלהים. The dispersion of the ten tribes is here expressly predicted.

CHAPTER X.

In this chapter the prophet continues to charge the Israelites with idolatry, anarchy, and want of fidelity, 1-4. He expatiates with great variety on the judgments that were to come upon them in punishment for these crimes, 5-11; and then abruptly turns to them in a direct hortatory address, couched in metaphorical language, borrowed from the mode of representation which he had just employed, 12. The section concludes with an appeal to the experience which they had already had of the disastrous consequences of their wicked conduct.

1 ISRAEL is a luxuriant vine ;
He putteth forth his fruit ;
According to the increase of his fruit,
He increased altars ;
According to the excellence of his land,
They prepared goodly statues.

1. The wickedness which manifested itself in idolatry, etc. is here traced to the abuse of the prosperity which God had conferred on the Israelites. Instead of spending the bounties of providence for the glory of God, they appropriated them to idolatrous uses, and that in proportion to the abundance of their bestowment. בל, multus fudit, fecundus fuit, multum pluviam demisit, florere cepit planta, is here used to express the luxuriance of the vine, and not, as in our common version and some others, its unfruitfulness. The idea of emptying, which the verb also has, derived from that of pouring out entirely or abundantly the contents of a vessel, does not suit the present connection. LXX. ἐκκλιματοῦσα,

- 2 Their heart is divided, they shall now be punished:
He will cut off their altars, he will destroy their statues.
- 3 Surely now shall they say: We have no king;
For we fear not Jehovah:
As for the king then, what can he do for us?
- 4 They utter empty speeches;
Swearing falsely, making covenants;
Therefore judgment blossoms like the poppy
On the ridges of the field.

or, as in other copies, ἐγκληματούσα. Aq. ἄνδρος. Symm. ἰλομανούσα. Vulg. frondoso. Comp. Gen. xlix. 22; Ps. lxxx. 9-11; Ezek. xvii. 6. In every other instance קָדָשׁ is construed as a feminine; but here the masculine name יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, required it to be taken as of that gender. קָדָשׁ, to resemble, be equal to, sufficient; in Piel, like the Eth. הָוֹר, to bring to maturity, produce fruit. יָדָה, in the phrase יָדָה-יָדָה, is pleonastic, as in יָדָה-יָדָה, etc., but may here be rendered as a possessive pronoun.

2. קָדָשׁ is here to be taken intransitively, as in our common version, and refers, not to any difference of opinion among the Israelites respecting the claims of their numerous idols, but to their insincerity in the service of Jehovah,—professing to worship him, while they likewise addicted themselves to the worship of idols. Thus Tanchum:—

תִּקְדַּשׁ בָּאֵלֵם וְעַלְמֵם וְזֵימָם אֵן
 אִשְׁרְכּוּ בָּאֵלֵם גַּיְרָה, “their mind and their understanding, and their opinion are divided, while they associate others with God.” The acceptance to be smooth, which some propose, is to be rejected, on the ground that, though the verb is used in this signification of the tongue, it nowhere is of the heart. For the meaning of קָדָשׁ, see on chap. v. 15. The nominative to קָדָשׁ, He, is אֱלֹהִים, God, in אֱלֹהֵינוּ, chap. ix. 17. Jehovah is here said to do, what he would effect by means of the Assyrians. קָדָשׁ is properly a sacrificial term, signifying to cut off the head of a victim, by striking it on the neck; hence, to drop as blood from the place thus struck; and to drop generally. It is here, with much force, used metonymically, in application to the destruction of the altars on which the animals were offered. Ewald renders, Er wird ihre altäre enthaupten; “he will decapitate their altars.” For the distinction between מְזַבְּחֹתָם and מְזַבְּחוֹתָם, see on chap. iii. 4. עַתָּה, now, in this and the following verse, has the signification of soon, speedily.

3. The language of desperation is here put into the mouth of the apostate Israelites, at the time of the infliction of divine judgment. Their king, to whom they had naturally looked for protection, was removed; they had forfeited the favor of God, who was now become their enemy; and, therefore, it was vain to expect help from an earthly monarch. Some think the prophet refers to the time of anarchy during the interregnum, between the murder of Pekah and the accession of Hoshea.

4. דָּבַר דָּבַר, lit. to speak a word, or speech, i. e. what is merely such; empty, false pretences. Comp. the Lat. verba dare. The prophet begins with the finite form of the verb, and then, for the sake of more specific description, changes it for the infinitive. Comp. Is. lix. 13. For אֲדַבֵּר, as an absolute infinitive, instead of אֲדַבֵּר, comp. שָׁתַּחֲוֶה, Is. xxii. 13; רָאִיו, chap. xlii. 20. בְּרִית, covenant, is here used as a collective noun, and is to be rendered in the plural. Whether the false swearing and the entering into covenants refer to the conduct of the Israelites in regard to each other, or whether they respect their conduct in reference to foreign powers, has been disputed. The latter would seem to be the more probable, since it is the making of

- 5 For the calves of Beth-aven,
 The inhabitants of Samaria shall be in fear;
 The people thereof shall mourn on account of it;
 The priests thereof shall leap about on account of it—
 On account of its glory,
 Because it hath departed from it.
- 5 It shall itself also be carried to Assyria,
 A present to the hostile king:
 Ephraim shall take disgrace,
 And Israel shall blush for his own counsel, covenants and not the breaking of them, of which the prophet speaks as something criminal. He seems to have in his eye the historical circumstances narrated 2 Kings xvii. 4. By מִשְׁפָּט is meant the divine judgment which was to be inflicted upon the people of Israel. So Jarchi, מִשְׁפָּט יִסְוֹרֵיךְ וּפְרֵעֵנִית, This he compares to the rapid and luxuriant growth of the poppy, which overruns the fields, and is destructive as a poison. Celsius, in his Hierobot. supports the common rendering hemlock, as the signification of רִאשׁ; but that of poppy, proposed by Gesenius, is preferable, both to such construction of the term, and to that of colocynth advanced by Edmann, or that of lolium or darnel suggested by Michaelis. The term is usually rendered poison in our common version; sometimes gall. LXX. ἄργεοσις. מִשְׁפָּט rather signify the ridges between the furrows than the furrows themselves. See Pococke.

5, 6. In these verses the object of idolatrous worship is spoken of, now in the plural, and now in the singular number, which Hitzig accounts for on the ground, that though the Israelites might have multiplied golden calves, that set up by Jeroboam would still be held in peculiar honor. Four MSS. have עֲגֻלֹת, calf, in the singular, which is also the rendering of the LXX. Syr. and an anonymous Greek version in the Hexapla. This reading is very uncritically adopted by Kuinoel, Dathe, Newcome, and some other moderns. For בֵּית אֵנֶךְ, Beth-aven, see on chap. iv. 15. עֲבָרְךָ is a collective. The nominative to the pronominal affixes in עָלֶיךָ, עָלָי, etc. is the עֲבָרָה, calf of Jeroboam, singled out from the rest. עַמּוֹי, its people, those devoted to its worship. Comp. Numb. xxi. 29. כַּמָּרִים is only used in Hebrew to designate idolatrous priests, and occurs but twice besides, viz. 2 Kings xxiii. 5;

Zeph. i. 4; but in the Syriac ܘܚܡܢܐ, kumro, signifies a priest of the true God, as well as one engaged in the service of idols. Gesenius derives the noun from כָּמַר, to burn, be scorched, black, supposing the reference to be to the black dress of monks or ecclesiastics; but this seems too modern to be entitled to adoption. The derivation of Iken, in his Dissert. de Cemariam, who refers the word to the Persic ܘܚܡܢܐ sacrum magorum ignicolorum cingulum, of which frequent mention is made in the Sadder of Zoroaster, is much more natural. Comp. the Chald. ܩܡܪܐ, a belt or girdele. Some think the Lat. camillus, an inferior order of priests, who attended upon and assisted the flammens, is derived from this root. Ewald renders the word by Pfaffen, which is used of priests by way of contempt, in German. Those who render ܩܡܪܐ, they rejoiced, which is the usual signification of the verb, supply ܩܡܪܐ before it; but the Vau conversive connects it so closely with ܩܡܪܐ, as to render such supplement inconsistent with the construction. It is, therefore, better to revert to the primary signification of ܩܡܪܐ, to move about, leap, dance, or the like. Comp. the Arab.

ܩܡܪܐ, circumvivi. Such would be the excitement of the idolatrous priests at the capture of their God, that they would leap about in a state of desperation, like those of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 26. The

- 7 As for Samaria, her king is cut off;
 He is like a chip upon the surface of the water.
 8 The high places of Aven, the sin of Israel, are destroyed;
 Thorns and thistles shall grow upon their altars;
 They shall say to the mountains, Cover us;
 And to the hills, Fall upon us.
 9 Since the days of Gilead, thou hast sinned, O Israel!
 There they remain:
 Shall not the war against the unjust overtake them in Gillead?

glory of the idol consisted in its ornaments, wealth, etc. גַּם אִדֹּל is emphatic: itself also, i. e. the idol or golden calf. For the meaning of יָרֵב, Jareb, see on chap. v. 13. The worshippers of the golden calf would be ashamed of him, when they found that, instead of protecting them, he was himself carried into captivity. That בַּשָּׁנָה is not to be changed into בַּשְּׁנָה, and rendered in a sound sleep, as Horsley does, nor into בַּשָּׁנָה, in this year, with Michaelis, the parallelism sufficiently shows.

7. For the sake of emphasis, שֶׁמֶר יִרְיָ is put absolutely. The whole phrase is equivalent to the king of Samaria, etc. That בְּדָמָה agrees with מַלְכֵהָ, and not with יִרְיָ, the gender shows. רֵבֵב has nowhere the signification of foam or scum. It is derived from רֵבֵב, Arab.

قصف, fregit, to cut, cut off, and signifies any chip or small fragment of wood. Comp. פֶּצֶעַת, a fragment, Joel i. 7. Arab. قضيف, fractus aboris ramus, قصفه, tenuitas arboris. LXX. φρῦλον. Syr. ܦܪܘܢܐ, festucam. The comparison of the king to a small chip of wood, which cannot resist the force of the current, is very beautiful and forcible. Spuma, which is the rendering of the Targ. Jerome, Symm. Abulwalid, Tanchum, and many moderns, is less apt, even if it could be philologically sustained.

8, אָבֵן, Aven, is an abbreviation of the full form, בֵּית-אָבֵן, Beth-aven, or Bethel. מַהְמָנָה, the occasion of sin to Israel. See ver. 10. In the midst of the calamities that should come upon the people, death would be preferable to life. Comp. Rev. vi. 15, 16.

9. That reference is here made to the transactions recorded Jud. xix. xx., there can be no doubt. The prophet declares that as a nation his people had all along, from the period referred to, evinced a disposition to act in the same rebellious and unjust manner as the Gibeonites had done. Comp. chap. ix. 9. The words שָׁם עָמְרוּ, there they remain, continue, persist, graphically express the character of the inhabitants in his day. The Gibeonites are still, what they have ever been, a wicked and abandoned people. They are here singled out as a fit specimen of the whole nation; and are called בְּנֵי-עֲלֵזָה, sons of wickedness, to mark the enormity of their conduct. Instead of עֲלֵזָה, the Brixian edition, thirty-nine MSS. originally seventeen, and perhaps a few more, have עֲזֵלָה, the common form, which is supposed to have been changed by a simple transposition of the letters. Albert Schultens, however, in his notes ad IIarir. i. p. 15, justifies the present reading by deriving it from the Arab. علا, modum excessit, extulit se; and Michaelis, in his Suplem. by referring it to the Syriac,

ܐܠܚܘܐ, and the Eth. ሀለወ; fidem fefellit, perfidus fuit. Comp. לָרָשָׁע: ሀለወ: Rex tyrannus, scelestus. ሀለወ-ት: transgressio aequi et boni, scelus, perversitas. That the Targumist read the text as it now stands is clear from his rendering the word לָא-יָרָדוּ-מִן-הַבְּרֵכָה, they went up. The words לֹא-יָרָדוּ-מִן-הַבְּרֵכָה are somewhat

- 10 My desire is to punish them;
The nations shall be collected against them,
When they are bound for their two iniquities.
- 11 Ephraim is a well-trained heifer, loving to thresh;
But I will pass on beside her fair neck;
I will place a rider on Ephraim:
Judah shall plough,
And Jacob shall break the clods.

involved, but the meaning is obvious. Destruction should assuredly overtake the wicked Israelites. ע, the verbal suffix in עֲשֵׂה, is anticipative of עָשָׂה. לֹא stands for לֹא־תִּהְיֶה, the interrogatory negative.

10. בְּאַהֲבָתִי, the LXX. have read בְּאַהֲבָתִי; rendering it ἡλαθε; or, according to the Alexandrian MS. and the editions of Aldus and Bretinger, ἡλαθεν. Of this Houbigant, Dimock, Newcome, Tingsadius, and Boothroyd, approve, and adopt it as an emendation; but contrary to all other authority, ancient or modern, and without necessity. ב prefixed is the Beth Essentia, indicating the substantive character of the affection. See my note on Is. xxvi. 4. אַהֲבָתִי, to be strongly propense, desire greatly, expresses the irresistible inclination of infinite purity to punish sin. אֶסְרֶם is the future in Kal of אָרַם, to chastise, punish, compensation having been made for the first radical ר, by inserting Dagesh in the ס. אֶרְבֶּם, the infinitive of אָרַם, to bind, bind as a prisoner or captive, which is the sense in which the word is here to be taken. עֵינֵיהֶם has occasioned great variety of interpretation. Michaelis translates it plough-shares, attempting to derive it from the Arabic. Jarchi, Lively, and, among the moderns, Ewald, render eyes, "before their two eyes," i. e. openly; but the word is always written עֵינֵיהֶם when applied to real eyes, and only עֵינֵיהֶם when applied to fountains or artificial eyes. Some translate habitations; but most, furrows, which is the rendering adopted by Abenezra, Kimchi, Abulwalid, Tanchum, Munster, Vatablus, Zanchius, etc., after the Targum — some expounding the passage one way, and some another. The only satisfactory exegesis is that founded on the Keri, לְשֵׁנֵיהֶם עֲשֵׂה, for their two iniquities, i. e. the two golden calves which Jeroboam had erected, and which proved the source of all the evils which they had afterwards committed. They had many other idols, but these were the principal; and they are called iniquities by a metonymy of the cause for the effect. Comp. ver. 8, where רִשָׁעֵהָ, sin, is similarly applied. This reading is in the text of a great many MSS. and is expressed in all the ancient versions.

11. The general meaning of this verse seems to be, that the Ephraimites had been accustomed in the plenitude of their power to crush and oppress others, especially their brethren of the two tribes; but they were now themselves to be brought into subjection to the king of Assyria, by whom they should be placed in circumstances of great hardship in foreign countries. The metaphors are agricultural. For עָבַד, to tread or beat out the corn, partly by the feet of oxen, and partly by sledges with instruments adapted to the purpose, see on Is. xxviii. 27, 28. The ר in רִבְתִּי, is paragogic, as רִבְתִּי and רִבְתִּי, Jer. xxii. 23; רִבְתִּי, chap. li. 13, though in these passages it has been left unpointed by the Masoretes. See Ewald, § 406. The form is otherwise the participle רִבְתִּי. עָבַר עָלַי signifies here to pass on beside one, as the driver does beside an ox in the yoke. Thus Jehovah would, in his providence, lead forth the Israelites, from the midst of their prosperity, to the toils and hardships of captivity. אֶרְבֶּם אֶפְרַיִם lit. I will cause to ride Ephraim, meaning I will place a rider upon him — a conqueror, who shall lead him forth from his land. Thus Calvin, Zanchius, Lyra Tarnovius,

- 12 Sow to yourselves for righteousness:
 Reap according to piety;
 Break up for yourselves the fallow ground:
 For it is time to seek Jehovah,
 Till he come, and teach you righteousness.
- 13 Ye have ploughed wickedness, ye have reaped iniquity;
 Ye have eaten the fruit of falsehood:
 Because thou trustedst in thy way —
 In the multitude of thy mighty ones.

Rosenmüller, and Ewald. The judgments of God were not, however, to be confined to the northern kingdom: the southern should also be involved in them. In short, they should overtake the whole posterity of Jacob. The prediction was fulfilled during the two captivities. לָאֵלֹהִים, in וַיִּשְׁמְרֵהוּ, is pleonastic.

12. Continuing his agricultural metaphors, the prophet here abruptly calls upon the nation to reform its manners. לָאֵלֹהִים is the Dat. commodi. לָאֵלֹהִים points out the end or object to be obtained by sowing. Sow what will produce the fruits of righteousness. The second imperative is here equivalent to the future: "Sow, and ye shall reap;" or the subjunctive, "Sow, so that ye may reap." That הַטֵּב, piety or goodness, is to be referred, not to God, but to man, its being parallel with צְדִיקָה, righteousness, manifestly proves. To change וַיִּצַּח into וַיְצַח, and join this word with נִיר, preceding, as Newcome, following the LXX. and Arab., does, is unauthorized and inept. The Israelites had long neglected Jehovah: it was now high time to return to his fear; and though they might not meet with immediate tokens of his favor, they were to persevere in seeking him, in the assurance that he would be gracious to them. Such is the force of עַד, until. This favor was to be manifested by his coming and communicating to them instruction respecting the only righteousness which could avail the guilty at his bar. That the words וַיִּוְרָה אֶתְכֶם לְבָשָׂם are not to be rendered he will grant you suitable rain, but, he will teach you righteousness, and that they contain a prophecy of the advent and prophetic office of the Messiah, has been maintained by Jerome, and many other interpreters. In support of the rendering, He will teach you righteousness, may be adduced the Syr. חָבְ אֵלֵי

חָבְ אֵלֵי, till he come and show to you his righteousness; Pococke's Arab. MS.

אֵלֵי אֵן יֵבִי
וַיְרַשְׁדְּכֶם אֶלְד, till he come and guide you to righteousness. The Targ. to the same effect, וַיְרַשְׁדְּכֶם וַיְרַשְׁדְּכֶם, now he shall be revealed, and shall bring righteousness to you; Vulg. cum venerit qui docebit vos justitiam. Thus also Dathe, Hitzig, Winer, and others. Kimchi remarks, וַיִּרְאֵם אֵם תּוֹרָתוֹ אֵת ה' לְדַעַת תּוֹרָתוֹ וּמִצְוֹתוֹ הוּא יִבְאֵם וַיּוֹרָה אֶתְכֶם בְּרַק, there are those (of the Rabbins) who expound, If ye seek the Lord, to know his law and his commandments, he will come and teach you righteousness. And Abenezra asserts the same, in nearly the same words. Such construction of the passage seems, from the preceding use of צְדִיקָה, to be more apt, than to take צְדִיקָה absolutely for לְצְדִיקָה, in due proportion, adequately, fully, according to the claims or necessities of your condition. See on Joel ii. 23.

13. Instead of following such a course as that to which they had just been exhorted, the Israelites had pursued one directly opposite, and now reaped the disastrous consequences. The same metaphors are here continued. פְּרִי-הַבְּהֶוֶשׁ, fruit of falsehood, seems rather to mean the effects of their false and hypocritical conduct in professing attachment to the true God, while they addicted themselves to the worship of other deities, than fal-

- 14 Therefore a tumult shall arise among thy people,
 And all thy fortresses shall be destroyed,
 As Shalman destroyed Beth-arbel in the day of battle:
 When the mother was dashed in pieces with her children.

lacious and disappointing results. Sec-ker would read בְּרִיבֹתָיִךְ, in thy chariots, instead of בְּרִיבֹתֶיךָ, in thy way, on the LXX. ἐν ἄμασι σου, which reading is found in Compl. Ald. Barb. Reg. Laud. Cyrill. Ital. Ambros. Arab. Slav. Hexap. Syr. and a Copt. MS.; and Kuinoel has actually adopted it into his Hebrew text. It is, however, unsupported by any Heb. MSS., or any of the ancient versions, and is justly to be rejected. Four MSS., originally two, the Syr. and Targ. read בְּרִיבֵיךָ, in thy ways. The way of the Israelites was the wicked course of conduct which they had adopted in opposition to the will of God. Kimchi: דרך הרעה והאמונה הרשע, the way of wickedness and bad religion. The Vat. copy of the LXX. has ἐν ἀμαρτήμασι σου. Comp. Is. lvii. 10; Jer. ii. 23.

14. The prophet now denounces a severe threatening against his rebellious countrymen, foreshowing that they should be involved in all the horrors of war. בְּקִרְבָּם, with a epenthetic, after the manner of the Arab. قامم; or it may be regarded as merely a mater lectionis. Some few MSS. and some others in the margin, read בְּקִרְבָּם. Twenty-four MSS., one originally, four of the early editions, and all the ancient versions, read בְּעַמֶּיךָ, thy people, instead of בְּעַמֵּיךָ, thy peoples. For minor varieties in the readings, see Kennicott and De Rossi. The nominative to יְרֻשָׁה is כָּל, taken as a collective, comprehending the whole. That שַׁלְמַן, Shalman, and בֵּית אַרְבֵּל, Beth-Arbel, are proper names, is now universally admitted. The best interpretation of them is that given by Tanchum: שלמנאצר מלך אשור ואמא שלמן

*فهو امم وقيل انه مرگب من
 وبيت فاختر ولعل سلماناצר
 اسعين فاسغط احدهما للعرق
 اسم بلد ويقول انها التي يقال*

لها اليوم. Arbala אַרְבֵּל אַרְבֵּל. "As for Shalman, it is a proper name, and is said to stand for Shalmanassar, king of Assyria, only it is abbreviated; and perhaps Shalmanssar is compounded of two names, one of which is omitted because it was well known: and Arbel is the name of a city, and is said to be that which is called Arbel at the present day." The abbreviation of proper names is not uncommon in Scripture, as בְּנֵי־הוֹהוּ, Comiah, for יְהוֹיָכִין, Jehoiachin, etc. It was this monarch that besieged Samaria for the space of three years, and took it in the ninth of Hoshea, B. C. 722, carrying the king and most of his subjects into exile. 2 Kings xvii. 1-6. To this interpretation it has been objected that our prophet wrote before the time of Shalmaneser, and therefore could not speak of his destroying Arbel as something that had already happened. It must, however, be recollected, that though Hosea prophesied before the time of that king, he continued to deliver his predictions as far down as the time of his successor Sennacherib, and must, therefore, have been well acquainted with the previous Assyrian invasions. With respect to בֵּית אַרְבֵּל, or, as some MSS. read, אַרְבֵּל, Beth-Arbel, commentators are divided in opinion. Some think that the Assyrian city Arbela, situated between the Lycus and the Tigris, celebrated for the victory obtained there by Alexander the Great over Darius, is meant; but it is far more probable that the prophet refers to the Ἀρβήλα of 1 Macc. ix. 2, which Josephus places near Sephoris in Galilee; Eusebius, in the plain of Esdraelon. Of the battle here mentioned, no account indeed is given either in sacred or profane history; but as the contemporaries of Hosea are supposed to have been acquainted with it, there is reason to believe that it took place on the invasion of the kingdom of Israel by the Assyrian army. The ancient 15 Thus shall he act towards you at Bethel,

 On account of your flagrant wickedness:
 In the morning shall the king of Israel be utterly cut off.

versions of this clause of the verse are more or less at fault; but have afforded abundant scope for the exercise of emendatorial criticism. See Newcome, who renders, Like the destruction of Zalmunna by the hand of Jerubbaal; and supposes the reference to be to Jud. viii. עַל here signifies with, in the sense of being super-added. See Gen. xxviii. 9. xxxi. 50.

15. The nominative to שָׁלֵחַ is Shalman in the preceding verse, or perhaps יְהוָה, Jehovah, understood, but not בֵּית-אֵל, Bethel, as in our common version, since this does not so well agree with what follows. The words contain a special prediction against Bethel, where the wickedness of the Israelites had been most conspicuously exhibited. רַעַי רַעַיְתֶיךָ, lit. the wickedness of your wickedness, i. e. your excessive, or most flagrant wickedness. A rare example of a noun put in construction with itself repeated in the singular, in order to form the superlative degree. There is no necessity with Newcome, to resort to emendation. Instead of בַּבֹּקֶר, "in the morning," fifteen MSS., and perhaps one more, six originally, the Proph. of Soncin. 1486, the Venet. edit. of 1818, in the margin, and the Vulg. read כַּבֹּקֶר, "like the morning." Were the following verb הִמָּחֵר to be taken in the sense of resembling, being like, etc., the latter reading might possess some claim on our attention; but as the idea of being destroyed best comports with the connection, that of the Textus Receptus is preferable. The difference of reading has arisen from the similarity of the letters כ and ח. The reference is to the suddenness with which Hoshea was to be seized by the king of Assyria, and an entire end put to the regal dignity. See 2 Kings xvii. 4. The doing of anything early or soon is frequently expressed by its being done in the morning.

CHAPTER XI.

To aggravate his representations of the guilt of the Israelites, the prophet adduces the divine benefits conferred upon them from the earliest period of their history, 1—4. He then threatens them with unavoidable punishment on account of their obstinacy, 5, 6; but, all of a sudden, introduces Jehovah, compassionating his rebellious children, and promising them a restoration from their captivity in foreign lands, 7—11.

1 WHEN Israel was a child, I loved him,
 And called my son out of Egypt.

1. That these words relate to the nation of Israel — being a description of what Jehovah had done for it ages before the prophet wrote, and not a prophecy of any future event, is so evident, that no person who impartially examines the preceding and following context, can for a moment call it in question. Nor but for their having been applied by the Evangelist Matthew (ch. ii. 15.) to our Lord's

- 2 According as they called them, they went from their presence,
They sacrificed unto Baals,
And burned incense to graven images.
- 3 Though I taught Ephraim to walk,
Taking them by their arms,
Yet they knew not that I healed them.

return from Egypt, would it ever have been imagined that they had or could have had any other reference. It is only, therefore, with respect to such application that any difficulty can exist respecting their exegesis; and, in my judgment, there appears to be nothing in the N. T. application beyond the mere appropriation of the language of the prophet, for the purpose of giving to Jewish readers a more vivid impression of the strikingly analogous circumstances of the sojourn of our Saviour in Egypt, and his return from it, to those of the ancient Israelites. The Evangelist does not affirm, that the words as used by Hosea were a prophecy of Christ; he only adduces them, to show how aptly they described the historical event which he was narrating, just as he does Jer. xxxi. 15, in application to the murder of the infants at Bethlehem, and Ps. lxxviii. 2, in application to our Lord's teaching in parables. "He must be a stranger to the Hebrew writers, that does not know, that nothing is more common among them than such accommodations of the text upon all occasions. They abound in such applications; I may say their Midrashim do very much exceed in them." Kidder's Demon. of the Messiah, Pt. II. p. 216. "Parodiarum in N. T. omnia sunt plena, e. g. Matt. ii. 15 and 23, ubi impleta dicuntur Scripturæ tum etiam, cum nulla historica aut typica est impletio, sed analogica tantum." Hottinger in Primit. Heidelberg, p. 80. See Surenhusii. βιβλος καταλλης, p. 338. Horne's Introd. vol. ii. pp. 341, 342. Robinson's Greek Lex. in Isa, C. 2, d. Instead of לְבָנָי, the LXX. appears to have read לְבָנָיו; but instead of τὰ τέκνα αὐτοῦ, his children, which is their reading, that of Aq. Symm. Theod. the Slavon. and Matthew, agree with the Hebrew text. The Hebrew people are also called the son of God in the same figurative sense, Exod. iv. 22, 23. The early period of their existence is frequently represented as their youth. See Is. liv. 13; Jer. ii. 2, iii. 24, 25, xxii. 21; Hos. ii. 15.

2. The use of the verb קָרָא, to call, in the preceding verse, suggested the idea of the subsequent messages which had been delivered to the Israelites by the prophets, to which Hosea now appeals, in order to contrast with the means which had been employed for their reformation, the obstinate character of their rebellion. Before קָרָא, subaud. בְּאִשְׁרֵי, to correspond to בָּךְ. Thus the LXX. κατ' ὄσ. The nominative is the prophets, understood. The very presence of the prophets being an annoyance to them, they withdrew from it, that, unmolested, they might indulge in idolatry.

3. תִּפְחֵלְתִּי, an instance of the Tiphil conjugation, equivalent to Hiphil in signification, and, in all probability, formed by hardening the preformative ה into ת. Indeed, one of De Rossi's MSS. reads תִּפְחֵלְתִּי, instead of תִּפְחֵלְתִּי. There exist only two other instances in the Hebrew Bible, viz. תִּתְחַרְרֶהָ, Jer. xii. 5, and מִתְחַרְרֶהָ, xxii. 15, if תִּפְחֵלְתִּי is not to be so taken. Compare the Shaphel Conjugation in Syriac, in which language this very verb occurs in the form See Knös Chrest.

Syr. p. 112. It is a denominative from לָקַד, the foot, and signifies to cause, or teach to use the feet, or walk. Syr. and Targ. וְלָקַדְתִּי, I led, only the latter paraphrases, וְלָקַדְתִּי מִןּוּמְלִיךְ, and I led, etc. by an angel sent from my presence. The use of the personal pronoun אֲנִי before the verb gives additional force to the language. לָקַד in קָרָא is the infinitive used as a gerund, as in Ezek. xvii. 5. Both

- 4 I drew them with the bands of man,
 With the cords of love;
 I was also to them as those who lift up the yoke from their neck,
 I held out meat to them, I made them eat.
- 5 They shall not return to the land of Egypt;
 Assyria shall be their king:
 Because they would not be converted.
- 6 The sword shall be whirled in their cities,
 It shall destroy their barriers, and devour,
 Because of their devices.

the suffixes ׁ and ׂ refer to Ephraim. See on chap. ix. 2. Four MSS. for זרעתי, "his arms," read זרעתי, "my arms," which is also in another originally, and now in another, and in the Soncin. edition of 1486. It is also supported by the LXX. Syr. Vulg. Another MS. reads זרעתי, but they are all corrections of the original, and are only to be tolerated in translation. The metaphor taken from teaching children to walk is continued, as those who do so take hold of their arms to keep them from falling while they move their feet. It beautifully expresses the condescension of God to the circumstances of his people, and the kind care which he exercised over them. Comp. Deut. i. 31, xxxii. 11. His healing them, refers to his recovering them from the calamities which they had brought upon themselves by their sins.

4. חַבְלֵי אָדָם, the bands of man, are explained by the parallel phrase עֲבֹתֵי אֱהָרָה, cords of love, i. e. humane, gentle, persuasive, methods, such as men generally employ when they would induce to action. There seems to be still a reference to the case of children, who, when taught to walk, are not only held by the arms but also by soft cords or leading-strings, are led about, or drawn in a gentle manner by those who have the care of them. The terms, however, naturally suggesting the idea of the ropes by which oxen are bound and led about, the metaphor is immediately changed into one borrowed from agricultural life. בְּמִרְמֵי עַל וְגו' does not mean to remove the yoke entirely, but to raise it from the neck and cheeks of the animal, so as to allow it freely to eat its food. This better suits the following connection than the idea of taking the yoke off any place that may have been galled by it, in order to afford relief. The עַל, yoke, not only included the piece of wood upon the neck, by which the animal was fastened to the pole, but also the whole of the harness about the head, which was connected with it. The yokes used in the East are very heavy, and press so much upon the animals, that they are unable to bend their necks. וְאֵצֶּל אֵיּוֹ. Ewald renders, und sanft gegen ihn, "and gently towards him," etc.; but it is preferable to take אֵצֶּל as the apocopated future in Hiph. of נָטָה, to stretch out, extend, reach any thing to another. The verse sets forth the kind relief afforded to the Hebrew nation in Egypt, and the provision with which they were miraculously supplied in the wilderness.

5. שׁוּבוּ, to turn, return, which is used at the beginning of the verse in its proper acceptation, is employed at the close metaphorically to express conversion to God. The Israelites seem to have been very generally inclined to migrate for a time to Egypt, in order to enjoy the protection of its monarch; the prophet assures them that they should not carry their purpose into effect, but that they should be subject to the Assyrian rule, as a punishment for refusing to listen to the calls given them to repent and turn from their idolatries.

6. Most of the Rabbins take חָזַל in the sense of resting, remaining; but it seems preferable to adopt the signification to turn, be turned, or whirled about, as a sword when it is brandished or when it is employed in cutting down the enemy.

- 7 For my people are bent upon defection from me;
 Though they call them to the Most High,
 Yet none of them will exalt him.
- 8 How shall I give thee up, O Ephraim?
 How shall I deliver thee over, O Israel?
 How shall I make thee as Admah?
 How shall I make thee as Zeboim?
 My heart is turned within me;
 All my feelings of compassion are kindled.
- 9 I will not execute the fierceness of my anger;
 I will no more destroy Ephraim;

Comp. the Arab. حال, conversa fuit res. V. se convertit; versus mutatusque fuit. בָּרִיחַ, barriers, Gesenius and Lee take metaphorically, as denoting chiefs or princes.

7. הִלְלֵנִי = הִלְלֵנִי, which one of De Rossi's MSS. reads originally, the Pahul Part. of הִלֵּן, to hang, used here metaphorically in the sense of bending, or being propense to anything. The idea of doubt or suspense, which some attach to the word in this connection, ill agrees with the character of the Israelites as otherwise depicted in this book. מִשְׁבֵּבָה is always used in a bad sense, defection apostasy, etc. Comp. chap. xiv. 5. The suffix in מִשְׁבֵּבָתִי is to be taken passively; defection which has me for its object, and cannot with any propriety be rendered as by Horsley, "my returning." For עַל-סֵף, ad summum, see on chap. vii. 16; and for יִתְקַרְא, on ver. 2. After יְיָ, supply הָאֵלֹהִים, him, from עַל, the Supreme, preceding. Jehovah had been degraded by his being worshipped through the medium of images, and having idols associated with him; yet none of his apostate people were inclined to raise him from this degradation, by rejecting them and celebrating His praise, as the sole and glorious object of adoration. Po-cocke's Arab. MS. لم يكن احد منهم يشرف اسم الله, there was not one of them that glorified the name of God. יְיָ with a negative is to be rendered not one; without it, all altogether, wholly, as in the following verse.

8, 9. Now follows one of the most affecting instances of the infinite tenderness of the divine compassion to be found in Scripture; the point of which is enhanced by its being introduced immediately after a description of the odious conduct of the Israelites. It is, as Bishop Lowth characterizes it, exquisitely pathetic. The repetitions and synonymous features of the parallelism greatly add to the effect. The words belong to the period after the subjugation of Samaria, and the carrying away of the Israelites by Shalmaneser, 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6, xviii. 9-12. They were designed to inspire the captives with hope in the mercy of God, and thus lead them to true repentance. לִי־מִגֵּן, the LXX. render ὑπερασπιῶ σου; Aq. ὄπλω κυκλώσα σε; Vulg. protegam te; deriving the idea from the signification of the substantive מִגֵּן, a shield; but it is used of delivering over enemies, Gen. xiv. 20. Symm. ἐκδώσω σε. Before לִי־מִגֵּן is an ellipsis of יְיָ, which had already been twice repeated. The destruction of Admah and Zeboim is only referred to as an example in one other case, viz. Deut. xxix. 23, and then in connection with Sodom and Gomorrah. To the awful catastrophe recorded Gen. xix. the sacred writers frequently appeal in order to produce a sense of the evil of sin, and the severity with which it deserves to be punished; or when they would convey the idea of complete and irretrievable ruin. Comp. Is. i. 9, xiii. 19; Jer. xlix. 18; Lam. iv. 6; Amos. iv. 11; Matt. x. 15; 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 7. Some would render עַל־יְיָ, in

For I am God and not man,
The Holy One in the midst of thee ;
I will not come in wrath.

- 10 They shall follow Jehovah, when he roareth like a lion ;
When he roareth, the children shall hasten from the sea.

“ my heart is turned against me,” i. e. my pity rises in overpowering opposition to the determination to which I had come to inflict punishments ; but the phraseology will scarcely bear such construction, though it cannot be questioned, that it is designed to express a powerful inward revolution. Comp. מִהַרְעֵמָה עָלַי רִנָּהי, Ps. xlii. 6, 12, xliii. 5 ; הִרְעַמְשָׁה עָלַי רִנָּהי, exlii. 4 ; עָלַי לָבִי רָנָי, Jer. viii. 18 ; in all which passages the preposition conveys the idea of mental contiguity, nearness, in, within, as נִהְפָּה לָבִי בְקִרְבִּי, my heart is turned WITHIN me, Lam. i. 20, incontestably shows. From the connection in which it occurs, in the last cited passage, it is obvious the phrase is there designed to express great mental distress. נִמְוָר is used in Niph'al, of the stirrings of natural affection, Gen. xliii. 30 ; 1 Kings iii. 26. The idea seems to be derived from the commotion produced by the kindling of a fire, and the heat or warmth in which it results. Tanchum explains the word by concitatus fuit. LXX.

συνεταράχθη, or, as in the Complut. διαταράχθη. נִהְיָמִים, the same in effect as רַחֲמִים, compassion, feelings of tender pity and affection. Targ. רַחֲמֵי, my compassions. It is derived from נָהַם, to be inwardly affected, whether with grief, pity, consolation, or anger. In the idea of displeasure with one's self, has originated the signification, to repent, which accounts for the renderings, μεταμέλεια, penitudo, repentings, etc. See my note on Is. i. 24. The language is in the highest degree anthropopathical. The 9th verse contains a declaration of the purpose of God founded upon his compassion, and quite in keeping with the manner in which expression had just been given to it. לֹא אֶשׁוּב לְעִתָּתוֹתַי שׁוּב is, as frequently to be taken adverbially. The captivity was the last judgment that was to come upon the ten tribes as a punishment for their idolatry. The rendering, “ I will not enter into the city,” affords no suitable sense, and would require the article בְּעִיר, as indeed, one of De Rossi's MSS. reads. Bishop Lowth's translation, “ though I inhabit not thy cities,” (Lectures, vol. ii. p. 38.) is equally unsatisfactory with the interpretation of Jerome and Castalio : I am not like those who dwell in cities ; living after human laws, and deeming cruelty to be justice. Such construction Maurer states to be in his opinion “ artificiosior quam elegantior. I, therefore, adopt the interpretation hinted at by Jarchi, and since approved by Schroeder, Secker, Dathe, Manger, Tingstadius, Eichhorn, De Wette, Noyes, Boothroyd, Gesenius, Maurer, and Ewald, which takes עִיר not in the sense of city, but of anger or wrath ; comparing the Arab. غار, ferbuit aestu dies.

Comp. Jer. xv. 8 ; Hos. vii. 7 ; and עֵר, an enemy, 1 Sam. xxviii. 16 ; Ps. cxxxix. 20. The words are thus strictly parallel, and synonymous to וְלֹא אֵישׁ, and not man. The derivation from בעיר, to which Michaelis assigns the signification angry. بَعْرَة, ira in Deo, Orient. Bib.

Pt. XIX. p. 9, is less appropriate, though the sense which he gives is the same.

10, 11. These verses contain gracious promises of the return of the Israelites to the true worship and service of God, and their restoration to their own land from the different places in which they had been scattered during the captivity. הִלְךְ יְהוָה, to walk after Jehovah, is always used in the religious sense of addicting one's self to his worship, and keeping his commandments, and is not to be interpreted, as Hitzig does, of a mere following of providence by taking advantage of the opportunity that would be afforded of returning from Babylon. So the Targ. בְּתַר פּוֹלְקֵנָא דְרַי, after the

11 They shall hasten, like a sparrow, from Egypt,
 And like a dove, from the land of Assyria:
 And I will cause them to dwell in their own houses,
 Saith Jehovah.

worship of Jehovah. For the contrary, see ver. 2. As רָעַע, to roar, like the lion, always conveys the idea of terror or awe, it cannot be here applied either to any invitation to the Jews as a people, or to the preaching of the gospel generally; but must be referred to the awful judgments which God executed upon Babylon, Egypt, etc. through the instrumentality of Cyrus and his successors; thereby opening the way for the liberation of the Israelites who were found in these countries. Comp. Is. xxxi. 4; Jer. xxv. 30; Joel iv. 16; Amos i. 2, iii. 8. By בְּנֵי, sons, or children, are meant the Israelites, who had been for a time rejected, but were again acknowledged in that character, because they were to be reinstated in the privileges of adoption. Comp. chap. i. 10. הָרַד is here pregnant with meaning — signifying to come or hasten under the influence of great agitation. The idea of trepidation, though implied, and connecting well with that of the roaring previously mentioned, is not so prominent as that of quick or nimble motion. Excited to the utmost by the revolutions of empires, which allowed them to take possession of their native country, they would use all haste in repairing thither. LXX. ἐκστήσονται; but in the following verse ἐκπέτεσσονται. Syr.

يَأْتِعَم, they shall move or be moved.

“Sic Lat. trepidare etiam sumitur profestinare, observantibus Bocharto in Hieroz, et Schultensio in Animadverss. philol. ad Is. xix. 17.” Winer, in voc. The same idea of velocity is further carried out by comparing the return of the Israelites to the flight of birds remarkable for their swiftness. צַפִּיר is here used not in its generic sense of bird, but specifically of the sparrow, as the use of יָדוּ, dove, immediately after, shows. The יָם, sea, is the Mediterranean, or the islands and other maritime regions in the west. Kimchi, הַמַּעֲרָב, the west;

Pococke's Arab. MS. من جزاير البحر, from the isles of the sea. Comp. Is. xi. 11–16; a passage strictly parallel, only including the Jews as well as the Israelites. The three quarters of the globe here specified embrace all the countries mentioned by Isaiah; and as the ten tribes form the subject of Hosea's discourse, the present prophecy furnishes an additional proof of their return also, after the Babylonish captivity. To argue, therefore, from this passage, that they are still in existence, and are yet to be restored in their tribal capacity, is hermeneutically unwarranted. לָזֶה in the phrase לָזֶה-בְּתֵי-הָאֱלֹהִים, instead of בָּ, seems to have special reference to the custom of the Orientals, who enjoy their time upon, rather than in their houses.

CHAPTER XII.

This chapter commences with renewed complaints against both Ephraim and Judah, more especially against the former, 1, 2. The conduct of their progenitor Jacob is then adduced in order to excite them to apply, as he did, for the blessings which they required, 3, 4; to copy which they are further encouraged by the unchangeable character of Jehovah, 5, 6. The prophet next reverts to the deceitful and hypocritical character of the ten tribes, notwithstanding the numerous means that had been employed to promote true piety, 7–10; renews his castigation of their idolatrous practices, 11; again appeals to the kindness of God to the nation in its obscure origin in the person of Jacob, 12, 13; and denounces anew the judgments that were to be inflicted upon it, 14.

1 EPHRAIM hath encompassed me with falsehood,
 And the house of Israel with deceit;
 And as for Judah, he is still inconstant with God,
 Even with the Holy Ones.

1. The LXX. Vulg. Targ. and our common version join this verse to the preceding chapter; but improperly—there being no connection whatever with the previous verses, whereas it is manifest from the renewed reference to Judah, ver. 3, that the three verses intimately cohere. The proper exegesis of this verse depends upon the signification assigned to רָדָה, and the consequent application of נִצְמָן. That the former cannot grammatically be referred either to רָדָה or רָדָה, to subdue, bear rule, or to רָדָה, to descend, as Jerome renders it, is now agreed on all hands; and there is no alternative left but to derive it from רָדָה, which occurs only in three other passages, viz. one in Kal, Jer. ii. 31, and twice in Hiph. Gen. xxvii. 40, and Ps. lv. 3. In the two first, the ideas of becoming or being unfaithful, rebelling, wandering at large, are obviously conveyed. In the third, the verb is applied figuratively to an agitated or unsettled state of mind, to which the notion of wandering seems much more natural, than that of mourning, which is that expressed by our translators. Thus also the derivative מְרַדָּה may best be rendered circumvagatio, erratio, Lam. i. 7, iii. 19. Compare the Arabic كَيْت كَيْت, quesivit pabulum; ultro citroque ivit; mobile fuit; discurrit huc illuc mulier apud vicinas suas. מְרַדָּה, locus, quo in pascuis cameli modo prodeunt modo retrocedunt. Eth. ἑπιπέσει: persequi, insurrexit, etc. The signification dominatur, which has been given to רָדָה, is altogether gratuitous. The meaning of the prophet will, therefore, be, that Judah or the inhabitants of the southern kingdom acted with vacillancy in regard to Jehovah. So far were they from adhering steadfastly to his covenant, and seeking their happiness in obedience to his will, that they resembled animals that are dissatisfied with their pasture, break loose, and run wildly up and down in search of what is more agreeable to their appetite; or like a female who, discontent at home, seeks for satisfaction by gadding about among her neighbors. The description applies to the state of things among the Jews towards the end of the reign of Jotham, and during that of Ahaz, who introduced a Syrian altar, and other idolatrous objects, by which the people were tempted to infidelity towards Jehovah, but had not yet altogether renounced his service. Hence the force of עַד, yet, still. Though the idea of hostility implied in the verb would not justify the use of the preposition, עִם, with, taken as in the phrases עִם נִצְמָן, to fight with, contend with; yet it well agrees with its use after verbs of acting towards, or in reference to any one, such as רָצָה עִם, to love, etc. Thus Schroeder, Dathe, Eichhorn, De Wette, Boothroyd, Kuinoel, Gesenius, Noyes, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald. Such construction of the passage is fully borne out by ver. 3, which cannot be consistently interpreted, if Judah were here represented as faithfully maintaining the principles of the theocracy. But if the signification which has been given to רָדָה be alone justifiable, then it is evident מְרַדָּה, faithful cannot apply to Judah, but must be taken as qualifying קְדוֹשֵׁים, the adjective noun immediately preceding. To this it cannot be objected, that the one is in the plural, while the other is in the singular; for we find a precisely similar combination in אֱלֹהִים צְדִיקִים, the

- 2 Ephraim feedeth upon wind,
 He pursueth the east wind;
 Every day he multiplieth falsehood and violence;
 Yea, he maketh a covenant with Assyria,
 And oil is carried into Egypt.
- 3 Jehovah hath also a controversy with Judah,
 And he will punish Jacob, according to his ways;
 According to his deeds, he will recompense him.
- 4 In the womb he took his brother by the heel,
 And by his strength he strove with God;

righteous God, Ps. vii. 10. That קדושים, the Holy Ones, cannot here be applied either to human saints, or to angels, but must be interpreted of God himself, the law of parallelism clearly requires. Comp. Josh xxiv. 19, אֱלֹהִים קְדוֹשִׁים הוּא; Prov. ix. 10, דַּעַת קְדוֹשִׁים בִּינָה; xxx. 3, וְדַעַת וְדַעַת. Kimchi himself allows that קְדוֹשִׁים must be so understood in this place. Between the inconstancy of the Jews, and the faithfulness of God, the contrast was placed in a very striking point of view. They had never known him to fail in giving effect to any of his promises; while they, on the contrary, had all along shown more or less of a fickle and roving disposition. The ancient versions exhibit considerable diversity of rendering in this place; but none of them suggests a meaning preferable to that just given, or warrants any alteration in the reading of the Hebrew.

2. By "the wind," and "the east wind," are meant empty, unsatisfying and pernicious objects. Such were the idolatrous confidence and foreign alliances of the Israelites. קְדוֹשִׁים, the LXX. render καύσαν, the Arab. السوم, the Samoom, or scorching wind, called the "east wind," because it blows from the desert to the east of Palestine. See on Is. xxvii. 8. In proportion to the insincerity and faithless conduct of the nation was the destruction which it brought upon itself. Such conduct was specially exhibited in the leagues that were formed, and the friendships that were entered into with the two most powerful of the ancient monarchies. שֶׁמֶן, oil, was one of the most valuable productions of Canaan, and formed a profitable article of exportation. It is here spoken of as a present sent to the king of Egypt, doubtless among other costly articles, with a view to obtain a favorable hearing to the embassy which was despatched to secure his aid against the Assyrians.

3. "Judah" and "Jacob" stand for the two kingdoms respectively, the latter name denoting the ten tribes, as Is. xvii. 4. The declaration here made manifestly shows, that in ver. 1 the conduct of Judah is to be viewed in an unfavorable light. At the same time the language of both verses in reference to that power is not so strong as that which is employed respecting Israel.

4. 5. Having introduced the name of Jacob in reference to his posterity, Hosea adverts to three interesting incidents in his personal history, with the view of encouraging his countrymen to apply themselves with all assiduity to the service of God, who alone could, and would extricate them from the calamitous circumstances into which their sins had brought them. Though עַקַּב, from which the name יַעֲקֹב, Jacob, is derived, Arab.

عقب, e vestigio sequutus fuit, a calce venit, etc. signifies to come behind any one, take him by the heel, trip, circumvent, etc., it is obviously used here in a good sense, to denote the supernatural indication which his taking his brother Esau by the heel afforded of the superiority, which, in the course of divine providence, he and his posterity were to obtain. Gen. xxv. 22, 23, 26. To this effect the Targ. הָלָא נָעַקַב עַד דְּהָלָא אֶתְיָלִיד אֲמִיר דְּיַעֲקֹב הָלָא נָעַקַב עַד דְּיַעֲקֹב אֶתְיָלִיד אֲמִיר דְּיַעֲקֹב, was it not said of Jacob before

5 Yea, he strove with the Angel and prevailed;
 He wept and made supplication to him;
 He found him at Bethel, and there he spake with us;

he was born, that he should be greater than his brother? The Israelites were reminded of the promise, "The one people shall be greater than the other people;" and had they acted on the faith of it, they would have found that, with Jehovah on their side, they were not only stronger than the Edomites, but even than the Assyrian power itself. The idea of power having thus been suggested to the mind of the prophet, he was reminded of the remarkable occurrence which took place at Peniel, when Jacob wrestled with the divine messenger of the covenant, and prevailed. וְיָרָה, to put forth power, exercise rule as a prince, or commander, the verb from which יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, the other name of Jacob, is derived, is that employed Gen. xxxii. 29, where the language is nearly identical with that used in these two verses. In the resumption of the subject, ver. 5. וַיִּשְׁרָ is employed, which, though equivalent to וְיָרָה in signification, must be referred to the root וְיָרָה. Comp. Jud. ix. 22, and Hos. viii. 4. וַיִּשְׁרָ properly signifies manly vigor. Here וַיִּשְׁרָ, the Angel, corresponds to אֱלֹהֵי, God, ver. 4, and designates the UNCREATED ANGEL, of whom we read so frequently in the Old Testament, to whom, as here, names distinctive of Deity are ascribed, and who is represented as possessing the divine attributes. See on Is. lxiii. 9, and Dr. M'Caul's Observations appended to his translation of Kimchi on Zechariah, chap. i. וַיִּשְׁרָ specially points to the Angel as the object towards whom the conflicting efforts of the patriarch were directed. Of the circumstances of his weeping and making supplication, no particular mention is made in Genesis, but they may be regarded as implied in the words, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." The struggle was not merely corporeal, it was also mental. The outward conflict was only a sign of that which was internal and spiritual. The prophet, as in the former reference, leaves the Israelites to make the application. If they would only now redeem their character as descendants of Israel, and show that they were entitled to the name, by sincerely and earnestly engaging in supplication to the God of their ancestor, they too should prevail, and obtain every necessary blessing. The third reference is to the narrative Gen. xxviii. 11-22, which contains an account of the scene at Bethel, and the promises which God then made, not to the patriarch only, but also to his posterity. The nominative to וַיִּשְׁרָ, he found, is God, and not Jacob, as Abenezra, Tanchum, and several others have attempted to maintain. The meaning is, that Jehovah afforded to the solitary traveller the gracious aid which his exposed situation rendered desirable. בֵּית-אֵל, Bethel, is here the accusative of place, and is used with singular effect, in reference to the contrasted appropriation of it by the patriarch, and by his apostate posterity. The LXX. not perceiving this, have rendered it οἶκος ὄν, the house of On, as elsewhere in this book. וְעִמָּנוּ, "with us," Aq. Symm. Theod. Syr. Tanchum, Abulwalid, and several moderns, render as if it were וְעִמָּי, "with him;" but there is no variety of reading in the MSS., and וְעִמָּנוּ is nowhere used of the third person singular. The LXX. have πρὸς αὐτοὺς, to them, as if they had read וְעִמָּנוּ, which so far as pronunciation is concerned, goes to confirm the Masoretic punctuation. That the prophet here speaks per κωνόσω, identifying himself and his contemporaries with their progenitor, in whose loins they may be said to have been, when he received the gracious promises which related not to himself only, but also to his posterity, is the interpretation advocated by Manger, Horsley, Hitzig, Maurer, and Rosenmüller. Comp. Ps. lxvi. 6; Heb. vii. 9, 10. On the other hand, Ewald, following Jarchi and Joseph Kimchi, renders the words וְיָרָה עִמָּנוּ, he will speak with us, in the future, and considers the prophet to be announcing, that God would renew his communications at Bethel, provided the Israelites returned to obedience.

6 Even Jehovah the God of hosts:
Jehovah is his memorial.

But though this seems less entitled to adoption, it cannot be denied that his design in the adduction of this instance was to lead his people to repentance, in order that they might inherit the promised blessings.

6.  $\text{יְהוָה}$  is expletive. Ewald strangely gives to the combination the form of an oath: "bei Jahve," explaining it in his note, "wahr ist das bei Jahve," By Jehovah it is true! The incommunicable name is here introduced for the express purpose of showing that He who had made promises respecting the posterity of Jacob, would not prove unfaithful to his word. While  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי יְהוָה}$ , the God of hosts, LXX.  $\text{παντοκράτωρ}$ , conveys the idea of supreme and infinite power by which he is able to carry all his purposes into effect, his peculiarly distinctive name  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , conveys that of immutable constancy, and, by implication, fidelity to his promises. Some refer the word to the root  $\text{הָיָה}$ , to exist, be; but that it is to be derived from the cognate and more ordinary verb of existence  $\text{הָיָה}$ , appears evident from Exod. iii. 14, where, in the explanation of the name, the form of the future is not  $\text{הָיָה}$ , but  $\text{הָיָה}$ . But as  $\text{י}$  is nevertheless inserted in  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , which also retains  $\text{י}$ , preformant of the third person singular, it is impossible not to acquiesce in the opinion, that the noun is made up of  $\text{הָיָה}$ , He was,  $\text{הָיָה}$ , He is, and  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , He will be. What confirms this hypothesis, is the peculiar designation of God, Rev. i. 4, 8.  $\text{Ὁ ὢν καὶ ὁ ἦν καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος}$ , He that is, and that was, and that is to come, which is merely a translation into Greek of these different forms of the verb. See Pococke on Joel i. 19. In this derivation Abenezra and other Rabbins concur; and, accordingly the second article of the Jewish creed concludes with the words  $\text{וְהוּא לְבַדּוֹ אֱלֹהֵינוּ הוּא הוּא}$ , And he alone is our God; He was, He is, and He shall be. It is a coincidence in no small degree remarkable, that this threefold description of the divine existence obtained both among the ancient Egyptians and Brahmins. On the Saitic temple of Isis was the inscription,  $\text{Ἐγὼ εἰμι πάν τὸ γεγονὸν καὶ ὄν καὶ ἐσόμενον, καὶ τὸν ἐμὸν πέπλον οὐδεὶς ποθὶ ἀνεκάλυψε}$ , "I am all THAT WAS, AND IS, AND SHALL BE, and no mortal hath ever uncovered my veil." Plutarch de Iside. In the Bhagavat the Supreme Being thus addresses Brahma:—"Even I WAS at first, not any other being; THAT WHICH EXISTS unperceived; Supreme: afterwards I AM THAT WHICH IS; and HE WHO MUST REMAIN am I." Asiatic Researches, vol. i. p. 245. Comp.  $\text{Ζεὺς ἦν Ζεὺς ἐστὶ Ζεὺς ἔσσεται ὁ μέγας Ζεὺς}$ , "Zeus was; Zeus is; Zeus shall be; O great Zeus!" Pausan. Phoc. x. 12. Whether the name  $\text{יְהוָה}$  was in use before the time of Moses, has been, and still is matter of dispute. That the patriarchs were unacquainted with it, has been concluded from Exod. vi. 3, where God declares, that the name under which he revealed himself to them was  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , GOD ALMIGHTY, but that he was not known to them by his name  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , JEHOVAH. Since, however, we meet with this name not only in the history of the patriarchs, but also expressly employed by themselves, as in Gen. xv. 2, xvi. 2, xxii. 14, xxiv. 3, xxvii. 7, xxiii. 20, 21, etc. it seems undeniable that they were acquainted with it; so that what is meant by the words  $\text{וַיִּסְמֵי יְהוָה לָא נִרְדְּעָתָי לְהָיָה}$ , is, that God had not caused them to experience the import of his name יְהוָה, JEHOVAH. For this signification of the phrase  $\text{יָדַע יְהוָה}$ , to know a name, or, to know, comp. Is. lii. 6, lxiv. 1; Jer. xvi. 21. It had special reference to something future—the fulfilment of the promises which he had given them; and as these promises began to be fulfilled when he interposed for their deliverance from Egypt, there was singular propriety in its being selected as the name by which Moses was to announce him to his people, on opening his commission to them. The same futurity of reference may be said to have continued to attach to it all along till the advent of Messiah, in whom all the promises are

- 7 Thou, therefore, return to thy God;
 Observe mercy and judgment,
 And wait continually on thy God.
- 8 As for Canaan, deceitful balances are in his hand;
 He loveth to oppress.
- 9 Ephraim saith, Surely I am rich,
 I have acquired wealth;
 In none of my labors am I chargeable with guilt.

yea and amen, 2 Cor. i. 20; just as it is still prominently exhibited in 'Ο ἐρχόμενος, THE COMING ONE, of the Apocalypse, which obviously respects the revelation of the Lord from heaven to fulfil the mystery of God. Such interpretation alone goes to fully justify the emphatic statement made in the text of our prophet, אֲהִיָּה זְבַרְךָ, compared with Exod. iii. 15, הִנֵּה זְבַרְךָ לֵאמֹר הִנֵּה הוֹי, in which the Most High declares, that this name was to be employed for the purpose of perpetuating the knowledge of his character with respect to promised blessings. Comp. also Ps. cxxxv. 13. That it should have come into oral disuse among the Jews, could only have originated in a feeling of superstitious veneration, which led them to regard it as too sacred to be pronounced without profanation. The earliest trace of such superstition is thought to be found in the words, Ecclesiasticus xxiii. 9, ὀνομασία τοῦ ἁγίου μὴ συνειδωμένης, "use not thyself to the naming of the Holy One;" but Philo de Nomin. mutat. makes express mention of it. Whenever the Jews meet with it in the text, they read אֲהִיָּה, LORD, instead of it, except when it follows אֲהִיָּה, in which case they point it אֲהִיָּה, and read אֲהִיָּה, God. Some are of opinion, that the present punctuation אֲהִיָּה is merely that of אֲהִיָּה, the simple Sheva taking the place of Hateph-Patach, which only occurs in connection with gutturals; but the employment of the two first syllables with precisely the same points in the formation of compound proper names manifestly goes to show that our present pronunciation is correct. Compare אֲהִיָּה אֲהִיָּה, אֲהִיָּה אֲהִיָּה, etc. The change of the Segol into Kametz may be accounted for on the ground of the grave manner in which the final אֲהִיָּה is required to be accented, if it was not intended to stand for the second vowel of the preterite אֲהִיָּה.

7. An exhortation to duty derived from what God had been, and would still, in accordance with the significant aspect of his name, in continuance be, to those who served him in sincerity.

8. אֲהִיָּה, Canaan, is the nominative absolute, introduced abruptly for the purpose of graphically describing the real character of the Ephraimites. The word may, indeed, be rendered merchant, but then אִישׁ, man, must be supplied; אִישׁ אֲהִיָּה, a man of Canaan, meaning a merchant — the inhabitants of that country being the celebrated merchants of antiquity. The prophet seems rather to place the names of Canaan and Israel in antithesis; in which there is great point, as the Israelites were accustomed to hold the Canaanites in the utmost contempt. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 3. Horsley renders a trafficker of Canaan, which weakens rather than strengthens the antithesis. The fraudulent practices of merchants were quite proverbial among the Jews. "As a nail sticketh fast in the joinings of the stones, so doth sin stick close between buying and selling." Ecclesiasticus xxvii. 2.

9. The character assumed in the preceding verse is here directly applied, only the ten tribes are represented as flattering themselves that they had employed no illegal means in acquiring their affluence. אֲהִיָּה, they shall find, is used impersonally. אֲהִיָּה is employed to denote the act of distortion or iniquity, אֲהִיָּה its guilt or culpability. The words literally rendered are, with respect to all my efforts, they shall not find attaching to me iniquity which is sin; and the meaning is,

- 10 Yet I, Jehovah, am thy God from the land of Egypt;
 I will still cause thee to dwell in tents as on feast days.
- 11 I have spoken to the prophets,
 I have multiplied visions;
 And through the prophets I have used similitudes.

might be punished. "The merchant imagines that it is not possible to get through business without some deceit; but he takes care not to commit any gross or deadly act of delinquency, hoping that God will not be strict in regard to the rest." — Michaelis.

10. Commentators have been greatly divided in opinion as to whether these words are to be taken as a promise, or as a threatening. Those who take the latter view interpret the living in tabernacles of such a life as those lead who have no settled habitations, like the Israelites in the wilderness, or like those who assembled at the annual festivals, and who could only be accommodated in tents without the city. But, though such exegesis might at first sight seem to suit the connection, yet there is something so forced in comparing a state of captivity to that of the Hebrew nation during the celebration of the most joyful of all their festivals, that I am compelled to regard the verse as containing a promise of what God would still do for the Israelites on their repentance and reformation. Those who are familiar with the sudden and abrupt transitions which abound in Hosea, and the frequency with which he intermingles promises with threatenings, will not be surprised at this unexpected assurance of the divine clemency. The argument is this: the Israelites have indeed acted a most wicked and deceitful part, and justly deserve to be forever cast off from all participation in my favor; but I am still, what I have been from the beginning of their history, their covenant-God, and will yet cause them to renew their joy before me. That they were not to enjoy any such privilege in their apostate condition is taken for granted. The promise was fulfilled on the return from the captivity.

11. Jehovah adduces a further proof of the kindness of his disposition towards the nation — the abundant means of instruction which he had afforded them; while at the same time, the language is so worded as to draw their attention to the messages which the prophets had delivered. These messages contained the most powerful dissuasives from idolatry, and the greatest encouragements to cleave unto the Lord. לַעֲבֹדָהּ in יְהוָה, following a verb of announcement, is equivalent to לַעֲבֹדָהּ, to, and is not to be pressed so as to make it signify the coming down or resting of inspiration upon the prophets. Comp. Job xxxvi. 33. LXX. πρὸς προφήτας. If Hosea was one of the earliest of the Hebrew prophets, whose books are now in our hands, reference must here be had to those who had flourished before his time, such as Ahijah the Shilonite, Shemaiah, Iddo, Azariah, Hanani, Jehu, Jahaziel, Eliezer, Elijah, Elisha, Micahiah, Joel, and Amoz, not to include the hundred prophets of the Lord whom Obadiah hid in a cave, after Jezebel had put a number to death. Not only had Jehovah made numerous communications of his will through the instrumentality of these messengers, but he had employed such modes in making these communications as were calculated at once to gain and secure attention. For רָאָה, see on Is. i. 1. רָאָה from רָאָה, to be like, resemble; in Piel, to liken, employ, similes, or comparisons; or, in general, to use figurative language. In such language, including metaphor, allegory, comparison, prosopopeia, apostrophe, hyperbole, etc., the prophets abound. They accommodated themselves to the capacity and understanding of their hearers by couching the high and important subjects of which they treated under the imagery of sensible objects, and invested them with a degree of life and energy which could only be resisted by an obstinate determination not to listen to religious instruction. Though רָאָה is in the future, it borrows its temporal signification from

- 12 Verily Gilead is iniquitous,
 Surely they are false :
 In Gilgal they sacrifice oxen ;
 Their altars are like the heaps
 On the ridges of the field.
- 13 Jacob fled to the country of Syria ;
 Israel served for a wife ;
 And for a wife he kept the flocks.
- 14 By a prophet Jehovah brought Israel up from Egypt,
 And by a prophet he was kept.

the two preceding verbs, וַיִּבְרְחָהּ, and וַיִּהְרַבְיֶיהָ, which are in the preterite.

12. אִם is not used here as a particle expressing doubt : it rather expresses the certainty of what is affirmed, as הֲאִם following, evidently shows. The two places here mentioned were celebrated in the history of the Hebrews : — Gilead, on account of the solemn agreement which Laban and Jacob entered into there with each other ; and Gilgal, on account of the general circumcision of the people, and the solemn observance of the pass-over when they had passed over Jordan. They are adduced by the prophet to remind the Israelites of the sacred obligations under which they lay, and the sacred character which, as the peculiar people of God, they ought ever to sustain. Pointing, as it were, to the heap of stones which Jacob had erected in testimony of the transaction between him and Laban, Hosea asks, Is Gilead the scene of iniquity? Are its inhabitants actually worshippers of idols? And then he fearlessly charges them with idolatry. Both וַיִּבְרְחָהּ and וַיִּהְרַבְיֶיהָ are specially used of idols, in order to express their nothingness and vanity. The abstract stands for the concrete. By גִּלְגָּל, Gilead, is meant not merely the place, but its inhabitants. Comp. for the wickedness of the Gileadites, chap. vi. 8. גִּלְגָּל, Gilgal, had also become desecrated by idolatrous practices, chap. iv. 15, ix. 15, which abounded to such an extent, that the number of the altars was like that of the heaps of stones which have been collected and left in various parts of the ridges of a field. In הֲבָיִטִים, heaps, comp. Josh. vii. 26, there is an obvious reference to the name גִּלְגָּל.

Both are derived from גָּלַגַּל, to roll, roll stones, etc. For וַיִּהְרַבְיֶיהָ, comp. chap. x. 4.

13, 14. The argument of both these verses is the same, though it is only in the latter that it is expressly stated, viz. the divine goodness in preserving Jacob and his posterity. God was with the patriarch, according to his promise, and protected and prospered him all the time he was in servitude in Padan-aram ; and he likewise delivered his descendants from Egyptian bondage, and conducted them safely to the land of Canaan. אֲרָם, Aramæa, Syria, the high country, from רָם, to be high ; here specially the region between the Euphrates and the Tigris, called on this account, אֲרָם נְהַרַיִם Aram of the two rivers, LXX. Μεσοποταμία, Mesopotamia. Being lower than the rest of Syria on the west, it is here called הַשָּׂדֶה, field, which corresponds to פְּדָן, a level or plain, Gen. xlviii. 7 ; hence Padan-aram. וַיִּשְׁמֶר, to keep, is used without צֹאן, sheep, in the sense of keeping a flock. See Gen. xxx. 31 ; 1 Sam. xvii. 20. To the verb as thus employed in its literal acceptance, ver. 13, the figurative use in וַיִּשְׁמֶר, ver. 14, corresponds. The church of God is frequently compared to a flock. The נָבִיא, prophet, here referred to was Moses, who was so κατ' ἐξοχήν. See Exod. iv. 15, 16 ; Numb. xii. 6-8 ; Is. lxiii. 11, 12, The repeated reference to the Hebrew legislator in this character, was evidently intended to impress the minds of the Israelites with a conviction of the necessity of attending to the messages which the Lord sent to them by his prophets.

- 15 Ephraim hath given most bitter provocation,
Therefore will his Lord leave his blood upon him;
And bring back upon him his reproach.

15. הַמְרִירוּתָם, lit. bitterness, i. e. most bitter, or bitterly. The object of provocation is not expressed, but that it is Jehovah is clear from the following clause. The blood of Ephraim was, in all probability, that of human victims which had been shed in the service of Moloch. אֲדֹנָי, his Lord, is improperly applied by Horsley to the king of Assyria. By הַמְרִירוּתָם, his reproach, is meant the disgraceful conduct of the ten tribes in abandoning the true God, as unworthy of their service, and transferring it to idols. אֲדֹנָי is the nominative to יִשְׁמַט as well as to נִשְׁיָב, and in our language the corresponding term Lord requires to be used before the former, and understood before the latter of the two verbs.

CHAPTER XIII.

After contrasting the prosperity of the tribe of Ephraim, during the period of its obedience to the divine laws, with the adversity which it had suffered in consequence of idolatry, 1, the prophet proceeds in the same manner, as in the preceding chapter, to intermingle brief descriptions of sin and guilt, 2, 6, 9, 12; denouncements of punishment, 3, 7, 8, 13, 15, 16; and promises of mercy, 4, 9, 14.

- 1 WHEN Ephraim spake, there was tremor;
He was exalted in Israel;
But he offended through Baal, and died.

1. Ephraim means here the tribe properly so called, in distinction from the other tribes of Israel, mentioned immediately after. Such was the power and influence which it originally exercised over the rest, that they showed it the utmost deference. רָחַת, a ῥαξ λεγόμενον, but obviously cognate with רָחַת, Jer. xlix. 24, Syr. رَحَات, Targ. רַחֲתָא, fear, trembling. In Pococke's Arab. MS. the words are rendered عند خطاب افرایم الرعدة تقع علي الناس, when Ephraim spake, trembling fell upon men. And so Tanchum, المعني ان الناس يهابوه

ويرعدون من كلامه, the meaning is, that men revered him, and trembled at his word. The same construction is adopted by Jerome, Kimchi, Abarbanel, Munster, Vatablus, Clarius, Drusius, Lively, Grotius, Rivetus, Tingstadius, Dathe, Kuinoel, Horsley, De Wette, Maurer, Noyes, and Hitzig. It is impossible to approve the translation of Ewald: "Wie Efraim redete Empörung, es aufruhr machte in Israel," When Ephraim gave utterance to sedition, it produced rebellion in Israel. Neither רָחַת nor נִשְׂא admit of being so translated. To take רָחַת adverbially, and render it tremblingly, or trembling, as in our common version, though it affords an apt sense in itself, is less suited

2 And now they continue to sin,
 And make for themselves molten images,
 Idols of their silver according to their skill;
 All of them the work of artificers;
 The men that sacrifice, say of them, to the connection. אָנָּח occurs in the sense of elevating one's self, Ps. lxxxix. 10; Nah. i. 5, or being exalted. Hence אָנָּח, a prince. אָנָּח in אָנָּח אָנָּח, has the force of, in union with, in the matter of, and marks the participation of the Ephraimites in the service of Baal. מוֹתוֹ, to die, is here to be taken in a civil or political sense; to lose one's influence, become subject to misery, punishment, etc. It forms an antithesis to אָנָּח, to be exalted. No sooner did the Ephraimites forsake the true God and take up with idols than he inflicted judgments upon them, by which their power was weakened, and at last became entirely extinct — "ex quo peccavit, nulla jam est autoritate in populo Dei." (Ecolampadius. "Vita ærumnosa et tristis pro morte censetur; idcirco exules mortui dicuntur, et exilium sepulchri nomine notatur, Ezech. cap. 37." Rivetus.
 Let them kiss the calves.

2. This verse sets forth their perseverance in idolatrous practices, notwithstanding the chastisements with which they had been visited. אָנָּח אָנָּח, the LXX. Vulg. Jarchi, Abenezra, Ábarbanel, Tanchum, Calvin, Piscator, Leo Juda, and among the moderns, Schmid, J. H. Michaelis, Horsley, Hitzig, Stuck, and J. Fr. Schröder, render sacrifice, or sacrificers of men, on the principle, that the presentation of human sacrifices is meant. This, however, was called in question by Kimchi, who explains, בני אדם הבאים לזבח, the men who come to sacrifice. To the same effect Munster, Piscator, Junius and Tremelius, Rivetus, Mercer, Glassius, Lively, Drusius, Bochart, our own and most of the authorized versions, Lowth, Newcome, Boothroyd, Noyes, De Wette, Gesenius, Maurer, and Ewald. The rule of syntax laid down by Gesenius respecting this mode of construction, Lehrgeb. p. 678, is, that when a genitive following an adjective is a noun of multitude, or of the plural number, such adjective is particularly used in poetry for the purpose of designating those of the multitude to which the specified quality belongs. Instances are Isaiah xxix. 19, אָנָּח אָנָּח, the poor of men, i. e. those of men who are poor; Micah v. 5, אָנָּח אָנָּח, the anointed of men, i. e. such of men as are anointed. So in the present case, אָנָּח אָנָּח, sacrificers of men, i. e. those of, or among men that sacrifice, which is merely a periphrasis for priests. Although, therefore, it is a fact, that the ten tribes did sacrifice their children to Moloch, 2 Kings xvii. 17, it would be more than precarious to draw any such inference from the present passage, especially as the prophet mentions the calves, of whose worship human sacrifices, so far as we know, formed no part. אָנָּח אָנָּח, let them kiss the calves. It was customary for idolaters to give the kiss of adoration to the objects of their worship. This was sometimes done by merely touching the lips with the hand, to which reference is made Job xxxi. 27. Comp. Lucian περὶ Ορχήσεως i. p. 918, edit. Bened. Minutius Felix, cap. 2, ad fin. Apuleius Apol. p. 496. At other times the idol itself was kissed by the worshippers. Comp. 1 Kings xix. 18. Thus Cicero tells us, that at Agrigentum in Sicily there was a brazen image of the Tyrian Hercules whose mouth and chin were worn by the kisses of his worshippers — "non solum id venerari, verum etiam osculari solebant." Act. ii. in Verrem, lib. iv. cap. 43. Nothing is more common in the Russian churches than for the devotees to kiss the picture of the virgin, or of St. Nicholas. The construction of the words אָנָּח אָנָּח is somewhat difficult. As usually divided they are interpreted thus: they, i. e. the Ephraimites, say of them, the images, let the sacrificers kiss the calves; but it is better to take אָנָּח אָנָּח, the sacrificers, as in

- 3 Therefore shall they be like the morning cloud,
And like the dew which early departeth,
Like chaff blown by a whirlwind from the threshing-floor,
And like smoke from the window.
- 4 Yet I, Jehovah, have been thy God from the land of Egypt,
Thou knewest no God besides me ;
Nor was there any Saviour besides me.
- 5 I regarded thee in the wilderness,
In the land of burning thirst.
- 6 As they were fed, so were they satiated ;
They were satiated, and their heart was lifted up ;
Therefore they forgot me :
- 7 So that I became to them as a lion,
I watched for them as a leopard by the way.
- 8 I met them as a bear bereaved of her cubs, aposition with and exegetical of הַם אֲמָרִים, they say, i. e. they, the men that sacrifice, say to the people, let them kiss the calves. While the priests presented the sacrifices, they encouraged the worshippers to come forward and kiss the objects of their adoration.

3. Comp. chap. vi. 4. תָּרַךְ, the threshing floor, being an open area, generally on an eminence, was peculiarly exposed to the wind, which carried off the chaff, on its being trodden out, or separated from the grain. אֲרָבָה, Aq. ἀπὸ καρπὸς ἀκτου, which Jerome explains, "foramen in pariete fabricatum per quod fumus egreditur;" Symm. ὀπήσ, ὀπή, an orifice; Theod. καπνοδόχον, a hole for the passage of smoke. It is very common in the East for the light to be admitted, and the smoke to make its escape by the same passage or orifice in the wall. The idea of a speedy removal is that conveyed by all the images here employed.

4. Comp. chap. xii. 10. The long addition in the LXX. is totally unsupported, and was most probably inserted in that version by some scholiast.

5. Here יָדַעְתִּי, I knew, contrasts with יָדַעְתִּי in the preceding verse, only it is to be taken in the sense of knowing effectively, taking notice of, caring for. Comp. Amos iii. 2. תֵּלֵאוּבָת, lit. thirstiness, great thirst, extreme drought, from לָאֵב, Arab. لَاب, sitivit, Comp. לָהַב, to burn, Arab. لَهَب, arsit, sitivit, siti, arsit. Munster renders, "terra siti ardente." Comp. Deut. viii. 15.

6. כְּמַזְרְעֵיהֶם, according to their feeding, i. e. in proportion to their enjoyment of the provision which I made for them, feeding them with manna from heaven, and afterwards abundantly supplying their wants. It is equivalent to, "as they were fed." For the rest of the verse comp. Deut. xxxii. 13-15.

7, 8. יָרַח לִי is inferential, showing that what follows was the result of what is stated in the preceding verse. The context requires the verb to be taken in the past time. The images here employed are of frequent occurrence. Comp. Job x. 16; Ps. vii. 2; Is. xxxviii. 13; Lam. iii. 10. לֵפָאֵר, the leopard, so called from his spots or streaks. Arab. مَظْلُوس, maculosus fuit, maculis punctivis respersus fuit; pardus. See Jer. xiii. 23, הַיָּהוּעִי הַלֵּפָאֵר. The leopard is noted for his swiftness, ferocity, and especially his cruelty to man. He lurks in the dense thicket of the wood, and springs with great velocity on his victim. With respect to the bear, Jerome remarks, "Aiunt, qui, de bestiarum scripsere naturis, inter omnes feras nihil esse ursa seivius, quum perdidit catulos vel indignit cibus." הָב being of common gender, the participle מְצַוֵּל is put in the

And rent the caul of their heart ;
I devoured them there, as a lioness ;
The wild beast rent them in pieces.

9 O Israel ! Thou hast destroyed thyself,
Nevertheless in me truly is thine help.

10 Where is thy king now ?
That he may save thee in all thy cities ;
And thy judges, of whom thou saidst,
Give me a king and princes,

11 I gave thee a king in mine anger,
And took him away in my wrath.

masculine, though the female bear is meant. Comp. אֶלְפֵי־יִנּוֹ מִטְּבֵל־יָם, Ps. cxliv. 14. אֶלְפֵי is the pericardium, or membrane which contains the heart in its cavity, and is thus fitly called its enclosure. For אֶלְפֵי, I watched, sixteen of De Rossi's MSS. and one in the margin, three ancient editions, and twenty-four others, the LXX. Syr. Vulg. and Arab. read אֶלְפֵי, Assyria, which some prefer, on account of the number of lions, panthers, tigers, etc. with which the regions of southern Asia abound. The text would then read, as a leopard, in the way to Assyria; but the common reading is more in accordance with the spirit of the passage.

9. אֶלְפֵי, I take to be a noun with the suffix, thy destruction! i. e. the destruction is thine own; thou hast brought it upon thyself by thy sins. It is, therefore, equivalent to "thou hast destroyed thyself," and cannot be better rendered. Thus the Vulg. Perditio tua, Israel. Dathe, Ipsi estis o Israelitæ! exitii vestri causa. Some, however, as Kimchi, supply אֶלְפֵי, the calf; others, אֶלְפֵי, thy king, from the following verse; others, some other noun; and take אֶלְפֵי to be the third person singular of Piel. Comp. for the form אֶלְפֵי, Deut. xxxii. 35; אֶלְפֵי, Jer. v. 13; אֶלְפֵי, Hos. i. 2; אֶלְפֵי, Jer. xliv. 21. Newcome unwarrantably adopts the rendering of the Syriac, "I have destroyed thee." Most of the moderns give a hostile sense to the אֶלְפֵי in the following אֶלְפֵי בְּעֵזְרִי, against me, against thy help; but, considering how frequently declarations of kindness are mixed up with charges of evil, and that some verb denoting rebellion would be required to support such construction, it seems preferable to give to אֶלְפֵי the common adversative signification of yet, nevertheless, and to regard the אֶלְפֵי in אֶלְפֵי בְּעֵזְרִי as the Beth Essentia, which renders the phrase much more emphatic than the pronoun, or the substantive verb would have done. It is equivalent to, In me is thy real help. Other sources may be applied to, and they may promise thee assistance; but from me alone efficient aid is to be expected, and in me it is to be found. So our translators. See on Is. xxvi. 4. This exegesis is strongly supported, if not rendered absolutely necessary, by the pointed interrogations in the following verse. The LXX. τίς βοηθήσει; turning אֶלְפֵי into אֶלְפֵי, and omitting the second אֶלְפֵי altogether. Thus also the Syr.

10, 11. אֶלְפֵי is in all probability a metathesis for אֶלְפֵי, where? It is thus rendered by the LXX. Syr. Vulg. Targ. Abulwalid, Tanchum, Luther, Drusius, Mercer, Osiander, Rivetus, Castalio, and by most modern expositors. It is also so taken by Gesenius, Lee, Winer, and Fürst; and alone suits the connection. Comp. in support of this interpretation, the combination אֶלְפֵי אֶלְפֵי, Jud. ix. 38; Job xvii. 15; Is. xix. 12. One of Kennicott's MSS. and perhaps another, one of De Rossi's in the margin, read אֶלְפֵי instead of אֶלְפֵי, though probably by correction. Another of De Rossi's has a note in the margin, stating that the word is so explained. The אֶלְפֵי אֶלְפֵי is pleonastic, except it be regarded as introducing the apodosis. אֶלְפֵי is so intimately connected with the past transactions im-

- 12 The guilt of Ephraim is bound up,
His punishment is laid up in store.
- 13 The pangs of a woman in labor shall come upon him ;
He is an unwise son,
Otherwise he would not remain long
In the place of the breaking forth of children.
- 14 I will deliver them from the power of Sheol ;
I will redeem them from death :

plied in אָמַרְתָּ תִּהְיֶה-לִּי, thou saidst, give me, that, though future in form, it cannot with any propriety be rendered otherwise than in the preterite. Some refer the circumstances here mentioned to the selection and removal of Saul ; but it is more in keeping with the specialty of the prophet's address to consider the king to be Jeroboam and his successors in the regal dignity ; and that the removal regards the frequent changes which took place in the history of the Israelitish kings, which proved a source of great calamity to the nation. See 2 Kings xv.

12. The metaphors are here borrowed from the custom of tying up money in bags, and depositing it in some secret place, in order that it might be preserved. The certainty of punishment is the idea conveyed by them. Comp. for the former, Job xiv. 17 ; and for the latter Deut. xxxii. 34, Job xxi. 19.

13. Another instance of two metaphors closely connected, the transition from the one to the other of which is, in the manner of the Orientals, rapid and unexpected. See Dathe's very judicious note. It is not unusual in Scripture to compare the calamities of a people to the sorrows of childbirth. In addition to this the danger and folly of Ephraim in protracting repentance, in the midst of the afflictive circumstances in which he was placed, is fitly compared to the extremely critical condition of a child on the point of being born, but, owing to the want of strength on the part of the mother, or other causes, is detained in its passage from the womb. The LXX. ὄστρος δὲ υἱός σου ἐφρόνιμος has doubtless originally been ὄστρος δὲ υἱός οὐ φρόνιμος. כִּי introduces the contrary of the preceding proposition, and is used elliptically for the sentence, "For if it were not so," etc. It may best be rendered into English by otherwise, else, or the like. זֶמַן, time, is here to be taken adverbially, in the sense of for a time, long, etc. Winer, aliquod tempus, aliquamdiu. Comp. the Arab. زمن, when used in opposition to وقت, os uteri. Comp. 2 Kings xix. 3 ; Is. xxxvi. 3, lxvi. 9. Without a national παλιγγενεσία, no prosperity could be expected. It was for the Israelites by true repentance to accelerate and ensure their deliverance from threatened destruction, and their enjoyment of a new period of peace and happiness.

14. The ideas of Sheol and Death were naturally suggested by the perilous circumstances described in the preceding verse. Extinction as a people is there apprehended. Here it is viewed as having already taken place ; and a gracious promise is given of the restoration of the Israelites, and the complete destruction of the enemies by whom they had been carried into captivity. מִיָּד, from the hand, a common Hebraism for from the power. הִפָּדוּ properly signifies to redeem, or buy loose, by the payment of a price ; נָקַם, to avenge the murder of a relative, and also to recover or redeem property by repayment. Both verbs, however, are used in a more extended signification, and especially in reference to the deliverance of the Hebrews from Egypt, and from the captivity in Babylon. That שְׁאוֹל, Sheol, and מוֹת, Death, are here to be taken in a figurative sense, with application to the state of the Israelites in the Assyrian and Babylonish captivity, deprived as they were of all political existence, and subject to the most grievous calamities, the exigency of the passage imperatively demands. Comp. Is. xxvi. 19. Respecting  $\text{הָרָג}$  interpreters are far from being agreed. Symm. the Vulg. Coverdale, Drusius, Tingstadius, Horsley, Dathe, Kuinoel, De Wette, Noyes, Rosenmüller, Hesselberg, and Maurer, take it to be the first person future of the substantive verb  $\text{הָרָה}$ , to be; whereas the LXX. Aq. the fifth edition, (Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 55,) Syr. Arab. Abulwalid, Tanchum, Junius and Tremellius, Mercer, Newcome, Boothroyd, Ewald, and Hitzig, consider it to be used as in ver. 10, for  $\text{הָרָה נַפְשִׁי}$ , where? With the latter authorities I concur, partly on the ground that it is not likely the prophet would employ the same word in the same form in two different acceptations in verses 10 and 14; and partly because I find  $\text{הָרָה}$  nowhere used absolutely as an apocopated future; but always with the Vau conversive prefixed. See for the full form  $\text{הָרָה־נַפְשִׁי}$ , chap. xiv. 6. To which add, that the interrogation is more in keeping with the animated style of the passage. Instead of the plural  $\text{הָרָה־נַפְשִׁי}$ , thy destructions, one hundred and twenty-two MSS. originally five more, now two, and four of the early editions read  $\text{הָרָה־נַפְשִׁי}$ , thy destruction in the singular.  $\text{הָרָה־נַפְשִׁי}$ , Arab.  $\text{موت}$ , death; specially the plague, pestilence; the awful destruction of human life effected by it. Hence the LXX. mostly render it  $\text{θανάτος}$ ; here  $\text{δίκη}$ , but in all probability originally  $\text{νίκη}$ , for which Paul reads  $\text{νίκος}$ , only transposing  $\text{νίκος}$  and  $\text{κέντρον}$ , by which latter term the LXX. render  $\text{קָטַב}$ , excision, cutting off, destruction. The cause of this transposition is obvious. The apostle had just quoted the passage in Isaiah, agreeably to the version of Theodotion, in which  $\text{νίκος}$  occurs, whereby he was reminded of the same words as occurring in Hosea, and, under the influence of strong emotion, he commences his quotation with  $\text{νίκος}$  prominently in his mind. Olshausen thinks  $\text{νίκος}$  is a later form for  $\text{νίκη}$ .

Where is thy destruction, O Death?

Where is thine excision, O Sheol?

Repentance is hid from mine eyes.

Root  $\text{קָטַב}$ , Arab.  $\text{قطب}$ , to cut, cut off, destroy. That  $\text{הָרָה}$  is the genuine reading, and that  $\text{הָרָה־בָּקָר}$ , a goad, which some would substitute for it, in order to make the Hebrew correspond to  $\text{κέντρον}$ , is to be rejected, may very conclusively be gathered from the similar occurrence of the words  $\text{הָרָה}$  and  $\text{קָטַב}$  together, Ps. xci. 6. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 24. The import of this animated apostrophe, as used both by Jehovah in the prophet, and by the apostle, is, Where are now the effects of the destructive influence which you have exerted? Your victims are recovered from your dominion: they are alive again, and shall no more be subject to your power. The speakers place themselves as it were in the period after the resurrection: the former in that after the restoration from Babylon; the other in that after the literal restoration of the dead to life at the last day. Both look back, and triumphantly exult over the conquerors. With respect to the appropriation of the words by the apostle in reference to the doctrine of the final resurrection, it appears to be made, not in the way of proof, but merely to give expression, in the triumphant language of the prophet, to the animated feelings which had taken possession of his breast. His direct quotation in the way of argument is made from Is. xxv. 8, and consists of the words  $\text{κατεπόθη ὁ θάνατος εἰς νίκος}$ . It would, therefore, be improper to identify the subject of which he treats with that treated of by our prophet. "Neque enim ex professo semper locos adducunt apostoli, qui toto contextu ad institutum quod tractant pertinent: sed interdum alludunt ad unum verbum duntaxat, aliquando aptant locum ad sententiam per similitudinem, aliquando abhibent testimonia. — Atqui satis constat, Paulum illo 15 cap. 1 ad Corinth non citasse prophetæ testimonia ad confirmandum illam doctrinam de qua disserit." Calvin in loc. See also Horsley's critical note.  $\text{נִינִי}$ , LXX.  $\text{παράκλησις}$ ,

- 15 Though he be fruitful among his brethren,
 Yet an east wind, a wind of Jehovah,
 Shall come up from the desert,
 And dry up his fountain;
 And his spring shall become dry:
 He shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels.
- 16 Samaria shall be punished,
 Because she hath rebelled against her God:
 They shall fall by the sword;
 Their infants shall be dashed in pieces,
 And their pregnant women shall be ripped up.

Syr. <sup>pp</sup> ܘܫܘܠܐ, Vulg. consolatio; but repentance better suits the connection. It expresses the immutability of the divine purpose, which had the deliverance of his people for its object. Comp. Rom. xi. 29. Horsley strangely refers the repentance to man, and not to God.

15. This and the following verse set forth the devastation and destruction of the kingdom of the ten tribes, which was to precede the deliverance promised in that which precedes. While the promise was designed to afford consolation to the pious, and encouragement to the penitent, the threatening was equally necessary for the refractory and profane. הוּא, he, refers to Ephraim, ver. 12. וְפִרְיָהּ an ἀπαξ λεγ. but obviously equivalent to וְפִרְיָהּ, the Hiphil of פָּרַח, to be fruitful. It is here used with special reference to the name of פָּרַח, being the root whence it is derived, and not improbably exhibits א instead of ה, because it forms the first letter of the noun. The tribe of Ephraim was the most numerous in regard to population, and was for a time in the most flourishing circumstances. That such is the signification of the verb, and that it is not to be rendered divide or separate, as in the ancient and several of the modern versions, nor act like a wild ass, which others exhibit, appears from the mention of a spring and a fountain, which naturally suggests the idea of a tree, the roots of which are plentifully supplied by their water. For וְפִרְיָהּ, see on chap. xii. 2, and Is. xxvii. 8. וְפִרְיָהּ, like וְפִרְיָהּ אֶל־אֲשֵׁר, Job. i. 19, is the genitive of cause, a wind caused, sent by or proceeding from Jehovah; not "a great wind," as some interpret. The Assyrian army is meant. וְהוּא, He, i. e. the Assyrian, couched under the metaphor of the destructive wind, shall plunder every valuable article belonging to the Israelites.

16. [Chap. xiv. 1.] This verse begins the following chapter in the Hebrew Bible, but it more intimately coheres with the preceding context. וְהוּא, LXX. ἀφανισθήσεται, Vulg. pereat. The word signifies to be guilty of crime, and to be treated as guilty, to suffer punishment, be punished. Samaria as the metropolis, and the source of all the calamities which were coming upon the Israelites, is put as representing the whole nation; but not to the exclusion of the peculiarly severe punishment which the inhabitants of that city had to expect. וְהוּא, some render to embitter, provoke bitterly; but rebellious, resisting, striking against any one, are the ideas more properly conveyed by the verb. Thus the LXX. ἀντίστη πρὸς τὸν θεὸν αὐτῆς. The addition of the affix in וְהוּא, "her God," gives great emphasis in such connection. Comp. chap. xii. 10, xiii. 4. The aggravations of sin are increased by the relations sustained by the sinner. For the concluding portion of the verse, comp. 2 Kings viii. 12, xv. 16; Amos i. 13. That such cruelties were not unknown among other nations, see Iliad vi. 58; —

— *μηδ' ὄντινα γαστέρι μήτηρ
 Κούρον ἔοντα φέροι, μηδ' ὅς φόγοι;* — and Horace, Carm. iv. Ode 6. The construction יהוה יהוהי יבקרני is ad sensum, though not according to the strict rule of grammar, and may have been occasioned by the form of יבקרני immediately preceding.

CHAPTER XIV.

This chapter contains an urgent call to repentance, the supplication and confession expressive of which are put in a set form of words into the mouths of the penitents, 1—3. To encourage them thus to return to God, he makes the most gracious promises to them, 4—7; their entire abandonment of idolatry is then predicted, and the divine condescension and goodness are announced, 8; and the whole concludes with a solemn declaration, on the part of the prophet, respecting the opposite consequences that would result from attention or inattention to his message.

RETURN, O Israel! to Jehovah thy God:

For thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.

2 Take with you words, and return to Jehovah;

Say to him,

Forgive all iniquity, and graciously receive us,

Then we will render to thee the calves of our lips.

1, 2. The ה of direction in the imperative שׁיבֵה is, as usual, intensive, marking a strong desire on the part of the speaker that the action expressed by the verb might take place. For the emphasis attaching to the affix in יהוהי, “thy God,” see on chap. xii. 16. נָשָׂא עֵינַי is a phrase of such frequent occurrence with the meaning to pardon iniquity, that it is surprising how Horsley could insist upon its meaning to “take away the sinful principle within us — the carnal heart of the old Adam.” His construction of קָח טוֹב, “accept as good, what, so regenerate, we shall be enabled to perform,” though sound divinity, is equally indefensible on the ground of philology. טוֹב is used adverbially, benigne, in bonam partem; and the meaning is, graciously receive us back into thy favor. With respect to the interposition of the verb תִּשָּׂא, between כֹּל and עֵינַי, it may be observed, that it is not a solitary instance of such construction. See on Is. xix. 8, and comp. Job xv. 10.

פָּרִים, calves or bullocks, used here metaphorically for victims, sacrifices. The word occurring in the absolute form, some render שְׁפָתֵינוּ בָּרִים, bullocks our lips, as if the two nouns were in apposition; but there are instances of nouns thus put, which cannot be explained otherwise than in the construct, as to sense. Thus Deut. xxxiii. 11, מִזְבְּחֵם, the loins of those who oppose him; Jud. v. 13, אֲדִירִים עַם, the princes of the people; Prov. xxii. 21, אֲמָרִים אֱמֶת, words of truth. Gesenius supposes the governing noun to be mentally repeated, and that the full form would be בָּרִים בָּרִים, bullocks, the bullocks of our lips. Such construction in full he adduces in the instance Exod. xxxviii. 21, הַמִּזְבֵּחַ מִשְׁכַּן מִשְׁכַּן הָעֵדוּת, the tabernacle of testimony. Some would change בָּרִים into פְּרִי, fruit, on the ground of the reading found in the LXX. ἀνταποδοῦμεν καρπὸν χειλέων ἡμῶν, which is followed by the Syr. and Arab. and is supposed to have been borrowed by the apostle,

- 3 Assyria shall not save us ;
 We will not ride upon horses ;
 Neither will we say any more, " Our gods,"
 To the work of our hands :
 For by thee the destitute is pitied.
- 4 I will heal their apostasy ;
 I will love them freely ;
 For my anger is turned away from them.
- 5 I will be as the dew to Israel ;

Heb. xiii. 15. There is, however, no variety in the Hebrew MSS. ; while the Targum and all the other authorities support the textual reading. The LXX. have committed a similar mistake in rendering הַרְרִיָּה, her bullocks, τοὺς κερπὸὺς ἀβρῆς, her fruits, Jer. 1. 27. The conjecture of Poccoke, that they used κερπὸς in the sense of κερπώμα, which they employ to express SACRIFICE, oblation, etc., is less probable. See the important note of Horsley. The prophet's meaning is, We will render, in grateful return for thy forgiving and restoring mercy, the only sacrifices worthy of it — our tribute of thanksgiving and praise. For such use of שָׁבַע, to requite, render back, comp. Ps. lvi. 12, אֶשְׁבַּע תִּירְוִית לְךָ, I will render thanks unto thee : so that the construction proposed by some, " we will offer the sacrifices which our lips have vowed," cannot be regarded as unexceptionable, even if it were in keeping with the spirit of the passage. The only parallels fully corresponding to it are Ps. li. 15–17, lxix. 31, 32.

3. Three of the sins to which the ten tribes were specially prone are here implied: dependence upon the aid of the Assyrians; application to Egypt for horses in direct violation of the divine command, Deut. xvii. 16; Is. xxxi. 1; and idolatry. These they now forever renounce, and avow their determination henceforth to trust in Jehovah alone; adding as the reason of such determination, the experience which they had had of the divine favor in time of need. אֲשֶׁר is here used in a causal sense, because for, forasmuch as. Comp. Gen. xxxi. 29; Eccles. iv. 9. יָתֵם, orphan is applied in this place metaphorically to the unprotected and destitute circumstances in which the Israelites had been, while in a state of separation from the Lord.

4. מִשְׁבַּחָם is not, with Horsley, to be rendered "their conversion," but their apostasy. See on chap. xi. 7. נְדָבָה, lit. spontaneousness, willingness, is used adverbially for willingly, liberally, freely. It is derived from נָדַב, Arab. نَدَب, instigavit, impulit, ad aliquid; agilis in conficienda re promptusque vir; generosus; and is expressive of the free, unmerited, and abundant love of God towards repentant sinners. מִמֶּנִּי, "from him," i. e. Israel, the collective noun, ver. 2, resolved by the Syr. Lat. and other translators into a plural.

5, 6. The love of God to his people, and its effects in their happy experience, are here couched in similes borrowed from the vegetable kingdom. The dew is very copious in the East, and, by its refreshing and quickening virtue, supplies the place of more frequent rains in other countries. Kimchi thinks that the constancy with which the dew falls is the point here more specially referred to, and to which the divine blessing is compared. שִׁשְׁבִּינִי, lilies, abound in Palestine, even apart from cultivation. There are two kinds; the common lily, which is perfectly white, consisting of six leaves, opening like bells; and what the Syrians call , the royal lily, the stem of which is about the size of a finger in thickness, and which grows to the height of three and four feet, spreading its flowers in the most beautiful and engaging manner. Comp. Matt. vi. 29. To these productions the moral beauty of regenerated Israel is very aptly com-

- He shall blossom as the lily,
 And strike his roots like Lebanon.
- 6 His suckers shall spread forth,
 And his beauty shall be as the olive tree,
 And his fragrance as Lebanon.
- 7 They that dwell under his shade shall revive as the corn,
 And shoot forth as the vine:
 Their fame shall be as the wine of Lebanon.
- 8 Ephraim shall say,
 What have I any more to do with idols?

pared. For Lebanon, see on Is. x. 34. The mountain stands here by metonymy for the trees which grow upon it, such as the celebrated cedars, whose roots striking far in depth and length into the ground, give them a firmness which no storms can shake. The ideas of strength and stability are those conveyed by the simile, whether we refer the roots to the trees, or, metaphorically, to the mountain itself; but the amplification in the following verse renders the former the preferable construction. הַיָּבֵן is often used, not merely of continued, but of increased action, and here denotes to spread out as the suckers or small branches of trees. The olive is frequently referred to, on account of its beautiful green, and the pleasing ideas associated with its produce. Though the former only is expressed, yet the idea of fragrance is implied, only it is with the strictest propriety extended in the following clause to the whole of Lebanon, on account of the number of odoriferous trees and plants with which it abounds. In these verses, the rendering frankincense, which Newcome prefers to Lebanon, is not to be admitted. The stability, extension, glory, and loveliness of the church of God are forcibly set forth.

7. The Israelites are represented as again enjoying the protection of the Most High, and affording the most convincing proofs of prosperity. שָׁבַע is used as auxiliary to הָיָה; both verbs, in such connection, signifying nothing more than revive, thrive again, or the like. The pronominal affix in בְּצֵלֶי, his shade, refers to Jehovah; but in וְהָיָה, his celebrity, fame, to Israel, understood, as before, collectively, but best rendered in the plural. יִשְׁבְּעוּ בְּצֵלֶי, the construct with the preposition, as in הוֹדִי בּוֹ, Ps. ii. 12. Modern travellers concur in their high commendations of the excellence of the wines of Lebanon. Von Troil, in particular, says, "On this mountain are very valuable vineyards, in which the most excellent wine is produced; such as I have never drunk in any country, though in the course of fourteen years I have travelled through many, and tasted many good wines."

8. Several interpreters take אֲפַרְיָם to be in the vocative sense, but, as it seems harsh to refer the words immediately following to Jehovah, it is better to regard it as a nominative absolute, and to supply אֲפַרְיָם thus:—As for Ephraim—the tribe distinguished above all the rest for its addictedness to idolatry, and the fit representative of the whole people—his language in future shall be, etc. For לִי, to me, the LXX. read לְהִי, to him, which facilitates the construction, and is adopted by Ewald, but without sufficient authority. אֲנִי, I, is not without emphasis in this connection, in which mention is made of idols. שָׁבַע signifies to view with regard and care, care for, watch over. Every provision should henceforth be made for the protection and prosperity of restored Israel. בְּרֹוֹשׁ, the cypress, with all its tall and fair ever-green appearance, not being a fruit-bearing tree, it is added with singular effect, that in this respect there existed a difference between the object and the subject of the metaphor. The children of Israel should not only enjoy protection and refreshment as the result of the divine favor, but rich

I have answered him, and will regard him;
 I am like a green cypress;
 From me thy fruit is found.

- 9 Who is wise, that he may understand these things;
 Prudent, that he may know them?
 For the ways of Jehovah are right;
 The righteous shall walk in them;
 But the rebellious shall stumble in them.

supplies of spiritual provision for their support. Such supplies were to be found in God alone. Manger thinks there is here a dialogistic parallelism, which he exhibits thus:—

EPHRAIM. What have I further to do with idols?

GOD. I have answered him, and will regard him.

EPHRAIM. I am like a green cypress.

GOD. From me is thy fruit found.

9. These words form an epilogue or conclusion to the whole book. The interrogation is employed for the purpose of excitement and to give energy to the truths conveyed. It is worthy of remark that this is the only verse in which the prophet uses צדקתם, the righteous, or any synonymous term, in the course of his recorded prophecies. So awfully depraved were the times in which he lived, that the very character had disappeared. The contrasted characters and states of the godly and the wicked are pointed and affecting. הלכתם, to walk, signifies here to go forward prosperously; לפניך, to stumble, so as to fall to one's injury and utter ruin.

“— anfractu et liberam ab omni
 Hanc justus teret, hoc semper se in calle tenebit,
 Felicique gradu ad requiem contendat
 amicam.
 At defectores videas impingere in iisdem,
 Exitiumque sibi factis properare scelestis.”
 — Rittershusius.

JOEL.

---

PREFACE.

WE possess no further knowledge of Joel than what is furnished by the title of his book, or may be gathered from circumstances incidentally mentioned in it. That he lived in Judah, and, in all probability, at Jerusalem, we may infer from his not making the most distant reference to the kingdom of Israel; while, on the other hand, he speaks of Jerusalem, the temple, priests, ceremonies, etc. with a familiarity which proves them to have been before his eyes.

With respect to the age in which he flourished, opinions have differed. Bauer places him in the reign of Jehoshaphat; Credner, Winer, Krahmer, and Ewald, think he lived in that of Joash; Vitranga, Carpzov, Moldenhauer, Eichhorn, Holzhausen, Theiner, Rosenmüller, Knobel, Hengstenberg, Gesenius, and De Wette, in that of Uzziah; Steudel and Bertholdt in that of Hezekiah; Tarnovius and Eckermann assign the period of his activity to the days of Josiah; while the author of Sedar Olam, Jarchi, Drusius, Newcome, and Jahn, are of opinion that he prophesied in the reign of Manasseh. The most probable hypothesis is, that his predictions were delivered in the early days of Joash; that is, according to Credner, B. C. 870 — 865. No reference being made to the Babylonian, the Assyrian, or even the Syrian invasion, and the only enemies of whom mention is made being the Phœnicians, Philistines, Edomites, and Egyptians, it seems evident that Joel was unacquainted with any but the latter. Had he lived after the death of Joash, he could scarcely have omitted to notice the Syrians when speaking of hostile powers, since they not only invaded the land, but took Jerusalem, destroyed the princes, and carried away immense spoil to Damascus, 2 Chron. xxiv. 23, 24. The state of religious affairs as presented to view in the book is altogether in favor of this position. No mention is made of idolatrous practices; while, on the contrary, notwithstanding the guilt which attached to the Jews, on account of which Jehovah brought judgments upon the land, the principles of the theocracy are supposed to be maintained; the priests and people are represented as being harmoniously occupied with the services of religion; and Jerusalem, the temple and its worship, appear in a flourishing condition. Now this was precisely the state of things during the high-priesthood of Jehoiada, through whose influence Joash had been placed upon the throne. See 2 Kings xi. 17, 18, xii. 2-16; 2 Chron. xxiv. 4-14. It will follow that Joel is the oldest of all the Hebrew prophets whose predictions have come down to us.

The delivery of his prophecy was occasioned by the devastations produced by successive swarms of locusts, and by an excessive drought which pervaded the country, and threatened the inhabitants with utter destruction. This calamity, however, was merely symbolical of another, and a more dreadful scourge — the invasion of the land by foreign enemies, on which the prophet expatiates in the second chapter. In order that such calamity might be removed, he is commissioned to order an universal fast, and call all to repentance and humiliation before God; to announce as consequent upon such repentance and humiliation, a period of great temporal prosperity; to predict the effusion of the Holy Spirit at a future period of the history of his people; to denounce judgments against their enemies; and to foretell their restoration from the final dispersion.

In point of style Joel stands preëminent among the Hebrew prophets. He not only possesses a singular degree of purity, but is distinguished by his smoothness and fluency; the animated and rapid character of his rhythmus; the perfect regularity of his parallelisms; and the degree of roundness which he gives to his sentences. He has no abrupt transitions, is everywhere connected, and finishes whatever he takes up. In description he is graphic and perspicuous; in arrangement lucid; in imagery original, copious, and varied. In the judgment of Knobel, he most resembles Amos in regularity, Nahum in animation, and in both respects Habakkuk; but is surpassed by none of them. That what we now possess is all he ever wrote, is in the highest degree improbable: on the contrary, we should conclude from the cultivated character of his language, that he had been accustomed to composition long before he penned these discourses. Whatever degree of obscurity attaches to his book, is attributable to our ignorance of the subjects of which it treats, not to the language which he employs.

CHAPTER I.

After summoning attention to the unexampled plague of locusts with which the country had been visited, 2—4, the prophet excites to repentance by a description of these insects, 5—7, and of the damage which they had done to the fields and trees, 8—12; calls the priests to institute a solemn season for fasting and prayer, 13, 14; and bewails, by anticipation, a more awful visitation from Jehovah, 15, while he further describes the tremendous effects of the calamity under which the country was suffering, 16—20.

- 1 THE word of Jehovah which was communicated to Joel, the son of Pethuel:
- 2 Hear this, ye aged men!
Give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land!
Did such as this happen in your days,
Or, in the days of your fathers?
- 3 Tell your children of it,
And let your children tell their children,
And their children another generation.

1. לֵאמֹר הַיְהוָה אֲמַר הַיְהוָה אֲמַר הַיְהוָה, the usual introductory formula employed to express the communication of divine revelations to the prophets, or the divinely inspired matter which they were commissioned to teach. Comp. Hos. i. 1; Mic. i. 1; Zeph. i. 1; Mal. i. 1. The name יוֹאֵל, Joel, Jerome interprets ἀρχόμενος, id est incipiens, referring it to the verb יָאֵל, which signifies to begin; but that he was not ignorant of another derivation is evident from his commentary, in which, after giving incipiens, he adds, vel est Deus. It is, however, beyond all doubt compounded of הַיְהוָה, in one of its more contracted forms, and אֵל, and signifies, Jehovah is God. Who אֲבִי פֶתוּעַל, LXX. Βαδουήλ, Pethuel, the father of our prophet was, we are not informed. The introduction of his name was necessary in order to distinguish the present Joel from others of the same name, and cannot be admitted in proof of his having been a prophet or some person of eminence. It was common among the Hebrews, as it still is among the Orientals, to add the name of the father to that of the son.

2, 3. These verses contain an animated introduction to the following subject. הַיְהוָה, properly this, the feminine according to the Hebrew idiom being used for the neuter, but it occurs here elliptically for הַיְהוָה, like this, such, the like, and refers to the astounding calamity of the locusts about to be described. אֲמַר and אֲמַרְיָ frequently occur as parallel initiatives in Hebrew poetry. See Gen. iv. 23; Deut. xxxii. 1; Is. i. 2. For the latter verb, אֲמַרְיָ is sometimes used. See Is. xxviii. 23; Mic. i. 2. זְקֵנִים is here to be understood, not in the official sense of elders, but in that of aged men, as the connection shows. Those who were most advanced in years, and might be expected to have their memories stored with ancient occurrences, are appealed to for a parallel to the case referred to. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 7; Job. xxxii. 7. הַיְהוָה is often used in the sense of ancestors, forefathers. הַיְהוָה in הַיְהוָה, like אֲמַר, refers to the plague of locusts. הַיְהוָה בְּנֵי בְנֵי, children's children, is not unfrequency, but the language here employed by Joel is cumulative beyond example.

“Et nati natorum, et qui nascentur

4 That which the gnawing locust hath left,
The swarming locust hath devoured:
And that which the swarming locust hath left,

ab illis."

Æneid iii. 98.
καὶ παῖδες παίδων, τοὶ κεν μετόπισθε
γένονται. Iliad, xx. 308.

4. The plague, which occasioned the following discourses of the prophet, is now described in terse, though repetitious terms. This verse may be considered as the text on which he afterwards expatiates. Interpreters have found great difficulty both in determining the precise signification of the several terms employed to describe the scourge, and the light in which it was designed to be understood. While some are of opinion that different kinds of insects are meant, most are agreed in considering locusts to be intended. Yet here again discordant views obtain: some insisting on different species of locusts, and others on different states of the same species. Credner, for instance, in a work on our prophet, full of erudition, considers  $\text{זָמַח}$  to be the migratory locust;  $\text{צִמְצִימָה}$  the young brood;  $\text{זָמַחַת}$  the young locust in the last state of transformation; and  $\text{זָמַחַת}$  the perfect locust. The locust belongs to the genus of insects known among entomologists by the name of grylli, which includes the different species, from the common grasshopper to the devouring locust of the East. The largest of the latter is about three inches in length; has two antennæ, or horns, about an inch long, and two wings, which, with their cases, are applied obliquely to the sides of the body when in repose. The feet have only three joints, but are six in number. The two hind ones are much larger than the rest, and are formed for leaping. The locusts are of different colors, brown, gray and spotted. In all stages, from the larvæ to the perfect insect, the locusts are herbivorous, and do immense injury to vegetation. The subject so far as it occurs in Scripture, may be said to have been almost exhausted by the learned Bochart, in his Hierozoi-con, Pars Post. Lib. iv. cap. i. — viii. The fourth chapter he specially devotes to the explanation of the passages in

Joel. See also OEdmann's Vermischte Sammlungen, and Credner's Joel. The first name,  $\text{זָמַח}$ , occurs only here and Amos iv. 9, and is rendered by the LXX. κάμπη; and by the Vulg. eruca, caterpillar. This interpretation is supported by the Targ.  $\text{זָמַחַת}$ , the crawling insect, by which, however, may be meant the locust in its wingless state. The Syr.

renders the word by  $\text{ܡܘܨܡܐ}$ , locusta non alata. It is evidently derived from the same root with the Arab.  $\text{حزم}$ , res-ecuit, amputavit,  $\text{حازم}$ , secans; Eth.

$\text{גחח}$ : excidit, abscondit; Syr.  $\text{ܕܚܚܐ}$  incidit; Talmud.  $\text{זָמַח}$ , amputavit; and expresses the gnawing or cutting action of the sharp teeth of the locusts on the leaves, and even the bark of trees. Comp. Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. ii. cap. 29: omnia vero morsu erodentes.  $\text{זָמַח}$  is the generic name of the locust, so called from the almost incredible numbers which breed in different parts of the East; being derived from  $\text{רבה}$ , to multiply, be numerous, etc. Comp. Jer. xlvi. 23, רבו מִצְמִימָה, more numerous than the locusts. From its migrating in swarms it is called by Forskäl gryllus gregarius, and by Lin-næus, gryllus migratorius. By the LXX. the word is rendered seventeen times by  $\text{ἀκρίς}$ , the common locust; thrice by  $\text{βροῦχος}$ , the unwinged locust, which browses on the grass; once by  $\text{ἐρσιβη}$ , mildew; and once by  $\text{ἀτέλαβος}$ , the young or small locust. That  $\text{זָמַח}$  is generic, appears from Lev. xi. 22, where we read,  $\text{הַזָּמַח לְמִינֵהוּ}$ , the locust according to its species. The third name,  $\text{זָמַחַת}$ , from  $\text{לָחַץ}$ , equivalent to  $\text{לָחַץ}$ , to lick, designates the locust as licking off the leaves, and whatever is green on the trees, grass, etc. This derivation is preferable to that proposed by Michaelis, who refers the word to the Arab.  $\text{ولق}$ , properavit, volubilis fruit, or يلق, albus fruit, and thinks that the chafer is meant. In Nah. iii. 16, it is represented as winged, and in Jer. li. 27, it is described as rough, bristly, terrific. LXX. βροῦχος four times; ἀκρῆς thrice. לִקְחָהוּ, the remaining term comes from לָקַח, to consume, devour. LXX. βροῦχος, or βροῦκος.

The licking locust hath devoured;
 And that which the licking locust hath left,
 The consuming locust hath devoured.

Vulg. rubigo, mildew. Syr. ܠܘܩܝܢܐ, which Risius, the Archbishop of Damascus, describes as resembling the locust, only differing from it, inasmuch as it never migrates, and confines its ravages to the fruits and herbs, but leaves the trees untouched. It is also noted for the noise which it makes at night. A comparison of the different passages in which these names occur, renders it more than probable that they are here employed by the prophet, not with any reference to the species into which the locusts may be scientifically divided, but to designate four successive swarms, according to certain destructive qualities, by which, as a genus of insects, they are distinguished, and thereby to heighten the terror which his description was intended to produce. Just as Job accumulates the terms אֲרָבָה, שָׂחָל, בְּסִירִים, לִישׁ, לְבַיָּא, chap. iv. 10, 11, with a similar view. They are rather poetical synonymes, than distinctive of different species. At all events, that locusts are meant, may be inferred from the facts, that wherever לִקְחָהוּ occurs, with the exception of a single passage, it occurs along with אֲרָבָה; and that אֲרָבָה, which Moses uses in describing one of the plagues of Egypt, Exod. x. 10-20, is not only employed by the Psalmist, lxxviii. 46, cv. 34, but also לִקְחָהוּ and לִקְחָהוּ, as synonymous terms, for the sake of variety. Add to which that the verb לָקַח from which לִקְחָהוּ is derived, is employed to express the action of the אֲרָבָה, Deut. xxviii. 38, יִקְחָהוּ אֶת הָאָרֶץ, "the locust shall consume it." In the translation I have given the meaning of the several names in terms expressive of the qualities suggested by each. The passage might otherwise be rendered with Noyes:—

"That which one swarm of locusts left,
 a second swarm hath eaten;
 And that which the second left, a third
 swarm hath eaten;
 And that which the third left, a fourth
 swarm hath eaten."

It is a question of greater importance: Are the statements of Joel in the first and second chapters to be understood literally of these insects, or figuratively of enemies that were to invade and lay waste the Holy Land? The latter is the more ancient opinion. It is that of the Targum, the Jews whom Jerome consulted, and Abarbanel; and is, with various modifications, adopted by the following christian interpreters: Jerome, Ephraim Syrus, Theodoret, Cyril of Alexandria, Hugo de St. Vincent, Ribera, Sanchez, a Lapide, Luther, Grotius, Markius, Bertholdt, Theiner, Steudel, and Hengstenberg. On the other hand, Abenezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, Lyranus, Vatablus, Joh. Schmidius, Jahn, Eichhorn, Rosenmüller, von Coelln, Justi, Credner, and Hitzig, maintain that the language is to be understood literally of locusts. This interpretation has certainly much in its favor, and if it could without violence be applied throughout, might fairly be adopted. But the announcement of a second and more awful judgment, chap. i. 15, ii. 1, 2; the distinct recognition of a foreign rule, ii. 17; and the assignment of the North as the native country of the enemy, ii. 20; present insuperable obstacles to its adoption. See on these verses. There seems no possibility of effecting a consistent interpretation on any other principle than that laid down and defended by Cramer, Eckermann, and Holzhausen, viz: that in the first chapter, Joel describes a devastation of the country which had been effected by natural locusts; but predicts in the second its devastation by

- 5 Awake, ye drunkards! and weep;
Howl, all ye drinkers of wine!
On account of the sweet wine,
For it is made to cease from your mouth.
- 6 For a nation hath come up upon my land, Mighty and innumerable;
Their teeth are the teeth of a lion;
They have the grinders of a lioness.

political enemies, in highly-wrought metaphorical language, borrowed from the scene which he had just depicted.

5. הִקְיץ the Hiph. of קִיץ, is here used, like the cognate root קָיַץ, Gen. ix. 24, in the sense of awaking from a sleep occasioned by wine. Since, however, the persons addressed had been deprived of the means of intoxication, the prophet is rather to be understood as borrowing the term from the state in which they had too often been found. שְׂכוּרִים being parallel with יִיךְ, שְׂתִי, drinkers of wine, does not here mean persons actually intoxicated, but such as were in the habit of using intoxicating liquors, and by implication, to excess. Thus Kimchi: אֲתֵם הַרְגַלְתֶּם לְהִשְׁתַּכֵּר בַּיַּיִן, ye who are accustomed to make yourselves drunk with wine. It is derived from שָׁבַר, to drink to the full. Arab. سكر, implevit, vas, ebrius fuit. Hence שְׂבַר, strong, or intoxicating drink, whether wine itself, or, more commonly, liquor resembling wine, which is distilled from barley, honey, or dates, and sometimes mingled with spices, By עֲשֵׂים, is meant the fresh wine, or juice of the grape, or other fruit, which has just been pressed out, and is remarkable for its sweet flavor, and its freedom from intoxicating qualities. R. עֲשֵׂים, to tread, tread down, or out. Targ. הַבְּמָר, pure wine. It differs from הַיַּיִן, inasmuch as the latter term is confined to the juice of the grape; and being derived from נָרַשׁ, to take possession of, indicates that however new, it had already obtained an inebriating quality. The locusts are here represented as specially attacking and destroying the vines and other fruit-trees, from the produce of which these wines were prepared. To such they are known to be very destructive. Comp. Theocrit. Idyll. 5, 108, in which a shepherd beseeches them not to injure his vines:

Ἀκρίδες, ἄς τὸν φραγμὸν ὑπερπεδῆτε τὸν ἄμῶν,
Μή μιν λωβάσεσθε τὰς ἀμπέλας· ἐντὶ γὰρ ἕβαι.

כָּרַר properly signifies to cut, cut off, but here, as wine is the subject spoken of, it must be taken in the sense of destroying, or causing to cease.

6. גֹּיִם, nation, especially used of foreign, barbarous and profane nations, and here selected on purpose to express the number and hostility of the locusts, and at the same time to prepare the minds of the Jews for the allegorical use made of these insects in chap. ii. If it had not been for some such end, the prophet might have adopted the term עַם, people, which Solomon applies to the ants, Prov. xxx. 25, 26, and which would equally have conveyed the idea of multitude. Comp. chap. ii. 2. This metaphorical use of the term is common in the classics. See instances in Bochart and Gesen. Heb. Lex. in voc. גֹּיִם. The Arabs employ أمة in a similar way. עֲלֵה עַל is used in a hostile sense of an army, Is. vii. 1; but here figuratively of the locusts. In אֶרְצִי, "my land," the pronominal affix belongs to Jehovah, not to the prophet. Comp. Is. xiv. 25; Jer. xvi. 18; Ezek. xxxvi. 5, xxxviii. 16. Joel ii. 18. עֲצִיִּים, strong, powerful. The strength of the locust consists in the immense numbers, which, forming themselves into compact bodies, darken the air, and advance forward, one swarm after another, attacking whatever comes in their way. They may well be described as גֹּאֲזֵי מְסַפְּרִים, innu-

7 They have laid waste my vine,
 And broken down my fig-tree;
 They have completely stripped it, and thrown it down;
 Its branches they have left white.

merable. All who refer to them, both in ancient and modern times, speak of them in the same language.

Ἀκριδῶν πληθὸς ἀμύθητον.
Agatharc. v. 27.

“Immense locustarum multitudines.” Orosius, v. 11. Shaw speaks of “infinite swarms following each other,” Barrow states that those which he saw in South Africa, might literally be said to cover the ground for an area of 2000 square miles. A later writer in the Cape Town Gazette, describes a cloud of them as passing before him in a train of many millions thick, and about an hour in length; and mentions further that, though millions perished in consequence of attempts made to destroy them, their number appeared nothing decreased. And Dr. Bowring states in his Report, that some years ago the army of Ibrahim Pasha, in the attempt to extirpate an immense swarm, gathered up no less than 65,000 ardebs, equal to 325,000 bushels of English measure! How appropriate the name אַרְבֵּב! What is innumerable is frequently compared to them by the sacred writers. See Jud. vi. 5, vii. 12; Ps. cv. 34; Jer. xlvi. 23; Nah. iii. 15. תִּשְׁבְּתֵי, teeth, Gesenius considers as standing by transposition for תִּשְׁבְּתֵי, and derives the noun from an obsolete root תִּשְׁבַּח, to bite; but it may more properly be referred to the Arab. تلع, longum fruit, and denotes the grinders or jaw-teeth of animals. The metaphor, however, has no respect to the size of the teeth of lions, but only to the terrible and complete destruction which they effect. Pliny, speaking of the locust, says:—“Omnia morsu erodentes et fores quoque tectorum.” According to Fabricius, in his Genera Insectorum, p. 96, the teeth of the locust are three-forked and sharp. The same metaphor is used Rev. ix. 8, ὀδόντες αὐτῶν ὡς λεόντων ἦσαν.

7. For the pronominal reference in יָצַד and יָצַדְתִּי, see on יָצַד in the preceding verse. The vines and fig-trees might be called Jehovah's, because, in a special sense, the land on which they grew was his. The vine has, from time immemorial, abounded in Palestine. It often grows to a great size, and produces grapes of corresponding bulk. Schulz describes one at Beitshin, near Ptolemais, the stem of which was about a foot and a half in diameter, its height was about thirty feet, and by its branches and branchlets, which had to be supported, it formed a hut upwards of thirty feet broad and long. The clusters of these vines are so large, that they weigh ten or twelve pounds, and the berries may be compared with our small plums. When such a cluster is cut off, it is laid upon a board about an ell and a half broad, and three or four ells long, and several persons seat themselves about it to eat the grapes. Rosenmüller, In Bib. Cab. vol. xxvii. p. 223. Comp. Numb. xiii. 23, 24. Palestine was equally celebrated for its fig-trees, which are not reared in gardens, as with us, but grow spontaneously in the open country. The figs were not only eaten fresh, but also preserved for food. פָּשַׁת, to put, is often used with nouns instead of the simple forms of the verbs to which the nouns are related. פָּשַׁת, breakage, Arab. قصف fregit. قصف, a branch broken off from a tree. See on Hos. x. 7. LXX. συγκλασμός, Compl. κλασμός. Syr. فصم, concissio, divulsio. The locusts not only consume the fruit and leaves of the trees, but strip them of the very bark.—“Nec culmus, nec gramen ullum remaneat, et arbores frontibus et cortice tanquam vestibus nudata, instar truncorum alborum conspiciantur.” Ludolf, Comment. p. 178. הִשְׁבִּיחַ is here taken in its proper causative signification. What they do not

- 8 Lament, as a virgin girded with sackcloth,
On account of the husband of her youth.
- 9 The offering and the libation,
Are cut off from the house of Jehovah:
The priests howl, the ministers of Jehovah.
- 10 The field is laid waste,
The ground mourneth;
For the corn is laid waste, devour, they so injure that it falls off the tree. שָׂרֵי־גֵי, branches, properly the intertwining tendrils of the vine, from שָׂרָה, to interweave. The vine, being the more valuable of the two kinds of trees, the suffix refers back to it; and the fig-tree is treated as subordinate. הֵלֵבִינָה, they have made or left white.

8. The land, under the metaphor of a female, is here addressed. לֵאָלָהּ is the second person feminine of the Imperative in Kal of הֵלֵאָה, which usually means to swear, call on God as witness; but here it takes the signification of the Syriac , ululavit, deploravit.

, ululatus, lamentum. The derivation from לָאָה, God, in the sense God have mercy, is less natural. One of Kennicott's MSS. reads אֲבֵלֵי. LXX. ἄρη-νῆσον. A country is frequently said to mourn, when it is subject to devastation. See Is. xxiv. 3; Jer. iv. 28, xii. 4; Hos. iv. 3. בְּרוּלָהּ, a virgin, a young woman, affianced to a husband, and, in this sense, viewed as married to him. The idea of the strength of youthful affection, is that designed to be conveyed by the passage. In proportion to the force of such affection, would be the excessive degree of grief for his loss. Holzhausen thinks that she would also grieve בְּרוּלָהּ, on account of her virginity, and compares Jud. xi. 38; but this the text does not suggest. LXX. νύμφη. Compl. παρθένος. Wrapping oneself in sackcloth was a token of deep mourning. בָּעֵל, properly lord, master, possessor; and secondarily husband, because in the East, wives were, and still are, considered as the property rather than the companions of their husbands. Comp. the Greek κύριος γυναι- κός; and for the application of ἀνήρ to one only betrothed, Matt. i. 19. According to the Roman law, consensus facit nuptias.

9. To a pious mind the gloomiest view of external calamities will be taken from their influence upon the cause of God. The cessation of the usual solemnities of the temple worship, occasioned by the destruction of the fruits of the earth, must have occasioned great grief to the religious Jew. Jerome and others think that as the priests would be deprived of their regular support, by the cessation of the offerings, they mourned on that account; but of this I should say with Maurer, "Vates hic non videtur cogitasse." מִנְחָה, stands here for offerings in general, whether bloody or unbloody, — comp. Gen. iv. 4; LXX. θύσια, — even when restricted in its signification to meat offering, such as consisted of meal, salt, oil, and incense, the proper sacrifices. מִזְבְּחֵיהֶם, are understood, as they were always connected with them, except in the case of the sin and trespass-offerings. The libation, or drink-offering, was called נֶסֶךָ, on account of its being poured out, from the root נָסַךְ, to pour. From the circumstance that Joel prefixes the article to כֹּהֲנֵיהֶם, priests, but not to אֲבִירֵיהֶם, husbandmen, and פְּרָמֵייהֶם, vine-dressers, Credner argues that he must either have been personally related to them, or that prophets and priests must have been more closely united at the time he wrote than afterwards. Comp. הַמְלִיכִים, ver. 13, ii. 17. מִשְׁתָּרְתִּים, ministers, is a more dignified official term than עֲבָדֵיהֶם, servants, which is employed to denote common slaves, as well as persons in more elevated situations about a king.

10-12. The prophet enters here more minutely into a description of the devas-

The new wine is dried up,
The oil languisheth.

- 11 Be ashamed, ye husbandmen!
Howl, ye vine-dressers!
On account of the wheat and the barley;
For the harvest of the field hath perished.
- 12 The vine is dried up,
And the fig-tree languisheth;

tation occasioned by the locusts. וַיִּדְרֹשׁ, new wine, which is already in a state of fermentation, and so intoxicating; from וָרָץ, to take possession of anything. See on ver. 5, where it is distinguished from עֵסֶב. “Syr. صَلْبِيَّة, sic dictum, quod se possessorem hominis facit, ejus cerebrum occupando, ut ille non amplius sui compos sit. Sic Arab. vinum dicitur

سببية, a captivando, et عقار, a tenendo et vinctum habendo.” Winer in voc.

שָׂדֶה, field, and אֲדָמָה, ground, are synonymes; but differ in this respect, that the former denotes the open, free, uninclosed part of a country, Arab. سدا, extendit, dilatavit; the latter, the rich red soil which is particularly fit for cultivation. Hence אִישׁ הַשָּׂדֶה, a man of the field, means a hunter, Gen. xxv. 27; אִישׁ הָאֲדָמָה, a man of the ground, an agriculturist. Root צָרַד, to be red. The land is here, as frequently in the Hebrew prophets, made the subject of personification. Some would render וְהִבְיַשׁ, as applied to the new wine, to be ashamed: but occurring as it does in parallelism with אֲנַלְל, to droop, languish like plants, it is better to retain the primary motion of רָבַשׁ, to become dry, dry up. Both וַיִּדְרֹשׁ and וַיִּצְהַר stand for the vine and the olive tree, from which the wine and oil are obtained. In the second instance וְהִבְיַשׁ takes the signification of כָּבַשׁ, to be ashamed, being another form of the Hiphil for וְהִבְיַשׁ. Both are used intransitively. The LXX. retaining the signification of רָבַשׁ, improperly render ἐξηράνθησαν γεωργίαι.

רִמון, the pomegranate tree, is indigenous in Palestine in Syria, and is reckoned one of its noblest botanical productions. It grows to the height of twenty feet, has a straight stem, spreading branches, lancet-formed leaves, with large and beautiful red blossoms. The fruit is of the size of an orange, brown in color, and affording a highly delicious and cooling juice. It is also planted in gardens, and in the courts of the houses; and its fruit is greatly improved by cultivation. It is still one of the trees most frequently seen in those countries. So celebrated were the dates of Palestine, that Pliny, speaking of the תְּמָר, date, or palm-tree, says, “Judæa vero inclyta est vel magis palmis.” It was adopted as a symbol of the country in coins struck under Vespasian and Domitian; and is frequently referred to in the Old Testament. It sometimes reaches the height of an hundred feet, is remarkable for its straight, upright growth, and forms one of the most beautiful trees in the vegetable kingdom. The fruit, which grows in clusters under the large leaves, is of an exceedingly sweet and agreeable taste, and, as an article both of sustenance and traffic, is of great value to the inhabitants. In Abyssinia, the natives extract a juice from it which they manufacture into a spirituous liquor resembling champagne. Its importance is here significantly expressed by the particle גַּם being used intensively before it. וְהִבְיַשׁ,

Arab. تفاح, the apple-tree. Rosenmüller derives the word from נָשַׁח, to breathe, and in this Gesenius concurs, supposing the fragrant breath, i. e. smell

- The pomegranate, the palm-tree also, and the apple-tree,
 All the trees of the field are withered ;
 Yea, joy is withered away from the children of men.
- 13 Gird ye, and mourn, O ye priests !
 Howl, ye ministers of the altar !
 Enter, spend the night in sackcloth,
 Ye ministers of my God !
 For the offering and the libation
 Are withholden from the house of your God.
- 14 Appoint a sacred fast, proclaim a day of restraint ;
 Assemble the elders — all the inhabitants of the land, or scent, to have originated the name. The former of these writers adopts the opinion of Celsius, that the quince tree is specially intended ; but as the Arabs include under تفاح, oranges, lemons, peaches, apricots, etc., the Hebrew term is likewise in all probability generic in its signification. To give to his description the utmost latitude, Joel adds, בְּלֵ-עֵץ הַשָּׂדֶה, all the trees of the field, i. e. as Jerome explains "omnia ligna, vel infructuosa, vel fructifera ;" and, to bring it more home to the feelings of his countrymen, he represents the consequence to be, the entire removal of their joy. Some improperly limit שִׂשׂוֹן to the joy of harvest. The construction מִן הַבַּיִת מִן, to dry away from, is what is usually termed pregnant, and more forcibly expresses the removal of the object on which the verb terminates.

13. The prophet now addresses himself to the priests, and calls them first to personal mourning, and then, in the following verse, to institute a sacred fast, in order that such mourning might be general. After הִגְדוּ supply with the Syr. שָׂק, as in one of Kennicott's MSS., or שָׂקִים, as in one of De Rossi's. Both forms occur in connection with the verb, which is not here to be restricted to mere girding, but rather signifies to wrap round one. Comp. Jer. iv. 8 ; Is. xxii. 12. שָׂקֵךְ, primarily to smite, strike, then to strike the breast, in token of mourning. See on Is. xxxii. 12. The LXX. always render it by κόπτεσθαι, except in two instances, in which they give it by κλαίειν, to weep. For מִשְׁרְתֵי מִזְבְּחֵךְ, comp. οἱ νόθ' δυσιαστηρίῳ παρεδρόντες, 1 Cor. ix. 13. Some think that בָּא, come, is to be taken idiomatically as a particle of exhortation, like לֵבֵנָה before another verb, and appeal to chap. iii. 13, for another instance in our prophet. As however, the verb is, to say the least, not necessarily to be so understood in that passage, and as mention is made of the altar, immediately before, it appears more proper to take it in the sense of entering, i. e. into the court of the temple, where, in the more immediate presence of Jehovah, the priests were to bewail their sins, and those of the people. Thus the LXX. εἰσέλθετε, and Kimchi, בָּאוּ בֵּית ה' וְשָׂם סִפְרוֹ, enter ye the house of God, and there mourn. לַיְלָה or לַיְלָה, signifies to spend, or remain over the night, and retains this signification in the present passage, though, from the connection, it is obvious not one night only, but many nights are meant. The priests were not only to wear the habit of mourning during the day, they were also to remain in it all night. Ahab is said to have lain in sackcloth, when he humbled himself before God, 1 Kings xxi. 27. LXX. ὑπνώσατε.

14. קִדְשׁוּ, to hallow, consecrate ; to keep holy ; to appoint sacred or religious services ; here, to institute a sacred fast by fixing the time and circumstances, and preparing the people for its proper

To the house of Jehovah your God,
And cry unto Jehovah.

15 Alas for the day!

For the day of Jehovah is near,
And cometh as a mighty destruction
From the Almighty.

16 Is not the food cut off before our eyes?

Are not joy and gladness from the house of our God?

17 The seeds are become dry beneath their clods;

observance. The Pual participle is used even of warriors; see on Is. xiii. 3. The interpretations of the Rabbins, Jarchi and Kimchi, והזמנינו, and Abenezra, הזמנינו, are defective, by leaving out the idea of sacredness, which the verb always conveys. עֲצָרָה, restraint, or being held back or prevented from labor: יום, day, or period, understood. See on Is. i. 13. The Jews were to abstain from their worldly avocations, and spend the portion of their time thus consecrated to the immediate and solemn duties of humiliation, confession, and prayer. זקנים, elders, in this connection, might be taken in an official sense, denoting those holding office among the people, who were expected to take the lead, and, by their example, to excite others to engage in the religious solemnities; but a comparison of this verse with chap. ii. 15, in which "children" and "sucklings are mentioned, would rather require us to understand the term as referring to age. The central point of convocation was the temple—the special theocratic residence of Him whose wrath was to be deprecated, and his mercy implored.

זָעַק, Arab. ذَعَق, to cry out, cry earnestly for help. LXX. κερράξετε ἐκτενωσ. "Ardentissimas fundite preces." Rosenmüller.

15. Joel now exclaims, אַל־אֵי־יָמֵינוּ, alas! for the day! "O infaustum et tristissimum illum diem!" Rosenmüller. To give intensity to the exclamation, the LXX. have the triple στοι, στοι, στοι. That the יום־יהוה, day of Jehovah, i. e. the period of punishment, does not mean that of the plague of the locusts, but a more awful period still future, the term קָרִיב, near, at hand, which is never used to denote the actual presence of anything, but its speedy approach, sufficiently proves. What the Jews were then suffering was only a prelude to still more dreadful calamities. For בָּשָׂר בְּיָמֵינוּ, which forms an elegant paronomasia, see on Is. xiii. 6, where the same form occurs. The בָּ is, as there, the Caph veritatis, and expresses the greatness of the evil.

16. The verb בָּרַח is understood in the latter hemistich. The annual festivals were occasions of great rejoicing. See Lev. xxiii. 40; Deut. xii. 12, 18.

17. This, and the three following verses, describe the drought which was simultaneous with the judgment of the locusts. It exhibits the singular phenomenon of four ἀπαξ λεγόμενα within the short space which it occupies. For the elucidation of עָבַשׁ, some compare the Chaldee עֲשַׁשׁ, to rot, but it is with more propriety referred to the Arab.

عيس, siccus fuit; and so is of the same signification with שָׁבַשׁ, to be dry, dried up. Thus Abulwalid. By the desiccating influence of the heat, the seeds that had been sown in the ground would lose all their moisture, and perish. That פְּרִיזוֹן mean seeds or grains of corn, etc. seems satisfactorily determined by the use of the Syr. حَبُّ ذُرِّيَّةٍ, granum, Matt. xiii. 31; John xii. 24; 1 Cor. xv.

The granaries are desolate, the store-houses are destroyed,
Because the corn is withered.

18 How the cattle mourn!

How the herds of oxen are perplexed!

Because they have no pasture;

Yea, the flocks of sheep are destroyed.

19 To thee, O Jehovah! I cry,

For fire hath consumed the pastures of the desert,

And a flame hath burnt all the trees of the field.

37, in the Peshito; and the signification of  $\text{פָּרַד}$ , to separate, an action which takes place when, in sowing, the husbandman scatters the seed in distinct grains. To the same effect Tanchum,

الحبوب البعدودة للزراعة

لأنها تفرق في الارض

grains prepared for sowing, so called because they are scattered in the ground.  $\text{מִנְקָרֵי$ , clods, or lumps of earth. Comp. the Arab.  $\text{جرف}$  gleba terræ;

$\text{ارض}$  terra diversa varia. Thus also

$\text{جرفة}$ , signifies a mark on the body, occasioned by the contracting or drying up of the skin, and resembling a round lump of earth or dung.  $\text{בְּמִקְרֵיהֶם}$  is synonymous with  $\text{אֶצְרוֹת}$ , granaries;

and, according to the force of the local

$\text{ב}$  prefixed, signifies places or houses containing store rooms, or granaries, in which grain was deposited. The Dagesh in the second  $\text{ב}$  is euphonic. The simpler form  $\text{מִנְקָרָה}$ , occurs Hag. ii. 19;

and both are to be referred to the root

$\text{קָרַח}$ , to gather, collect. For the diversified and unsatisfactory renderings of the ancient versions, see Pococke in loc. The verbs  $\text{שָׁמַם}$  and  $\text{הָרַס}$  are here to be taken in the sense of being left or neglected like places that have been laid waste or destroyed.

18.  $\text{בָּהָד}$ , in Niphal, expresses the perplexity to which any one is reduced who does not know how to extricate himself from difficulty. The brute creation are graphically represented as being in this condition from the total failure of pasturage. The  $\text{ב}$  before  $\text{קָרַח}$  is intensive; even the sheep, which subsist on herbage unsuitable for the oxen, are deprived of food. As the idea of punishment is conveyed by the verb  $\text{עָשָׂה$ , it was in all probability used by the prophet, in order to teach the Jews that innocent creatures are involved in the consequences of guilt incurred by transgressors. Comp. Exod. xii. 29; Jonah iii. 7.

19. It is not unusual for the Hebrew prophets to give expression to their own feelings, while describing the judgments that were brought upon their country. Comp. Is. xv. 5, xvi. 11, xxi. 3, 4, xxii. 4; Jer. xxiii. 9. It has been questioned whether the "fire" and "flame" are here to be taken literally of the actual burning of the grass, which often happens in extreme heat, or whether they are used figuratively of the heat itself. The former is more probably the meaning.  $\text{מִקְוֵוֹת}$ , Kimchi explains  $\text{מִקְוֵוֹת}$ , grassy places, places of pasturage; hence pasturage itself. It is derived from  $\text{קָוָה}$ , to be pleasant, (comp.  $\text{בָּיָה}$ ) to dwell: but signifying in this connection the green, grassy spots, so eagerly desired by the cattle, and pleasant both to man and beast. From the circumstance that such places would naturally be selected for occupancy by tents, dwellings, etc. the word came also to signify habitations. Comp. the Arab.

$\text{اري}$ , diversatus fuit, hospitio excipit:

$\text{ماري}$ , mansio, sedes commorationis.

20 The very beasts of the field look up to thee,
 Because the streams of water are dried up,
 And fire hath devoured the pastures of the desert.

20. עָרַב, Arab. عَرَج, Eth. ሀርገ: ascendit: to look up with panting or earnest desire. Arab. عَرَجَة, inclinatio, propensio in rem. The word beautifully expresses the natural action of animals parched with thirst, and deprived of all supply of water. They hold up their heads, as if their only expectation were from the God of heaven. LXX. ἀνέβλεψαν. Comp. Ps. xlii. 2, where the force of עָרַב-עָרַב-מֵיִם is lost by the rendering of our common version, "after the water-brooks." It should be at or beside, as the Psalmist evidently intended to represent the deer standing on the brink of the channels in which water usually flowed, but which had become dry. To their pitiable condition he compares his own circumstances when deprived of the usual means of spiritual refreshment. The idea of their crying to God, which the Syr. ܐܘܪܝܢ, and the Rabbins attach to the word, is derived from such passages as Job. xxxviii. 41; Ps. civ. 21, cxlvii. 9, rather than from anything expressed by the word itself.

---

CHAPTER II.

THE prophet reiterates his announcement of the approach of a divine judgment more terrific in its nature than that of the locusts, but employs language borrowed from the appearance and movements of these insects, in order to make a deeper impression upon his hearers, whose minds were full of ideas derived from them as instruments of the calamity under which they were suffering, 1-11. He then summons anew to humiliation and repentance, 12-17; giving assurance that on these taking place, Jehovah would show them pity, destroy their enemy, and restore them to circumstances of great temporal and religious prosperity, 18-27; and the chapter concludes with a glorious promise of the abundant effusion of the influences of the Holy Spirit in the apostolic age, 28, 29, and a prediction of the Jewish war, and the final subversion of the Jewish state, 30, 31, in the midst of which such as embraced the worship and service of the Messiah should experience deliverance, 32.

---

1 Blow ye the trumpet in Zion!
 And sound the alarm in my holy mountain!

1. To give the greater effect to the alarm here commanded to be sounded, Jehovah himself is introduced as speaking. The persons addressed are the priests, on whom it devolved to blow with trumpets. ἡ σάλπιγξ ὄργανον ἔστι

Let all the inhabitants of the land tremble ;
 For the day of Jehovah cometh ; it is near.
 2 A day of darkness and gloom,
 A day of clouds and dense obscurity ;
 Like the dawn spread over the mountains
 A numerous and mighty people :
 None such have ever been,
 Neither shall there ever be after them,
 During the years of successive generations.

πολέμου. Philo de Septenario. They were to warn all of the threatened judgment. Comp. chap. i. 15, where the prophet anticipates what is now about to be the subject of a special description.

2. Synonymes are here accumulated to give intensity to the expression of the thought. The awful calamity which was to come upon the Jews is set forth under the metaphor of darkness, which is of frequent occurrence in the Hebrew Scriptures, when sufferings and misery are the subjects of discourse. Comp. Is. viii. 22, lx. 2 ; Jer. xiii. 16 ; Amos v. 18 ; Zeph. i. 15. In the present instance, however, there was a singular propriety in adopting the language, since the prophet was just going to introduce an allegory founded upon the fact, that swarms of locusts had come over the land, and intercepting, by their density, the light of the sun, had occasioned an universal darkness. See on ver. 10. Some interpreters have stumbled at the apparent incongruity of comparing the coming affliction with the אורורה, aurora, since the idea usually suggested by the figurative use of that term is joy, or prosperity ; but as this idea is not exclusively conveyed by the use of it, as it is also employed to express the certainty, Hos. vi. 3, and suddenness of anything, Hos. x. 15, so here the obvious points of comparison are merely the suddenness and extent of the change produced by the diffusion of the rays of light, without any reference to the nature of the change itself.

Joel now proceeds to introduce and describe the hostile army of the Assyrians in the same terms in which he had metaphorically described the locusts, chap. i. 6 ; only exchanging גו, nation, for עם, people, which is also used of foreign and idolatrous nations, Numb. xxi. 29 ; 1 Chron. xvi. 20 ; Jer. xlviii. 42. In this description, he not only transfers the metaphor back to the proper subject from which it was taken, but converts it into an allegory, and at considerable length, and in the most minute manner, exhibits the invasion, the formidable character, and the ravages of the barbarian foe. So perfectly is the allegorical veil woven throughout, that most commentators have been able to discover nothing more than natural locusts in the passage. At the time in which the prophet delivered his message the locusts covered the land ; they were before his eyes ; the idea of them had so taken possession of his mind, that, considering the striking resemblance which they bore to an invading army, nothing was more natural than to exhibit the latter in sensible images taken from the scene by which both he and his hearers were surrounded. And, accustomed as they had been to the parabolic style of prophecy, they could have been at no loss to discover, that when in this part of his discourse he appeared to speak of locusts, it was not natural but political locusts he had in view. While the decidedly future aspect of the calamity, chap. i. 15, ii. 1, proves that it had not taken place at the time the words were delivered, a comparison of the language in the concluding part of verse 2, with

- 3 Before them fire devoureth,
 And behind them a flame burneth ;
 Before them the land is like the garden of Eden,
 But behind them a desolate wilderness :
 And there is no escape from them.
- 4 Their appearance is like the appearance of horses,
 And they run like horsemen.

that employed chap. i. 2, equally proves that a plague of locusts could not have been intended. We must, therefore, with the alteration of a single word, adopt the language of Jerome, "dum locustas legimus, Assyrios cogitamus." That the Assyrian invasion under Sennacherib, and not that of the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar, is meant, appears from the immense number of the army, its entire destruction in the land of Palestine, and there being no reference whatever to the captivity in Babylon, the omission of which is unimaginable, on the supposition that the latter of the two invasions was intended. The army of Sennacherib must have been the largest that ever entered Palestine, since only that division of it which invested Jerusalem, amounted to nearly 200,000 men, Is. xxxvii. 36. It was marching forward to the conquest of Egypt, and, like a swarm of locusts, covered the whole land. All the fortified cities of Judah were taken, Is. xxxvi. 1 ; the cultivated fields and vineyards were trodden down or consumed, xxxvii. 30 ; and nothing short of utter destruction seemed to await the inhabitants. The design of the Divine Spirit, to whose infinite mind the future event was present, in dictating the prediction in the language here employed, appears to have been, to deepen the impressions produced by the plague of locusts, and thereby to excite to that repentance and amendment of life, which alone could secure to the Jews the continuance of their national blessings.

3. A description of the desolate state to which Judea was to be reduced, in language borrowed from that given of the drought, chap. i. 19. אַחֲרֵיהֶם, before him, and אַחֲרָיו, behind him, are used to express universality ; ubicunque. Comp. 1 Chron. xix. 10. This construction is confirmed by what follows : גַּם פְּלִיטָה לֹא יִהְיֶה לָהֶם, and there is no escape from them, or, more literally, in reference to them. פְּלִיטָה properly signifies those who have escaped in the war ; who have not been killed, or taken prisoners ; but it is also used of fruits of the earth which have not been destroyed, Exod. x. 5. The contrast between the beauty of Paradise and the desolation of a desert, is exquisitely forcible and affecting.

4. The allegory now becomes special and minute in its features, which are selected from the phenomena and operations of an invading army, the subject of which it is to be understood ; but having the invasion by the locusts as its basis, and therefore presenting these prominently to view, and comparing them to the army, which is thus studiously concealed. On this principle there is no difficulty in accounting for the particle of comparison, so liberally used in this and the following verses. So strong is the resemblance of the head of the locust to that of a horse, that they are on this account called cavalettes by the Italians. This feature Theodoret thus notices : εἴ τις ἀκριβῶς κατῖδοι τὴν κεφαλὴν τῆς ἀκριδος, σφόδρα τῇ τοῦ ἵππου ἰουκίαν εὐρήσει. In Rev. ix. 7, the locusts are compared to horses harnessed for battle : τὰ δμοιώματα τῶν ἀκριδῶν ὅμοια ἵπποις ἠτοίμασμένοις εἰς πόλεμον. Such comparison is very common among the Arabs. The point of comparison in the second member of the parallelism, is the swiftness with which cavalry advance to the attack.

- 5 They bound like the rattle of chariots on the tops of the mountains;
Like the crackling of the flame of fire devouring the stubble;
Like a mighty people arranged for battle.
- 6 Before them the people tremble;
All faces withdraw their color.
- 7 They run like mighty men;
They scale the wall like warriors;
They all march in their courses,
They break not their ranks.
- 8 They press not each other:
They march on, each in his path;
Though they fall among the missiles,
They break not up.
- 9 They run eagerly through the city;
They run upon the wall;

5. רָקַד is used of the rapid and bounding course of chariots over a rough surface, Nah. iii. 2. See also Rev. ix. 9.

“— per purum tonantes
Egit equos volucremque currum.”

Horace, Carm. i. 34, 7.

“—— vacuos dat in aëra saltus Succubiturque alte, similisque est currus inani.”

Ovid. Metam. ii. 165.

Speaking of the noise made by a swarm of locusts, Forskäl says: “Transeuntes grylli super verticem nostrum sono magnæ cataractæ ferebant.” To the same effect Morier: “On the 11th of June, while seated in our tents about noon, we heard a very unusual noise, that sounded like the rustling of a great wind at a distance. On looking up, we perceived an immense cloud, here and there transparent, in other parts quite black, that spread itself all over the sky, and at intervals shadowed the sun.” It is however, not improbable, that the sound here referred to is that produced by the large hind legs of the locust in leaping. The comparison at the end of the verse, is to the clashing of arms, and the shouting of an army on the point of engaging in battle.

6. רָחַזוּ, they tremble, from רָחַז, to turn round, twist one's self, writhe with pain; then to tremble. Arab. حال, med. Wau, to be turned. אַרְוָה, warmth, ruddiness of countenance. Arab. فار, astuavit, efferbuit. אַרְוָה, to withdraw their ruddiness, or color, i. e. to change color, grow pale with terror. Nah. ii. 11. Comp. הָפַח, to turn pale. The ancient versions concur in rendering the words, every face like the blackness of a pot; deriving the last word from אַרְוָה; hence אַרְוָה, pot, without א. Of the terror inspired by locusts, we cannot have a better proof than the Arabic proverb: اجرد من الجراد, more terrible than the locusts.

7-9. Here the description quite excels in the graphic. The comparison to warriors is admirably carried out. First, their rapid advance upon the city is specified; next, their scaling the walls in the most regular order; then their simultaneous encounter with the troops of defence, their invulnerability, their progress through the streets, their climbing the walls, and entering the windows of the houses, are set forth in terms of singular and appropriate beauty.

They go up into the houses ;
They enter the windows like a thief.

עָבַד, Arab. عَبَدَ, fidit, vulneravit,

عَبَا, fissus, has here the signification of breaking up the order or regularity with which a body of troops proceed when marching to the attack. Abenezra and Kimchi compare עָבַד, to to pervert, turn aside which comes nearly to the same thing. LXX. ἐκκλίνωσι.

Syr. ܠܥܒܕܐ. Gesenius thinks the verb is here used in a sense cognate with the significations in Kal and Hiphil, to give or take a pledge; but the idea of exchange, change, is not clearly brought out. The regular military order with which the locusts advance, has been frequently described. Ἀβασίλευτον γὰρ ἡ ἀκρις, ἐστρατεύει μὲν γὰρ ἐξ ἐνὸς εὐτάκτως κελεύσματος· φασὶ δὲ αὐτὰς στοιχηθῶν ἰέναι, καὶ ὡς ἐν τάξει διπτασθαι, καὶ ἥμιστα μὲν ἀπονοσφίσεσθαι, περιέπει δὲ οὕτως ἀλλήλας, ὥσανεὶ καὶ ἀδελφοὶ, φύσεως αὐτῆς βραβεύουσης τὸ φιλάλληλον. Cyril. The testimony of Jerome, as an eye-witness in Palestine, is peculiarly valuable: "Hoc nuper in hac provincia vidimus. Quum enim locustarum agmina venirent, et aërem, quo inter cœlum et terram est, occuparent tanto ordine ex dispositione jubentis Dei volitant, ut instar tessularum, quæ in pavimentis artificis tesserarum manu, suum locum teneant, et ne puncto quidem, ut ita dicam, ungueve transverso declinent ad alteram." Morier also remarks on those which he saw: "They seemed to be impelled by one common instinct, and moved in one body, which had the appearance of being organized by a leader." Comp. Prov. xxx. 27, כָּל־הֶעָרִיץ לֹא־יָדָע־מֶלֶךְ, there is no king to the locusts, yet they go forth, all of them dividing, i. e. themselves into regular companies or swarms, with all the discipline of a well-ordered army. דָּבַק, signifies so to press upon one as to compel him to move from his place. Notwithstanding the immense crowds of the locusts, not only does none of them break the ranks by deviating from the straight course which they pursue, but none forces his fellow from his rank. Their watchword may be said to be onward; for they never turn back. If they enter houses, they go straight through them, and out at the opposite side. Thus Abulphargius relates in his Chron. Syr. p. 134: "postquam a latere meridionale domos intraverant, a latere septentrionale egrediebantur. חֲשֵׁב, properly means any missile weapon thrown at an enemy, from חָשַׁב, to send or cast forth; but it is also frequently used of the sword. Comp. the Arab. سَلَح, arma.

עָבַד, is of somewhat difficult determination. The ground idea seems to be that of mediation, a being, or doing anything between two; hence עָבַד לְכָל־אִישׁ, to make supplication for any one, i. e. by interposing between him and the party to whom the supplication is addressed. To this the signification derived from the as occurring in the Hebrew. Between, or among, will suit most of the passages in which the word occurs. See Winer and Credner. Taking חֲשֵׁב as a collective noun, the meaning of חֲשֵׁב הַמַּעֲרָב will be to fall among the missiles, i. e. to light, or come down among them; and referring עָבַד to the whole swarm, what it expresses is, that they are not broken up, or interrupted in their course. Compare a similar use of עָבַד, to break, Dan. xi. 22. בְּעִיר, in the city, i. e. any city or town that may lie in their way. Credner's appeal to chap. iv. [iii.] 17, in proof that Jerusalem is specifically meant, cannot be sustained, since that part of the prophecy relates to a totally different subject. The scene is rather the land of Judah, with its fortified cities, which were overrun and plundered by the Assyrian troops.

Arab. بعد, post, nearly approximates,

- 10 Before them the earth trembleth,
The heavens shake,
The sun and the moon are darkened,
And the stars withdraw their shine.
- 11 Jehovah uttereth his voice before his army ;
Surely his camp is very large ;
Surely it is mighty, executing his order ;
Surely the day of Jehovah is great, and very terrible :
Who can endure it ?
- 12 Now, therefore, saith Jehovah,
Turn ye to me with all your heart,
And with fasting and weeping and mourning ;
- 13 And rend your heart, and not your garments,
And turn to Jehovah your God ;
For he is pitiful and compassionate,

10, 11. Though the language here employed may in part admit of a literal application to the obscuration of the air by the locusts, yet it is, as a whole, to be regarded as a specimen of the highly wrought hyperbolical, which forms one of the more distinguishing features of Hebrew poetry. קוֹל יְהוָה, the voice of Jehovah, is here, as frequently, thunder, and not any word of command, as some have imagined. Com. Exod. ix. 23, 29, 33 ; Ps. xviii. 14 ; Ps. lxxvii. 18, 19. The locusts are called the קוֹל, army of Jehovah, with further reference to the numbers and power of an army. One of the laws of Mohammed is thus expressed :

لا تقتلوا الجراد فانها جند الله الاعظم, Ye shall not kill the locusts, for they are the army of God
Almighty. Damir. And رب الجراد,

Lord of the locusts, is one of the names of God among the Mohammedans. The entire description closes with the brief but pointed interrogation, מִי יִרְדֵּהוּ, Who can endure it? to which the implied answer is, None. Comp. Mal. iii. 2, מִי מַכְלִיב אֶת־יְהוָה בַּיּוֹם, and Jer. x. 10, לֹא יִכְלֶה גוֹיִם וְעַמּוֹ.

12. Jehovah himself is here introduced, urging the necessity of immediate humiliation. וְגַם־עָתָה, is intensive. The ו is that of consequence, deducing an argument from what had preceded ; גַּם is augmentative and emphatic, as usually in Joel ; and עָתָה has special reference to the existing circumstances of the persons addressed, and the instant attention which the divine message required. The combination marks strong feeling in the speaker, and the urgent nature of the subject to which it is introductory. It is to be connected with עָתָה, and not with יִרְדֵּהוּ.

13. The prophet resumes his address, and founds upon the call of Jehovah, contained in the preceding verse, an exhortation to sincere inward repentance, which he supports by encouragements deduced from the benignity of the divine character. Rending the garments was usual on occasions of great mourning, see Gen. xxxvii. 29, 34 ; 1 Sam. iv. 12 ; 1 Kings xxi. 27 ; Ezra ix. 3, 5 ; Is. xxxvii. 1. This custom obtained not only among the Hebrews, but also among the Babylonians, Persians, Egyptians, Greeks and Romans. הִרְדָּה, is neither the plague of locusts, nor the invasion of the Assyrians, but the calamities in general which God brings upon mankind. This interpretation the preceding context requires.

- Long-suffering, and of great mercy,
 And repenteth of the evil.
- 14 Who knoweth? He may turn and repent,
 And leave a blessing behind him —
 An offering and a libation,
 For Jehovah your God.
- 15 Blow ye the trumpet in Zion,
 Appoint a sacred fast ;
 Proclaim a day of restraint.
- 16 Assemble the people : convene a sacred assembly ;
 Collect the aged ; gather the children,
 And those that suck the breasts ;
 Let the bridegroom come forth from his chamber,
 And the bride from her nuptial bed.
- 17 Between the porch and the altar,
 Let the priests, the ministers of Jehovah, weep ;
 And let them say, Have pity, O Jehovah ! upon thy people,

14. The question מִי יָדוּעַ, who knoweth, while it suggests the idea of the greatness of the sin to be pardoned, also conveys that of the possibility of such pardon,

“ ——— ἀλλ’ ἔτι καὶ νῦν,
 Ταῦτ’ εἶποῖς Ἀχιλῆϊ δαΐφροσι, αἴκε πίθηται.
 Τίς δ’ οἶδ’ εἴ κέν οἱ, σὺν δαίμονι, θυμὸν
 ὀρίνας, Παρειπών ; ”

Iliad. xi. 789.

God’s leaving a blessing behind him, presupposes his return to visit his people in mercy. The first-fruits of prosperity are due to Him through whose blessing it is conferred.

15, 16. Comp. ver. i. and chap. i. 14. Here the distribution into classes is more minute than in the latter of these passages. The mourning was to be universal. The תַּעֲרֵךְ, was the bridal couch, richly provided with a canopy, curtains, etc. Root תַּעֲרַךְ, to cover, protect. See for the force of the reference to the last class mentioned, Deut. xxiv. 5.

17. מִבֵּית, Arab. أمام, prior, anterior ;

the προνάος, or porch, before the temple, more strictly taken. It was an hundred and twenty cubits high, twenty broad from north to south, and ten long from east to west. The מִזְבֵּחַ, altar, was that of burnt-offering in the court of the priests. Here, with their backs toward the altar, on which they had nothing to offer, and their faces directed towards the residence of the Shekinah, they were to weep, and make supplication on behalf of the people. יָרְחִי לְמַשְׁלָלֵינוּ, Jarchi, Secker, Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Justi, Credner, Winer, Gesenius, Maurer, Noyes, Hitzig, and Ewald, render, that the nations should make a proverb of them ; but such construction is totally unauthorized by Hebrew usage. In upwards of fifty instances, in which מַשְׁלָל occurs in the Hebrew Bible, it is never once used in the sense of employing derision, or satirical language, but uniformly in that of likening, or of exercising rule or dominion. In fact, the verb is nowhere used either with or without the preposition in the signification of deriding. It is the noun alone that is thus employed in the forms יָרְחִי לְמַשְׁלָלֵינוּ, to be, set, give, etc. to a derision. Ezek. xvi. 44, forms no exception. The ancient versions all agree in the translation, that the heathen should rule over them. LXX. τοῦ καταρξᾶν αὐτῶν ἔθνη. Targ. שְׂמַשְׁלָלֵנוּ

And deliver not thine heritage to reproach,
 That the nations should rule over them.
 Why should they say among the people,
 Where is their God ?

- 18 Then Jehovah will be jealous for his land,
 And take compassion upon his people :
- 19 Yea, Jehovah will answer, and say unto his people, Behold ! I will send you the corn,
 And the new wine, and the oil,
 And ye shall have abundance thereof :
 And I will no more deliver you to reproach among the nations.
- 20 I will also remove the Northern from you,
 And drive him into a dry and barren land ;

בְּהוֹרֵן יִשְׁמְעֵנִי. Syr. سَمِعْتُمْ

يُخَصِمُونَ Vulg. ut dominantur eis nationes. Hexap. Syr. سَمِعْتُمْ

يُخَصِمُونَ Thus also Kimchi, Abenezra, Leo Juda, Junius and Tremellius, Jewish-Spanish, Lyranus, Drusus, Calvin, Newcome, Dathe, Boothroyd, and Hengstenberg ; and there does not appear to be any reason why it could ever have been rendered otherwise, but for the influence of the hypothesis, that the preceding part of the prophecy relates to locusts, and not to political enemies. "Ideo ridiculum est quod multi putant contexti sermonem de locustis : illud prorsus alienum est a Prophetæ mente." Calvin, in loc.

18. קָנָא, Arab. قنا, valde rubuit ; in Piel קָנָא, to be jealous, from the redness or flush by which the face is suffused, when a person is under the influence of passion.

19, 20. In the former of these verses, respect is had to the removal of the calamity, from which the Jews were suffering at the time the prophecy was delivered ; in the latter, that of the foreign enemy by whom the country was to be invaded. The article is placed before הַצָּר, and הַצָּר, to give them prominence, as the principal objects which had suffered from the locusts, and which were now to be restored. The term הַצָּר הַצָּפוֹנִי, the Northern, Northlander, or, as Coverdale renders, Him of the North, is of prime importance in the interpretation of the prophecy. It has been urged against its having any reference to the locusts, that they visit Palestine from the south, and not from the north ; but this objection can scarcely be regarded as valid, since, though they do not usually come from that quarter, yet they may be carried by a south wind across Arabia Deserta, and then, when to the north of Palestine, be driven south, or south-west into that country. That, however, which determines the question, is the addition of the patronymic צָפוֹנִי, indicating that the North was not merely the quarter whence the subject of discourse came, but that its native country lay to the north of Palestine : just as תֵּמָנִי, the Temanite, means the Southern, or he who dwells to the right of Palestine ; מִצְרַיִם, a native Egyptian ; in Arabic مكي, a Meccite, مديني, a

Medinite, i. e. a native or inhabitant of Mecca and Medina. Now it is agreed on all hands, that the native country of the locusts is the regions of Arabia, the Lybian deserts, and the Sahara of Egypt ; so that according to the usus loquendi, they cannot be meant by the term here employed. Indeed, so much has this

- His van towards the Eastern sea,
- And his rear towards the Western sea ;
- And his odor shall come up,
- And his stench ascend,
- Because he hath done great things.

been felt by some of those who have advocated the hypothesis, that locusts are intended, that they have been under the necessity of having recourse to far-fetched expedients, in order to support it. Justi, contrary to all analogy, proposes to render, "the locusts that march northwards," or to explain the term north of what is dark, hostile, or barbarous; which construction of the meaning is, in part, adopted by Hitzig. Maurer, on the other hand, setting aside these and other methods, has recourse to the Arab.

ضفن deposuit excrementum, and thence deduces for זִפְנֵי, the signification of stercoreus, or, in case this derivation should not be approved, to سفن, decorticare radendo, and considers the reference to be either to the injurious influence of their dung on the trees, herbage, etc., or to their stripping them of their verdure.

On the supposition that by זִפְנֵי, the Northern, the Assyrians are meant, every difficulty vanishes. And that they may with the strictest propriety be so termed, is proved by Zeph. ii. 13: "And he will stretch out his hand against Assyria, upon the North, and destroy Assyria, and will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry as a wilderness." The Jews were accustomed to call Assyria and Babylonia the North, and the North country, because they lay in that direction from Palestine. "Quæres, quisnam hic Aquilonaris? S. Hieron. Theodor. Remigius, Albertus et Hugo accipiunt Sennacherib, quem Dominus, longè fecit à Jerusalem: quia dum eam obsideret, angelus Domini una nocte percussit centum octuaginta quinque millia militum, itaque eam fugere compulit. 4 Reg. xix. 35." — A Lapide.

The geographical specification which follows in the verse is designed to express the universality of the destruction of the Assyrians. They were to be dispersed in every other direction but that from which they had come. By הַיָּם הַמִּזְרָגִי, the Eastern Sea, is meant the Asphaltic lake; by הַיָּם הַמַּגְרִי, the Western Sea, the Mediterranean; and by אֶרֶץ סוּדָה, a dry and desolate land, the deserts of Arabia. Literally the words הַיָּם הַמִּזְרָגִי, and הַיָּם הַמַּגְרִי, signify what is before and behind, and are applied geographically in reference to the Orientals reckoning the different quarters according to the positions of front and rear, right and left, while they face the east, which is with them the principal point of the compass. The language of the prophet is figurative, the metaphor being still borrowed from the locusts, which perish when blown by a storm into the sea, or the sandy desert. Jerome refers to a similar scene, which literally happened when he was in Palestine. "Etiam nostris temporibus," he says, "vidimus agmina locustarum terram texitisse Judæam, quæ postea vento surgente in mare primum et novissimum precipitata sunt." And he immediately adds, what illustrates the statement of Joel relative to the ascending of the stench: "Cumque littora utriusque maris acervis mortuorum locustarum quas aque evomuerant, implerentur, putredo earum et fetor in tantum noxius fuit, ut aeram quoque corrumperet, et pestilentia tam jumentorum, quam hominum gigneretur. זִפְנֵי and סִנְף, face and end are here used in the military sense of van and rear, and cannot, without violence, be interpreted of the swarm of locusts, and a brood which succeeded them. זִפְנֵי, is a ἀπαξ λεγ. comp. זִפְנֵי, to be foul, putrid, to stink. Arab. ضنخة, sordes. Giving an account of the locusts, Thevenot says, "They live not above six months, and, when dead, the stench of them so

- 21 Fear not, O land! rejoice and be glad,
For Jehovah doeth great things!
- 22 Fear not, ye beasts of the field!
For the pastures of the desert spring up,
For the tree beareth its fruit;
The fig-tree and the vine yield their strength.
- 23 Rejoice, ye sons of Zion! and be glad in Jehovah your God; corrupts and infects the air, that it often occasions dreadful pestilences." The concluding words of the verse convey the idea of moral agency, and can with no propriety be interpreted of the locusts. הַיְהוָה לְעֵשֶׂת הַיָּמִים. LXX. ἐμεγάλυνε τὰ ἔργα αὐτοῦ. Syr.

he exalted himself in acting. The phrase is obviously used here in a bad sense, and indicates the pride of the Assyrians; comp. 2 Kings xxi. 6, where הַיְהוָה לְעֵשֶׂת הַיָּמִים, a similar idiom, occurs. As employed in the following verse of our prophet, it is placed in antithesis with the sense in which it is here used, and is to be differently understood: viz. of the great things that God would do for his people, comp. Ps. cxxvi. 2, 3.

21-23. In these verses there is a beautiful gradation. First, the land, which had been destroyed by the enemy, is addressed in a prosopopœia; then the irrational animals which had suffered from the famine; and lastly, the inhabitants themselves. All are called upon to cast off their fears, and rejoice in the happy change which Jehovah would effect. Desolation, barrenness, and famine, would disappear, and times of prosperity and happiness return. בְּנֵי צִיּוֹן, Sons of Zion, properly the inhabitants of Jerusalem, but here evidently used to denote those of the land generally, of which Jerusalem was the metropolis, and Zion the centre of religious influence. מוֹרֶה לְצִדְקָה, is rendered in the Targ. מלפניך, your teacher in righteousness; which Abarbanel explains, וזה המשיח שיורה את הדרך ילכו בה מלך המעשה אשר יעשור. And he is the king Messiah, who shall teach them the way in which they shall walk, and the works that they should do. The same, or a similar construction of the words is found in the Vulg. Rufinus, Jarchi, Pagninus, Munster, Leo Juda, Castalio, the Jewish-Spanish, Remigius, Rupertus, Vatablus, Ribera, Mercier, Ecolamp., Luther, and most of the early Lutheran interpreters; and, among the modern, Pick and Hengstenberg, the latter of whom contends for it at considerable length, and decidedly considers the passage to be one of the Messianic prophecies. That מוֹרֶה signifies teacher, is beyond all doubt, see 2 Chron. xv. 3; Job xxxvi. 22; Is. ix. 15, xxx. 20; and from the occurrence of the word in this place in connection with צְדָקָה, righteousness, which is so frequently referred to the Messiah both in the Old and New Testaments, there is something very plausible in the application of the term to him who is specially called by Malachi מוֹרֶה צְדָקָה, THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, chap. iv. 4, i. e. the author of that illumination of knowledge which has righteousness for its object. To such interpretation, however, there appear to me to be the following insuperable objections:—First, it is repugnant to the circumstances of the context; “non videtur tamen ferre hunc sensum circumstantia loci.” Calvin; who says of the reason adduced in support of it, that it would be out of place to give such prominence to merely temporal blessings: “sed ratio illa est nimis frigida;” and goes on to show that, in accordance with the custom of the prophets, Joel begins with these inferior blessings, and afterwards, in ver. 28, proceeds to treat of those which are spiritual. Secondly, the repetition of the same term, מוֹרֶה, immediately after, where, as all allow, it must be taken in the acceptance of rain. And thirdly, the pecul-

For he giveth you the former rain in due measure ;
 Yea, he causeth the heavy rain to descend for you —
 The former and the latter rain as before :

24 So that the floors shall be full of grain,

iar force and coherence of the words, וְהָיָה מוֹרָה וְזָמֵן לְקִיּוֹשׁ, and וְהָיָה מוֹרָה וְזָמֵן לְקִיּוֹשׁ. The emphasis given to מוֹרָה, by prefixing not only the article ה, but also the determining particle הָ, shows that the prophet had some immediate and definite object in view, which we cannot imagine to have been any other than the autumnal rain, which was indispensable any year, and more especially after such a season of drought, to prepare the ground for nourishing the seed. It must have been an object of universal and anxious desire, and has, in consequence, a high degree of importance and prominence allotted to it in the text. See on the force of רָא the Lexicons of Lee and Gesenius. The same consideration will account for the form, and the particular signification of לְבַרְכָּהּ in this place. The לְ is to be taken adverbially, as pointing out the rule or measure according to which the rain was to be לְבַרְכָּהּ, so that the meaning will be, in just quantity, adequately, in the proportion suitable to the exigency of the case. בְּצֶדֶק, the root from which this noun is derived, signifies to be just, right; to come up to certain claims, to be what a person or thing ought to be. Comp. Lev. xix. 36, where בְּצֶדֶק is used of weights and measures that were exact, or came up to the demands of the law. Some propose to render לְבַרְכָּהּ, bountifully, but this would give the Chaldee rather than the Hebrew signification. Ewald translates, the early rain for justification, and explains it of the Jews being again accounted righteous by God. To the objection of Hengstenburg, that if מוֹרָה in the first half of the verse does not designate a different divine benefit from מוֹרָה in the second, an idle tautology will ensue, it is only necessary to reply, that the words occur in parallelism, and that in the second instance מוֹרָה is merely a resumption for the sake of dividing the בְּרָכָה mentioned immediately before into its two regular divisions, the former and the latter. The term elsewhere used for the former or autumnal rain, which falls from the middle of October until the middle of December, is יֹרֵה, lit. waterer, being the Benoni Participle of רָרַה, to dart, cast, or scatter, as drops of water. מוֹרָה, however, which is the Hiph. Participle of the same verb, does occur in the same acceptation, Ps. lxxxiv. 7. Comp. my note on Hosea vi. 3, where בְּלִקְיוֹשׁ, the latter or vernal rain is also explained.

The reading יֹרֵה, which is found instead of the former מוֹרָה, in twenty-three MSS., originally in eleven more, now in three, in the Jerusalem Talmud, and as Keri in the margin of two of De Rossi's Codices, is in favor of the rendering rain, which is that of all the early versions, but may possibly have originated in emendation. With respect to the latter occurrence of the word, there is no variety of reading. בְּרָכָה, Arab. جسم

corpus, et omne id quod longum, largum et profundum est; Chald. the body: applied to such rain as is heavy, or violent, and pours down as it were in a body. The verbs בָּרַךְ, and יִיזְרֶה, are prophetic futures. To render בְּרָכָה, in the first month, would involve a contradiction, since only one of the two rains could happen in that month. It seems, therefore, necessary to suppose an ellipsis of בְּ, the participle of comparison, and read בְּבְרָכָה, as formerly, or as in former times. Comp. Jer. i. 22; Jer. xxxiii. 11, where בְּבְרָכָה is similarly used; and for יִיזְרֶה, in the sense of former, 1 Sam. xvii. 30; Hagg. ii. 3. Thus the LXX. Syr. Vulg. Arab. One of Kennicott's MSS. and perhaps another, reads בְּרָכָה. The ellipsis of בְּ is not infrequent in the Hebrew Scriptures.

24. Here the happy results of the plentiful and seasonable rains are set

- And the vats shall run over with new wine and oil.
- 25 Thus he will make good to you the years
Which the swarming locusts hath devoured,
The licking locust, the consuming locust, and the gnawing locust,
My great army which I sent against you.
- 26 And ye shall eat plentifully and be satisfied,
And praise the name of Jehovah your God,
Who hath dealt wondrously with you:
And my people shall never be ashamed.
- 27 Then shall ye know, that I am in the midst of Israel,
And that I, Jehovah, am your God, and none else;
And my people shall never be ashamed.
- 28 And it shall come to pass, afterwards,
That I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh;

forth. The  $\nu$  in  $\nu\alpha\lambda\upsilon\tau\alpha$ , is consequential.
 $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , comp. the Arab. سوق, propulit,

vii. Conj. impulsus fuit, fluxit, to cause to flow, or run over. For  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , see on Is. v. 2.

25. That the prophet has here in view the plague of locusts described in chap. i. cannot well be doubted. The names, though placed in a different order, are identical with those there specified. They are called God's great army, a name still given to them by the Arabs. See on ver. 11. Though the scourge lasted only one year, yet as they not only destroyed the whole produce of that year, but also what was laid up in store for future years, there is no impropriety in the plural form of  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , years. The term is used metonymically for the produce and supply of years. The loss of these Jehovah promises to recompense or make good by not only furnishing the Jews with an abundance of temporal enjoyments, but affording them the delightful experience of his presence and favor as their covenant God. This promise is amplified in verses —

26, 27, In which the future prosperity of the Jewish church is described in terms, which obviously characterize the period which succeeded that of the Babylonish captivity. The divine recompense was not merely to cover the evils sustained by the ravages of the locusts; it was to extend to those which both the Assyrians and the Chaldeans were to inflict upon the nation. This interpretation is confirmed by what immediately follows respecting the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. By God's being in the midst of his people, is meant the special manifestation of his presence in the communications of his favor. The resumption of  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$  in  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , forms a beautiful anadiplosis.

28, 29. The prophet now proceeds to predict the impartation of richer gifts in future times than those temporal blessings which had just been promised to the Jews.  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , afterward, LXX. meta tauta, Hengstenberg would place in antithesis with  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , ver. 23, which he renders first; but the latter phrase has reference to what had already taken place, and was not future to the time of the prophet.  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , though indefinite, is nearly equivalent in force to  $\nu\psi\iota\kappa\eta$ , Is. ii. 2, as appears from its having been rendered by the apostle Peter in the last days. Jarchi, לעתיד לבא, in futurity; Abenezra, כל זאת הנבואה, אמר ר' ישוע כל זאת הנבואה, היא לעתיד ור' משה הכהן אמר אם כך למה אמר אחרי כך רק והיה באחרית הימים. "Rabbi Jeshua saith, All this is a prophecy of the future; and Rabbi Moses the priest saith, If so, why does he say after this? but it is the same as,

And your sons and your daughters shall prophesy,
 Your old men shall dream dreams,
 Your young men shall see visions ;
 29 And even upon the male and the female servants
 I will pour out my Spirit in those days.

and it shall come to pass in the latter days ;" in which interpretation Kimchi concurs, adding, לפי שאמר וידעתם כי בקרב ישראל אני. אמר עתה תדעו ולא ודיעה שלמה כי עוד תשובו ותחטאו לפני אבל אחרי זאת הדיעה יבא זמן שתדעו אותי ודיעה שלמה ולא תחטאו עוד והוא לימות המשיח שנאמר כי מלאה הארץ דעה אז יהיה, " Because it is said, And ye shall know that I am in the midst of you. What he says is, Now ye know, but not with a perfect knowledge, for ye will again commit sin before me; but after this knowledge there shall come a time when ye shall know me with a perfect knowledge, and shall sin no more, namely, in the days of the Messiah." That the two phrases are identical in meaning, clearly appears from a comparison of Jer. xlviii. 47, with xlix. 6. See on Is. ii. 2. נבִּיאָה signifies to pour out, to communicate in a plentiful and abundant manner, and is here used with the greatest propriety to denote the larger and richer supplies of divine influence, which were to be afforded to the church under the gospel dispensation. רִנָּה, spirit, means here the influences and gifts of the Holy Spirit, as in numerous other passages, in which the Spirit is said to be put, given, etc.; and these communications are described in language which shows that they were both to be more general and more special in their character. In a more general point of view, they were to be bestowed upon כָּל-בָּשָׂר, all flesh, i. e. mankind generally, without distinction of nation or country. To restrict this phrase to the Jews, as is done by Abenezra, Kimchi, Albo, Hitzig, and others, is irreconcilable with Scripture usage, according to which it constantly signifies mankind generally, or the whole human race; just as in Arabic, بَشَر and اِبْشَار signify homo, humanum genus, and Adam is called لَبُو البَشَر, the father of flesh, i. e. of mankind. Credner would have the phrase to include the animal creation, than which no construction could be more preposterous in such connection, or more at variance with other passages in which the communication of the influences of the Spirit are limited to the human family. The influence, of which universality is here predicated, is the saving energy which is exerted by the Holy Spirit, in commencing, carrying on, and consummating the work of grace in the souls of men. It accompanies the presentation of divine truth to the mind, and removes the obstacles which the force of innate depravity opposes to the reception of the gospel. See my Lectures on Divine Inspiration. pp. 525-530. Besides the influence which was thus to be vouchsafed for the purposes of salvation, the prophet specifies that which should be more limited in its communication, consisting in the miraculous endowment of a certain number of Jews, of different classes and conditions, with the knowledge of divine things, and the ability infallibly to communicate them to others. The persons on whom these gifts were to be conferred are their "sons and daughters;" their "aged men," and their "youths;" their "male" and "female servants;" terms which are manifestly designed to teach that their bestowment was to embrace persons of different classes, ranks, and conditions of life. نَبَا, Arab. indicavit, annunciavit, Eth. נָבָא: locutus est, תְּנָבָא: vaticinatus est, prædixit, is used not merely to denote the foretelling

- 30 And I will show prodigies in the heavens and in the earth,
 Blood and fire, and columns of smoke.
 31 The sun shall be turned into darkness,
 And the moon into blood, of the future events, but to express the giving of utterance to divine truth under a miraculous impulse, or the pretending to such impulse, whether the utterance was made in the way of direct communication, as was the case when the prophets addressed their hearers, or by the rehearsal or singing of sacred hymns under extraordinary divine impulse, as when Miriam sung at the Red Sea, Exod. xv. 20, 21; or when the sons of the prophets and Saul prophesied, 1 Sam. x. 5, 6, xix. 20-24. Comp. Acts xix. 6, xxi. 9; 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5, xiv. 1, 5, 6, 22, 24, 31, 39; which passages furnish striking illustrative examples of the fulfilment of the prophecy of Joel. See also 1 Chron. xxv. 1-3; and Mede's works, Book I. Discourse xvi. That we are fully warranted to interpret it of the extraordinary supernatural gifts which were vouchsafed in the apostolic age, is placed beyond doubt by its allegation by Peter, in justification of the phenomenon which took place on the day of Pentecost. τοῦτό ἐστι, this is the fact predicted by Joel, Acts ii. 16. The quotation was the more apt, since the words of the prophet had just been read in the pentecostal service of the Synagogue. See my Biblical Researches and Travels in Russia, p. 326. חֲזוֹנֵי, dreams, and חֲזוֹנֵי, visions, belonged to the different modes in which God revealed his will to the prophets. Numb. xii. 6; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6, 15; Jer. xxiii. 25-28; Dan. vii. 1, 2. See my Lectures on Inspiration, pp. 147-165. Though no express mention is made of dreams in the apostolic writings, yet repeated reference is to visions. See acts ix. 10, 12, x. 3, 17, xi. 5, xvi. 9, xviii. 9, xxvi. 19; 2 Cor. xii. 1; Rev. ix. 17. עֲלֵי, and even, indicates a rise in the prophecy, which was intended to exclude none, not even the lowest and most despised "servants," from a participation in the large bestow-ment of divine influence. In beautiful harmony with this feature of the prophecy is the special recognition of οἱ πτωχοί, the poor, in the New Testament. The repetition רוּחַ יְהוָה יִפְּשֹׁט I will pour out my Spirit, shows, that the influence of which, in general, they were to be partakers, was not merely that which consisted in the miraculous gifts, but also that ordinary and saving influence which is experienced by all believers. What incontrovertibly proves that the prophecy includes both a more ordinary, and a more extraordinary or miraculous divine agency, is the extension given to it by the apostle Peter, Acts ii. 38, 39; where he teaches that it was to comprehend "all that are afar off," i. e. the Gentiles, "even as many as the Lord our God shall call."

30, 31. In connection with this period of the rich enjoyment of divine influence, Joel introduces one of awful judgment, called as usual יְהוָה יוֹם, the day of Jehovah, the precursors of which he describes in very alarming language. That the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity is intended, most interpreters are agreed; but there exists a diversity of opinion respecting the character of the language, some taking it literally, as setting forth physical prodigies, such as those which Josephus relates to have taken place before the destruction of Jerusalem, and tremendous massacres and conflagrations in different parts of the country; while others maintain that it is symbolical, and consequently is to be figuratively explained. The latter position is more in accordance with the style of prophecy, in which we not only find a fixed set of symbols, but also, very frequently, an accumulation of images is introduced for the purpose of producing a more powerful effect on the mind. See on Is. xiii. 10, xxxiv. 3--5. The heavens and the earth,

Before the great and terrible day of Jehovah come.

32 And it shall come to pass,

That whosoever shall call upon the name of Jehovah shall be delivered :

For in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be the escaped, therefore, mean the political world, with its civil and religious establishments ; the sun and moon, the higher and superior ruling powers ; while the other images are employed to denote the disastrous prognosticatory changes that were to happen in relation to both. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 29 ; Mark xiii. 24, 25 ; Luke xx. 25-27, where the subject is the same as that exhibited by Joel, and the symbolical language in a great measure parallel. Similar images are used by pagan writers, when describing the forerunners of civil wars, as, for instance, Lucanus, Pharsal. lib. ver. 529 : —

“ ——— Super igne minaces Prodigis terras implerunt, æthera, pontum.
 Ignota obscuræ viderunt sidera noc-
 tes,
 Ardentemque polum flammis, cœloque
 volantes,
 Obliquas per inane faces, crinemque
 timendi.
 Sideris, et terris mutantem regna
 cometen.
 Fulgura fallaci micuerunt crebra sereno,
 Et varias ignis denso dedit aëre formas.”

מִיִּשְׁתִּים, prodigies, whatever objects are unusual, portentous, or miraculous, in their character. The word is most probably a derivative from קָפָה, Arab. Conj. iii.

وَفِي, eminuit, to be conspicuous, admirable, wonderful. LXX. τέρατα. It frequently occurs in combination with תִּשְׁמְעוּ אֵימָה, signs. תִּמְרוֹת, only occurs once besides, and, as here, in construction with עָשָׂן, viz. Song iii. 6 ; where, however, nineteen MSS. and originally another read תִּמְרוֹת, without the Yod, which is doubtless the more correct orthography, the Yod having been inserted as a help to the pronunciation. There can be little doubt that it is derived from תָּמַר, to be erect, whence תְּמָר the palm-tree, from its tall and erect growth. Comp. the Chaldee תְּמָרְקָה, a column of smoke ; תִּמְרוֹר, Arab. تاصور and تاصورة, turris ; and תָּמַר, to rise like a column. The phrase will, therefore, be equivalent to עָשָׂן עָשָׂן, of which we have the singular עָשָׂן עָשָׂן, Jud. xx. 40. LXX. ἀτμίδα καπνοῦ ; but in Song iii. 6, στελέχη καπνοῦ. Vulg. vaporem fumi. Targ. הַתְּמָרִים הַתְּמָרִים, columns of smoke, the singular of which is used Jud. xx. 40.

Tanc. : اعدة الدجان المرتفعه :

pillars of smoke ascending up. Those who are familiar with the account given by Josephus of the disorders, convulsions, excesses, and rebellions, which preceded the subversion of the Jewish state, will readily admit, that the figurative language here employed most appropriately sets forth the awful circumstances of the inhabitants of Palestine at that period. To render more prominent the tremendous nature of the final judgment of the Jews, when their city and polity were destroyed, it is not merely called יוֹם הַיָּהוָה, but יוֹם הַיָּהוָה הַגָּדוֹל, the great and fearful day of Jehovah ; terms which are employed by the prophet Malachi, iv. 5, (Heb. iii. 23,) in reference to the same event.

32. The phrase קָרָא בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה, usually means to evoke Jehovah according to his true character, and designates such as he would regard in the light of acceptable worshippers ; but on comparing the quotation of the words with direct reference to our Saviour, Rom. x. 13, with Acts ix. 14, 1 Cor. i. 2, it appears to be here employed as a periphrasis for those Jews who should embrace the faith of the Messiah, and render to him as  $\text{יהוה}$ , Jehovah, the same supreme worship which had been rendered to God by their pious ancestors. From the passage just quoted from the Acts, it is clear that the disciples of Christ were characterized as invokers of his name, i. e. as his worshippers, before they were called Christians. The prophecy contains a gracious promise, that, however terrible might be the final catastrophe in which the unbelievers should perish, provision would be made for the safety of those who believed in the Messiah. And church history records its fulfilment; for, on the approach of the Roman army, the christian inhabitants of Jerusalem took to flight, in compliance with the Saviour's warning, and retiring to Pella, on the eastern side of the river Jordan, found there a safe asylum, while the devoted city was being besieged and destroyed. — οὐ μὲν ἀλλὰ καὶ τοῦ λαοῦ τῆς ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἐκκλησίας, κατὰ τινα χρησμὸν τοῖς αὐτόθι δοκίμοις δι' ἀποκαλύψεως δοθέντα πρὸ τοῦ πολέμου, μεταναστῆναι τῆς πόλεως, καὶ τινα τῆς περὶ αὐτὴν οἰκεῖν κεκελευσμένον. Πέλλαν αὐτὴν ὀνομαζουσιν ἐν ἣ τῶν εἰς Χριστὸν πεπιστευκότων ἀπὸ τῆς Ἱερουσαλὴμ μετῴκισμένων, κ. τ. λ. Euseb. lib. iii. cap. v.  $\text{יהוה}$ , is a collective noun, signifying those who have escaped; in other words, ἡ ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἐκκλησία, "the church in Jerusalem," as Eusebius phrases it in the above quotation, who not only made their escape from the impending calamity, but from the "untoward generation" to which they had belonged, Acts ii. 40; Is. iv. 3; so that the meaning is, not that there should continue to be deliverance for those who remained in Zion and Jerusalem during the infliction of the punishment, but that those who resided there should make their escape from it, having previously been delivered from the condition of those on whom it was inflicted. The words  $\text{בְּשָׁרְךָ יִהְיֶה יְהוָה יְחַדְּשֵׁנִי יַחְדָּם}$ , refer to the promise just made.  $\text{יַחְדָּם יְחַדְּשֵׁנִי יַחְדָּם}$ , together with those that have been left, from  $\text{יָצָא}$ , Arab.  $\text{شرد}$ , aufugit, vagatusque fuit,  $\text{شار}$ , and  $\text{شروا}$ , aufugens, to flee, make one's escape, survive a slaughter, or any other calamity. The reference seems not to be to converted Gentiles, as Schmidius, Michælis, Holzhausen, and others interpret, but to those Jews who did not perish in the national judgments, but were called into the church of Christ.  $\text{יָצָא}$ , as employed in the last clause of the verse, signifies to call, in the sense of effectually prevailing upon any one to choose and participate in the blessings of the divine kingdom. Comp. Καλέω, as used by Paul, Rom. viii. 28, 30, ix. 24; 1 Thess. ii. 12.  $\text{יָצָא}$ , the Participle here denotes the future.

According as Jehovah hath promised,
Together with those that are left,
Whom Jehovah shall call.

CHAPTER III.

IN this chapter the prophet returns from the parenthetic view which he had exhibited of the commencement of the Christian dispensation, and the overthrow of the Jewish polity, to deliver predictions respecting events that were to transpire subsequent to the Babylonish captivity, and fill up the space which should intervene between the restoration of the Jews, and the first advent of Christ. He announces the judgment to be holden on their enemies after the return to Judea, 1, 2; specifies the reasons why they were to be punished, and expressly mentions by name the neighboring nations of Tyre, Sidon and Philistia, 3-6: promises the restoration of those Jews whom these states had sold into slavery, while they are threatened with slavery in return, 7, 8; summons the nations to engage in the wars in which they were to be destroyed, 9-15; shows, that since these convulsions were brought about by the providence of Jehovah, whose earthly throne was at Jerusalem, his people had no ground for alarm, and would experience his protection, 16, 17; predicts times of great prosperity to them, 18; and concludes with special denunciations against Egypt and Idumea, with whose fate is placed in striking contrast the protracted existence of the Jewish polity, 19-21.

-
- 1 FOR, behold! in those days, and at that time,
When I shall reverse the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem,
  - 2 I will gather all the nations,
And bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat,
And will plead with them there,

1, 2. בְּיָמֵי וְתַהֲמִיָּה וְבַעֲתֵי יְהוָה, is a double mode of expression, employed to give greater prominence to the period. That the "days and time" here specified, are not identical with the period spoken of in the last five verses of the preceding chapter, is evident from their being connected by the relative conjunction וְ, with the following words, which relate to the restoration of the Jewish state. בְּיָ, at the beginning of the verse, is properly rendered for, and refers back to chap. ii. 21-27, in which verses times of great temporal prosperity are promised to the Jews. With this prosperity was intimately connected the punishment of the nations by which they had been afflicted; and, accordingly, such punishment forms the subject of the present chapter. Instead of אֲשֶׁר, the Keri substitutes אֲשֶׁנָּב, in which it is supported by twenty-five of Kennicott's MSS.; but the frequent occurrence of שָׁבוּ שְׁבוּתָם, in which the Kal form is to be taken causatively, shows that there was no necessity for the emendation. See Ps. xiv. 7, liii. 7, cxxvi. 7; Is. lii. 8. Some interpret the phrase of a general restoration to circumstances of prosperity, without any reference to previous circumstances of actual captivity, as in the case of Job xlii. 10; but considering its common application to the return from Babylon, and the express mention of the scattering of the nation among the heathen, ver. 2, it seems more natural to refer it to the same event in this place. That the restoration of the Jews from their present dispersion is meant, and that the judgments to be inflicted on the nations are those which are predicted, Rev. xvi. 14, 16, is rendered impossible

- On account of my people, and Israel mine inheritance, Whom they have scattered among the nations,
And have divided my land ;
3 And have cast lots for my people,
And given a boy for an harlot,
And sold a girl for wine,
That they might drink.
4 And truly, what are ye to me, O Tyre and Zidon !

by the introduction of the Tyrians, Sidonians, Philistines, etc. verses 4 and 19, since these states all received their punishment prior to the advent of Christ. By עמק יהושפט, the valley of Jehoshaphat, some understand the narrow valley through which the brook Kedron flows, between the city of Jerusalem and the mount of Olives. To this valley or glen, in which is the celebrated burying-place of the Jews, the Rabbins have appropriated the name, and maintain, that in it the final judgment of the world is to be held ;— a conceit in which they have been followed by many Christian writers, as well as by the Mohammedans. Others suppose it to be a designation of the valley, otherwise called עמק ברכה, the valley of blessing, 2 Chron. xx. 26 ; but as neither of these localities at all comport with the magnitude of the subject treated of by the prophet, we have no alternative but that of considering the words, not as constituting a proper name, or the name of any specific locality, but as symbolical in their import, and designed to characterize the theatre of the bloody wars that took place after the Babylonish captivity, by which the hostile nations contiguous to Judea had signal vengeance inflicted upon them. They literally signify, the valley where Jehovah judgeth, and mean the scene of divine judgments. The term valley appears to have been selected on account of such locality being mentioned in Scripture as the usual theatre of military conflict. This view of the subject is supported by the Targ. in which the words are not retained, but translated עמק פלג דין, the plain of the distribution of judgment, and by the translation of Theodot. τῆ χώραν τῆς κρίσεως. The nations to be punished are restricted, ver. 2, to such as should have scattered the Jews, and occupied their land. Comp. chap. ii. 17.

3. The Jews were frequently treated in the most ignominious manner by their enemies. Such conduct is here affectingly set forth. That it was customary to cast lots for those who were taken captive, see Obad. ver. 11 ; Nah. iii. 10. The giving of a boy for a whore, does not mean the exchange of the one for the other, but the payment of the captive for an act of sensual indulgence ; just as the selling of a girl for wine, means giving her in compensation for a draught of it. Comp. Gen. xxxviii. 17 ; comp. also Deut. xxii. 18, where אֶתֶּנָּה זֶנֶה, the hire of a whore, is coupled with מְחִירֵי הַכֶּלֶב, the price of a dog ; and the Arabic proverb, ابن زانية بريت, the son of a whore hired with oil. Meid. xciv. Char-den mentions that when the Tartars came into Poland, they carried off all the children they could, and, finding at length that they were not redeemed, sold them at the low price of a crown. In Mingrelia, he adds, they sell them for provisions, and for wine.

4. Among the nations bordering on the country of the Jews, which had rendered themselves particularly obnoxious to the divine wrath, were those on the west, for which see on Is. xxiii. and xiv. 28. וְגַם מִה אַתֶּם לִי, and truly what are ye to me ? Think ye that I make any account of you ? or that ye can successfully oppose yourselves to me ? The interrogation is altogether different in meaning, as it is in form, from the idiom

And all the coasts of Philistia ?

Will ye retaliate upon me ?

If, indeed, ye retaliate upon me,

Speedily and swiftly I will bring your retaliation

Back upon your own head.

5 Because ye have taken away my silver and my gold ;

And my goodly objects of delight

Ye have carried into your temples ;

6 And have sold the sons of Judah and the sons of Jerusalem

To the sons of the Javanites,

That they might be removed far from their own border.

7 Behold ! I will arouse them from the place

Whither ye have sold them ;

מִהַרְצֵי וְגַלְיָהּ, what have we in common? with which Kimchi compares it. גַּלְיָהּ, circuits, districts. Comp. Josh. xiii. 2, where the word is rendered coasts in our version. They were properly provinces, of which there were five in number, each governed by a פְּרִיךָ, prince, or lord. בְּכָל, all, before גַּלְיָהּ, expresses contempt. אֵל, is not here correlate with הוּא, in הַגְּמֹלָה, but puts a fresh case for the sake of argument. The case supposed, however, was true in fact. The interrogative אֵל assumes here the form of the article, as in several other places. See on Amos v. 25. גַּמְלָה, signifies to do good or evil to any one; then to recompense him, either with good or evil; to reward, retaliate. The meaning here seems to be, that if these bordering states, taking advantage of certain untoward circumstances in the history of the Jews, attempted to revenge the victories gained over them by the latter, they should be dealt with in the way of divine retaliation. Jehovah here speaks of what was done to his people as done to himself. Comp. Zech. ii. 8; Matt. xxv. 40. קָלָה מְהֵרָה, is an asyndeton. Comp. Is. v. 26, where the order of the words is reversed.

5. As in the preceding verse God had identified himself with his people, so here he speaks of their property as his. Some suppose the precious vessels belonging to the temple to be intended by מַזְבְּחֵי הַמִּזְבֵּחַ, but the articles of private property most highly esteemed by the Jews are more probably meant; since it does not appear that ever the enemies specified by Joel plundered the temple at Jerusalem, though express mention is made of the plunder of the royal palace by the Philistines, etc., 2 Chron. xxi. 17. Comp. Hos. xiii. 15; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 19. It was customary to hang up or deposit in the idolatrous temples, as presents dedicated to the gods, certain portions of the spoils taken in war. Arrian, ii. 24. Curtius, iv. 2.

6. בְּנֵי יָוָן, the sons of the Javanites, i. e. the Grecians. Comp. ἄες Ἀχαιῶν, of Homer; and see on Is. lxvi. 19. Credner, Hitzig, and some others, think that the prophet refers to Javanites of Arabia Felix, mentioned Ezek. xxvii. 19; but the reasons they adduce in favor of their opinion are insufficient to establish the point. In Ezek. xxvii. 13, Javan is mentioned, along with Tubal and Meshech, as trading in the persons of men with the merchants of Tyre. Slavery formed an important article of Phœnician commerce, and equally so of that carried on by the Greeks, to whom the former might easily convey the Jewish captives. So famous did the island of Delos become as a slave mart, that sometimes 10,000 were bought and sold in a single day.

7, 8. שְׁבָאִים, Sabeans; Pococke's Arab.

MSS. اهل اليمن, the people of Jemen.

- And bring back your retaliation
 Upon your own head ;
 8 I will sell your sons and your daughters
 Into the hand of the sons of Judah,
 And they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a distant nation ;
 For Jehovah hath spoken it.
 9 Proclaim ye this among the nations ;
 Prepare war ; rouse the mighty ;
 Let all the warriors approach ; let them come up.
 10 Beat your coulters into swords,
 And your pruning-hooks into spears ;
 Let the feeble say, I am mighty.
 11 Hasten and come, all ye nations around,

See on Is. lx. 6. As the Sabeans traded with India, it is not improbable that קִי־רָחֵק, distant, may be designed to include that part of the East; though it is said of the Queen of Sheba, that she came ἐκ τῶν περάτων τῆς γῆς, Matt. xi. 42. This prophecy was fulfilled before and during the rule of the Maccabees, when the Jewish affairs were in so flourishing a state, and the Phœnician and Philistine powers were reduced by the Persian arms under Artaxerxes Mnemon, Darius Ochus, and especially Alexander and his successors. On the capture of Tyre by the Grecian monarch, 13,000 of the inhabitants were sold into slavery. When he took Gaza also, he put 10,000 of the citizens to death, and sold the rest, with the women and children, for slaves. Favorable, on the other hand, as he was to the Jews, there can be no doubt that he ordered the liberation of such of them as were captives in Greece.

9. קָרְאוּ, this, refers to what immediately follows: the assembling of the different nations, in order to engage in the wars in which, in succession, they were, as political states, to be subdued and perish. מְכַלְכֵּל, is not simply to prepare, as Kimchi explains it, but to prepare by the use of religious rites and ceremonies, such as the heathen employed when they undertook a military enterprise.

10. Here a state of things is presented to view, directly the opposite of what was to exist in the days of the Messiah, Is. ii. 4; Micah iv. 3. Such was to be the extent of the conflict, that, in the lack of a sufficient number of arms, the ordinary implements of husbandry would be converted into weapons.

“—— squalent abductis arva
 colonis,
 Et curvæ rigidum falces conflantur in ensem.”

Virgil. Georg. i. 507.

“Sarcula cessabant, versique in pila
 ligones,
 Factaque de rastro pondere cassis
 erat.”

Ovid. Fast. i. 699.

11. וְהָסְרוּ, a ἄπαξ λεγ. in all probability the same in signification with וְהָסְרוּ, to hasten. The ancient versions follow the LXX., who render, συναθροίσεις.

Arab. عاش, vitam duxit, vixit; hence the idea of liveliness, activity, agility, etc. הִסְרָה, is the Imperative in Hiphil of הִסְרָה, to descend, go or come down. The place whither, is the scene of warfare, the valley of Jehoshaphat, implied in הַמְּדִינָה, which with the ה is frequently the same in signification with הִסְרָה. The abrupt transition to Jehovah has a powerful effect. Whatever might be the individual views of those engaged in the conflict, they were the instruments of Divine

- And gather yourselves together ;
 Thither cause thy mighty ones to come down, O Jehovah !
 12 Let the nations be roused, let them come up
 To the valley of Jehoshaphat ;
 For there I will sit to judge all the nations around.
 13 Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe :
 Come, descend, for the wine-press is full,
 The vats run over ;
 For their wickedness is great.
 14 Multitudes ! multitudes
 In the valley of decision !
 For the day of Jehovah is near,

wrath, and are on this account called the "mighty ones" of Jehovah. Comp. Is. x. 5-7.

12. To give prominence to the interest which God had in what was to take place, the metaphor is here changed into that of a judicial process, in which he acts as judge, and gives a just decision against the enemies of his people. For עָמְקֵי יְהוֹשָׁפָט see on ver. 2. Here, as in that verse, the nations to be punished were those מְסֻבִּיב, circumjacent to Judea.

13. The prophet now employs metaphors taken from the harvest and the vintage, which strikingly express the havoc and destruction effected by war: the one denoting the slaughter or cutting down of armies, and the other the effusion of their blood. The same images are similarly employed, Is. xvii. 5, 6, lxiii. 2 ; Lam. i. 15 ; and especially Rev. xiv. 14-20. מַגְלָה, a sickle, Arab.

منجل, Syr. مَجْل. In Arab. the root,

نَجَلَ signifies to cut. The sickles of the East, as represented on Egyptian monuments, pretty much resembled ours, only some of them were smaller, and had more the appearance of a knife hooked at the end. نَزَلَ, from نَزَر, to descend, some take to be used here in the acceptation of the Arab. نَجَى, calavit.

Thus the LXX. πατεῖτε. But as in order to tread the grapes it was necessary to go down into the wine-press, it seems better to abide by the ordinary signification of the Hebrew verb, and to consider the action of treading to be implied, rather than expressed. At the close of the verse the metaphor is dropped, and the cause of the thing signified is boldly presented to view.

14. הַמְּגִיבִים הַמְּגִיבִים, multitudes, multitudes, a Hebraism for immense multitudes. This rendering is preferable to that of tumults. In the preceding verses, the nations are called upon to assemble, and here the prophet, beholding them congregated in obedience to the summons, breaks out into an appropriate exclamation in regard to their number. מְרִיבֵי, Piscator, the Geneva English, Calvin, Leo Juda, Michælis, Justi, Holzhausen, and Credner, take in the sense of threshing. Kimchi, Tanchum, Abulwalid, Newcome, and some others, render excision; but the LXX. Theodot. Syr. Targ. Theodoret, Dathe, Rosenmüller, Gesenius, Hitzig, Maurer, Ewald, and Fürst, translate the word by decision or judgment, which seems more in keeping with the name of the valley, and the idea of a judicial process, set forth ver. 12. Comp. for the acceptation to determine, decide, as attaching to the verb מְרִיבֵי, 1 Kings xx. 40 ; Is. x. 22. The meaning is the decision or doom of the nations to which the prophecy refers. The repetition of מְרִיבֵי מְרִיבֵי, heightens the effect.

In the valley of decision.

- 15 The sun and the moon shall be darkened,
And the stars shall withdraw their shine.
- 16 For Jehovah shall roar out of Zion,
And utter his voice from Jerusalem,
And the heavens and the earth shall shake ;
But Jehovah is a refuge for his people,
A stronghold for the sons of Israel.
- 17 And ye shall know that I Jehovah am your God, Dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain ;
Then shall Jerusalem be holy ;
Foreigners shall invade her no more.
- 18 And it shall come to pass in that day,
That the mountains shall drop new wine,
And the hills shall flow with milk,

15. A figurative mode of representing the removal of the political rulers of the world. Comp. chap. ii. 10, 31.

16. These words, as Chandler properly remarks, seem to intimate very plainly, that at least part of the judgments here threatened to be exerted upon the neighboring nations, should be executed by the Jews themselves. They doubtless refer to the victories obtained by Mattathias, and his sons the Maccabeans. As king of the Jewish nation, Jehovah had his residence in Jerusalem, whence he caused his power to be exerted to the discomfiture of his enemies, and the deliverance and protection of his people. Comp. Ps. xviii. 13 ; Hab. iii. 10, 11. צָעַק, to roar, is properly used of the lion, but is metaphorically applied to God, to express the terrible majesty with which he encounters his foes. Comp. Jer. xxv. 30 ; Amos i. 2. iii. 8.

17. יָדַע, is here, as in Is. lii. 6. lx. 16 ; Hos. ii. 20, to be taken in the acceptation of experiencing, knowing by experimental proofs of the divine kindness. This the Jews did in the deliverances effected on their behalf, after the return from the captivity, especially on the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, and in the enjoyment of their national and religious privileges, till the termination of their polity. That the strong language at the close of the verse does not imply a state of immunity from invasion, to which there was absolutely to be no end, will appear on comparing Is. lii. 1, and Nah. i. 15. See my note on the former of these passages. From the death of Antiochus till the coming of the Messiah, no hostile power should take possession of the holy city. To express the perfect immunity from idolatry, by which Jerusalem should be characterized, קִדְּוָה, holiness in the abstract, is used. Comp. Obad. 17. By זָרִים, strangers, or barbarians, foreign enemies are meant.

18. A splendid figurative representation of the extraordinary prosperity to be accorded to the Jewish people after the destruction of their enemies.

Thus Tanchum in Pococke, استعارة

لكثره الخصب والبركات

metaphorical language, denoting abundance of plenty and blessings." Comp. Is. xxx. 23-25, xlv. 3, and especially Amos ix. 13.

"Flumina jam lactis, jam flumina nectaris ibant, Flavaque de viridi stillabant ilice mella."
Ovid. Metam. i. 111.

And all the channels of Judah shall flow with water,
 And a fountain shall go forth from the house of Jehovah,
 And water the valley of Acacias.

- 19 Egypt shall become desolate,
 And Edom a desolate wilderness,
 For the violence done to the sons of Judah,
 Because they shed innocent blood in their land.
 20 But Judah shall be inhabited for ever,
 And Jerusalem to successive generations.
 21 And I will regard their blood as innocent,

Καὶ τότε δὴ χαρὰν μεγάλην θεὸς ἀν-δράσι δώσει
 Καὶ γὰρ γῆ καὶ δένδρα καὶ ἄσπετα
 θρέμματα γαίης
 Δάσουσιν καρπὸν τὸν ἀληθινὸν ἀνδρώποισι
 Οἴνου καὶ μέλιτος γλυκέως, λευκοῦ τε
 γάλακτος
 Καὶ σίτου, ὅπερ ἔστι βροτοῖς κάλλιστον πάντων.

Sibyl. Orac.

עֵיִן שִׁטִּים הַבְּרָא, the valley of Shittim, i. e. Acacias. There was a place of this name in the country of Moab, Num. xxv. 1, xxxiii. 49; Josh. ii. 1; but most interpreters think that the valley is meant through which the Kidron flows to the Dead Sea. Consistency of interpretation requires us to understand this part of the verse figuratively of the most desert and arid spots, such as the acacia is fond of. Fertility was to go forth from the presence of Jehovah into the whole land. Viewed in this light, there is no incongruity in representing the water as extending even across the Jordan, however impossible it might be as a physical phenomenon. Comp. Ezek. xlvi. 1-12; Zech. xiv. 8.

19. The wrongs done to the Jews by the Egyptians and Idumeans, which the prophet here declares were to be avenged, were those committed at different times after the captivity. Palestine suffered greatly during the wars between the Syrian and Egyptian kings, especially in the reign of Ptolemy Epiphanes, when they exposed themselves to the indignation of that king by siding with Antiochus the Great. In the time of Cleopatra also, her son Lathyrus gained a victory over the army of Alexander Janneus, in which the Jews lost upwards of thirty thousand men; and who, to increase the terror of his name, massacred the women and children, cut their bodies in pieces, and boiled the flesh. The Idumeans, though less formidable, never omitted any favorable opportunity that offered of showing their hostility to the Jews. The condition to which both these countries were speedily reduced, and in which they have remained to the present day, verifies the prediction here delivered. Instead of עֲוֹנוֹת בְּנֵי יְהוּדָה, a number of MSS. exhibit the synonymous עֲוֹנוֹתָם. — עֲוֹנוֹת בְּנֵי יְהוּדָה, the violence of the sons of Judah, is the Genitive of object, meaning the violence done to them. Comp. Obad. 10. עֲוֹנוֹתָם is spelt עֲוֹנוֹתָם here and Jonah i. 14; but in the present text, nine of Kennicott's MSS. and four of De Rossi's, with eight more originally, read עֲוֹנוֹתָם. Among these are four Spanish MSS., two of which De Rossi characterizes as accuratissimi. The pronominal affix in עֲוֹנוֹתָם, refers to the Jews spoken of immediately before.

20. עֲוֹנוֹתָם, is used passively, as in Is. xiii. 20. עֲוֹנוֹתָם and עֲוֹנוֹתָם, are to be limited by the subject to which they are predicated. Thus the state of desolation during the seventy years' captivity in Babylon, is said to be עֲוֹנוֹתָם, for ever, Jer. xviii. 16.

21. In the words עֲוֹנוֹתָם לֹא נִקְוָה לָם, refers to the Jews spoken of immediately before.

Which I have not regarded as innocent ;
And Jehovah shall dwell in Zion.

there is an ellipsis of  $\text{אָפַּרְוָה}$ , after  $\text{הַמִּטְהַרִּים}$ , the affix in which refers to the Jews, not to their enemies. Almost all the interpreters have stumbled at  $\text{נִקְיָתִי}$ , the verb here employed, but they have generally got over the difficulty, by giving to it the signification of  $\text{נִקְמַתִּי}$ , I have avenged — a signification which nowhere attaches to it in the Hebrew Bible. For the different explanations see Pococke.  $\text{נִקְהָה}$ ,

Arab.  $\text{نَقِيَ}$ , purus, mundus fuit, ii. and

iv. mundavit. Syr. in Pael, sacrificavit, libavit. In Niph. the Heb. verb. signifies to be morally pure, to be free from punishment; in Piel, as here, to regard, pronounce, or treat as innocent, to pardon. The words were doubtless suggested by  $\text{אֲנִי נִקְיָתִי}$  in the preceding verse, and are to be rendered, I will regard their blood as innocent, which I have not regarded as innocent; i. e. I will pardon those whom I have treated as guilty. My people, whom I have punished on account of their apostasies, I will henceforth regard with favor and love. The affix  $\text{אֲנִי}$  in  $\text{נִקְיָתִי}$ , corresponds to the same in  $\text{אֲפָרְוָה}$ , ver. 19. —  $\text{שֶׁבֶר}$ , the Participle used with futurity of signification.

A M O S.

---

PREFACE.

AMOS, (Heb. אָמֹס, burden, a word purely Hebrew, and not of Egyptian origin, and the same as Amasis or Amosis, as Gesenius conjectures,) was, as we learn from the inscription, a native of Tekoah, a small town in the tribe of Judah, at the distance of about twelve miles south-east of Jerusalem. The country round being sandy and barren, was destitute of cultivation, and fit only to be occupied by those addicted to pastoral life. Among these our prophet was originally found; and, though it was counted no disgrace in ancient times, any more than it is at the present day in Arabia, to follow this occupation, kings themselves being found in it, (2 Kings iii. 4,) yet there is no reason to suppose that Amos belonged to a family of rank or influence, but the contrary. No mention is made of his father; but too much stress is not to be laid upon this circumstance. That he had been in poor circumstances, however, appears from the statement made chap. vii. 14; from which also it is incontrovertible, that no change of circumstances intervened, which may be supposed to have been more favorable to mental culture, but that he was called at once to exchange the life of a shepherd for that of a prophet.

Though a native of the kingdom of Judah, he discharged the functions of his office in that of Israel — a fact which is to be accounted for, not, as Bertholdt conjectures, on the ground of some personal relations, but by an express Divine commission to occupy it as the scene of his labors. Eichhorn ingeniously supposes the reasons of his selection to have been, that the appearance of a foreign prophet was much more calculated to excite attention than that of a native, and that such a prophet was more likely to command respect than any belonging to a kingdom in which impostors and fanatics abounded.

The time at which he prophesied is stated in general terms, chap. i. 1, to have been in the reigns of Uzziah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam II., king of Israel, the former of whom reigned B. C. 811–759, and the latter B. C. 825–784, but in which of these years he was called to the office, and how long he continued to exercise it, we are not told. Even if any dependence could be placed upon the Jewish tradition, Joseph. Antiq. ix. 10, 4, and Jerome on Amos i. 1, that the earthquake mentioned here, and Zech. xiv. 5, took place when Uzziah attempted to usurp the sacerdotal functions, we should still be unable to fix the exact date, since it is uncertain in what year the attempt was made.

That he was contemporary with Hosea, appears not only from the dates assigned in both their books, but from the identical state of affairs in the kingdom of the ten tribes, which they so graphically describe. Whether he flourished also in the days of Isaiah and Micah cannot be determined.

As we have already found, from the prophecy of Hosea, idolatry, with its concomitant evils, effeminacy, dissoluteness, and immoralities of every description, reigned with uncontrolled sway among the Israelites in the reign of Jeroboam the son of Joash. It is chiefly against these evils that the denunciations of Amos are directed.

The book may properly be divided into three parts: First, sentences pronounced against the Syrians, the Philistines, the Phœnicians, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Jews, and the Israelites, chapters i. and ii. Second, special discourses delivered against Israel, chapters iii.—vi. Third, visions, partly of a consolatory, and partly of a comminatory nature, in which reference is had both to the times that were to pass over the ten tribes, previous to the coming of the Messiah, and to what was to take place under his reign, chapters vii.—ix.

In point of style, Amos holds no mean place among the prophets. The declaration of Jerome, that he was imperitus sermonie, has not been justified by modern critics. On the contrary, it is universally allowed that, though destitute of sublimity, he is distinguished for perspicuity and regularity, embellishment and elegance, energy and fulness. His images are mostly original, and taken from the natural scenery with which he was familiar; his rhythmus is smooth and flowing; And his parallelisms are in a high degree natural and complete. In description, he is for the most part special and local; he excels in the minuteness of his groupings, while the general vividness of his manner imparts a more intense interest to all that he delivers. In some few instances, as in chapters iv. vi. and vii. the language approaches more to the prose style, or is entirely that of narrative.

From chap. vii. 10—13, it appears that the scene of his ministry was Bethel. Whether he left that place in consequence of the interdict of Amaziah, the priest, we know not. According to Pseudo-Epiphanius, he afterwards returned to his native place, where he died, and was buried with his fathers; but no dependence can be placed on the statement.

CHAPTER I.

AFTER a chronological and general introduction, ver. 1, 2, this chapter contains a heavy charge, accompanied with denunciations, against the Syrians of Damascus, 3-5; the Philistines, 6-8; the Phœnicians, 9, 10; the Idumeans, 11, 12; and the Ammonites, 13-15.

1 THE words of Amos, who was among the shepherds of Tekoah, which he saw concerning Israel, in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam, the son of Joash, king of Israel, two years before the earthquake.

1. With the exception of the book of Jeremiah, that of Amos is the only one of the prophets commencing with אָמֹס, "The words of —." Comp. however, Hag. i. 12. The meaning is, the subjects or matters of oracular communication which he was employed by the prophetic Spirit to deliver, and which were now, under the influence of the same Spirit, committed to writing. Their divine origin is clearly determined by what is added, וְיָרָא אֲשֶׁר רָאָה, "which he saw," i. e. which were supernaturally presented to his mental vision. See on Is. i. 1. The preposition בַּ in אֲמַרְתִּי בְּעֵינַי, does not denote distinction, intimating that Amos was greater in point of wealth or respectability than the rest of the shepherds, as Kimchi would have it, but simply that he was of their number; he belonged to their condition of life, and followed their occupation. The phrase אֲמַרְתִּי בְּעֵינַי expresses, in fact, nothing more than אֲמַרְתִּי בְּעֵינַי. Comp. for similar usage 1 Sam. xix. 24; Ps. cxviii. 7; and the Arabic

وما نحن بعالين. זָקַר occurs only here, and 2 Kings iii. 4. By some it is supposed to denote the shepherd or keeper of a species of sheep and goats, distinguished by certain marks, and to be derived from זָקַר, to prick, or mark with punctures, and so to distinguish by such marks. By others, it is more properly referred for illustration to the Arab.

نقد, genus ovium deforme et brevipes, and نقاد, ovium, نقتد, appellatarum pastor. From the disesteem in which such animals were held, arose the proverb,

لذل من النفد, more vile than the NIKAD. At the same time, as their wool was valuable, they were kept in great numbers. In both instances in which the term occurs, it seems to be used in a more general acceptation. Aq. ἐν ποιμνοτρόφοις; Symm. and the fifth edit. ἐν τοῖς ποιμέσιν. The explanation of Cyril is not inept: Ἀμὼς γέγονεν αἰπόλος ἀνὴρ καὶ ποιμενικοῖς ἐδέσσι τε δὲ νόμοις ἐν τετραμμένον. The LXX. ἐν Ἀκκαρεῖμ, mistaking it for the name of a place where they supposed the prophet to have been when he received his Divine

2 And he said :

Jehovah roareth from Zion,
And uttereth his voice from Jerusalem ;
The pastures of the shepherds mourn,
And the summit of Carmel withereth.

3 Thus saith Jehovah :

For three transgressions of Damascus, communications. The ruins of תְּקוּעַ Arab. تقوع, Tekû' a, Dr. Robinson found covering an extent of four or five acres on an elevated hill, not steep, but broad at the top, about two hours distant from Bethlehem. On approaching it, he describes the landscape as rocky and sterile, yet rich in pasturage, as was testified by the multitude of the flocks. (Palestine, ii. pp. 181, 182.) The surrounding region, especially that in the direction of the Dead Sea, is called מְדִבְרַת הַקִּדְוִי, 2 Chron. xx. 20, and ἡ ἔρημος Θερσαί, 1 Macc. ix. 33. In this pasturing district, our prophet originally tended his flocks, and collected the sycamore figs. For the dates here specified, see the Introduction. The prophecy is specially directed against Israel, or the kingdom of the ten tribes, though that of Judah, and likewise several foreign states, are also expressly denounced. We possess no data by which to fix the year in which the earthquake, here mentioned, occurred. Zechariah, chap. xiv. 5, refers to it as having happened in the days of Uzziah, but he does not specify the year. According to Josephus, it took place on occasion of the invasion of the sacerdotal office by that monarch, Antiq. ix. 10, 4. As earthquakes are by no means uncommon at Palestine, it must have been unusually severe to entitle it to the speciality of reference here employed. Some interpret רָעַשׁ of a civil commotion, but without sufficient ground, as the connection Zech. xiv. 4, 5, shows.

2. Zion, or Jerusalem, being the central point of the theocracy, was the special residence of Jehovah, to whom the judgments afterwards denounced, are, in highly figurative language, immediately referred. צָרָה, commonly employed to express the roaring of the lion, is here used to set forth the awful character of those judgments. Dathe, stumbling at the boldness of the figure, renders, Jova ex Zione dira pronunciat; thereby destroying the poetical force of the language. Comp. Jer. xxv. 30; Job xxxvii. 4. רָעַשׁ in וְרָעַשׁ, marks the apodosis. For נִשְׁאֵר הַרְעִימָה, comp. נִשְׁאֵר הַרְעִימָה, Ps. xxiii. 2. בְּרָמֶל, Michaelis, Justi, and others take to be the Carmel, now called by the Arabs or Juttah, between two and three hours to the south of Hebron; but though the mountainous region about that place was more in the proximity of the prophet, yet the established scripture reference to the fertility of the celebrated Mount Carmel in the tribe of Asher seems to entitle the latter to the preference. In fact, there does not appear to be any mountain deserving the name in the hill country of Judah. The hill of Maon, which is close by, is not less than two hundred feet higher than the site of the ruins of the castle of Kurmul. See Robinson, ut sup. pp. 193-200. Besides the identical phrase, רֹאשׁ הַבְּרָמֶל, the summit of Carmel, which again occurs chap. ix. 3, in immediate connection with the sea, is employed in application to the western Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 42.

كرمول, Kurmul, which lies near Yutta,

3. Here begins a series of minatory predictions against different states, which extends to chap. ii. 8, where it merges in a continued denunciation of judgments directed almost exclusively against the Israelites. Instead of proceeding at once to charge the ten tribes with the flagrant evils of which they had been guilty, Amos commences with the Syrians, and after exposing their wicked-

And for four, I will not reverse it ;
 Because they threshed Gilead with sledges of iron ;
 4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael,
 And it shall devour the palaces of Benhadad.

ness, and that of the Philistines, the Phœnicians, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the Jews, he comes to his proper subject, on which he dwells throughout the rest of the book. Having roused the indignation of those among whom he prophesied against sin as exhibited in others, he charges it home upon themselves. Each of the eight predictions is ushered in by the solemn כִּי אֶמַר יְהוָה, thus saith Jehovah; and consists in part, in a repetition of the same symmetrical stanzas, with an intermixture of matter, varying according to the nature of the subjects treated of. Interpreters differ in regard to the precise meaning of the use made by our prophet of the numerals three and four. Similar formulæ are frequent in Hebrew. See Exod. xx. 5; Job v. 19, xxxiii. 14, 29; Prov. xxx. 15, 18, 21; Eccles. xi. 2; Is. xvii. 6; Mic. v. 4. Comp. the τρίς καὶ τετρακτίς of Homer; the terque quaterque of Virgil; and the ter et quater of Horace. The notion, that the two numbers are to be added, so as to bring out the perfect number seven, and thus to express the completeness or full measure of the iniquity, is not borne out by Hebrew usage. That the numbers are to be taken literally, as in Prov. xxx. where there is an enumeration of each of the particulars, is equally out of the question; the specification of the prophet being, in each case, limited to a single act of wickedness. Nor can the construction be admitted, I have not punished Damascus, etc. on account of three transgressions, but on account of a fourth I will punish her; since אֲנִי לֹא אֶפְיָרָהּ, obviously connects with both numerals. The only satisfactory mode of explication is, to regard the phrase as intensively proverbial, and designed to express multiplied or repeated delinquencies, of which the last, as the most atrocious, is uniformly described. The noun to which the suffix in אֶפְיָרָהּ relates, is not expressed, either before or after the verb, on the principle, that the subject referred to would naturally suggest itself to the mind of the reader. It is anticipative of the sentence of punishment delivered in the following verses. Comp. Num. xxiii. 20, in which is an ellipsis of the noun בָּרָהּ, the idea of which is expressed by the verb. Bp. Lowth proposes to render, "I will not restore it;" but without sufficient authority. שָׁבָה פְּבוֹתָי, "to reverse the captivity," is the phrase employed in such case. In the phrase, "I will not reverse," is a litotes — the meaning being, "I will certainly execute." For Damascus, which, as the metropolis, is put for the kingdom of Syria, see on Is. xvii. 1. The cruel treatment of the inhabitants of Gilead here referred to, is that to which they were subjected by Hazael and Benhadad, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. xiii. 3-7, both of which princes Amos mentions by name, ver. 4. It consisted in their being thrown before the threshing sledges, the sharp teeth of iron in the rollers of which tore and mangled their bodies. See on Is. xxviii. 27, and comp. 2 Sam. xii. 31, where we find the same punishment inflicted by David, by the law of retaliation. בְּרִיחַ, the LXX. render πλοισι σιδηροῖς, and add unwarrantably, τὰς ἐν γαστροῖς ἐχούσας; Symm. and Theod. τροχοῖς σιδηροῖς. שָׁרַף, to thresh, is the very term used in the history of the transaction, 2 Kings xiii. 7. Gilead comprehended the whole of the territory beyond the Jordan, belonging to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; and as it bordered on the kingdom of the Syrians, was particularly exposed to their attacks.

4. The Benhadad here mentioned was the son and successor of Hazael, and not the king of that name whom Hazael succeeded. Comp. 2 Kings viii. 7, 15,

- 5 I will also break the barrier of Damascus,
 And cut off the ruler from the valley of Aven,
 And the sceptre-holder from Beth-Eden,
 And the people of Syria shall go captive to Kir,
 Saith Jehovah.
- 6 Thus saith Jehovah ;
 For three transgressions of Gaza,
 And for four I will not reverse it ;
 Because they effected a complete captivity
 To deliver it up to Edom, with xiii. 3, 24. A similar prediction was afterwards delivered by Jeremiah, chap. xlix. 27, from which and from Hos. viii. 14, it is evident that the phraseology employed by Amos here, and verses 7, 10, 12, 14, chap. ii. 2, 5, is not peculiar to that prophet.

5. According to the testimony of a native, whom Michaelis consulted, there is a most delightful valley called Oon, about four hours distant from Damascus, towards the desert, which has given rise to a proverb, "Have you ever been in the valley of Oon?" meaning, Have you ever been in a place of delight? As, however, this has not been confirmed by any traveller, most expositors are inclined to refer the place to what is otherwise called בְּקֵעַת לֵבָנוֹן, "the valley of Lebanon," or البقاع, el Bukâ'a, between the ridges of Lebanon and Anti-Lebanon. Here are the celebrated ruins of the temple of Baalbec, the Syrian Heliopolis, to which the LXX. have expressly referred אָבֵן, Aven, only pronouncing it אָוֵן, On — ἐκ πειθίου ὄν; just as they have rendered the latter word when it is employed to denote the city of the same name in Egypt, which was dedicated to the sun. The Hebrews in Palestine, to express their abhorrence of the idolatrous worship practised at both places, pronounced the word אָבֵן, Aven, which properly signifies nothingness, vanity, and hence an idol, on account of its inutility. Comp. with the present passage Ezek. xxx. 17. יֹשְׁבֵי does not here denote inhabitant, or inhabitants generally, but as the parallel שֹׁמְרֵי הַשֵּׁבֶט, sceptre-holder, shows, one who sits upon, or occupies a throne — a judge, prince, or king — the person exercising authority in the district specified. For the latter phrase, the σκηπτούχος of Homer may be compared. בֵּית עֵדֵן, Beth-Eden was, in all probability, the locality in the mountains of Lebanon, which Ptolemy, v. 15, calls Παράδεισος; where the royal family had a palace, and where one of its members usually resided. The name is still given to a delectable valley to the west of Damascus. The Aram, or Syria, here referred to, is that of which Damascus was the capital. By כִּיר, Kir, is meant the river and region of the Cyrus in Iberia, now called Kur. See on Is. xxii. 6; and for the accomplishment of the prediction in the successful expedition of Tiglathpileser, king of Assyria, 2 Kings xvi. 9. The version of the LXX. is here extremely faulty, as the slightest comparison with the original will show.

6. גָּזָה, Arab. غَزَّة, Ghuzzeh, Gaza, was the southernmost of the five principal cities of the Philistines, which formed the capitals of so many satrapies of the same names. It was situated at the distance of about an hour's journey from the south-east coast of the Mediterranean, from which it was separated by low hills and tracts of sand. It was built upon a hill, and strongly fortified, as the name imports. The modern city is built partly on the hill, but mostly on the plain below; and according to Dr. Robinson, contains a population of about 15,000 souls.

- 7 But I will send a fire into the wall of Gaza,
And it shall devour her palaces ;
- 8 And I will cut off the ruler from Ashdod,
And the sceptre-holder from Ashkelon :
And will turn back my hand upon Ekron.
And the residue of the Philistines shall perish,
Saith the Lord Jehovah.
- 9 Thus saith Jehovah :
For three transgressions of Tyre,

It must have been a place of high antiquity, for its name occurs in the genealogical table, Gen. x. ; and it occupied so commanding a position, that it formed the key to Palestine on the south. It stands here by synecdoche for the whole of Philistia. By אֲשֶׁלֶן, we are neither to understand, with the LXX. αἰχμαλωσίαν τοῦ Σαλωμών; nor with Justi, " a holy or pious captivity ; " nor with Grotius and Michaelis, captivitatem pacificam ; but the immense number of captives which were carried away from Judea in the reign of Ahaz, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. The capture was indiscriminate and universal ; none escaped. Comp. for the phrase Jer. xiii. 19. What aggravated the guilt of the Philistines, was that they did not treat the Jews as prisoners of war, but sold them as slaves to the Edomites, who were their bitterest enemies, and would treat them with the utmost cruelty. They were doubtless conveyed to Petra, the great emporium of commerce, and there sold to such as might purchase them. Comp. Joel iii. 4-6.

7. אֵשׁ, fire, is here metaphorically used for war, in carrying on which, however, it is often employed as one of the most destructive elements. Comp. Num. xxi. 28 ; Is. xxvi. 11.

8. For the meaning of אֲשֶׁן, see on ver. 5. Three others of the principal cities of the Philistines are now threatened, אַשְׁדּוֹד, Ashdod, for which see on Is. xx. 1 ; אַשְׁקְלוֹן, Arab. عسقلان,

Askelon, occupying a strong position on the top of a ridge of rock, which encircles it, and terminates at each end in the sea, and distant from Gaza about five hours in the direction of NN. E. ; and אֶקְרוֹן, Ekron, now called by the natives عكرو, Akir, the most northerly of the five, and at some distance inland from the line of hills which run along the coast of the Mediterranean. See Dr. Robinson's Palestine, III. 21-25. The reason why Gath, the remaining city of the five, is not mentioned, is assigned by Kimchi to be, its having been already subdued by David ; but as it was afterwards occupied both by the Syrians, 2 Kings xii. 17, and the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, it seems more natural to refer its omission to the fact of its reduction by Uzziah, in the days of our prophet, as narrated in the latter of the above passages. It is also omitted Zeph. ii. 4, 5. הִשִּׁיב יָדְךָ עָלַי, to turn the hand upon, means to exert one's power anew, whether in the way of favor or of hostility. Here it is obviously to be taken in the hostile sense. No part of Philistia was to remain unvisited by Divine judgments. Comp. Jer. xlvii. 4 ; Ezek. xxv. 16. In which of the reductions of the Philistines, the prediction received its fulfilment, we cannot determine. One of these took place during the reign of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7 ; another in that of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 8 ; they were afterwards successively reduced by Psammetichus, king of Egypt, by Nebuchadnezzar, by the Persians, by Alexander, and ultimately by the Asmoneans.

9. A similar charge is here brought against the Phœnicians, with the super-added aggravation of a breach of an-

- And for four, I will not reverse it ;
 Because they delivered up a complete captivity to Edom,
 And remembered not the covenant of the brethren.
- 10 But I will send a fire into the wall of Tyre,
 And it shall devour her palaces.
- 11 Thus saith Jehovah :
 For three transgressions of Edom,
 And for four, I will not reverse it ;
 Because he pursued his brother with the sword,
 And did violence to his pity,
 And his anger tore continually,
 And he retained his wrath for ever.
- 12 But I will send a fire into Teman,
 And it shall devour the palaces of Bozrah, cient faith. Comp. Joel iii. 4-6. The  $\text{בְּרִית אֶחָדִים}$ , covenant of brethren, includes the terms of friendship and mutual assistance which were agreed upon between David and Hiram, 2 Sam. v. 11 ; and afterwards between Solomon and the same monarch, 1 Kings v. See especially ver. 12, (Heb. ver. 26,) where it is expressly stated, that  $\text{בְּרִיתוֹ בְּרִיתָהּ וְשָׁנִייהֶם}$ , "they two made a league," or covenant.

10. For Tyre, and the accomplishment of this prediction, see on Is. xxiii.

11. For Edom, and the fulfilment of the prophecy here pronounced against it, see on Is. xxxiv. 5. The guilt of the cruelties exercised by the Idumeans upon the Jews was greatly aggravated by the circumstance of their original relationship, Obad. 10. and the unrelenting perpetual character of their hatred.  $\text{שָׁהָרַם רָחֵם־מִיִּם}$ , lit. to spoil, or destroy compassions ; i. e. so to repress all the tender feelings of pity, as to become hardened against objects of distress. Comp. the phrase,  $\text{שָׂדֵה חָכְמָה}$ , to destroy wisdom, Ezek. xxviii. 17. The LXX. Ital. Arab. Döderlein, Dathe, Vater, Justi, and some others, take  $\text{רָחֵם־מִיִּם}$ , in the sense of  $\text{רָחֵם}$ , the womb, and explain it either of pregnant females, or of the fruit of the womb, i. e. children ; but the plural is never used in this acceptation.  $\text{Aq. σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ}$  ; Symm.  $\text{σπλάγχνα ἰδία}$ . The root $\text{רָחַם}$ , Arab.  $\text{رحم}$ , Syr.  $\text{رَحِم}$ , signifies to love, in Piel, to regard with tender affection, to cherish feelings of compassion towards any one. The  $\text{ה}$  in  $\text{שָׁהָרַם}$ , is generally considered to be an instance of a paragogic in the third person, but it is preferable to construe it as the pronominal feminine affix, agreeing with  $\text{רָחַם}$  in the nominative absolute. The absence of the Mappic forms no objection, as there are several instances of its omission where we might have expected it. The accent on the penultimate favors this construction, being occasioned solely by the absence of the Mappic. The verb, to be taken as a feminine, must be pointed  $\text{שָׁהָרַחַם}$ , but this would require  $\text{רָחַם}$  to be the subject instead of the object, which would be intolerably harsh. Comp. for the sentiment, and an elliptical form of the phraseology, Jer. iii. 5. The Hebrews speak of keeping a quality, whether good or bad, when they would express its prolonged or continued exercise. See Neh. ix. 32 ; Dan. ix. 4.

12. That  $\text{תֵּימָן}$ , Teman, was a city, seems evident from its being mentioned along with  $\text{בּוֹזְרָה}$ , Bozrah, for which see on Is. xxxiv. 6. Though Jerome speaks of it as a region, he mentions, in his Onomasticon, a town of this name, at the distance of five miles from Petra. On

13 Thus saith Jehovah :

For three transgressions of the sons of Ammon,
And for four, I will not reverse it ;
Because they ripped up those who were pregnant in Gilead,
That they might enlarge their border.

14 But I will kindle a fire on the wall of Rabbah,

And it shall devour the palaces thereof ;
With a shout in the day of battle,
With a tempest in the day of the storm.

the map of Burckhardt and Grimm, it is placed to the south of Wady Mûsa. It was doubtless the principal place in the district inhabited by the descendants of Teman, one of the grandsons of Esau, Gen. xxxvi. 11, 15, who were celebrated on account of their superior wisdom, Jer. xlv. 7. Comp. Obad. 8, 9, and Baruch iii. 22. Eliphaz, one of Job's friends, was a Temanite. The reason why no mention is made of Sela, or Petra, Credner thinks is to be found in the fact, that it had already been captured by Amaziah, 2 Kings xiv. 7, of whose conquests in that direction advantage was taken by his son Uzziah, ver. 22 ; 2 Chron. xxvi. 2.

13. בני עמון, the Ammonites, descendants of Lot, Gen. xix. 3, occupied the territory on the east of the Jordan, between the rivers Jabbok and Arnon, but more in the direction of the Arabian desert. That portion of country which lay along the Jordan, of which they had possessed themselves, originally belonged to the Amorites, which accounts for its being given to the tribe of Gad, Josh. xiii. 25. They frequently annoyed the Hebrews, but were repelled by David and several of his successors. For the sake of plunder, they joined the Chaldeans on their invasion of Judea ; and, even after the captivity, they evinced the same hostile disposition. They were severely chastised by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Macc. v. 6, 7. Justin Martyr speaks of them as still a numerous people in his day, Ἀμμωνιῶν ἔστι νῦν πολὺ πλῆθος. Dial. cum Tryph. p. 347. Ed. Paris, 1615. The atrocious cruelty here charged upon the Ammonites, appears to have formed no unusual part of the barbarities practised by the ancients in war. Comp. 2 Kings viii. 12, xv. 16 ; Hos. xiii. 16, (Heb. xiv. 1 ; ) and my note on the last passage. See also 1 Sam. xi. 2. The object of the Ammonites was to effect an utter extermination of the Israelites inhabiting the mountainous regions of Gilead, in order that they might extend their own territory in that direction.

14. רַבָּה, Rabbah, i. e. "the Great," was the metropolis of the country of the Ammonites, the extensive ruins of which have recently been discovered by Seetzen and Burckhardt on the banks of the river Moiet Amman, which empties itself into the Jabbok. The full form of the name was רַבָּת בְּנֵי עַמּוֹן, Deut. iii. 11, by which it was distinguished from Rabbah of Moab, and a city of the same name in the tribe of Judah. It is called Ραβαδάμωνα by Polybius and Stephen of Byzantium ; but it otherwise went among the Greeks by the name of Φιλαδέλφια, which it derived from Ptolemy Philadelphus. It is now known by that of عَبان, Amman, the same given to it by Abulfeda in his Tab. Syr. p. 91. By צַהֲרָה, is meant the tremendous shout which eastern armies give at the commencement of battle, partly to excite their courage, and partly to strike terror into the enemy. Comp. Exod. xxxii. 17 ; Josh. vi. 5, 20. Thus the Iliad, iii. 1, etc. —

Αὐτὰρ ἐπεὶ κόσμηθεν ἄμ' ἠγεμνεσσιν ἕκαστοι,
Τρῶες μὲν κλαγγῇ τ', ἔνοπῃ τ' ἴσαν,
θρῦδες ὄσ'·
Ἥύτε περ κλαγγῇ γερῶνων, κ. τ. λ.

15 Their king shall go into captivity,
He and his princes together,
Saith Jehovah.

הַמְּצִיף, hurricane, and הַמְּצִיף, storm or temp-est, mark the resistless force of the onset, and the utterly destructive consequences resulting from it. That they are poet-ically applied to the warlike operations against Rabbah, is clear from הַיּוֹם סוּרְמָה, the day of storm, being parallel with הַיּוֹם מִלְחָמָה, the day of battle.

15. מֶלֶכָּם, their king, the Syr. and Vulg. have understood of Malcam or Mil-com, i. e. Moloch, an idol of the Ammon-ites and Moabites; but the LXX. and Targ. support the common rendering, which שָׂרֵי, his princes, following, would seem absolutely to require. It is true, this term might be taken figuratively to sig-nify priests, as in Is. xliii. 28; and such interpretation might appear to be countenanced by the occurrence of מְהִיָּי his priests, in the parallel prophecy of Jeremiah, chap. xlix. 3; but the use of שָׂרֵי, his princes, immediately after by that prophet, shows that, if the former term be not an interpolation, it denotes the idolatrous priests who were in attend-ance upon the king, just as the princes were the chiefs and civil officers about the court. Οἱ ἱερεῖς ἀνθρώπων, which the LXX. have added in Amos, and which is copied in the Syr. and Arab., was probably borrowed from the passage in Jeremiah; or it may have been inserted in the Greek text by some copyist before these other versions were made. The combination of שָׂרֵי, princes, with שֹׁפֵט, judge, chap. ii. 3, confirms the above interpreta-tion.

---

CHAPTER II.

In this chapter we have the continuation of charges and denunciations against different na-tions, as the Moabites, 1-3; the Jews, 4, 5; and finally, the Israelites, who were to form the principal objects of the prophet's ministry, 6-8. Amos then proceeds to insist on their ungrateful conduct, notwithstanding the experience which they had had of distinguished favors at the hand of God, 9-13; and the futility of all hopes of escape which they might be led to entertain, 14-16.

1 Thus saith Jehovah:
For three transgressions of Moab,
And for four, I will not reverse it;

1 For Moab, see on Is. xv. The par-ticular act here charged against the Moa-bites is nowhere recorded. Michaelis is of opinion, that reference is had to 2 Kings iii. 27; but the prince there spoken of was the son of the king of Moab, and not the future heir to the Idumean throne. The wickedness appears to have consisted in a wanton violation of the sanctity of the tomb, by the disinterment and burning of the royal remains. It was indicative of an enmity which was not satisfied with inflicting every possible injury upon its

- Because they calcined the bones of the King of Edom.
- 2 But I will send a fire into Moab,
And it shall devour the palaces of Kerioth ;
And Moab shall die in the tumult,
At the shout, at the sound of the trumpet,
- 3 I will cut off the judge from the midst thereof,
And kill all the princes thereof with him,
Saith Jehovah.
- 4 Thus saith Jehovah :
For three transgressions of Judah,
And for four, I will not reverse it ;
Because they have despised the law of Jehovah,
And have not kept his statutes ;
And their false deities have caused them to err,
After which their fathers walked.
- 5 But I will send a fire into Judah,
And it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

victim while living, but pursued him even into the regions of the dead. Comp. Is. xxxiii. 12.

2. קְרִיּוֹת, Kerioth ; LXX. τῶν πόλεων ἀστῶν ; Targ. כְּרִבָּא, the fortress or citadel ; in all probability, the chief city, elsewhere called קִיר מוֹאָב, Kir-Moab, and here put in the plural, to describe its size, or appearance, as comprehending more than one. Comp. Jer. xlviii. 24, and on Is. xv. 1. שָׁמַיִךְ, here means the tumult of battle. Is. xiii. 4 ; xvii. 12.

3. From the circumstance that שֹׁפֵט, judge, and not מֶלֶךְ, king, is selected to describe the chief magistrate of Moab, it has not without reason, been supposed, that, at the time the prophet wrote, or, at least, at the time to which his prophecy refers, a change had taken place in the government of that country ; but whether it was occasioned by the extinction of the royal house, or the appointment of a ruler by a foreign power, it is impossible to decide. The reference which some have made to Ps. ii. 10, in proof that judge and king are identical, is not in point ; for, though the terms as there used are so far synonymous, that they both designate persons high in office, yet there is an obvious distinction both as it respects the degree of their rank, and the nature of the offices with which they were invested. The connecting of the princes with Moab (שָׂרֵי הָאָרֶץ) and not with the judge (שֹׁפֵט) as in chap. i. 15, goes to confirm the view just given.

4, 5. The charges brought against the Jews differ from any of the preceding, in the crimes which they involve having been committed directly against God, and not against man. They had become weary of his service, abandoned his worship, and addicted themselves to idolatrous practices. Between the synonyms here employed there is this difference of meaning : תּוֹרָה, law, stands for the institute of Moses generally, of which the moral code formed the basis ; חֻקֵּי, statutes, for the ceremonial and judicial enactments. By עֲבֹדֹת, lies, idols are meant, and the word is so rendered here in the Vulg. The LXX. have taken the same view of it, rendering it μδραια, vanities. Comp. for this acceptation Ps. xl. 5. Idols were so called because their pretensions and oracles were founded on falsehood, and because they deluded with false hopes those who worshipped them. Instead of being weaned from

- 6 Thus saith Jehovah :
 For three transgressions of Israel,
 And for four, I will not reverse it ;
 Because they sold the righteous for money,
 And the poor for a pair of sandals :
- 7 Who pant for the dust of the earth on the head of the poor,
 And turn aside the way of the afflicted ;
 A man and his father go in to the same damsel,
 In order to profane my holy name.
- 8 They stretch themselves upon pledged garments,
 Close to every altar ;

their attachment to the gods which their ancestors had, at different times, served, the Jews became increasingly addicted to them, and thereby brought upon themselves the punishment inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar.

6. The prophet, having secured the attention of the Israelites by his predictions against those communities which they regarded with feelings of hostility, comes now to his proper subject, which was to charge upon themselves the guilt which, in various ways, they, as a people, had contracted. יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, i. e. the Israelites, consisted, after the revolt in the time of Rehoboam, of the ten tribes, whose capital was Samaria, and whose worship, originally that of Jehovah, under the visible image of the golden calves, speedily merged in the basest and most licentious idolatry. מָכַר, to sell, has no reference, as some have thought, to the conduct of a corrupt judge, who for money gives a verdict against the innocent, the term never being used to express any such act ; but describes the selling of a person into slavery. They even deprived the poor of their liberty for the most paltry consideration. Comp. chap. viii. 6. בְּצַלְמֵי, sandals, are greatly inferior in value to shoes, consisting merely of soles of leather or wood, fastened by two straps to the feet, one of which passes over the forepart of the foot, near the great toe, and the other round the ankle.

7. חָפְזִים, signifies to breathe hard, to pant, eagerly to desire, which well suits the connection, so that there is no necessity, with Houbigant, Newcome, and others, to change the verb into כָּרַח, to attack, bruise, etc. The meaning of the prophet is, that the persons whom he describes were so avaricious, that, after having robbed others of their property, and reduced them to a state of poverty, they even begrudged them the small quantity of dust which they had cast on their heads in token of mourning. Comp. 2 Sam. i. 2 ; Job ii. 12. בְּרֵאשֵׁי, is elsewhere used in the acceptation of on or upon, and is here the more appropriately adopted, on account of the more usual preposition עַל having just been employed. Comp. chap. viii. 4. הִטְּוּהָ דָרְבָהּ, to turn, or thrust aside as to the way ; i. e. to turn any one out of his right course, into a trackless region, where he can expect nothing but inconvenience, perplexity and danger ; here, to render the afflicted still more miserable. From the reference made in the following verse to idolatrous deities and altars, it is most probable that הִטְּוּהָ דָרְבָהּ, the damsel here spoken of, was not an ordinary or common strumpet, but one who prostituted herself in honor of Astarte, at one of her shrines. LXX. τὴν αὐτὴν παῖδισατην. Such an act of daring profligacy was the more atrocious from its having been committed in a heathen temple, with the express design, as the prophet states, of doing indignity to Jehovah. See Gesenius, Lex. in צָנַץ, A) 2.

8. To retain pledged raiment over night was expressly prohibited by the

- And drink the wine of the amerced
 In the house of their gods.
9. Yet it was I that destroyed the Amorite before them,
 Whose height was as the height of cedars,
 And who was strong as the oaks;
 I destroyed his fruit above,
 And his roots beneath.
- 10 It was I also that brought you up from the land of Egypt,
 And led you in the desert forty years,
 To inherit the land of the Amorite.
- 11 And I raised up of your sons to be prophets,

Mosaic law, Exod. xxii. 26, 27, as it deprived the owner of his covering: to stretch one's self upon it in an idol's temple was a great aggravation of the crime. כִּבְדָּהּ, pledged, lit. bound, held in bondage, from כָּבַד, to bind. Arab. خبل,

Syr. سحب, debitum. It was not unusual for the heathen to sleep near the altars of their gods, that they might obtain communications in dreams; but as it was customary to eat in a recumbent posture, the stretching here referred to would rather seem to have respect to participation in idolatrous feasts, especially as the drinking of wine in the temples is specified in the following line. יַיִן צִנְיָהָם, the wine of the amerced, means wine purchased with money exacted by the imposition of fines. בִּיָּהָם, for בְּבִוְיָהָם, as frequently. Regardless of the sufferings of those whom they oppressed, the apostate Israelites revelled in sensual indulgences.

9. ו in וְנִשְׁבַּח, is strongly adversative, and introduces the contrast between the Divine conduct and that of the Israelites. The signal benefits which, as a nation, they had received from Jehovah, ought to have attached them for ever to his service. The conjunction and pronoun are repeated for like effect, verse 10. הָאֲמֹרִי, the Amorites, are here taken in a wide sense, as including all the inhabitants of Canaan, on account of their being the largest and most powerful of the nations which occupied that country. Comp. Gen. xv. 16, xlvi. 22. In a more special point of view, they inhabited both sides of the Jordan, and particularly the mountains afterwards possessed by the tribe of Judah. Their gigantic height and extraordinary strength, to which reference is frequently made in the history of the Hebrews, are here beautifully compared to cedars and oaks, the most majestic and sturdy trees of the forest. The Hebrew as well as the profane poets, often compare men to trees. Comp. Ps. xxxvii. 35, xcii. 12-15; Isa. x. 33, 34; Ezek. xvii. 3, xxxi. Sixteen MSS., originally twelve more, and now five; five of the oldest editions, and the Rabboth read מִפְּנֵיהֶם, "before you," instead of מִפְּנֵיהֶם, "before them," but these authorities, under all the circumstances of the text, are insufficient to warrant an alteration.

10. Jehovah goes back to still earlier, but no less remarkable displays of his kindness to the nation, showing that from the commencement of its history he had been its benefactor. Comp. Jer. ii. 6. עָלָה, to come or go up, is always used in Hebrew in reference to local or political elevation, and not, as Rosenmüller asserts, to the North. The circumstance that many of the regions or places to which persons are said to have gone up, lay to the north of those from which they came, is purely accidental; whereas the propriety of the use of the term lies in the fact of the mountainous character of the land of Canaan, while Egypt and the intervening regions were low and flat.

11. The prepositive מִן in מִבְּנֵיהֶם, and מִבְּהִוְיָהֶם, is partitive, indicating that

- And of your young men to be Nazarites.
 Is it not even so, O ye sons of Israel?
 Saith Jehovah.
- 12 But ye made the Nazarites drink wine,
 And ye charged the prophets,
 Saying, Prophecy not.
- 13 Behold, I will press you down,
 As the cart presseth which is full of sheaves.
- 14 And refuge shall fail the swift,
 The strong man shall not exert his strength,

some or certain persons out of the number were selected. The Divine condescension in the selection of any of their race to fill the offices here specified, laid them under additional obligations to devote themselves to the service of the true God; and not only was thereby a distinguished honor conferred upon them, but such institutions furnished them with the means of religious instruction, and examples of holy living. For נְבִיאִים, the prophets, see on Hos. xii. 11. נְזָרִיִּם, Nazarites, LXX. ἡγιασμένους, eis ἁγιασμον, from נָזַר, to separate, set one's self apart, abstain, were a class of persons among the Hebrews who ordinarily bound themselves by a voluntary vow to abstain either for a time, or for the whole period of life, from wine and all intoxicating liquors, and everything made of the produce of the vine; and not to shave their head nor touch any dead body. Sometimes persons were, before their birth, devoted by their parents to this abstinence; as in the cases of Samson, Samuel, and John the Baptist. For the law of the Nazarite, see Num. vi. and Winer's Realwörterb. The object of the institute appears to have been, to exhibit to the view of the nation the power of religious principle operating in the way of self-control, indifference to sensual gratification, and an entire consecration to the service of God. The importance which was attached to it in a moral point of view, is evident from those who thus exercised themselves in self-denial being classed along with the prophets. Respecting the undeniableness of the fact a pointed appeal is made at the close of the verse.

12. What could have been more flagrant than to tempt the pious to break their solemn vow, and attempt to induce the inspired ambassadors of Jehovah to withhold the communications of his will?

13. Here commence the denunciations against the apostate Israelites. The Participle מְצִיק, after הִקְנָה, is future in signification. See on Is. vii. 14. עִק occurs only here as a verb; but that it signifies to press, oppress, etc., is clear from the signification of the derivatives עִקָה, Ps. lv. 4, and מוֹצֵקָה, Ps. lvi. 2, as well as from the connection in which it here occurs. Comp. עִיק, and the Syr.

حَد, angustiatus est: حَمًا, angustia, pressura. Comp. also the Arab.

عاق, retinuit, impedivit: عرايق, accidentia fortuna, que impediunt hominem. The verb is used transitively in both instances, according to the ordinary signification of Hiphil. There is more force in speaking of a fully laden cart pressing the ground under it, than its being itself pressed by its contents. הִתַּח is to be taken in the sense of down, as in Job xl. 12. לֵא is pleonastic. The renderings of the LXX. and Vulg. ἐγὼ κυλίω ὑποκάτω ὑμῶν; ego stridabo subter vos, though advocated by some, are less appropriate. Newcome translates the latter hemistich thus: "As a loaded corn-wain presseth its sheaves;" but עָמַר is the objective case to הִתַּח, and not to הִצִּיק. As the object of the verb, supply אֶת-הָרֶגֶץ.

14-16. Every attempt to resist or escape from the evils that were coming upon the nation, would prove utterly

- 15 Neither shall the mighty deliver himself;
 He that handleth the bow shall not stand,
 And the swift-footed shall not escape :
 Neither shall he that rideth the horse deliver himself.
- 16 And he that is courageous among the heroes,
 Shall flee away naked in that day,
 Saith Jehovah.

fruitless. This sentiment is expressed under various forms, which are obviously accumulated for the sake of effect. ו at the beginning of ver. 14, is not merely conjunctive, but marks the consequence or result. Verse 15th is wanting in some of Kennicott and De Rossi's MSS. and in the Arab.; but the omission is no doubt owing to the homoioteleuton of this and the preceding verse; just as, for the same reason, the words corresponding to לֹא-יִמְלֹט גִּבּוֹרֵי at the end of ver. 14 are omitted in the Alexandrian copy of the LXX. The preposition ב in בְּגִבּוֹרֵי, gives to אֲמִיץ לְבוֹ, the force of the superlative. Comp. גִּבּוֹר בְּבֵהֵמָה, the strongest of beasts, Prov. xxx. 30; הַיְפֵסָה בְּנָשִׁימ, the most beautiful of women, Song i. 8, v. 9, vi. 1; εὐλογημένη ἐν γυναιξίν, Luke i. 28.

CHAPTER III.

THE prophet resumes the subject of the Divine goodness towards the Hebrew people, and grounds upon their misimprovement of it, the certainty of their punishment, ver. 1; he then, in a series of pointed and appropriate interrogations, illustrates this certainty, 3-6; which he follows up by a vindication of his commission, 7, 8. Foreign nations are then summoned to witness the execution of judgment upon the kingdom of Israel, which would be signally severe, 9-15.

- 1 HEAR ye this word, which Jehovah speaketh against you, O sons of Israel, Against all the family which I brought up out of the land of Egypt;
 Saying :

1 Instead of בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, "sons of Israel," forty-three MSS., one in the margin, originally seven, and five by correction, read בְּיַת יִשְׂרָאֵל, "house of Israel;" which reading is supported by the LXX. and Arab. versions. Both forms are employed in the book of Amos, but the former is the less frequent; which awakens the suspicion that the latter has been introduced here by way of correction. That the phrase is intended to include the whole Hebrew people, is evident from the words which follow in apposition, and describe the distinguished favor conferred upon the entire race of Jacob.

מִשְׁפָּחָהּ, Eth.  $\text{ሰራሕ}$ , to spread out a tribe, or clan; but here obviously used in a national sense, as in Jer. viii. 3, xxv. 9; Micah ii. 3.

- 2 Only you have I known of all the families of the earth,
Therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.
- 3 Will two walk together
Except they be agreed ?
- 4 Will the lion roar in the forest
When he has no prey ?
Will the young lion cry out from his den,

2. יָדַע, to know, is here employed in the sense of knowing with the idea of volition, or goodwill; to acknowledge, regard, care for, and by implication, to show favor to. Comp. Ps. i. 6, cxliv. 3; and γινώσκω, John x. 14, xv. 17; 2 Tim. ii. 19. The Israelites alone were acknowledged by Jehovah as his people, and as such treated with peculiar favor; but in proportion to the distinction which they enjoyed, was the degree of punishment which their ungrateful and rebellious conduct merited.

3. In this and the three following verses, a series of parabolic interrogations are employed, highly calculated to produce conviction in the minds of those to whom they were addressed. They are familiar indeed, but so much the more appropriate and forcible. Instead of בָּרֵכָה, the LXX. Arab. and Vulg. read בָּרַכְתִּי, with apparent reference to the signification of יָדַע in the preceding verse. The primary signification of יָדַע, Syr.

يَدَعُ condixit, constituit, Arab. وَعَلَّ, significavit affecturum alicui quid, is to point, point out, appoint a time or place, hence in Niph'al, to meet by appointment; to do anything by common consent; to be agreed. This last seems to be the acceptation in which the verb is to be taken in this place: for to render, How can two set out upon a journey, except they meet by appointment? would express that to be impossible, which is very often true in fact. Interpreters are divided in opinion respecting the persons to whom the number שְׁנַיִם, two, refers. Munster and some others think, that the prophets generally, or Joel and Amos in particular, are meant; Vatablus, Drusius, Lively, Newcome, Bauer, Rosenmüller, Aekermann, and Maurer, explain it of God and the prophet; while Clarius, Grotius, Danaeus, Marckius, Lowth, Harenberg, and Dahl, are of opinion that God and Israel are intended. The last construction of the passage best agrees with the bearing of the other interrogations. Between Jehovah and his apostate people there could no longer be any fellowship; and instead of the blessings which accrued to them from such fellowship, they had now nothing to expect but punishment. As they had walked contrary to him, so he would now walk contrary to them. They had broken his covenant, and must take the consequences.

4. The lion is quiet till he sees his prey, but roars at the sight of it, and thereby inspires it with such terror, that it is deprived of the power of escape. In like manner the young lion, which has been weaned, and is just beginning to hunt for prey, will lie silent in his den, till it is brought near, when the smell of it will rouse him from his quiet. Poret, in his Travels in Barbary, Strasb. 1789, vol. i. p. 283, states, that the lion has two different modes of hunting his prey. When not very hungry, he contents himself with watching behind a bush for the animal which is the object of his attack, till it approaches, when, by a sudden leap, he attacks it, and seldom misses his aim; but if he is famished he does not proceed so quietly, but, impatient and full of rage, he leaves his den, and fills, with his terrific roar, the echoing forest. His voice inspires all living beings with fear and dread; no creature deems itself safe in its retreat; all flee, they know not whither, and by this means, fall into his fangs. אֶרְבֵּי הַלֵּוֹ, the lion, and not יְעִיבֵי הַלֵּוֹ, the young lion, is the nominative to the verb יִבְרַח. The certainty of destruction is the point at

- Except he have taken it ?
 5 Will the bird fall into an earth-snare,
 And there is no gin for it ?
 Will the snare spring from the ground,
 When nothing whatever is caught ;
 6 Shall the trumpet be blown in a city,
 And the people not tremble ?
 Shall there be evil in a city,
 And Jehovah hath not inflicted it ?
 7 Surely the Lord Jehovah inflicteth nothing,
 Except he reveal his purpose
 To his servants the prophets.
 8 The lion hath roared, who will not fear ?

which the prophet aims in the similitude.

5. Between  $\text{נֶזֶר}$  and  $\text{בְּנֵי עָרֵי}$  there is no essential difference. The sense would have been the same had the latter word been omitted, and we had simply read,  $\text{נֶזֶר לְיָדָיו}$ ; but the insertion of the synonyme gives more force to the sentence.  $\text{נֶזֶר}$  connects with  $\text{נֶזֶר־יָדָיו}$ , as its antecedent.  $\text{נֶזֶר־יָדָיו}$  is to be taken as the future of Kal, and regarded as expressing the sudden spring of an elastic snare, or net, which, on the bird's touching it, suddenly rises and incloses it. Instruments were prepared by the providence of God for the capture of the Israelites, which would certainly do their work: there would be no escape.

6. The prophet here closes his interrogatory appeals;—first by a reference to the effect produced upon the inhabitants of a city by the sounding of the trumpet, as a signal of war; and then, by directly ascribing the infliction of temporal calamities to Jehovah, as the punisher of sin. For  $\text{נֶזֶר}$  in the sense of temporal evil, or calamity, see Gen. xix. 19, xliv. 34, Exod. xxxii. 14; Ezek. vii. 5. Arab.  $\text{نُزْل}$ , experimentum, calamitas afflictio.

7. Though the infliction of punishment of his guilty people was determined in his holy and righteous counsel, yet Jehovah would not proceed to execute it until he had given them full warning, and afforded such of them an opportunity of escaping as should repent and return to his service. He thus mixed mercy with judgment.  $\text{נֶזֶר}$ , Theod.  $\text{Βουλή}$ , counsel, purpose, decree; from  $\text{נָזַר}$ , Arab.  $\text{نُزِل}$ , posuit, firmiter statuit; to found, lay a foundation, establish a plan, ordain. It is rather, I imagine, on this acceptation of the verb that the idea of purpose or decree is based, than upon that of a divan, or an assembly of persons, sitting and deliberating on couches: but see Gesenius in  $\text{נָזַר}$ . As the Divine plan or purpose is necessarily secret till it be revealed, hence the acceptation secret came to be attached to the word. In this verse a high honor is vindicated to the prophetic office. The holy men of God were, by inspiration, entrusted with a knowledge of the Divine purposes, in so far as it was necessary for them to divulge them to the world.  $\text{נֶזֶר־יָדָיו}$ , is the frequentative future, indicating what God is accustomed to do, and is best rendered by our present. For the sentiment, comp. Gen. xviii. 17.

8. With reference to what he had expressed ver. 4. and in keeping with the mode of representation which he had employed chap. i. 2, Amos formally announces the awful character of the message he had heard from the Lord, and the impossibility of withholding the communication. The roar of the lion is loud and terrific, especially in the solitary forests which form his proper domain. See on ver. 4.

The Lord Jehovah hath spoken, who will not prophesy ?

- 9 Proclaim ye in the palaces of Ashdod,
And in the palaces in the land of Egypt,
And say :

Assemble yourselves on the mountains of Samaria,
And behold the great commotions within her,
And the oppressions in the midst of her.

- 10 For they regard not the practice of rectitude,
Saith Jehovah,

That amass rapine and spoil in their palaces.

- 11 Therefore thus saith he Lord Jehovah :

9. הַשְׁמִיעוּנִי, cause it to be heard, publish ye! those are addressed who had intercourse with the places here specified, and had thus an opportunity of conveying the message. Comp.  $\delta$  ἀκούων εἰπάτω Ἐρχοῦ! Rev. xxii. 17. For Ashdod, see on chap. i. 8. It is here used synecdochically for the whole of Philistia. Instead of בְּהַרְשָׁמָרָה, the LXX. have read בְּאַשְׁדּוֹד, ἐν Ἀσσυρίοις, which Secker attempts to justify! For אֲרָמֹנֵיהֶם, comp. κηρύξατε ἐπὶ τῶν δωματίων, Matt. x. 27. It was, and is still, customary in the East to assemble on the flat roofs of the houses. To the princes and courtiers thus assembled on their palaces, as well as to all within hearing, the invitation was to be conveyed. There is something exceedingly forcible in these heathen rulers, etc. being called to witness the enormities that were practised in Samaria. If their judgment, pagans as they were, could not but be unfavorable, what must be the judgment of the holy and righteous God? What the punishment which he must inflict? Nothing can be more graphic than the description of the position which these foreigners were to occupy. They were to assemble עַל הַרְרֵי שָׁמָרָה, upon the mountains of Samaria. שָׁמָרָה, Samaria, the metropolis of the kingdom of Israel, was built on a round hill, near the middle of a large valley, surrounded by mountains on every side, by which it was completely overlooked. From these elevations persons might distinctly see what was done in the city. That מַהֲבֹת רַבּוֹת, and

עֲשָׂוִיָּהוּם are intimately connected, and are both to be referred to the rich and powerful inhabitants of Samaria, appears evident from what is stated in the following verse. The latter term is properly the Pahul Participle, oppressed, but is here used as a noun, as in Job xxxv. 9; Eccles. iv. i. Comp. the forms מְבִיטָה, dwelling מְלִיכָה, kingdom.

10. לֹא יָדָעוּ, they know not, is not intended to express simple ignorance, but that state of mind which is hostile to the entertainment of knowledge. The magnates of Samaria had no regard for the practice of what was just and right, but the contrary. יָשָׁרָה, rectitude, that which is straight, in opposition to what is crooked, distorted, or morally wrong. Comp. Is. xxvi. 10, xxx. 10, lix. 14. רָשָׁע וְשָׂדֵה, violence and desolation, mean, by a metonymy of the cause for the effect, what has been obtained by violating the rights and desolating the property of others. Such spoils they accumulated in their palaces, but they should not enjoy them. On the contrary, as the prophet shows in the following verses, they should be plundered and carried away by the enemy. Dathe well expresses the meaning of the verse: "Recte factis nequaquam delectantur, inquit Jova, sed thesauros in ædes suas congerunt vi atque injuria partos."

11. צַר, the LXX., who are followed by Aq. and the Arab., preposterously render Τύρος, Tyre; one of De Rossi's MSS. reads צָר, and one of Kennicott's, צָרָה. The Syr. Chald. tribulation, which

There shall be an enemy, and that around the land ;
 And he shall bring down thy strength from thee,
 And thy palaces shall be plundered.

12 Thus saith Jehovah :

As the shepherd rescueth from the mouth of the lion
 Two legs, or the portion of an ear,
 So shall the sons of Israel be rescued,
 Who sit in Samaria on the corner of a bed,
 And in Damascus on that of a couch.

has been adopted in many modern versions. Thus Dathe, Hesselberg, Dahl, Justi, and Hitzig. But Calvin, Newcome, Michaelis, Struensee, Bauer, Rosenmüller, Vater, and Noyes, translate enemy, which better suits the connection, as it supplies a proper nominative to the verb הִרְרִיד, immediately following. Com.

as to derivation, the Arab. ضَرَّ, nocuit, noxa affecit, lesit. The words צָר וְסָבִיב are abrupt and elliptical, but, for this very reason, possess more point. At צָר, supply הַיָּגָה, הַיָּבֵא, or the like. וּן in וְסָבִיב has the force of et quidem, or isque. The reading וְסָבִיב, suggested by Houbigant, considered probable by Newcome, and adopted by Bauer, is altogether unsupported by any example of a similar case in verbs whose second and third radicals are the same. צָר וְסָבִיב is equivalent to בָּבֶל-הָאֲרָץ, 2 Kings xvii. 5. where the invasion by Shalmaneser is described. עֹז, strength, denotes whatever Samaria confided in, or made her boast of, such as her treasures, fortifications, warriors, etc. All was to be brought down into the valley, and what was capable of being removed, carried away by the enemy : i. e. Shalmaneser, the king of Assyria. A just retribution for the spoiliations which her inhabitants had committed.

12. A very appropriate image is here borrowed from a scene in pastoral life, such as the prophet himself may have witnessed. Nothing but a mere remnant of the Israelites should with difficulty escape from the enemy. Although a lion may not be induced to quit his prey, if he is hungry and has but just seized it,

Is. xxxi. 4 ; yet if he has almost devoured it, leaving nothing but what is here specified, no difficulty would be found in effecting a rescue. / For גִּזְיֵל מִיַּד הָאֲרִירִי, comp. ἐξῆσθη ἐκ στόματος λέοντος, 2 Tim. iv. 17 ; 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35. בָּרָל occurs only this once, but signifies a part or piece; from בָּרַל, to separate. There is a species of goat in the East, the ears of which are often a foot in length, and broad in proportion ; so that more importance would be attached to them by the shepherd, than would be the case with us in the West. The concluding words of the verse have greatly perplexed interpreters. Most of the moderns explain מְנֻשָּׁק of the silk manufactured at Damascus, which from the name of the place, is called damask, and render בְּדֻמָּשֶׁק אֲרָשׁ, in damask couches. What has been supposed to confirm this explanation of the term is the occurrence of the same word in Arabic, only with the letters, or similar letters transposed, as دمقاس دمقس دمقص, etc., all signifying silk. Gesenius has a long article on the word in his Thesaurus, p. 346 ; but fails in establishing the point of identity. Instead of מְנֻשָּׁק with Shin, upwards of twenty of De Rossi's MSS. read, or have read, מְנֻשָּׁק with Sin ; which reading is also that of eighteen printed editions, and is the proper orthography of the name of Damascus. What appears to have originated the above view of the word was the idea, that as the wealthy and voluptuous inhabitants of Samaria are supposed to be intended, there was a special propriety in adverting to the sumptuousness of the couches or

- 13 Hear ye, and testify against the house of Jacob,
 Saith the Lord, Jehovah, the God of hosts,
 14 Surely in the day when I punish the transgressions of Israel,
 I will punish the altars of Bethel ;
 The horns of the altar shall be cut down,
 And they shall fall to the ground.
 15 I will also smite the winter-house with the summer-house,
 The ivory mansions shall perish, sofas on which they reclined. But this idea is totally alien from the bearing of the passage, which requires something to correspond to what had been expressed in the comparison of the fragments left by the lion. Besides, פָּאָה signifies the outer or extreme corner, and not the inner, which is regarded as the seat of honor, so that the observations of Harmer, chap. vi. Obs. xxx., are totally inapplicable, even if there were much point in them. The words are elliptical, and the parallelism, expressed in full, would stand thus :

הַיְשָׁבִים בְּשֹׁמְרוֹן בְּפִאָה מְטָה
 הַיְשָׁבִים בְּדַמְשֶׁק בְּפִאָת עָרֶשׁ :

The persons referred to are the sick and infirm poor, who had nothing left but the side or part of a couch, and whom the king of Assyria would not think it worth his while to be at the trouble of removing. All the rest, the robust and active, the opulent and powerful, should be carried into captivity. For the fulfilment see 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6, xviii. 9-12. The reason why Damascus is mentioned along with Samaria, is, that, at the time of the Assyrian invasion, that city was in the power of the Israelites, having been conquered by Jeroboam II. See 2 Kings xiv. 28. On the conquest, no doubt many belonging to the ten tribes went there to reside.

13. The same persons are here addressed, who were summoned from Philistia and Egypt to witness the enormities practised in Samaria, ver. 9. They were now to testify to the facts of the case, that the punishment to be inflicted upon the inhabitants might be seen to have been richly deserved. בְּהִתְיַדֵּב, as frequently means to testify against any one. אֲדִינִי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי הַצְּבָאוֹת, LXX. Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς ὁ Παντοκράτωρ : an accumulation of Divine appellatives for the purpose of striking awe into the minds of the guilty.

14. Signal vengeance was to be taken upon the place whence all the evils which spread through the ten tribes originated. For Bethel, see on Hos. iv. 15. From the term הַמִּזְבֵּחַ having the determinative article, rendering it emphatic, while הַמִּזְבְּחוֹת in the plural also occurs, it may be inferred that at Bethel, besides the great altar erected by Jeroboam, there was a number of lesser ones at which sacrifices were offered. Comp. Hos. viii. 11, x. 5. The קַרְנוֹת, horns, were four projecting points in the shape of horns at the corners of ancient altars. They may be seen in the representations of those dug up by Belzoni in Egypt. As they were ornamental, the action here described was designed to express the contempt in which the altar would be held by the Assyrians.

15. Eastern monarchs and princes, as well as others of the great, have summer as well as winter residences. The latter are in cities and sheltered situations; the former in forests, or upon mountains. יָצֵי, properly tooth, but used specially of the tusk of the elephant ; ivory. LXX. οἰκοὶ ἐλεφάντινοι. By ivory houses are not meant houses or palaces composed of that material, but richly ornamented with it. The ancients used it for decorating the ceilings, panels, doors, etc., of their rooms, by inlaying it with other costly articles. See 1 Kings xxii. 39 ; Ps. xlv. 9. Odys. iv. 73. Diod. Sic. iii. 47. Pausan. i. 12. 4. Od. ii. 18. 1. All these sumptuous palaces in which the leaders of the people rioted, and indulged in all manner of profaneness, were to be completely destroyed. הֵם, to come to an end, cease. The rendering of בָּתֵּי רֵבִים, by "large houses," is more agreeable to the connection than that of "many houses," though this is equally expressed by the phrase.

And the great houses shall come to an end,
Saith Jehovah.

CHAPTER IV.

THIS chapter contains a continuation of the denunciation pronounced against the Israelites, at the close of the preceding, 1-3; an ironical call to them to persevere in their will-worship, which was the primary cause of their calamities, 4, 5; an enumeration of the different judgments with which they had been visited, but which had effected no reformation, 6-11; and a summons to them to prepare for the last and most awful judgment, which the omnipotent Jehovah was about to inflict upon them, 12, 13.

1 HEAR ye this word, ye kine of Bashan !
That are in the mountain of Samaria ;
That oppress the poor ; that crush the needy ;
That say to their master,
Bring now, that we may drink.

1. בָּשָׁן, Bashan, was celebrated for the richness of the pasturage, and its excellent breed both of large and small cattle. Deut. xxxii. 14; Ps. xxii. 12; Ezek. xxxix. 18. It lay on the east of the Jordan, between Hermon and the mountains of Gilead, and extended eastward as far as the cities of Salchah and Edrei, which it included. Some are of opinion, that by בָּרֵי הַבָּשָׁן, the kine, or cows of Bashan, the proud and luxurious females of Samaria are intended; and that they are introduced on account of the corrupting influence which, through their husbands, they exerted on the state of public affairs. Of these may be mentioned, most of the Rabbins, Theodoret, Liveley, Grotius, Michaelis, Vater, Dahl, Justi, Cesenius and Winer. Others, as the Targ. Jerome, Munster, Calvin, Vatablus, Clarius, Drusius, Danæus, Mercer, Marckius, Harenberg, Dathe, Rosenmüller, and Maurer, maintain that the prophet has the princes and rulers in view, whom he describes in this debasing language, in order to set forth the effeminacy, wantonness, and obstinacy of their character. At first view the former exposition might appear to recommend itself for adoption; but I am induced to give my adhesion to the latter, chiefly on the ground, that it is scarcely possible, otherwise, to account for the repeated intermixture of masculine forms with the feminine. Thus we have שְׂמֵעֵי הַבָּשָׁן, הַבָּשָׁן, אֲדָמָה, אֲדָמָה, אֲדָמָה, all occurring very closely together. Now, though it must be admitted that there are instances in which the gender is neglected, as in Ruth i., yet none of them will bear comparison with the present case. On the principle, that males are the real, and females the fig-

2 The Lord Jehovah hath sworn by his holiness :

Behold, the days are coming upon you,
When ye shall be taken away with hooks,
And your posterity with fish-hooks.

3 And ye shall go out through the breaches,
Each one right before her ;
Ye shall even be thrown out of the palace,
Saith Jehovah.

urative subjects of discourse, it is easy to perceive how the genders would be used just as the one or the other were prominently in the mind of the prophet. Some translators suppress the figurative language altogether, as Dathe: Audite hoc, vos divites et potentes Samariae; but such practice is quite unwarrantable, as it destroys the effect of the prophetic mode of representation. רַצְצוּת, one of those onomatopoeic verbs, the very sound of which strongly expresses the character of the action which they are intended to describe. It signifies to break, crush, dash in pieces. Comp. the

Arab. رَضَّ, conduit, fregit. אָדִיר in אֲדִירֵי־הָאֱלֹהִים, though plural in form, is singular in signification, and means the king of Israel, whom his courtiers and others, indulging in their computations, importune for fresh supplies of wine, reckless of the oppression and rapine by which it might be procured. Comp. Hos. vii. 5. הָ suffixed in אֲדִירֵי־הָ, is the directive, or optative.

2, 3. אֲדִירֵי is pleonastic. It is surprising that so judicious an interpreter as Calvin should attempt to vindicate the rendering of אֲדִירֵי, his sanctuary, when that of his holiness is so natural and proper. Comp. Ps. lxxxix. 36, and lx. 8. Jehovah appeals to all that is involved in the infinite excellence of his moral character for the certainty of his punishing sin. The Nominative to אֲדִירֵי is the enemy, understood; but as the verb is put in the impersonal form, it is best rendered passively. Döderlein and some others object to the adoption, in this place, of hooks and fish-hooks, as the signification of אֲדִירֵי and אֲדִירֵי־הָ, as too violent a change of the figure; and propose that we should retain the primary acceptation of thorns, which they think is more in keeping with the idea of cows. They accordingly render the passage: "Ye shall be driven into thorny districts, and among the gloomy thorn bushes." There is, however, no necessity for supposing that the prophet had the alleged idea in his mind when he delivered the words, but the contrary; and as fishing and hooks are elsewhere employed figuratively in reference to human beings, there can be no real ground for rejecting such tropical application of the disputed terms in this place. See 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11; Is. xxxvii. 29; Jer. xvi. 16; Ezek. xxix.

4. אֲדִירֵי־הָ אֲדִירֵי־הָ each one right before her, means, in a captive state, not being permitted by the enemy to turn to the right or the left. אֲדִירֵי־הָ is pointed אֲדִירֵי־הָ in De Rossi's Spanish MS. marked 23, which punctuation has been adopted in Halm's small printed edition. Comp. אֲדִירֵי־הָ, Dan. viii. 11. It is supported by the LXX. Syr. Symm. Vulg. and Arab. all of which versions exhibit the passive. הָ at the end of the verb is that of the fuller form of the pronoun אֲדִירֵי־הָ, the fragment of which is used as a suffix. It occurs but seldom in the preterite. Of אֲדִירֵי־הָ almost every possible interpretation has been given. LXX. τὸ ὄρος τὸ 'Ρεμμὸν; Cod. Vat. 'Ρομμὸν; in many of the MSS. of Flamin. Nob.

'Αρμυὰ. Syr. ܐܪܡܝܐ; Chald. ܐܪܡܝܐ, the mountains of Armenia. Vulg. Armon. Arab. after the LXX. جبل الرامة. Aq. 'Αρμυὰ ὄρος. Symm. 'Ερμυῖαν, doubtless for 'Αρμυελαν.

- 4 Come ye to Bethel, and transgress ;
 At Gilgal, multiply transgression ;
 Bring your sacrifices every morning,
 Your tithes every third year.
- 5 Offer incense of the leavened thank-offering ;
 Proclaim the voluntary offerings : publish them abroad ;
 For ye love to have it so, O ye sons of Israel,
 Saith Jehovah.
- 6 And though I have given you cleanness of teeth in all your cities,

Theod. ἄπος Μοῦδ. Edit quint. ὑψηλὸν ἄπος. Luther and Vater, Hermon. Michaelis, Struensee, Dathe, Bauer, De Wette, Armenia. Justi and Hezel, Harrem. Volborth, Net. Hitzig takes it to be a corruption of הַדְדִּים מוֹנֵה, Hadadrimmon, which he explains of a place near Samaria where Adonis was worshipped. Newcome cuts the knot and renders "will utterly destroy it." The only satisfactory solution of the difficulty presented by this ἀπαξ λεγ. is that of Kimchi, which is approved by Gesenius, Winer, and Lee, viz. that הַדְדִּים מוֹנֵה, stands for אַרְמֹנֵה, a palace, or citadel. Comp. the Arab. عصرم, a lofty edifice, a pyramid. Changes in letters of the same organ are not unfrequent in Hebrew, as אֵיךְ, הָיָה, הָיָה מוֹנֵה, אֵיךְ, הָיָה מוֹנֵה, אֵיךְ, etc. The ה at the end is not the feminine termination, but simply paragogic, as in אַרְמֹנֵה, Job xxxiv. 13, xxxvii. 12 ; Is. viii. 23 ; and הַדְדִּים מוֹנֵה, Judges xiv. 18. The noun will thus be the accusative absolute, and the construction will be "cast down as to the palace," i. e. from it, over its walls, or the like. The place in which the princes had rioted, and in the strength of which they confided, should afford them no safety.

4, 5. The language of these verses is that of the keenest irony. The Israelites were addicted to the worship of the golden calf, and to that of idols, whereby they contracted guilt before Jehovah, and exposed themselves to his judgments ; at the same time they hypocritically professed to keep up the observance of certain feasts which had been appointed by Moses. For Gilgal, as a place of idolatrous worship, see on Hos. iv. 15. The opinion of Abenezra, approved by Rosenmüller and Maurer, that by יָמִים יְשִׁעֵת, we are to understand every third day, seems forced and unnatural. That the words by themselves might have this meaning is unquestionable : but the idea of tithes being brought every third day is inadmissible, even into a passage so strongly ironical as the present. I cannot doubt that the prophet has in view the enactment recorded Deut. xiv. 29, xxvi. 12. יָמִים, days, mean, here, as Lev. xxv. 29 ; Judges xvii. 10, the fullest complement of days, i. e. a year. קָנַת is most probably the infinitive, used for the second plural of the imperative ; or it may be the second singular of the same. There is no necessity for attaching to הַמִּוֶּן, the meaning of violence, though Gesenius would justify it, on the ground of הַמִּוֶּן being used, Ps. lxxi. 4, to designate an oppressor ; and because the rendering of the Chald. in this place is אֲזָקָה, rapine or oppression. It is not impossible that the translator mistook הַמִּוֶּן for הַמִּוֶּס, which has this signification. The point of reference is doubtless the ordinance, Lev. vii. 13, that, besides the unleavened cakes, the Hebrews were to offer "leavened bread" with the sacrifice of thanksgiving. What the Israelites, therefore, are supposed to be in the habit of doing was, so far as the material of the thing was concerned, not contrary to the law, but in strict accordance with its requirement. For בֶּן אֲזָקָה בָּנֵהוּ, comp. אֲזָקָה בָּנֵהוּ, Jer. v. 31.

6. From this verse to the 11th inclusive, Jehovah describes the different

And want of bread in all your places,
Yet ye have not returned unto me,
Saith Jehovah.

- 7 And though I have withholden the rain,
Three months before the harvest ;
And have caused it to rain upon one city,
But upon another city I have not caused it to rain ;
One portion was rained upon,
And the portion upon which it rained not, withered :
8 And two or three cities wandered to one city,
To drink water, but have not been satisfied,
Yet ye returned not to me,
Saith Jehovah.

- 9 I have smitten you with mildew and much blight ;
Your gardens, your vineyards, and your figs, and your olives,
The locusts hath devoured ;
Yet ye have not returned unto me,
Saith Jehovah.

- 10 I have sent among you the plague, such as that of Egypt ;
I have slain your young men with the sword, corrective measures which he had employed for the purpose of effecting a change in the Israelites, and at the close of each mentioned in the series, the obstinate impenitence, under the influence of which they persisted in their wicked courses, is emphatically marked by the declaration, וְלֹא-שָׁבַתְּם עִדִּי נְאֻם יְהוָה : yet ye returned not unto me, saith Jehovah. Such repetition gives great force to the reprehension. נְקִיּוֹן שֵׁנִים, cleanness of teeth, and חֲסֵר לֶחֶם, lack of bread, are synonymous ; both expressing the famine with which the nation has been visited. עִדִּי, to me, the Chald. paraphrases, לְשִׁבְחִי לְהִנִּי, to my worship, or service.

7, 8. The famine was followed by the judgment of drought, which at once produced sterility, and cut off the necessary supply of drink for man and beast. The rain that had been withheld, was the vernal, or latter rain, which falls in the latter half of February, the whole of March and April, and thus precedes the harvest, as here stated. See on Hos. vi. 3. Whatever rain fell was exceedingly partial and insufficient. Instead of חֲסֵר, the reading חֲסֵרִי is found in two MSS. and is supported by the renderings of the LXX. Arab. and Vulg. The textual reading must be taken impersonally. עָרִים, cities, stands for their inhabitants. Comp. for a lengthened and graphic description of the judgment here specified, Jer. xiv. 1-6.

9. A bad harvest, arising from the destruction of the corn by the blighting influence of the east wind (שִׁדְדוֹן, scorching, blasting, from שָׂדָה, to scorch ; Chald. שָׂדָה, to burn ; Arab. اسلف, niger, LXX. πύρωσις. Arab. Ver. السيموم, the Simoom,) and the mildew, or smut. גִּרְקִין, Arab. بربقان, rubigo, the infinitive absolute of רָבַח in Hiphil, with the force of an adjective or an adverb. This word some improperly connect, as a construct noun, with the following substantives. גָּזָם, a name given to the locust. See on Joel i. 4.

10. Though the plague has from time

Together with your captive horses:
 And I have made the stench of your camps to come up into your nostrils;
 Yet ye have not returned unto me,
 Saith Jehovah.

11 I have overthrown some among you,
 As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah;
 And ye have been as a brand snatched from the burning;
 Yet ye have not returned unto me,
 Saith Jehovah.

12 Therefore, thus will I deal with thee, O Israel!
 Forasmuch as I will do this to thee,
 Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel!

immemorial been endemic in Egypt, and might so far be described as דַּרְךְ מִצְרַיִם, the way of Egypt; yet comparing Is. x. 26, in which the same phrase is used as here, it obviously means, as the Egyptians were treated, or as God punished them with the plague. See Exod. ix. 3, etc. סִבְיַת סוּסֵיכֶם, lit. the captivity of your horses: i. e. those taken and destroyed by the enemy. See 2 Kings xiii. 7. שָׁבַב the LXX. render ἐν πυρὶ, having read שָׁבַב, which is the pointing of three of De Rossi's MSS., and of three others originally; as also of the Brixian edition. Aq. σάπλων. The י in שָׁבַב, Houbigant, Dahl, and some others would cancel, on the ground of its harshness, and its not having been expressed by the LXX. Arab. Syr. and Vulg. It is translated in the Targ., and is to be retained, as an intensifying particle, adding force to the preceding verb. Comp. the somewhat similar use of the Greek καί.

11. ב in בְּכֶם is used partitively: inter, among, or the like; indicating that the subverting was not total. בְּמִתְרַבֵּב, like God's overthrowing: properly Hiphil participle, but construed as an infinite. Comp. Deut. xxix. 22; Is. xiii. 19; Jer. l. 40; 2 Pet. ii. 6; Jude 7. שָׁבַב, which stands for the affix of the first personal pronoun, Newcome improperly converts into a superlative, and renders, "the great overthrow!" His remark on מִצְרַיִם, as sometimes the sign of the genitive case, is likewise totally inapplicable, as in the present case it can only mark the accusative. To what physical phenomena reference is here specifically made, it is impossible to determine, owing to the absence of all historical data. Some think the earthquake, mentioned chap. i. 2, is intended; but this is altogether out of the question, since the prophecy was delivered two years before that event. From the allusion to fire, it has been deemed probable that some of the cities of the Israelites had been burnt, either by lightning from heaven, or by the army of the king of Syria. At all events, that the language is not to be understood figuratively is evident from the close connection of the verse with those preceding, each of which describes a separate physical calamity, and closes, as this one does, with a reprehension of the impenitence by which the nation continued to be characterized. אֵד מִצְּבַל מִשְׁרָה, a brand snatched from the burning, is proverbial, and expresses the narrow escape from utter extinction which had been experienced. Comp. Zech. iii. 2; and 1 Cor. ii. 15: αὐτός δὲ σωθήσεται, οὕτως δὲ ὡς διὰ πυρός.

12. All the means that had been employed to reform the Israelites having proved ineffectual, they are here summoned to prepare for the final judgment, which was to put an end to their national existence. To this judgment re-

13 For, behold! it is He that formed the mountains;
 And created the wind;
 And declareth to man what is his thought;
 That maketh the morning darkness,
 And walketh upon the heights of the earth:
 Jehovah, God of hosts, is his name.

ference is emphatically made in the terms כֹּה, thus, and הִנֵּה, this. There is a brief resumption of the sentence delivered verses 2 and 3. That by הִכֹּן any such preparation is intended as would involve genuine and universal repentance, by which the threatened judgment might have been averted, cannot be admitted in consistency with the bearing both of the preceding and the following context. The removal of the Israelites, as a nation, is denounced as certain, and inevitable. It is rather to be understood as הִכֵּן לְךָ, prepare thee, Jer. xlv. 14. God is now coming against you as the avenger of your wickedness. Consider how you shall meet, or endure the infliction. Comp. Ezek. xxii. 14; Heb. x. 31. Individuals might by repentance obtain the forgiveness of their personal transgressions, and thus have their minds brought into a state in which they would enjoy support and comfort in the midst of national calamity; but this was all that could now be expected.

13. To give full effect to the preceding call, one of the most sublime and magnificent descriptions of Jehovah, to be met with in Scripture, is here introduced. The participial form of the five verbs employed by the prophet greatly enhances the beauty of the passage; but it cannot be successfully imitated in a translation. Some have doubted whether הִנֵּה does not here signify spirit, rather than wind; but it seems more natural to take the term in the latter acceptation, on account of the close coherence of this clause of the verse with that immediately preceding. The rendering of the LXX. ἀπαγγέλλων εἰς ἀνθρώπους τὸν χριστὸν αὐτοῦ, announcing to men his anointed, has originated in their mistaking הִנֵּה for הִנֵּה. Theodoret, in commenting upon the version, thinks Cyrus is intended, and not Christ, as we may otherwise imagine the fathers would expound it. By הִנֵּה is not meant God's thought, or his purposes, as some have taken it, but the thoughts or meditations of man, of which alone the verb הִנֵּה and its derivatives, when applied to intelligent beings, is used. הִנֵּה is followed by a double accusative: that of the material out of which the thing is made, and that of the matter into which it is converted. It must, however, be observed, that upwards of twenty of Kennicott's MSS. read, or have read, הִנֵּה, which is the reading of the LXX. and Arab. According to this construction, the passage must be translated thus: "He that maketh the aurora and the darkness."

---

CHAPTER V.

AFTER giving utterance to a brief elegy over the prostrate and helpless condition of the kingdom, which had just been predicted, 1-3, the prophet introduces Jehovah still addressing himself to the inhabitants; calling upon them to relinquish their superstitious and idolatrous practices, and return to his service, 4-9. He then adverts the picture of wickedness which the nation exhibited, 10-13; repeats the call to cultivate habits of piety and righteousness, 14, 15; describes, in plaintive strains, the destruction that was coming upon the land, 16-20; exposes the inutility of ceremonial rites when substituted for moral rectitude, or combined with unauthorized worship, 21-26; and expressly threatens the Israelites with transportation into the East, 27.

- 1 HEAR ye this word, which I utter concerning you —
A lamentation, O house of Israel!
- 2 The virgin of Israel is fallen;
She shall rise no more;
Prostrate upon her own land,
There is none to raise her up.
- 3 For thus saith the Lord Jehovah,
The city that went out by a thousand,
Shall have an hundred left;
And she that went out by an hundred,
Shall have ten left
To the house of Israel.

1.  $\text{הִנֵּנִי}$  is properly an elegy, or song of mourning and lamentation, from  $\text{נָקַד$ , in Piel, to compose or chant such a song. It consisted of plaintive effusions poured forth by mourning relatives, or by persons hired for the purpose, at funerals; and was distinguished for the tender, pathetic, broken and exclamatory nature of the expressions of which it was composed, as well as the touching features of the subject which they were designed to embody. Of this mode of composition the Hebrew prophets frequently avail themselves, especially Jeremiah, who, besides introducing it into several of his prophecies, has left us a whole book of  $\text{הִנֵּנִי}$ , elegies, or lamentations. See Lowth, Lect. xxii. For the introduction of the present subject, comp.  $\text{הִנֵּנִי}$   $\text{שָׂא}$   $\text{לְךָ}$  or  $\text{לְךָ}$ , Ezek. xix. 1, xxvii. 2. xxxii. 2, and the common oracular forms  $\text{שָׂא}$   $\text{לְךָ}$ ,  $\text{שָׂא}$ , etc. Some are of opinion that the elegy thus introduced extends to the end of the chapter, but it is far more likely that it consists merely of the plaintive exclamations contained in verse 2. Compare the beautiful lament of David on the death of Jonathan, 2 Sam. i. 17-27.

2. The Israelitish state is called  $\text{הַיְּרֵמָה}$ , a virgin, because it had never been subdued by any foreign prince. See on Is. xxiii. 12. The passages, Jer. xviii. 13, and Lam. ii. 13, which Rosenmüller adduces against this interpretation of the term, are not in point, since both refer to the character which Jerusalem sustained previous to the deplorable condition to which she had been reduced by the violence of the enemy. It cannot, therefore, be regarded as merely synonymous with  $\text{בִּת}$ , daughter, as idiomatically applied to describe the inhabitants of a city or state. This brief, but touching elegy describes the utterly prostrate and helpless condition to which the Assyrians were to reduce the kingdom of the ten tribes.

3. The depopulated state of the country is here affectingly depicted.  $\text{הַיְּרֵמָה}$ , the city, stands by metonymy for its inhabitants. The LXX.  $\eta \pi \acute{o} \lambda \iota \varsigma \epsilon \xi \eta \varsigma \epsilon \xi \epsilon \pi \omicron \rho \epsilon \upsilon \omicron \nu \tau \omicron \chi \iota \lambda \iota \omega \iota$ , and so the other ancient versions.  $\text{וַיֵּצֵא}$ , that went out, is used elliptically for  $\text{וַיֵּצֵא}$   $\text{לְמַלְחָמָה}$ , that went forth to war. The population or size of a city was estimated according to the number of warriors it could furnish. Thus the Scholiast on Iliad ix. 383, 384:  $\omicron \upsilon \tau \acute{o} \pi \lambda \acute{\alpha} \tau \omicron \varsigma \tau \acute{\omega} \nu \pi \upsilon \lambda \omega \nu \delta \acute{\epsilon} \lambda \epsilon \iota \sigma \mu \alpha \iota \nu \epsilon \iota \nu$ ,  $\omicron \upsilon \delta \acute{\epsilon} \gamma \acute{\alpha} \rho \acute{\alpha} \mu \alpha \pi \acute{\alpha} \nu \tau \alpha \varsigma \epsilon \xi \iota \acute{\epsilon} \nu \alpha \iota \phi \eta \sigma \iota \nu$   $\alpha \lambda \lambda \acute{\alpha} \tau \acute{o} \mu \acute{\epsilon} \gamma \epsilon \delta \omicron \varsigma \tau \eta \varsigma \pi \acute{o} \lambda \epsilon \omega \varsigma$ ,  $\kappa \alpha \iota \tau \acute{o} \pi \lambda \eta \theta \omicron \varsigma \tau \acute{\omega} \nu \alpha \nu \delta \rho \omega \nu$ .

- 4 For thus saith Jehovah to the house of Israel, Seek ye me, and live.
- 5 And seek not Bethel;
And go not to Gilgal;
Neither pass through to Beersheba;
For Gilgal shall surely go into captivity,
And Bethel shall come to nought.
- 6 Seek ye Jehovah, and live,
Lest he rush down, like fire, upon the house of Joseph;

4. While the divine judgments are not executed, there is still room for repentance and reformation. שָׁרָה, to seek, is very often used as a religious term, implying application to God, or to a false deity, for assistance, direction, etc. and then generally to worship him, and have respect to his will. Ps. xxiv. 6; Is. viii. 19, lv. 6. Comp. Heb. xi. 6, ἐκζητεῖν τὸν Θεόν. שָׁרָה is similarly used. הָיִה, live ye, is employed as a second imperative, in order emphatically to express the certainty of the result that would ensue from compliance with the command given by the first.

5. A strong dissuasive from idolatry, derived from the predicted fall of the objects and places of false worship. בְּאֵר שֶׁבַע, Beersheba, lit. "the Well of the Oath;" LXX. τὸ φρέαρ τοῦ ὅρκου; see Gen. xxi. 22-31. It was situated about twenty-five geographical miles south of Hebron, on the frontier of the Holy Land towards Idumea, and is still called by the Arabs بئر السبع, Bir-es-seba'. Dr. Robinson fell in with its ruins on the north side of a Wady of the same name, but found nothing bearing the marks of high antiquity, except two wells, one of which he ascertained to be forty-four feet and a half in depth to the surface of the water, and the other forty-two feet. As it lay in the extreme south of Palestine, the verb עָבַר, to pass over or through, is most appropriate. From this verse, and from chap. viii. 14, it appears to have been a place of idolatrous resort, but wherein the idolatry consisted we are not told. In הִגְלֵגֵל הִגְלָה is a forcible paronomasia, though the words are from different roots. "Gilgal gallando gallabitur, si posset fingi aliquod tale verbum; hoc est, vertetur volubili versione." Calvin, in loc. There is likewise a play upon the word אָנָּן, which is used to denote wickedness, idolatry, idol, nothing, etc. What had originally been בֵּית-אֵל, Bethel, a house of God, but had by the Israelites been converted into בֵּית-אָנָּן, Beth-aven, a house of idolatry, see Hos. iv. 15, x. 5; should be reduced to אָנָּן, aven nothing.

6. The prophet here repeats, for the sake of effect, the call which he had introduced, ver. 4. צָלַח, which more commonly has the significations attaching to the Arab. صلح, rectè se habet res, aptus fuit, etc. has here that of the Syriac <sup>٤</sup> زاح, descendit, perrupit. The general idea of motion, either forward or downward, seems to be conveyed by it, only, in certain cases, with the superadded notion of violence or force. Thus הָיָה רִיחַ הַיְיָ עָלָיו וַתִּצְלַח הַיְיָ, is not improperly rendered in our common version, "And the Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him." Dahl prefers the rendering perdidit, which he derives from the Arab. صلوح, exitialè malum;

but the form <sup>٤</sup> مصلحهم, صلحهم, penetrans, vehemens, might rather be compared. Jehovah is often compared to fire. See Is. x. 17; Lam. ii. 3. אֵשׁ, being of common gender, is the nominative to אֲשַׁרְהוּ, so that the object of

And it devour, and there be none in Bethel to quench it.

- 7 Ye who turn justice into wormwood,
 And cast righteousness to the ground,
 8 Seek Him that made the Pleiades and Orion ;
 That turned deathshade into morning ;
 That maketh day dark as night ;
 That calleth the waters of the sea,
 And poureth them forth upon the earth ;
 Jehovah is his name.

comparison takes the place of יהוה, who is the subject, and the proper nominative. בית יוסף, the house of Joseph, is a less frequent designation of the ten tribes, the principal of which was that of Ephraim, the son of Joseph. It occurs several times in the historical books, but only twice besides in the prophets, viz. Obad. 18 ; Zech. x. 6. The name יוסף, Joseph, by itself, is similarly employed, Amos v. 15, vi. 6. Comp. Ezek. xxxvii. 16. For בית-אל, Bethel, the LXX. Arab. and one of De Rossi's MSS. read בית ישראל, Beth Yisrael, which reading is adopted by Newcome. One of Kennicott's MSS. has ישראל Israel, which Houbigant, Dathe, and Bauer, approve. Jerome, Rosenmüller, Dahl, Justi, Struensee, and others, retain the received reading, which is supported by the Targ., Syr., and Vulg. Some would connect בית-אל with מבבא, and render, "there shall be none to quench Bethel;" but the verb בבא is never constructed with ל, which marks here the Dative of possession. The true construction is, וְאֵיךְ לְבֵית-אֵל מַבְבָּה. The people of Israel put their trust in the idols which they worshipped at Bethel, but none of them could remove the Divine judgments from the land.

7. הִפְּתִיחַ, ye that turn, is to be referred to הַרְשֵׁוּ and בֵּית יוֹסֵף in the preceding verse. This construction is more natural than that which would take בֵּית יוֹסֵף alone as the nominative, in the third person. Such changes of person as that presented in הִנְיָהוּ, are too frequent to occasion any difficulty; nor is it always necessary to express them in a translation. Ewald takes an effectual method of removing the supposed difficulty, by striking out the verse, and inserting it at the beginning of verse 10. Of course, the whole will then read very smoothly; but the question still remains, Did Amos so connect the words? לְעֵנָה, Arab. لعن, abegit, execratus est, is the Hebrew name of wormwood, and is given to it on account of its disgustingly bitter and injurious quality. The LXX. now read ὁ ποιῶν εἰς ὕψος κρίμα; but there can be little doubt that the original reading was ἄψυδος. The meaning is, that the persons spoken of so perverted their judicial proceedings, as to render them both obnoxious and injurious to those whom they affected. For הִנְיָהוּ לְעֵנָה, see on Is. xxviii. 2.

8. Another sublime description of the Most High, almost verbally identical with that furnished Job ix. 9. The participles are to be referred to יְהוָה, Jehovah, ver. 6, as their antecedent. Newcome, following the Targ. and Syr., inserts "that have forsaken" at the commencement of the verse, but these authorities are not sufficient to warrant the addition, which, indeed, the text does not require. The article, used as a relative in הַמַּבְבִּיג and הַהִקְוִיָּה, is omitted before עֵשָׂה and הַצֶּהָה, because they are in construction. Two of the principal constellations as selected from the heavenly bodies as specimens of the effects of Omnipotence. בְּרִימָה, the Pleiades, or Seven Stars. This word occurs only here and Job ix. 9, xxxviii. 31. The derivation from a supposititious root בָּמָה, cognate with הַמָּה, הַמָּה, הַמָּה, to be warm, hot, adopted by Castellus, Schultens,

9 That bringeth destruction suddenly upon the mighty,
And destruction cometh upon the fortress.

Parkhurst, and others, is to be rejected for that preserved in the Arab.

Conj. II. cumulum fecit; hence, كومة, cumulus; with which may be compared كيم, socius, according to which the name expresses what is brought or bound together, especially in abundance. The name given to this constellation by the Arabs is ثريا, an abundance or multi- tude, from ثرا, multus ac numerosus evasis, numerosus reddidit. For the same reason it was called by the Greeks Πλειάδες, according to one of the derivations of Eustathius on Homer, Iliad. xviii. 446: Αἱ δὲ πλειάδες ἦτοι ἀπὸ τῆς μητρὸς αὐτῶν Πληϊόνης ἢ ὅτι πλείους ὁμοῦ κατὰ μίαν συναγωγὴν εἰσι, κ. τ. λ. And most of the ancients express the same idea; as Seneca, densi pleiadum greges; Propertius, pleiadum chorus, etc. According to the Greek mythology, the Pleiades were seven daughters of Atlas, who, being pursued by Orion, were changed by Jupiter into doves, and having been transplanted to the heavens, form the assemblage of the Seven Stars in the neck of Taurus. In the passage in the Iliad just referred to, they are portrayed on the shield of Achilles along with Orion, in the same order as in our prophet:

Πληϊάδας, δ' Ἰτάδας τε, τό τε σθένος Ὀρίωνος.

In the mythology of the Sabians or Mendaites مصابيا, the Seven, and مصبا مصبا, the Seven Stars, cut no inconsiderable figure. See Norberg's Liber Adami. For בְּצֶבַע, see on Is xiii. 10. Both terms have been entirely mistaken by the LXX. who render ὁ ποιῶν πάντα καὶ μετασκευάζων, which is faithfully copied by the Arab. الصانع

كلا ومهبيه, the shadow of death, one of the very few Hebrew compounds. See on Is. ix. 1. בְּ is to be supplied before בְּצֶבַע, as, indeed, it is in fourteen MSS., primarily in three more, and now by correction in one; in both the Soncin. editions; in both of Bomberg, 1518 in the margin, and in the appendix to Munster's, 1536. In בְּצֶבַע, there is a transition from the participial to the finite form of the verb. To render the clause uniform, the construction would be, בְּצֶבַע יוֹם בְּצֶבַע. The passage quoted from Pindar, by Clemens Alexandrinus, is beautifully parallel:—

Θεῶν δὲ δυνατὸν ἐκ μελαίνης
Νικτὸς ἀμίαντον ὄρσαι φῶς·
Κελαίνῃ νέφει δὲ σκότου καλύψαι
Καθαρὸν ἀμέρας σέλας.

The following words are descriptive, not of rain, as Jerome, Theodoret, Kimchi, Drusius, Lively, Marckius, Dahl, and Rosenmüller maintain, but of a deluge or inundation, the waters of which may emphatically be said to be poured over the earth. Thus Grotius, Clarius, Bauer, and likewise Lowth, though he admits the possibility of the other view being right. The Alex. reading of the LXX. ὁ θεὸς ὁ παντοκράτωρ is found in the Arab., in a Copt. MS., and in the Slavon. Bible, has the support of three MSS., yet it is more likely an addition from chap. iv. 13, than otherwise.

9. After the prophet had apparently completed his magnificent description of the Divine character, with the words יְהוָה יְהוָה, he appends in this verse an additional view of it, in order to make it tell more practically on the fears of those who boasted of the strength of Samaria. בֹּהַב, Arab. بلج, nituit, fulgit aurora, not only conveys the idea of shining, being bright, cheerful, etc. but also that of suddenness, suggested by the rapidity with which the dawning light is diffused over the horizon. The Hebrews applied such terms figuratively to the sudden production of misery, as well as to that

- 10 They hate him that reproveth in the gate,
 And abhor him that speaketh uprightly.
- 11 Wherefore, because ye trample upon the poor,
 And take from him the tribute of corn :
 Though ye have built houses of hewn stone,
 Ye shall not dwell in them ;
 Though ye have planted pleasant vineyards,
 Ye shall not drink of their wine.
- 12 For I know that your transgressions are many,
 And that your sins are great :
 Oppressing the righteous,
 Taking a bribe,
 And turning aside the poor in the gate.
- 13 Therefore the prudent shall be silent at that time ;
 For it is an evil time.

of happiness. See on Joel ii. 2. Winer, oriri faciens, inducens super potentes vastationem. The ancient versions are all at fault here.

10. Ewald thinks that by בְּצֹעֵר מוֹדֵיָהוּ, the reprover in the gate, Amos himself is meant ; but, from the recurrence of שָׁנָא, and בְּצֹעֵר, in connection with מוֹדֵיָהוּ, ver. 15, it is far more natural to interpret the phrase of a magistrate, senator, or judge. Comp. also ver. 12, and see on Is. xxix. 21. In הַמְּיָרִים, which is to be taken adverbially, as Judges ix. 9, is an ellipsis of בְּ.

11-13. בְּשֵׁם is, in all probability, a faulty orthography of בְּסֵס, the Polal. of בָּסַס, Arab. نَسَس, vilipendit rem, to tread down, trample upon, etc. De Rossi's codex 380, reads בִּישָׁם with Sin. מִשָּׂאָה, what is raised, as a tax, tribute, etc. from נָשָׂא, to raise. Instead of remitting to the poor the tax which they were unable to pay, the rulers and proprietors rigidly exacted it, that they might consume it upon their lusts. But in whatever state and luxury they might have lived, and whatever preparations they might be making for further indulgences, Jehovah declares that they should not continue to enjoy them. The enemy would speedily remove them from all the objects on which they proudly doated, or from which they expected gratification.

For the contrary of the threatening, see Is. lxxv. 21, 22 ; Amos ix. 14. The adjectives רַבִּים and קְצָמִים, are placed before their substantives, because they are predicatives, and not qualificatives. Before both, the conjunction בִּי is to be supplied. The ellipsis was probably occasioned by its having been used at the beginning of the verse. כֶּבֶד is most commonly used in the sense of λύτρον, αντίλυτρον, ransom, or price of redemption, on which account Ewald and some others render it so here ; but the close connection in which the whole phrase stands with the perversion of justice, specified in the last clause of the verse, decides in favor of the signification bribe, bribery, which the word unquestionably has, 1 Sam. xii. 3. Targ. בְּמִוֶּזֶן דְּתַשְׁבֵּר, the mammon of falsehood. Syr. مَبْحُول, a bribe. LXX. ἀλλόγματα. The other Greek versions, ἐξίλασμα. If בְּרָרִי צַדִּיקִים could be taken to mean, "shutting up, or imprisoning the righteous," then כֶּבֶד might mean ransom ; but such usage does not obtain. The only course left for the pious to pursue in the midst of such atrocious perversion of order and justice, was that of quietly submitting to the hand of God, which they were taught to recognize in the permission of these evils, and patiently to abide the issue of

- 14 Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live ;
And it shall be so ; Jehovah, God of hosts, shall be with you,
According as ye say.
- 15 Hate evil and love good,
And establish justice in the gate ;
Perhaps Jehovah, God of hosts, may pity
The residue of Joseph.
- 16 Therefore thus saith Jehovah, God of hosts, the Lord :
In all the broad places there shall be wailing ;
And in all the streets, they shall say, Oh ! Oh !
They shall call the husbandman to mourning ;
And all who are skilled in elegy to wailing.

events. Any attempt, under these circumstances, to stem the current, or effect a reformation, or even to plead for private or public rights, would only aggravate their calamities. הַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוִי, the intelligent, prudent, is to be understood, in the best sense, of one who acts upon the principles of enlightened piety.

14, 15. Reiterated calls to reformation, in order to ensure the return of Divine favor. Both the style and the sentiments have their parallel in Is. i. 16, 17. Notwithstanding the sad apostasies of the Israelitish people, they still had their profession of the religion of Jehovah to fall back upon, in case of necessity. They boasted that he was with them, but it was an empty pretence while their profession was insincere, being combined with the worship of idols. For the force of the conditional particle אִם, perhaps, in such connection, compare Gen. xvi. 2, and εἰ ἄρα, Acts viii. 22. Comp. also Joel ii. 13, where the same idea is expressed by מִי יִדְעַתְּ, who knoweth? שְׂאֵרֵי יוֹסֵף, the remainder of Joseph. For this use of the patronymic, see on ver. 6. Numerous as the Israelites still were, they might well be called a remainder, in consideration of the havoc made by Hazeal, who, when "the Lord began to cut" them "short, smote them in all the coasts of Israel; from Jordan eastward, all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manassites, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, even Gilead and Bashan." 2 King x. 32, 33.

16. לָכֵן, therefore, refers not to the contents of verses 14, 15, but to verses 7, 10, and 12. We may suppose a considerable pause to intervene before ver. 16. Foreseeing that the people would not repent, Jehovah here declares that the threatened punishment was inevitable. The slaughter involved in this punishment would be general. Samaria, however, and its vicinity, seem specially intended. The position in which אֶל־הָעָרִים is here placed, is altogether unusual. Indeed, I am not aware that it is so found in any other passage. Yet I would not, with Newcome, cancel it, on the slender authority of seven MSS. the LXX. Arab. and Syr. It seems rather to have been purposely added, in order to give greater solemnity to the sentence which was to be pronounced. רְחֵבֹת, broad, or open places, or wide streets in a city; and distinguished from רְחֵבֹת, which signify ordinary or narrow streets, such as are common in the East. Gr. πλατεῖα. מַסְעֵד, strictly means a smiting of the breast, (LXX. κοπετός,) from עָסַד, to beat, smite; see on Is. xxxii. 12. Here, however, it is used to denote wailing or mourning in general. הֵן הֵן, Oh! Oh! This onomatopoeic I have rendered by the corresponding English interjection, which, when prolonged and swelled in the pronunciation, as it is by persons giving utterance to excessive grief, is much more appropriate than Alas! Alas! Alas! Syr. ; Chald. ܢܝ ܢܝ; Vulg. væ! væ! in other

- 17 In all the vineyards there shall be wailing,
 For I will pass through the midst of thee,
 Saith Jehovah.
- 18 Wo unto you that desire the day of Jehovah !
 What is the day of Jehovah unto you ?
 It shall be darkness and not light.
- 19 As when one fleeth from a lion,
 And a bear meeteth him ;
 Or he entereth the house, and leaneth his hand on the wall,
 And a serpent biteth him.
- 20 Shall not the day of Jehovah be darkness and not light ;
 Even thick darkness, without any brightness ?

Latin versions, cheu! cheu! The  $\text{הַבָּנִים}$ , husbandmen, were to be called to participate in the mourning, not as Newcome, Rosenmüller, and some others have thought, on account of the desolation of the fields, but either on account of the loudness of their rustic voices, or because the slaughter of the citizens of Samaria would be so great, that a sufficient number would not be left to perform the funeral rites. Such construction of the meaning is required by the following parallelism:  $\text{וְהָיָה כְּשֶׁיִּשְׁמַע הַבָּנִים הַקּוֹל הַזֶּה וְהָיָה כְּשֶׁיִּשְׁמַע הַבָּנִים הַקּוֹל הַזֶּה}$ . There is no necessity for supposing that the words of this sentence have been transposed, and that they originally stood thus:  $\text{וְהָיָה כְּשֶׁיִּשְׁמַע הַבָּנִים הַקּוֹל הַזֶּה וְהָיָה כְּשֶׁיִּשְׁמַע הַבָּנִים הַקּוֹל הַזֶּה}$ . The preposition  $\text{כְּ}$  is understood before  $\text{וְהָיָה}$ , and  $\text{וְהָיָה}$ , as repeated to govern  $\text{כְּ}$ , which it often does, as well as the accusative.  $\text{הַבָּנִים}$ , wailing, lamentation, from $\text{הַבָּנִים}$ , Syr.  $\text{ܐܘܪܝܢܐ}$ , to utter lamentable cries. The persons here spoken of as "skilled in wailing," were mourners by profession, who were hired for the occasion, and sung doleful tunes around the corpse of a deceased person, which they preceded when it was carried to the grave, giving utterance to dismal cries and howlings, beating their breasts, throwing ashes on their heads, and showing every artificial token of excessive grief. These were the mourners whom Solomon describes as going about the streets, Eccles. xii. 5. That females were especially employed on such occasions, appears from Jer. ix. 17-19, where  $\text{הַבָּנִים}$  is twice used as here by Amos. The same custom obtained among the Greeks and Romans. Thus Homer speaking of the funeral of Hector, says:

— τὸν μὲν ἔπειτα
 Τρητοῖς ἐν λεχέεσσι δέσαν, παρὰ δὲ εἶσαν
 αἰδοῦς,
 Ἐθήνων ἐξάρχους, ὅττε στονόεσσαν αἰοδῆν
 Οἱ μὲν ἄρ' ἐθρήνεον, ἐπὶ δὲ στενάχοντο γυναικες.

Iliad. xxiv. 720, etc.

See also Horace de Arte Poet. ver. 433. In his edition of Harmer's Observations, vol. iii. p. 42. Dr. A. Clarke gives a description of the ancient funeral solemnities of the Irish, and the translation of a song of wailing prepared for the occasion, which bears a strong resemblance to those used by the Orientals. Comp. Wilkinson's Ancient Egyptians, second series, vol. ii. pp. 402-407.

17. The vineyards, which usually exhibited scenes of rejoicing, should now be frequented by disconsolate mourners. For Jehovah's passing through the land, comp. Exod. xii. 12, 23; only in the latter case the punishment was miraculously inflicted; in the former, by the king of Assyria, as an instrument in the hand of God.

18-20. These verses intimately cohere with the preceding. The day of Jehovah means the time when his judgments should be inflicted. The Israelites could only have given expression sarcastically

- 21 I hate, I loathe your festivals ;
 Neither do I delight in your days of restraint,
 22 When ye offer to me holocausts and bloodless sacrifices,
 I will take no pleasure in them ;
 Neither will I regard the thank-offerings of your fatlings.
 23 Take away from me the noise of the songs ;
 I will not hear the music of thy harps.

to the wish that this day might soon reach them. It was an impious daring of Jehovah to do his worst. Comp. Is. v. 19: Jer. xvii. 15. The prophet tells them plainly that it would be to them a day of unmitigated affliction. The fallacy of every hope of escape is illustrated by two simple, but forcible comparisons, borrowed from the pastoral life. Bochart regards the language as proverbial, and supports his opinion by two Arabic stories: the one beginning, اسد قصد

ابسانا وهرب والتجالي سجرة وانا علي بعض اغصنها دب يقطق ثمرها "A lion, pursuing a man, he took refuge in a tree, in the branches of which a bear having fixed himself, was plucking its fruit," etc.;

and the other, هرب رجل من
الاسد فوقع في بئر ووقع الاسد
خلفه فانا في البئر دب

"A man fled from a lion, and fell into a well, into which the lion went down after him. And there was a bear in the well," etc. Hierozo. lib. iii. cap. ix. pp. 810, 811. Kimchi tersely expresses the meaning thus, תוצא ממצרה אל מצרה, Ye shall go out of calamity into calamity. Comp. Job xx. 24; Is. xxiv. 18. The adjective עצל is explained by the following words. It occurs only in this place; but the substantives עצל, עצל, dense obscurity, are used in several passages of Job, the Psalms, and the prophets. עצל-לוי, however, in the sense of concealed, occurs Exod. ix. 32. Comp. the Arab. افل, occidit sol, etc. Thus in Hariri, Con- sess. xv. the noun افول is employed

انقراض العلم ودروسه وافول
اتهاره وشمسه, "Extirpatio eruditionis et obliteratio ejus: Lunarumque ac Solium ejusdem occasus." נזק, on the contrary, signifies to shine, be light; and its derivative נזק is used of the rising of the sun, Prov. iv. 18, and is contrasted with נזק, ver. 19.

21-23. The same aversion from the ceremonial observances of the insincere and rebellious Israelites which Jehovah here expresses, he afterwards employed Isaiah to declare to the Jews, chap. i. 10-15. The two passages are strikingly parallel; only the latter prophet amplifies what is set forth in a more condensed form by Amos. It is also to be observed, that where Amos introduces the musical accompaniments of the sacrifices, Isaiah substitutes the prayers; both concluding with the divine words, לא אשמע, I will not hear. The verbs שנאתי follow each other immediately, for the sake of more emphatically expressing the Divine abhorrence. Com. הוציאתה ה' ו and לי in Isaiah. שנאתי and לי, lit. I will not smell; but meaning here, I will take no delight in. שנאתי, restraints, periods, days of restraint, or assemblies collected on such days. See on Is. i. 13. שנאתי, used here collectively for the plural שנאתי. — הסר מעלי, lit. remove from upon me; conveying the idea of a burden which vexes and annoys the bearer. Isaiah expresses it in full: היה עלי לטרה, "They are a burden upon me." Comp. further for the force of the compound preposition, Exod. x. 28. The music here referred to was that performed at the Hebrew festivals by the Levites, before and during the

- 24 Let justice roll on like water,
And righteousness like a mighty stream.
- 25 Did ye not present sacrifices and offerings to me, offering of the sacrifices, and on other public occasions.

24. While no direction is given respecting the regulation of the sacrifices, in order that they might be presented in an acceptable manner, a special injunction is imparted in regard to justice and rectitude, on the principle that to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams," 1 Sam. xv. 22. "Nec in victimis, licet optimæ sint, auroque præfulgcant, Deorum est honos, sed pia ac recte mente venerantium." Seneca de Beneficiis, i. 6. That אוּתַן, Arab. وَأْتِن, perennis fuit, is to be here rendered perennial, or everflowing, and not mighty, has been maintained by some interpreters; but a comparison of the several passages in which it occurs, goes to show that it is rather to be referred to אוּתַן, valida, fuit, multus fuit, and is to be rendered great or mighty. It thus better corresponds with גָּלַגַּל, roll, to roll on, used in the former hemistich. LXX. ὡς χειμάρρους ἕβαροις. Syr. أَمْوَنَجِدَا

أَمْوَنَجِدَا Vulg. quasi torrens fortis, Arab. مَثَلُ الْوَادِي الَّذِي لَا

يَسْلُكُ like a Wady that cannot be passed. The ideas of abundance and moral power are those conveyed by the prophet. I must differ from Prof. Lee, who (Heb. Lex. in voc. אֵי-רָךְ) renders, "for judgment rolleth (away) as the waters (roll away), and righteousness (disappears) like the mighty torrent." The verse as thus rendered ill suits the context, and is not in keeping with parallel passages in which, after a reprehension of hypocritical observances, the moral qualities of truth and righteousness are required. The construction put upon it by Theodoret, Kimchi, Munster, Veil, and Hitzig, that the coming of the Divine judgments is intended, is, for the same reasons, to be rejected.

25-27. These verses have not a little perplexed expositors, both ancient and modern. The first difficulty lies in what is said respecting the presentation of sacrifices. Greve, Dahl, and Maurer, take the ה in הֲבָרַחֵם to be the article, and not the particle of interrogation, and render, the sacrifices and offerings ye presented to me, etc., viz. those prescribed in the law: but now ye bear the shrine, etc. According to this mode of construction, the present idolatrous course of the Israelites is contrasted with their former obedience to the Divine will. In order, however, to justify this interpretation, the article must have been repeated before מִזְבְּחָהּ, which it is not. The insertion of the compensative Dagesh in the letter Zain cannot be pleaded in its favor, since there are several instances in which the interrogative ה takes the form of the article, before words beginning with Sheva, as הֲלֹבֶבְךָ, Gen. xvii. 17; הֲיִרְבֶּה, Ezek. xviii. 29; הֲיִגְמוּ, Joel iv. 4, etc. The ancient translators have all read interrogatively. LXX. Μὴ σφάγια καὶ θυσίας προσηγάγκατέ μοι, κ. τ. λ.; Syr. وَلَمَّا بَصَّأَ مَذْبُوحًا صَدَّأَ
حَب. Vulg. Numquid hostias et sacrificia obtulistis mihi, etc. Targ. הֲבָרַחֵם

הֲבָרַחֵם וְקָרְבָּנֵי בְנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּמִזְבְּחֵי בָרָא. And so almost all the moderns, some of whom suppose the force of the question to lie in לִי, to me, taken emphatically, "Was it to me," etc. while others think that an absolute denial of the presentation of sacrifices in the wilderness is implied in the words. In support of the latter opinion, it has been attempted to prove, that the Israelites could not have offered any sacrifices for want of cattle. Such a position, however, is contrary to the express declarations found in Exod. xii. 38, xvii. 3, xxxiv. 3; Lev. xvii. 1-9. Num. vii. passim, xx. 4, 19. The life which they led in the desert was that of Nomades, so that there could have been

During forty years in the desert, O house of Israel?

26 And yet ye bare the shrine of your king,

no lack of animals for sacrifice. The true construction of the passage is founded on the principle, that not unfrequently in Hebrew the interrogation implies, and calls for an emphatic affirmative, either expressed or understood; and is thus equivalent to a negative interrogation in our language, and indeed to  $\text{לֹא־יֵדָע}$  in Hebrew. See 1 Sam. ii. 27, 28; Job xx. 4; Jer. xxxi. 20; Ezek. xx. 4. In the present case, as in these just cited, the persons addressed are supposed to admit the fact couched in the appeal; but the question is so put in order the more forcibly to introduce the adversative sentence which follows in the 26th verse. The connection of the two verses is this: "Did ye not present sacrifices and offerings to me in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel? Yes; and yet ye bare the shrine," etc. That the conjunction  $\text{ו}$  is frequently to be rendered and yet, but yet, or the like, see Gen. xvii. 21; Judges xvi. 15; Ps. l. 17; Is. liii. 7. What is here charged upon the ancient Israelites was their indulging in idolatrous practices while they professedly attended to the ritual observances of the Mosaic law — the very sin which Amos was commissioned to charge upon their descendants in his day, and on account of which they were to be carried into captivity. The opinion of Forsayeth (quoted by Newcome), Dahl, and others, that the sin reprov'd in ver. 26 was exclusively that of those who lived in the time of the prophet, is less admissible than that which refers to their ancestors, yet so that the reproof was intended to be applied on their own case by those whom the prophet addressed. — The 26th verse has been very differently rendered, as well as variously interpreted. The translation of the LXX. is as follows:  $\text{Καὶ ἀνελάβετε τὴν σκηνην τοῦ Μολδχ, καὶ τὸ ἄστρον τοῦ θεοῦ ὑμῶν 'Ραιφάν, τοὺς τύπους αὐτῶν, οὓς ἐποίησατε ἑαυτοῖς;}$  as if the Hebrew had read,  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי מִן־הַשָּׁמַיִם וְיָרַדְתִּי מִן־הַשָּׁמַיִם וְיָרַדְתִּי מִן־הַשָּׁמַיִם וְיָרַדְתִּי מִן־הַשָּׁמַיִם}$ . No vestige, however, of any such order of the words is found in any Hebrew MS., or in any other monument of antiquity, except the speech of Stephen, as recorded by Luke, Acts vii. 43, which is an almost verbal quotation from the LXX. Theod. renders thus:  $\text{Καὶ ἤρατε τὴν ὄρασιν τοῦ βασιλέως ὑμῶν, ἀμαύρωσιν εἰδῶλων ὑμῶν, ἄστρον τοῦ θεοῦ ὑμῶν;}$  so that he must have read the words as they now stand in the Hebrew text. The same may be said of the Syr., Vulg., and Targ., though their renderings differ from each other in one or two minor particulars. The remark of Jerome on the discrepancies between the Hebrew text and the ancient Greek versions deserves to be quoted here: "Observandum est, apostolos et apostolicos viros in ponendis testimoniis de Veteri Testamento, non verba considerare sed sensum, nec eadem sermonum calcare vestigia, dummodo a sententiis non recedant." Comment. in loc. Most interpreters follow the LXX. in giving  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי}$  by σκηνή, a tent; deriving it, like  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי}$ , and  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי}$ , of the same signification, from  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי}$ , to intertwine, as branches, so as to form a booth or hut. Others, such as Jarchi, Calvin, Mercer, and Rosenmüller, take it to mean an image or idol, and render, Sicuth your king. They explain it by referring to the Chald.  $\text{וְיָרַדְתִּי}$ , a wooden post, which they suppose formed the pedestal on which the idol stood, and so the word might be transferred to the idol itself. Ewald takes much the same view. The former derivation is alone admissible. The text appears to have had something of the texture, as it had the design of the σκηνῆς ἱερᾶς, sacred tent, in the Carthaginian camp, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus, lib. xx. cap. 25, and described as consisting ἐκ καλάμων καὶ χόρτου, of reeds and grass. Comp. Wilkinson's Ancient Egypt, second series, vol. ii. pp. 270-275. Only, as it is certain Moses would not have tolerated anything of the kind if its size had been such as to bring it to his cognizance, it may be inferred, that it was only a small temple or shrine, which might easily be concealed in the interior of a tent. Such diminutive temples were in use among the Egyptians, from whom no doubt the Hebrews took the idea. Herodotus, describing an idol worshipped at Papremis, says, τὸ δὲ ἄγαλμα ἐδν ἐν ΝΗΩι ΜΙΚΡΩι ξυλίνῳ κατακεχρυσωμένῳ προεκκομίζουσι τῇ προτεραίῃ ἐς ἄλλο οἶκημα ἱρόν, "The image, being in a small temple of gilt wood, they carry out on the previous day to another sacred habitation." Compare the ναοὶ ἀργυροῖ, shrines, or small temples of Diana, mentioned Acts xix. 24. That any connection is to be traced between סבני, Siccuth, and סבנות בנות, Succoth-benoth, 2 Kings xvii. 30, the tents in which the daughters of the Babylonians prostituted themselves in worship of Venus, does not appear. מלכך, your king, thus Symm. Theodot. and Leo Juda, and most moderns; but the LXX. Μολδχ, Syr.

And Chiun of your images, the star of your god,
Which ye made for yourselves.

מלכמ, Malcum, Aq. Μέλχεμ, Vulg.

Moloch, exhibit the word as the proper name of the god of the Ammonites, i. e. מלך, also called מלכמ, Milecom, 1 Kings xi. 5, and מלכמ, Malcam, Zeph. i. 5; and this construction some moderns have adopted; but as מלך, king, is also employed by the Hebrews in application to idols, Is. xxxvii. 13, Zeph. i. 5, it is better to retain its usual signification. The Phœnicians gave the title of עול, king of the world, to the sun, and קרר מלך=מלך קרר, king of the city, to Hercules. Comp. Ζεῦ ἄνα. Iliad. iii. 351, xvi. 233; and Ὠΰναξ ἦλθε παρ' ἡμέας Ikérns, Herod. I. 159. In Ethiopic for God, is derived from ἄφῶ, imperavit, rexit, and is applied in the plural to idols. The learned are generally agreed, that the Moloch of Scripture was the image of the planet Saturn, and thus identical with Chiun, mentioned by Amos in the following clause of the verse. The Phœnicians were in the habit of offering to him human sacrifices, especially children, to which horrible custom repeated reference is made in the historical books of the Old Testament. See Michaelis on the laws of Moses, Art. cexlvii. Suppl. No. 1115; Selden de Diis Syris, cap. vi.; Spencer de Legibus Hebræor. lib. ii. cap. 10; Gesenius, in his Thesaurus, sub voc.; Winer, Realwörter-buch. כִּיּוּן, Chiun of your images, i. e. represented by them; the model after which they were made. While the idol so called, which the Hebrews carried about in a sacred shrine, was itself a symbol or representative of one of the heavenly bodies, it was in its turn represented by a number of copies, or smaller images, which they used as penates or household gods in the practice of astrology. Such appears to me to be the meaning of the words. To this construction, however, C. B. Michaelis, Vitringa, Rosenmüller, Hesselberg, Hengstenberg, and others object, that it makes כִּיּוּן a proper name, which, with the older grammarians, they allege cannot be put in regimen. But to this rule, it must be admitted, there are many exceptions, as עֲשֶׂתְרוֹת, seterot, בַּעַלְגַד, baalgad, קַרְנֵי־בַּיִת, qarnay-bayit, בְּנֵי־רֵי, beney-rei, etc. Nor can it justly be objected that as סבנות is an appellative, כִּיּוּן being parallel to it, must necessarily be the same. The necessity of the case is not obvious. Both are mentioned as objects which the Hebrews carried about for idolatrous purposes,—the one, the portable temple of the idol; the other the idol itself placed in this temple, of which numerous miniature resemblances were privately distributed throughout the camp. The LXX. unquestionably regarded the word as a proper name, whatever they may thereby have intended to designate. And this view of the subject is confirmed by כּוּכָב, a star, being put in apposition with כִּיּוּן, in order to explain it, an explanation which cannot apply, if by the latter term we understand merely the pedestal or stand on which the idol was placed. It is now

Ἄφῶν, Amlak, the proper name

27 Therefore, I will carry you away captive beyond Damascus, almost a settled point, that by כִּיּוּן, Chium, the planet Saturn is meant. If we except the Syr., which reads קֵוָן, Kevon, the earliest authorities which we have for this interpretation of the passage are the rabbins Abenezra and Kimchi; but their testimony as relating to a matter of fact is irrefragable, however slightly Hengstenberg seems to treat it, Authen. des Pentat. p. 113. The former thus comments upon the passage: וּמִלֵּה כִּיּוּן יָדוּעַ בְּלִשׁוֹן יִשְׁמַעֲאֵל גַּם פָּרַס כִּי הוּא כִּיּוּן אֲדָמָה, "And as for the term Chium, it is known in the Arabic and Persic languages by the name Kivan, which is Saturn, to which they made an image." And the latter, in nearly the same words: הוּא כּוֹכַב שְׂבָרִי וְכִּיּוּן בְּלִשׁוֹן יִשְׁמַעֲאֵל וּפָרַס כִּיּוּן אֲדָמָה, "It is the star Saturn, and thus he is called Kivan in the Arabic and Persic."

کیوان, Keiwan, seems to have been adopted from the latter into the former of these languages, in the Lexicons of which, as a foreign word, it is explained by زحل, the usual name for Saturn in Arabic. It occurs in the Persian work entitled Dabistan, the author of which, describing the temples which the ancient Persians dedicated to the planets says:

پیکر شت کیوان را از سنک سیاه, that "the image of Keiwan was of black stone." Lee's Hebrew Lex. in voc. אֲשֵׁרָה. He speaks, in fact, of the خانة, shrine, and پیکر, image, of the planet, just as Amos does of כְּבוֹד and כִּיּוּן. According to the Zendavesta the seven planets are Tir, Behram, Ac-huma, Anahid, Kewan, Gurtsher, and Dodidom Mushewer. Bundehesh. V. In the codex Nasarius, containing the doctrines of the Sabæans, which was published by Norberg, we find a list of the demons which rule these planets, among whom سَطْمَانُ صَدِّ, the fifth is Kivan, p. 54. It is afterwards added in the same page: بَمَتَا

وَصَدَّ صَدِّ نَدْمًا مَصْدًا

وَصَدَّ صَدِّ مَصْدًا مَصْدًا مَصْدًا

لَحْطًا أَلْمًا مَصِّ مَصْدًا

مَصْدًا مَصْدًا, "The demons of Kivan inject lamentation, weeping and mourning into the hearts of men, and rob them of happiness." And we farther read, p. 212,

لَحْطًا مَصْدًا مَصْدًا مَصْدًا

مَصْدًا مَصْدًا, "To Kivan is attributed malice, because from it come diminution and want." Ascribing the same evil influence to Saturn, the Arabs likewise give to it the name of النكس

الاکبر, the great disaster; and the idea frequently occurs in the Latin classics. See Lucan i. 650; Juven. vi. 569; Macrobius Saturn. i. 19. If the Hebrew כִּיּוּן be pointed כִּיּוּן, the exact pronunciation of the name of the planet in the other Oriental dialects will be brought out, and thus the evidence of identity be complete. With respect to Παφάν, the rendering of the LXX., or Péfaw, as it is to be spelt, on the authority of the best MSS., Acts vii. 43, there is every reason to believe that they mistook כ for פ, as they have done in other instances; and so have given Rephan, instead of Kephan. That PHΦAN should occur in the Arabico-Coptic table of the planets exhibited by Kircher in his Ling. Ægypt. Restit. p. 49, by no means proves that this was the ancient Egyptian name of Saturn; for as that table is of no great antiquity, and as the other names are chiefly derived from the Greek, we may reasonably infer that the one in question was copied from the Coptic version of this very passage of the LXX. At all events, no such name of a deity has yet been found in the Egyptian pantheon. כִּיּוּן, the

To whom the house of Israel come !

2 Pass over to Calneh, and see ;

And go thence to Hamath the great ;

Go down also to Gath of the Philistines :

Were they better than these kingdoms ?

Were their boundaries more ample than yours ?

3 Wo to them that put off the day of evil, distinguished by name, is always used in reference to persons who had been chosen or designated for some special service. Num. i. 17 ; 1 Chron. xii. 31, xvi. 41 ; 2 Chron. xxviii. 15, xxxi. 19. The term is here employed for the purpose of specifying more particularly the leading men in the two kingdoms, whose profligacy and irreligion preëminently aggravated the national guilt. By רֵאשִׁית הַגּוֹיִם we are not, with Newcome, to understand "the chief of the idolatrous nations," and that the persons spoken of were called after them, but the Hebrew nation, which is so called because it was the principal, or most distinguished of all the nations of the earth ; having been constituted the peculiar people of God, and possessing laws and privileges unknown to any other. It might well be said to occupy the first rank. Comp. רֵאשִׁית גּוֹיִם צְמֻלִים, Num. xxiv. 20, where the reference is to the distinguished place which the Amalekites held among the nations of Canaan. עַלְמָה is to be construed with נִקְבִּיּוֹת, and not with גּוֹיִם, or with צְמֻלִים and אֲמֻרֵי. The people of Israel were in the habit of going up to their princes and leaders for the decision of differences, etc. They exerted an influence over the entire people. Both the LXX. and the Syr. are greatly at fault in the translation of this verse.

2. Three heathen cities are here selected as specimens of the greatness and prosperity of the nations to which they belonged, and the Israelites are challenged to institute a comparison of the circumstances of these nations and the extent of their territory, with those of their own, as also, to reflect on the present prostrate condition of the cities mentioned, in order that they might become sensible of the superiority with which Jehovah had distinguished them, and the greater punishment to which they had exposed themselves by their ungrateful returns. For עַלְמָה, Calneh, and חַמַּת, Hamath, see on Is. x. 9. Hitzig attempts to prove that by the latter name, Hamath, see on Is. x. 9. Hitzig attempts to prove that by the latter name, Ecbatana or Hamedan is meant ; but there is no reason to believe that the Hebrews had any knowledge of this city in the days of Amos. It is here called הַגְּבֵה, great, not to distinguish it from other cities of the same name, but to express its size and magnificence. Comp. צִידוֹן הַגְּבֵה, Sidon the great, Josh. xi. 8. גַּת, Gath, was the chief city of one of the five satrapies of the Philistines, with whose name it is here associated, to distinguish it from Gath-Hepher, and Gath-Rimmon. It had more than once been reduced before the time of Amos, and disappeared at an early period from the annals of geography. No trace of it has been discovered by any modern traveller. The הַגְּבֵה בְּרֵיחַ has been regarded as the Article by the LXX., Syr., and Vulg. translators, and is thus found in twelve of De Rossi's MSS. ; but the more natural construction is that of the Targ. and most modern versions, which makes it interrogative. Before the מִן of comparison is an ellipsis of הַגְּבֵה ; and הַמְּמַלְכֹת, these kingdoms, must be understood as designating those of Israel and Judah, with which the prophet had immediately to do, and to which he thus emphatically points. In this way only can an appropriate reference be found for the distinctive affixes in גְּבֵהֶם and גְּבוּלֵהֶם.

3. Supply הוּי, wo to, from ver. 1. מִן מְדַלְּתֵי, the Targ. not inappropriately explains by מִן מְדַלְּתֵי, remove to a distance. The root is מָדַל, which in the other dia-

- And bring near the seat of oppression ;
 4 That lie upon beds of ivory,
 And are stretched upon their couches ;
 That eat lambs from the flock,
 And calves from the midst of the stall ;
 5 That strike up songs to the sound of the lyre ;
 Like David they invent for themselves instruments of music ;
 6 That drink in bowls of wine,
 And anoint with the first of oils ;
 But are not grieved for the destruction of Joseph !

lects signifies to separate, remove as an object of disgust. Aq. οι ἀποκεχωρισμένοι, Symm. ἀφωρισμένοι. The persons addressed could not bear the idea that the period of threatened punishment was impending ; they endeavored as much as possible to keep it out of view. Comp. Ezek. xii. 21-28. In striking antithesis to this, they are represented in the following hemistich, as acting in such a manner as speedily to bring it upon them.

“Sed quam cœcus inest vitiis amor ?
 omne futurum
 Despicitur, suadentque brevem presentia
 fructum ;
 Et ruit in vetitum damni secreta libido,
 Dum mora supplicii lucro, serumque quod instat
 Creditur.”

Claud. Eutrop. lib. ii.

I cannot agree with Jerome, Grotius, Newcome, Justi, and some others, in referring הַשֵּׁבִיט הַמִּלְכִּי, the seat or throne of oppression, to the rule of the king of Assyria : it is more natural to regard the prophet as describing the wickedness of the people themselves in yielding support to a system of flagrant injustice and oppression, on the part of their own rulers and judges. Thus most expositors. שֵׁבִיט occurs nowhere else in the sense of throne ; but רִיב, of which it is properly the infinitive, is used in application both to kings and judges, as is also the participle רִיבֵיב. The term is synonymous with בִּשְׂט, which is also used both of the throne and the bench. הַגִּישׁ is here taken by most interpreters to have the same signification as in Kal, to approach ;

but as in every other instance in which the verb is used in Hiphil it vindicates to itself the causative acceptation, and in the present case is obviously intended to form a contrast to רִיבֵיב, which conveys the idea of removing to a distance, I must retain the rendering of our common version. Thus Hitzig and Ewald. The meaning is, that instead of putting away from them all illegal and oppressive judgment, they encouraged those who were guilty of them, by assisting in carrying them into execution.

4. For מַשְׁבֵּית, beds of ivory, see on chap. iii. 15 ; and comp. lecti eburnei of Horace, and lecti eborati of Plautus.

הַשֵּׁבִיט, from שָׁבַט, Arab. سرج, libere

dismisit, to be thrown negligently along, is descriptive of the self-indulgent mode in which the Orientals recline upon their sofas or couches, being stretched upon them at full length. The whole verse sets forth in well chosen expressions the luxurious habits of the opulent. LXX. κατασπαταλῶντες.

5, 6. רַבֵּיב is a ἄπαξ λεγ., and has been thought by Gesenius, Hitzig, and Ewald, to have been selected on purpose, instead of רָבַח, to sing, in order to express the contempt in which the music deserved to be held. Such interpretation, however, does not appear to be philologically sustained, and ill suits the corresponding hemistich. According to the LXX. ἐπικρατοῦντες, presiding over, or at, the verb is synonymous with נָצַח, in Piel, to superintend, lead in music. Hence רִבֵּיב, the chief musician. Comp. the Arab. فرط, prævertit, præcessit. The

- 7 Therefore now they shall go captive at the head of the captives,
 And the shouting company of those that recline shall depart.
 8 The Lord Jehovah hath sworn by himself,
 Thus saith Jehovah, God of hosts,
 I abhor the splendor of Jacob,
 And I hate his palaces :
 Therefore will I deliver up the city, and all that is in it.
 9 It shall be, that if ten men should be left in one house, persons reprobated were so passionately fond of song, that they could not be content to listen to the performances of professed musicians, but took the lead in striking up songs to the sound of the lyre. The reference to David, who was the sweet singer of Israel, and of whose musical instruments express mention is made Neh. xii 36, is manifestly ironical; implying that, while that monarch devoted his musical talent to the glory of God, the dissipated grandees of Israel consulted only their personal gratification, and that of those who joined their giddy circle מְזַמְּרִים, were properly basins, or bowls, of a larger size, used for sacrificial purposes, Exod. xxxviii. 3; Num. vii. 13, 19. The persons referred to, indulged to such excess, that ordinary cups were unsuited to their computations. They likewise anointed themselves with the most precious oils, and evinced a total apathy in regard to the calamities to which their people had already been subject, or the still more serious evils which threatened them. For the meaning of יוֹסֵף, Joseph, see on chap. v. 6.

7. מְזַמְּרִים, Arab. مَرْجَح, vox, the shout

or cry, in which the merry-makers indulged over their cups. The persons giving the shout seem to be intended, and, as the term is also used in reference to a cry of lamentation, Jer. xvi. 5, it may be implied that their joy would be turned into sorrow. They are spoken of collectively. Symm. ἐταίρηλα τρυφῆτων. Those who had taken the lead in revelry and all manner of wickedness, were to be first in the procession of captives. In such a position, their disgrace would be more conspicuous.

8. The double form of asseveration here employed is unusual, and is strongly emphatic. מְזַמְּרִים, the Piel participle of זָמַר, a root of the same signification with זָמַרְתָּ. Compare for a similar interchange of these letters זָמַר and זָמַרְתָּ, and גָּמַר and גָּמַרְתָּ. Though the phrase יִשְׂרָאֵל הַיָּשָׁר, the excellency of Jacob, cannot be otherwise understood than of God himself, as the only legitimate object of glorying on the part of his people, chap. viii. 7, yet, in the present instance, it is to be taken in application to the country and peculiar privileges of the Hebrews. It was once a country piously celebrated in song as the excellency of Jacob, Ps. xlvii. 5, and the peculiar object of divine regard; but now defiled by the wickedness of its inhabitants, it had become the object of his abhorrence. By יְרֵי, the city, Amos had most probably Samaria in his eye. Hitzig attaches to יְרֵי הַשָּׁמַרְתָּ, the signification of Kal, to besiege, shut up, but the usual Hiphil signification better agrees with the following connection. מְלֵא, fulness, conveys the idea of multitude, or great abundance, and comprehends here both the numerous inhabitants themselves, and the wealth and means of gratification in which they abounded. Comp. Ps. xxiv. 1. For the accomplishment of the prediction, see 2 Kings xvii. 5, 6.

9, 10. The scene is not necessarily laid in the city; it might also have been realized in any of the towns or villages in the country that had been depopulated by the Assyrians. It depicts, in the most affecting manner, the deplorable condition of the few that had escaped the enemy, and had now been attacked by the plague—a usual attendant on

They also shall die.

- 10 And one's relative, even he that burneth him shall take him up,
 To remove his bones out of the house ;
 And shall say to him that is in the innermost part of the house,
 Is there yet any with thee ;
 And he shall say, None !
 Then shall he say, Hush !
 For we must not mention the name of Jehovah.
- 11 For behold ! Jehovah hath commanded,
 And he will smite the great house with breaches,
 And the small house with fissures.

war in the East. The prophet declares, that if as many as ten had been left in one house, which might be regarded as a rare instance, they should die, one after another, of this fatal disease. דור is not here to be taken in the special sense of uncle, but denotes any near relative on whom it devolved to attend to the funeral rites. Targ. קרוביה. Vulg. propinquus. In the present case, such would be the paucity of hands, that he would have to perform the whole himself. The copulative ו, prefixed to מטרם, is epexegetical, and is to be rendered even, as in Zech. ix. 9. Instead of מטרם, many both of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. read correctly מטרם. But comp. the Syr. <sup>ו</sup> <sup>ו</sup> <sup>ו</sup>. Some have attempted to prove from this, and some other passages, that it was the practice of the Hebrews to burn their dead. But what is said 2 Chron. xvi. 14, xxi. 19 ; Jer. xxxiv. 5, obviously refers to the burning of spices, and not of dead bodies. 1 Sam. xxxi. 12, and our present text, exhibit special cases. In the former of these, the object was so to dispose of the corpses that it might not be in the power of the Philistines further to dishonor them ; while in the latter, it was either, as Grotius supposes, to prevent contagion, or to dispose of the body in the only way of which the circumstances of the time would allow. That by מטרם, not mere bones are meant, nor bodies so emaciated as to be nothing but skin and bone, which is Winer's opinion, but dead bodies, seems established beyond all doubt by a reference to Gen. 1. 25 ; Exod. xiii. 19 ; 2 Kings xiii. 21 ; Jer. viii. 1, 2. בנרבתיהוה, is well rendered in the Vulg. in penetralibus domus. See on Is. xiv. 13. Having burnt and removed one body after another, the relative, discovering a patient in one of the innermost rooms or corners of the house, inquires whether he is the only survivor? and on receiving for answer that he is, he suddenly enjoins silence upon him. There is some difficulty in determining what occasioned this injunction, and for what reason the Divine name was not to be mentioned. Most probably the patient had begun to give vent to his feelings in expressions of praise to Jehovah, for sparing his life in the midst of such prevailing mortality ; when the other, from some superstitious notion, or from the supposed incongruity of praising God in such circumstances, interrupted his pious effusions. הוזהיר בנפשו, means to mention, or record with approbation, as an object of trust. Comp. Josh. xxiii. 7 ; Ps. xx. 8. The phrase cannot, therefore, be construed into the language of despair — as if the person who gave utterance to the words besought God to take him away likewise, and thus terminate the melancholy scene. Nor, for the same reason, can it imply, as Michaelis interprets, that he had confirmed what he had stated with an oath.

11. Grotius, Dahl, Justi, and Ewald, adopt the interpretation of the Targ., Jerome, and Cyril, that by the "great house" is meant the kingdom of Israel,

- 12 Shall horses run upon a rock ?
 Will one plough there with oxen ?
 Yet we have converted justice into poison,
 And the fruit of righteousness into wormwood.
- 13 Ye that rejoice in a thing of nought,
 That say,
 Have we not by our own strength,
 Taken to ourselves horns ?
- 14 But behold ! I will raise up against you, O house of Israel !
 A nation, saith Jehovah, God of hosts ;
 And they shall oppress you,
 From the entrance of Hamath,
 To the river of the desert.

and by the "small house" that of Judah; and comp. chap. ix. 8, 9, where the same participial form מְצַרֵּה is employed as here before another verb. רָסַס-ים, mean atoms, or the minute parts to which the materials of a building are reduced, when it is utterly destroyed. The word otherwise signifies the small drops of any liquid that is sprinkled, and is derived from רָסַס, to sprinkle. בְּקִיעִים, are fishures, or rents in an edifice, which threaten its fall. There was to be a marked difference in the treatment of the two kingdoms; the one was to be utterly destroyed, while the other, though greatly injured, was still to stand. Rosenmüller, however, regards the interpretation as "arguta magis, quam vera." Calvin, Vatablus, Marckius, Cocceius, Lowth, Michaelis, and Maurer, likewise take the words literally, as applying to the houses both of the rich and the poor. The destruction, more or less, was to be universal.

"Regum turres ac pauperum tabernas."

Horace.

This construction of the verse is confirmed by a comparison with chap. iii. 15.

12. The folly of expecting real prosperity while committing acts of injustice, is forcibly represented by comparing it to the absurdity of attempting to run horses upon a rock, or to plough it with oxen. To add to the strength of the representation, it is put in the interrogative form. הֲיִרְסוּ is to be taken impersonally.

13. The participles, with the ה demonstrative, are again employed as in verses 3, 4, 5, 6. לֹא דָבָר, non-re, what is so perishable and evanescent, that it may well be said to have no existence. Horns are the symbol of power and dominion.

14. Few instances will be found in Hebrew, in which the object of a verb is so far removed from it as יָי here is from מְקִיִּים. Some have referred גְּחֹל הַיַּרְדֵּן, the river of the Desert, to the Rhinocorura, otherwise called the river of Egypt; and others to "the brook of the willows," נַחַל הַיְרֵבִים, or the Wady el-Ahsa, which flows into the Dead Sea, near Zoar; but it is obvious from 2 Kings xiv. 25, in which the limits here specified are described as constituting those of the kingdom of the ten tribes, that it must mean the brook Kidron, which falls into the Dead Sea to the south of Jericho. One of the names given to this sea is יַם הַיַּרְדֵּן, the Sea of the Desert; הַיַּרְדֵּן, the desert, forming what is now commonly called

الغور,
El-Ghor, or the low sterile region in which the valley of the Jordan terminates, and which extends as far as the Elanitic Gulf.

CHAPTER VII.—VIII. 3.

THIS portion of the book contains four symbolical visions respecting successive judgments that were to be inflicted on the kingdom of Israel. They were delivered at Bethel, and in all probability at the commencement of the prophet's ministry. Each of them, as they follow in the series, is more severe than the preceding. The first presented to the mental eye of the prophet a swarm of young locusts, which threatened to cut off all hope of the harvest, 1-3; the second, a fire, which effected an universal conflagration, 4-6; the third, a plumb-line, ready to be applied to mark out the edifices that were to be destroyed, 7-9; and the fourth, a basket of ripe fruit, denoting the near and certain destruction of the kingdom, viii. 1-3. The intervening eight verses, which conclude the seventh chapter, contain an account of the interruption of Amos by Amaziah, the priest of Bethel, whose punishment is specially predicted. In point of style, this portion differs from that of the rest of the book, being almost exclusively historical and dialogic.

- 1 Thus the Lord Jehovah showed me, and, behold, he formed locusts at the beginning of the shooting up of the latter grass : and, behold, it was the latter grass after the king's mowings.
- 2 And it came to pass, when they had entirely devoured the grass of the land, I said :

1. All the four visions are introduced in nearly the same language : כֹּה הִרְאֵנִי אֲדַבֵּר יְהוָה וְהִנֵּה אֲבַיֵּן יְהוָה וְהִנֵּה אֲבַיֵּן יְהוָה. The repetition of וְהִנֵּה, behold, is peculiar to this verse. In the latter of the two instances, it is employed for the sake of emphasis, instead of the substantive verb, אֲבַיֵּן, a name of the locust, occurring only here, and Nah. iii. 17, and synonymous with אֲבַיֵּן, Is. xxxiii. 4, Comp. the Arab. جابي and جاب, locusta, from جابا, egressus fuit, in reference to its coming forth out of the egg, which had been deposited in the earth to be hatched. The term is, therefore, strictly descriptive of the locust in its caterpillar state, and thus agrees with the use of the verb יָצַר, to form, which is here used. Prof. Lee derives it from جوب, secuit. Credner on Joel, pp. 299-302, elaborately attempts to set aside the above derivation of Bochart, yet allows that the word denotes the insect in the first stage of its existence. The plural termination יָ, is found in several masculine nouns, as הָרִי, הָרִי, הָרִי, הָרִי, etc. ; but the anomaly has not yet been satisfactorily accounted for. See, however, Gesen. Lehrgeb. p. 523. Lee's Heb. Gram. Art. 139, 4, 2d edit. אַחֲרֵי, an after-math, or second crop, which comes up immediately after the mowing of grass. אַחֲרֵי, cognate with אַחֲרֵי, Arab. لقط, legit, collegit, signifies in Piel to gather the late fruit. Comp. the Syr. حَمِي, serotinus, and אַחֲרֵי, the latter rain. The phrase אַחֲרֵי הַמְּוֹסֵי may either mean the mowings of the grass which grew on the royal domains, or the first mowings of that belonging to the people, to which the king tyrannically laid claim. Considering the character of the times, there can be little doubt that the latter are meant.

2. That the locusts here referred to are not intended to represent a literal swarm of these insects, but are to be taken figuratively, as denoting a hostile army, just as the fire in the second vision is to be regarded as symbolical of war, may be inferred from the figurative

O Lord Jehovah ! forgive, I beseech thee !

Who is Jacob, that he should stand ?

For he is small.

3 Jehovah repented of this :

It shall not be, saith Jehovah.

4 Thus the Lord Jehovah showed me, and, behold, the Lord Jehovah called to contend by fire ; and it consumed the great abyss, and devoured the portion.

5 Then I said :

O Lord Jehovah ! desist, I beseech thee !

Who is Jacob, that he should stand ?

For he is small.

6 Jehovah repented of this :

It also shall not be, saith the Lord Jehovah.

7 Thus he showed me, and behold the Lord stood upon a per-character of the two visions, ver. 7, and chap. viii. 1. Most probably the army of Pul, king of Assyria, is meant. The Israelites had been greatly reduced by repeated invasions on the part of the Syrian kings, and were on the point of being attacked by the Assyrians, but purchased their retreat with the sum of one thousand talents of silver. See 2 Kings xv. 19, 20. מִי יִקְיָם בְּיָמַי, concisely for מִי יִקְיָם בְּיָמַי בְּיָמַי, who is Jacob, that he should stand? meaning, how can he possibly sustain the threatened attack, reduced and weak as he is in resources. קָם signifies to stand fast, continue, endure, as well as to rise. One of De Rossi's MSS., and another originally, read יִקְיָם, and another יִקְיָם, and thus the LXX. Syr. Symm. and Vulg. ; but less appropriately in such context.

3. נָחַם, Pick renders, gave consolation, which is not so suitable here as the signification, to repent. Such repentance is to be understood θεοσπεπῶς, appearing, as Veil observes, "in effectu, citra mutationem in effectu." Comp. 1 Sam. xv. 11 ; Jer. xlii. 10. אָחַז אֶת-רִגְזוֹ, the Lord turned away his wrath. אֵת, the feminine pronoun, stands for the neuter of other languages.

4. יִצַּר corresponds in form to קָרָא, ver. 1. לָרֵב, an abbreviated form of the Hiphil infinitive, לְהִרְיֵב. Comp. Is. iii.

13. The verb signifies to contend judicially, to treat according to one's deserts, to punish. By the fire here spoken of we are not to understand a great heat which produced a drought in the land, but war, of which it is an appropriate symbol. See Num. xxi. 28 ; Judges ix. 15, 20 ; Is. lxvi. 16. To express the extent of the threatened calamity, the fire, by a bold figure, is represented as drying up the ocean (הַיָּם), and consuming whatever was found on the dry land. This acceptance of הַיָּם, a division, portion, or allotment of land, the antithesis requires ; still, however, the term is chosen with special application to the land of Canaan, which was divided to the children of Israel as their portion. The definite form of the noun אֶת-הַיָּמִין, indicates as much. The invasion of the land of Israel by Tiglath-Pileser, and the first captivity of that people seem to be the subjects of the vision. See 2 Kings xv. 29 ; 1 Chron. v. 26. That in the former vision, the calamity had not been inflicted, the use of the verb סָלַח, forgive, intimates. In this, it had in part, as the use of הִנָּחֵם, desist, obviously implies.

5, 6. In these verses, as in vers. 2 and 3, we have a beautiful instance of the influence of prayer in averting or mitigating the judgments of God.

- 8 perpendicular wall; and in his hand was a plumb-line. And Jehovah said to me, What seest thou, Amos? And I said, A plumb-line. And the Lord saith:
 Behold, I will set a plumb-line
 In the midst of my people Israel;
 I will pass by them no more.
- 9 The high-places of Isaac shall be desolated,
 And the sanctuaries of Israel laid waste;
 And I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.
- 10 Then Amaziah, the priest of Bethel, sent to Jeroboam, the 7, 8. This vision, and that described chap. viii. 1-3, differ from the two preceding, in the distinct and express application of the symbols to the punishment of the Israelites. The Divine patience is exhausted. Jehovah takes active measures for executing his threatenings, and at last inflicts the exterminating judgment on a people ripe for destruction. The prophet, in consequence, intercedes no more.  $\text{קֶּנֶסֶן חֹמַת}$ , a perpendicular wall, lit. a wall of the plummet, so called from the plumb-line being applied in order to secure its perpendicularity.  $\text{קֶּנֶסֶן}$ , which occurs only in these verses, properly signifies lead or tin. Arab.  $\text{انك}$ , Syr.  $\text{انط}$ , plumbum.

Aq.  $\gamma\acute{\alpha}\nu\omega\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , stannatura. The line and plummet were used not only when houses were building, but also when they were to be destroyed. See 2 Kings xxi. 13; Is. xxviii. 17, xxxiv. 11; Lam. ii. 8. The LXX. and Symm.  $\acute{\alpha}\delta\acute{\alpha}\mu\alpha\nu\tau\alpha$ , which the Syr. also exhibits. In the explanation of the vision, it is expressly stated, that the plummet was to be applied to the people of Israel in order to mark them out for destruction; and its being placed in the midst of them denoted, that this destruction was not to be confined to a part only of the kingdom, as it had been in the case of Tiglath-Pileser's invasion, but that it should reach the very centre. This took place when Shalmaneser, the successor of that king, after a siege of three years, took Samaria, put an end to the kingdom of the ten tribes, and carried them away captive into Assyria, 2 Kings xvii. 3, 5, 6, 23.  $\text{עָבַר}$ , to pass, pass on or away, means, in application to sin, to pass it by, to forgive, not to punish it. Prov. xix. 11; Micah vii. 18. See on this latter passage.

9. A definite prediction of the destruction which was to overtake the places of idolatrous worship, and the royal house by which that worship had been established and supported. These are specially mentioned, because to them, as the procuring causes, the destruction was to be traced. For the meaning of  $\text{רִמְזֵי}$ , high places, see on Is. lxv. 7.  $\text{מִבְּתֵי־אֱלֹהִים}$ , the parallel term, denotes the temples, or structures, consecrated to the worship of idols. Comp.  $\text{שְׁבָתֵי־הַקֹּדֶשׁ}$ , ver. 13.  $\text{יִשְׁתַּקֵּן}$ , instead of  $\text{קִרְיָתוֹ}$ , is not peculiar to our prophet; the same orthography is found Ps. cv. 9; Jer. xxxiii. 26. There is no reason whatever to suppose that the word was purposely so written, or that it was intended to be taken otherwise than as a proper name; yet the LXX. have  $\beta\omega\mu\omicron\iota\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \gamma\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\omega\tau\omicron\varsigma$ ; and so the Syr. Michaelis finds a paronomasia in it; Dahl, an instance of irony; and even Calvin thinks that the name was used by Amos  $\mu\upsilon\mu\eta\tau\iota\kappa\acute{\omega}\varsigma$ . It is here, and ver. 16, parallel with  $\text{בְּתֵי־אֱלֹהִים}$ , and denotes the ten tribes.

10, 11. Verses 10-17 contain an interesting historical episode. As there was doubtless a number of priests who conducted the idolatrous services at Bethel,  $\text{בְּתֵל}$  must here be understood  $\kappa\alpha\tau'\ \acute{\epsilon}\xi\omicron\chi\eta\mu$  of the chief or high priest, attached to the royal temple. In the spirit which has characterized a false king of Israel, saying: Amos hath formed a conspiracy against thee, in the midst of the house of Israel: the land cannot contain all his words. For thus hath Amos said:

Jeroboam shall die by the sword;

And Israel shall surely be led away captive from his land.

12 And Amaziah said to Amos: Seer! Go, flee to the land of 13 Judah, and eat there bread, and prophesy there. But pro-
14 phesy no more at Bethel, for it is the king's sanctuary, and a royal residence. And Amos answered and said to Amaziah: I am no prophet; neither am I the son of a prophet; but I am an herdsman, and a cultivator of sycamores. And Jehovah priesthood in every age, Amaziah brings against the prophet the groundless charge of treason. That  $\text{הָיָה לִי}$  is to be rendered contain, and refers to number and not to atrocity, appears from  $\text{בָּל}$ , all, being employed before the following noun. Com. for this signification of the verb in Hiphil, 1 Kings vii. 26, 37; Ezek. xxiii. 32. In the Syr. in which a verb signifying to endure is used,  $\text{בָּל}$  is omitted, as not suiting the Oriental idiom.

12, 13. It does not appear that the king took any notice of the message that was sent him, so that Amaziah was left to try what the interposition of his own authority would effect. He addressed the prophet by the title  $\text{רֹאֵה}$ , seer, most probably with contemptuous reference to his visions; though it was adopted in the later Hebrew, as equivalent to  $\text{נָבִי}$ , and corresponds in signification to  $\text{חָזָה}$ , which was anciently used, 1 Sam. ix. 9. Not imagining that Amos could be actuated by any higher principle than that of selfishness, which reigned in his own heart, the priest advised him to consult his safety by fleeing across the frontier into the kingdom of Judah, where he might obtain his livelihood by the unrestrained exercise of his prophetic gifts. The words  $\text{הָיָה לִי בְרֵחַ וְהָיָה לִי בְרֵחַ}$ , though pleonastic are emphatic. At all events, he could not be permitted any longer to prophesy in the city of Bethel, which was distinguished not only as the principal seat of the king's religion, but also as being one of his royal residences. Though the ordinary residence of the Israelitish monarchs was at Samaria, yet as they went at certain stated seasons to Bethel to worship the golden calf, they had had a palace built there for their accommodation.

14. Amos modestly but firmly repels the charge of selfishness, by declaring, that he was not a prophet by profession; that he had not been educated with a view to such profession; that he was a person of rustic habits: and that his Divine mission was altogether of an extraordinary character.  $\text{בֶּן נָבִי}$ , the son, i. e. pupil or disciple of a prophet. In all probability some of the schools of the prophets, of which we read in the first book of Samuel, were still in existence, in which young men were educated, who devoted themselves to the service of the theocracy in the capacity of public instructors, and to these or to more private studies, under the guidance of some prophet, Amos may be supposed to refer.  $\text{בֹּזֵק}$ , strictly taken, means an ox-herd; but as  $\text{בָּקָר}$  came, in a larger acceptance, to denote cattle in general, it might signify a keeper of any kind of cattle. There is, therefore no occasion, with some, to suppose that the word was originally  $\text{בֹּזֵק}$ , as in chap. i. 1.  $\text{בֹּזֵק}$  occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew Scriptures; but the Arab.  $\text{بلس}$ , signifies a white fig, and the Eth.  $\text{በለበ}$ : both the fig-tree and its fruit. As, however, the participial form of the word is that which denotes agency, it must mean one who is occupied with, or cultivates figs. The particular mode in which the an-

- 15 took me from following the flock ; and Jehovah said to me :
 16 Go, prophesy to my people Israel. And now, hear the word of Jehovah. Thou sayest, Prophecy not against Israel ; and,
 17 Drop nothing against the house of Isaac. Therefore thus saith Jehovah :

Thy wife shall commit lewdness in the city,
 And thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword ;
 Thy land, also, shall be divided by line,
 And thou shalt die in a polluted land ;
 And Israel shall surely be taken away captive from his land.

cients cultivated fig-trees, the LXX. appear to have had in their eye, when they rendered it by κνίζων, a nipper or scratcher ; for we are informed by Theophrastus, that iron nails or prongs were employed to make incisions or scratches in the tree, that by letting out some of the sap, the fruit might be ripened : πέπτειν οὐ δύναται ἂν μὴ ἐπικνισθῆι· ἀλλ' ἔχοντες ὄνυχας σιδηρᾶς ἐπικνίζουσιν ἃ δ' ἂν ἐπικνισθῆι, τεταρταία πέπτεται, iv. 2. See also Plin. Hist. Nat. xiii. 14 ; Forskal, Flor. Egypt. p. 182. סקנימ, sycamores, a species of tree, abounding in the East, pretty much resembling the mulberry tree, the fruit of which is similar to the fig. It is, however, very inferior in quality, and is only eaten by the poorest class of the people. From this circumstance it may be inferred that Amos occupied a humble station in life previous to his being called to prophesy in Israel.

15. לך אבנא is used both in a good and in a bad sense, and is here to be rendered indefinitely, to prophesy to. The pronominal suffix in אבנא, "my people," is not without emphasis. The Israelites were Jehovah's by right ; he still claimed his propriety in them ; and, by the ministry of his prophet, would have recovered them to his service.

16. Instead of listening to the prohibition of Amaziah, and retiring from his sphere of duty, Amos continued to discharge the duties of his office at Bethel ; but before proceeding to give an account of another vision which he had had, he directs a pointed prediction against the idolatrous priest by whom he had been interrupted. סקנימ, to distil, to cause to come down in pleasing and flowing discourse ; here parallel with אבנא, to prophesy. Comp. Ezek. xxi. 2, 7 ; Micah ii 6, 11. Syr. ܣܩܢܝܡ, Arab. نطف,

Eth. ንጠጠ: stillavit, ንጠረ: percolavit.

17. Between אבנא אבנא in this verse, and אבנא אבנא in ver. 16, is a marked antithesis. אבנא is not to be understood of voluntary acts of infidelity on the part of the wife of Amaziah, but of the violence to which she would have to submit on the part of the enemy. This being done אבנא, in the city, i. e. openly and publicly, was a great aggravation of the evil.

ῥῶδέ σφι ἐγκέφαλος χαμμίδις βέοι, ὡς ἴδε ὄνος

Αὐτῶν, καὶ τεκέων, ἄλοχοι δ' ἄλλοισι μὴ γέεν. Iliad. b. iii. 300, 301.

Every country, except Canaan, was regarded by the Hebrews as אבנא אבנא, a polluted land, though, at this time, their own land had become such. Is. xxiv. 5, where אבנא אבנא is similarly used ; Jer. ii. 7. The land of Assyria is that to which Amos points.

- That ye may destroy the poor of the land,
 5 Saying, When will the new moon be over,
 That we may sell corn?
 And the Sabbath,
 That we may open out grain?
 Making the ephah small,
 And the shekel great,
 And falsifying the balances for deceit.
 6 That we may purchase the poor for money,
 And the needy for a pair of sandals;
 And sell the refuse of the grain.
 7 Jehovah hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob:
 I will never forget any of their deeds.

the oppressions practised by the avaricious Israelites.

5. From this and other passages it is obvious that the Israelites, notwithstanding their idolatrous practices, still kept up the observance of the times and seasons appointed in the law of Moses. שָׁבַר and שֶׁבֶרֶר, lit. to break a breaking, but meaning to sell grain, is supposed to be so named from its being broken to pieces when ground at the mill. Some, however, think the name is derived from its being broken up or separated by a measure into portions, with a view to sale; while others are of opinion that it is so called because it breaks or puts an end to hunger, comparing Ps. civ. 11. By פָּתַח הַבָּר, opening the corn, is meant opening the sacks or granaries in which it was kept, and bringing it out for sale. Thus the LXX. Syr. and Targ. The פֶּהַח, ephah, was a corn measure, containing three seahs, and according to Josephus, equal to the Attic medimnus, or somewhat above three English pecks. It is uncertain whether the word be originally Hebrew, or whether it be Egyptian. שָׁקָל, from שָׁקַל, to weigh, Arab. ثَقِلَ, ponderosus fuit, gravitatem et pondus exploravit, is here used of weights in general. It was originally any piece of metal weighed as an equivalent for what was bought; but came afterwards to signify standard money, and differed in value, according as it was of silver or gold, and as it was estimated by the sacred or the royal standard, Exod. xxx. 13; 2 Sam. xiv. 26. For the sake of greater emphasis, instead of saying, to make or to use deceitful balances, the verb בָּעַת, to bend, twist, pervert, is employed, which, in point of meaning, is pleonastic. LXX. ποιῆσαι ζυγὸν ἄδικμον.

6. See chap. ii. 6. שָׁבַל, from שָׁבַל, to fall; what has fallen off, refuse, chaff, etc.

7. The iniquitous conduct of the Israelites having been minutely described, the severe punishment which they had merited is now threatened. אֲדֹנָי יִשְׂרָאֵל, the excellency of Jacob, has been variously interpreted. The Targ. Grotius, Dahl, Newcome, and Bauer, understand the excellence conferred upon Jacob; Justi and Ewald, very preposterously, the pride or haughtiness of the people; the Rabbins and some others, the temple; but the only appropriate construction of the phrase, in this connection, is that which refers it to Jehovah himself, in whom alone the Hebrews gloried while they adhered to the purity of his worship, and in whom they still ought to glory. Thus the Syr. ܘܢܗܘܐ ܘܢܗܘܐ ܘܢܗܘܐ ܘܢܗܘܐ, the Lord, the Mighty One of Jacob; Munster, Vatablus, Mercer, Drusius, Lively, Gesenius, Hitzig, Maurer. Com. chap. vi. 8, where אֲדֹנָי יִשְׂרָאֵל occurs instead of the present phrase, which, however, is also there used in a bad

- 8 Shall not the land tremble for this,
 And every one that dwelleth therein mourn?
 Shall not all of it rise like the river?
 Shall it not be driven, and subside,
 Like the river of Egypt?
- 9 It shall come to pass in that day,
 Saith the Lord Jehovah,
 That I will cause the sun to go down at noon,
 And will darken the land in the clear day.
- 10 I will turn your festivals into mourning,
 And all your songs into lamentation:
 I will bring sackcloth upon all loins,
 And baldness upon every head;
 I will make it as the mourning for an only son,
 And the end of it a bitter day.

sense.  $\text{אִם אֲשַׁחֵשׁ}$ , if I forget, is the usual formula of swearing, implying that it should not take place.  $\text{כִּי}$ , in this connection, implies both totality, and the single items of which that totality is made up. Comp. Ps. ciii. 2.

8. The guilt of the people was so enormous, that it was sufficient to induce an entire subversion of the existing state of things. To express this more strongly, the land is metaphorically represented as rising and swelling like the Nile, and again falling like the same river. Of course, the idea of the heaving and subsiding of the ground during an earthquake is what is intended, as the beginning of the verse shows. For the sake of energy and impression, the interrogative form is, as frequently, employed. That  $\text{בִּי־אֵל}$ , by an elision of the letter Yod, is a defective form of  $\text{בִּי־אֵלֵךְ}$ , is evident from the parallel passage, chap. ix. 5. Fifteen MSS. originally two more, and perhaps other three, and one of the early editions, read  $\text{בִּי־אֵלֵךְ}$  in full. For the origin and meaning of the word, see on Is. xix. 6.  $\text{גִּבְרֵשׁ}$  is used in Niph'al, to express the violent agitation of the sea when raised by the wind, Is. lvii. 20. It here denotes the rise of the Nile, which is generally above twenty feet. For  $\text{בְּיָמֵי־קֵרִי}$ , the Keri and a great many

MSS. in the text, read  $\text{בְּיָמֵי־קֵרֵךְ}$ , which is undoubtedly genuine. The root  $\text{קֵרַךְ}$  occurs in a similar connection, chap. ix. 5. It signifies to sink down, or subside.

9. Some think the prophet here predicts the total eclipse of the sun, which took place at one of the great festivals in the year that Jeroboam died, (see Usher's Annals, A. M. 3213); but whatever there may be in the language borrowed from such an event, consistency of interpretation requires it to be taken metaphorically, as descriptive of a change from circumstances of prosperity to those of adversity. Comp. Jer. xv. 9; Ezek. xxxii. 7-10.

10. The Hebrew festivals were occasions of great joy, and were no doubt on this very account kept up among the ten tribes after they had lost their religious importance. The calamitous result of the Assyrian invasion under Shalmaneser is here most graphically depicted. Comp. Is. xv. 2; Jer. xlviii. 37; Ezek. vii. 18. The death of an only son was regarded by the Hebrews as the most mournful of events. Comp. Jer. vi. 26; Zech. xii. 10. The pronominal reference in  $\text{שְׂמֵתֵי־יְהוָה}$  and  $\text{אֲהַרְרֵי־יְהוָה}$  is  $\text{אֲנִי־אֵלֵךְ}$  understood.  $\text{בְּיָמֵי־קֵרֵךְ}$  is the Caph veritatis.

- 11 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord Jehovah,
 When I will send a famine into the land ;
 Not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water,
 But of hearing the words of Jehovah.
- 12 And men shall wander from sea to sea,
 And shall run up and down, from the North even to the East,
 Seeking the word of Jehovah,
 But they shall not find it.
- 13 In that day the fair virgins shall faint,
 And the young men also, for thirst ;
- 14 That swear by the sin of Samaria,
 And say, By the life of thy God, O Dan !

“Nunc et amara dies, et noctis amarior umbra est ;
 Omnia jam tristi tempora felle madens.”
Tibullus, Eleg. lib. ii. Eleg. iv. 11.

11, 12. The Israelites now despised the messages of the prophets, and by a just retribution, in addition to all their other calamities, they should experience a total withdrawal of all prophetic communications. Comp. Ezek. vii. 26 ; Micah iii. 7. In whatever direction they might proceed, and whatever efforts they might make to obtain information relative to the issue of their trouble, they should meet with nothing but disappointment. מִזְרֵחַ, sun-rise, is used, where geographically we should have expected רִמְיִךְ, or נֶגֶב, the south ; but the term may have been chosen in order to intimate the complete alienation of Israel from Judah, in consequence of which no one would think of repairing to Jerusalem for oracular information. That any transposition of the words has taken place, I cannot, with Houbigant and Newcome, suppose. It is, however, just as probable that the cardinal points were not intended to be strictly marked, but that the object was to indicate generally the hopelessness of the attempts mentioned. The Athnach is improperly placed under מִזְרֵחַ, instead of under יִשׁוּבְתֵי, as the Vau prefixed to יִשׁוּבְתֵי and the form of the verb show.

13. צָמָא in this verse, is to be understood of the natural thirst to be experienced by the inhabitants of Samaria during the siege predicted in the preceding verses ; תְּהִלְתְּלֵיךְ, properly means, they shall feel themselves involved in darkness, which is physically true of those who are seized with syncope. The root עָלַף, Arab. غلف, signifies to cover, envelop ; here, with darkness, understood. After הַבְּחֹרִיִּים subaud. יִתְעַלְפוּ.

14. אֲשַׁמְרֵת שִׁמְרוֹךְ, the sin or crime of Samaria ; i. e. the golden calf and other objects of unlawful worship which were the occasion of sin and guilt to the Israelites. Hitzig thinks that Astarte is specifically meant ; but the term was doubtless intended to comprehend the calf at Bethel, the religious veneration of which led to the grosser forms of idolatry. At the same time, אֲשַׁרְתָּה, Astarte, is spoken of, 2 Kings xiii. 6, in distinction from the worship specially instituted by Jeroboam. See on Is. xvii. 8. The god of Dan was the other golden calf, erected by Jeroboam in Dan, 1 Kings xii. 26-28. By הַדֶּרֶךְ בְּאֵר-שֶׁבַע, Kimchi, Michaelis, and Bauer, understand literally the way or pilgrimage to Beersheba ; but the phrase being parallel with the two former instances, in which objects of false worship are meant, it must here be taken in the same sense. Hence the LXX. render θεός σου. Strictly speaking, it denotes the way or mode of worship, or the worship itself, that was performed at Beersheba. Com. Ps. cxxxix. 24 ; Acts ix. 2, xix. 9, 23. See on chap. v. 5. הָיִי is a formula of swearing: By the life of —, or, As curiously absurd and sinful when applied sure as such an one lives, and was pe- to inanimate objects.

And, By the life of the way of Beersheba!
They shall fall, and rise no more.

---

CHAPTER IX.

THIS chapter commences with an account of the fifth and last vision of the prophet, in which the final ruin of the kingdom of Israel is represented. This ruin was to be complete and irreparable; and no quarter to which the inhabitants might flee for refuge, would afford them any shelter from the wrath of the Omnipresent and Almighty Jehovah, 1-6. As a sinful nation, it was to be treated as if it had never stood in any covenant relation to him; yet, in their individual capacity, as the descendants of Abraham, how much soever they might be scattered and afflicted among the heathen, they should still be preserved, 7-10. The concluding part of the chapter contains a distinct prophecy of the restoration of the Jewish church after the Babylonish captivity, 11; the incorporation of the heathen which was to be consequent upon that restoration, 12; and the final establishment of the Jews in their own land in the latter day, 13-15.

---

1 I SAW the Lord standing beside the altar, and he said :
Smite the capital, that the thresholds may shake ;
And break them in pieces, on the heads of them all ;
Their posterity I will slay with the sword ;
None of their fugitives shall make his escape,
Nor shall any that slip away be delivered.

1. By the Targ., Calvin, Drusius, Grotius, Justi, Rosenmüller, and Hengstenberg, the scene of this vision is laid at the temple of Jerusalem; by Cyril, Munster, Tarnovius, Schmidius, Lowth, Michaelis, Dahl, Bauer, Hitzig, and Ewald, at the idolatrous temple at Bethel, and, in my opinion, rightly. Calvin does not show his usual tact in objecting to this interpretation, on the ground that it represents Jehovah as indirectly approving of superstition; for, though the true God was seen beside the idolatrous altar, it was not for the purpose of receiving homage, but of commanding that the whole of the erection and worship at Bethel should be destroyed. No argument in favor of Jerusalem can be built on the use of the article in  $\text{אלמזבח}$  "the altar," but the contrary. The idolatrous object to which sacrifices were offered at Bethel, having been mentioned in the preceding verse, nothing is more natural than a reference here to the altar on which they were presented.  $\text{כֶּסֶל}$ , an ornamented head or capital of a column, in the shape of a sphere, or bowl surrounded by flowers. It is usually derived from  $\text{כָּסַה}$ , to cover, and  $\text{כֶּתֶן}$ , to crown. LXX. ἰλαστήριον, mistaking the word for  $\text{כֶּתֶן}$ . When used of the ornamental part of the golden can-

- 2 Though they break through into Sheol,
Thence shall my hand take them ;
Though they climb up to heaven,
Thence will I bring them down.
- 3 Though they hide themselves on the summit of Carmel,
There I will search them out and take them ;
Though they conceal themselves from mine eyes in the bottom of the sea,
There I will command the serpent, and he shall bite them.
- 4 Though they go into captivity before their enemies,
There I will command the sword, and it shall kill them :
I will set mine eyes upon them for evil,
And not for good.
- 5 For it is the Lord Jehovah of hosts,
That toucheth the earth and it melteth ;

dlestick, they render it σφαυρωσθη. For בַּצֵּבִים, see on Is. vi. 4 ; the similarity, in some respects, between which passage and the present, appears to have suggested the idea that the temple at Jerusalem is here meant. The temple was to be smitten both above and below, to indicate its entire destruction. בַּצֵּבִים, break them, i. e. the capitals, etc., upon the head of all the worshippers. It does not appear that רִאשׁוֹת and בְּנֵי יְרֵיחַ are here used antithetically. The latter denotes the children of those who perished in the attack upon the idolatrous temple. When threatened by the Assyrians, they would flock in crowds to Bethel, to implore protection from the golden calf, and, while thus assembled, they should perish, along with the vain object of their trust ; they should, in fact, be buried in the ruins.

2-4. These verses exhibit a beautiful series of supposed cases of attempt at escape from the judgments of God, and the utter futility of every attempt of the kind. וְשִׁאוֹל and וְהַשָּׁמַיִם, are, as usual, employed as extreme points of opposition. Comp. Job xi. 8 ; Ps. cxxxix. 8 ; Is. xiv. 13, 14 ; Matt. xi. 23. רִאשׁוֹת הַבְּרָמִלִּים. Not only was Mount Carmel celebrated on account of its general fertility, but also on account of the dense forests and large caverns with which it abounded. These, together with its height, which is about twelve hundred feet, afforded the fittest possible places of concealment. Richter, in his Pilgrimage, p. 65, says : “ Mount Carmel is entirely covered with green ; on its summits are pines and oaks, and further down, olive and laurel trees, etc. These forests would furnish safe hiding places, equally with the caves, which are chiefly on the west side facing the sea.” תְּהֵם הַיָּם, the bottom of the Mediterranean Sea, forms a striking contrast to the summit of Carmel, which beetles above it. תְּהֵם הַיָּם, Arab. قعر, terra æquabilis ; when spoken of a house, the foundation or floor ; here the bottom or basis, on which the sea rests. For תְּהֵם הַיָּם, sea-serpent, see on Is. xxvii. 1.

“ ——— Immensis orbibus angues Incumbant pelago, pariterque ad littora tendunt.”

Æneid. ii. 204.

The מ in מִצֵּבִים, in verses 3 and 4, loses its proper prepositive signification, as in מִצִּיּוֹן, מִבְּרִית, מִמְחֹזוֹ, etc. and merely denotes position or place.

5, 6. A sublime description of the almighty and uncontrollable power of Jehovah. For the reference to the Nile, see on chap. viii. 8. Instead of מִצְלֵי הַיָּם, the Keri and not a few MSS. read מִצְלֵי הַיָּם in full. Comp. מִצְלֵי הַיָּם, Ps. civ. 3, 13.

- And all that dwell in it mourn ;
 It riseth, all of it, like the river,
 And subsideth like the river of Egypt.
- 6 He that buildeth his upper chambers in the heavens,
 And foundeth his vaults upon the earth ;
 That calleth to the waters of the sea,
 And poureth them out on the surface of the earth ;
 Jehovah is his name.
- 7 Are ye not as the Cushites to me,
 O sons of Israel ? saith Jehovah.
 Did I not bring Israel from the land of Egypt ?
 The Philistines from Caphtor ?
 And the Syrians from Kir ?
- 8 Behold, the eyes of the Lord Jehovah are upon the sinful kingdom,

Αἰθέρος οἶκον ὑπέριστατον ναυεταίς.

Oppian. Hulieut. i. 490.

Θεοῦ οὐκικητήριον τοῦ κόσμου τὸ ἄνω.

Aristot.

כִּבְּרִים, a body or mass, the parts of which are firmly compacted ; Arab. اجان, fornix firmæ compaginis et structuræ ; an arch or vault ; obviously used of the זִכְרָה, or hemispheric expanse or vault of heaven ; which, from its appearing to the eye to rest upon the earth, is here said to be founded upon it. To render it, with the Targ., congregation, and apply it to the Church, as a body of believers, firmly united together, is altogether unsuitable to the connection. The rendering of the LXX., Syr., and Arab. would seem to indicate that כִּבְּרִים originally stood in the text, at the end of ver. 8 ; but only one of De Rossi's MSS. has this reading at first hand.

7. By appealing to the fact, that, in his providence, he had removed different nations from their original abodes, and settled them elsewhere, Jehovah repels the idea, which the Israelites were so prone to entertain, that, because he had brought them out of Egypt, and given them the land of Canaan, they were peculiarly the objects of his regard, and could never be subdued or destroyed. He now regarded, and would treat them as the Cushites, who had been transplanted from their primary location in Arabia, into the midst of the barbarous nations of Africa. כִּבְּרִים, Cushites, are here the inhabitants of the African Cush, or Ethiopia. See on Is. xviii. 2. Arab. بني الكباش, Abys-sinians.

Αἰθίοπας, τοὶ διχθὰ δεδαλαται, ἔσχατοι ἀνδρῶν,

Οἱ μὲν δυσσομένου ὑπερίονος, οἱ δ' ἀνιοντος.

Odyss. i. 23, 24.

For כִּבְּרִים, see on Is. xiv. 28. Gesenius hesitates between Crete and Cap-padocia, as designated by the Hebrew Caphtor, but inclines to the former. Thesaurus, p. 709. LXX. Καππαδοκία, כִּבְּרִים, Aram, or Syria, put for the Syrians, i. e. the inhabitants of the countries about Damascus. They are here represented as having migrated from כִּיר, Kir, the country lying on the river Kur, or Cyrus. See on Is. xxii. 6.

8, 9. כִּבְּרִים, the eyes of a person are said to be in any one, when he keeps him steadily in view, in order either to do him good, or to punish him. In the present instance, the phrase conveys the idea of hostility. Though the kingdom of the ten tribes was to be utterly and forever destroyed, yet, as descendants of their patriarchal ancestors, they should not become extinct. In the midst

And I will destroy it from the face of the earth ;
 Yet I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob,
 Saith Jehovah.

9 For, behold, I will command,
 And will sift the house of Israel among all the nations,
 As one sifteth corn in a sieve,
 And not a grain falleth to the ground.

10 But all the sinners of my people shall die by the sword,
 That say, The evil shall not reach nor overtake us.

11 In that day I will raise up the booth of David that is falling,
 And will close up its breaches ;

of the wrath which their sinfulness should bring upon them, God would remember mercy. אֶסֶף בְּיָמַי is strongly adversative. בְּבֵרֶה, a sieve, which is used to separate the chaff and other refuse from the pure grain, is most probably derived from בָּרַר, to be many, from the number of small holes in it. LXX. λυκῶς. Aq. and Symm. Κόσκινον. בְּרִיר is used as a diminutive of בָּרַר, the smallest stone, 2 Sam. xvii. 13; here it signifies the smallest grain or particle of corn. While the figurative language here employed expresses the violence of the sifting process to which the Israelites should be subjected in order that their idolatry and other sins might be removed from them; it likewise sets forth the great care that would be exercised for their preservation. The universal character of their dispersion is likewise strongly marked.

10. Those are here specially intended, who scoffingly denied the possibility of the Assyrian conquest, namely, the dissipated magnates of Samaria. Such should perish in the war. הֲקִדְמִים בָּנֵי is unusual. Perhaps the meaning is, Shall not come forward, or advance in our rear, so as to cut off our retreat.

11. The Israelites now disappear from the scene, in order to give place to a brief but prominent exhibition of the restoration of the Jews from their depressed condition, during the anticipated captivity in Babylon, and the great design of that restoration — the introduction of the Messianic dispensation, during which the blessings of the covenant of mercy was to be extended to the Gentile world. With this reference in view, the apostle James expressly quotes the prophecy, Acts xv. 15-17. The quotation is made from the version of the LXX.; but as regards verballity, differs fully as much from it, as the latter does from the Hebrew text; his object being to give the general sense of the passage, and not the identical phraseology. It must further be observed that, though he quotes the entire passage, consisting of the 11th and 12th verses, his obvious design was to give prominence to what is contained in the latter, viz. the conversion of the Gentiles, the very point required by his argument; so that all attempts to apply what is said respecting the booth of David to the Christian church, are unwarranted and futile. דָּוִד, David, is used by the prophet, not in its figurative, but in its proper meaning, as denoting the Hebrew monarch of that name. By יּוֹם הַהוּא, that day, for which James has, quite indefinitely, μετὰ ταῦτα, we are to understand the period of the dispersion of the Israelites among the nations, subsequent to the fall of their kingdom. Though that kingdom would never be restored, yet the Jewish polity would be re-established at Jerusalem. This polity is here called בֵּית דָּוִד, the booth, or hut of David, to denote the reduced state of his family, and the affairs of the people. Comp. Is. xi. 1, and my note there. When the prosperity of that family is spoken of, the more

And I will raise up its ruins,
And build it as in the days of old.

- 12 That the remnant of Edom may be possessed,
And all the nations upon which my name shall be called,
Saith Jehovah that doeth this.

dignified phrase, בֵּית דָּוִד, the house of David, is employed. See 2 Sam. iii. 1; 1 Kings xi. 38; Is. vii. 2, 13. אֹהֶל דָּוִד, the tent, or tabernacle of David, Is. xvi. 5, would seem to express an intermediate state of things. That דָּוִד, David, is here to be understood of the Messiah, I cannot find. סֹבֵה, tugurium, a hut, or booth, so called from its being constructed by interweaving the boughs and branches of trees with each other, and its thus forming a rude shelter from the storm. It was in such booths the Hebrews were to dwell during the seven days of מִסְכּוֹת, the feast of booths, commonly called "the feast of tabernacles." See Levit. xxiii. 40-43. Root סָבַה, to weave, interweave, protect. Still more definitely to mark the depressed condition of the Jewish kingdom, is described as נֹפֵל, falling. The present participle is here, as frequently, used to denote an action which was happening at the time of narration, and which would be continued. About the time of Amos the Jewish affairs had begun to decline; and, though they occasionally and partially revived, yet, taken as a whole, they continued to deteriorate till the Babylonish invasion, when they were reduced to the deplorably fallen state in which they continued till the return from the captivity, when the restoration here predicted took place. From the phraseology employed by the prophet, the Rabbins derived one of the names which they give to the Messiah: בֶּרֶךְ נֹפֵל the son of the fallen. Thus in the Talmud, Sanhed. fol. 96, 2: "R. Nachman said to R. Isaac: Hast thou heard when Bar-naphli comes? To whom he said, Who is Bar-naphli. He replied, The Messiah: you may call the Messiah Bar-naphli; for is it not written, In that day I will raise up, etc.?" quoting the present verse of Amos. For other passages to the same effect, see Schoetgenii Horæ Hebraicæ et Talmud. The feminine suffix in פְּרִיָּהָן is to be referred to the different parts or cities of the kingdom, understood. The masculine in הַרְסֵתִי, has דָּוִד for its antecedent, and the feminine in בְּנִיתִיהָ refers to סֹבֵה.

12. The grand end of the restoration from the captivity in Babylon is now stated, viz. the introduction of the universal economy of the gospel. The church of God had formerly consisted of persons belonging to a particular nation: henceforth it was to comprehend those of all nations, even such as had been most hostile to its interests, whom God would call to be his people. יָרַשׁ, to take possession of, inherit, is here used figuratively of the influence for good which the church should exert over the Gentiles, bringing them within her pale, and using them for her holy and benevolent purposes. In the words, נָתַתְּ גֵיִת יִרְשׁוּ, "thy seed shall possess," or "inherit the nations," Is. liv. 3, we have a strictly parallel prophecy, couched in the same language. Comp. also Is. xlix. 8, and Rom. iv. 13, where, in reference to the blessing of the Gentiles with faithful Abraham, that patriarch is called "the heir of the world." Among the first of the foreign nations that were to experience his beneficent influence, the Idumeans are expressly mentioned. Owing to the enmity which had existed between them and the Jews, they had mutually harassed and wasted each other, in consequence of which, and of invasions and wars on the part of other powers, nothing but שְׁאֵרִית, a remnant, of the former was left. Of this remnant, a portion was proselytized to the Jewish faith in the time of John Hyrcanus, and the remainder amalgamated with the tribes of Arabia, which embraced the Christian faith. It is to these last that specific reference

13 Behold, the days are coming, saith Jehovah,
That the ploughman shall overtake the reaper,
And the treader of grapes him that soweth the seed;
And the mountains shall drop with new wine,
And all the hills shall melt.

is here made. יִרְשָׁה is to be taken impersonally, and rendered passively; and the power of its future must be carried forward to נִקְרָא. The calling of a name upon any person or thing, denotes the assertion of the claims of the individual whose name is mentioned upon the person or thing specified. כִּלְ-הַגּוֹיִם is the accusative, אֵת being understood as repeated. לְמַעַן יִרְשָׁה לְמַעַן יִרְשָׁה the LXX. have rendered ὅπως ἐκζητήσωσιν οἱ κατάλοιποι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, or, as some MSS. read, ἐκζητήσωσι με, as if their Hebrew text had been לְמַעַן יִרְשָׁה אֵתִי שְׁאָרֵי־אָדָם, that the residue of men may seek me. Newcome supposes that the reading אֵתִי is a contraction for יְהוָה; but though τὸν Κύριον, which we find in the quotation, Acts xv. 17, might seem to favor this supposition, there is no evidence to prove that the contraction אֵתִי, so common in Rabbinical writings, is of such antiquity. τὸν Κύριον I consider to be merely an interpretation of με. No Hebrew MSS. afford any countenance to the Greek translation, nor do any of the versions, except the Arabic, which, as usual, follows the LXX. For this reason, and regarding the latitude used by the writers of the New Testament when quoting from the Old, I cannot perceive how the passage can justly be charged with corruption. To which add, that the words as they stand in the Hebrew text, admirably suit the connection, as they equally do the argument of the apostle; though quoting, according to custom, from the Greek version, he adopted in the main the construction which it exhibits as sufficiently expressive of the fact which he had in view.

13. Comp. Levit. xxvi. 5. The language imports the greatest abundance; and this verse, with the two following, refer to a period subsequent to that of the calling of the Gentiles. This the introductory phrase בְּהִיטָה יָמֵי־בָּאִים, Behold, the days are coming, distinguished as it is from הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, In that day, ver. 11, the position of the prophecy, and other features which characterize it, sufficiently show. The verses are parallel with Is. lxi. 4, lxii. 8, 9, lxxv. 21-23; and are to be interpreted of the future restoration of the Jews to their own land, and their abundant prosperity in the latter day. For מִשְׁעָף הַזֶּרֶעַ, to draw out the seed, comp. מִשְׁעָף הַזֶּרֶעַ, Ps. cxxxvi. 6. The idea seems to be that of conveying the seed with the hand from the sack or vessel in which it was carried, yet not to the exclusion of the act of sowing. Comp.

the Eth. אֶחָל: jaculatus est sagittas. For צִמִּים, fresh or sweet wine, see on Joel i. 5. The metaphorical language here employed is at once, in the highest degree, bold and pleasing. The Hebrews were accustomed to construct terraces on the sides of the mountains and other elevations, on which they planted vines. Of this fact the prophet avails himself, and represents the immense abundance of the produce to be such, that the eminences themselves would appear to be converted into the juice of the grape.

“—— Subitis messor gaudebit aristas:
Rorabunt querceta favis, stagnantia passim
Vina fluent, oleique lacus.”

Claudian, in Rufin. lib. i. 382.

How striking the contrast between the scene here depicted, and that which the face of Palestine has presented during the long period of the dispersion!

- 14 I will reverse the captivity of my people Israel,
And they shall build the desolate cities, and inhabit them ;
And they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine of them ;
They shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them.
- 15 For I will plant them in their own land,
And they shall no more be plucked up from their land
Which I have given them,
Saith Jehovah thy God.

14, 15. It is impossible to conceive of prophecy more distinctly or positively asserting the future and final restoration of the Jews to Canaan than that contained in these verses. Once and again they have been removed from that favored land, on account of their wickedness ; but still it is theirs by Divine donation to their great progenitor. And when they return to the faith of Abraham, beholding in retrospection the day of the Messiah, which he saw and was glad, but deeply bewailing their guilt in having crucified him, and persevered for so many centuries in the rejection of his gospel, they shall regain possession of it, and remain its happy occupants till the end of time.

O B A D I A H.

---

PREFACE.

THE prophecy of Obadiah, consisting only of twenty-one verses, is the shortest book of the Old Testament. Jerome calls him, parvus propheta, versuum supputatione, non sensum. Of his origin, life, and circumstances, we know nothing; but, as usual, various conjectures have been broached by the Rabbins and Fathers:—some identifying him with the pious Obadiah who lived at the court of Ahab; some, with the overseer of the workmen, mentioned 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12; and some, with others of the same name; while there is no lack of legendary notices respecting the place of his birth, sepulchre, etc. See Carpzovii Introd. tom. iii. pp. 332, 333.

That he flourished after the capture of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, may be inferred from his obvious reference to that event, verses 11–14; for it is more natural to regard these verses as descriptive of the past, than as prophetic anticipations of the future. He must, therefore, have lived after, or been contemporary with Jeremiah, and not with Hosea, Joel, and Amos, as Grotius, Huet, and Lightfoot, maintain. Sufficient proof of his having lived in or after the time of that prophet, has been supposed to be found in the almost verbal agreement between verses 1–8, and certain verses inserted in the parallel prophecy, Jeremiah xlix.; it being assumed that he must have borrowed from him. This opinion, however, though held by Luther, Bertholdt, Von Coelln, Credner, Hitzig, and Von Knobel, is less probable than the contrary hypothesis, which has been advocated by Tarnovius, Schmidius, Du Veil, Drusius, Newcome, Eichhorn, Jahn, Schnurrer, Rosenmüller, Holzapfel, Hendework, Hävernicks, and Maurer. Indeed, a comparison of the structure of the parallel prophecies goes satisfactorily to show the priority of our prophet, as has been ably done by Schnurrer, in his Disputatio philologica in Obadiah, Tubing. 1787, 4to. Add to which, that Jeremiah appears to have been in the habit of partially quoting from preceding prophets. Comp. Is. xv. xvi. with Jerem. xlviii. This view is confirmed by the opinion of Ewald, that both these writers copied from some earlier prophet, since he admits that Obadiah has preserved, in a less altered condition, the more energetic and unusual manner of the original than Jeremiah. In brief, the portion in question is so entirely in keeping with the remainder of the book, that they must be considered as having been originally delivered by the same individual; whereas Jeremiah presents it in the form of disjecta membra poetæ.

In all probability the prophecy was delivered between the year B. C. 588, when Jerusalem was taken by the Chaldeans, and the termination of the siege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. During this interval, that monarch subdued the Idumeans, and other neighboring nations.

Of the composition of Obadiah, little, as Bishop Lowth observes, can be said, owing to its extreme brevity. Its principal features are animation, regularity, and perspicuity.

The subjects of the prophecy are the judgments to be inflicted upon the Idumeans on account of their wanton and cruel conduct towards the Jews at the time of the Chaldean invasion; and the restoration of the latter from captivity. The book may, therefore, be fitly divided into two parts: the first comprising verses 1-16, which contain a reprehension of the pride, self-confidence, and unfeeling cruelty of the former people, and definite predictions of their destruction; the latter, verses 17-21, in which it is promised that the Jews should not only be restored to their own land, but possess the territories of the surrounding nations, especially Idumea.

The reason why the book occupies its present unchronological position in the Hebrew Bible, is supposed to be the connection between the subject of which it treats, and the mention made of "the residue of Edom," at the conclusion of the preceding book of Amos.

O B A D I A H.

THE prophecy commences by announcing the message sent in the providence of God to the Chaldeans, to come and attack the Idumeans, ver 1; and describes the humiliation of their pride, 2, 3; the impossibility of their escape by means of their boasted fastnesses, 4; and the completeness of their devastation, 5. It then proceeds with a sarcastic plaint over their deserted and fallen condition, 6-9; specifies its cause—their unnatural cruelty towards the Jews, 10-14; and denounces a righteous retribution, 15, 16. The remaining portion fortells the restoration of the Jews, their peaceful settlement in their own land, and the establishment of the kingdom of Messiah, 17-21.

1 THE Vision of Obadiah.

Thus saith the Lord Jehovah concerning Edom :

We have heard a report from Jehovah,

And a messenger is sent among the nations :

“Up! let us rise against her to battle!”

2 Behold, I have made thee small among the nations ;

1. Eichhorn, Rosenmüller, Jäger, and Hendewerk, have raised unnecessary doubt respecting the genuineness of the title and introduction contained in this verse, which have been fully obviated by Schnurrer, Maurer, and Hitzig. For וְהוֹרֶה, see on Is. i. 1. עַבְדֵי יְהוָה, Obadiah, “the servant of Jehovah,” equivalent to עַבְדֵי אֱלֹהִים, Abdeel, Jer. xxxvi. 26; Arab. عبد الله, Abd-allah; Ger. Gottschalck. For אֶדוֹם, Edom, see on Is. xxxiv. 5. The words שָׁמְעָה שְׁמוֹעָה מִיְהוָה, we have heard a report from Jehovah, are not to be regarded as designed to describe the reception of the Divine message by the prophet, but express the communication made to the nations by the ambassador sent to summon them to the attack upon Idumea, as the following clause shows. The שְׁמוֹעָה, report, or communication itself, is contained in the last line of the verse. The plural form שָׁמְעָה, “we have heard,” for which Jeremiah has שָׁמְעָתִי, “I have heard,” is so qualified by the passive verb שָׁמְעָה in the second member of the parallelism, that it is equivalent to the passive form נִשְׁמְעָה, hath been heard.

There is, therefore, no necessity to inquire whether Obadiah meant himself and other prophets, or whether he identified himself with his countrymen. All that is intended is the circulation of the hostile message in regard to Idumea; and the tracing of the movement to the overruling providence of God, by which Nebuchadnezzar and his allies were led to turn their arms against that country. See Calvin, in loc. נִיר, a messenger, or ambassador; Arab. صير, ivit, pro- fectus est. LXX. περιοχην, but in Jer. ἀγγελους; Symm. here ἀγγελων. Com. Is. xviii. 2, and my note there. קָמִי, arise! up! like בֹּא, come! go! etc., is frequently used as a term of excitement. With it the address of the herald commences; who, identifying himself with the nations which he summons, proceeds to employ the plural of the same verb in its strictly hostile sense, followed by the preposition עַל אֶדוֹם, though properly masculine, is here viewed as אֶרֶץ, a country; hence the feminine suffix in עָלֶיהָ.

2. Here the masculine gender is adopted, which is continued throughout Thou art exceedingly despised.

3 The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee,

Thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock,

Whose habitation is high!

That saith in his heart,

Who shall bring me down to the ground?

4 Though thou shouldst soar like the eagle,

And shouldst set thy nest among the stars,

Thence I will bring thee down, saith Jehovah.

the prophecy — עַם, people, being understood. The past time of the verbs expresses the certainty of the events; and קַטַּן, small, and נִבְזָה, despised, are not designed to mark the comparatively limited and despicable character of Idumea, geographically considered, as Newcome interprets, but describe the miserable condition to which it was to be reduced by its enemies.

3. The Idumeans are taunted with the proud confidence which they placed in their lofty and precipitous mountain fastnesses, and the insolence with which they scouted every attempt to subdue them. These positions, strong by nature, and many of them rendered still more so by art, they deemed absolutely impregnable. Such inaccessible places are appropriately called בְּצֻרֵי הַר, cliffs of the rock, Syr. ܩܘܒܐ, rupes; the Arab.

ܩܘܒܐ, confugit; and hence the idea of refuge, which is secondary, and less proper to be adopted here. LXX. ἐν ταῖς ὄρεις τῶν πετρῶν. Syr. ܩܘܒܐ

ܩܘܒܐ; in fortissima rupe. Some interpreters are of opinion that by בְּצֻרֵי, Sela, we are to understand the city of that name, otherwise called Petra, situated in Wady Mûsa, and celebrated as the capital of Idumea. See on Is. xvi.

1. The בְּצֻרֵי, cliffs, would, on this interpretation, be the high and inaccessible rocks which beetled over that metropolis. I prefer taking the word in its literal acceptation, and view it as a collective, equivalent to the plural of the LXX. and other ancient versions, and thus describing the rocky character of the country generally, as well as that about Petra in particular. Instead of קַטַּן, hath deceived thee, four of De Rossi's MSS. and originally two more, read קַטַּן; but though this reading is supported by the LXX., Arab., Vulg., and Hexaplar Syr. it is inferior to that of the Textus Receptus, which has the suffrages of the Syr. and the Targ., especially as there are no other instances in which קַטַּן is used in the sense of raising, or elevating. The י in יִשְׁבֵּן is simply a poetic paragoge, of which several examples occur in the Benoni participle. See Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxiii. 16; Is. xxii. 16; Micah vii. 14. In יִשְׁבֵּן there is a transition from the second person to the third, for the sake of more graphically pointing out the proud position of Edom. Comp. Is. xxii. 16.

4. By a bold but beautiful hyperbole, the Idumeans are told, that, to what height soever they might remove, and how entirely they might imagine themselves to be beyond the reach of their enemies, Jehovah would dislodge them, and deliver them into their power. For the soaring of the eagle, and his building his nest on the inaccessible crags of the rock, comp. Job xxxix. 27, 28:

אֵשׁ-עֶל-אֵיךְ בְּגִבֹּתַי נִשְׂרָה
וְכִי-רָרִים קִנְיֹן;
בְּצֻרֵי יִשְׁבֵּן יִתְחַלֵּן
עַל-שָׁוִי-סֶלֶעַ וּמִצְרֹתָהּ;

"Is it at thy command the eagle soars,
And erects his nest on high?
The rock he inhabits, and makes his abode
On the point of the rock, and the fastness."

- 5 If thieves had come to thee,
 Or robbers by night (how art thou destroyed!)
 Would they not have stolen what was sufficient for them?
 If vintagers had come to thee,
 Would they not have left some gleanings?
 6 How is Esau explored!

שׁוֹמֵם Ewald and Hitzig take to be a passive participle; but that it is the infinitive construct, is rendered certain by its having the preposition כִּי before it, Job xx. 4. In the present instance, and in Num. xxv. 21, in which, as here, it is followed by תִּקַּץ, it stands elliptically for שׁוֹמֵם תִּקַּץ; which sufficiently accounts for the rendering of the LXX., Syr., Targ., and Vulg., which exhibit the second person singular of the verb. The term שׁוֹמֵם is to be understood literally of the stars, as the highest objects which present themselves to the eye, and not of the tops of the highest rocks, or even heaven itself, as some have maintained. תִּקַּץ אֵינִי is a direct reply to the vaunting question, מִנְּי יוֹרִיגֵי, ver. 3. Theodoret well expresses the sense thus: Ἐπειδή τοίνυν, φησι ταύτας διαρῶν ἀλαζονείῃ καὶ μέγα φρονεῖς ὡς ἀχείρωτος, εὐδατόν σε καταστήσω καὶ εὐχείρωτος τοῖς ἐχθροῖς, καὶ τῶν πολεμίων οὐ διαφεύξῃ τὰς χεῖρας, οὐδὲ εἰ δίκην αὐτοῦ μετέωρος ἀρδείης, κ. τ. λ.

5. The Idumeans are here taught, that their devastation would be complete. This prophetic intelligence is communicated in the form of interrogative illustrations, derived from customs with which they were familiar. The manner in which they should be treated would be very different from that adopted by private thieves, or by a party of marauding nomades, who usually seize as much as they can, and especially what they have set their minds on, in the hurry of the moment, leaving the rest of the property to its possessors. They should even fare worse than the vines, on which the vintagers, though they cut down the bunches generally, still left some that might be gleaned afterwards. In Jeremiah the order of the illustrations is reversed, the vintagers being taken first. תִּקַּץ לַלַּיְלָה, night-robbers. In such a country as Idumea, a predatory attack could only have been attempted in the night, especially on such places as were most strongly fortified by nature, and commanded a view of the immediately surrounding regions. Hitzig thinks the prophet has Petra specially in his eye, on account of its having been the great emporium of that part of the world. Instead of לַלַּיְלָה לַלַּיְלָה אֵינִי שׁוֹמֵם בְּאֵי לַלַּיְלָה אֵינִי שׁוֹמֵם, Jeremiah has only אֵינִי שׁוֹמֵם בְּלַיְלָה אֵינִי שׁוֹמֵם, which is less forcible. He also substitutes יוֹרִיגֵי for יוֹרִיגֵי. The position of the words יוֹרִיגֵי תִקַּץ אֵינִי, How thou art destroyed, has offended some fastidious critics, some of whom would remove them to the beginning of the verse, and others to the commencement of the following. What might be accounted their natural place would be the end of the present verse; but the prophet, struggling to give expression to the feeling which agitated his mind, breaks in upon his illustrations with the interjected exclamation, and then carries them on to a close. The words are omitted by Jeremiah, יוֹרִיגֵי has two leading significations: to be like; and, according with the Arab.

فد, vulneravit, perdidit, to cause to cease, destroy, etc. LXX. ποῦ ἂν ἀπεβίβης; having read יוֹרִיגֵי, a verb, which nowhere occurs in Niphal. יוֹרִיגֵי, their sufficiency, i. e. what was requisite for supplying their present wants, or such a quantity as they had sufficient strength to remove. LXX. τὰ ἰκανὰ ἑαυτοῖς. Syr. ܘܫܘܬܘܬܘܢ, sufficientia eorum. The apodosis is omitted; but there is a beautiful propriety in leaving it to be supplied by those to whom the appeal was made.

6. The prophet here resumes his strain of sarcastic plaint over the fall of Idumea, which he had abruptly adopted in the

And his hidden places searched!

- 7 All thine allies have driven thee to the frontier ;
 Those who were at peace with thee have deceived thee ;
 They have prevailed against thee :
 They that ate thy bread have laid a snare under thee ;
 There is no understanding in him !

preceding verse, repeating the  $\text{אֲנֹכִי}$  there employed, which is again understood before  $\text{נִבְעָנָה}$ . The patronymic  $\text{עֲשׂוֹ}$  is construed as a collective noun with the plural of the verb, and, at the same time, with the singular pronominal affix. In the translation I have been obliged to employ the singular in both cases.  $\text{מִמְצֵיטֵינִי}$ , like  $\text{מִמְצֵיטֵינִי}$ , may either signify places where treasures are hidden, or the treasures themselves; or the term may be explained of hiding places, to which men resort in order to elude an enemy. I prefer the last of these significations, as better agreeing with the persons of the Edomites, mentioned in the former hemistich; though the hiding of their treasures is also naturally implied. The form is that of the Arabic passive مقطول. Such places abound in Idumea. "Revera," says Jerome, "ut dicamus aliquid de natura loci, omnis australis regio Idumæorum de Eleutheropoli usque Petram et Ailam (hæc est enim possessio Esau) in specubus habitatiunculas habet. Et propter nimios calores solis, quia meridiana provincia est, subterraneis tuguriis utitur." Instead of the exclamatory form here employed, Jeremiah adopts that of direct personal assertion:  $\text{בִּי-אֲנִי נִשְׁעֵתִי}$ ;  $\text{אֶת-עֲשׂוֹ גִלְתִּי אֶת-מִסְתַּרְתִּי}$ ; changing, at the same time,  $\text{הַפֶּשֶׁת}$  into  $\text{הַשֶּׁה}$ , and  $\text{מִמְצֵיטֵינִי}$  into  $\text{מִמְצֵיטֵינִי}$ .

7.  $\text{שָׁלַח}$ , which in Kal has the signification to send, send away, signifies in Piel, to dismiss, eject, expel, conveying the superadded idea of compulsion or violence. Connected, as here, with  $\text{עָד}$ , the verb implies expulsion beyond the frontier specified; and the whole sentence is descriptive of transportation into a state of captivity. Thus the Targ.  $\text{אֲנִי יִלְוֶנָה אֶת-עֲשׂוֹ אֶת-מִסְתַּרְתִּי}$ , they shall lead thee captive from the border. By  $\text{אֲנֹכִי בְרֵיתֶךָ}$ , the men of thy covenant, are meant those who had formally pledged assistance to the Edomites; confederates, allies; by  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$ , the men of thy peace, neighboring states, which were on terms of peace and friendship with them. LXX.  $\text{ἀνδρες εἰρηνοῦχοι}$ , those who were peaceably inclined towards them. Before  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$  supply  $\text{אֲנֹכִי}$  from the preceding — the men of thy bread; or  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$ , may be understood, those who eat thy bread; and thus the phrase will be descriptive of dependents; some of the poorer tribes of the desert, who subsisted on the bounty of the Edomites, and whose aid they might reasonably expect in case of any emergency. Comp. Ps. xli. 10, where a similar combination of  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$  with  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$  occurs; though there the idea of familiarity, rather than that of dependence, seems intended to be expressed. Five of De Rossi's MSS. and originally two more, read  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$ , instead of  $\text{אֲנֹכִי שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$ , as also one of the early editions, the LXX. and Arab.; but the common reading is to be preferred. To  $\text{שְׁלֵמֵינִי}$ , thirty MSS., originally eleven more, four by emendation, the Soncin. and Complut. editions, the Soncin. Prophets, and the Syr., prefix the copulative, which the difference of sense in the two verbs requires. There is some difficulty in determining the meaning of  $\text{מִמְצֵיטֵינִי}$ . LXX.

$\text{ἐνεδρα}$ ; Syr.  $\text{مَصَانَا}$ , insidia, Vulg. insidia; Targ.  $\text{מִתְקָלָא}$ , offendiculum — all agreeing in the idea of treachery, or the employment of means by which one might be subverted or ensnared. This seems to be the only suitable meaning in this place, as the signification of wound, which attaches to the word, Jer. xxx. 13, Hos. v. 13, the other pas-

8 Shall I not in that day, saith Jehovah,
Cause the wise men to perish from Edom ?
And the men of understanding from Mount Esau ?

sages in which it occurs, will not, with any tolerable degree of propriety, apply. Two derivations have been proposed, the Arab. مزر, distendit, equaliter, dis- tendit, to which Tingstadius appeals in Supplement. ad Lexx. Hebr. p. 23 ; but which is far-fetched, as there is no proof that the verb is used in the sense of spreading out a net, or the like ; and זָרַר, mentitus fuit, זָוַר, fallum, mendacium, with which the Hebrew זָרַר, to decline from the way of truth, has been compared. The use of תַּחַת תַּחַתְּךָ, they place under thee, most naturally suggests the idea of a gin or trap, which may be said to deceive or act falsely by those who tread upon it ; so that the notions of treachery, plot, net, snare, may be combined in furnishing the true signification. Fürst, who derives the word from זָרַר, gives the significations thus : "circumligare, obligatio vulneris, fascia, hinc medicina ; moraliter : laqueorum connexio, perfidia fallax, insidiosa, fraudulenta." To no quarter could the Idumeans look for aid. Their allies, their neighbors, their very dependents, so far from assisting them, would act treacherously towards them, and employ every means, both of an open and covert nature, to effect their ruin. At the close of the verse, the prophet turns off again from the direct mode of address, and employs the third person, for the purpose of more emphatically exposing their folly in placing confidence in those who were totally unworthy of it. It would be highly unceritcal, with the Targ., Hougibant, and Newcome, to change בּוֹ, in him, into בְּךָ, in thee.

8. The Idumeans confided, not only in the natural strength of their country, but in the superiority of their intellectual talent. That they excelled in the arts and sciences, is abundantly proved by the numerous traces of them in the book of Job, which was undoubtedly written in their country. They were, indeed, proverbial for their חֵכְמָה, philosophy, for the cultivation of which, their intercourse with Babylon and Egypt was exceedingly favorable, as were likewise their means of acquiring information from the numerous caravans whose route lay through their country, thus forming a chain of communication between Europe and India. Speaking of wisdom, the author of the book of Baruch says, in reference to their celebrity as sages of antiquity, chap. iii. 22, 23 :

"It hath not been heard of in Canaan,
Neither hath it been seen in Teman.
The Hagarenes that seek wisdom upon earth,
The merchants of Meran and of Teman,
The mythologists, and investigators of intelligence,
None of these have known the ways of wisdom,
Nor remembered her paths."

These sages are here called חֵכְמָיִם, and their accumulated stores of wisdom are expressed by חֵכְמוֹתָם, intelligence, the term which had just been employed at the close of the preceding verse. The interrogative הֲלֹא is here strongly affirmative ; and וְהִיא בְּרֵיבְרֵי is merely conversive. הַר עֵשָׂו, the mount of Esau, is the mountainous region of Seir, to the south of Palestine, now called جبل شرارة,

Jebel Sherah, and الشرارة, esh-Sherah, extending as far south as Akabah. It was originally inhabited by the Horites, or Troglodytæ, so called because they dwelt in the caves of the mountains, whom the posterity of Esau expelled, and taking possession of the country, spread themselves as far towards the north as the borders of Moab. It was particularly to the more northerly portion of this reign that the name of جبل, Jebel, or Gebalene, was given. הַר, mountain,

- 9 Thy mighty men, O Teman ! shall be dismayed,
That every one may be cut off from mount Esau.
- 10 For the slaughter, for the injury of thy brother Jacob, Shame shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.
- 11 In the day when thou didst take a hostile position,
In the day when foreigners took captive his forces,
And strangers entered his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem,
Even thou wast as one of them.

being here, and verse 9th, obviously used in a collective sense I have translated it in the plural.

9. For תֵּמָנִי, Teman, see on Amos i. 12. מִקְרָבָה has been variously construed. Ewald unnaturally renders it, without battle. Schnurrer treats it as a participle in Pael or Poel, pointing it מִקְרָבָה or מִקְרָבָה, and regarding it as equivalent to the Arab. مقاتل, vir proelio aptus. He would thus make it parallel with גִּבּוֹרִים, mighty men, in the preceding hemistich. Rosenmüller, De Wette, and some others, translate, by slaughter. Leo Juda, most of the older modern translators, followed by Jæger, Hesselberg, Hendewerk, and Maurer, render, propter cadem, and suppose the prophet to be here assigning the cause of the destruction of the Idumeans which he had just predicted, intending more fully to dilate on the subject in the following verse. To this construction, however, it must be objected, that it clogs the parallelism, which properly ends with עָשִׂי, וְהָרַע, as in the verse preceding; and also that the words מִקְרָבָה מִקְרָבָה are too closely allied, both in form and reference, to admit of such a pause as that which is introduced by the Soph-Pasuk. I, therefore, do not hesitate to follow the division of the verses adopted by the LXX., Syr., Hexaplar Syr., Vulg., Dathe, Lively, Newcome, and Boothroyd, by which מִקְרָבָה is removed from verse 9th, and placed at the beginning of verse 10th.

10. מִקְרָבָה מִקְרָבָה אָחִיךָ. Both nouns are in construction with אָחִיךָ, and the genitive thus formed is that of object: the slaughter of, and the violence done to, thy brother. The Edomites had not only slain the Hebrews, but injured them in every possible way; and their cruelties were highly aggravated by the consideration, that those who were the objects of them were descended from the same common parent. Comp. Amos i. 11. Jacob is used as a patronymic to denote the Jews. Two distinct periods in the future history of the Idumeans are here pointed out: that during which they should be the subjects of ignominy as a conquered people: and that during which they were to be entirely extinct. From the former they recovered about a century before the Christian era; but they were reduced by John Hyrcanus, and afterwards lost every vestige of their separate existence.

11. This and the three following verses contain a series of pointed expostulations, which, while they inculpate the Idumeans, describe the various modes in which they had manifested their malice towards the Jews. Some have thought that מִקְרָבָה מִקְרָבָה means here to stand aloof, to assume a neutral position, whence one may observe the movements of two opposing parties; but the declaration at the end of the verse, as well as what is stated in verses 13th and 14th, clearly shows that the phrase is to be taken in a hostile sense, as in 2 Sam. xviii. 13; Dan. x. 13. That וְהָרַע is not to be rendered wealth or riches in this passage, but forces, army, or the like may be inferred from reference being made to the division of the substance of the citizens of Jerusalem by lot in the following hemistich. וְהָרַע and נְבָרִי describe the Chaldeans, by whom Jerusalem was taken. וְהָרַע is in Piel, contracted for וְהָרַע. Comp. וְהָרַע, Lam. iii. 53. Instead of וְהָרַע, the read-

- 14 Neither shouldest thou have stood at the pass,
To cut off those of his that escaped ;
Neither shouldest thou have delivered up those of his
That were left in the day of distress.
- 15 For the day of Jehovah is near against all the nations ;
As thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee ;
Thy deed shall come back upon thine own head,
- 16 For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain,
So shall all the nations drink continually ;
Yea, they shall drink and swallow greedily,
And shall be as though they had not been.

14. פֶּתַח is commonly rendered biviam, a parting of a way, or a place where a road breaks off into two. I should rather think, from the idea of violence implied in פֶּתַח, that it signifies a break or disruption in a rock or mountain, through which a passage might be effected into the region beyond. Comp. פֶּתַח פְּתָחַי, 1 Kings xix. 11. LXX. διεκβολαι. Syr.

פֶּתַח, a narrow passage between two mountains. In all probability, the reference is to the means employed to cut off the retreat of those Jews who attempted to pass through Idumea on their way to Egypt, whither they fled from the Chaldeans. פֶּתַח פְּתָחַי, to stand at the ravine or pass, graphically describes the attitude of those who are watching in order to intercept a caravan, or a body of travellers, especially in the rugged mountainous regions to the south of Judea. The Idumeans not only in this way prevented the escape of the fugitives ; they carried them back as prisoners, and delivered them up to the enemy.

15. In this verse, the conquest of Idumea and all the neighboring nations by Nebuchadnezzar is declared to be at hand. In the war which he was to carry on against them, due retribution would be rendered to the Edomites. Comp. Ps. cxxxvii. 7, 8. For the phrase הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, the day of Jehovah, see on Is. ii. 12.

16. The Targ., Kimchi, Munster, Vatablus, Calvin, Michaelis, Hendewerk, and Hitzig, consider the Idumeans to be still addressed, and most of them explain their drinking on Mount Zion of the festivities with which they celebrated the victory gained over the Jews. Grotius refers the words to the same people, only he takes the verb פֶּתַח in the bad sense, as denoting the drinking of the cup of divine wrath, and renders פֶּתַח, פֶּתַח, on account of my holy mountain, which he explains thus: "propter Judæam a vobis lacessitam." But it seems more natural to regard the words as directed, by a sudden apostrophe, to the Jews, assuring them, that, though the sufferings to which they had been subjected were great, still greater punishment would be inflicted upon the hostile nations by which they had been attacked. The punishment which they suffered was only temporary ; that of their enemies would be perpetual. The structure of the passage requires the verb to be taken in the same sense in both parts of the verse. Such, in effect, is the construction put upon the words, Jer. xlix. 12. Compare also chap. xxv. 15-29. In this manner the verse is interpreted by Abenezra, Mercer, Tremellius, Drusius, Lively, Rosenmüller, Schnurrer, De Wette, Hesselberg, and Maurer. Instead of פֶּתַח, continually, the reading פֶּתַח, around, is exhibited in not fewer than seventy-eight MSS. ; in seventeen more originally ; in three others in the margin ; in seven of the earliest printed editions ; and a few other authorities : but all the ancient versions support that of the Textus Receptus, which, according

- 17 But in Mount Zion shall be the escaped,
And it shall be holy;
And the house of Jacob shall enjoy their possessions.
- 18 And the house of Jacob shall be a fire,
And the house of Joseph a flame;
And the house of Esau shall become stubble,
And they shall set them on fire, and devour them;
So that there shall not be a relic of the house of Esau;
For Jehovah hath spoken it.
- 19 And they of the south shall possess Mount Esau,
And they of the plain, the Philistines;
They shall also possess the country of Ephraim, to De Rossi, is found in all the most accurate and best MSS., both Spanish and German. In all probability סְבִיב, was substituted by some copyist from Jer. xxv. 9. What proves that the LXX. had the word חֲמִיר in their Hebrew text, is their having mistaken it for חֲמִיר, rendering it óvov, wine. לָנֶזֶק, to swallow or suck down with greediness. Arab.

לְגִי, לעי, avidus; לְגִי, multum aquæ bibit. Comp. עֵצֶם the throat; לָנֶזֶק, to swallow, etc. The idea intended to be conveyed by the use of the verb here is that of drinking completely off the cup of wrath, as a thirsty person would a vessel of water.

17. Obadiah here commences his predictions respecting the restoration of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity; their re-occupancy of Canaan; and the reign of the Messiah. While the surrounding nations were to disappear, the Jews should regain possession of their holy city, and the land of their fathers. הַנִּשְׁתַּיְתִים means such as had survived the captivity. קִדְוֶה, holiness, i. e. holy, refers to Mount Zion, which had been polluted by the idolatrous Chaldeans. See on Joel iv. 17. Jæger and Hesselberg refer the suffix in מְרִיבֵיהֶם, their possessions, to the hostile nations spoken of in the preceding verse; but less naturally.

18. Though the houses of Jacob and Joseph are here spoken of separately, it was not the intention of the prophet to teach that the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel would be re-established; yet the special mention of Joseph clearly shows that the ten tribes were to return at the same time, and, jointly with Judah and Benjamin, to possess the land of Palestine and the neighboring regions. See Is. xi. 12-14; Hos. i. 11. The restored Hebrews would unitedly subdue the Idumeans, which they did in the time of John Hyrcanus, who compelled them to be circumcised, and so incorporated them with the Jews, that they henceforward formed part of the nation. See Joseph. Antiquities, book xiii. chap. ix. 1. For the metaphorical language, comp. Num. xxi. 28; Is. x. 17; and, for the ground of it, Is. v. 24.

19. By הַיָּבֵינָה, the south, or the southern part of Palestine, is meant those who should occupy it; and by הַשְּׁפֵלָה, the plain, those who should occupy the low country along the shore of the Mediterranean. LXX. Οἱ ἐν Ναρύβ; οἱ ἐν τῇ Σεφαλά. According to the relative positions of those who should take possession of the different parts of the holy land, was to be the enlargement of their territory by the annexation of the adjoining regions, which had formerly been occupied by alien or hostile powers. As there is no subject specified before אֵת שְׂרֵי אֲשֵׁרִים וְאֵת שְׂרֵי שָׁמָרָה, it would seem to be intimated that the regions of Ephraim and Samaria were to be occupied by the Jews and Israelites jointly,

- And the country of Samaria;
 And Benjamin, Gilead.
 20 And the captives of this host of the sons of Israel,
 That are among the Canaanites,
 As far as Zarephath.
 And the captives of Jerusalem,
 That are in Sepharad,
 Shall possess the cities of the south.

without any regard to tribal distinctions: and the reason why the tribe of Benjamin is mentioned, is merely on account of the proximity of Gilead to the territory which it originally possessed. That  $\text{הַשָּׂדֶה}$  is here employed to denote, not a plain or level country, but a region or district in general, is obvious from the nature of the territory to which reference is made. The mountainous country of Idumea is called  $\text{שָׂדֵה יְרֵי אֲדוּמָא}$ , Gen. xxxii. 1.

20.  $\text{לְהַי}$ , i. e.  $\text{לְיָהוּ}$ , an army, host, etc., is here used to express the number of Israelitish captives which were found in Phœnicia, into which they had been sold at different times as slaves, and thence into Greece. See Joel iii. 6, 7.  $\text{כְּבָנֵי צִיִּי}$  is elliptical for  $\text{כְּבָנֵי צִיִּי בְּבָנֵי צִיִּי}$ , which is the reading of three MSS. Before  $\text{עַד זָרֵפֶת}$ , supply  $\text{יְרֵי הַשָּׂדֶה}$  from the following.  $\text{זָרֵפֶת}$ , Zarephath, or Sarepta, now called سرفند, Surafend, a town belonging to Sidon, and situated between that city and Tyre, close to the shore of the Mediterranean. According to the etymology of its name, it must have been a place for smelting metals. In the rocks along the foot of the hills, Dr. Robinson found many excavated tombs, which he makes no doubt once belonged to this ancient city. Palestine, vol. iii. p. 414. The name is still given to a large village on a hill at some little distance. What city or country is meant by  $\text{זָרֵפֶת}$ , it has been hitherto found impossible to determine. The LXX. Ἐφραθά, which in all probability is a corruption of Σέφραθά. Aq., Symm. and Theod. σαφαράθ.

Hexap. Syr.  $\text{سارفاث}$ ; but the Peshito

$\text{ספרא}$ , Spain, with which agrees  $\text{סַרְפָּרַס}$  of the Targ.: an interpretation unánimously adopted by the Rabbins, who in like manner concur in interpreting  $\text{זָרֵפֶת}$  of France. Jerome, as instructed by his Jewish teacher, renders it the Bosphorus. Some refer it to Siphara in Mesopotamia, some to Sparta, in support of which hypothesis they appeal to 1 Macc. xii. 21; while others propose  $\text{הַרְזַס}$ , Sephara, Gen. x. 30, or the town of Σαφάρ, mentioned by Ptolemy, as lying between the territory of the Homerites and Sabæans. To judge from the other geographical relations stated in this and the preceding verse, we should conjecture, that some place to the south or east of Judea is intended. The following list of cities and places in the possession of the Jews in the time of Alexander Jannæus is given by Josephus: *κατὰ τοῦτον τὸν καιρὸν ἤδη τῶν Σύρων καὶ Ἰουδαίων καὶ Φοινίκων πόλεις εἶχον Ἰουδαῖοι πρὸς θάλασση μὲν Στράτωνος πύργον, Ἀπολλωνίαν, Ἰόππην, Ἰάμνιαν, Ἀζωταν, Γάζαν, Ἀνθηδόνα, Ῥαβίαν, Ῥινκόλουραν ἐν δὲ τῇ μεσογείᾳ κατὰ τὴν Ἰουμαίαν, Ἄδωρα, καὶ Μάρισσαν, καὶ Σαμάρειαν, Καρμηλίον ὄρος, καὶ τὸ Ἰταβύριον ὄρος, Σκυθόπολιν, Γάδαρα, Γαυλαντίδα, Σελεύκειαν, Γάβαλα, Μωαβίτιδας, Ἐσσεβῶν, Μήδαβα, Λεμβᾶ, Ὀρώνος, Γελίθωνα, Ζύρα, Κίλικιον Αἰλῶνα, Πέλλαν — ἕλλας τε πόλεις πρωτεύουσας τῆς Συρίας, αἱ ἦσαν κατεσραμμέναι. — Antiq. book. xiv. ch. iv. 4.*

21. Though forty-four MSS., besides several others at second hand, and eight printed editions, read  $\text{עַד זָרֵפֶת}$  instead of  $\text{עַד יְרֵי הַשָּׂדֶה}$ , there is no difference in the meaning, the former reading being 21 And deliverers shall come up in Mount Zion.

 To judge Mount Esau;
 And the kingdom shall be Jehovah's.

merely defective in orthography. The LXX., Aq., Theod., Syr., and Arab., appear to have read  $\text{מַגִּידֵי עֵשָׂו}$  or  $\text{מַגִּידֵי עֵשָׂו}$  in the passive, which is unsuitable to the connection. Jerome observes that the word is active. Such saviors, or deliverers are meant, as those who were raised up in the time of the Judges. There can be little doubt that the celebrated family of the Maccabees are intended, whose valiant princes governed the Jews for the period of an hundred and twenty-six years, during which time signal victories were gained over the Idumeans, as narrated 2 Macc. x.

15-23. Joseph. Antiq. book. xiii. chap. ix. 1.  $\text{מַגִּידֵי עֵשָׂו}$  is here used in the sense of punishing, as in 1 Sam. iii. 13; and  $\text{מַגִּידֵי עֵשָׂו}$  in the phrase  $\text{בְּיַד מַגִּידֵי עֵשָׂו}$ , Exod. xii. 12; Num. xxiii. 4. Comp. κρίνω, Acts vii. 7. The concluding words of the prophecy,  $\text{הַיְהוָה לְיָמָיו יְהוָה}$ , refer to the reign of the Messiah, called so frequently in the N. T. ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ Θεοῦ. Comp. Dan. ii. 44, vii. 27. But for the introduction of this kingdom, no restoration of the Jews would have taken place; the temple would have remained in ruins, and the land a scene of desolation.

JONAH.

---

PREFACE.

AGAINST no book of Scripture have the shafts of infidelity and the sapping arts of anti-supernaturalism been more strenuously directed than against that of the Prophet Jonah. As early as the days of Julian and Porphyry it was made the subject of banter and ridicule by the pagans, who accused the Christians of credulity for believing the story of the deliverance by means of a fish; and, in modern times, while the enemies of revelation have evinced the same spirit, many of its pretended friends have had recourse to methods of interpretation, which would not only remove the book from the category of inspired writings, but, if applied to these writings generally, would annihilate much that is strictly historical in its import, and leave us to wander in the regions of conjecture and fable. Blasche, Grimm, and some others, suppose the whole to have been transacted in a dream; but, as Eichhorn justly observes,* there is not a single circumstance in the narrative that would suggest such an idea; and, besides, whenever any account is given of a dream in Scripture, the fact that such is the case, is always intimated by the writer. The manner in which the book commences and closes, is also objected to this hypothesis, which J. G. A. Müller † scruples not to assert we are on no ground whatever (durch gar nichts,) warranted to adopt. The theory of an historical allegory was advanced and maintained with great learning, but, at the same time, with the most extravagant license of imagination, by the eccentric Herman von der Hardt, Professor of the Oriental languages at the university of Helmstedt. ‡ According to this author, Jonah was an historical person, but is here symbolical partly of Manasseh, and partly of Josiah, kings of Judah; the ship was the Jewish state; the storm, the political convulsions which threatened its safety; the master of the ship, Zadok the high-priest; the great fish, the city of Lybon on the Orontes, where Manasseh was detained as a prisoner, etc. Semler Michaelis, Herder, Hezel, Stäudlin, Paulus, Meyer, Eichhorn, Niemeyer, etc. have attempted to vindicate to the book the character of a parable, a fable, an apologue, or a moral fiction; while Dereser, Nachtigal, Ammon, Bauer, Goldhorn, Knobel, and others, consider it to have had historical basis, and that it has been invested with its present costume in order that it might answer didactic purposes. On the other hand, Rosenmüller, Ge-senius, De Wette, Maurer, and Winer, derived it from popular tradition; some tracing it to the fable of the deliverance of Andromeda from a sea monster, by Perseus, Apollod. ii. 4, 3; Ovid, Metamorph. iv. 662, etc.; and some, to that of Hercules, who sprang into the jaws of an immense fish, and was three days in its belly, when he undertook to save Hesione, Iliad, xx. 145, xxi. 442; Diod. Sic. iv. 42; Tzetz. ad Lycophr. Cassand. 33; Cyrill Alex. in Jon. ii.

* Einleit. Band iv. § 575.

† Palus Memorabilien. Stuck vi. p. 154.

‡ Ænigmata prisci Orbis. Jonas in Luce, etc. Helmstedt. 1723, fol. For the full title of this remarkable book, see Rosenmüller's Prolegom.

Much as some of these writers may have in common with each other, there are some essential points on which they are totally at variance; while all frankly acknowledge the difficulties which clog the subject.

The opinion which has been most generally entertained, is that which accords to the book a strictly historical character; in other words, which affirms that it is a relation of facts which actually took place in the life and experience of the prophet. Nor can I view it in any other light, while I hold fast an enlightened belief in the divine authority of the books composing the canon of the Old Testament, and place implicit reliance on the authority of the Son of God. Into the fixed and definite character of the canon, I need not here enter, having fully discussed the subject elsewhere; * but assuming that all the books contained in it possess the Divine sanction, the test to which I would bring the question, and by which, in my opinion, our decision must mainly be formed, is the unqualified manner in which the personal existence, miraculous fate, and public ministry of Jonah, are spoken of by our Lord. He not only explicitly recognizes the prophetic office of the son of Amittai (Ἰωνᾶ τοῦ προφήτου), just as he does that of Elisha, Isaiah, and Daniel, but represents his being in the belly of the fish as a real miracle (τὸ σημεῖον); grounds upon it, as a fact, the certainty of the future analogous fact in his own history; assumes the actual execution of the commission of the prophet at Nineveh; positively asserts that the inhabitants of that city repented at his preaching; and concludes by declaring respecting himself, "Behold! a greater than Jonah is here." Matt. xii. 39-41, xvi. 4. Now, is it conceivable, that all these historical circumstances would have been placed in this prominent light, if the person of the prophet, and the brief details of his narrative, had been purely fictitious? On the same principle that the historical bearing of the reference in this case is rejected, may not that to the Queen of Sheba, which follows in the connection, be set aside, and the portion of the first book of Kings, in which the circumstances of her visit to Solomon are recorded, be converted into an allegory, a moral fiction, or a popular tradition? The two cases, as adduced by our Lord, are altogether parallel; and the same may be affirmed of the allusion to Tyre and Sidon, and that to Sodom in the preceding chapter.

It may be said, indeed, that a fictitious narrative of the moral kind would answer the purpose of our Saviour equally well with one which contained a statement of real transactions; just as it has been maintained, that the reference made by the Apostle James to the patience of Job, suited his purpose, irrespective of the actual existence of that patriarch; but, as in the one case, a fictitious example of patience would prove only a tame and frigid motive to induce to the endurance of actual suffering, so, in the other, a merely imaginary repentance must be regarded as little calculated to enforce the duties of genuine contrition and amendment of life.

* Divine Inspiration, pp. 450-488.

Certainly in no other instance in which our Saviour adduces passages out of the Old Testament for the purpose of illustrating or confirming his doctrines, can it be shown, that any point or circumstance is thus employed which is not historically true. He uniformly quotes and reasons upon them as containing accounts of universally admitted facts; stamps them as such with the high sanction of his divine authority; and transmits them for the confident belief of mankind in all future ages.

It is only necessary further to add, that if the book had contained a parable, the name of some unknown person would have been selected, and not that of a prophet to whom a definite historical existence is assigned in the Old Testament. On perusing the first sentence, every unprejudiced reader must conclude that there had existed such a prophet, and that what follows is a simple narrative of facts. The formula  $\text{וַיְהִי דְבַר-יְהוָה לְאָמָר}$  is so appropriated, as the usual introduction to real prophetic communication, that to put any other construction upon it would be a gross violation of one of the first principles of interpretation. Comp. 2 Chron. xi. 2; Is. xxxviii. 4; Jer. i. 4, 11, ii. 1, xiv. 1, xvi. 1, xxviii. 12, xxix. 30; Ezek. iii. 16; Hag. i. 1, 3, ii. 20; Zech. iv. 8.

Against the plenary historical character of the book, the miraculous nature of some of the transactions has been objected; but, referring for an investigation of these transactions to the commentary, and taking for granted an interposition of miraculous agency in the deliverance of the prophet, when cast into the sea, may it not be fairly asked whether there is nothing in the circumstances of the case to justify such interposition? The commission was most important in its own nature, but likewise most unusual, and confessedly most hazardous in its execution; one from which it was extremely natural for Jonah to shrink, and which required the most confirmatory evidence of its divine origin to induce him to act upon it. The miracle selected for the purpose of furnishing him with this evidence, however extraordinary in itself, was in exact keeping with the circumstances in which he was placed; and, in so far, was parallel with those wrought in connection with the mission of Moses, Exod. iii. iv.; of Elijah, 1 Kings xvii.; and of Christ and his apostles. And it is undeniable, that most of the writers who have called it in question, have either flatly denied the existence of all Scripture miracles, or attempted, in some way or other, to account for them on mere natural principles. The same mode of reasoning which goes to set aside one, will, if fully carried out, go to set aside all.

That our prophet is the same who predicted the restoration of the ancient boundaries of the kingdom of the ten tribes, 2 Kings xiv. 25, is rendered certain by identity of name, parentage and office; and as that prediction received its accomplishment in the reign of Jeroboam II., it is obvious he must at least have been contemporary with the monarch, if he did not flourish at a still more early period. He is justly considered to have been one of the most ancient of all the Hebrew prophets whose writings are contained in the canon.

Whether Jonah composed the book himself, or whether it was written at a more recent period, has been matter of dispute. Of the circumstance, that he is spoken of in the third person, no account is to be made, since it is a style of writing frequently adopted by the sacred penmen, as it also is by profane authors. Nor can the occurrence of two or three Chaldee words, as  $\text{נִי־עֵשׂוֹ}$ , a ship,  $\text{חֲשַׁב}$  to think,  $\text{צִוָּו}$ , command, be justly objected against the early authorship; for the prophet must have had considerable intercourse with persons who spoke foreign languages, which could not but exert some influence on his style. With respect to  $\text{נִי־עֵשׂוֹ}$ , as it is also the Syriac  $\text{ܢܝܥܝܫܘܐ}$ , and Arabic  $\text{سفينة}$ , there is every reason to conclude that it was the nautical term in use among the Phœnicians, and so might have been adopted at an early period into all the cognate dialects, though they had other words by which to express the same thing. The use of the compound particles  $\text{וְיִשְׁכַּח}$  and  $\text{וְיִשְׁכַּח}$  does not necessarily argue a late date, since there was nothing to prevent their being appropriated under the circumstances of the prophet, just as they came to be adopted, under somewhat similar circumstances, by other writers. The employment of  $\text{עַל}$ , the abbreviated form of  $\text{עַל־כֵּן}$ , in Judges v. 7, is an undeniable example of its adoption at an early period; and it is indeed very doubtful whether it be proper to regard it as a Chaldaism at all, though it is found in some portions of the Hebrew Scriptures and not in others!\* It has also been alleged against the antiquity of the book, that the writer uses the substantive verb in the past tense, when describing the size of Nineveh,  $\text{עִיר־גְּדֹלָהּ הָיְתָה הַיָּמָיִם}$ , chap. iii. 3; as if the city had been destroyed before his time; but the past tense is evidently employed for the simple purpose of preserving uniformity in the style of the narrative, and, as De Wette acknowledges, bedeutet nichts.†

In point of style, the book is remarkable for the simplicity of its prose: the only portion of poetry is chap. ii. 3–10, which possesses considerable spirit and force, though some parts of it are evidently a repetition of certain sentences in the Psalms of David, with which the prophet appears to have been familiar.

Of the numerous traditions, both Jewish and Christian, which profess to give us information respecting Jonah, I would say with Luther, Das glaube wer da will, ich glaube es nicht. All that we learn from Scripture is, that his father's name was Amittai, and that his birth-place was Gath-hepher ( $\text{גַּת־חֵפֶר}$ , 2 Kings xiv. 25;  $\text{גַּת־חֵפֶר}$ , Josh. xix. 13), a city in the tribe of Zebulun, from which latter circumstance it appears that he was an Israelite, and not a Jew.

In this book the patience and clemency of God are strikingly contrasted with the selfishness and unbelief of man ; and, as inserted in the canon of Scripture, it was no doubt primarily designed to teach the Jews the moral lessons, that the Divine regard was not confined to them alone, but was extended to other subjects of the general government of God ; that wickedness, if persisted in, will meet with condign punishment ; that God has no pleasure in inflicting such punishment, but delights in the repentance of the guilty ; and that if pagans yielded so prompt a compliance with a single prophetic message, it behooved those who were continually instructed by the servants of Jehovah, seriously to reflect on the guilt which they contracted by refusing to listen to their admonitions. It has been usual to speak of Jonah as a type of our Saviour, and numerous points of resemblance have been attempted to be established between them, to the no small injury of the blessed character of the latter : whereas, there is nothing more in the passage of our Lord's discourse (Matt. xii.), from which the notion has been borrowed, than a comparison of his own consignment to the tomb for the same space of time which the prophet spent in the belly of the fish.* The record of the event in the Jewish Scriptures could never have suggested to its readers, before Christ made the reference, the subject in the anticipative illustration of which he applies it.

* See Holden on Ecclesiastes, Introd. Dissert. pp. 10–13.

† Lehrbuch, § 237.

* See the excellent remarks of the Rev. W. Lindsay Alexander, M. A. on types, in his Congregational Lectures, Lect. VIII.

CHAPTER I.

WE have here an account of the prophet's commission to preach at Nineveh, and his attempt to evade it by embarking for Spain, 1-3; an extraordinary storm by which he was baffled in his purpose; the alarm of the sailors, and the means which they adopted for their safety; the detection of Jonah; his being thrown into the sea; and his preservation in the belly of a fish, 4-17.

1 THE word of Jehovah was communicated to Jonah, the son of 2 Amittai, saying: Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and proclaim against it; for their wickedness is come up before me,

1. From the circumstance that the book commences with the conjunction ו, commonly rendered and, some have inferred that it is merely the fragment of a larger work, written by the same hand; but though this particle is most commonly used to connect the following sentence with something which precedes it, and is placed at the beginning of historical books to mark their connection with a foregoing narrative, as Exod. i. 1; 1 Kings i. 1; Ezra i. 1; yet it is also employed inchoatively where there is no connection whatever, as Ruth i. 1; Esth. i. 1; and, as specially parallel, Ezek. i. 1. It serves no other purpose in such cases than merely to qualify the apocopated future, so as to make it represent the historical past tense. The proper names יוֹנָה, Jonah, and אֲמִיטַי, Amittai, signify a dove, and veracious or truthful, but why they were given to the prophet and his father we are not informed.

2. By an emphatic idiom, אֲרִיב, arise, is used before another verb, as a term of excitement. נִינְוֶה NINEVEH, the ancient capital of the Assyrian empire, was situated on the eastern bank of the Tigris, opposite to the modern town of Mosul. The name is generally allowed to signify "the residence of Ninus," from נִינּוּס, Ninus, and בַּיְתָא, a dwelling; but, according to Hebrew usage, the words should be reversed in order to bring out this meaning. By the Greek and Roman writers, it is called Nīnos,

Ninus, after its founder, who must have been indetical with Nimrod, to whom the foundation of the city is ascribed, Gen. x. 11. For, that אַשּׁוּר, Ashur, is there to be understood of the country so called, or Assyria, and not of a person of that name, is evident from ver. 22, where Ashur is mentioned as a descendant of Shem, and not of Ham. The omission of the local ה, which might have been expected to form אַשּׁוּרָה, cannot be brought as an objection, since it is frequently omitted. See Num. xxxiv. 4; Deut. iii. 1. In point of size, it might well be designated הַגְּדֹלָה הַשְּׁלִישִׁית, that great city, having been as stated chap. iii. 3, "three days' journey" in circumference. If we reckon a day's journey at about twenty miles, which is the average rate of travelling in the East, it will give us sixty miles; which, how immense soever it may appear, quite agrees with the estimate stated by Diodorus Siculus, ii. 3: viz. 480 stadia in circuit, 150 stadia in length, and 90 stadia in breadth. He further calls it Nīnos μεγάλη, and adds, τηλικαύτην δὲ πόλιν οὐδεὶς ὕστερον ἔκτισε κατὰ τὸ μέγεθος τοῦ περιβολοῦ, καὶ τὴν περὶ τὸ τεῖχος μεγαλοπρέπειαν. Making every allowance for the large spaces occupied by gardens, etc., it must, according to the computation specified, chap. iv. 11, have contained a population of upwards of six hundred thousand souls, which is nearly equal to that of 3 But Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish, from the presence of Jehovah; and he went down to Joppa, and found a ship going to Tarshish, and paid the fare thereof, and went down into her, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of Jehovah.

Paris. As it had long been the mistress of the East, and its situation was favorable for commerce, it possessed immense wealth, but was, at the same time, notorious for the most flagrant corruption of manners. After a siege of three years, it was taken by Arbaces the Mede, about the seventh year of Uzziah; and a second time by the united forces of Cyaxares the Mede, and Nabopolassar, viceroy of Babylon, B. C. 626. וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ וְיִשְׁמַע בְּכָל־הָאָרֶץ וְיִשְׁמַע בְּכָל־הָאָרֶץ וְיִשְׁמַע בְּכָל־הָאָרֶץ, make a proclamation against it. This proclamation consisted in the announcement, that, within the space of forty days, the city should be destroyed. לַעֲשֹׂת הַלְּחָדָשׁ וְהַשְּׁנֹנִי וְהַשְּׁנֹנִי וְהַשְּׁנֹנִי, the LXX. and Vulg. render in; and some would assign to the word the signification to, which לֵאמֹר has, chap. iii. 3; but it better agrees with the flight of Jonah to retain that of against. The idea of his going to so great a city for the purpose of denouncing punishment against its wicked population so appalled him that he shrunk from the task. It is also more in keeping with the reason assigned in the following clause of the verse. The phrase וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ וְיִשְׁמַע בְּכָל־הָאָרֶץ, to go, or come up before Jehovah, is expressive of whatever is supposed specially to attract his notice, and require his interference. Comp. וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ, Gen. vi. 13; וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ, xix. 21. Βαβυλῶν ἢ μεγάλη ἐμνήσθη ἐνώπιον τοῦ Θεοῦ, Rev. xvi. 19. Αἱ ἐλεημοσύναι σου ἀνέβησαν εἰς μνημόσυνον ἔμπροσθεν τοῦ Θεοῦ, Acts x. 4.

3. For וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ, Tarshish, see on Is. xxiii. 10. The Rabbins vacillate between Tarsus and Tunis. Jonathan has סִינַי, the sea. Jonah resolved to make his escape into the most distant regions of the West. Com. Ps. cxxxix. 7. וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ, which strictly means the face, person, or presence of Jehovah, is sometimes employed to denote the special manifestation of his presence, or certain outward and visible tokens by which he made himself locally known. Thus God promised that his presence (וְיָצֵא), i. e. the sensible tokens of his presence, should accompany the Hebrews on their march to Canaan. Exod. xxxiii. 14. Comp. Ps. ix. 3, lxviii. 2, 8. It is also employed in reference to the place or region where such manifestations were vouchsafed, as Gen. iv. 14; where it obviously signifies the spot where the primitive worship was celebrated, and sensible proofs of the Divine favor were manifested to the worshippers. 1 Sam. i. 22, ii. 18; Ps. xlii. 3. In like manner, the place where Jacob had intimate communion with God, was called by that patriarch וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ, the face, or manifestation of God, Gen. xxxii. 31. The interpretation, therefore, of David Kimchi, כִּי הִשָּׁב שָׂאָה יִצְחָק מֵאֵרֶץ רוּחַ וְיִשְׂרָאֵל לְחֻזְקָה לְאֵרֶץ לֹא תִשְׁרָה עָלָיו רוּחַ נְבוּאָה, he imagined that if he went out of the land of Israel, the spirit of prophecy would not rest upon him, is perhaps not wide of the mark. Jarchi to the same effect, וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ בְּחֻזְקָה לְאֵרֶץ, The Shekinah does not dwell out of the land. Though, as Theodoret observes, he well knew that the Lord of the universe was everywhere present, yet he supposed that it was only at Jerusalem he became apparent to men; ὑπολαμβάνων δὲ ὁμοῦς ἐν μόνῃ Ἱερουσαλὴμ αὐτὸν ποιεῖσθαι τὴν ἐπιφάνειαν. For the reason of Jonah's flight, see on chap. iv. 2. וְיָצֵא נְבִיאָהּ is used of going down to the sea-coast from any inland place, so that it cannot be inferred from the use of the term that it was at Jerusalem Jonah received his commission. יָפֹה, Iapho, LXX. Ἰόππη, Arab. يافا, Yapha, Jaffa, Joppa, a celebrated harbor on the east coast of the Mediterranean, at the distance of ten hours from Jerusalem, of which it is properly the seaport. However insecure, it was used as a harbor as early as the days of Solomon. 2 Chron. ii. 16. It was likewise thus appropriated in the Persian period, Ezra iii. 7; and was deemed so important in the time of the Maccabees, that, when recovered from the Syrians, it was fortified, and afterwards underwent various fates. Its present population amounts to about 7000 souls. בוא, which usually signifies to come, come into, enter, is obviously here used in the acceptation go, go out. Com. Num. xxxii. 6. חָרַץְהָ, her hire, i. e. of the vessel, the fare which Jonah had to pay for a passage in her; not, that he engaged the vessel, as Benjoin, after Jarchi, would have it. רָק מֵה שְׂהוּא חַיִּיב לִיתֵן בְּחֵלְקֵי, only what he was obliged to pay as his share. Abenezra. This fare, it has been thought, he paid beforehand, that he might secure his flight from the land of Judea; but it may have been owing to a prudential condition on the part of the captain. The affix in עָמְיָהָ refers to the ship's crew, understood.

4 But Jehovah caused a great wind to come down upon the sea, and there was a great tempest in the sea, and it was apprehended the ship would be wrecked. Then the mariners were afraid, and cried, each to his god, and threw out the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten her of them; but as for Jonah, he had gone down into the innermost part of the vessel, and lay fast asleep.

4. The force of הָיִטִּיל, to cause to come down at full length, on application to the storm, will appear on consulting Josephus, who, speaking of the dangerous navigation of Joppa, says: κατὰ τοῦτον σαλευούσι τοῖς ἀπὸ τῆς Ἰόππης ὑπὸ τὴν ἕω πνεῦμα βίαιον ἐπιπίπτει μελαμβόρειον ὑπὸ τῶν ταύτῃ πλωϊζομένων καλεῖται. "As they were driven about here, a violent wind fell upon them, which is called by those that sail there, the black north wind." De Bello Jud. iii. ix. 3. The whole section deserves to be read. Coverdale renders, "But the Lord hurled a greate wynde into the see." הָיִטִּיל, the ship, i. e., by metonymy, the persons on board, thought she would founder. Thus Kimchi; but Jarchi, נִדְמִית כִּי לֹא הָיָה, נִשְׁבְּרָת, she appeared as if she should be broken. Syriac ܠܘܨܬܘܢܐ ܕܘܨܘܬܘܢܐ, was going to be broken, or was tossed, etc. LXX. ἐκινδύνευε. It is best to render the verb impersonally.

5. מְרִיָּצִים, mariners, from מָרַץ, salt, the quality of the water which they navigate. Syr. and Arab. the same. Comp. Ezek. xxvii. 9, 27, 29. Kimchi, מְרִיָּצִים הַמְשֻׁמְרִים, those who handle the oars, with reference to the ancient mode of propelling vessels at sea. Being in all probability Phœnicians, they had each his tutelary deity, whose interposition he invoked in the hour of danger. From the circumstance that מְרִיָּצִים signifies vessels, Benjoin infers, that the ship had not taken in a regular cargo, Jonah having paid the entire freight; but מְרִיָּצִים is used with such latitude of signification in the Hebrew Scriptures, that it may be understood of any kind of manufactured articles, such as those enumerated Ezek. xxvii. which formed the merchandise of Tyre. These the Phœnicians conveyed to Spain, whence they brought back cargoes of silver, iron, tin, and lead. That something more ponderous than a few vessels on the deck is meant, is evident from what follows in the verse, ἐκβολὴν ἐποίησαντο, the words employed by the LXX. in translating which are the same which are used by Luke, Acts xxvii. 18. The dual form in מְרִיָּצִים; the sides or two sides of the vessel, is not to be pressed; the word in this number being adopted in Hebrew usage to express a recess or remote part of any place. Comp. Ps. cxxviii. 3; 1 Sam. xxiv. 4; Is. xiv. 15; the innermost part, best expresses the meaning. Kimchi otherwise explains it, אֶל אַחַת מִן הַיְרִיבֹתַיִם, to one of the sides, and appeals to Judges xii. 7, and Zech. ix. 9, in proof of the plural being used instead of the singular. See Gesenius, Lehrgeb. p. 665. It has been ob-

- 6 And the captain went close up to him, and said to him: How is it, thou art fast asleep? Arise, call to thy God; perhaps God will think upon us, that we perish not.
- 7 And they said to each other: Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know on whose account this calamity hath happened to us: and they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah. And they said to him: Tell us now on what account this calamity hath happened to us? What is thine occupation? And whence comest thou? What is thy country? And of what people art thou?
- 8 And he said to them: I am an Hebrew, and I fear Jehovah, the jected to the historical character of the book, that it is not to be supposed that the prophet could possibly have composed himself to sleep in the circumstances here described; but nothing was more natural than for a person after the fatigues of a journey, with a mind worn out by excessive anxiety, to be thrown in spite of himself, into such a condition. נִרְדַּם, which the LXX. render καὶ ἐπερχε, is designed to qualify the preceding verb, by expressing the profound stupor into which Jonah had sunk. There is a singular beauty in putting נִרְדַּם, the name of the prophet, in the nominative absolute. "But as for Jonah" — while all were full of consternation, expecting every moment to become a prey to the raging elements, he lay perfectly unconscious of what was transpiring. For שֵׁפִיפָה, ship, which occurs only in this place, see the Preface.

6. תַּבְּלָה lit. the master of the ropemen — תַּבְּלָה being used as a collective. Com. רֹבֵעַ טַבָּחִים, chief of the body-guard, 2 Kings xxv. 8; רֹבֵעַ סֵרְסִיִּים, chief of the eunuchs. Dan. i. 3. Kimchi explains thus: הַסֵּפִיפָה נִקְרָאִים הַתַּבְּלָה לְפָנֵי שְׂמוֹשְׁבֵי וּמְתוּרֵי הַבַּלִּי הַזֶּהוּרָה כַּפִּי הַכַּמָּחַם, "the ship-men are called ropemen, because they draw and loosen the ropes, of the mast, according to their skill." LXX. Ἡρωπεύς. Vulg. gubernator. הוֹרֵעַ, to show oneself considerate, to think of, set one's mind upon; in Kal, to invent, fabricate, produce splendid work; hence the noun עֲשֵׂה, artificial work, Song v. 14. The idea of shining seems to be a secondary meaning; see Jer. v. 28. Comp. עֲשֵׂה נֹרָה, thoughts, Ps. cxlvi. 4. The verb has the signification of thinking, purposing, etc. both in Chaldee and Syriac. LXX.

διασώσῃ. Targ. יִתְרַחֵם, Syr. صَرِيح, to deliver. Hitzig prefers the idea of shining, being friendly, gracious, and the like. Having found that their heathen deities rendered them no assistance, the crew were anxious to try the effect of supplication on the part of Jonah to the God of the Hebrews, either from the supposition that he was stronger than their own gods, or that he might be displeased with the prophet, and required to be placated. It deserves to be noticed, that the word for God is here used with the article הַאֱלֹהִים, which is certainly designed to give emphasis to it; God — the true God. Comp. Deut. iv. 35, יְהוָה הוּא הַאֱלֹהִים, and 1 Kings xviii. 39, יְהוָה הוּא הַאֱלֹהִים יְהוָה הוּא אֱלֹהֵינוּ. Are we to infer from this circumstance, that the captain was a worshipper of Jehovah?

7-9. The casting of lots was common among the nations of antiquity, not only when they wished to know some future event, but also when they would determine cases of difficulty, and especially criminal causes, in which no witnesses could be obtained. The mode of using them is not described in Scripture, but from the verb נָפַל, לִפְתֹּחַ, to fall, cause to fall, being commonly employed, it is probable it was by shaking the lots in some box or vase, and then causing them to fall on the ground. Comp. Prov. xvi. 33, where הִטֵּל, to throw down, is used, in connection with פִּתְיָה, the bosom,

- 10 God of heaven, who made the sea, and the dry land. And the men were greatly afraid, and said to him: What is this thou hast done? For the men knew that he was fleeing from the presence of Jehovah, because he had told them. They further said to him: What shall we do to thee, that the sea may cease from raging against us? for the sea groweth more and more tempestuous. And he said to them: Take me up, and throw me into the sea, and the sea shall cease from raging against you; for I know it is on my account this great tempest is upon you.
- 13 And the men rowed hard to regain the land; but they or large fold of the garment in front of the body; intimating, that lots were also mixed there for the sake of secrecy. בְּשָׂלְמִי, lit. for that which is to whom, i. e. בְּצִיּוֹן, for whose guilt. The words in ver. 8, בְּצִיּוֹן לְמִי הָרָצָה הַזֶּה, are omitted in two of Kennicott's MSS., in the Soncin. edition of the Prophets, and in the Vatican copy of the LXX.; and Kennicott's MS. 154, omits לְמִי, most probably both by emendation, in order to avoid the repetition of what had been said in ver. 7. We should rather have expected לְמִי בְּצִיּוֹן, "on account of what;" but מִי may be taken in a neuter sense, like the corresponding אֵל; in Ethiopic, as indeed, it is in the phrase מִי שְׁמִי, "What is thy name?" Jud. xiii. 16. Comp. also 1 Sam. xviii. 17, מִי הָיִי, "What is my life?" Micah i. 5, מִי הָיִי בְּמִיתָהּ בְּמִיתָהּ, "What is the sin of Jacob?" — "What are the high places of Judah?" Hexaplar Syr. מִי, on account of what. Leo Juda: "unde sit nobis hoc malum." The seamen were anxious to learn every particular connected with the history of Jonah, in order that they might discover the real cause of the storm. יָרָא, to fear, followed by the accusative, signifies to cherish feelings of reverence, to reverence, honor, etc., and is not here to be interpreted in the sense of being afraid, which would have required the preposition מִן before the object in such a case as the present.

10. מִי הָיִי, what is this thou hast done? is not put for the purpose of obtaining information respecting his flight, for it is immediately added, that he had previously informed them of it, but is a formula which is intended to produce a strong feeling of disapprobation in the breast of him to whom it is addressed, conveying, at the same time, the idea of surprise that he could have been guilty of such conduct. Comp. Gen. iii. 13, xii. 18, xx. 9. The question shows that what Jonah had said respecting the character of the true God, had made a deep impression upon the minds of the sailors.

11. They had clearly the conviction, that as the prophet was the cause of the storm, some step must be taken in order to get rid of him; but how to dispose of him they knew not. That they wished, if possible, to save his life, is clear from the sequel. מִשָּׁקֵט מִשָּׁקֵט conveys the idea of subsiding, so as no longer to bear down upon with violence, and graphically describes the threatening attitude of a tempestuous sea, rising above the ships that are exposed to it. שָׁקֵט properly signifies to settle down, be still, cease from raging. הֹלֵךְ וְיָבֵא, lit. going and storming, meaning, to go on, increase, become more and more tempestuous; a common idiom in Hebrew. Comp. Exod. xix. 19; 1 Sam. ii. 26, xvii. 41; Esth. ix. 4; Prov. iv. 18.

13. חָדַר, to dig, or break forcibly through anything, is strongly expressive of the great effort made by the seamen could not, for the sea grew more and more tempestuous against 14 them. And they cried to Jehovah, and said: O now Jehovah!

 let us not perish, we beseech thee, for this man's life; and lay not innocent blood to our charge: for thou, O Jehovah! hast 15 done as it pleased thee. And they took up Jonah, and threw 16 him into the sea, and the sea ceased from its raging. Then the men feared Jehovah greatly, and offered a sacrifice to Jehovah, and made vows.

to avoid sacrificing the life of Jonah. LXX. παρεβιδύοντο. At  $\text{בִּשְׁפָּתָי}$  supply  $\text{הַיָּם}$ .

14. An affecting prayer for pagans to present to the true God! The words,  $\text{הַיָּם הַזֶּה לֹא־לָנוּ הַיָּם הַזֶּה הַיָּם הַזֶּה}$ , are peculiarly earnest and tender.  $\text{הַיָּם}$ , the same as  $\text{אֵם}$ , which Gesenius takes to be compounded of  $\text{אָה}$ , oh! and  $\text{אֵם}$ , the usual particle of entreaty. Comp. the Arab.

$\text{اَوْن}$ , obsecro. The Keri marks  $\text{א}$  in  $\text{אֵם}$  as redundant, and a great number MSS. read  $\text{אֵם}$ .  $\text{שֵׁפָּתַי}$ , life, means here life that is taken away, having  $\text{דָּם בְּיָדִי}$ , innocent blood, corresponding to it in the following clause. Comp. Deut. xix. 21; 2 Sam. xiv. 7. Coverdale, well as to the sense, "this man's death." The reference is not to anything that Jonah had done, but to what they were about to do to him.  $\text{עַל דַּם הָרָצֹחַ}$ , to give blood upon, means to charge with murder. Syr.

$\text{לֹא־יִשְׁמְדוּךָ}$ , impute not. The sense is, let us not be found guilty of killing an innocent person. In the concluding words of the verse, they refer the whole affair to the mysterious providence of God. They had not been brought into their present circumstances by any conduct of their own; nor could they account for the guilt of Jonah, since he was chargeable with no act of immorality. Yet he was the object of Divine displeasure.

15, 16. They now proceed calmly, though with great reluctance, to act in accordance with what they had been led to regard as the will of the Most High. The calm appears to have taken place instantaneously. According to the Rabbins, Grotius, and some others, they did not actually offer a sacrifice, but only purposed to do it before Jehovah, i. e. at Jerusalem; but it is more natural to conclude that they sacrificed some animal that was on board, and vowed that they would present greater proofs of their gratitude when they returned from their voyage. Michaelis thinks they intended to perform their vows when they reached Spain.

"Quin; ubi transmissa steterint trans æquora classes, Et positis aris jam vota in litore solves."

Æneid. iii. 403.

CHAPTER II.

WITH the exception of the first and last verses, which give an historical account of the fate of Jonah as preserved by a great fish, this chapter contains a brief but beautiful hymn of deliverance. It was in all probability composed immediately after his reaching the dry land, but embodies some of the leading topics in reference to which he called upon Jehovah during his stay in the deep.

1 (CHAP. I. 17.) Now Jehovah had appointed a great fish to swallow Jonah. And Jonah was in the bowels of the fish three days and three nights.

1. (Chap. i. 17, in our common version.) It has been supposed by some that the fish here spoken of was created at the moment for the purpose of swallowing the prophet, though, according to Rabbi Tarphon, it was ממינה מששה ימי בראשית, prepared for the purpose at the creation of the world; but there is nothing in the original word מִנְהָה which at all suggests the idea of creation or production. Like the Arab. مني, *certa quantitate certoque modo definivit aliqui rem; decretus fuit, it properly signifies to appoint, order, arrange, and the like, so that all that can be legitimately inferred from its use in this place, is, that, in the providence of God, the animal was brought to the spot at the precise time when Jonah was thrown into the sea, and its instrumentality was wanted for his deliverance. In other words, it was the result of a special pre-arrangement in the Divine plan, according to which the movements of all creatures are regulated, and rendered subservient to the purposes of God's universal government. LXX. προσέταξε. Comp. chap. iv. 6-8. On the subject of the fish itself various opinions have been broached. Mutianus, and after him Hermann von der Hardt, would have it to be nothing more than an inn, with the sign of "The Whale," into which Jonah was received after having been cast on shore! Less proposed the theory of a ship with this name, which happened to be close by and rescued the prophet; while Thaddæus supposed that, on being thrown out of the vessel, he lighted upon a large fish, on which he rode for the time specified, and was at last cast on shore! Till the time of Bochart it was commonly supposed to have been the balena, or whale properly so called, owing to a misinterpretation of κῆτος, Matt. xii. 40, which signifies any great fish in general. With much ingenuity that learned author endeavors to prove, that it must have been the carcharias, or dog-fish, which,* though not the size of a whale, yet has so large a gullet, and so capacious a stomach, that one of them has been found to contain a warrior, clad in all his armor. Bochart, Hierozo. p. ii. lib. v. cap. xii. Others have supposed that it was a shark, a species of fish abounding in the Mediterranean, exceedingly voracious, and in the belly of which whole men have been found. See Parkhurst's Greek Lexicon, sub. voc. Κῆτος. But we may well acquiesce in the decision of Rosenmüller: "Tota hæc de pisce Jonæ disquisitio vana videtur atque inutilis." The Scriptures leave it entirely undecided to what species of marine animals the fish belonged; merely stating that it was דג גדול, a great fish, one sufficiently large for the occasion. Much has been written to relieve the transaction of the miraculous; but that it is physically possible for a human subject, which has been accustomed for years to breathe the vital air, to exist without respiration, or upon the foul air in a fish, for the length of time here specified, has never been proved. The position of Abenezra is the only one that can, with any consistency, be maintained: אין כח בראש להחיות במעי הדגה כפי שעה ואף כי זה המספר רק במעשה נס; "No man has the power of living in the bowels of a fish for a single hour: how much less for such a number of hours, except by the operation of a miracle." The transaction was, as Kimchi observes, אחד מן הנסים, one of the miracles. As such it is unequivocally recognized by our Lord, when he calls it a σημεῖον, a sign or token of divine interposition, a supernatural event, manifestive of the power of God, Matt. xii. 39; and it behooves all his disciples implicitly and cordially to receive his decision. For the period of "three days and three nights," see Whitby on Matt. xii. 40.

2. For נִתְחַבְּלָהּ, comp. נִתְחַבְּלָהּ, 1 Sam. ii. 1. Some of the Rabbins, Hezel, and others, would argue from the use of מן, from, out of, and not ב, in, before, מֵעַי, that the prayer of Jonah was not pre-

- 2 And Jonah prayed to Jehovah his God from the bowels of the fish, and said :
- 3 I cried because of my distress to Jehovah, And he answered me ; From the interior of Sheol I cried out : Thou heardest my voice.
- 4 Thou didst cast me into the deep, Into the midst of the seas ; So that the current surrounded me ;

sented while he was in the belly of the fish, but after his deliverance; but this interpretation is justly rejected both by Abenezra and Kimchi. The preposition marks the place from which he directed his thoughts to the Most High. Comp. לִבְטֶן שְׂאוֹל, ver. 3; מִמַּעַמְקוֹיִם, Ps. cxxx. 1; מִן־הַמַּצְר, Ps. cxviii. 5. The final ה in הַדְּגָה is not feminine, as has been supposed, and upon which assumption certain Rabbins have built the theory, that a still larger female fish swallowed that in which Jonah was preserved; but the ה paragogic, which corresponds to the status emphaticus of the Aramaic, and is designed to strengthen the termination. For other instances in which it is added, at the same time that the noun takes the article, comp. הַדְּרֹסָה, Judges xiv. 18; הַמִּיֹּתָה, Ps. cxvi. 15. The position of the accent is of no account.

3, 4. The hymn which commences here is partly descriptive, partly precatory, and partly eucharistical. These two verses are introductory, as is clear from the use of וַאֲנִי אִמְרָתִי, and give expression to the feelings and pious exercise of the prophet in the awful circumstances into which he had been brought. That the language, not only of the prayer, but also of the introduction, is in part borrowed from the Psalms, appears from the following comparison :

Psalm cxx. 1.	Jonah ii. 3.
אֶל־יְהוָה בְּצַרְתָּהּ לִי	תְּרַאתִי מַצְרָה לִי
: תְּרַאתִי וַעֲנֵנִי :	: אֶל־יְהוָה וַעֲנֵנִי :
xlii. 8.	ver. 4.
כֹּל־מִשְׁבְּרֵי־הַיָּם וַגְּלִיָּה	כֹּל־מִשְׁבְּרֵי־הַיָּם וַגְּלִיָּה
: עָלַי עָבְרוּ :	: עָלַי עָבְרוּ :

xxx. 23.	ver. 5.
וַאֲנִי אִמְרָתִי	וַאֲנִי אִמְרָתִי
: נִגְרַזְתִּי מִמְּקַדְ עֵינֶיךָ :	: נִגְרַזְתִּי מִמְּקַדְ עֵינֶיךָ :
lxix. 2.	ver. 6.
בְּאֵן מַיִם עַד־נְפֹשׁ :	אֶשְׁמְרֵי מַיִם
cxlii. 4.	ver. 8.
: בְּהַתְּעַשְׂתָּ עָלַי נְפֹשִׁי :	עַד־נְפֹשׁ :
xxx. 7.	ver. 9.
הַשְּׂמָרִים	מִשְׁמָרִים
: הַכְּבִל־שָׂוָא :	: הַכְּבִל־שָׂוָא :
iii. 9.	ver. 10.
לִיהוָה הִשְׁתַּנְּפָה	יְשׁוּעָתָה לִיהוָה :

On the supposition that Jonah was familiar with the Psalms, it was very natural for him to incorporate sentences taken from them with his own language, just as we frequently do in extempore prayer, without thinking of the portion of Scripture from which they are derived. בְּטֶן שְׂאוֹל, lit. the belly of Sheol, i. e. the vast and hidden receptacle of the departed. Targ. מִמַּעַיִת הַיָּם, from the lowest part of the abyss, but less properly. The remark of Jerome is: "Ventre inferi alvum ceti intelligamus, quæ tantæ fuit magnitudinis, ut instar obtineret inferni." Before מַצְרָה, ver. 4, supply כְּנָהַר, commonly used of a river, but here it is to be understood of the strong current or stream of the sea, which flows like a river. There is no foundation for the opinion of Abenezra and Kimchi, that it was intended to describe the confluence of the waters of a river with those of the sea.

— καὶ ἐν ποταμοῖς βέεδρα Ἰκεανου, ὅσπερ γένεσις πάντεσσι τέτυκται. Iliad. xiv. 245.

- All thy breakers and thy billows passed over me.
 5 Then I said :
 I am cast out from before thine eyes,
 Yet I will look again towards thy holy temple.
 6 The waters press around me to the very life ;
 The abyss encompasseth me ;
 The weed is bound to my head.
 7 I go down to the clefts of the mountains ;
 As for the earth, her bars are shut upon me for ever.
 But thou wilt bring up my life from destruction,
 O Jehovah my God !

Μέσσω γὰρ μεγάλοι ποταμοὶ καὶ δεινὰ
 βέεθρα,
 Ὠκεανὸς μὲν πρῶτα. Odyss. xi. 156.
 Τῆν δὲ κατ' Ὠκεανὸν ποταμὸν φέρε κύμα ῥόοιο. Ibid. 638.

5. Having described his condition, the prophet now proceeds to give the words of his prayer. הַיְיָ יְהוָה, to be before the eyes of Jehovah, means to be the object of his special notice and care. Jonah had fled from the Divine presence in Canaan, but now he feels that he is expelled even from the abodes of life, and cut off, as it were, from the regard of that Providence which watches over the children of men. Still he does not abandon himself to despair. He confidently expects to be restored to the enjoyment of his privileges in the temple at Jerusalem, and there to render thanks to God for his deliverance. Green would supply the negative לֹא before הַיְיָ יְהוָה, and Hitzig would point הַיְיָ יְהוָה for הַיְיָ יְהוָה, how; but both without any authority. Such sudden transitions from fear to hope are frequently expressed in Scripture.

6. עַד-נַפְשִׁי, even to, or to the very soul, i. e. the animal life; meaning, to the extinction of life. אֲלֵה, is the alga, or weed, which abounds at the bottom of the sea, and from which the Arabian Gulf takes the name of יַם-סוּדָן, the sea of weeds. Kimchi explains it by בּוּרְסִי, the papyrus, or bulrush. Gesenius refines too much when he attaches to עַד-נַפְשִׁי in this place the idea of binding round the head like a turban. Assuredly Jonah had no such idea in his mind. He rather describes how he felt, as if entangled by the sedge or weeds through which he was dragged.

7. חַצְצוֹת, sections, cuttings, clefts, from חָצַב, to cut; Arab. قَضَب, abscondit, reseruit. Thus the LXX. σχισμὰς ὄρεων. Vulg. extrema montium. Targ. עֲקָרֵי טַהַרְיָא, the roots of the mountains. The word describes the deep indentations or clefts made in the roots of mountains which project into the sea, or those divisions which are found in the rocks at its bottom. הָאֲרֶץ, the earth, is emphatically put in the nominative absolute, as the object to which the affections of the prophet still clung. He was expelled from it, as from a habitation, and its bars had been shut upon him, so that he could not return. Gesenius takes the bars to be those of Sheol; but, as we have שַׁעַר-שְׁאוֹל, the gates of Sheol, Is. xxxviii, 10, the phrase here must have been שַׁעַר-בְּרִחִי, and not שַׁעַר-בְּרִחִי, if such had been the meaning. בָּעַד is put elliptically for בְּעַד סָגַר, the verb, סָגַר being obviously implied. Jonah adds, לְעוֹלָם, for ever, to express the impossibility of his ever again reaching the dry land, by any effort of his own. Yet, exposed as he momentarily was to death in the region of corruption (שְׁחָרָה, the pit, or grave,) he confidently expresses his hope that God would restore him. He asserts his interest in Jehovah by calling him "his God."

- 8 When my soul was overwhelmed within me,
I remembered Jehovah ;
And my prayer came in unto thee,
Into thy holy temple.
- 9 They that regard lying vanities
Forsake their Benefactor.
- 10 But as for me, I will sacrifice to thee with the voice of thanksgiving ;
What I have vowed I will perform :
Salvation belongeth to Jehovah.
- 11 And Jehovah commanded the fish, and it vomited forth
Jonah upon the dry land.

8. The prophet here resumes his description of the circumstances of distress to which he was reduced, his application to Jehovah, and the answer which he received to his prayer. The composition of this and the following verses, like that of verses 3 and 4, belongs to a period subsequent to his deliverance; yet while describing his condition, he occasionally directs his language to Jehovah, towards whom, as his deliverer, his thoughts naturally rose. הַצַּעֲרָה, to be in a state of faintness, swoon, from הָצַעַר, to cover, to involve in darkness, overwhelm. LXX. well, as it respects the sense: Ἐν τῷ ἐκλείπειν ἀπ' ἐμοῦ τὴν ψυχὴν μου.

9. A striking description of idolaters, but which may also be extended to all who prefer created objects, in any shape, to God. רַחֲמֵיהֶם, lit. their mercy or goodness; by metonymy for their Benefactor: i. e. God, the author and source of all goodness: the Supreme Good. Comp. Ps. cxliv. 2, where David calls God his רַחֲמָיו. The word properly signifies kindness or benignity, and most appropriately designates Him who is good to all, and whose tender mercies are over all his works. The Syriac reads, ܚܢܘܬܗܘܢ, thy mercy, which Green, on this authority alone, admits into the text!

10. Deeply sensible of the merciful interposition of Jehovah on his behalf, Jonah now solemnly engages to give expression to his feelings of gratitude by accompanying his presentation of sacrifice with a song of praise, and faithfully performing his vows, of which we may conclude, the execution of his commission to go to Nineveh formed none of the least. The paragogic הַיְהוָה is intensive. Comp. Ps. iii. 3. In both passages, the deliverance is ascribed to Jehovah as its author, as the ל in הַיְהוָה imports.

On reviewing this prayer, and weighing the import of its several terms, it is obvious, that though Jonah was in a state of consciousness while in the belly of the fish, he had no idea that such was his situation. On the contrary, he appears to have been under the impression that he was engulfed in the sea, now forcibly carried along by its current, now entangled among its weeds, and now sinking into the profound ravines of its rocks.

11. Green and Boothroyd, on mere conjecture, remove this verse from its present position, and insert it before the hymn. Such a transposition Hitzig pronounces to be violent, unnecessary, and in short, a perversion of the passage. It is not stated where the prophet was cast on shore, but in all probability it was somewhere on the coast of Palestine. According to some, the fish carried him, during the three days and three nights, down the Mediterranean, and through the Archipelago, and the Propontis, into the Euxine sea, and deposited him on the south coast, at the nearest point to Nineveh! Not to mention how the Rabbins make him reach that city by the Tigris!!

CHAPTER III.

THIS chap. contains an account of the renewal of the prophet's commission, 1, 2; his preaching to the Ninevites, 3, 4; the universal humiliation and reformation effected by it, 5-9; and the reversal of the Divine sentence by which the city had been doomed to destruction, 10.

- 1 AND the word of Jehovah was communicated to Jonah a second
- 2 time, saying: Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and make the
- 3 proclamation to it which I order thee. And Jonah arose, and went to Nineveh, according to the word of Jehovah. Now Nineveh was a great city even to God, of three days' journey.
- 4 And Jonah began to enter the city, a journey of one day; and he proclaimed, and said: Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.
- 5 And the men of Nineveh believed in God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them, even to the
- 6 least of them. And the subject reached the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and put off his robe, and covered
- 7 himself with sackcloth, and sat in the ashes. And a proclama-

3. גְּדוּלַּהּ לְאַלְהֵימָּהּ, a city great to God. This phrase has been variously explained. Some, with Kimchi, deem it merely a superlative form; Gesenius construes the ל instrumentally, great through God, i. e. through his favor. Others consider it to be equivalent to לְפָנֵי אֱלֹהֵימָּהּ, before God, Gen. x. 9. Thus the Targ. יִי לְפָנֵי אֱלֹהֵימָּהּ. Of this last interpretation I approve, as it was most natural to refer the size of a city, to which the Hebrews could form no adequate conception, to the Divine estimation. I have accordingly rendered the words literally, as our preposition to is often used to note opinion or estimate. For the dimensions of Nineveh, as here given, see on chap. i. 2. The opinion of Abarbanel, that the diameter of the city is intended, is justly exploded.

4. It is impossible to determine how far Jonah penetrated into Nineveh, since it is probable that in making his announcement he would stop at different places, as the crowds might collect around him.

5. When בְּאֵלֵהֵם יִי, believing in God, is spoken of in reference to such as had previously been ignorant of him, it must be taken as involving the recognition of his being and character as the true God, and not simply their giving credit to the announcements of his messengers. To express the latter, בְּאֵלֵהֵם יִי is employed. See Gen. xlv. 26; Is liii. 1. All, without distinction of age or rank, put on sackcloth, the usual attire of deep mourning.

6-8. Who the king of Assyria was at the time, is not certain. Pul, the first monarch of that empire mentioned by name in Scripture, did not begin to reign till B. C. 769. Some are of opinion that it was Sardanapalus; if so, his repentance was the more remarkable, for according to the ancients he was pro-

- tion was made through Nineveh, by order of the king and his grandees, saying, Let neither man nor beast, ox nor sheep, taste anything; let them not feed, neither let them drink water.
- 8 But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God; and let them turn every one from his wicked way, and from the violence which is in their hands.
- 9 Who knoweth but that God may turn and repent, and turn away from the fierceness of his anger, that we perish not?
- 10 And God saw their works, that they turned from their wicked way, and God repented of the evil which he had said he would inflict upon them, and he inflicted it not.

verbially notorious on account of his profligacy.

"Et venere, et cœnis, et plumis Sardapali."
Juvenal. Sat. iii.

It is said that he composed for his epitaph, "Eat, drink, play; after death there is no pleasure." The description of the mourning here given is very affecting. That the irrational animals should be represented as partaking in it, is far from unnatural.

"Non ulli pastos illis egere diebus Frigida, Daphni, boves ad flumina: nulla neque amnem.

Libavit quadrupes, nec graminis attigit herbam."
Virg. Ecl. v. 24.

"Post bellator equus, positus insignibus,
Æthon

It lacrymans, guttisque humectat gran-dibus ora."
Æneid. xi. 89.

Plutarch informs us that when Masistias, a Persian general, was slain, the horses and mules were shorn, as well as the Persians themselves.

9. The Jewish interpreters follow the construction put upon the words בִּי יֵדַע, who knoweth, in the Targum: בְּיָדָע whoever is conscious that there are crimes in his hands; only Kimchi proposes another, בִּי שִׂוֵּעַ דְּרַבִּי, הוֹשִׁיבָה, He who knoweth the ways of repentance; but it is obviously a formula expressive of great guilt, yet involving the hope of pardon. Comp. Joel ii. 14.

10. God is anthropopathically said to repent, when he changes his mode of procedure, or acts differently from what his promises or threatenings had given reason to expect. The threatening in the present case having been conditional, was repealed on the performance of the implied condition. To what extent the repentance of the Ninevites was genuine in its character, and how long the reformation of manners here specified lasted, we are not informed; but there is reason to fear it was of short continuance, for after their city had been besieged for three years by Arbaces the Mede, it was taken and destroyed. Dioid. Sic. ii. 26, etc. Thus fell the ancient Assyrian dynasty, and gave place to that of the Medes, which continued till the time of Cyaxares, when Nineveh, which had been rebuilt, was again destroyed, and finally ceased to be an imperial residence. See Preface to the Book of Nahum.

CHAPTER IV.

THE selfish and repining spirit of the prophet, and the means employed by Jehovah to reprove and instruct him, are here set forth.

- 1 BUT Jonah was exceedingly displeased and vexed. And he
- 2 prayed to Jehovah, and said: Ah! now, Jehovah! was not this my word while I was yet in my own country? Wherefore I anticipated it by fleeing to Tarshish; for I knew that thou art a gracious and merciful God, long-suffering, and of great kindness,
- 3 and repentant of the evil. And now, O Jehovah! take, I pray thee, my life from me; for my death were better than my life.
- 4 And Jehovah said to him: Art thou much vexed?

1. Unwarrantable attempts have been made to soften down the character of Jonah, as exhibited in this chapter. The utmost that can be advanced in extenuation of his conduct, is, the strong tincture of national prejudice with which his spirit appears to have been imbued. Com. Luke ix. 54. הַרְגֵנוּ, however seems to be here used, not in the sense of being enraged or angry, but in that of being the subject of grief or sorrow. Comp. 1 Sam. xv. 11; 2 Sam. vi. 8. Grief and anger are passions nearly related; and in illustration of this application of הַרְגֵנוּ, to burn, the following instances may be adduced:

Τῆς σκανδαλίζεται, καὶ οὐκ ἐγὼ πυροῦμαι; 2 Cor. xi. 29.

Ἄλλ' ὦ Καλονίκη κἀόμαι τὴν καρδίαν, Καὶ πολλ' ὑπὲρ ἡμῶν τῶν γυναικῶν ἄχθομαι. Aristoph. Lysist. v. 9.

“Eheu disperii! voltus neutiquam hujus placet.

Tristis incedit, pectus ardet.”

Plaut. Mercat. Act iii. Sc. 4, v. 14.

“Tum vero exarsit Juveni dolor ossibus ingens.” Æneid. v. 172.

And the declaration of Cicero: “Non angor, sed ardeo dolore.”—Epist. ad Attic. vi. 9.

2. הַרְגֵנוּ, my word, i. e. what I spake within myself, my cogitation. הַרְגֵנוּ is here taken in the sense of doing anything in order to anticipate another. Jonah acknowledges that he used all despatch in his attempt to leave Palestine. The description of the Divine goodness here given agrees verbally with that exhibited Joel ii. 13. He recollected the numerous instances in which, instead of executing his threatenings, Jehovah had, in the exercise of his patience, borne with the guilty, and even interposed with illustrious acts of pardon; and he was afraid of compromising his character by announcing what he had reason to expect might never take place.

4 הֲיֵשֶׁב הַיָּהוָה בְּעָרֶיךָ, most modern versions improperly render, “dost thou well,” or, “is it right in thee to be angry?” their authors not adverting to the fact that the Hiph. Infinitive of יָשַׁב is often used adverbially in the acception, greatly, exceedingly, thoroughly, or the like. See Deut. ix. 21, xiii. 15; 2 Kings xi. 18. In like manner the finite form יָשַׁבְתָּ הַיָּהוָה, Jer. i. 12. Thus the LXX. εἰ σφόδρα λελύπησαι σύ; the Syr. لَبَّ سَفِيْهًا

لَبَّ; and the Targ. הֲיֵשֶׁב הַיָּהוָה בְּעָרֶיךָ. Kimchi explains, הֲיֵשֶׁב הַיָּהוָה בְּעָרֶיךָ, Art thou much grieved? and adds, הֲיֵשֶׁב

5 And Jonah went out of the city, and sat to the east of the city, and there made a booth for himself, and sat under it in the shade, till he should see what would happen in the city. And Jehovah God had appointed a ricinus plant, and he caused it to rise up over Jonah, to be a shade over his head, to deliver him from his affliction: and Jonah rejoiced exceedingly on account of the ricinus.

7 But God appointed a worm, at the rising of the dawn, on the morrow, and it injured the ricinus, so that it withered. And it came to pass at the sun-rise, that God appointed a sultry east wind, and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, and he fainted, and requested that he might die; for he said, My death were bet-

יָצֵאתִי מִן־הַעִיר, As for הִשָּׁב, it imports the strengthening of a subject. The renderings, Will grieving do thee any good? and, Does beneficence offend thee? are totally to be rejected.

5. We cannot determine on what day Jonah abandoned his labors among the Ninevites; but it is evident from the conclusion of this verse, that it must have been before the lapse of the forty days specified in his announcements.

6. יָצֵאתִי I take to be the apocoped Future of Hiphil, having יָצֵאתִי for its nominative. קִיקִי, the kikaion or ricinus plant (Ricinus communis, Linn.), commonly known by the name of Palma Christi. The word is the same as the Egyptian KIKI, and the Talmudic Kik, with the Hebrew termination. In Arabic it is called الخروع, El-Kheroa, which is not to be confounded with القرع,

El-Karra, the cucurbita, LXX. Κολοκύνθη. Our English rendering gourd is equally inappropriate. This plant is indigenous in India, Palestine, Arabia, Africa, and the east of Europe, and on account of its singular beauty is cultivated in gardens. It is a biannual, and usually grows to the height of from eight to ten feet. It is chiefly remarkable on account of its leaves, which are broad, palmate, and serrated, and divided into six or seven lobes. Only one leaf grows on a branch, but being large, sometimes measuring more than a foot, and spread out in the shape of an open hand with the fingers extended, their collective shade affords an excellent shelter from the heat of the sun. It is of exceedingly quick growth, and has been known in America to reach the height even of thirteen feet in less than three months. When injured it fades with great rapidity. See on ver. 10, Celsii Hierobot. pt. ii. p. 273; Michaelis, Supplem. No. 2263; Rosenmüller, in the Biblical Cabinet, vol. xxvii. p. 125; Michaelis, Bibel Ubersetz., note on the passage, where there is a plate with an excellent representation of a ricinus. How much such a shrub, throwing its palmy branches over the small hut which the prophet had erected, must have contributed to his relief in the sultry environs of Ninevah, may easily be imagined. His joy is emphatically described in the last clause of the verse.

8. The קָדִיִּים, or east wind, is the sultry and oppressive wind which blows in the summer months across the vast Arabian desert, and produces universal languor and relaxation. It resembles the Sirocco, only is free from its dampness, and consequently more destructive to vegetation. Superadded, as in the present instance, to the heat of the morning sun, it is exceedingly oppressive. According to the versions, תָּרִישׁ signifies withering; otherwise, as derived from רָשׁ, it signifies to be quiet, silent, etc., which better agrees with the idea of sultriness.

9 ter than my life. And God said unto Jonah: Art thou much 10 vexed on account of the ricinus? And he said: I am much vexed, even to death. And Jehovah said: Thou art affected on account of the ricinus, with which thou hadst no trouble, and which thou didst not rear, which came in a night, and perished 11 in a night; and I, should not I be affected on account of Nineveh, that great city, in which are more than twelve times ten thousand human beings who cannot distinguish between their right hand and their left, and much cattle!

9. The words הֵיטִיב הַרְחֵקֵי עַד־מָוֶת, the LXX. translate, σφόδρα λελύπημαι ἐγὼ ἕως θανάτου, which nearly agree with those of our Lord, Mark xiv. 34.

10. הָרַס, properly signifies to be affected by the sight of anything; hence to feel concern on account of it, to take pity or compassion. I have employed the passive form of our verb to affect, in order to present in the translation a word equivalent to that which is here used in the original. There seems to necessity for taking the Hebrew verb in two acceptations. The formula, שָׁבַר־בְּלַיְלָה אֶבְרַת־בְּרֵךְ־לַיְלָה אֶבְרַת־בְּרֵךְ־לַיְלָה, lit. which was the son of a night, and perished the son of a night, is obviously intended to express the extraordinary rapidity with which the ricinus put forth its leaves and afterwards withered. That the tree itself was instantaneously produced, cannot be proved from this mode of speech, any more than from the use of the verb מָצְאָה, ver. 6; otherwise we should be obliged, for the sake of consistency, to maintain, that the whole tree was miraculously destroyed, and had entirely disappeared during the night. הָרַס and אֶבְרַת are strictly antithetical. But, as all that was required in the one case, was that the broad spreading leaves should wither, so as no longer to afford protection to Jonah, though the trunk remained; so all that was necessary in the other was to give to the tree which had been previously produced, such an extraordinary accelerated power of germination, that the leaves which would otherwise have required some longer time to come to maturity, were brought to perfection in the course of a night. בֶּן, a son, is used idiomatically to express what is produced, or exists, during the time predicated of it. Thus it is resolved in the Targ. בְּלַיְלָה אֶבְרַת־בְּרֵךְ־לַיְלָה אֶבְרַת־בְּרֵךְ־לַיְלָה, which this night was, and in another night perished.

11. The peculiar force of the appeal lies in the immense number of rational creatures which must have perished had Nineveh been destroyed. Estimating the age of the children at about three years, and assuming them to have formed a fifth part of the population, which is the allowance generally made, we shall have six hundred thousand as the number of inhabitants. In order to enhance this number, and render it more affecting, that of the irresponsible children is estimated; and if this did not produce a suitable impression upon the mind of the prophet, the number even of irrational animals is adverted to, the latter being far superior in point of mechanism and utility to the shrub for which he was so much concerned.

There is something in the abrupt manner in which the book closes which is highly calculated to produce its effect on the mind of a reflecting reader.

M I C A H .

---

PREFACE.

ACCORDING to the introductory statement, chap. i. 1, Micah was a native of Moresheth, which some take to be the same as Mareshah, ver. 15; but it is rather the town called Moresheth-Gath, ver. 14, which, according to Jerome, lay in the vicinity of the city of Eleutheropolis, to the west of Jerusalem, and not far from the border of the country of the Philistines.

His name, מִיכָה, Micah, or, as it is given in full in the Chethib, Jer. xxvi. 18, מִיכַיָּה, Micaiah, signifies, who is like Jehovah?

The time at which he flourished is stated in the introduction to have been that of the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; i. e. somewhere between B. C. 757 and B. C. 699; in addition to which statement, we have a positive testimony to his having prophesied in the days of Hezekiah, Jer. xxvi. 18, where chap. iii. 12 is verbally quoted. He must, therefore, have been a contemporary of Isaiah and Hosea, and is not to be confounded with Micaiah the son of Imlah, 1 Kings xxii. 8, who flourished upwards of a hundred years before the reign of Jotham.

Hartmann and Eichhorn would refer the period of his ministry to the region of Manasseh; but their hypothesis is justly rejected by Jahn, Rosenmüller, De Wette, and Knobel, on the ground, that all the circumstances brought to view in his prophecies, perfectly harmonize with the state of things in the days of the kings whose names are here specified. The unrestrained license given to idolatry in the reign of Ahaz, will sufficiently account for the numerous gross and crying evils for which Micah reproves the Jews, without our having recourse to the atrocities perpetrated in that of Manasseh. It is true, Hezekiah issued orders, that idolatry should be put down, and the worship of the true God re-established; but there is no reason to believe that the reformation was carried out to the full extent of his wishes. The relations also of the Hebrews to the powerful empires of Assyria and Egypt, are in exact accordance with the history of the same times.

The prophecies of Micah are directed partly against Judah, and partly against Israel; but by far the greater number are of the former description. He predicts the destruction of the kingdom of Israel, and of Samaria its capital; the desolation of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, and the consequent captivity of the Jews; the restoration of the Jewish state; the successes of the Maccabees; and the advent and reign of the Messiah. He also administers reproof to different ranks and conditions of men, and furnishes some striking representations of the Divine character.

His style is concise, yet perspicuous, nervous, vehement, and energetic; and in many instances, equals that of Isaiah in boldness and sublimity. He is rich and beautiful in the varied use of tropical language; indulges in paronomasias; preserves a pure and classical diction; is regular in the formation of his parallelisms; and exhibits a roundness in the construction of his periods which is not surpassed by his more celebrated contemporary. Both in administering threatenings and communicating promises, he evinces great tenderness, and shows that his mind was deeply affected by the subjects of which he treats. In his appeals he is lofty and energetic. His description of the character of Jehovah, chap. vii. 18—20, is unrivalled by any contained elsewhere in Scripture.

Several prophecies in Micah and Isaiah are remarkably parallel with each other; and there is frequently an identity of expression, which can only be fairly accounted for on the ground of their having been contemporaneous writers, who were not strangers to each other's prophecies, and their having, in a great measure, had the same subjects for the themes of their ministry. See on Isaiah ii. 2-4.

The book may be divided into two parts; the first consisting of chapters i.—v.; and the second, the two remaining chapters, which are more general and didactic in their character.

CHAPTER I.

THE prophet commences by summoning universal attention, while, in sublime language, he describes the descent of Jehovah to punish the nation, 1-5; he predicts the destruction of Samaria by the Assyrians, which he pathetically laments, 6-8; and then the advance of Sennacherib against Jerusalem, 9-12; concluding with an enumeration of certain towns of Judah, the inhabitants of which had more especially enjoyed his ministry, but were to share in the desolating effects of the Assyrian invasion, and ultimately, with the whole land, those of the Babylonian captivity.

- 1 THE word of Jehovah which was communicated to Micah the Morashthite, in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.
- 2 Hear, all ye people!
Attend, O Earth! and its fulness!
And let the Lord Jehovah testify to you,
The Lord from his holy temple.
- 3 For, behold! Jehovah is coming forth from his place;

1. מִיְהוָה שָׁמַע, contracted מִיְהוָה, a gentilic, and not a patronymic, as some have imagined. See the introduction, and on ver. 14.

2. It is not a little remarkable, that Micah should adopt as the first sentence of his prophecy, that with which his namesake concluded his denouncement against Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 28. Hengstenberg is of opinion that he quoted the words designedly, in order to show that his prophetic agency was to be considered as a continuation of that of his predecessor, who was so zealous for God, and that he had more in common with him than the bare name. The words עַמִּים, peoples, and אֶרֶץ, earth, are by many, and recently by Hitzig, confined to the tribes and land of the Hebrews; but the sublimity of the style, and the parallel passages, Deut. xxxii. 28, xxxii. 1; and Is. i. 2, induce to the conclusion, that the prophet had all the inhabitants of the globe in his eye. Thus Justi, Maurer, and Ewald. עֲלֵיהֶם, all of them, is an instance of irregular construction, in which the third person is put for the second, עֲלֵיכֶם, all of you. The same construction is repeated in מִלְּמַנְתָּ, which the LXX. render according to the sense, καὶ πάντες οἱ ἐν αὐτῇ. Comp. Amos vi. 8; Is. xlii. 10. Instead of הַיְהוָה, four of Kennicott's MSS. read הַיְהוָה; and, instead of יְהוָה repeated, upwards of fifty of his and De Rossi's read הַיְהוָה; but as the former cannot be altered on the slight authority by which it is supported, so it would be unwarrantable to adopt the latter reading, since the second יְהוָה is manifestly a repetition of the first. LXX. Κύριος κύριος. Syr. ܥܘܢܐ ܥܘܢܐ, the Lord of lords.

It has been doubted whether by הַיְהוָה, his holy temple, in this place, the temple at Jerusalem or heaven be meant; but the language expressive of descent, which is employed in the following verse, would seem to determine the correctness of the latter interpretation. Comp. 1 Kings viii. 30; Ps. xi. 4. Jehovah would bear testimony against the Hebrews, not any longer by his prophets, as he now did, but by the judgments which he would inflict upon them.

3, 4. These verses are explanatory of

- He will descend, and tread upon the heights of the earth.
- 4 The mountains shall be molten under him,
 And the valleys shall cleave asunder,
 Like wax before the fire,
 Like water poured down a precipice.
- 5 By the transgression of Jacob is all this,
 And by the sin of the house of Israel.
 What is the transgression of Jacob?
 Is it not Samaria?
 And what are the high places of Judah?
 Are they not Jerusalem?
- 6 Therefore I will make Samaria a heap in the field, that which precedes them, and set forth, in highly figurative language, the course of the Divine judgment, and the tremendous consequences that would follow. The terrible majesty and resistless power of Jehovah are expressed in images chiefly borrowed from earthquakes and volcanic eruptions. Comp. Amos iv. 13; Ps. l. 3, xcvi. 5; Is. lxiii. 19, lxiv. 2; Hab. iii. 5. For a striking image of the same nature, see Jer. l. 25, 26, which cannot properly be explained, except on the principle of reference to a volcano. That of wax occurs Ps. lxxviii. 3, xcvi. 5. Comp.

“Quasi igni

Cera super calido tabescens multa liquescat.” Lucr. vi. 512.

Some MSS. read הַגְּבֻעִים, the hills, instead of הַעֲמֻקִּים, the valleys; but obviously as an emendation: the latter being the more difficult reading. מִיֵּרֶד, a descent or precipice, from יָרַד, to go, or come down. The events referred to were the destruction of the kingdom of Israel by Shalmaneser, and the invasion of Judah by the armies of Sennacherib and Nebuchadnezzar, by the latter of whom the Jews were carried away captive. The form הַנֶּחֱסֵה marks the futurity of the event, and transmits a future significance to the following verbs.

5. Jacob and Israel are applied to both kingdoms in common, and are merely used as synonymes for the sake of variety. After explicitly declaring, that the awful punishment which was about to be inflicted was on account of the sins of the people generally, the prophet, by the forcible employment of double interrogatives, the latter of which, being in the negative, greatly strengthens the appeal, traces these sins to their respective sources—metropolitan corruption. By metonymy the effect is put for the cause. For מִי used as a neuter, see on Jonah i. 8. For הַמְּטֹאֵה the LXX., Targ., a considerable number of MSS., and four of the earliest printed editions, have the singular. The Syr. and Vulg. agree with the Textus Receptus. בְּמִנְוֹת יְהוּדָה, the high places of Judah, were the elevated spots on mountains and hills on which the Jews erected chapels and altars for unlawful, and very often for idolatrous sacrifice, etc. 1 Kings xii. 3, xiv. 4; Ezek. vi. 6. That these existed at Jerusalem, see Jer. xxxii. 35; and for the length to which the practice was carried in the time of Ahaz, see 2 Kings xvi. 4. Instead of בְּמִנְוֹת, the LXX., Syr., and Targ. translate, as if הַמְּטֹאֵה, sin, were the true reading: What is the sin of Judah? but though the latter word is found in one of Kennicott's MSS., and in the margin of another, it most probably originated in a desire to render the parallelism complete, and cannot be allowed to encroach upon the present text.

6. Both in this and the preceding verse Samaria is taken up first, because its destruction was to precede that of Jerusalem, and also, perhaps, to afford the prophet an opportunity of afterwards

The plantations of a vineyard :

I will hurl her stones into the valley,

And lay bare her foundations.

7 All her images shall be broken to pieces,

All her rewards shall be burnt with fire,

And all her idols will I lay waste ;

For with the reward of a harlot she collected them,

And to the reward of a harlot they shall return.

expatiating more at large on the state of things in Judah during the approaching invasion. So complete should be the overthrow of the northern capital, that its site would resemble a heap of stones or rubbish that had been gathered out of a field ; it would even be reduced to what we may suppose it originally to have been, a place for the cultivation of the vine. Vineyards were most commonly planted on the south sides of hills or mountains, on account of their exposure to the sun ; and in all probability that of Samaria had been appropriated to this purpose before it was purchased by Omri, 1 Kings xvi. 24. The stones of the city are graphically said to be hurled down into the deep valley below ; and that such was actually the case, the present phenomena of the ruins strongly attest. "The whole face of this part of the hill suggests the idea that the buildings of the ancient city had been thrown down from the brow of the hill. Ascending to the top, we went round the whole summit, and found marks of the same process everywhere." — Narrative of the Scottish Mission of Inquiry, pp. 293, 294. מִבְּרֵיתֵי וּמִבְּרֵיתֵי, ver. 4, are from the root בָּרַג, to flow, pour, or hurl down. For יִסְדֵי הַבָּיִת, comp. Ezek. xiii. 14. The very foundations of the edifices were to be laid bare, great and ponderous as the stones might be.

7. The prophet now delivers a special prediction against the objects and accompaniments of the idolatrous worship, which drew down the judgment of God upon the devoted city. The פְּסֵלֵי were the images or idols, whether carved, graven or molten, which were erected in the temples, for the purpose of receiving religious adoration. LXX. τὰ γλυπτά. מִבְּרֵיתֵי, properly means the wages or reward of prostitution ; from בָּרַג, to give a present or reward. The word is here, as elsewhere, employed in application to idolatry, viewed as spiritual adultery or fornication. Comp. Is. xxiii. 17, 18 ; Ezek. xvi. 31, 34 ; Hos. ix. 1. Kimchi, Abarbanel, Michaelis, Maurer, and others, are of opinion that the riches, etc., of Samaria are thus spoken of, because her idolatrous inhabitants imagined, that they were rewards bestowed upon them by their gods for their zeal and devotedness to their service. It is more likely, however, that the rich gifts or presents are meant, which the apostate Israelites dedicated to their idols, and with which they adorned their temples. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 33, 34. Newcome seems to incline to the idea, that the rewards of harlotry, literally taken, are intended, because these were appropriated to the support of idolatry. מִבְּרֵיתֵי is synonymous with פְּסֵלֵי ; only Hitzig thinks, that a more costly kind of idols is meant by the term, such as were made of silver, and were of sufficient value to be carried away as spoil. The entire establishment of idolatry was to be broken up ; the idols were to be cut in pieces ; such as were of wood, to be burnt in the fire ; and whatever was costly was to be removed by the enemy to Assyria, there to be again devoted to idols. Instead of מִבְּרֵיתֵי, three of De Rossi's MSS., three more originally, and perhaps one more, the Brixian and another ancient edition, without place or date, read מִבְּרֵיתֵי in Pual, which two of Kennicott's exhibit with Vau Shurek instead of the Kibbutz. The Syr., Targ., and Vulg., likewise have the passive, but

- 8 Therefore will I wail and howl ;
 I will go stripped and naked ;
 I will set up a wailing like the wolves,
 And a mourning like the ostriches.
- 9 For her wounds are desperate ;
 Surely it hath come to Judah ;
 He reacheth to the gate of my people,
 Even to Jerusalem.
- 10 Tell it not in Gath ;

in the plural. The LXX. render, στυγή-γαγε; which agrees with the common punctuation.

8. So terrible should be the destruction with which the northern kingdom would be visited, that it called for the most marked tones and signs of sorrow. In these the prophet declares he would indulge, that he might thereby affect the minds of his countrymen. אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה, with Yod, may have been occasioned by the preceding form אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה; but there are other verbs which do not reject it in the future, as יִרְכַּךְ, Ps. lxxii. 14. לֵי-שִׁי, or, as the Keri has it, לֵי-שִׁי, some interpret of mental bereavement, a state in which the mind is despoiled of its reasoning powers; but, combined as it here is with עָרִי-בָרָה, naked, it must be referred to the body, and was in all probability designed to describe the feet as stripped of shoes. Thus the LXX. ἀνυπόδητος. The Syr.

ܐܘܪܝܢܐ, for which compare הַתָּה, Is. xx.

2. For אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה, wolves, and בְּנֵי-יַעֲנָה, ostriches, see on Is. xiii. 22, and Pococke's very elaborate note on the present verse.

The Arab. has here, مثل التنانين, like the wolves, and مثل بنات اوري, like the jackals. The former Michaelis renders crocodiles, but less properly, on account of the combination. The ancient rendering, dragons, is altogether to be rejected. Both kinds are selected on account of the piteously howling noise which they make, especially in the night.

9. אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה, the Pahul Participle of אָדָה, to be desperately sick; spoken of a wound, to be incurable. There is no necessity, with Michaelis, to have recourse to עָרִי, and so to regard the form as the elongated future of the first person singular. The following noun, בְּנֵי-יַעֲנָה, being in the plural, the same number might be expected in the Participle; but it is a rule of Hebrew syntax, that when, as in this instance the predicate precedes the noun, the number of feminine plurals is frequently neglected. Comp. Jer. iv. 14. What the prophet has in view is the irretrievable ruin in which the Israelites as a nation would be involved. But he not only beholds, in prophetic vision, the devastation of Samaria and its dependencies by the Assyrians; he sees their invasion of Judah under Sennacherib, and their investment of Jerusalem. Com. Is. x. 28-32. The nominative to אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה is the calamity implied in בְּנֵי-יַעֲנָה: that to בְּנֵי-יָדָה is אֵי-יָדָה, the enemy, understood. There is the utmost propriety in the distinctive use of the genders in this place; for though the inhabitants of Judah suffered from the Assyrian invasion, the calamity did not reach those of the capital: it was merely invested by the troops of Rabshakeh, and was relieved by their miraculous destruction. See Is. xxxvi. xxxvii.

10. Comp. 2 Sam. i. 20, where the words אֵי-לֵי-יָדָה occur, though not in the same order of arrangement. The Philistines would hail with joy tidings of any disaster that might befall the Hebrews, and especially that occasioned by the Assyrian attack. Deeply, therefore, as the Jews might be afflicted, they are cautioned by Micah not to give such public expression to their grief as would reach the ears of their natural

Weep not in Acco :

At Beth-apphrah roll thyself in the dust.

11 Pass on, thou inhabitant of Shaphir, naked and ashamed ;

enemies, but to repair to Beth-Aphrah, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, and there deplore in secret the calamity which had overtaken the land. Reland, Harenberg, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, take בְּבִי to be a contraction of בְּבִיבִי, which Gesenius (Lex. sub. voc. בְּבִי) is inclined to adopt. According to this construction, the rendering will be, weep not in Acco, i. e. Ptolemais, a maritime city in the tribe of Asher. Other instances of v being dropped, we have in בְּרִי for בְּרִיעִי, בְּבִי for בְּבִיעִי, etc.; and certainly the parallelism with בְּבִי, the continued list of the names of cities, and the regularity of the paronomasias בְּבִיבִי—בְּבִיבִי—בְּבִיבִי—בְּבִיבִי, are all in favor of this interpretation. Though Acco was allotted to the Asherites, they never took possession of it, Jud. i. 31, and its inhabitants are, therefore, appositely classed along with those of Gath, as taking pleasure in the reverses of the Israelites. The reading of the LXX. of Ἐνοκέλι μῆ, is in all probability a corruption of οἱ ἐν Ἀκκί μῆ, which quite accords with the preceding οἱ ἐν Γάθ μῆ. The Arabic has والذين في اكيم, And those who are in Akim. The name Ἀκκη occurs in Strabo, xvi. 2, 25. The town is still called عكا, Akka, by the Arabs, and is known to Europeans by the name of Sz. Jean d' Acre, which it obtained in the time of the crusades, and is celebrated in later times by its holding out a siege of sixty-one days by the French army, and its destruction by the explosion of a magazine during the bombardment in 1840. It is situated on the north angle of a bay of the same name near the foot of Mount Carmel. בְּיִתּוֹ לְעֶפְרָה, lit. the House of Aphrah, or simply עֶפְרָה, Ophrah, Josh. xviii. 23 ; 1 Sam. xiii. 17, a city in the tribe of Benjamin. The ל is here merely the sign of the genitive. The verb עָלַץ which occurs only in Hithpael, signifies to wallow or roll, as in dust, ashes, or the like. See Jer. vi. 26, xxv. 34 ; Ezek. xxvii. 30. While the Hebrews were not to expose the wretchedness of their condition to the contempt of foreigners, it became them to bewail it within their own borders. הִתְעַלְצָה, roll thyself, is to be preferred to הִתְעַלְצָה, I roll myself. It is the reading of the Kerī, and many MSS. have it in the text. The Syr., Targ., and Vulg., have the third person plural, which is more easily traceable to הִתְעַלְצָה than to הִתְעַלְצָה. Besides, it seems more natural to connect this verb with עָבְדָה in the following verse, than to suppose that the prophet resumes his lamentation ver. 8. Some take the verb to be the second feminine of the preterite, with the Yod paragogic ; but every difficulty is removed by adopting the imperative.

11. In עָבְדָה לְבָבִי, the second singular feminine of the verb is followed by the second plural masculine of the pronoun, on the principle that though the collective participial noun יְיִשְׁרָאֵל is feminine, it was designed to include the inhabitants of both sexes. עָבְדָה is not redundant, as Justi asserts, but emphatic, as the Dativus incommodi. שַׁפְּיִר, Shaphir, means fair or beautiful. Dr. Robinson states that there are still three villages of the name of Sawáfir, which are noted on the map as lying nearly halfway between Ashdod and Eleutheropolis, a position not much differing from that assigned by Eusebius and Jerome to Saphir. Palestine, vol. ii. p. 370. Hitzig and Ewald think that שַׁפְּיִר, Shamir, is meant, which is enumerated among the cities of Judah, Josh. xv. 48, which Eusebius calls Σαφείρ. The Chald. of the Targ. עֲבַרְוּ לְבוֹן הַיְתִיבִין. עֲבַרְוּ is very improperly rendered in the Latin, "Transite vobis qui habitatis in pulchritudine," though the LXX. had translated the word by καλῶς. The Syr. has حَمْدُهُ ذِي شَافِيرٍ, inhabitantess of Shaphir. To Samaria there seems no good reason to refer it, since all the other

The inhabitant of Zaanan goeth not forth ;

The wailing of Beth-ezel will take away continuance from you.

12 Surely the inhabitant of Maroth pineth for her goods.

Because evil hath come down from Jehovah,

To the gate of Jerusalem.

13 Bind the chariot to the swift steed, O inhabitant of Lachish !

places specified in the connection were in Judah. עֲרֵה-בִּשְׁמַרְתָּ, lit. nakedness, shame, for shamefully naked, i. e. entirely so. Comp. as to form, עֲרֵה-בִּשְׁמַרְתָּ, Ps. xlv. 5. What is here predicted is, that the inhabitants of Shaphir were to be led away as captives by the Assyrians ; only for the sake of effect the Imperative is used. See on Is. vi. 10. For the naked condition in which captives were removed, see on Is. xx. 4. זַאנָן, Zaanan, in all probability the same as זֵנָן, Zenan, a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 37. It properly signifies the place of flocks ; but to form a paronomasia with it, the prophet employs the verb יָצַא ; or the peculiar orthography of the noun may have been adopted in order to make it correspond in appearance and sound with the verb. Comp. זַאנָן, and זֵנָן, which are only different modes of expressing sheep or flocks. The inhabitants of this city, under the influence of fear, did not venture forth from their retirement to condole with their neighbors who had been taken prisoners by the enemy, or they did not come forth to their rescue. LXX. Σεναὰρ. Aq. Σεβαδ. בֵּית הָאֵזֶל, Beth-ezel, in all probability the same as אֵזֶל, Azel, Zech. xiv. 5, but where the town so called was situated, we are not informed. To judge from the connection, it must have been in the vicinity of Shaphir and Zaanan, and not near Samaria, as Ephraim Syrus conjectured. The words מִסְפַּד בֵּית הָאֵזֶל יָקָם מִבַּיִת, have greatly perplexed interpreters. Some regard מִסְפַּד as the Aramaic Infinitive, and connect it with the preceding יָקָם ; and, supposing אֹיֵב, the enemy, understood, to be the nominative to יָקָם, explain עֲמַדָּה of a military post. But this construction affords no tolerable sense. Others render עֲמַדָּה, measure, conjecture, and the like, contrary to all usage. For other interpretations, see Pococke, in loc. It seems best to abide by the idea suggested by the root עָמַד, to remain, continue, endure, and interpret, As for the wailing of Beth-ezel, it taketh away its continuance from you ; i. e. the inhabitants of that city cease to mourn on your account. The Shaphirites are addressed, as having gone at once into captivity and oblivion. Most likely their city was larger and more populous, and on this account was attacked by the Assyrians, while the smaller towns in the neighborhood escaped. Gesenius thinks that in אֵזֶל there is an allusion to the Arabic etymology اصيل, firmly, or deeply rooted in the earth, as what was so might be expected to continue ; but this is very doubtful.

12. Of מַרְוֹת, Maroth, (bitternesses) we have nowhere any account. מַרְוֹת, Maarath, Josh. xv. 50, to which Newcome refers, appears to have been a different place. From the relation in which it is here put to Jerusalem, it probably lay between the aforementioned towns and the capital, against which a great army under Rabshakeh proceeded from Lachish, and doubtless plundered all that came in their way. מַרְוֹת הָיָה לְשׂוֹב, Newcome, after Houbigant, changes into לְמַוֵּת, and renders, is sick unto death ; but altogether without authority. The meaning is, that the inhabitants were pained or grieved on account of the property of which they had been robbed by the enemy. Thus Rosenmüller, Gesenius, De Wette, and Hesselberg. The former מַ is not causative, but is used, as frequently at the beginning of a verse, to express certainty. For the last clause, compare ver. 9.

13. For Lachish, see on Is. xxxvi. 2. שָׂרֵב וְשָׂרֵב, form a paronomasia, שָׂרֵב, שָׂרֵב,

(She was the beginning of sin to the daughter of Zion)
Surely in thee were found the transgressions of Israel.

14 Therefore thou shalt give a divorce to Moresheth-Gath ;

The houses of Achzib shall prove false to the kings of Israel.

15 Farther, I will bring the possessor to thee, O inhabitant of Mareshah !

He shall come to Adullam, the glory of Israel.

signifies a fleet courser. Arab. كض, cucurrit. רחם is in the masculine, though connecting with ירשבה in the feminine, because placed first in the order of the words. The word occurs only here, but obviously has the signification of the Arab.

רמ, ligavit. As a noun רחם signifies broom, because this shrub was used for binding. In the middle clause of the verse there is a change of person from the second to the third, but in the last clause the second is resumed. For a similar instance, in which, for the sake of graphic effect the third person is thus abruptly introduced, see Is. xxii. 16. Lachish appears to have formed the link of idolatry between Israel and Judah. Lying on the frontier of the former kingdom, she was the first city in Judah that was led away by the sin of Jeroboam, and from her the infection spread, till at length it reached Jerusalem itself. In the prospect of a sudden attack, it behooved the inhabitants to use all despatch in removing their families, and what property they could take with them, to a distance. Lachish was besieged by Sennacherib before the threatened attack on Jerusalem, 2 Kings xviii. 14.

14. רחם is used of the presents or dowry sent with a wife, 1 Kings ix. 16, and of letters of divorce sent with her when she is dismissed by her husband. In the acceptation ἐξαποστέλλομένους, messengers, as given by the LXX., it nowhere occurs. The term appears to be here employed metaphorically to denote the breaking up, or dissolution of all connection between Lachish and Moresheth-Gath ; the former city having been taken by the Assyrians, was no longer able to afford protection or support to the latter. The nominative to ירשבה, is ירשבה in the preceding verse. רחם is equivalent, in this connection, to רחם, מורשת, Moresheth, the birth-place of Micah, (see Preface) is here said to belong to Gath, most probably because it was in its vicinity, and under its jurisdiction, when in possession of the Philistines. רחם, Achzib. There were two cities of this name, one on the sea-coast, between Acco and Tyre, now called by the Arabs الزيب, Ez-Zib. Josh. xix. 29 ; Jud. i.

31 ; and the other in the tribe of Judah, between Keilah and Mareshah, Josh. xv. 44. That the latter is here intended, is evident from the connection ; for though, at first view, the mention of the kings of Israel might lead us to suppose that a city bordering on the northern kingdom is meant, yet the fact that Israel is sometimes put for the whole people of the Hebrews, and sometimes even for the kingdom of Judah, as 2 Chron. xxviii. 19, proves, that the mere use of the term can form no objection to this construction of the passage. It was most probably the same place that is called רחם, Chezib, Gen. xxxviii. 5. By an elegant paronomasia, רחם, the houses of Achzib, are said to become רחם, deceitful. Comp. גחל אש, a deceitful torrent, i. e. one which, having dried up, disappoints the hope of the traveller. Job vi. 17-19 ; Jer. xv. 18. Arab. كذب, sefellit, irritus vanusque fecit. The expectations of further aid from the families, or inhabitants of that place, should prove fruitless.

15. רחם is a defective reading of רחם, which many MSS. have in the text. In 16 Make bald thy head, and shave it because of thy dying children ;

 Enlarge thy baldness like that of the eagle ;
 For they are gone into captivity from thee.

יִרְשָׁה and מְרֻשָּׁה is another paronomasia. Mareshah lay in the plains of Judah, Josh. xv. 44. It was fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 8, and was famous for the victory obtained over the Ethiopians by Asa, 2 Chron. xiv. 9, 10. According to Josephus, Antiq. xii. 8, 6, it had been in the power of the Idumeans, but was retaken by Alexander the son of Aristobulus, Antiq. xiii. 15, 4, xiv. 1, 4. The possessor or occupier here predicted is Sennacherib, who took Mareshah and the other fortified cities of Judah, 2 Kings xviii. 14. To point him out with greater emphasis the article is used: הַיִּרְשָׁה, "The possessor." אָדוּלָם, Adullam, was another city of Judah in the same direction, and near the former, Josh. xv. 35. It was a royal residence in the time of the Canaanites, Josh. xii. 15 ; was fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xi. 7 ; and had villages dependent upon it, Neh. xi. 30. Of כְּבוֹד various interpretations have been given ; such as the wealth or riches of Israel, their multitude, their nobility, their weight of calamity, etc. Some take the words to be in the nominative, some in the accusative, and some in the vocative case. The most natural construction is that of our common version, according to which they are in apposition with אָדוּלָם, Adullam, and express the superior situation of the place and its neighborhood. Thus also Schmidius, Rosenmüller, and Hesselberg.

16. The prophet concludes this geographical part of his denunciations by addressing himself to the land of Judah, and calling upon her to put on signs of deep-felt grief on account of the removal of her inhabitants. אֶרֶץ צִיּוֹן, land, is to be supplied, rather than בַּת צִיּוֹן, daughter of Zion. Baldness, and cutting off the beard, are tokens of mourning in the East, as they were among the nations of antiquity. Ezra ix. 3 ; Job i. 20 ; Jer. vii. 21, xvi. 6, xlviii. 37. "Regulos quosdam barbam posuisse et uxorem capita rasisse, ad iudicium maximi luctus." Suetonius, in his Life of Caligula, chap. v. "When Khaled ben Walid ben Mogaïrah died, there was not a female of the house of Mogaïrah, either matron or maiden, who caused not her hair to be cut off at his funeral." Harmer's Observ. iii. p. 5. One species of eagle is called the bald eagle, from the circumstance of its having its head almost entirely bald ; but they all more or less exhibit baldness during the moulting season. הֵנִיחַ, delights, from עָנַג, Arab. عَنَج, amatorius, femina gestus, to delight, be delighted, live delicately. It is in the former of these acceptations that the noun is here used.

As but few of the inhabitants of Judah could have been carried away by Sennacherib, it is obvious the prophet must have a much more desolating calamity in view in this verse, viz., the Babylonish captivity.

CHAPTER II.

HAVING announced the punishments which were to be inflicted upon his people for the evils in which they indulged, Micah now proceeds to specify some of these evils, 1, 2 ; and renews his denunciations, 3-5. He then censures those who could not endure to hear the truth, but wished for predictions of good, and shows that no such predictions could reasonably be expected by them, 6-11; concluding, however, with gracious promises of restoration after the captivity, 12, 13.

- 1 Wo to those who devise wickedness,
And fabricate evil upon their beds;
In the morning light they effect it,
Because it is in the power of their hand.
- 2 They covet fields, and take them by force,
And houses, and take them away:
They oppress a man and his house,
A man and his possession.
- 3 Wherefore thus saith Jehovah:
Behold! I devise an evil against this family,

1. Comp. Is. x. 1, 2. In the verbs  $\text{בָּעֲשֵׂהָ}$ ,  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ , and  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ , is evidently a gradation. The first describes the conception of the evil purpose in the mind; the second, the preparation or maturing of the scheme; and the third, the carrying of it into effect. Comp. Ps. lviii. 3; Is. xli. 4; Hos. xi. 9. The  $\text{ה}$  in  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  is the feminine used as a neuter, to agree with the nouns  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  and  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ , as forming a neuter plural accusative. The phrase  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  occurs also Gen. xxxi. 29; Prov. iii. 27; and with the negative, Deut. xxviii. 32; Neh. v. 5. It is rendered by the LXX.  $\text{ὄκ ἤραν πρὸς τὸν θεὸν χεῖρας ἀύτων}$ , which the Syr. gives without the negative:  $\text{ܘܠܗܝܘܢ ܘܠܗܝܘܢ ܘܠܗܝܘܢ}$

$\text{ܘܠܗܝܘܢ}$ , and lift up their hands to God. Vulg. quoniam contra Deum est manus eorum. Some consider the words to be equivalent to the Dextra mihi Deus of Virgil, and appeal to Job xii. 6, and Hab. i. 11, where, however, the phraseology is different; while others take  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  to be the shorter form of the demonstrative pronoun  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ . But the true meaning seems to be that given in our common version, according to which  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  is to be taken in its literal signification of power, strength, &c. Thus Pococke, Rosenmüller, Bauer, Dathe, De Wette, Gesenius, Hitzig, and Ewald, after the Targ.  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ , and Kimchi,  $\text{כי יש בה בידם לעשות הענינים}$ , because there is power in their hand to oppress the poor. Just as the LXX. render,  $\text{ισχυει η χερσ}$ , Gen. xxxi. 29, and Deut. xxviii. 32. That  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  is to be taken causatively, and not conditionally, is evident from the connection.

2. Before  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  repeat  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ . Fifty-two MSS., six by correction, two originally; four ancient and nineteen other printed editions; the Alex. MS. of the LXX., the Targ., Vulg., and Arab., omit  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  before  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ . The parallelisms in this verse are very elegant.

3.  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  and  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  correspond here to  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  and  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$  in ver. 1. Rosenmüller and Maurer understand to signify "certum genus hominum nequam et perversum;" as if the prophet intended to single out such of the people as committed the atrocious acts specified ver. 2; but it is more likely that the whole people, viewed as rebellious and corrupt, is meant. See on Amos iii. 1. The figure of a yoke is here employed for the purpose of expressing the heavy and oppressive nature of the bondage to which the Hebrews were to be subjected.  $\text{וַעֲשֵׂהָ}$ , thence, has the force of a pronoun in this place. LXX.  $\text{ἐξ ὧν}$ . Syr.  $\text{ܘܠܗܝܘܢ}$ . Comp. Gen. iii. 23; 1 Kings xvii. 13;

From which ye shall not withdraw your necks,
Neither shall ye walk haughtily;
For it shall be an evil time.

4 In that day shall one sing a ditty respecting you,
And employ a doleful lamentation,
And say: We are utterly destroyed.

He hath changed the portion of my people,
How hath he withdrawn it from me!

To an apostate he hath divided our fields!

5 Therefore thou shalt not have one to cast the line by lot,
In the congregation of Jehovah.

Ezek. v. 3. So oppressive should be the yoke, that it would be impossible for them to hold themselves erect. LXX. ὀρθοί. Targ. בְּקוֹמָהּ, זָקָהּ. The term קוֹמָהּ is selected with special reference to the elated and haughty manner in which they had conducted themselves. It is properly a substantive, from קָוָה, to be high, but is here used adverbially.

4. For נִשְׂאָה מִפְּנֵי, see on Is. xiv. 4. The verb is here used impersonally. That this Mashal was to be employed by the Jews themselves, and not by their enemies, is evident from its tenor, as it follows in the verse. עָלַיְכֶם, therefore, is not to be rendered against you, but on your account. נָהָה נְהִי נְהִי, nâhâ, nehî, nihyâh, form an elegant paronomasia. There can be no doubt that נְהִי, lamentation, is derived from נָהָה, to lament; but whether נְהִי be likewise derived from it, and consequently merely the feminine of נְהִי, or whether it be the Niphel of the substantive verb נָהָה, to be, is disputed. The harshness that would arise from rendering the words, One shall lament with a lamentation, it is done! militates against the latter derivation; whereas, by taking all the three words as cognates, having the same signification, the sentence is at once easy and forcible. The relative position of the verbs נִשְׂאָה, נָהָה, and אָמַר confirms this construction. Thus the LXX. and Vulg. καὶ θρηνηθήσεται θρήνος ἐν μέλει, et cantabitur canticum cum suavitate. And the Arab., employing for the two first words terms cognate with the Hebrew, ويناح فوح بتلكين.

נְהִי is the feminine of נָהָה, just as נְהִיָּה is of נָהָה and נְהִיָּה of נָהָה. The feminine is added to the masculine for the sake of emphasis. Comp. Is. iii. 1, only there the nouns are joined by the copulative ו. The three verbs above specified are used impersonally. The nominative to the following verbs, נָהָה, נְהִי, נְהִי, and נָהָה לְךָ, is Jehovah, understood.

נָהָה, Syr. حَنَى, to buy; in Aphel أَحْمَى, to sell, or deliver an article into the hand of the purchaser; Arab. مار, huc illuc

mota fuit res, transivit. The verb is here employed to convey the idea of a change of masters, or the passing of the land of the Hebrews into the power of their enemies. שׁוּבָה is a verbal noun, from the Piel of שׁוּב, to turn, turn back; here used in a bad sense, one who has turned back, or away from God; apostate, rebel, idolater. Comp. Is. xlvii. 10, lvii. 17; Jer. xlix. 4. The idolatrous king of Babylon is meant.

5. לְךָ is a repetition of that used at the beginning of ver. 3, and for the same purpose. The nominative to לְךָ, thee, is עַם, people, occurring in the preceding verse; and the denunciation relates to their being completely at the disposal of their enemies: none of themselves being permitted to allot to them portions of the land for inheritance. According to Hitzig the words are addressed by the ungodly Jews to Micah himself, and

- 6 Prophecy not ; those shall prophesy
 Who will not prophesy of these things :
 Reproaches are incessant.
- 7 What language, O house of Jacob !
 Is the Spirit of Jehovah shortened ?
 Are these his operations ?
 Do not my words benefit him that walketh uprightly ?

intimate that they would put him and his family to death for prophesying against them.

6. The words  $\text{נִבְיָאֵם לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ}$   $\text{לְאֵלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , which contain a smooth and elegant paronomasia, are very enigmatical, but must neither be rendered, "Prophecy not, they say to those who should prophesy : they shall not prophesy to such." Or : "Prophecy not ; they shall prophesy who will not prophesy of such things." In the former case the interdicting language of the rebellious to the prophets is simply given, and then we have the Divine declaration, that it should be as they desired. They should be judicially abandoned to their own ways ; and, as they would not hearken to the prophets when they predicted evil, they should be deprived of their ministry altogether, and not receive from them any predictions of good. In the latter, the language is entirely that of the people, by which they not merely stop the mouths of the true prophets, but declare that those only should be permitted to prophesy to them who abstained from denunciations of evil. The former requires  $\text{לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ}$  to be supplied before  $\text{נִבְיָאֵם}$  ; the latter,  $\text{לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ}$  before  $\text{לְאֵלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל}$ . The formula  $\text{לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ}$  is used ver. 11, both in reference to the persons to whom the prediction is addressed, and to that which is the subject of the prophecy :  $\text{לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ לְיָיִן}$ , "I will prophecy to thee of wine." Though contrary to the Masoretic division of the words, I prefer the second of the above modes of construction, as being the easier of the two. The use of the paragogic  $\text{ו}$  in  $\text{נִבְיָאֵם ו}$  forms no objection ; for though it is most commonly found at the end of a sentence, yet there are many instances in which it occurs at the beginning, or in the middle. See Gen.

xviii. 28-31 ; Exod. xviii. 26 ; Deut. viii. 3 ; 1 Sam. ii. 22 ; Ps. xi. 2, lxviii. 13 ; Is. viii. 12. For  $\text{הִנְיָהּ}$ , see on Amos vii. 16. In the concluding words of the verse,  $\text{לֹא יִנְבִּיאוּ בְּלִמְזוּר}$ , literally, calumnies depart not, the Jews indignantly tax the prophets with exposing them to contempt by incessant castigation and reproof. Of this interpretation Maurer observes, "ut facillima et simplissima per se est, ita ad nexum est aptissima." The verb occurring first, is in the masculine singular, though the noun is a feminine plural. See Gesen. § 144. Ward's edit.

7. The prophet boldly meets the charge expressed in the concluding clause of the preceding verse by asking, Whether the absence of auspicious predictions could possibly be ascribed to any deficiency on the part of the Spirit of prophecy ? whether the judgments denounced were operations in which Jehovah delighted, and were not rather procured by the wickedness of those on whom they were to be inflicted ? and whether it was not a fact which experience had ever verified, that the Divine communications were productive of good to men of science and consistent piety ? In  $\text{וְהִנְיָהּ}$  the  $\text{ו}$  is used as a qualifying demonstrative with all the force of an indignant exclamation, in order to point out the flagrant character of the language employed by the Israelites.  $\text{וְהִנְיָהּ}$  is the Pahul Part, signifying what is said or spoken, and with the  $\text{ו}$  prefixed, O dictum! Almost all the versions and Lexicons assign to this participle the signification of being called or named ; but this notion attaches to the verb only in Niphal, which, in such case, is uniformly followed by the preposition  $\text{ל}$ . See Is. iv. 3, xix. 18 ; Hos. ii. 1. The LXX., Aq., Vulg., and

- 8 But of old my people hath risen up as an enemy ;
 Ye strip off the vestment as well as the robe
 From those who walk along securely,
 From those who are returning from battle.
- 9 The women of my people ye thrust out from their darling home ;
 From their children ye take away my glory for ever.

Targ., have read רַחֵם אֱלֹהֵינוּ, which is found in four of Kennicott's MSS. Ewald: "O des Wortes!" As רַחֵם אֱלֹהֵינוּ, short of breath or spirit, is contrasted with אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֲרֵיבָנוּ, long-suffering, Prov. xiv. 29, and is obviously equivalent to אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, ver. 17, (comp. אֲרֵיבָנוּ רַחֵם, Exod. vi. 9,) most of the moderns render in the present instance, Is Jehovah prone to anger? but prophecy being the subject to which reference had just been made, it is more natural to understand רַחֵם אֱלֹהֵינוּ, the Spirit of Jehovah, in its appropriated meaning, as designating the Divine Author of prophetic communications; and to take the verb in the sense of weakness or inability. Comp. רַחֵם אֱלֹהֵינוּ, short of hand, Is. xxxvii. 27. אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, these, like אֲרֵיבָנוּ, ver. 6, refers to the judgments which the Lord had threatened to inflict. The interrogative form, as frequently, requires a decided negative; such judgments are not Jehovah's usual operations. Comp. Is. xxviii. 21; Lam. iii. 33; Mic. vii. 18. In אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, the substantive, which is used adverbially, is placed first, for the sake of emphasis, and on this account also it takes the article, which properly belongs to אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ. A similar instance of transposition occurs in אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, Job xxxi. 26, where the substantive is likewise used adverbially. For the meaning of the phrase, comp. אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, Prov. ii. 7; אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, Is. lvii. 2.

8. ׀ at the beginning of this verse is strongly adversative. Very different was the character of those whom the prophet was now reproving. אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, properly yesterday, is taken by some to signify lately; but it is more in keeping with the spirit of the passage to render it anciently, of old, or the like. See on Is. xxx. 33. The rebellious conduct of the Hebrew nation was no new thing. It had characterized every period of its history. LXX. ξμπεροσθεν. Abulwalid, contrary to the usage of the language, divides the word into אֲרֵיבָנוּ and אֱלֹהֵינוּ, and renders, on the contrary. Thus also the Vulg. The ׀ in אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ is expressive of manner; comp. אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, Is. xxxii. 1. אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ is selected to correspond in alliteration with אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, and is here equivalent to אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, or אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ. It refers, not to אֲרֵיבָנוּ immediately following, but to the persons of those who were plundered. Though divided by the accent, אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ and אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ are to be regarded as asyndeta; the former, signifying the large loose garment which was worn immediately over the tunic, and which being indispensable to the Orientals, is placed first, for the sake of emphasis; the latter, the costly robe of fur, or other rich stuff, the robbery of which, under the circumstances described, was a matter of course. So great was the rapacity of the lawless characters spoken of, that they were not satisfied with the more valuable part of the dress, but likewise possessed themselves of what was less costly. Comp. Matt. v. 40. For אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ (by transposition of the first two letters of אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, which is much more frequently in use,) comp. the Arab. شيلة, vestmentum, pec. totum corpus involvens, from شيل, circumdedit. Before אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ repeat the preposition ׀. The passive participle is here used intransitively to describe those who were returning after having defeated their enemy in battle, and who might therefore be considered perfectly secure. Even they were waylaid by their countrymen and neighbors, and robbed of the spoils which they had taken in war.

9. In אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ and אֲרֵיבָנוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, there is, as

- 10 Arise! depart! for this is not the place of your rest;
 Because of pollution it will destroy.
 And the destruction shall be grievous.
- 11 If any one, conversant with wind and falsehood, lie, saying:
 I will prophesy to thee of wine and strong drink,
 Even he shall be the prophet of this people.

frequently, a transition from the plural to the singular pronoun. As the prophet refers to war, it is most likely he intended by the "women," the widows of those who had fallen in battle, and who ought to have been objects of special sympathy and care. Instead of which, both they and their fatherless children were expelled from their homes, and robbed of their property. הַרְרִי, my ornament, collectively for the ornamental clothes which they wore, and with which they had been provided by Jehovah. The Holy Land, and everything connected with it, was his, so that whatever was enjoyed by its inhabitants, was to be regarded as peculiarly a Divine gift. Comp. Hos. ii. 8. לְעוֹלָם, for ever, i. e. never to make restitution. Some think there is reference to the command to restore the pledge before sun-set, Exod. xxii. 25, but this is doubtful.

10. As the Imperative is frequently used by the prophets to express more strongly the certainty of a prediction than a simple future would have done, קָמוּ הַנְּשִׁימוּ are to be so understood here. See on Is. vi. 10. Hitzig preposterously considers the words to be addressed by the pitiless Jews to the persons whom they oppressed by expelling them from their homes. They are obviously to be viewed as the language of Jehovah, threatening them with a removal from their own country, which they had polluted by their crimes, to a foreign and heathen land. Canaan was conferred upon the Hebrews as a rest, or place of quiet enjoyment, after their fatigues and troubles in the wilderness, Num. x. 33; Deut. xii. 9; Ps. xev. 11. Before זֶה, supply אֶרֶץ. The definite article in הַמְּנוּחָה is equivalent to the pronominal affix בָּהּ, and is to be rendered accordingly. A land may be said to destroy its inhabitants, when it withholds from them the means of subsistence, and forces them to leave it. With such reference it is described as devouring them and spewing them out of it, Lev. xviii. 28, xx. 22, xxvi. 38; Ezek. xxxvi. 12-14. The comparison of these passages shows the propriety of the Piel הַחֲבֵל, and renders unnecessary the passive forms חֲבַל and חֲבַלָּה, which some have proposed. For הַחֲבֵל, comp. the Arab. مرض morbus fuit, only its significations would seem to be taken from the idea of a violent or deadly disease. Thus הַחֲבֵלָה הַחֲבֵלָה, a grievous curse, 1 Kings ii. 8. Gesenius renders הַחֲבֵלָה הַחֲבֵלָה, corruptio vehemētissima.

11. Micah reverts to the subject of smooth and flattering predictions, which he had spoken of ver. 6, and shows that so corrupt had the people become, that no prophet might expect to be acceptable to them who did not sanction their sinful indulgences. To those who did, they would give a ready ear. As רוּחַ signifies both wind and spirit, there is great force in representing those who pretended to inspiration as walking or being familiar with the wind: so utterly worthless was the instruction which they communicated. רוּחַ הַרוּחַ is otherwise equivalent to רוּחַ הַרוּחַ, Hos. ix. 7, and רוּחַ הַרוּחַ to רוּחַ הַרוּחַ, Jer. v. 31. Dathé thinks this verse would better fit in after ver. 6, but there is no authority for the transposition; and, besides, there is a singular propriety in bringing forward the crowning sin of the Jews, viz. their preferring false prophets to the faithful messengers of Jehovah, just before introducing the glorious prediction of their restoration from captivity in the following verse.

- 12 I will surely gather thee entirely, O Jacob !
 I will surely collect the remainder of Israel ;
 I will put them together like the sheep of Bozrah,
 Like a flock in the midst of their pasture ;
 They shall be in commotion,
 Because of the multitude of men.
- 13 The Breaker is gone up before them ;
 They break through and pass to the gate ;

12, 13. Theodoret, Kimchi, Calvin, Drusius, De Dieu, Grotius, Tarnovius, and others, consider these verses to be a denunciation of punishment, and not a promise of deliverance; while Struensee, Hezel, Michaelis, and Forsayeth (in Newcome) regard them as the language of the false prophets, continued from ver. 11. Ewald, who takes the same view, thinks they were originally written by Micah on the margin of his manuscript, and has printed them in Italics, within brackets. Most modern interpreters, however, and among them Rosenmüller, Dathe, Justi, Hartmann, Maurer, and even Hitzig, are unanimous in viewing them as predictive of the restoration of the Jews after their dispersion. The manner in which the prophet concludes the preceding verse, proves that he had finished what he had to deliver respecting the favor shown to false prophets; and his sudden and abrupt transition to better times is so entirely in accordance with the manner of the prophets, that the last-mentioned interpretation at once recommends itself as the true. The point most difficult to determine is the point to which the prophecy has respect. Most Christian expositors explain it of the appearance of Christ, and his collecting of believers into his church; but this construction is altogether arbitrary, resting on no other foundation than the principle of giving a spiritual interpretation to whatever may, by possibility, be so interpreted. So far is there from being anything in the phraseology of the text to warrant such appropriation of it, that the very terms compel to an adoption of the literal sense. Kimchi, Jarchi, and the Jews generally, as also several modern Christian writers, maintain, that the prophecy relates to the future literal restoration of the Jews under the Messiah. For my part, I cannot but regard the more immediate restoration from the literal Babylon as the theme of the inspired announcement. The deliverance predicted is the same to which reference is made chap. iv. 10, the scene of which is there expressly declared to be Babylon. "Jacob" stands here for the ten tribes, as in Is. xvii. 4; Hos. xii. 2; and "Israel" for the kingdom of Judah, as in Obad. 18, 2 Chron. xii. 1, xix. 8, xxi. 2, 4. The two tribes and a half being few compared with the ten, might well be described as  $\text{רֵשְׁתֵּי הַבָּיִת}$ , the remainder, which had been left in the land at the time of the Assyrian invasion. To express the great extent of the population after the return, it is compared to the large collections of sheep in the folds of Bozrah; a region celebrated for the abundance of its flocks. The Targ., Vulg., Gesenius, Winer, Hitzig, and Ewald, render  $\text{רֵשְׁתֵּי הַבָּיִת}$ , sheep-fold, but this signification of the word is totally unsupported by usage, and is not allowed by Lee. The LXX., mistaking  $\text{ב}$  for the preposition, translate,  $\epsilon\nu \delta\lambda\psi\epsilon\iota$ . It is seldom we meet with the article prefixed to a noun taking the pronominal affix, as in  $\text{יְהוָה בְּרַי}$ ; yet see Josh. vii. 21, viii. 33. By  $\text{רֵשְׁתֵּי הַבָּיִת}$ , the Breaker, some understand Cyrus; but the identity of structure between this sentence and the two with which the verse closes, compels us to interpret the term of Jehovah himself, who, through the instrumentality of that monarch, removed every obstacle which prevented the return of the Hebrews to their own land. When his providence so visibly interposed, it was easy for them to break down the minor barriers which had confined them in Babylonia, and triumphantly to march out through the gates of the hostile city. To intimate that they should suffer molestation from no enemy by the way, God is represented as going before them, like a monarch at the head of his army ; just as he was said to go before his people when they went up from Egypt, Deut. i. 30. In the illustrious Deliverer here exhibited, Rosenmüller recognizes the Messiah : "Per-ruptor, δεικτικῶς, est enim cum ך demonstrativo. Loquitur ergo de certa quadam persona, et antonomastice sic dicta, quæ mox vocabitur מלך, rex illorum et ך, ut non sit dubium, Nostrum de Messia cogitasse, seu divino illo heroe, quo auspice, devictis omnibus Judæorum hostibus, aureum seculum orbem beabit." And to his interpretation I accede, only restricting the work of the Messiah, as here predicted, to his leading forth the Jews from Babylon. Comp. Exod. xxxiii. 14 ; Is. lxiii. 9, in which we are taught that the Divine Logos delivered, and conducted the Israelites through the wilderness.

They go out at it ;
 Their King passeth on before them,
 Even Jehovah at their head.

CHAPTER III.

HAVING inserted in the two preceding verses a gracious prediction for the comfort of the few pious who might be living in the midst of the ungodly, the prophet proceeds to expatiate at greater length against the latter, directing his discourse especially to the civil and ecclesiastical officers, who, by their example, exerted so baneful an influence upon the nation. The chapter may be divided into three parts. Ver. 1-4, an oburgation of the princes ; 5-7, that of the prophets ; and 8-11, that of princes, prophets, and priests together. The chapter closes with a prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Babylonians.

- 1 AND I said : Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob !
 And ye judges of the house of Israel !
 Is it not yours to know justice ?
- 2 Who hate good and love evil ;
 Who strip their skin from off them,
 And their flesh from off their bones.
- 3 Who devour the flesh of my people,
 And flay their skin from off them ;
 Who break their bones in pieces,

1-3. The ל in ך is expressive of duty or obligation ; what the persons spoken of were bound to do, and what might naturally be expected from them in the station which they filled. ך is here used, not of merely speculative knowledge, but of that which is practical. It was the province of the magistrates to exercise their judicial authority for the protection of the innocent,

And separate them as in the pot,
And as flesh in the midst of the kettle.

- 4 Then they may cry to Jehovah,
But he will not answer them,
But will hide his face from them at that time ;
Because they have corrupted their doings.
- 5 Thus saith Jehovah respecting the prophets,
Who cause my people to err ;
Who bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace ;
But against him that putteth not into their mouth
They prepare war.
- 6 Surely ye shall have night without vision ;
Ye shall have darkness without divination ;
Yea, the sun shall go down upon the prophets,
And the day shall become black over them.

and the punishment of evil-doers. But instead of thus discharging the duties of their office, they were themselves perpetrators of the most flagrant acts of oppression and cruelty. Their inhuman conduct is very forcibly described by the prophet, in language borrowed from the process of slaying and preparing animals for food, and the feasting consequent thereon. Comp. Ps. xiv. 4 ; Prov. xxx. 14. The pronominal affixes in ver. 2, refer to the people, understood, and not to זוֹב and רָעָה, immediately preceding, which are obviously employed as abstract neuters. Though many MSS. read רָע with the Keri, yet there are others which exhibit רָעָה, the proper pointing of the Chethib. No codex supports the emendation רָעָה instead of רָעָה. The LXX. may, or may not, have so read. The etymology of קַלְהוֹת is uncertain, but that it signifies a vessel for boiling in is clear from its being here parallel with סִיר, and in 1 Sam. ii. 14 with כִּיּוֹר, דָּגֵר and פָּרוֹר.

4. אָז, then, and בְּעֵת יְהוּיָא, at that time, are anticipative of the period of divine judgment. The infliction of such judgment is implied, not expressed. The more emphatically to convey an impression of its certainty, the prophet takes it for granted. God is said to hear or answer prayer, when he grants what is sup-plicated; and to hide his face, when he disregards or affords no relief to the suppliant. בְּאֶפְסָר, with the LXX., Syr., Justi, Dathe, and others, I take to be causal, as in Num. xxvii. 14 ; 1 Sam. xxviii. 18 ; 2 Kings xvii. 26.

5. הַנִּבְּיָאִים בְּשִׁנְיָהֶם, who bite with their teeth, the antithesis requires to be understood in the sense of eating the food supplied by the people. While such supplies were granted, the false prophets predicted prosperity ; but if they withheld them, measures of a hostile nature, under a religious pretext, were adopted against them. Thus the Targ. דְּמַן מוֹכֵיל דְּמִן מוֹכֵיל, לְהוֹיֹן שְׁהוֹן דְּבִסְר מִתְּנָבֵן עֲלוֹהֵי שְׁלָמָא, They prophesy peace to him who feeds them with dinners of flesh. The phrase is purposely selected in order satirically to expose the selfishness of the deceivers. For the meaning of קָדַשׁ, to sanctify, as here used, see on Is. xiii. 3 ; Joel i. 14 ; and comp. Jer. vi. 4.

6, 7. So completely should the predictions of the false prophets be disproved by the judgments that were to be brought on the nation, and so painfully should they themselves experience these judgments, that they could no longer have the effrontery to practise their deceptions. Under such circumstances they could not pretend to deliver any divine oracle to the people. The words

- 7 Then shall the seers be ashamed,
 And the diviners confounded ;
 They shall all cover their beard ;
 For there shall be no response from God.
- 8 But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of Jehovah,
 And of judgment and might ;
 To declare unto Jacob his transgression,
 And to Israel his sin.
- 9 Hear this, I beseech you, ye heads of the house of Jacob !
 And judges of the house of Israel !
 Who abhor justice,
 And pervert all equity ;
- 10 Building Zion with blood,

do not imply that they ever had really received any such oracles : they merely professed to have received them. נ is here to be taken privatively, and not in the signification of ob, propter, etc., as interpreted by some. The obscuration of the heavenly bodies, or of the light of day, is frequently employed by the prophets, as it is by oriental writers generally, to denote affliction or calamity. Amos viii. 9. פֶּשַׁע, LXX., in 2 Sam. xix. 25, μύσταξ, the mustache or beard, which is held in high estimation in the East, and in exhibiting which, properly grown and trimmed, the Orientals greatly pride themselves. To hide it, therefore, by covering it, was regarded as a striking mark of shame or sorrow. See Lev. xiii. 45 ; 2 Sam. xix. 25 ; Ezek. xxiv. 17, 22.

8. Full of conscious sincerity, and of his divine commission, in the execution of which he was sustained by the supernatural influence of the Holy Spirit, and zealous for the glory of God, and the recovery of his people, Micah avows his readiness, with all boldness, to announce to them his inspired message respecting their sins. His character and conduct formed a perfect contrast to those of the false prophets. The compound particle אֲנִי, and the pronoun אֲנִי, are here emphatic. אֲנִי, means the supernatural power necessary for the general discharge of the prophetic office ; comp. δύναμις, Luke i. 17, xxiv. 49 ;

Acts i. 8 ; מִצְדָּקָה, a sense of moral rectitude, distinguishing clearly between right and wrong, and impelling to the advocacy and maintenance of such actions, as are conformable to the Divine law ; and אֲנִי, moral courage, or a bold and intrepid spirit, inciting its possessor to throw aside all timidity in defending the cause of God and truth. Comp. 2 Tim. i. 7.

9. The prophet now proceeds to deliver in full the message which he had commenced, ver. 1, employing the same formula, אֲנִי, as he also does chap. vi. 1. The remaining verses of the chapter furnish a noble specimen of that bold and uncompromising fidelity which characterized his ministry.

10. אֲנִי, the LXX., Syr., Targ., and Vulg., render in the plural, but no Hebrew codex exhibits the variation. The authors of these versions doubtless regarded the participle as a collective, which mode of construction we must adopt, or, with Michaelis, we must suppose that the prophet had Shebna, Is. xxii. 16-18, Jehoiakim, or some other particular prince in his eye ; the former interpretation is preferable. אֲנִי, blood, used for the wealth obtained by shedding the blood of its owners. Comp. Jer. xxii. 13 ; Ezek. xxii. 27 ; Hab. ii. 12, in the latter of which passages אֲנִי and אֲנִי are used as parallels, with the same particle, אֲנִי.

And Jerusalem with wickedness.

- 11 Her heads judge for reward,
 And her priests teach for hire ;
 Her prophets also divine for money ;
 Yet they lean upon Jehovah, saying :
 Is not Jehovah in the midst of us ?
 No calamity shall come upon us.
- 12 Surely on your account
 Sion shall be ploughed as a field,

11. מַנְהֵג, is a gift or bribe given to a judge to obtain freedom from punishment. Receiving bribes was strictly prohibited by the Mosaic law, Exod. xxiii. 8 ; Deut. xvi. 19. That the כֹּהֲנִים, priests, were authorized by that law to act in the capacity of ordinary religious teachers, does not appear. Their being thus employed by Jehoshaphat is narrated as something altogether extraordinary, 2 Chron. xvii. 7-9. Besides attending to the ceremonial observances, they had devolved upon them the decision of controversies, Deut. xvii. 8-11, xxi. 5 ; Ezek. xliv. 24, cases of leprosy, divorce, etc. Lev. x. 11. They were to lay down the law in such cases, and pronounce the final sentence. Comp. Mal. ii. 7 ; Deut. xxxiii. 10 ; and see Michaelis on the Laws of Moses, Art. lii. They are here associated with the judges, because in certain cases they gave a joint verdict ; and in the time of the prophet were equally avaricious and corruptible. The verb דִּבְּרָה, to divine, being only used of false prophets, shows that those reproved by Micah were of that description. Comp. Jude 11. With all their wicked perversion of right, they hypocritically claimed an interest in the favor of God, and scouted the idea that the calamities denounced by his true prophets could ever overtake them. Comp. Jer. vii. 4, 8-11, where the same presumptuous confidence in the Divine presence in the temple, is exposed and condemned.

12. We have here at last an awful epiphonema, in which the destruction of the metropolis is expressly and particularly predicted. The wicked leaders of the people were now building and beautifying it, by expending upon it their unrighteous gains, ver. 10 ; but the time was coming when it should be completely desolated. "Zion" designates the site of the city of David on the south ; "Jerusalem," the houses occupied by the inhabitants generally in the centre and the north ; and "the mountain of the house," Moriah on the east. Instead of עֵיִךְ, the Chaldee termination, five MSS., five others originally, and the Babylonian Talmud, read עֵיִת. הַבַּיִת, the house, i. e. κατ' ἔξοχην, the temple. That which was their boast and confidence, was to be converted into a wilderness. יַעַר signifies not only a forest, but also a thicket of shrubs, a rough or rugged locality, from the Arab.

وعر, asper, salebrosus fuit ; difficilis incessu, asper locus. The whole verse contains a description of utter ruin and desolation. The enunciation of such a prophecy evinced the greatest intrepidity on the part of Micah, and is quoted as an instance of prophetic boldness, Jer. xxvi. 18, 19. The ploughing of the city by the enemy, which has its parallel in Horace, lib. i. Od. 16,

"Imprimeretque muris Hostile aratrum exercitus insolens," has by some interpreters been referred to what is recorded in the Talmud, noticed by Jerome, and repeated by Maimonides, that Titus Annius Rufus, an officer in the Roman army, tore up with a ploughshare the foundations of the temple ; but little or no credit is to be given to the story. See Deylingii

Jerusalem shall become heaps,
And the mountain of the house woody heights.

Observationes Sacr. pt. v. pp. 448, 450. Robinson's Palestine, vol. ii. pp. 2, 8. The circumstance, however, that what Micah predicts, relates to the city as distinguished from the temple, clearly militates against the application of his language. Equally inapposite as to the fulfilment of the prophecy are the appeals to the present partially cultivated state of Mount Zion, since the destruction to which it points was not the more distant devastations under Titus and Adrian, but the more proximate under Nebuchadnezzar. For the accomplishment, see Neh. ii. 17, iv. 2; Lam. v. 18.

---

CHAPTER IV.

By a sudden transition, as at chap. ii. 13, the prophet passes from his denunciation of punishment, to a description of the glorious state of the church subsequent to the restoration from the captivity in Babylon. He predicts the establishment of the kingdom of Christ upon the ruins of idolatry, and the accession of the Gentiles, 1, 2; the peaceful nature of his reign, 3, and the security of his subjects, 4. He then abruptly introduces his captive countrymen, who, having been recovered to the worship of the true God, declare, that, however the idolaters around them might adhere to their several systems of creature-worship, they would never renounce the service of Jehovah, 5. The Most High promises to gather even the weakest of them from their dispersions, restore their national existence, and reign over them for ever, 6-8. The intermediate invasion of Judea, the captivity in Babylon, and the liberation of the Jews, are next depicted, 9-11. Upon which follows a prediction of the victories which they should gain over their enemies in the time of the Maccabees, and of the reverse which took place on the establishment of Herod by the Roman power.

-
- 1 AND it shall come to pass in the last of the days,
That the mountain of Jehovah's house
Shall be established on the summit of the mountains,
And be elevated above the hills,
And the people shall flow to it.
- 2 Yea, many nations shall go, and say :
Come let us go up to the mountain of Jehovah,

1-3. On the general identity of this prophecy with Is. ii. 2-4, see the note on that passage, to which the reader is also referred for the interpretation. The verbal discrepancies, which are few and trivial, will be best seen on consulting Newcome, who exhibits the Hebrew text of both prophets in parallel columns. The sense is the same throughout. Twenty MSS., originally ten more, one by correction, and the Complut. edition, read יְהוָה instead of יְהוָה. For אֲנִי אֵלֹהִים, thirty-six MSS., probably another, seven originally, and six by correction, together

- To the house of the God of Jacob,
 That he may teach us his ways,
 And that we may walk in his paths;
 For out of Zion shall go forth the law,
 And the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem.
- 3 And he shall arbitrate among many people,
 And give decision to many distant nations,
 So that they shall beat their swords into coulters,
 And their spears into pruning-knives;
 Nation shall not raise a sword against nation,
 Neither shall they learn war any more.
- 4 And they shall sit each under his vine, and under his fig-tree,
 And none shall make him afraid;
 For the mouth of Jehovah of hosts hath spoken it.
- 5 Though all the people should walk
 Each in the name of his god,
 Yet we will walk in the name of Jehovah our God,
 For ever and ever.
- 6 In that day, saith Jehovah,
 I will gather the halting, with four of the early editions, read  $\text{שׁוֹבֵר}$ ; and for  $\text{אֲנֹכִי}$  five MSS., four originally, and now one, read  $\text{אֲנִי}$ .

4. This beautiful addition, which is not in Isaiah, appears to have been a common adage among the Hebrews to express a state of complete outward security. 1 Kings iv. 25; Zech. iii. 10. For a state of things precisely the reverse see my Biblical Researches and Travels in Russia, etc. p. 436.

5. Many interpreters have been puzzled how to reconcile the statement made in the beginning of this verse with the prediction contained in verse 2; and Hartmann goes so far as to assert, that it was originally a marginal gloss, written by a different pen, and afterwards inserted in the text. The difficulty will be removed, if we consider the words to be those of the Jews during their dispersion. "Hic spectanda est diversitas temporis." Calvin, in loc. They witnessed the eagerness with which the idolaters around them devoted themselves to the service of their gods—an eagerness which led them to despair of their ever being reclaimed; and they nobly resolved that nothing should ever again move them to abandon the service of Jehovah; but that, with equal earnestness, they would addict themselves to his worship, and the observance of his laws.  $\text{בִּי}$  is here a formula of concession: be it so that, although, or the like. Comp. for this use of the particle, Gen. viii. 21; Exod. xiii. 17; Josh. xvii. 18; Deut. xxix. 18. " $\text{לְהֵלֵךְ בְּשֵׁם אֱלֹהֵי אֲחֵרִים}$ , to walk in the name of any one, means to frame one's conduct according to his will, to act by his authority, and in accordance with his character.  $\text{שֵׁם}$ , name, is often used for the person himself. Com. the phrases  $\text{לְהֵלֵךְ בְּרַגְלֵי יְהוָה}$ ;  $\text{לְהֵלֵךְ אַחֲרֵי יְהוָה}$ , to walk in the way of, to follow Jehovah. It seems here to be specially employed in reference to religious worship. Comp. Zech. x. 12.

6-8. That the subject of these verses is the restoration from Babylon, and the reestablishment of the Jewish state, and not any spiritual gathering of men generally to the church of God, is placed beyond dispute by the prediction that the scattered and afflicted remnant of Israel

- And collect the outcasts,
 And those whom I have afflicted.
 7 And I will make the halting a remnant.
 And those that had been far removed a strong nation ;
 And Jehovah shall reign over them in Mount Zion,
 From henceforth, and for ever.
 8 And thou, O tower of the flock !
 O hill of the daughter of Zion !
 To thee it shall come,
 Even the former rule shall come,
 The kingdom of the daughter of Jerusalem.

was again to become a strong nation, ver. 7, and by the use of the phrase הַמְּמִשְׁלָה הָרְאשׁוֹנָה, the former rule, ver. 8, which can only be interpreted of the theocratic government at Jerusalem. When the Hebrews first returned to their own land, they were few in number, amounting only to 42,360; but they rapidly increased, and in the time of the Maccabees not only became an independent state, but acquired such power that they vanquished the formidable Syro-Grecian armies. The Asmonæan family possessed supreme authority from Mattathias to Herod the Great. To the above interpretation no valid objection can be taken on the ground that Jehovah is said, ver. 7, to reign for ever over those who were to be assembled. עוֹלָם, eternity, or long indefinite duration, whether applied to the past or the future, must always be determined by the nature of the subject. It is very often used of the Mosaic institutes, Exod. xii. 14, 17, xxvii. 21, xxviii. 43; Lev. iii. 17. It is even employed to denote the period of the seventy years' captivity, Jer. xviii. 16. For הַבְּצִלְזָה and הַזְּהִיחָה, comp. Ezek. xxxiv. 16; Zeph. iii. 19. הַזְּהִיחָה is the Niphal participle of הָלַח, to be removed. Syr.

Ⲑⲗⲁⲛ, elongavit, removit. Arabic

Ⲑⲗ II., recessit, abscessit. Having employed metaphors taken from the treatment of sheep, Micah calls the Jewish people, in their collective capacity, עֶדְרָה, a flock. Comp. עֶדְרָה יְהוָה, the flock of Jehovah, Jer. xiii. 17; and in reference to the strength of Jerusalem, and the watchful care exercised by the government, he characterizes her as עֶדְרָה מִגְּדָה הַצֹּרֶן, the tower of the flock. Some, indeed, think with Jerome, that a place of this name, to which reference is made Gen. xxxv. 21, and which that father says lay about a mile distant from Bethlehem, is intended; but, from its being in apposition with בְּתֹרֶן בְּתִיּוֹר, mound of the daughter of Zion, a fortified hill or elevation on the eastern part of Mount Zion, and here put for the whole, such interpretation is inadmissible. For בְּתֹרֶן, comp. Is. xxxii. 14; 2 Chron. xxvii. 3, xxxiii. 14; Neh. iii. 26, 27, in which last passage הַמִּגְדָּה, the tower, is mentioned along with it, which is doubtless identical with בְּתֹרֶן, Is. xxxii. 14. The word is derived from בָּצַע, to swell, become tumid.

Arab. عفا, tumore laboravit, pinguendo circa perineum capri, etc. Τὸν Ὀφλᾶν καλούμενον ὑψηλᾶν. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. lib. vi. cap. 6, § 3. The LXX., Aquil. Symm., Syr., and Vulg., confound the word with בְּצָלָה, thick darkness. The Targum applies the passage to the Messiah: נִאֲמַת מְשִׁיחָא דְיִשְׂרָאֵל דְּהַטְמִיר מִן קֳדָם חֻבְבִּי בְּגִשְׁתָּהּ לְבִיּוֹר לְהַעֲתִידָא, מְלִכְתָּהּ לְמִיחָתִי; "And thou, O Messiah of Israel, who art hid on account of the sins of the congregation of Zion, to thee the kingdom will come;" but there is no more foundation for this interpretation, than for that of Jonathan on עֶדְרָה מִגְּדָה הַצֹּרֶן, Gen. xxxv. 21: אֲתִירָא דְמַתְמָן עֲתִיד, הָתְהִיבְנִי בְּלִבָּא מְשִׁיחָא בְּסוּף יוֹמָנָא, "the

- 9 Why, now, dost thou cry aloud ?
 Is there no king in thee ?
 Have thy counsellors perished ?
 That pains should have seized thee
 Like a woman in travail ?
- 10 Be in pain, and bring forth, O daughter of Zion !
 Like a woman in travail ;
 For now thou shalt go forth from the city,
 And shalt dwell in the field,
 Thou shalt even go to Babylon ;
 There thou shalt be delivered,
 There Jehovah shall redeem thee,
 From the hand of thine enemies.
- 11 And now many nations are gathered against thee,

place from which King Messiah is to be revealed at the end of the days," whatever use may be made of it in the way of argumentum an hominem in reasoning with the Jews. ל in בְּלִי is a periphrasis of the genitive.

9. הַעַתָּה is not here used in its temporal signification, but merely as a particle designed emphatically to draw attention to what follows. Five MSS. and another originally, supported by the LXX. and Targ., read הַעַתָּה, which is the usual form. The prophet plunges at once into the circumstances of consternation in which the inhabitants of Jerusalem would be placed on the approach of the Chaldean army. The questions relative to a king and his council are put ironically, and provoke the answer, "Yes, we have, but they are nothing worth: they cannot protect us, nor contrive any means of escape." הַעַתָּה the LXX. treat as a collective: ἡ βουλή σου.

10. הַעַתָּה, instead of הַעַתָּה, for the sake of euphony. Comp. in reference to childbirth, Job xxxviii. 8; Ps. xxii. 10. Having employed the metaphor of a parturient female, the prophet carries it on in this verse, strikingly depicting the condition of anguish and distress which the Jews had to anticipate before they should enjoy deliverance. The Babylonish captivity, and its happy termination, are predicted in express terms. Both were likewise expressly foretold by Isaiah, the contemporary of Micah, chap. xxxix. 7, xliii. 14, xlvi. 20. The repetition of הַעַתָּה, there, is emphatic. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, when removed from the city, should be located in the open country, till the whole were collected, and then they should all be conveyed to Babylon.

11. The nations here referred to were those which composed the army of Nebuchadnezzar, or which joined that army in its attack upon Jerusalem. The more immediate neighbors of the Jews are no doubt specially intended. Comp. Lam. ii. 16; Ezek. xxxv. ; Obad. 12, 13. These defiled Jerusalem when they shed the blood of her citizens and profaned her sacred places. הַעַתָּה is used, like הַעַתָּה, Obad. 12, in an emphatic sense, to denote the malignant delight with which the enemies of the Jews feasted on their calamities. For the use of the feminine singular הַעַתָּה with the dual masculine, comp. 2 Sam. x. 9; Job xx. 11. Nothing is more common in Arabic than to employ the feminine form of the verb when the agent is anything irrational or inanimate. The singular number is employed as the simpler form of the verb. It may be observed, however, that, instead of הַעַתָּה in the plural, four MSS., two of the most ancient editions, the Syr. and Targ., read הַעַתָּה in the singular. The LXX. have the plural. Both הַעַתָּה and הַעַתָּה are optative in force.

That say : Let her be profaned !

And : Let our eyes look upon Zion.

12 But, as for them, they know not the designs of Jehovah,
Neither do they understand his purpose :

For he shall collect them as sheaves into the threshing-floor.

13 Arise ! thresh, O daughter of Zion !

For I will make thy horn iron,

And thy hoofs copper,

And thou shalt beat in pieces many nations ;

Thou shalt devote their gains to Jehovah,

And their substance to the Lord of all the earth.

14 Assemble yourselves now, O daughter of troops !

We are besieged !

12. הַמִּצֵּה is a nominative absolute, used for the sake of emphasis. The enemies of the Jews had not the most distant idea, that the object of Jehovah in permitting his people to be so treated was to recover them from idolatry, and thus prepare them for a triumphant restoration. The metaphor taken from the process of threshing out grain is frequently used by the prophets to denote the complete destruction of a people. Comp. Jer. li. 33. For the manner in which this process is carried on, see on Is. xxviii. 27, 28.

13. A continuation of the metaphor. Comp. for a real parallel, Is. xli. 15, 16. There is, however, a very natural instance of mixed metaphor, derived from the destructive power lodged in the horn of the ox, though it is not employed in threshing, which greatly adds to the force of the passage. That קֶרֶן, horn, should here be employed to signify the horny substance forming the hoof of the ox, cannot be admitted. Comp. 1 Kings xxii. 11. The horn was a symbol of power exercised in subduing and punishing enemies. The Orientals give to Alexander the Great the epithet of ذُو

للقرنين, bicornis ; and the kings of Macedon were actually in the habit of wearing the horns of a ram in their casques. הַתְּחַרְמֵתִי I take to be the second person feminine, the Yod being a fragment of the old form of the personal pronoun צָהִי, regularly preserved in the Syriac. Compare, for other instances, שִׁמְעֵתִי, Ruth iii. 3 ; הַבְּהֵמָה, Jer. xxxi. 21, though they are pointed with a Sheva, and the Keri directs that they should be read שִׁמְעֵת and הַבְּהֵמָה. The LXX., Aquila, Symm., Theodot., the Syr., and Vulg., all have the second person. הָרַם, Arab.

حرم, prohibuit ; sacrum, quod non est promiscue usus ; to make sacred, devote, whether in a good or a bad sense. As conquerors used to consecrate a portion of their spoils to their deities by hanging them up in their temples, so the triumphant Hebrews would employ the riches which they acquired by their victories in beautifying the temple of Jehovah, and supporting his worship. The Maccabean times are specially referred to.

14. I consider גִּדּוּד, troop, to be a collective. Jerusalem is called a daughter of troops, on account of the great body of military quartered within her walls, and in the surrounding districts. That it is Jerusalem, and not the enemy, that is addressed, the close coherence of the forms with those of the preceding context sufficiently shows. For the paronomasia in תַּחַזְּדֵי בְּתֵּי-גִדּוּד, comp. Gen. xlix. 19. The common acceptance of גִּדְּד, is to cut or make incisions ; but that it also signifies to assemble as troops, see Jer. v. 7.

Syr. اذوا, a portion or detachment of

With a rod they have smitten on the cheek
The judge of Israel!

an army. Though at  $\text{עָרֵב}$  the enemy is understood, it is better to construe it impersonally, and give it in our language in the passive. In  $\text{עָרֵב}$  and  $\text{עָרֵב}$  is another paronomasia. Most understand by the  $\text{עָרֵב}$ , judge, Zedekiah, who was treated contumeliously by the Babylonians; but it seems preferable to refer it to some of the chief rulers of the Jews at the time of the siege of Jerusalem described by the prophet; or the term may be used collectively. The position of Hengstenberg and some others, that it is selected on purpose to mark a period during which no king of the house of David reigned, might be allowed, were it not for the influence of the foregoing  $\text{עָרֵב}$ , with which it forms the paronomasia. Though the LXX. have rendered the term by  $\phi\upsilon\lambda\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$ , Aq., Symm., and Theod., have  $\kappa\rho\iota\tau\acute{\eta}\rho$ . The siege in question Michaelis thinks was that by Sosius, the Roman general, v. c. 37, when Antigonus, the last of the Asmonæan dynasty, was obliged to submit to the superior power. Whether this prince be specifically intended I shall not determine. So much is certain, that he was most contemptuously treated by Sosius; see Josephus, Bell. Jud. lib. i. cap. xviii. 2.

CHAPTER V.

HAVING just adverted to the calamitous circumstances in which the Jews should be placed at the commencement of the reign of Herod, the prophet foretells in a very explicit manner, the birth of the Messiah, which was to take place during the lifetime of that king, 1. A prediction is then introduced respecting the final dealings of God towards the nation previous to that illustrious event, 2, on which the permanent and universal nature of the new dispensation is announced, 3. The subject of the victories of the Jews over the Syro-Grecian armies is again taken up, 4-8; and the chapter concludes with threatenings both against the Jews in the time of Micah, and the enemies by whom they were to be punished, 9-15.

1 AND thou, Bethlehem Ephratha!

Art small to be among the thousands of Judah,

1. Michaelis remarks, "If not even a word was found in Matt. ii. 5, 6, explanatory of our text, I should believe the subject to be Christ, who was born in the reign of Herod. The whole thread of the prophecy in the preceding chapter leads me to him, and the time of his birth." The Messianic application of the prophecy was formally made by the Jewish Sanhedrim, in their official reply to Herod, Matt. ii. 5, 6; and is admitted both by the Rabbinical and the rationalistic interpreters, though, as might be expected, they differ as to the person of the Messiah. The Targum has,  $\text{מִנְּהָא קְדָמֵי רַפּוּק מְשִׁיחָא לְמַהֲרֵי עָבִיר שׁוּלְטָן עַל יִשְׂרָאֵל דִּי שְׂמִיחָא אֲמִיר מִלְּקַדְמֵי מְיוֹמֵי עֲלָמָא}$ , "From thee the Messiah shall come forth before me, to exercise dominion over Israel, whose name was announced long ago, from the days of

Yet from thee shall He come forth to me
To be Ruler in Israel,

old." The position of Theodore of Mop-suesta, Grotius, Dathe, and some others, that Zerubbabel was intended, is now given up by all; and most interpreters of the German school find their notion of an ideal Messiah sufficiently convenient in explaining this and other passages, as it relieves them from all investigation in regard to positive historical personality. בֵּית-לֶחֶם, Bethlehem, literally, the House of Bread. Arab.

بیت لحم, Beit Lahm, the House of Flesh. It was a small town in the tribe of Judah, built on the slope of a ridge, about six Roman miles to the west by south of Jerusalem, and originally celebrated as the birth-place of David, the first of the line of Jewish kings. עֶפְרַת.
Ephrath, Gen. xlviii. 7, or, as it is commonly written, with the ה paragogic, הֶעֱרַתָּה, Ephratha, appears from the passage just cited to have been the original name of the place. The word has much the same signification as Beth-lehem, being derived from פָּרָה, to be fruitful;
and no doubt the place received both names from the fertility of the region.
Dr. Robinson observes respecting the present aspects of the town: "The many olive and fig orchards, and vineyards round about are marks of industry and thrift; and the adjacent fields, though stony and rough, produce nevertheless good crops of grain." Biblical Researches in Palestine, vol. ii. p. 161.
The names occur as parables in the stanzas, Ruth iv. 11: —

וַעֲשֵׂה-חֵיל בְּאֶפְרַתָּה
וַקְרָא שֵׁם בְּבֵית לֶחֶם

It was likewise called Bethlehem Judah, Judges xvii. 7, xix. 1; Ruth i. 1; Matt.
ii. 5, in order, it is thought, to distinguish it from another place of the same name in the tribe of Zabulon, Josh. xix. 15.
בְּעֵיר, as well as אֶתָּה, is of the masculine gender, contrary to rule in Hebrew, but in accordance with Arabic usage, in which the names of cities are sometimes put in the masculine. In the present instance, however, the change was doubtless occasioned by בָּרַת, which is of that gender, being strongly prominent to the view of the prophet. Pococke, in the notes to his Porta Mosis, chap. ii., and in his commentary on the passage, labors hard to support the opinion of Tanchum and Abulwalid, that בְּעֵיר has the two contrary significations of little and great;

but the opinion rests upon nothing beyond the construction which these writers have put upon the term as occurring in Jer. xlviii. 4, and Zech. xiii. 7, which passages, when closely examined, admit of no other signification being attached to the word but that of little, of small note, or esteem, though it may seem to be supported by the Targumic rendering עֵלְטוֹנִיָּהוּךְ in the former of these passages, and by πομείνας the reading of the Alexandrian MS. of the LXX., and ܥܠܬܘܢܝܟܐ, that of the Syriac, in the latter.

In none of the cognate dialects has the word the signification of greatness or dignity. בְּעֵיר לְהֵיוֹת is literally little in respect of being, little to exist, or be reckoned. There is no occasion to resort to the hypothesis that לְ here forms a comparative, and is equivalent to מִן.
What the prophet asserts is, that Bethlehem was positively little in point of size or population, to rank with the other subdivisions of the tribe of Judah.
Comp. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23. The tribes were subdivided into מִשְׁפָּחוֹת, families, or clans, the chiliads or thousands of which had heads or princes, to whom, from this circumstance, was given the name of רֵאשֵׁי אֲלָפִים, שְׂרָרֵי אֲלָפִים, princes and heads of thousands. It is highly probable that at the time to which the prophecy refers, if not in that of the prophet, the place might not have been able to muster a thousand men. No mention is made of it among the cities of Judah enumerated Josh. xv., though, with many others, it is found in the text of the LXX.
Nor does it occur in the list, Neh. xi. 25,

Whose comings forth have been of old,
From the ancient days.

etc. It is spoken of in the New Testament as Κώμη, a village, or hamlet, John vii. 42. In the present day its inhabitants are rated at eight hundred taxable men. See Dr. Robinson, ut sup. Yet, small and inconsiderable as Bethlehem was, it was to have the distinguished honor of giving birth to the Messiah.

“O sola magnarum urbium
Major Bethlem, cui contigit
Ducem salutis cœlitus
Incorporatum gignere.”
Prudentius, Hymn. Epiph. 77.

Between the former and the latter half of the verse is a marked antithesis. In this respect, אָנֹכִי and מִיָּמֵינוּ, correspond; the former, designating the future coming forth of the Illustrious Ruler here predicted, when he should actually assume human nature; the latter, his ancient comings forth, when he created the world, and appeared to Moses and the patriarchs, and revealed to them the Divine will. The idea conveyed by the noun must be identical with that expressed by the verb. Abenezra, Abarbanel, Grotius, Hartmann, Rosenmüller, Gesenius, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, give origines as the signification of מִיָּמֵינוּ, and regard the term as referring to the Davidic extraction of the Messiah. This signification is likewise strenuously maintained by Hengstenberg; but, instead of finding any reference to the ancient family of David, he adopts the opinion that the object of the prophet is to teach the eternal existence of the Messiah. His position, however, is perfectly untenable, since nothing can be more incongruous than the ascription of locality to eternity, which he expressly does in the translation, “his goings forth (in the sense of places of going forth), are the ancient times, the days of eternity, i. e. the very ancient times.” None of the passages which he alleges proves the local signification; they all describe the act, not the place or time of egress. מִיָּמֵינוּ before אָנֹכִי and in אָנֹכִי מִיָּמֵינוּ, is used in its temporal acceptation, marking the terminus a quo. The LXX. ἐξοδοὶ αὐτοῦ ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς ἐξ ἡμερῶν αἰῶνος. Syriac

ܟܠܥܘܫܘܬܗ ܕܥܘܠܡܐ ܕܥܘܠܡܐ ܕܥܘܠܡܐ, “Whose going forth is from the beginning, from the days of the ages.” Vulg. “Et egressus ejus ab initio, a diebus æternitatis.” The Arab. though unwarrantably free as a version, gives pretty much the true sense:

ومخارجه في اسرايد مند
ايام الدهر, “Whose goings forth in Israel are from the days of the age.” It is, however, not unlikely, that the words في اسرايد, have crept into the text from the preceding clause. Though ܥܘܠܡܐ is used of past duration absolutely in reference to God, Deut. xxxiii. 27, yet it is most frequently employed to denote past, especially ancient time, and is synonymous with ܥܘܠܡܐ, with which it occurs in poetic parallelisms. Comp. the Arab. قدم, præcessit; tempus antiquum. Syr. ܥܘܠܡܐ, ante, coram. In

Ps. xliv. 2, ܥܘܠܡܐ ܥܘܠܡܐ occurs, just as ܥܘܠܡܐ does in the present verse; and in Ps. lxxvii. 6 we have ܥܘܠܡܐ and ܥܘܠܡܐ corresponding to each other. Comp. also Micah vii. 14, 20; Mal. iii. 4. That the dogma of eternal generation or emanation is taught by our prophet, does not appear; but the actual pre-existence of our Saviour, and his active comings forth, in the most ancient times, for the accomplishment of the Divine purposes, he not obscurely teaches. Thus Piscator: “Verto egressiones, nempe egressiones a Deo Patre ad sanctos Patres Adamum, Noachum, Abrahamum, Isaacum, Jacobum, quibus apparuit seseque familiari sermone patefecit.” For the interpretation of Calvin, that the eternal decree respecting the future birth of the Messiah is intended, there is no foundation whatever. The

2 Nevertheless he will give them up

Till the time when she who is to bear hath brought forth,
 And the rest of his brethren
 Shall return to the sons of Israel.

term מוֹשֵׁל, Ruler, here employed, is that used by David in his Messianic Ode, 2 Sam. xxiii. 3 :—

מוֹשֵׁל בְּאֶדָּת אֲדֹנָי
 מוֹשֵׁל יִרְאֵת אֱלֹהִים :

Comp. Jer. xxx. 21 :—

יְהוָה אֲדִירֵוּ מִמֶּנּוּ
 וּמֹשֵׁל מִתְּרֵבֵי הַבָּא
 יִתְקַרְבֵּתִיו וְנִגַּשׁ אֵלַי
 כִּי מִי הוּא—יָהּ עָרַב אֶת לְבָבוֹ
 לְנִשְׁתֵּת אֵלַי נָחָם יְהוָה :

Comp. also Is. xi. 1-4. לִי, to me, is not without emphasis. The Messiah was to come for the express purpose of carrying into effect the will of his Father in the salvation of men; and though Israel is specially mentioned as the sphere of his rule, it is not to the exclusion of the Gentile world, as ver. 3, and numerous passages in other prophets clearly show.

For the verbal discrepancies between the Hebrew text of Micah, and the quotation Matt. ii. 6, the reader is referred to the commentators on the latter passage. It may suffice to remark here, that the Hebrew words cannot with any propriety be rendered interrogatively, as some have proposed, and that the quotation in question, made by the Sanhedrim, and not by the evangelist, is obviously given from memory, and not with any view to verbal accuracy.

2. Notwithstanding the glorious prospect afforded by the promise of the Messiah, it was not to supersede the state of suffering to which the nation was to be previously reduced on account of its sins. Into that state it was to be brought by the Chaldeans, and was not to be fully restored till about the time of his birth. The return from Babylon was only partial at first; but, encouraged by the prosperity which attended the re-establishment of the theocracy, others who resided in the East were induced to follow, and multitudes returned from Egypt and other parts, before the Christian era. The words יוֹלְדָהּ יִלְדָהּ are susceptible of two interpretations. They may either be referred to the Jewish church, and regarded as descriptive of her deliverance from suffering, set forth under the metaphor of a travelling woman; or, they strictly and literally apply to the mother of the Messiah. The former interpretation is adopted by Lipman, Munster, Vatablus, Grotius, Drusius, Dathe, Justi, and others; the latter by the greater number of expositors—among other moderns, by Secker, Michaelis, Hartmann, Rosenmüller, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald. This construction of the passage alone suits the entire connection. It would appear altogether incongruous to introduce a tropical designation of the church, in a verse in which the Jewish people are more than once spoken of in language strictly literal. The birth of the Messiah, in so far as regards its place, and the preëxistence of his person, had been predicted ver. 1: the prophet, who, as already noticed, was contemporary with Isaiah, and in all probability was acquainted with his celebrated prophecy respecting the מַלְאָכָה, Is. vii. 14, now further adverts to the interesting fact by a somewhat indefinite, but by no means obscure reference to his virgin mother. This view is further confirmed by the use of the pronominal affix in יוֹלְדָהּ, which unquestionably belongs to the Messiah, the immediate antecedent, and not, as a collective, to Israel, as given in the LXX. and Targ. By his "brethren" cannot be meant the Gentile believers, which some interpreters have alleged, referring in proof to Ps. xxii. 22; Heb. ii. 11; but his brethren according to the flesh, those who still remained in foreign parts, but who were to be brought back to Judea, in order that they might

- 3 And He shall stand, and feed in the strength of Jehovah,
 In the majesty of the name of Jehovah his God.
 And they shall continue ;
 For now shall He be great unto the ends of the earth.
- 4 And This Same shall be the peace.
 When the Assyrian shall invade our land,
 And tread our palaces,
 We will raise against him seven shepherds,
 And eight anointed men.
- 5 And they shall afflict the land of Assyria with the sword,
 And the land of Nimrod at the entrances thereof :

be there to receive him, when he should come forth to be ruler in Israel. The preposition עַל conveys here the idea of superaddition. The foreign Jews were to be gathered in addition to those who had already been collected. It is thus more expressive than אֵל. That the phrase בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל, the children of Israel, is not here to be taken in its distinctive application to the ten tribes, but denotes the descendants of Jacob generally, may be inferred from the fact, that it is thus appropriated after the Babylonish captivity, the period to which the prophecy refers. It is well known that the Maccabean coins bear the inscription, שֶׁקֶל יִשְׂרָאֵל, the Shekel of Israel. Comp. for this use the term יִשְׂרָאֵל, ver. 1 of the present chapter.

3. The verb עָמַד signifies not simply to stand, but also to stand firm, to endure, continue. This latter acceptation is adopted here by many, who think it better suits the character of the predicted king, who is otherwise represented as sitting upon his throne, and not standing. But, as the following verb רָעָה, signifies to feed a flock, there is the greatest propriety in presenting him to view in the attitude of the good shepherd, who stands, that he may survey the whole of his sheep, and be in readiness to defend them against all attacks. Comp. Is. lxi. 5. The pastoral metaphor is beautifully expressive of royal care and protection. Comp. Iliad i. 263 :

Οἶον Περιδροῦν τε, Δρύαντά τε, ποιμένα λαῶν,

where the scholiast has, βασιλέα ὄχλων. See for this use of the Hebrew verb עָמַד, 2 Sam. v. 2, vii. 7. The power and glory of the Messiah here predicted are those with which, as Mediator, he is invested. Comp. Is. xi. 2 ; Matt. xxviii. 19 ; Heb. ii. 7-9. Jehovah being called "his God," intimates his subordinate official relation. Comp. John xx. 17. If עֵינֵי הַיהוָה, the name of Jehovah, be not here a periphrasis for Jehovah himself, it may be regarded as descriptive of his attributes, or the character in which he hath revealed himself to mankind. The nominative to עָמַד must be the subject over whom Messiah reigns, understood. These were to consist not of believing Jews only, but likewise of believing Gentiles in the remotest regions of the globe, as it follows in the verse. Comp. for עַד אֲסֹף, "the ends of the earth," in reference to the amplitude of the kingdom of Christ, Ps. ii. 8, xxii. 28, lxxii. 8. The verb conveys the idea of security and permanence. Such was to be the character of the new dispensation. It remains to add on this verse, that instead of רָעָה, to feed, two MSS. and some printed editions read רָאָה, to see, while the LXX. and Arab. exhibit both readings ; and that three MSS. and another originally, the Syr., Targ., and Vulg., read וְרָשׁוּבוּ or וְרָשְׁבוּ, they shall return, or be converted, instead of the current reading וְרָשְׁבוּ, they shall remain. The LXX. have ὑπάρξουσι.

4, 5. The words עַל הַשָּׁלוֹם הַזֶּה, And This Same shall be the peace, are inti-

And there shall be deliverance from the Assyrian,
When he shall invade our land,
And when he shall tread our borders.

mately connected with the preceding words, but have no relation to those which follow, except in so far as the victories there assumed were to pave the way for that state of the Jewish affairs during which the Messiah was to appear in the world. הַזֶּה, This, This Same, is used emphatically, with reference to the Messiah, who had just been spoken of. Comp. for a similar use of the pronoun, Gen. v. 29; Exod. xv. 2. שָׁלוֹם, peace, is put, by metonymy, for the author and introducer of reconciliation. Comp. Gen. xlix. 10; Is. ix. 5; Zech. ix. 10; Eph. ii. 14, 17; Col. i. 20. שָׁלוֹם, signifies to restore things to their former state, to make restitution; in Hiph. to restore, or cause to be at peace. Comp. the Arab.

سَلَّمَ, redintegrare, sanare. The substantive is without the article, as frequently in the prophetic writings, when the object is to impart energy to the language, by condensing the mode of expression. If אַשּׁוּר be taken to signify the ancient Assyrian empire, the reference will be to the threatened invasion in the time of the prophet; but this construction ill suits the connection, in which respect is had to the more distant future; and what follows, relative to the resistance of the Jews, does not agree with any successful events in the history of that people during the Assyrian rule. I cannot, therefore, but think, that the term is employed by our prophet to denote the empire of the Seleucidæ, founded by Seleucus, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, by whom he was invested with the government of Babylonia and Media, and who, under the title of King of Syria, subjugated all the countries from the Hellespont to India and the Jaxartes. On the same principle that Darius is called מֶלֶךְ אֲשּׁוּר, the king of Assyria, Ezra vi. 22, though that empire had long ceased to exist, the title might be applied to Seleucus and his successors. To them, during the period of their reign, belonged "the land of Assyria," which is also here called "the land of Nimrod," because, according to the proper rendering of Gen. x. 11, that monarch went forth from Babylon into the country of Assyria, where he built Nineveh and other cities there named. According to this interpretation, the prophecy in these two verses relates to the noble and successful opposition which the Maccabees offered to Antiochus Epiphanes, when he marched against Jerusalem, pillaged the temple, and desecrated every object sacred in the estimation of the Jews. By rousing a spirit of patriotic piety in the breasts of their countrymen, they not only recovered their sacred city from the enemy, but, after a series of the most brilliant victories, drove him to the gates of his own fortified cities, and finally succeeded in securing the national independence. It is to this protracted, but triumphant struggle, the reference is made, Dan. xi. 32. The assertion of Hartmann, that אַשּׁוּר בְּיָסוּד is not Hebrew in its construction, and that, consequently, אַשּׁוּר is to be connected with שָׁלוֹם, is without foundation; for we meet with the very same construction in אֵשׁ אֵז אֲשֶׁה בְּיַסְלָא, Numb. vi. 2. Thus also in Arab. مدینتین

إذا اتفقوا علي راي واحد

اهلهما, "two cities when their inhabitants are of one accord," Locman, Fable I. The numbers seven and eight appear to be used to denote indefinitely a full and sufficient number, as in Eccles. xi. 2. "Give a portion to seven, and also to eight. Comp. also Job v. 18; Prov. vi. 16, xxx. 15, 18, 21; Amos i. 3, 6, 9, etc. So the Greek τρῖς καὶ τετρακτῖς, and the Latin ter quaterque. Were they to be taken literally, there would be no great difficulty in selecting the number from the Maccabean period; but the com-

- 6 And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people,
 Like the dew from Jehovah ;
 Like the small rain upon herbs,
 Which waiteth not for man,
 And tarrieth not for the sons of man.
- 7 Yea, the remnant of Jacob shall be among the nations,
 In the midst of many people,
 Like a lion among the beasts of the forest,
 Like a young lion among the flocks of sheep,
 Which, if he pass through, treadeth down and rendeth,
 And there is none to deliver.
- 8 Thy hand shall be high against thine adversaries,

parison of the above passages shows that such a process would be unwarranted. רְעִיבִים, shepherds, and נְסִיכֵי אֲדָם, princely men, are synonymous, signifying those who took the lead in opposing the enemy, and who administered the affairs of the Jews at the time. Because נָסַךְ also signifies to pour out a libation, Michaelis is inclined to render the phrase אֲדָם נְסִיכֵי אֲדָם, sacrifices of men, and to interpret it of such as sacrificed their life in defence of their country. Not only, however, is the parallelism opposed to this construction of the meaning, but also the use of נְסִיכֵי אֲדָם in other passages. Thus Josh. xiii. 21, נְסִיכֵי סִיחֹן, princes (Comp. Ver. dukes) of Sihon; and Ezek. xxxii. 30, נְסִיכֵי צָפוֹן, there are the princes of the north. The title properly signifies anointed, those who had been consecrated to their office by anointing with oil; and thus is equivalent to מְשִׁיחִים. In the present instance it is used tropically, without any reference to the ceremony. Syr. رُؤَسَايَا اَلْاَمَلَا.

Targ. רַב־רֵבִי אֲנִישָׁא; Arab. عظما من الناس, great men. רָעָה, to feel, being here used in connection with "the sword," must be taken metaphorically, and means to consume, devastate, or the like. To refer רָעָה as its root, is altogether inadmissible. The repetition in these two verses possesses peculiar elegance. הַגִּיל is used impersonally.

Instead of גְּבוּלֵינָה in the singular, גְּבוּלֵינָה in the plural, is the reading of thirty-four MSS., originally four more; the Soncin., Brixian, and Complut. editions; the Soncin. Prophets, and all the ancient versions.

6, 7. The former of these verses depicts the beneficial influence which the remainder of the nation, after its restoration, should exert, by spreading the knowledge of the true God among the nations in the midst of which they were situated; their signal victories against such formidable armies, attracting attention to Him whom they worshipped, and to whom they ascribed their success. During the existence of the new Jewish state, the members of the theocracy had much intercourse with foreigners, multitudes of whom became proselytes to the faith of Jehovah, and were thus prepared to receive the gospel, when preached by the apostles. The idea of number lies both in טֵל, the dew, and רְבִיבִים, the rain; and the sudden raising up of the Jews was to be as entirely a work of Divine providence, and independent of human aid, as the production of the material elements. The seventh verse describes the formidable character of the Jews in reference to the hostile nations by which they were attacked. For the accumulation and the rise in the meaning of the verbs וַתְּרַם וַתַּרְה, comp. Exod. xv. 9 : וַתְּרַם אֶת־הַיָּם וַתַּרְה אֶת־הַיָּם.

8. Here the prosperous aspect of the prophecy closes. The words are ad-

And all thine enemies shall be cut off.

- 9 And it shall be in that day, saith Jehovah,
That I will cut off thy horses from the midst of thee ;
And I will destroy thy chariots.
- 10 I will cut off the cities of thy land,
And raze all thy fortresses,
- 11 I will cut off the sorceries from thy hand,
And thou shalt have no diviners.
- 12 I will cut off thy graven images and thy statues from the midst of thee,
And thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands.
- 13 I will break down thine images of Astarte from the midst of thee,
And destroy thy cities.

dressed optatively to Jehovah, and may be considered as those either of the prophet, or as designed to be adopted by the Jewish church. Comp. Is. xxvi. 11. Her enemies were the enemies of Jehovah.

9-14. The prophet now returns to times nearer his own, and predicts the beneficial moral changes that were to be effected in the condition of his countrymen by the Babylonish conquest and captivity. They had, contrary to the express command of the Lord, Deut. xvii. 16, kept up a formidable body of cavalry, and war-chariots; trusted in their fortified cities; encouraged sorcery, and indulged in abominable idolatry. These were all to be removed, when the Jewish state was broken up; and after God had employed the heathen in punishing his apostate people, they in their turn should be punished for their obstinate adherence to idol worship, notwithstanding the testimony borne against their conduct by the Jews who lived among them. This portion of the chapter is strikingly parallel with Is. xlvi. 6-22. For בְּשֵׁשׁ־בָּנָיִם, see on Is. xlvi. 9; for בְּמִצְרַיִם, comp. עַל־בְּנֵי־יָם, Is. iii. 6; and for בְּשֵׁרֵי־יָם, see on Is. xvii. 8. As בְּגוֹיִם had already occurred in the acceptation of cities, ver. 10, we should scarcely expect it to be again used ver. 13. To remove the difficulty Michaelis compares the word with the Arab. عروة, arbor semper virens; Arnold, with the Arab. غار, speluncus; others propose to read בְּעֵרֵי־יָם, woods, i. e. groves, supposing the initial Yod to have been absorbed by that with which the preceding word terminates; while others would change the word into בְּעֵדֵי־יָם, witnesses, understanding thereby the statues etc., belonging to idol-worship. There seems, however, to be no absolute necessity for departing from the signification cities, only we thereby understand such as were specially appropriated to idolatrous uses, as Jerome suggests. Comp. בֵּית־הַבַּעַל, the city of the house, or temple of Baal, 2 Kings x. 25, by which is meant a separate part of Samaria, where the temple was situated. This construction is required in order to form a parallelism with בְּשֵׁרֵי־יָם, images of Astarte, occurring immediately before in the verse. In all the ancient versions the word is rendered by cities, except the Targum, in which it is translated enemies. Some refer the relative בְּשֵׁרֵי־יָם at the end of ver. 14 to בְּעֵדֵי־יָם, and interpret, unheard of vengeance, but it is more natural to connect it with בְּגוֹיִם, nations, the immediate antecedent, and to regard the prophet as describing the refusal of the pagans, who had enjoyed opportunities of learning the true religion

For Jehovah hath a controversy with his people,
And will contend with Israel.

3 O my people! What have I done to thee?
With what have I wearied thee?

Testify against me.

4 Nay, I brought thee up from the land of Egypt,
And redeemed thee from the house of slaves;
And sent before thee Moses, Aaron and Miriam.

5 O my people! remember now how Balak the king of Moab consulted,

And how Balaam the son of Beor answered him;

[Remember what happened]

From Shittim to Gilgal,

That ye may know the benefits of Jehovah.

of apud, coram, and is equivalent to לְפָנַי, before, just as the forms הִתְהַלַּחְתָּ Gen. v. 24, and הִתְהַלַּחְתָּ Gen. xlvi. 15, are identical in meaning. מִתְהַלַּח, or as it is spelt מִתְהַלַּח in a great many MSS., and in four early editions, standing absolutely, must be taken as a substantive, and not as an adjective qualifying מִתְהַלַּח. Arab.

اتن, stetit, consistit; اتان, petra.
واتن, est omne id, quod durat, et per- manet sua in sede. Schultens, Origg. Hebr. p. 112. Instead of מְוִסְדֵי אֲרָצוֹת, the foundations of the earth, the Arabs call the mountains اوتاد الارض, the stakes, or posts of the earth.

3, 4. The Israelites are asked, in the kindest and most affecting style, what ground of complaint they had against Jehovah, which could have induced them to act the part they did. Comp. Jer. ii. 5, 31. He had demanded of them nothing that was unreasonable. כִּי at the beginning of ver. 4, is very expressive, and is equivalent to nay, on the contrary, or the like. Instead of having done anything to alienate them, God had shown the utmost kindness to them from the beginning; not only rescuing them from Egyptian bondage, but providing them with inspired leaders. Miriam is mentioned, on account of the prominent part she took in celebrating the Divine interposition for their deliverance. She is called נְבִיאָה, the prophetess, Exod. xv. 20, because she led the female chorus which rehearsed the inspired song of Moses. The Targ. on Micah adds: לְמַעַן יִשְׂמְעוּן, to instruct the women. Comp. Numb. xi. 2.

5. The kindness of Jehovah to his people was manifested, not only in furnishing them with inspired teachers, but also in counteracting the designs of Balak, who wished to engage the prophetic influence of Balaam against them; for that avaricious prophet was compelled, contrary to the cherished desire of his heart, to pronounce blessings upon them instead of curses. See Numb. xxii. xxiii. xxiv. The words מִן הַשָּׂדֵי עַד גִּלְגָּל, from Shittim to Gilgal, are not to be constructed with those immediately preceding; for Balaam did not cross over Jordan to Gilgal, but was slain in the land of Midian, as we read Numb. xxxi. 8. Nor are we, with Ewald, to suppose them to be a marginal gloss; but have merely to supply the ellipsis זָכֵר, remember, from the first clause of the verse. To this effect the Targ. הָלָא גְבוּרָתְךָ אֲתַעְבְּרָה לְבָבְךָ מִמִּישֵׁי שְׂמִינֵי עַד בֵּית גִּלְגָּל, “Were not mighty deeds performed for you from the plain of Shittim to the house Gilgal?” Thus also Mun-

- 6 With what shall I come before Jehovah ?
 With what shall I bow to the high God ?
 Shall I come before him with burnt offerings ?
 With calves of a year old ?
- 7 Will Jehovah be satisfied with thousands of rams ?
 With ten thousand rivers of oil ?
 Shall I give my first-born for my transgression ?
 The fruit of my body for the sin of my soul ?

ster, Vatablus, Grotius, Calvin, Dathe, De Wette, Michaelis, Hartmann, and others, There was a peculiar propriety in specifying these two places. Shittim was the name of a valley in the country of Moab, where on account of the impurities committed with the Midianitish women, twenty-four thousand Israelites were destroyed. The evil was so great that it might have caused the Lord to abandon them entirely ; but he mercifully spared them as a people, miraculously divided the Jordan to afford them a passage, and gave them actual possession of Canaan, the land promised to their fathers. In proof of this last act of the Divine goodness, Gilgal is singled out from other places, because it was there they made their first encampment in the promised land. It was situated between Jericho and the Jordan, but no trace of its site now remains. בְּדֵקֵי־יְהוָה, the benefits of Jehovah. Comp. Jud. v. 11 ; 1 Sam. xii. 7 ; Ps. xxiv. 7. In this way the phrase is interpreted by Tanchum, Grotius, Drusus, and by most of the moderns. Calvin observes: "Per Justitias intelligit beneficia quemadmodum multis aliis locis ; and paraphrases thus: "Ut ipsa experientia tibi demonstret quam verax, quam beneficus, quam misericors semper fuerit Deus erga genus vestrum."

6, 7. The Jews convicted of guilt, are represented as most anxious to propitiate the Divine favor. They could not deny the charges that had been brought against them ; nor could they put in any plea of justification. They stood condemned before God and the universe. The language which they employ is not such as the prophet would have taught them, but such as well accorded with the notions which were prevalent among them, some of which had been learned from their heathen neighbors. How much soever they might formerly have grudged the expense of prescribed offerings, they are now willing to bring the most costly and abundant, rams by thousands, and oil sufficient to fill myriads of rivers ; nay, what is more, human victims, and of these the most endeared, their own offspring. In רַבְּבוֹתַי־נְהַלֵּי־שֶׁן, myriads of torrents of oil, is a double hyperbole, quite in the style of the Orientals. For רַבְּבוֹתַי, as thus used, comp. 1 Sam. xviii. 7 ; and for נְהַלֵּי־שֶׁן, Job xx. 17. The fact of the presentation of human sacrifices is fully established in the ancient history of all nations. This barbarous custom was especially prevalent among the Phœnicians, and was by them introduced into the north of Africa, where it continued till the proconsulate of Tiberius. According to Porphyry, the book of Sanchoniathon was full of examples of such sacrifices. That they obtained among the idolatrous Israelites is clear from Jer. xix. 5, xxxii. 35, who offered their children to Moloch or Saturn, after the example of their Phœnician neighbors. Eusebius, in his Præpar. Evangel. lib. iv. 16, enters at length into the subject ; and adduces a passage from Philo Byblius which has a special bearing upon the present text: "Ἐδος ἦν τοῖς παλαιοῖς, ἐν ταῖς μεγάλαις συμφοραῖς τῶν κινδύνων, ἀντὶ τῆς πάντων φθορᾶς ΤΟ ΗΓΑΠΗΜΕΝΟΝ ΤΩΝ ΤΕΚΝΩΝ τοὺς κρατοῦντας ἢ πόλεως ἢ ἔθνους, εἰς σφαγὴν ἐπιδίδουσι, λύτρον τοῖς τιμωροῖς δαίμοσι." "It was customary among the ancients, on calamitous or dangerous emergencies, for the rulers of the city or 8 He hath showed thee, O man! what is good:

 And what doth Jehovah require of thee,
 But to do justice, and love mercy,
 And be diligent in walking with thy God?

the state, to prevent the destruction of all, to offer up the most dearly beloved of their children, as a ransom to divine vengeance."  $\text{הַבָּנִים}$  is the future in Niphal of the root  $\text{בָּנָה}$ , to bend, bow one's self down. Comp. Ps. lvii. 7, cxlv. 14. Instead of  $\text{הַנְּחִילֵי הַנְּחִילֵי הַנְּחִילֵי}$ , rivers of oil, the LXX. who have  $\text{χιδάρων πiónων}$ , or, as the Alex. MS. reads,  $\text{αρνών}$ , have read  $\text{αρνών}$ , fat sheep; which rendering is followed by the Vulg. and Arab., but is unsupported by any other authority. The translator was evidently misled by an improper view of the parallelism.

8. The questions put in the preceding verses do not involve anything like irony, as Rosenmüller and Maurer imagine, but manifestly argue a deep anxiety about an atonement, and at the same time the grossest ignorance of what was necessary to constitute that atonement. In replying to them, the prophet first of all shows, that the ignorance of the people was culpable. They had been furnished with revelations of the mind of God upon the subject.  $\text{הֵבִינִי הַיְהוָה}$ , He (i. e. Jehovah) hath shown or manifested it to thee; or, the verb may be taken impersonally, and rendered in the passive: It hath been shown thee. No MS. supports  $\text{הֵבִינִי}$ , I will show, the reading of the Syr., Vulg. and Arab. Had they searched the Divine records they could not have failed to discover, that, whatever prescriptions relative to sacrifices had been delivered to them, they had never been taught to attach to them any moral efficacy, but the contrary. Both reason and revelation combined to invest them with an ulterior reference. What that reference really was, the Apostle plainly teaches us, Heb. x. 1:  $\text{Σκιὰν γὰρ ἔχων ὁ νόμος τῶν μελλόντων ΑΓΑΘΩΝ}$ : — the  $\text{הַיְהוָה}$  of the prophet. Comp. Heb. ix. 23, where the sacrifice of Christ is, by way of eminence and distinction, called  $\text{κρείττονα θυσία}$ .

Of this, the only intrinsically valuable atonement, the Levitical sacrifices, were  $\text{ὑποδείγματα}$ , instructive examples, or types, which were intended to suggest and foreshadow it; and, connected as they were with the progressive developments, which, from time to time, were made of the sacerdotal character, and the personal oblation of the Great Deliverer promised from the beginning, the worshippers were without excuse if they did not, like Abraham, rejoice in the anticipation of his day. Having referred the inquirer to the revealed method of reconciliation, with a tacit intimation of the importance of availing himself of it, Micah proceeds to describe the conduct which alone could meet with the divine approval. The piety required by Jehovah, he sums up under three heads: strict equity in all our transactions with our fellow men; a heart set on doing them good, according to the claims which they have upon us: and diligent attention to everything belonging to converse with God. Comp. Deut. x. 12, 18. See also, as contrasting a right state of the heart and life with ceremonial services, 1 Sam. xv. 22; Is. i. 11-20; Jer. vii. 21-23; Amos v. 22-24; Hos. vi. 6. A still more compendious description of genuine religion is given by our Lord under the threefold division of  $\text{κρίσις}$ ,  $\text{ἐλεος}$  and  $\text{πίστις}$ , Matt. xxiii. 23; or, as Luke has for the last,  $\text{τὴν ἀγάπην τοῦ Θεοῦ}$ , chap. xi. 42; which shows how completely mistaken Campbell is in referring it to the social virtues, and rendering it fidelity. There can be little doubt that Christ had the passage of Micah in his eye.  $\text{صنع}$ , Arab.  $\text{صنع}$ , fecit, elaboravit in re aliqua; paravit; also, industrius et solers; Syr.  $\text{بصير}$ , astutus, callidus; Eth  $\text{እጅፀ}$ , validus, constans

9 The voice of Jehovah crieth to the city,
 (And he who is wise will regard thy name)
 Hear ye the rod, and Him who hath appointed it.

fruit; to be apt, ready, diligent, to bend the mind to anything; here, to apply it carefully and sedulously to devotional and other spiritual exercises, which are essential to communion with God. Thus the LXX., ἔτοιμον εἶναι; Theod. ἀσφαλίζου: the fifth Greek version, φροντίσειν; the Syr. حَلَمَّ, paratus; Vulg.

solicitem. The idea of humility, which is that adopted in our common version, seems to have been derived from the Arab.

صنع فرسه, to train one's horse, i. e.

by rendering him submissive and patient of restraint; hence فرس صنيع, equus

bene exercitatus. See A. Schultens on Prov. xi. 2. While this grace is an indispensable attribute of true religion, and lies indeed at its very foundation, it is only one of the several important qualities of which it is composed. The term employed by the prophet comprehends them all. Michaelis renders, mit gewissenhafter sorgfalt, "with conscientious solicitude." The comment of Jerome is not unworthy of notice; — "Ita præcipitur ut præparati simus ambulare cum Domino Deo nostro, nulla hora dormire, nullo tempore securi esse debemus, sed semper expectare patremfamilias venientem et diem formidare iudicii, et in nocte hujus seculi dicere: ego dormio, et cor meum vigilat." יִצְחָק is the Hiphil Infinitive, used adverbially. Bps. Butler and Lowth, Mr. Peters, and some others, are of opinion that the sixth, seventh, and eighth verses contain a dialogue between Balak and Balaam; but there does not appear to be sufficient ground for it. The connection of these verses with verse fifth is not so close as they suppose.

9. On the ground of the foreseen determination of the Jews, notwithstanding their present professions of repentance, to persevere in a line of conduct diametrically opposite to that required by the Most High, the prophet proceeds to summon their attention to the certainty of the judgments that were to be inflicted. יְרֵרָהּ for יְרֵרָהּ, to the city, i. e. Jerusalem, by way of eminence. As she was preëminent in privilege, so she was also in regard to wickedness and guilt. גְּשֵׁנִי Gesenius refers to an obsolete root גְּשֵׁ, which he thinks may probably have meant to stand, stand out, and so to be. From such a root both this noun, and גֵּשֵׁ, being, subsistence, substance, may most naturally be derived. The significations will then be, that which really is, something solid or substantial, real wisdom, wealth, power, security, deliverance, or whatever else best agrees with the context. Comp. the Arab. وشي, in the acceptations juvit restituitque ægrotum medicina; abundavit opibus vir; وشاء, opulencia, abundantia opum;

وشي, largitus est. The noun is used in parallelisms with חָכְמָה, wisdom, עֲזָרָה, counsel, עֲזָרָה, assistance, עֲזָרָה, strength, מָגֵן, a shield, etc. The LXX., who render it by ἀληθές, βοήθεια, ισχυς, σωτηρία, ἀσφάλεια, βουλή, give in the present text the verb σώσει, as if they had read עֲזָרָה, from עֲזָרָה; but they may, after all, have attached the same signification to עֲזָרָה. The Syriac has

ܡܘܨܘܪܐ, doctrine; the Targ. מְרַחֵם

teachers. The construction of the word here will depend upon the reading of the following verb. If, with seven MSS., originally one more, and apparently another, one corrected, and one in the margin, the LXX., Syr., Targ., Vulg., and Arab., we read עֲזָרָה, those who fear thy name, the passage will best be rendered, there will be safety or deliverance, i. e. for such. In this case we have to supply the substantive verb, and the ellipsis of לְ, to or for. On the other hand, if we retain the current reading עֲזָרָה,

- 10 Are there still in the house of the wicked treasures of wickedness,
 And the accursed scanty ephah?
 11 Can I be innocent with wicked balances,
 And with a bag of deceitful weights?
 12 Whose rich men are full of violence,
 And her inhabitants speak falsehood;

יִשְׁמַךְ, he shall see thy name, we must, with our own, and other translators, understand אִישׁ before תְּשִׁיחָה, and take the noun in the signification solid, or sound wisdom. That אִישׁ is frequently to be thus understood abstract nouns, comp. Ps. cix. 4, אֲנִי תְּשִׁיחָה, I am prayer, for אֲנִי אִישׁ תְּשִׁיחָה, I am a man of prayer; Prov. xiii. 6, הַטָּמֵא, sin, for אִישׁ הַטָּמֵא, the man of sin, i. e. the sinner; xix. 15, עֲצִלָּה, indolence, for אִישׁ עֲצִלָּה, the man of indolence, etc. What greatly favors the reading יִרְאֵי שְׁמֶךָ is its occurring only in this place, whereas יִרְאֵי שְׁמֶךָ, and other forms of יִרְאֵי with שֵׁם, are of frequent occurrence. It was quite natural for copyists and punctators to substitute the former for the latter, but not the latter for the former. As to the ancient versions, the LXX. may, as frequently, have translated from hearing, and thus have mistaken the pronunciation of יִרְאֵי for that of יִרְאֵי, which it so nearly resembled. The common reading best suits the connection. Before announcing his message, the prophet parenthetically declares, that, whatever might be the treatment it would receive from the bulk of the people, the truly wise would regard it as God's message, and having special respect to his revealed character as thereby disclosed, would find in it security and consolation in the approaching calamities. The name of the Lord is frequently used to express the sum total of the Divine attributes, and often stands for God himself. יִרְאֵי, signifies not merely to see, but to recognize practically, to experience. 1 Sam. xxiv. 12; Ps. xxxiv. 13, lxxxix. 49; Lam. iii. 1. Contrasted with יִרְאֵי שְׁמֶךָ, see Is. xxvi. 10; בְּלִי יִרְאֵי נִסֵּי אֱלֹהֵי הַיָּם, without seeing the signs of the Son-

יִשְׁמַךְ, the LXX., Syr., Vulg., and among the moderns, Newcome and Ewald, take to signify tribe, or collectively tribes, and render in the vocative. The Targ. adopts a metaphorical signification, corresponding to that which attaches to שֵׁיבַט — rendering, מַלְכָּה וְיִשְׁבֵּטָהּ, O King and Prince! The acceptance rod, as emblematical of punishment, is best suited to the connection. Comp. Is. ix. 3, x. 5, 24. יִרְדָּה is also variously translated and explained: some deriving it from the root יָדָה, to adorn; some from יָדָה, to testify; some adopt the signification of the Arab. وعد, minatus fuit; while יִרְדָּה, congregation. There is no necessity for departing from the ordinary signification of יָדָה, to fix, appoint. The only real difficulty lies in the feminine suffix ה, which does not grammatically agree with מַלְכָּה; but even this may be removed by taking the suffix as a neuter, or as referring to יִרְדָּה, the calamity, understood. Comp. Jer. ix. 11. Ewald, höre Gemeinde und wer sie bestellt! "let the community hear, and he that appoints it," understanding thereby the king as principal ruler. Hitzig and Maurer, as in our common version, both make Jehovah the nominative to the verb. Comp. Jer. xlvii. 7.

10—12. Several crimes are here specified as a sample of those which abounded, and on account of which the Divine judgments were to be brought upon the land. For עֵיִר at the beginning of a sentence, comp. Gen. xix. 12. Forty-nine MSS., thirteen more originally, and perhaps one other, with one in the margin, read אִישׁ הָאִישׁ the man, instead of הָאִישׁ; and this is also the reading of the Son-

- Their tongue in their mouth is deceitful.
 13 I will surely smite thee incurably,
 Rendering thee desolate on account of thy sins.
 14 Thou mayest eat, but thou shalt not be satisfied,
 For thou shalt be inwardly depressed ;
 Thou mayest remove, but thou shalt not rescue,
 Or what thou rescuest I will give to the sword.
 15 Thou mayest sow, but thou shalt not reap ;

cin., the Brixian, and five other printed editions, and has the approval of Jarchi, Abenezra, and Abarbanel, but it affords no suitable sense ; and with שָׁרָה in Kenicott's MS. 201, must be regarded as the result of interpretation. Owing to the same cause, numerous MSS. and editions have שָׂרָה. The LXX., Syr., and Vulg., have read שָׂרָה, the fire ; but there cannot be any doubt, that it is only another form of שָׁרָה, there being merely an omission of the Yod, as there clearly is, 2 Sam. xiv. 19 ; and the Aleph corresponds to the same letter in the cognate forms : Chald. שָׂרָה, Syr.

אֵיִס, Arab. ايس, est, existit. The ellipsis of ב before בִּית is not unfrequent. The Hebrews were much given to the falsification of their weights and measures, though such conduct was repeatedly prohibited by the law, Lev. xix. 35, 36 ; Deut. xxv. 13-16 ; and elsewhere severely condemned in their sacred writings. See Prov. xi. 1, xx. 10 ; and for the practice, comp. Ezek. xlv. 9, 10 ; Hos. xii. 8 ; Amos viii. 5. זָעַתְנָה, accursed, from זָעַת, to be angry, indignant. This participial form presents the object as suffering the effects of anger, or as marked with the Divine displeasure. הִזְדַּבֵּת, ver. 11, the LXX., Syr., and Targ., have read in the third person הִזְדַּבְּתוּ, though the two last render it in the plural. As the MSS. show no variation, the present reading must be retained ; but as this verb is never used transitively in Kal, we cannot refer the nominative to God, and interpret it of his inquiring whether he could treat the persons in question as innocent, but must regard the prophet as putting the question, for the sake of effect, into the mouth of one of themselves, and making him ask, how he could possibly lay claim to the character, while he had none but instruments of fraud in his possession ? the antecedent to מִשָּׂרָה, whose, ver. 12, is הַקְּעִיר, city, ver. 9.

13. In this, and the following verses, severe judgments are threatened against the people on account of their iniquitous practices. The LXX., Syr., Vulg., and Arab., render הִתְחַלֵּיתִי, I have begun, or, I will begin, as if it were the Hiphil of חָלָה, but it is that of חָלָה, to be in pain, sick, etc. As here used with the infinitive of הָבָה, to smite, inflict punishment, it gives intensity to the threatening, and expresses the incurable nature of the punishment.

14. הִשָּׂתָה, is not to be referred, with Simonis and Gesenius, to the Arab. وحش, fame exinanitus fuit, but to وشخ, sequior, et imbecillis, infirmus ; and was most likely intended to express what we find in the Syr. سَحْصَظْ, “the diarrhoea shall be within thee.” The LXX. taking הִשָּׂתָה for הִתְחַלֵּיתִי, renders, καὶ σκορδαίει ἐν σοί. הִסַּב is the apocopated Hiphil of הִסַּב, to remove, and expresses the attempt to save goods by removing them out of the way of the enemy. All the ancient versions have adopted the signification of הִשָּׂתָה with שׂ, to seize, lay hold on, but that conjugation of הִשָּׂתָה, has also the signification, to remove anything. See Job xxiv 2.

15. הִדְדָהּ זַיִת. Oil was expressed from the olive, by stamping or treading it out with the foot, in the same way as

Thou mayest tread the olive, but thou shalt not pour out the oil;

And the grape of the new wine, but the wine thou shalt not drink;

- 16 The statutes of Omri are strictly kept,
And all the work of the house of Ahab,
And ye walk in their counsels;
That I may make thee desolate,
And the inhabitants thereof an object of hissing;
Therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.

grapes were trodden. Hence the name  $\text{גֵּת שֶׁמֶן}$ , Gethsemane, or the oil-press, Matt. xxvi. 36. Oil is indispensable to oriental comfort, being used for anointing the body, and perfuming the garments. It is also a very common ingredient in food.

16. Hartmann stumbles at the introduction of this verse; but it is quite in the manner of the prophet, to recur to the wicked character of his people.  $\text{יִשְׂרָאֵל}$  is best rendered impersonally, though it refers to  $\text{עַם}$ , people, understood. Hithpael is here intensive of Piel. Omri is specially mentioned, because he was the founder of Samaria and the wicked house of Ahab, and a supporter of the superstitions of Jeroboam, 1 Kings xvi.

16-28.  $\text{בְּיָמָיו}$ , in order that. The Hebrews did not, indeed, commit the wickedness described with the intention of bringing upon themselves divine punishment; but the punishment was as certainly connected with the sin, in the purpose of God, as if its infliction had been the end at which they aimed.  $\text{וְעָלְתָּ רֵעַרְתָּ אֶת עַמִּי הַשְׁמָאֵל}$ , ye shall bear the reproach of my people, i. e. your own reproach, that which you have deserved; only the meaning is so expressed, in order to derive a high aggravation of their guilt from the relation in which they stood to Jehovah. The LXX. have λαῶν, which intimates that they either read  $\text{עַמִּי}$ , or  $\text{עַמִּי}$ , as a defective masculine plural.

CHAPTER VII.

BEFORE concluding, the prophet once more reverts to the wickedness of his people, which he depicts with the darkest colors, 1-6. He then represents them in their state of captivity, brought to repentance, and confidently expecting the Divine interposition, which would be rendered the more conspicuous by the complete destruction of their enemies, 7-10. The restoration of Jerusalem, and the conversion of the hostile nations, are next predicted, 11, 12; while the previous desolation of Judea is traced to the sins of the inhabitants, 13. Turning to Jehovah, he prays for the undisturbed and prosperous condition of the restored nation, 14; to which a gracious response is given, 15. The overthrow of the nations hostile to the Jews, and their reverence for Jehovah, are then pointed out, 16, 17; and the prophecy closes with a sublime and exulting appeal to his gracious character, 18, and an assurance that the covenant people should experience the full accomplishment of the sacred engagements into which he had entered with their progenitors, 19, 20.

- 1 ALAS for me !
 For I am as when they gather the summer fruit.
 As when the vintage is gleaned :
 There is no cluster to eat,
 No early fig which my soul desireth.
- 2 The pious hath perished from the land.
 And there is none upright among men ;
 They all lie in wait for blood ;
 They hunt each other into the net.
- 3 For evil their hands are well prepared ;
 The prince asketh,

1. In no part of his prophecy does Micah so fearfully describe the universal corruption of manners which prevailed among the Jews as in the first six verses of this chapter. The picture is peculiarly applicable to their character in the wicked reign of Ahaz, during which the prophet flourished, and was awfully anticipative of that which they again exhibited during the reigns immediately preceding the captivity. The preposition ב in בעללזו בעציר בצייר, denoting time as well as comparison, the two nouns in construction must be rendered as if they were verbs, though a literal translation would be, the gatherings of the summer fruit, and the gleanings of the vintage. For בבעירה, the early fig, see on Is. xxviii. 4. The prophet compares the strong desire which he felt to meet with a single pious man, to that eagerness with which the traveller looks in vain for one of those delicious figs after the summer has advanced.

2. Comp. Ps. xii. 1, xiv. 2 ; Is. lvii. 1. הרק, rendered in most of the versions destruction, signifies also a net, which is so called from its enclosing or shutting up whatever it catches. Occurring, as it here does, in connection with the verb צוד, to hunt, it is preferable to take it in this acceptation. The Orientals employed the net for hunting, as well as for fishing. The word is here in the accusative case.

3. This verse is very differently rendered by translators. The version of it which I have given appears to express as literally as possible the ideas, which, it is generally admitted, the prophet intended to convey. היטיב is frequently used to express the doing of anything well, skilfully, aptly, and the like. Here it is intransitive. Ewald, with Michaelis, Vogel and Döderlein, mistakes the meaning of the clause altogether, when he explains it of endeavoring by bribery to prevail upon the magistrates to pronounce that to be good which in itself is evil. שיאל, which he is obliged to convert into שאל, a Pual form, of which no example occurs in the Hebrew language, can only refer to the avaricious passion of the ruler. It it, therefore, the wickedness of their governors and judges, and not that of the people themselves, which the latter clauses of the verse describe. After שאל supply שאל; and after שאל, שאל. The substantive הנה, like the Arab.

هوئى, desideravit, voluit, has here the signification, wish, desire, will. See Schulstern on Prov. x. 3 ; and the Koran ii. 87 :

افكلها جاءعم رسول بما لا
 تهوي انفسكم, "and whenever a messenger cometh to you with that which your souls desire not." Comp. Ps. lii.
 9 ; Prov. xi. 6 ; and for the cognate
 שאל, Deut. xii. 15, 20. שאל, signifies to intertwine, bind together, as the branches of trees, ropes, etc. ; here, metaphorically, to effect by united effort.
 Comp. the Arab. عث, miscuit com-
miscuit, Syr. حث, concordavit.

- And the judge also, for a reward ;
 And the great man giveth utterance to the desire of his soul ;
 They combine to act perversely.
- 4 The best of them is like a prickly thorn ;
 The most upright is worse than a thorn hedge ;
 The day of thy watchmen, thy visitation cometh ;
 Now shall be their perplexity.
- 5 Place no faith in a companion ;
 Trust not a familiar friend ;
 From her that lieth in thy bosom
 Guard the doors of thy mouth.
- 6 For the son despiseth his father ;
 The daughter riseth up against her mother ;
 The daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law :
 A man's enemies are the members of his own family.

Dathe : conjunctis viribus exequentur. The princes, judges, and great men, conspired to set aside all law and right in their treatment of the poor of the land. The suffix ה is to be taken as a neuter, and refers to the injustice practised by the rulers. Thus Calvin : " Deinde complicant ipsam pravitatem : hoc est hinc fit ut grassetur furiosa crudelitas, quoniam conspirant inter se et gubernatores et qui voluit sibi acquirere peccandi licentiam : quasi contexterent inter se funes, confirmant hoc modo pravitatem."

4. Both טוב, good, and יָשָׁר, upright, are here used superlatively. Comp. for this use, Gen. xlv. 23 ; Is. i. 19 ; Exod. xv. 4. It frequently occurs in Arabic. קָדֹרֶךְ is now allowed to designate a species of thorn, and not a brier. As the מ now stands before מַסְכֵּכָה, it must be taken as an emphatic comparative, which derives its force, not from any adjective expressed, but from the noun to which it is prefixed, as in Ps. lxii. 10 ; Is. xli. 24 ; or it may have originally belonged as a suffix to the preceding noun יָשָׁר, in which case טוֹבֵיבֵי יָשָׁרִים must have corresponded to each other, leaving an ellipsis of the כּ which had just been used in בְּהַרְךָ. By "the day of thy watchmen," the period of calamity predicted by the prophets is meant. With this, the following מַסְכֵּכָה, visitation, is explicatively parallel. For יוֹם מַסְכֵּכָה, a day of perplexity, see on Is. xxii. 5. The reference in כּ is not to the watchmen, improperly interpreted by some of false prophets ; nor is it to be confined to the persons of rank and office described ver. 3 ; but to the people generally.

5, 6. אֵיף, Arab. الف, familiaris socius, from الف, conjunxit, sociavit, etc., a familiar, and, by implication, a confidential, friend. מִתְנַבֵּל, LXX. ἀτιμάζει. Comp. Deut. xxxii. 15. The root נָבַל, primarily signifies to wither, fall off as leaves, and tropically to act wickedly, irreligiously, as one that has fallen off from God. Comp. לָבַב, Ps. xiv. 1. נִבְלָה, an atrocious deed, Gen. xxxiv. 7 ; Jud. xix. 23, 24. The state of things here described is that of the most wretched perfidiousness, anarchy, and confusion, in which the most intimate could have no confidence in each other, and the closest ties of relationship were violated and contemned. Comp. Jer. ix. 2-6. — ἄλλοτριους ἀλλήλων εἶναι πάντας τοὺς μὴ σπουδαίους, καὶ γονεῖς τέκνων, καὶ ἀδελφοὺς ἀδελφῶν, οἰκέλους οἰκέλων. Diog. Laert. vii. 32. In language strikingly similar, Ovid describes the iron age :

- 7 But I will look for Jehovah ;
 I will wait for the God of my salvation ;
 My God will hear me.
- 8 Rejoice not over me, O mine enemy !
 Though I have fallen, I shall rise again ;
 Though I sit in darkness, Jehovah is my light.
- 9 I will bear the indignation of Jehovah,
 Because I have sinned against him ;
 Till he plead my cause, and give effect to my sentence ;
 He will bring me forth to the light ;
 I shall behold his righteousness.
- 10 Mine enemy also shall see it,
 And shame shall cover her.
 She that said to me, Where is Jehovah thy God ?
 Mine eyes shall behold her ;

“ Vivitur ex raptō ; non hospes ab hospite tutus,
 Non soror a genero ; fratrum quoque gratia rara est.
 Imminet exitio vir conjugis, illa mariti ;
 Lurida terribiles miscent aconita nocere,
 Filius ante diem patrios inquit in annos.”

Metamorph. i. 144.

Our Saviour appropriates the words to the treacherous and cruel treatment which he taught his disciples to expect from their nearest relatives, Matt. x. 35, 36 ; Luke xii. 53.

7. Having described the wickedness of the Jews, the prophet abruptly changes the scene, and introduces them to view in that state of captivity in Babylon in which it was to issue. There, at a distance from the land of their fathers, they are brought to repentance, and the exercise of true piety ; and seeking again to their covenant God, they express the fullest confidence that he would in due time deliver them from banishment. הִשָּׁאֵן, here used in Piel, signifies to look out for an answer to prayer, divine aid, etc. Comp. Ps. v. 4.

8, 9. Who the enemy intended by the prophet is, cannot be positively decided. Some interpreters think Babylon ; others, Edom. For the former, see Jer. l. 11 ; for the latter, Obad. 12 ; for both, Ps. cxxxvii. 7, 8. בַּת-בָּבֶל, daughter of Babylon, or בַּת-עֲדָמ, daughter of Edom, for Babylon and Edom themselves, is understood in the feminine participle אֹיְבֵהָ, mine enemy. For the idiom, see on Is. i. 8. The Jews understand Rome as professing Christianity to be meant by the enemy. See Pococke on verses 9th and 10th. “Light” and “darkness” are used, as frequently, for prosperity and adversity. The 9th verse contains a beautiful specimen of submissiveness and patient endurance of suffering, from a humbling conviction of the demerit of sin ; accompanied by the firm persuasion, that when the chastisement had answered its end, Jehovah would graciously afford deliverance. צְדִיקָה, righteousness, is here to be understood with reference to the kindness or favor which God was to show to his people, in strict accordance with the tenor of his promises, rather than to the punishment of their enemies.

10. The deliverance of the Jews was to be the occasion of the destruction of their foes, who, because the former had no visible object of worship, and had been delivered into their power, tauntingly asked : אֵי יְהוָה אֱלֹהֶיהָ, where is Jehovah thy God? The feminine suffix refers to בַּת-צִיּוֹן, daughter of Zion, understood.

She shall now be trodden upon as the mire of the streets.

- 11 In the day when thy walls shall be rebuilt,
 In that day the decree shall be extended ;
 12 In that day they shall come to thee
 From Assyria to Egypt ;
 Even from Egypt to the river,
 From sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain.

11, 12. Micah resumes the language of prophecy, and, addressing Jerusalem, announces her restoration, and the way that would be paved for the conversion of the surrounding hostile nations to the true religion. Such appears to me to be the meaning of these verses, which have been very variously interpreted. קח, statute, decree, order, appointment, LXX. νόμιμα, Symm. ἐπιταγή, Theod. πρόσταγμα, some refer to the tyrannical enactments of the Babylonians ; some to the order of Artaxerxes, Ezra iv. 21 ; some to the punishment decreed upon the enemies of the Jews ; some to the idolatrous statutes, with which the Jews complied ; some to the boundary of the Holy Land ; and some to the preaching of the gospel among all nations, of which last interpretation Calvin says : " Sed locus hic non patitur se ita violenter torqueri." Secker, Newcome, Vogel, Döderlein, and others, join הַק to הַקְּחָה, and form a reduplicate verb הַקְּחָה, of the whole ; with whom, as to meaning, Gesenius agrees, who rejects הַק altogether, and renders, dies ille procul abest, Thesaur. p. 1284. What would seem to determine the meaning of the term, as here used, is the light thrown upon הַקְּחָה, to be distant, remove to a distance, etc., by the geographical specifications contained in verse 12th. The subject of both verses is sufficiently proved to be identical, by the repetition of יוֹם הַהוּא, that day, which indisputably is the יוֹם, day, spoken of at the beginning of verse 11th. Whatever the decree or command was, the effect of its promulgation was to be the coming of foreigners from different regions to the Jewish people, reassembling at Jerusalem, וְיָבִיאוּ אֲשֶׁר-הָיוּ. The most natural construction is, that the decree of God respecting the political changes that were to take place, was not to be confined to Babylon, but was to be extended to all the countries round about Judea, in consequence of which great numbers would become proselytes to the Jewish faith. There is an ellipsis of the preposition בְּ, in, before יוֹם, day, in all the three instances in which it here occurs. וְ before אֲשֶׁר-הָיוּ is not pleonastic, but is used, as in several other instances, after words which imply condition or time. See Exod. xvi. 6 ; 1 Sam. xxv. 27. יוֹם is used impersonally : " one, they shall come ;" it is rendered in the plural in the LXX., Targ., and Arab., and one of Kennicott's MSS. reads יוֹמֵי. That וְיָבִיאוּ has originally been וְיָבִיאוּ, the parallelism, compared with other instances of its occurrence, sufficiently shows. The change of וְ into וּ, and vice versa, by transcribers, owing to their great resemblance to each other, is very common. For example in יוֹם הַיָּבֵשׁ וְהַיָּבֵשׁ, 1 Chron. i. 6 ; וְהַיָּבֵשׁ וְהַיָּבֵשׁ, ver. 7 ; וְיָבִיאוּ וְיָבִיאוּ, Ps. liv. 5 ; וְיָבִיאוּ וְיָבִיאוּ, lxxxix. 7 ; וְיָבִיאוּ וְיָבִיאוּ, Prov. x. 32 ; and especially as corresponding to the present case, וְיָבִיאוּ and וְיָבִיאוּ, Ps. cxxxix. 20. The latter reading is found in fifteen MSS., has been originally in eleven more, and is in one printed edition. No objection can be taken from the preposition assuming the poetic form וְיָבִיאוּ, while in the following sentence we have וְיָבִיאוּ ; the same variety appears in וְיָבִיאוּ and וְיָבִיאוּ, 1 Sam. xi. 7. It is also worthy of notice that the LXX. have read וְיָבִיאוּ at the beginning of the verse, as if it had been וְיָבִיאוּ, having rendered it αὶ πόλεις σου. By וְיָבִיאוּ, I understand Egypt, and not fortification. Comp. 2 Kings xix. 24, Is. xix. 6, on which see my note.

- 13 Nevertheless the land shall be desolate
 On account of her inhabitants,
 Because of the fruit of their doings.
- 14 Feed thy people with thy crook,
 The flock of thine heritage ;
 That dwell alone in the wood, in the midst of Carmel ;
 Let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in ancient days.
- 15 As in the days of thy coming forth from Egypt,

Upon this construction, Assyria and Egypt are contrasted, just as they are Is. xix. 23, where the same subject is treated of in almost the same language. נָהָר, the river, κατ' ἔξοχῆν, i. e. the Euphrates, corresponding in the parallelism to אֲשׁוּר. Assyria. The Syr. and Targ. have mistaken צוּר in צוּרֵי, for Tyre; as the latter has מְנֵי, for Armenia. The concluding words of the verse, וְיָרֵם מִנֵּי הַהָרִים וְיִשְׁבּוּ בְּרֵגְלֵיהֶם וְיִשְׁבּוּ בְּרֵגְלֵיהֶם. It does not appear that any specific mountains are intended; the prophet describes in general terms the natural boundaries of the countries from which the persons spoken of were to come. For a prophetic illustration of these verses, see on Is. xix. 23-25.

13. The conjunctive ו in וְיִשְׁבּוּ is used antithetically to introduce a sentence predictive of what should take place previous to the arrival of the events mentioned in the verses immediately preceding. It has the force of but yet, nevertheless, or the like. However bright the prospects which opened upon the Jews in futurity, they were not to forget the punishment that was to intervene, but ought to repent of their sins, to which it was to be traced as its cause. Some interpret אֶרֶץ הַבְּלָיָה, the land, of Babylonia; but this construction seems less apt.

14. In the believing anticipation of the fulfilment of the Divine promises made to the covenant people, Micah addresses a prayer to Jehovah, which, though brief, is distinguished for the poetical elevation of its style, and the appropriateness of its petition. Like many other prayers in the Old Testament, it is prophetic in its aspect. The Jewish people are frequently spoken of under the metaphor of a flock, and Jehovah as their shepherd. See Ps. lxxx. 1. xcv. 7, c. 3. They are also often represented as his special heritage, Deut. iv. 20, vii. 6, xxxii. 9. Some understand שָׁבַד לְבַדָּד, dwelling alone or solitarily, as descriptive of the condition of the Jews in captivity, and רֵגֶל, forest, of the dangers and annoyances to which they were exposed while in that state. That it rather refers to the security and prosperity of their restored condition may fairly be concluded from the meaning of similar language in other passages. Thus, in the celebrated prophecy of Balaam, Num. xxiii. 9, which, in all probability, Micah had in view, we read, הַיְהוּדִים שָׁבַד לְבַדָּד יֵשְׁבוּ, Behold! the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Comp. Deut. xxxiii. 28; Jer. xlix. 31; and for רֵגֶל, as used figuratively for a place of safety and cool repose, see Ezek. xxxiv. 25. The meaning of the prophet is, that on being brought back to their own land, they should no longer be mixed with, and exposed to enemies, but live by themselves in a state of undisturbed tranquillity. For instances of the paragogic Yod affixed to participles, see Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxiii. 16; Obad. 3; Zech. xi. 17. That the Carmel here mentioned must be the celebrated mountain on the coast of the Mediterranean, see on Amos i. 2. The regions of Bashan and Gilead, on the east of the Jordan, were likewise celebrated for their rich pasturage, and were, on this account, chosen by the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, Numb. xxxii.; Deut. iii. 12-17. Comp. as strictly parallel, Jer. l. 19.

15. The answer of Jehovah to the prophet's prayer, assuring the nation,

- I will show them marvellous things.
- 16 The nations shall see it, and be ashamed of all their power ;
They shall lay their hands upon their mouth ;
Their ears shall become deaf.
- 17 They shall lick dust like the serpent ;
Like reptiles of the earth they shall tremble from their hiding-places ;
They shall turn with fear towards Jehovah ;
They shall be afraid of thee.
- 18 Who is a God like thee,
Pardoning iniquity, and passing by transgression,
In regard to the remnant of his heritage ?
He retaineth not his anger for ever,
Because he delighteth in mercy.
He will again have compassion upon us, that the same Almighty power which had interposed in so remarkable a manner for their deliverance from Egypt, would again wonderfully appear on their behalf. Comp. Jer. xvi. 14, 15. Such changes of person as in ה, thy, and ה, him, are common. The reference in both is to the people of the Jews.

16. The גְּבוּרָה, power, spoken of, is that of the hostile nations, of which they were so proud, and which they regarded as invincible, and not that of the Jews when restored, as Junius and Tremellius, Tarnovius, Stokes, and some others, have imagined. The latter half of the verse most graphically describes the silence, astonishment, and utter consternation, with which they should be seized. Com. Jud. xviii. 19 ; Job xxi. 5 ; Ps. cvii. 42 ; Is. lii. 15.

17. An equally graphic description of the state of degradation and terror to which the enemies were to be reduced. Comp. Ps. lxxii. 9 ; Is. xlix. 23, lxxv. 25. For זִמְזָמִים, crawlers, or reptiles, comp. Deut. xxxii. 24. The distinctive use of לִשְׁמָר, to and מִן, from or of, as here used, shows that there is not a change of person in מִן, and that the affix ה refers, not to Jehovah, but to the people of the Jews. The fear ultimately produced in the minds of their enemies was to be a religious fear or veneration which should attract them towards Jehovah as its object. Comp. for this construction of לִשְׁמָר, to exercise reverential regard towards God, Hos. iii. 5. Combined with the circumstances under which the nations were to acknowledge the supremacy of Jehovah, was their standing in awe of the political power of the Jews. See on Is. xix. 17.

18. Impelled by strong feelings of gratitude at the anticipated deliverance of his people, the prophet breaks out into a strain of the sublimest praise and admiration, and gives a description of the gracious character of God, unrivalled by any contained in the Scriptures. The phrase עָלֵי-עֲוֹנוֹתָי, passing by transgression, is a metaphor, taken from the conduct of a traveller who passes on without noticing an object to which he does not wish to give his attention. The idea which it communicates is not, that God is unobservant of sin, or that it is regarded by him as a matter of little or no importance, but that he does not mark it in particular cases with a view to punishment ; that he does not punish, but forgive. Comp. Prov. xix. 11, Amos vii. 8, in which latter passage the verb alone is used. The opposite is expressed by שָׁמַר עֵינָיו, to watch iniquity, Ps. cxxx. 3, i. e. to keep it in view in order to punish it. שְׁאֵרִית, remnant, does not necessarily imply a small or inconsiderable number,

- 19 He will subdue our iniquities ;
 Yea, thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.
 20 Thou wilt grant the truth to Jacob,
 The kindness to Abraham,
 Which thou didst swear to our fathers
 From the days of old.

but merely conveys the general notion of a surviving body of men : here it means those of the Jewish nation who should be alive at the termination of the captivity.  $\text{יָצַח}$ , to delight, according to the Arab.  $\text{حفض}$ , flexit, inflexit, lignum, projecit, properly expresses the bent or propension of the mind, or what we commonly call its inclination towards an object ; hence desire, affection, delight. The combined force of  $\text{יָצַח}$   $\text{יָדָה}$ , bent on kindness, is inimitable, the primary idea of  $\text{יָדָה}$  being that of eager desire or love towards an object. It is the term which is so often rendered loving-kindness in our common version.

19. This verse may be regarded as containing a beautiful epiphonema, in which the people of the Jews exultingly avow their full confidence in the forgiving mercy and subduing power of their God.  $\text{שׁוּב}$ , to turn, in  $\text{יָשׁוּב יְרֵחֵמְנִי}$ , is, as usual before another verb, employed adverbially to signify again. God had often pitied and delivered his people. It is here intimated that his compassion was not exhausted, but should be exercised towards them anew. All the meaning found by Rosenmüller, Gesenius and Maurer, in  $\text{שׁוּב יְרֵחֵמְנִי}$ , is that of disregarding or not avenging, but there is no ground for rejecting the radical idea of trampling under foot as enemies. Sin must ever be regarded as hostile to man. It is not only contrary to his interests, but it powerfully opposes and combats the moral principles of his nature, and the higher principles implanted by grace ; and but for the counteracting energy of divine influence, must prove victorious. Without the subjugation of evil propensities, pardon would not be a blessing. If the idolatrous and rebellious disposition of the Jews had not been subdued during their stay in Babylon, they would not have been restored. The total and irrevocable forgiveness of sins is forcibly expressed by casting them into the depths of the sea. What is deposited there is completely hid from the view, and cannot in any way affect us. Instead of  $\text{חַטֹּאתֵינוּ}$ , their sins, five MSS. read  $\text{חַטֹּאתֵינוּ}$ , our sins, which is the reading of the LXX., Syr., Vulg., and Arab. It may, however, only be a correction ; the change of person we have frequently had occasion to notice.

20. The return from captivity, while it furnished a striking specimen of the covenanted fidelity and kindness of Jehovah, was only preliminary to the infinitely greater display of these attributes in the mission of the Messiah, the Seed of Abraham in whom all the families of the earth were to be blessed. The words of this verse are quoted, with scarcely any variation, in the inspired song of Zacharias, with direct application to Him of whom his son had just been born to be the forerunner, Luke i. 72, 73. Before the names of the patriarchs, a verb signifying to declare, promise, or the like, is understood.

N A H U M .

---

PREFACE.

OWING to the paucity of information respecting the prophet Nahum, little can be said in regard to his life and times. All that we know of him personally is, that he was the native of a town or village called Elkosh, chap. i. 1.

The only historical data furnished by the book itself with respect to the period at which he flourished, are the following: the humiliation of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, by the Assyrian power, chap. ii. 3; the final invasion of Judah by that power, i. 9, 11; and the conquest of Thebes in Upper Egypt, iii. 8-10. But the removal of the glory of the Hebrew kingdoms, to which reference is made, could only be that which was effected by Tiglath-pileser and Shalmaneser, by whom the Israelites were carried into captivity; when the Jews also were harassed and spoiled by the Syrians, as well as impoverished by the large sum of money paid by Ahaz to the former of these monarchs. See Is. vii.-ix.; 2 Chron. xxviii. Sargon, who appears to have succeeded Shalmaneser, not satisfied with the reduction of Phœnicia by that king, and fearing lest Egypt should prevail upon the conquered provinces of the west to join her in a confederacy against him, undertook an expedition into Africa; and, though history is silent as to the event, it would appear from chap. iii. 8-10, that the expedition proved so far successful, that he took Thebes, the celebrated metropolis of Upper Egypt. It was by his successor, Sennacherib, that the last attempt was made by the Assyrians to crush the Jewish people, which issued in the total defeat of their army.

Now, since the last of these events took place in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, and the circumstances connected with it are clearly referred to by Nahum, partly prophetically, and partly as matter of historical notoriety, chap. i. 9-13, it follows that he must have lived in, or about the year B. C. 714. Jarchi, Abarbanel, Grotius, Junius and Tremelius, and Justi, place him in the reign of Manasseh, and some, as Ewald, would make him contemporary with Josiah; but Bp. Newton, Eichhorn, Bertholdt, Rosenmüller, Newcome, Horne, Gesenius, de Wette, Jahn, Gramberg, Winer, Maurer, and Knobel, unanimously agree with Jerome in referring his ministry to the latter half of the reign of Hezekiah. Neither the opinion of Josephus, that he foretold the destruction of Nineveh in the reign of Jotham, nor that of Clement of Alexandria, that he lived between Daniel and Ezekiel, has met with any supporters. But if, as is highly probable, he flourished in one of the latter years of Hezekiah, his prophecy must have been delivered nearly one hundred years before its accomplishment ; for Nineveh was overthrown, and the Assyrian power destroyed, by the joint forces of Cyaxares and Nabopolassar, in the reign of Chyniladanus, B. C. 625.

Considerable difference of opinion obtains with respect to the birth-place of the prophet. That שִׁי־קוֹשׁ, the Elkoshite, was designed to point out the place of his nativity, and not his paternity, as the Targumist interprets, is evident from a comparison of the form with similar instances of the Yod affixed, 1 Kings xvii. 1 ; Jer. xxix. 27 ; Micah i. 1. There are two cities of the name of Elkosh, each of which has had its advocates, as that which may lay claim to the honor of having given birth to Nahum. The one, القوش, Elkosh, is situated in Koordistan, on the east side of the Tigris, about three hours' journey to the north of Mosul, which lies on the same side of the river, opposite to Nunia, supposed to be the site of ancient Nineveh. It is inhabited by Chaldean or Nestorian Christians, and is a place of great resort by Jewish pilgrims, who firmly believe it to be the birth-place and the burial-place of the prophet, to whose tomb they pay special respect. It is, however, generally thought that the tradition which connects this place with his name is of later date ; and that it owes its origin to the Jews or the Nestorians, who imagined that he must have lived near the principal scene of his prophecy ; and that the name had been transferred to the place from a town so called in Palestine just as our colonists have given the name of towns in Britain to those which they have erected in America and Australia. The other place is Elcesi, or Elkesi, a village in Galilee, which was pointed out to Jerome as a place of note among the Jews, and which, though small, still exhibited some slight vestiges of more ancient buildings.* Eusebius mentions it in his account of Hebrew places ; and Cyrill (ad cap. i. 1,) is positive as to its situation being in Palestine.† It has been thought, and not without reason, by some, that Capernaum, Heb. כַּפְּרַת נְהוֹם, most properly rendered the village of Nahum, derived its name from our prophet having resided in it, though he may have been born elsewhere in the vicinity, just as it is said to have been ἡ ἰδία πόλις of our Lord, though he was born at Bethlehem.

Where the prophet was when he delivered his predictions, is not specified ; but, from his familiar reference to Lebanon, Carmel, and Bashan, it may be inferred that he prophesied in Palestine ; while the very graphic manner in which he describes the appearance of Sennacherib and his army, chap. i. 9-12, would seem to indicate that he was either in, or very near to Jerusalem at the time. What goes to confirm this supposition, is the number of terms, phrases, etc., which he evidently borrowed from the lips of Isaiah. Comp. בְּהָא עֵשָׂה וְעַבְרָא, i. 8, and בְּהָא הוֹא עֵשָׂה, ver. 9, with עֵשָׂה וְעַבְרָא, Is. viii. 8, and בְּהָא עֵשָׂה, Is. x. 23 ; בּוֹקֵק וְבוֹקֵקָה וְבוֹקֵקָה, ii. 11, with בּוֹקֵק וְבוֹקֵקָה, Is. x. 23 ;

* " Porro quod additur, Naum Elcesæi, quidam putant Elcesæum patrem esse Naum, et secundum Hebræam traditionem etiam ipsum prophetam fuisse ; quum Elcesi usque hodie in Galilæa viculus sit, parvus quidem et vix ruinis veterum ædificiorum indicans vestigia, sed tamen notus Judæis, et mihi quoque a circumducente monstratus." — Hieron. Pref. in Naum.

† τοῦ ἀπὸ τῆς Ἑλκεσὲ κάμη δὲ αὐτῆ πάντως ποῦ τῆς Ἰουδαίας χώρας.

Is. xxiv. 1 ; בְּכָל-מְתָנִיּוֹם וְהִחֲלָהּ חֲלָהּ, ii. 11, with מִלְאֵי מְתָנֵי הַחֲלָהּ, Is. xxi. 3 ; מֵהֶנָּחוּ עַל-הַהָרִים רְגָלֵי מִבְּשָׁר מִשְׁמִיץ שְׁלֹם, ii. 1, with רְגָלֵי עַל-הַהָרִים רְגָלֵי, Is. lii. 7, etc.

The subject of the prophecy is the destruction of Nineveh, which Nahum introduces, after having in the first chapter, and at the beginning of the second, depicted the desolate condition to which, in the righteous providence of God, the country of the ten tribes had been reduced by the Assyrian power; the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, whose destruction, and that of his army, he predicts; and the joyful restoration of both the captivities to their own land, and the enjoyment of their former privileges. His object obviously was, to inspire his countrymen with the assurance, that, however alarming their circumstances might appear, exposed as they were to the formidable army of the great eastern conqueror, not only should his attempt fail, and his forces be entirely destroyed, but his capital itself should be taken, and his empire overturned. The book is not to be divided into three separate parts, or prophecies, composed at different times, as some have imagined, but is to be regarded as one entire poem, the unity of which is plainly discoverable throughout.

The style of Nahum is of a very high order. He is inferior to none of the minor prophets, and scarcely to Isaiah himself, in animation, boldness, and sublimity; or, to the extent and proportion of his book, in the variety, freshness, richness, elegance, and force of his imagery. The rhythm is regular and singularly beautiful; and with the exception of a few foreign or provincial words, his language possesses the highest degree of classical purity. His description of the Divine character at the commencement is truly majestic; that of the siege and fall of Nineveh inimitably graphic, vivid and impressive.

CHAPTER I.

THE prophet opens with a sublime description of the attributes and operations of Jehovah, with a view to inspire his people with confidence in his protection, 2-8. The Assyrians are then unexpectedly addressed and described, 9-11; and their destruction, together with the deliverance of the Jews connected with that event, are set forth in the language of triumph and exultation, 12-15.

1 THE SENTENCE OF NINEVEH :

The Book of the Vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2 Jehovah is a jealous and avenging God ;

Jehovah is an avenger and furious ;

Jehovah is an avenger with respect to his adversaries ;

1. For the meaning of נָפֶשׁ, see on Is. xiii. 1; and for the historical circumstances connected with Nineveh, see on Jonah i. 2. Between the time of the prophet just referred to and that of Nahum, there elapsed a period of about one hundred and fifty years. The inscription consists of two parts; the former of which is supposed by some to be from a later hand. If genuine, we should rather expect the order to have been reversed.

1. The exordium, which begins here and reaches to ver. 8, is highly magnificent. The repeated use of the Incommunicable Name, and of the participle פָּרַע, avenging or avenger, gives great force to the commencement. Nothing can exceed in grandeur and sublimity the description which the prophet furnishes of the Divine character. The attributes of infinite purity, inflexible rectitude, irresistible power and boundless goodness, set forth and illustrated by images borrowed from the history of the Hebrews, the scenery of Palestine, and the more astounding phenomena of nature, present to view a God worthy of the profoundest reverence, the most unbounded confidence, and the most intensive love. How inferior the otherwise sublime description given of the anger of Jove by Æschylus :

χθῶν σεσάλευται·

βρυχία δ' ἠχώ παραμυκῆται βροντῆς, ἕλικες δ' ἐκλάμπουσι στεροπῆς ζάπυροι, στρόμβοι δὲ κόνιν εἰλίσσουσι· σκιρτᾷ δ' ἀνέμων πνεύματα πάντων, εἰς ἄλληλα στάσιν ἀντίπνον ἀποδεικνύμενα.

Prom. vincit, 1089.

נִיזַרְ, jealous, from נִזַרְ, to be warm,
ζηλώ, burn with zeal, anger, jealousy.
The term is here used ἀνδρωποπαδῶς, principally in the last of these acceptations, though not to the entire exclusion of the others. The term describes a keen feeling of injured right, coupled with a strong inclination to see justice done to the parties concerned. מַלְכֵּי לַבַּיִת, lit. a lord, or master of fury, an idiom by which the possession of an attribute or quality is frequently expressed. Com. מַלְכֵּי הַחֵן לַבַּיִת
a master of dreams, i. e. a dreamer; מַלְכֵּי הַלֶּשֶׁת, a master of the tongue, i. e. eloquent. In these verses the prophet appears to have an eye specially to the judgments which God had brought upon his country by means of the Assyrians, both when they carried away the ten tribes, and now when they had again rushed into the land, and taken the fortified cities of Judah. רָאָה, properly signifies to watch, observe, in a bad sense, to mark for punishment. Arab. رَأَى, oculos con-

- He keepeth his anger for his enemies.
 3 Jehovah is long-suffering, but great in power;
 He will by no means treat them as innocent:
 Jehovah hath his way in the whirl-wind and in the storm,
 And the clouds are the dust of his feet.
 4 He rebuketh the sea and maketh it dry,
 He parcheth up all the rivers:
 Bashan languisheth, and Carmel,
 And the bloom of Lebanon languisheth.
 5 The mountains quake at him,
 And the hills are melted;
 The earth heaves at its presence,
 The world and all that inhabit it.
 6 Before his indignation who can stand?
 And who can subsist in the heat of his anger?
 His fury is poured out like fire,
 And the rocks are overthrown by him.
 7 Jehovah is good, a fortress in the day of distress;
 And knoweth those that trust in him.
 8 But with an overflowing inundation

vertit ad rem; נֹזֵר, custodem et observatorem egit. Comp. Ps. ciii. 9; Jer. iii. 5, 12; and נֹזֵר, Ps. cxxx. 3.

8. נֹזֵר לֹא יִטְהַר, holding pure will not hold pure, i. e. will not treat as innocent those who are guilty, but, on the contrary, punish them according to their demerit. LXX. ἀδοῶν οὐκ ἀδοῶσι. Com. Exod. xx. 7, xxxiv. 7. The idea conveyed by the metaphor, the clouds are the dust of his feet, is exceedingly sublime. Large and majestic as the clouds may be, in reference to God, they are but as the most minute particles of dust raised by the feet in walking. קָבַס, signifies light dust or powder, what is easily raised.

4. What is here predicated of Jehovah is attributed to our Saviour, Luke viii. 24: ἐπιτίμησε — τῷ κλύδωνι τοῦ ὕδατος. The action involves omnipotence. נִשְׁבַּח is a contracted form of the Piel, for נִשְׁבַּח, as הָבַח for הָבַח, Lam. iii. 33, in both of which the radical Yod gives its vowel to the preformative letter.

5 There is no authority for rendering

נִשְׁבַּח, to be burnt up: none of the MSS. or ancient versions directing us to any root signifying to burn. The verb is likewise thus rendered in our common version, 2 Sam. v. 21, but the marginal reading is, took them away. The Targ. indeed has נִשְׁבַּח, vastata est, but the LXX. render ἀνεστάλη. Symm. ἐκωήθη. The Syr. שָׁבַח, shaketh. Vulg. contremuit. The root is שָׁבַח, to raise, lift up; intransitively, to lift up one's self; and appropriately expresses here the raising or heaving of the ground by an earthquake.

6. The pouring out of wrath, like fire, would seem to be a comparison taken from volcanoes, which pour out furiously their streams of liquid fire over the circumjacent regions. The breaking in pieces of the rocks, in the following hemistich, confirms this idea. Comp. Jer. li. 25, 26.

7, 8. There is a marked antithesis in these two verses, in the course of which the prophet arrives at his main topic, the destruction of Nineveh. Ver. 7 beauti-

He will effect a consummation of her place,
And darkness shall pursue his enemies.

9 What devise ye against Jehovah?

He will effect a consummation ;
Distress shall not twice arise.

fully depicts the safety and happiness of those who make God their refuge, how severe soever may be the calamity which threatens or may have overtaken them ; and was primarily intended to administer comfort to the pious Jews in the prospect of the Assyrian attack by Sennacherib. עִירָא, to know, is here, as frequently, taken in the sense of knowing with regard, kindness, or love. Comp. Ps. i. 6, cxliv. 3 ; Amos iii. 2. In עִירָא עֲפָרָה, the metaphor of a river impetuously overflowing its banks, rushing into the adjacent country, and passing through, carrying all before it, is employed to denote the ruthless invasion of a country by a hostile and powerful army. It is used by Isaiah, chap. viii. 8, to describe the resistless entrance of the Assyrian army into Palestine ; and here Nahum appropriates the language for the purpose of describing the triumphant progress of the Medo-Babylonian troops when advancing towards Nineveh. He not only beholds, in prophetic vision, their approach to the devoted city, but announces its complete destruction. It is usual with the prophets, as it is with the Oriental poets, when powerfully affected, to introduce into their discourse persons or objects as acting, without having previously named them. See on Is. xiii. 2 ; and comp. עִירָא, ver. 11 of the present chapter. See Nordheimer's Heb. Gram., § 867. They, as it were, take it for granted, that every one must, like themselves, clearly perceive the reference. On this principle there can be no difficulty in accounting for the feminine pronominal affix in עִירָא, "her place," i. e. the place of Nineveh, the עִיר, city, or metropolis of Assyria, the overthrow of which the prophet was afterwards to describe, and which he here merely touches upon by way of anticipation. The use of עִירָא, place, is not without emphasis. Comp. chap. iii. 17. Those who desire to see the difference of opinion existing both among ancient and modern writers respecting the actual site of Nineveh, may consult Bochart, Phaleg. lib. iv. cap. xx. Lucian, speaking of it, says, ἡ Νίβος μὲν ἀπόλωλεν ἤδη, καὶ οὐδὲν ἔχνος ἔτι λειπὸν αὐτῆς, οὐδ' ἂν εἴπῃς ὅπου ποτ' ἦν. Dialog. entitled Ἐπισκοποῦντες. Bochart, referring to the city of the name mentioned by Ammianus, expresses himself thus : Merito dubitatur an restaurata fuerit eo in loco, in quo prius condita." In the Hebrew MSS. there is no various reading of עִירָא ; but the rendering of the LXX., τοὺς ἐπιχειρομένους, and of Aq., ἀντισταμένων, supported by Theod. and the fifth Greek version, would indicate, that their authors read עִירָא or עִירָא-עִירָא, in favor of which עִירָא in the following hemistich might be adduced. The Syriac, however, Vulg., and Symm., read with the received text.

9. By a sudden apostrophe Nahum here turns to the invaders, and boldly challenges them to account for their temerity in daring to oppose themselves to Jehovah. On which he repeats what he had declared in the preceding verse respecting the total destruction of the Assyrian power, and adds, for the special encouragement of the Jews, that it should never annoy them again. The parallel to this brief apostrophe we have more at length, Is. xxxvii. 23-29. For the force of עִירָא, twice, comp. עִירָא עִירָא לִי אֲשַׁנָּה לִי, 1 Sam. xxvi. 8. That the renewal of the affliction does not refer to any supposable future overthrow of the Assyrians, as Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Hitzig, Ewald, and others maintain, but to any further calamity to be apprehended

- 10 For though they are closely interwoven as thorns,
And thoroughly soaked with their wine,
They shall be consumed like stubble fully dry.
- 11 From thee he came forth,
The deviser of mischief against Jehovah,
The wicked counsellor.
- 12 Thus saith Jehovah :
Though they are complete and so very numerous,
Yet in this state they shall be cut down,
And he shall pass away :

from them by the Jews, appears from ver. 12 to be the true construction of the meaning.

10. However strong and vigorous the Assyrian army might be, its complete destruction would easily be effected by Jehovah.  $\text{וְעַ, to, even to,}$  is here used as a comparative particle of degree: to the same degree as, or like thorns. Comp. 1 Chron. iv. 27. Briers and thorns are employed by the prophets to denote the soldiers composing a hostile army. See Is. x. 17, xxvii. 4. The metaphor is here taken from a thicket of thorns, the prickly branches of which are so closely intertwined as to present an impenetrable front to those who would enter it. Such were the celebrated military phalanxes of antiquity, consisting of bodies of troops armed with long spears, and arranged in the form of a square. The other metaphor is taken from drunkards who drench or saturate themselves with wine, and denotes the degree of moisture which those thorny warriors possessed, and by which they were prepared to resist the action of fire. No account is to be made of the reading  $\text{פְּרִיָּים, princes,}$  which Newcome adopts from the Targ. and Syr. It is found in no Heb. MS.  $\text{לֶחֶם, to eat,}$  is often used to express consumption by fire. The application of the language of this and the preceding verse to the literal inundation of the Tigris, the drunkenness of the Assyrian camp, and the burning of the palace, etc., at Nineveh by Sardanapalus, as related by Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii., is not justified either by the import and usage of the terms, or by chronology, the catastrophe described by Nahum not having taken place till long after the time of that monarch.

11.  $\text{מִמֶּנִּי, from thee,}$  O Nineveh! in the feminine. Sennacherib, whose machinations against Jehovah had been adverted to ver. 9, is here intended. The Heb.  $\text{בְּלִיַּעַל,}$  frequently rendered in our common version Belial, properly signifies worthlessness, inutility, and by implication, badness in a moral sense, wickedness. Hence the idiomatic combinations,  $\text{בֶּן־בְּלִיַּעַל, a man of Belial, a wicked man;}$   $\text{בֶּן־בְּלִיַּעַל, a son of Belial, a bad man;}$   $\text{בַּת־בְּלִיַּעַל, a daughter of Belial, a wicked woman.}$  The word is compounded of  $\text{בִּלְיָ, without,}$  and  $\text{לַעֲזָ, profit.}$

12. Another description of the formidable appearance of the hostile army, accompanied with a prediction of its sudden and complete annihilation, the flight of Sennacherib, and the future immunity of the Jews from an invasion on the part of the Assyrians.  $\text{שְׁלֵמֵי־מִיָּם, complete,}$  expresses the unbroken condition of the army of the enemy, and their being fully provided with everything requisite for the successful siege of Jerusalem. The word may also be designed to convey the idea of mental completeness, i. e. in this connection, security, martial courage. Thus Kimchi,  $\text{לֹא יִפְחָדוּ מֵאֲדָבִי כִי כָל,}$  they are not afraid of man, for they have subdued all the countries.  $\text{בְּזֶ,}$  as used the second time, signifies thus, so, in this state, as thus con-

Though I have afflicted thee,
I will afflict thee no more.

13 For now I will break his yoke from off thee,
And burst thy bands asunder.

14 And with respect to thee, Jehovah hath commanded:
There shall no more be sown any of thy name;

From the house of thy gods I will cut off the graven and the molten image;

stituted. The change of number from the plural בְּגוֹזֵה, "they are, or shall be cut down," to עָבַר, "he passeth away," is obviously intended to distinguish between the overthrow of the Assyrian army, and the immediate departure of Sennacherib to his own land. The nominative to עָבַר is יוֹעֵץ בְּלִבְעַל־אֱלֹהִים in the preceding verse. קָטַץ, to cut, or mow down, is a metaphor derived from the hay harvest, and forcibly sets forth the sudden and entire destruction of an army. See for the historical facts, 2 Kings xix. 35; Is. xxxvii. 36, 37. At the close of the verse, Jehovah directs the discourse to his people, graciously assuring them that, though he had employed the Assyrian power to punish them, he would do so no more. Newcome, almost entirely on the authority of the LXX., improperly changes גְּבוּזוֹ בְּגוֹזֵה וְהָן רַבִּים וְהָן שְׂלֵמִים into גְּבוּזוֹ עָבַר אֱלֹהִים מִשְׁלַל מִן־הָן גְּבוּזוֹ וְהָן רַבִּים בְּן־גְּבוּל וְהָן עָבַר, "Though the Ruler of many waters has thus ravaged, and thus passed through." That these ancient translators did, from hearing אֱלֹהִים שְׂלֵמִים read as מִשְׁלַל מִן־הָן, render, καταρχῶν ἰδδῶν πολλῶν, there can be no doubt; but then, they place the words in apposition with τὰδε λέγει κύριος; and make the Lord, and not the king of Assyria, to be "the ruler of many waters." The Syr. following the LXX., only changing the singular into the plural, has قَمَبَ مَتَا سَمِيئِي "respecting the heads of many waters." עָבַר עָבַר is merely a defective reading of עָבַר עָבַר, which is found in a number of MSS., and in some editions. The object of the verb is Judah, understood, which Jehovah here kindly addresses, and not Nineveh, as Michaelis and Hitzig suppose. The Jews are addressed as a female, as they are in the words הַיְיָ יְהוָה הַיְיָ שְׂלֵמִי גְדֹרֵי הַיְיָ, Celebrate thy festivals, O Judah! perform thy vows. Chap. ii. 1. On the introduction of a predicate without previous mention of the subject, see on ver. 8. The meaning is, that the Jews were to be no more afflicted by the Assyrians, and not that Divine judgments were never afterwards to be inflicted upon them by others.

13. The suffix הַיְיָ has here the same reference as in the preceding verse, and הַיְיָ in בְּגוֹזֵהוּ, "his yoke," to the king of Assyria. Comp. Is. x. 27; Jer. ii. 20. For מִן־הָן, some think the LXX. and Vulg. read מִן־הָן, which is the reading of several MSS.; but they both signify a staff or pole; only the former denotes what is placed on the neck, in order to bear a burden.

14. We have here another apostrophe to the Assyrian monarch, announcing to him, that his dynasty should not be perpetuated, that his favorite idols should be destroyed, that the very temple in which he worshipped them should become his grave. When it is said, that "no more of thy name shall be sown," the meaning is not, that none of his sons should succeed him in the government, but that his dynasty should cease on the arrival of the event predicted by Nahum, the destruction of Nineveh. The Medes being great enemies to idolatry, those of them who composed the army of Cyax-

I will make it thy grave,
Because thou art worthless.

ares would take singular pleasure in destroying the idols which they found in the chief temple at Nineveh. No mention is made in history of the sepulture of Sennacherib, but we are expressly told, 2 Kings xix. 37, Is. xxxvii. 38, that he was slain by two of his sons while in the act of worship in the temple of Nisroch his god ; and there can be no doubt that it is to this event reference is here made. עֲשֶׂה stands elliptically for אֶעֱשֶׂה, I will make it, i. e. the temple of thy gods, thy grave. Some take תְּלֵיךְ, thou art light, in the same sense in which the Chaldee תְּלֵיךְ is used Dan. v. 27, but without sufficient ground in Hebrew usage. In application to persons it always signifies to be the object of shame or disgrace. Though to be buried in a temple naturally conveys to our minds the idea of honorable interment, it is otherwise here, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case.

---

CHAPTER II.

AFTER prophetically describing the joyful announcement of the overthrow of the Assyrian power, 1 ; and calling upon the Jews manfully to defend Jerusalem against the attack of Sennacherib, in the assurance that there would be a glorious restoration of the whole Hebrew people, 2, 3 ; the prophet arrives at his main subject, the destruction of Nineveh, the siege and capture of which he portrays with graphic minuteness and in the most sublime and vivid manner, 4-11. In a beautiful allegory he then, with triumphant sarcasm, asks where was now the residence of the once conquering and rapacious monarch ? 12, 13 ; after which, Jehovah is introduced, expressly declaring that he would assuredly perform what he had inspired his servant to predict.

---

1 BEHOLD ! upon the mountains are the feet of him that announceth good,
That publisheth peace :
Celebrate thy feasts, O Judah ! perform thy vows,
For the wicked shall no more pass through thee ;
He is entirely cut off.

1. Some interpreters refer these words to the messengers which should arrive from the East, announcing to the inhabitants of Judah the joyful intelligence of the destruction of Nineveh, which had been briefly hinted at in the course of the preceding chapter ; but it better accords with the spirit and bearing of the immediate connection to apply them to what took place on the miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem, recorded Is. xxxvii. 36. They are almost identical, so far as they go, with the language of Isaiah, chap. lii. 7, relative to the return from Babylon. During the Assyrian invasion, the inhabitants of Judah were cut

- 2 The disperser hath come up before thee ;
Keep the fortress, watch the way,
Make fast the loins,
Strengthen thee with power to the utmost.
- 3 For Jehovah will restore the excellency of Jacob,
As he will the excellency of Israel ;
Though the emptiers have emptied them,
And destroyed their branches.
- 4 The shield of his heroes is dyed red,

off from all access to the metropolis ; now, they would be at liberty to proceed thither as usual, in order to observe their religious rites. בִּלְיָלִים, Belial, doubtless means the same as יוֹעֵץ בְּלִיַּעַל, wicked counsellor, chap. i. 11 ; i. e. as there explained, Sennacherib. Restricted as the declaration here made must necessarily be to this monarch, the passage is nowise at variance with the fact, that Manasseh was for a time in the power of the Assyrians, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11.

2. Most moderns adopt the interpretation of Jerome, who is of opinion, that the prophet here turns to Nineveh, and directs the attention of her monarch to the approach of the Medo-Babylonish army. I rather think with Abarbanel, Kimchi, Jarchi, Hezel, Dathe, and others, that the words are addressed to Hezekiah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for the purpose of inspiring them with courage to hold out during the Assyrian attack.

פָּזַר, from פָּזַן. Arab. فيس, abiit, peregrinatus fuit, to scatter, disperse, properly signifies the Disperser, and is appropriately applied to the king of Assyria, by whose army the inhabitants of the different countries which it invaded were scattered from their abodes. Some prefer rendering the word by hammer, and compare Prov. xxv. 18, and Jer. li. 20, in the latter of which passages we have פָּצַע from פָּצַע, to break in pieces, disperse, etc., rendered in our common version battle-axe. The address is beautifully abrupt, and derives great force from the use of the Infinitive instead of the Imperative of all the four verbs which here occur. The fuller forms would be נָצַר מְצִיָּה, נָצַר מְצִיָּה, etc., נָצַר מְצִיָּה, etc., form a paronomasia.

3. Further to encourage the inhabitants of Jerusalem, a promise is here given of the restoration of the Hebrew people to their former independence and glory. גָּאֹרַת גְּבוּרָה, etc., is not to be interpreted of the pride of the Hebrews, nor of the proud and insulting conduct of their enemies towards them ; but, as in Ps. xlvii. 5 ; Amos vi. 8, it means the land of Canaan, as distinguished above all other countries. This land, as the prophet immediately adds, had been spoiled by the Assyrians, who had not only carried away the ten tribes into captivity, but taken the fortified cities of Judah ; but it was again to be restored, partly on the destruction of the Assyrians, and completely on the return from Babylon. שָׁב, to return, has here the force of the Hiphil הִשְׁבִּיב, to restore, as in Numb. x. 36 ; Ps. lxxxv. 5. Connected as this verb is with the future, implied in the abbreviated form נָצַר, etc., in the preceding verse, it is to be rendered in this tense. Jacob and Israel are, as frequently, put for the people of the two kingdoms. The devastation effected by the Assyrians is described by a metaphor taken from the pruning of vines, or the cutting off of the young twigs or shoots. Parallel to the promise made in this verse is that given by Isaiah, chap. xxxvii. 31, 32.

4. The prophet now proceeds to describe the siege and capture of Nineveh,

The warriors are clothed with scarlet ;
 The chariots are furnished with fiery scythes,
 In the day of his preparation ;
 And the cypresses are brandished.

which involved the downfall of the Assyrian empire. The formidable, terrific, and invincible appearance of the Medo-Babylonish army is first noticed. גִּבְרֵי־יָהוּהָ, his heroes, i. e. the mighty men of Cyaxares. The suffix is the less frequent form, instead of יָי, but represents more of the primitive pronoun אָהָי, of which both are fragments. עֲרֵבָה is the Pual participle of עֲרָבָה, to be red ; and is applied to the shields, to intimate that they were dyed red. The bull's hide with which they were commonly covered was easily susceptible of this process ; and, on being anointed with oil, would shine brightly. See on Is. xxi. 6. This interpretation of the word, which is confirmed by the meaning of the corresponding principle, in the following hemistich, is preferable to that which would make it express the idea of fiery, sparkling, or the like. "Bloodstained is altogether to be rejected. The LXX. mistaking עֲרֵבָה for עֲרָבָה, preposterously render ὀπλα δυναστείας αὐτῶν εἰς ἀνδρόπων. עֲרֵבָה, lit. are crimsoned, is a ἀπαξ λεγ., but is the Pual participial form, and is evidently derived from עָרַבָה, the name specially used to denote the coccus, or worm which was used in dying, to give to cloth a deep scarlet color. The manufacture of such stuffs was chiefly carried on by the Tyrians and Lydians. The LXX. have also mistaken this word for עֲרֵבָה, ἐμπαίζοντας, in which they are followed by the Syr. Pollux describes the Medes as wearing a cloth called Sarages, which was of scarlet color, striped with white ; Σαραγης, Μηδων τι φορημα, πορφυρους, μεσολευκος χιτων. Lib. i. cap. 13. עֲרֵבָה עֲרֵבָה, with fiery scythes. That עֲרֵבָה stands here by transposition of the first two letters for עֲרָבָה, cannot be admitted ; the plural of עֲרָבָה, a lamp, or torch, being always עֲרֵבָה, in the masculine, so that the Syr., Targ., etc., give an erroneous interpretation. עֲרֵבָה, iron, steel. Syr. عَرَبَا the same. Com. Arab. فلد, secuit, in partes concidit. فولان, ferrum durum, chalybs. مفلون, e chalybe confectus, de gladio. For the manufactory of swords of the finest steel, not only Damascus but certain towns on the east of the Caucasus have long been celebrated ; and that this compound metal is of high antiquity, is universally allowed. Its name, Chalybs, is derived from the Chalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine sea. It is doubtless what the prophet Jeremiah means by עֲרֵבָה עֲרֵבָה, iron from the North, and which he distinguishes from עֲרָבָה, common iron, chap. xv. 12. Now there appears to be no part of the war-chariots entitled to the character of irons flashing with fire, but the falces or scythes, which were "fixed at right angles to the axle, and turned downwards, or inserted parallel to the axle into the felly of the wheel, so as to revolve, when the chariot was put in motion, with thrice the velocity of the chariot itself ; and sometimes also projecting from the extremities of the axle." Dr. William Smith's Diet. of Greek and Roman Antiquities, art. Falx. The ἀρματα δρεπανηφόρα were justly reckoned among the most terrific implements of ancient warfare, as they mowed down all that came in their way. The עֲרֵבָה fire of these scythes was the coruscations produced by their excessive brightness and the rapidity of their motion. Instead of עֲרֵבָה, "with fire," seven MSS., originally one more, and the Soncín. edition of the Prophets, read עֲרֵבָה "like fire." The suffix in עֲרֵבָה may either form an

- 5 The chariots dash madly on the commons,
 They run furiously in the open places ;
 Their appearance is like that of torches,
 They flash like lightnings.
- 6 He remembers his nobles ;
 They stumble in their march ;

accusative to כְּבָרָה, or the genitive of an agent not mentioned — the hostile commander. The latter construction is preferable, as it refers the day of his preparation to the period fixed upon by the general for commencing the attack. It would only be then that the scythes would be fixed in the chariots : it being not only useless but dangerous to have them attached at other times. By כְּיָרֵךְ, cypresses, are meant spears or lances, the staves of which were made of the branches of the cypress. The LXX., followed by the Syr. and Arab., have taken the word for כְּיָרֵךְ, horsemen, rendering it οἱ ἵππεις, which Michaelis is inclined to prefer, and Newcome has actually adopted. There is, however, no just cause for stumbling at the boldness of the figure. Homer, describing the spear of Achilles, calls it an ash :

Ἔκ δ' ἄρα σύριγγος πατρῷον ἐσπάσατ'
 ἕγχος,

Βριδὺ μέγα στιβαρόν· το μὲν οὐ δύνατ'
 ἄλλος Ἀχαιῶν

Πάλλειν, ἄλλὰ μὲν οἶος ἐπίστατο πῆλαι
 Ἀχιλλεύς,

Πηλιάδα ΜΕΛΙΗΝ, κ. τ. λ.

Iliad. xix. 387—390.

Hesiod also designates the lance ἐλάτη, a pine, Scut. Herc. 188 ; and Virgil uses the fir for the spear of Camilla :

————— “ cujus apertum

Adversi longâ transverberat abiete pectus.” Æneid. xi. 667.

תַּרְבֵּיחַ, a ἄπαξ λεγ., from the root תַּרְבַּח,

Syr. , tremuit, to move tremulously, wave, shake ; hence תַּרְבַּח and תַּרְבֵּיחַ, trembling, Zech. xii. 2 ; Ps. lx.

5. The reference seems to be to the custom of the spear-men to wave their lances before engaging in battle, for the purpose of evincing their eagerness for the contest.

5. This verse Ewald explains of the preparations made by the Ninevites for the defence of the city ; but the war-chariots could not be used within the walls : they could only be effective in the open field. תַּרְבֵּיחַ signifies not merely streets, as being without the houses of a city, but also the out fields or commons without the city itself. Comp. Job v. 10 ; Ps. cxliv. 13 ; Prov. viii. 26. In like manner תַּרְבֵּיחַ, as its parallel, denotes any wide or open spaces in the suburbs without the gates. Comp. 2 Chron. xxxii. 6 ; Ps. cxliv. 14. תַּרְבֵּיחַ signifies to act the part of a madman, to show one's self violent, rage, and the like. The reduplicate form תַּרְבֵּיחַ תַּרְבֵּיחַ is obviously intended to give great force to the expression ; on which account, to render it run up and down is too weak. I have added furiously, which makes this hemistich better agree with the preceding. Nor is the reduplication of the third radical of תַּרְבַּח, to run, in Piel, תַּרְבֵּיחַ, without a corresponding degree of energy. It expresses the rapid zig-zag course of the chariots, resembling the quick flashing of lightning. As תַּרְבַּח is masculine, the feminine suffix in תַּרְבֵּיחַ תַּרְבֵּיחַ must be taken for a neuter, or regarded as an instance of neglected gender.

6. The king of Nineveh is here represented as roused from a profound stupor ; and, contriving the necessary means of defence, as first of all turning his attention to his principal officers, whom he summons to their posts. Michaelis, Maurer, and others, think that by these

- They hasten to her wall,
 And the defence is prepared.
 7 The flood-gates are opened,
 And the place is dissolved,
 Though firmly established.
 8 She is made bare; she is carried up,
 While her handmaids moan like doves,
 And smite upon their hearts.

officers, the generals commanding in the provinces are intended; but it is more likely the prophet means the military leaders within the city, since it is represented in the preceding verses as already invested by the enemy; and they are spoken of as hastening to the wall, and not to the city, which the former interpretation would require.  $\text{רָצַף}$  is here used, not in the sense of simply recollecting, or calling to mind, but with the accessory idea of carrying out or giving effect to the recollection, in regard to the object of remembrance. It therefore implies, that the monarch ordered them to occupy each his place in the defence of Nineveh. On receiving the orders, they make such haste, that they and their troops stumble while marching to the walls. Instead of  $\text{רָצַף}$  in  $\text{רָצַף \text{ וְרָצַף}$ , eight of De Rossi's MSS., another originally, the Brixian, and another ancient edition, exhibit the local  $\text{רָצַף}$ , which is supported by the Targ., Syr., and Arab. By the  $\text{רָצַף}$ , protector, or protection, here mentioned, some understand the vinea, or the testudo, military coverings used by the besiegers of a city, under the shelter of which they might safely carry on their operations in undermining, or otherwise destroying the walls. As, however, the term is here applied to something employed by those who acted on the defensive, it cannot be so interpreted. In all probability, some kind of breastwork, composed of the interwoven boughs and branches of trees, erected between the towers upon the walls, is intended. According to Diodorus Siculus, Nineveh had fifteen hundred towers, each of which was two hundred feet high.  $\text{רָצַף}$  signifies to weave, intertwine, fence, and the like, and so to protect, shelter. LXX.  $\kappa\alpha\iota$   $\epsilon\tau\omicron\iota\mu\acute{\alpha}\sigma\sigma\upsilon\iota$   $\tau\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$   $\pi\rho\omicron\phi\upsilon\lambda\alpha\kappa\acute{\alpha}\varsigma$   $\alpha\upsilon\tau\acute{\omega}\nu$ . Syr.  $\text{רָצַף}$ , fortifications. Targ.  $\text{רָצַף}$ , towers.

7. Though it is not unusual in Hebrew to represent invading armies or multitudes of people under the image of floods or waters, an interpretation adopted here by Rosenmüller, De Wette, and others, there does not appear to be sufficient ground to depart from the literal meaning. By  $\text{רָצַף}$ , rivers, or streams, are meant the canals dug from the Tigris, which intersected the city, and more especially those which afforded a supply of water for the defence of the palace. The gates or sluices of these canals were doubtless strongly constructed, to prevent a greater influx of water than what was required; but having upon the present occasion been burst open by the besiegers, the waters of the Tigris rushed in, and, completely inundating the royal residence, dissolved and ruined it. The verb  $\text{רָצַף}$  describes the physical effects of the inundation, not metaphorically those produced by the event upon the minds of the inhabitants.

8.  $\text{רָצַף}$  has occasioned a great diversity of interpretations. Gesenius, dissatisfied with all those derived from its being the Hophal of  $\text{רָצַף}$ , to place, settle, fix, has recourse to a new root,  $\text{רָצַף}$ , which he borrows from the Arab.  $\text{رَضِب}$ , fluxit, stillavit, aqua,  $\text{رَضِب}$ , fudit, effudit; and,

- 9 Though Nineveh hath been like a pool of water,
 From the most ancient time,
 Yet they are fleeing :
 “ Stop ! stop ! ” but none looketh back.
 10 Plunder the silver, plunder the gold ;
 There is no end to the store ;
 There is abundance of all covetable vessels.
 11 Emptiness and emptiedness and void,
 Heart-melting and tottering of knees ;
 There is intense pain in all loins,
 And all faces withdraw their color.

then removing the word to the end of the preceding verse, reads thus,  $\text{הָהָרִים בָּלְגַמּוּגַי}$   $\text{וְהַבַּיִת נִשְׁפָּךְ}$ , the palace is dissolved and made to flow away. That the verb is to be connected with the preceding  $\text{בְּמַיּוּג}$ , the gender at once shows ; but there is no necessity of departing from the usual signification of  $\text{נָצַב}$ , to place, fix, stand firmly ; in Hiph. to cause to stand, establish. However strongly the place might have been constructed, it would not be able to resist the fury of the water.  $\text{ו}$  has here the force of though, and though. Comp.  $\text{הָיָה הַבַּיִת הַזֶּה לְהָיָה}$ , Mal. iii. 14. The nominative to the feminines  $\text{הָיָה הַבַּיִת}$  and  $\text{הָיָה הַבַּיִת}$  is Nineveh understood. The first of these verbs some render, is carried into captivity ; but this signification is confined to the Kal and Hiphil conjugations. It here describes the ignominy with which the Ninevites were treated, when, stripped of everything, they were forced from their capital. Comp. Is. xlvi. 3. Nineveh is represented as a queen degraded from her dignity ; and led away captive by the enemy ; her female slaves following and deploring her fate. That the queen of Nineveh herself, supposed to be here called Huzzab, is intended, in a position which cannot be sustained, though adopted by several interpreters, and recently by Ewald. Persons are never introduced by name into prophecy, except for some important purpose, as in the case of Cyrus. For  $\text{נָחַם}$ , to pant, sigh, moan, comp. the Arab.  $\text{نَحِم}$ , graviter, continuo an-

helavit, viz interrupto spiritu ; Syriac

$\text{ܩܘܡܐ}$ , clamavit, rugiit.

9. The comparison of the population of Nineveh to a collection of water is here appropriate.  $\text{מֵי יָמֵי הָיָה}$  is an antiquated mode of expressing the feminine pronominal affix — the absolute form of the pronoun being retained instead of the fragmental  $\text{הָ}$  being attached to the noun,  $\text{מֵי יָמֵי הָיָה מֵי יָמֵי הָיָה}$  ; lit. from her days, i. e. during the whole period of her existence, or, from the most ancient time. The prophet compares the royal city to a reservoir of water, on account of the confluence of people from the surrounding provinces. All who could make their escape, now took to flight, and no entreaties could induce them to remain.

10. Nahum here apostrophizes the victorious enemy. They had now only to possess themselves of the immense riches which had been abandoned by the inhabitants, or which they might plunder at pleasure. The repetition of the verb  $\text{בָּנִי}$  gives force to the diction.  $\text{תְּבַנֶּנּוּ}$ , from  $\text{בָּנָה}$ , in Hiphil, to set up, prepare ; anything laid up, prepared, and ready for use, as costly garments, ornaments, etc. Comp. Job xxvii. 16. LXX.  $\text{τοῦ κόσμου ἀβυθῶν}$ . Vulg. divitiarum. Targ.  $\text{אֲבִיזְרֵי אֵי}$ . treasures.  $\text{בְּבָר}$ , followed by  $\text{בָּר}$ , is here a nominative absolute : as for the abundance, it consists of, etc.

11. The three synonymes  $\text{בִּקְרָה מְבִקְרָה}$   $\text{בְּקִרְרָה}$   $\text{בְּקִרְרָה}$ , all from roots signifying to

- 12 Where is the den of the lionesses ?
 And the feeding-place of the young lions ?
 Where the lion and the lioness walked,
 The lion's cub also, and none disturbed them.
- 13 The lion tore for the supply of his cubs,
 And strangled for his lionesses ;
 He filled his dens with prey,
 And his habitations with rapine.
- 14 Behold ! I am against thee, saith Jehovah of hosts ;
 I will burn her chariots into smoke ;
 The sword shall devour thy young lions,
 And I will cut off thy prey from the land :
 The voice of thy messengers shall be heard no more.

empty, empty out, are exquisitely chosen, and from their increase in length, as well as from their similarity both in sound and meaning, give great force to the expression of total desolation—the idea here intended to be conveyed. Gesenius considers them to be onomatopoeic, imitating the sound of emptying out a bottle. Comp. Is. xxiv. 1, for the etymology of the verbs קָבַץ and בָּרַץ; and for a similar use of words varied in form, but nearly alike in sound, Is. xxiv. 3, 4, xxix. 2; Ezek. xxxiii. 29; Zeph. i. 15. הִתְחַלְחַל, an intensive form, from חָלַח, to be in pain. For אֲרָרָר see on Joel ii. 6.

12-14. A beautiful allegory, setting forth the rapacious, irresistible, and luxurious character of the king of Assyria, and the destruction of Nineveh, the seat of his empire, with all his armies, and their means of supply. In the last verse the literal is intermixed with the figurative. Comp. for the metaphor, Is. 29; Jer. ii. 15. הוּא, in ver. 12, has the force of that which; רַי, ver. 13, a sufficiency, supply, etc. קָבַץ and הִתְחַלְחַל are employed idiomatically in the two genders to express different kinds of prey. Comp. Is. iii. 1. For בְּשֵׁרֵי the Targ. has אֶשְׁתִּיבָה, with fire. The meaning is, that such should be the number of chariots consumed, that the smoke arising from the fire in which they were to be burnt, should be visible to all. Comp. Ps. xxxvii. 20. The MSS. and editions differ in their punctuation of הִתְחַלְחַל, but there can be little doubt that it is a defective reading, הִתְחַלְחַל, for הִתְחַלְחַל. Comp. הִתְחַלְחַל, Ps. cxxxix. 5. The Syr. and LXX. have read הִתְחַלְחַל, "thy works."

CHAPTER III.

THE prophet, resuming his description of the siege of Nineveh, 1-3, traces it to her idolatry as its cause, 4, and repeats the divine denunciations which he had introduced chap. ii. 13, ver. 5-7. He then, to aggravate her misery, points her to the once formidable and celebrated, but now conquered and desolate Thebes, 8-10, declaring that such should likewise be her fate, 11-13; calls upon her sarcastically to make every preparation for her defence, but assuring her that it would be of no avail, 14, 15; and concludes by contrasting with the number of merchants, princes, and generals, which she once possessed, the miserable, remediless state of ruin to which she was to be reduced, 16-19.

- 1 Wo to the city of blood !
She is wholly filled with deceit and violence ;
The prey is not removed.
- 2 The sound of the whip, and the sound of the rattling of the wheels,
The horses prancing, and the chariots bounding ;
- 3 The mounting of horsemen, the gleaming of swords,
And the lightning of spears ;
The multitude of slain,
And the mass of corpses ;
There is no end to the carcasses ;
They stumble over their carcasses :
- 4 Because of the multitude of the whoredoms of the harlot,
The very graceful mistress of enchantments ;

1. A portraiture of the atrocious character of the Ninevites. קָרַק בְּהַשׁ פְּרֵק form an asyndeton. The non-removal of the prey refers to the fact, that the Assyrians had not restored the ten tribes.

2, 3. The description which the prophet here gives of the approach of the enemy, his attack on the city, and the slaughter of the besieged, is exquisitely graphic. Every translator must acknowledge with Jerome: "Tam pulchra juxta Hebraicum et pictura similis ad prelium se preparantis exercitus descriptio est, ut omnis meus sermo sit vilior." The passage is unrivalled by any other, either in sacred or profane literature. Comp. however Jer. xlvii. 3. הַחֲרָה occurs only here, but in Judges v. 22, we find הַחֲרָהוֹת אֲבִירָיו, the charges of his mighty warriors, in connection with סוּס, the war-horse. It would seem to have some affinity to the Arab. دَحْرَجَ, celeriter incessit, and expresses the coursing or prancing of the cavalry, when rapidly advancing to the attack. Their eagerness the LXX. expresses by rendering it διάκοντος. Syr.

עָבַל, ebullivit, anhelavit. D. Kimchi:

הַחֲרָהוֹת הַסּוּסִים בְּכֹחַ וְהֵלְיָהוּ, the powerful trampling or prancing of the horse and his course. The collectives require to be rendered in the plural. לִקְיָה is not to be understood as repeated before סוּסִים and the following substantive. Instead of הַחֲרָהוֹת הַסּוּסִים or הַחֲרָהוֹת הַסּוּסִים, as it is read in some of the old editions, the Keri, many MSS., and the Sonc., Brix., and Complut. editions, read הַחֲרָהוֹת הַסּוּסִים, which is favored by the renderings of the LXX. and Vulg.

4. The idolatrous practices of the Ninevites, and the means which they employed to seduce others to worship their gods, are here represented as the principal cause of their destruction. At the same time, the commerce, luxury, etc. which they carried to the greatest height, are not to be excluded; for in making contracts and treaties with the more powerful of their neighbors, they not only employed these as inducements, but did not scruple to deliver into their power, nations and tribes that were un-

Who sold nations through her fornications,
And tribes through her enchantments.

5 Behold! I am against thee, saith Jehovah of hosts:

I will throw up thy skirts upon thy face,
And show the nations thy nakedness,
And the kingdoms thy shame.

6 I will cast abominable things upon thee,
And disgrace thee;

And will make thee a gazing-stock.

7 And every one that seeth thee shall flee from thee

And shall say, Nineveh is destroyed!

Who will commiserate her?

Whence shall I seek comforters for thee?

8 Art thou better than No-Ammon,

That dwelt in the rivers,

That had water around her;

able to defend themselves. Comp. Joel iii. 3, 6-8; Amos i. 6. The metaphor of an unchaste female, and the seductive arts which she employs, is not unfrequent in the prophets.

5, 6. The language of commination here used, is suggested by the metaphor of an harlot, employed in the preceding verse. It would seem to refer to an ancient mode of punishing strumpets, by stripping them of all their gaudy attire, and exposing them, covered with mud and filth, to the gaze of insulting spectators. The abhorrent character of the figure constitutes the very reason of its selection. Comp. Ezek. xvi. 37-41. The  $\text{ב}$  in  $\text{אֵי־בִּיבֵי}$  is the Caph veritatis. LXX.  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$   $\text{παράδειγμα}$ .

7.  $\text{הִנֵּנִי־בָרָא}$  carries out the idea implied in  $\text{אֵי־בִּיבֵי}$ , ver. 6. It is in the plural, but is followed by a singular verb, to agree with  $\text{בִּיבֵי}$ . Comp. for the sentiment Is. li. 19.

8.  $\text{הֲיִנְיָאֱמֹן$   $\text{אֵי}$ , No Amon, Eyp.  $\text{ΠΟΖ}$

$\text{ΑΛΛΟΧΗ}$ , the lion, or portion of Amon, thus etymologically the LXX.  $\mu\epsilon\rho\iota\delta\alpha$ , Ἀμμών, though in Ezek. xxx. 15, they render  $\Delta\iota\sigma\sigma\omega\lambda\iota\varsigma$ , i. e. the residence or possession of the Egyptian deity known by the name of Jupiter Ammon. The statement of Macrobius, that he was the representative of the sun, is confirmed by the name of Amon-Re, i. e. "Amon, the Sun," being given to him in Egyptian inscriptions. On Egyptian monuments this god is represented by the figure of a man sitting upon a chair, with a ram's head, or by that of an entire ram. In Jer. xlvi. 25, we have  $\text{אֱמֹן־בְּנֹעַם}$ , Amon of No, where, as well as in the present passage in Nahum, our translators have regarded  $\text{הִנֵּנִי־בָרָא}$  as equivalent to  $\text{הִנֵּנִי־בָרָא}$ , a multitude. Bochart, Schroeder, and some others, have contended that  $\Delta\iota\sigma\sigma\omega\lambda\iota\varsigma$ , near Mendes, in Lower Egypt, is intended, but all the later commentators are in favor of Thebes. The Targum preposterously renders,  $\text{אֵלֵינוּ־בְּאֵלֵינוּ־בְּאֵלֵינוּ}$ , Alexandria the Great, which Jerome, deferring to his Rabbi, has adopted in the Vulg. The city, which from its being the principal seat of his worship, was called by the Greeks  $\Delta\iota\sigma\sigma\omega\lambda\iota\varsigma$ , is the celebrated Thebes, the ancient capital of Upper Egypt, situated on both sides of the Nile, about two hundred and sixty miles south of Cairo. It was renowned for its hundred Whose strength was in the sea ;

 Her wall was on the sea ?
 9 Cush strengthened her, and Egypt,
 With countless hosts ;
 Put and the Lybians were thine auxiliaries.

gates, and was of such extent, that its remaining ruins still describe a circuit of twenty-seven miles :

οὐδ' ὕσα Θήβας

Αἰγυπτίας, ὅδι πλεῖστα δόμοις ἐν κτήματα
 κείται,
 Αἴ θ' ἑκατόμυλοι εἰσι, διηκόσιοι δ' ἄν
 ἐκάστην
 Ἄνερες. ἔξοιχνεῦσι σὺν ἵπποισιν καὶ ὄχεσ-φιν. Iliad. ix. 381.

Of the magnificent ruins, the most remarkable are the temples of Luxor and Karnac, on the eastern side of the river. The architecture is of the most gigantic and superior description. Fragments of colossal obelisks and statues are found in every direction. The stupendous colonnade at Luxor is in the highest degree imposing ; but the grand hall of the temple at Karnac is of surpassing interest. Wilkinson, in his Thebes, p. 174, describes it as "one hundred and seventy feet by three hundred and twenty-nine, supported, by a central avenue of twelve massive columns, sixty-six feet high, (without the pedestal and abacus,) and twelve in diameter, besides one hundred and twenty-two of smaller or rather less gigantic dimensions, forty-one feet nine inches in height, and twenty-seven feet six inches in circumference, distributed in seven lines on either side of the former." The walls of the temples are covered with hieroglyphics, chiefly representing the victories gained by the Egyptian kings over their enemies. One of the walls exhibits the result of the expedition of Shishak against Jerusalem, 1 Kings xiv. 25, etc. ; 2 Chron. xii. 2-9, in the leading away of the Jewish captives.

Of the conquest of this famous city, here referred to by Nahum, no mention is made in profane history, but it not improbably took place on the advance of the Assyrian army under Sargon, in the year B. C. 714. See on Is. xx. It was afterwards taken by Cambyses, B. C. 525, and its ruin completed by Ptolemy Lathyrus, B. C. 81. According to the representation of our prophet, Nineveh, could not vie with it either in point of grandeur or of strength. They both possessed the advantage of mighty rivers for their defence — a circumstance to which he gives a special prominence, as it was that on which the inhabitants placed great dependence. By יָם, sea, is meant the Nile ; see on Is. xix. 5 ; by נָחַל, streams, the same as נְהַר, Nah. ii. 7, viz. the canals by which the water of the river was carried round or through the principal parts of the city. Ewald proposes to connect יָם with יָמַי, thus, יָם יָמַי, and renders from sea to sea, which he attempts to justify by appealing to Micah vii. 12, but the cases are not parallel. יָם stands elliptically for יָמַי. The preposition מִן in יָמַי expresses the material out of which the defence was made ; and the triple reference to the Nile as a sea, in this verse, indicates the great importance which attached to it as a means of protecting the city.

9. Not only was Thebes strong by nature and art, and in the number of her native troops ; she also possessed immense military resources in her African auxiliaries. For כּוּשׁ, Cush, see on Is. xi.

11. כּוּשׁ, Put, Egypt. פּוּט, the region immediately to the west of Lower Egypt, and conterminous with Lybia Proper, with the inhabitants of which, it is here mentioned. Gesenius derives the name from פּוּט or פּוּט,

- 10 Yet she became an exile,
 She went into captivity ;
 Her young children also were dashed in pieces,
 At the top of all the streets ;
 They cast lots for her honorable men,
 And all her great men were bound with chains.
- 11 Thou also shalt be drunken,
 Thou shalt hide thyself,
 Thou also shalt seek a refuge from the enemy.
- 12 All thy fortresses are like fig-trees with early figs ;
 If they shake them, they fall into the mouth of the eater.
- 13 Behold ! thy people are as women in the midst of thee ;
 The gates of thy land shall be thrown wide open to thine enemies ;
 Fire shall consume thy barriers,
- 14 Draw water for the siege ;

a bow, and thinks the people were so called from their being expert as archers. That they were descended from Ham, see Gen. x. 6. Josephus speaks of them as Mauritanians, Antiqq. i. 6, 2 ; and the river of the same name, which he describes as flowing through their country, is called Fut by Pliny, v. 1, and Phtuth by Ptolemy, iv. 1. They are spoken of as forming part of the Egyptian army, Jer. xlvi. 9, and as being in the Syrian marine, Ezek. xxvii. 10. Winer's Real W. B. ii. p. 308. לִיְבָיִם, Lybians, the inhabitants of Africa to the south and west of the former country, stretching as far as Numidia. Hitzig, on Is. lxvi. 19, has endeavored in vain to establish the hypothesis that the people of Nubia are meant. Comp. 2 Chron. xii. 3, xvi. 8. מִצְרַיִם, Egypt, is here taken for Lower Egypt, as distinguished from the Upper, of which Thebes was itself the capital. There is no reason, with some, to change the הָ in בְּעִזְרָתָהָ into הַ, though the LXX. and Syr. have the third person. The prophet concludes his description by apostrophizing Thebes. בֵּית is the Beth essentie.

10, 11. If the celebrated metropolis of Egypt, with all its means of defence, was captured, and its inhabitants subjected to all the cruelties and indignities usually inflicted by the victors, what was there in Nineveh to claim exemption? Instead of שָׂבַר, to drink, be intoxicated, a mode of speech not uncommon in the prophets, denoting participation in severe punishment, Newcome, without authority, reads שָׂכַר, to hire, and renders, thou shalt become an hireling. In 1 Sam. ii. 5, to which he refers, the latter, and not the former verb, occurs.

12, 13. Two figures strikingly expressive of the extreme ease with which the Assyrians should be subdued. For the former, see on Is. xxviii. 4 ; and comp. Rev. vi. 13 ; for the latter, Is. xix. 16 ; Jer. l. 37. עִם, with, in the phrase תְּאֵנִים עִם בְּמִצְרַיִם denotes accompaniment, etc. ; the phrase itself is equivalent to תְּאֵנִים בְּמִצְרַיִם אֲשֶׁר לָהֶם בְּמִצְרַיִם. Thus the LXX. σκαί σκοποὺς ἔχοντες. Comp. for this rare use of the preposition, 1 Sam. xvii. 42. בְּרִיתָהָ, Michaelis translates thy fugitives, but as fugitives are always represented as perishing by the sword, and never by fire, the signification barriers must be retained.

14. The prophet ironically summons the Ninevites to make every effort in

- Strengthen thy fortifications ;
 Enter the mire, and tread the clay ;
 Repair the brick-kiln.
- 15 There shall the fire consume thee,
 The sword shall cut thee off ;
 It shall consume thee like the licking locust ;
 Be thou numerous as the licking locusts ;
 Be thou numerous as the swarming locusts.
- 16 Thou hast increased thy merchants more than the stars of heaven ;
 The licking locusts spread themselves out,
 And took their flight.
- 17 Thy princes were as the swarming locusts,
 And thy satraps as the largest locusts ;
 That encamp in the hedges in the cold day ;
 The sun ariseth, then they flee,
 And the place where they are is unknown.
- 18 Thy shepherds slumber, O king of Assyria !

the way of preparing for a long and vigorous defence of the metropolis itself. As water is one of the first necessities, it behooved them to see to it, that the cisterns, etc., were well filled. They were also to put the fortifications in a perfect state.

15-17. שָׁם, there, points emphatically to the fortified city. The nominative to הַתְּבַבִּים is the masculine noun עַם, people, i. e. the inhabitants ; that to הַתְּבַבִּי, the feminine עִיר city, understood. Instead, however, of הַתְּבַבִּים, six MSS., originally four more, and one by correction, read הַתְּבַבִּי. For the names of the locusts which here occur, see on Joel i. 4, and Amos vii. 1. The reduplication גֹּבַב גֹּבַב, locust of locusts, is designed to express the largest or most formidable of that kind of insect. For the plural form גֹּבַבִּים, see on Amos vii. 1. מְנַזְּרִים is a ἄναξ λεγ., derived from נָזַר, to consecrate, separate and devote to a high or noble office ; hence נָזִיר, prince, נִזְרָה, consecration, diadem. It denotes here the princes, crowned with diadems, who formed the glory of the Assyrian court. Thus Kimchi : שְׂרֵפִים אֲשֶׁר נִזְרָה וְעִטְרָה עַל רֹאשֵׁיהֶם, “Princes with diadems and crowns on their heads.” The Arab. مندبر, monitor, i. e. counsellor, is less apt, as the comparison to the locusts shows. Six of De Rossi’s MSS. and three ancient editions omit the Dagesh in the Nun. The parallel term מְנַזְּרִים occurs only here, and in Jer. li. 27, in the singular מְנַזֵּר. It is obviously a foreign word, and is in all probability compounded of what we still find in the Persic, تاو, or تاب, strength, power, and سر, chief, captain, prince. It occurs in the Targum of Jonathan, Deut. xxviii. 12, as the name of a superior angel. For other derivations see Gesen. Thesaur. in voc. Dr. Lee prefers deriving it from the Chald. טב, egregius, and שר, dux. Whatever might be the power of these princes and generals, and whatever number of troops they might have at their command, they would on the approach of the enemy, betake themselves to flight, and leave Nineveh to her own defence. No trace of them would be found.

18. The masculine suffixes in this and

Thy nobles have lain down ;
 Thy people are dispersed upon the mountains,
 And there is none that collected them.

- 19 There is no alleviation of thy ruin ;
 Thy wound is grievous ;
 All that hear the report of thee
 Shall clap their hands at thee,
 For upon whom did not thy wickedness unceasingly pass ?

the following verse, refer to the king of Assyria. The רֹעִים, shepherds, were the satraps or viceroys appointed to govern the provinces under the king of Assyria ; the אֲדִירִים were the nobles, who as parallel with the רֹעִים, are to be regarded under the same image. See Jer. xxv. 34, where principals would have been better than principal in our common version. שָׁנְנוּ, corresponding to נָמְנוּ, they slumber, is a vox pregnans, implying, not only that they had lain down, but that they were taking rest or were asleep. שָׁנְנוּ is cognate with פָּרְצוּ, to scatter, disperse, Arab. فشا, propagata et multiplicata sunt pecora, but is not to be substituted for it, as some propose. Comp. the Arab. نفش, pastum noctu incesserunt cameli aut oves sine pastore. The figure is carried on throughout the verse.

19. אֵין בְּקִוּיָּהּ, lit. nothing of infirmity, by litotes, for powerful, great is thy breach. The deliverance of the king of Nineveh was utterly hopeless. Nothing remained but for the prophet to announce his end, and the joy which the surrounding states would express at the ir retrievable ruin of an empire, whose iron sway had been so extended, and whose cruel oppressions had been unintermitting.

HABAKKUK.

PREFACE.

OF the prophet Habakkuk, we possess no information but what is purely apocryphal. The position of Delitzsch, founded upon the subscription, chap. iii. 19, that he was of the tribe of Levi, and engaged in the temple service, is too precarious to warrant its adoption. The statement made in the inscription to Bel and the Dragon in the LXX., which has been preserved from the Tetrapla of Origen, in the Codex Chisianus, ἐκ προφητείας Ἀμβακὸν υἱοῦ Ἰησοῦ ἐκ τῆς φυλῆς Λευί, may be nothing more than conjecture. Considerable difference of opinion obtains respecting the time at which he flourished — the Rabbins; Grotius, Kalinsky, Kofod, Jahn, and Wahl, placing him in the first years of Manasseh; Friedrich, De Wette, Bertholdt, Justi, and Wolf, in the period of the exile; while Usher, Newcome, Eichhorn, Horne, Winer, Maurer, and Ewald, are of opinion that he prophesied in the reign of Jehoiachin, about 608—604 before Christ. This last hypothesis seems best supported, since the Chaldeans are spoken of chap. i. 5, 6, as being upon the point of invading Judah, but not as having actually entered it. The position of Rosenmüller, that chap. i. was composed under Jehoiakim, chap. ii. under Jehoiachin, and chap. iii. under Zedekiah, is altogether gratuitous. The whole forms one prophecy, and does not admit of being thus dissected.

The book embraces the wickedness of the Jews which demanded the infliction of punishment, the infliction of this punishment by the Chaldeans, the destruction of the latter in their turn, and an ode composed by the prophet in anticipation of the consequent deliverance of his people. Its position immediately after Nahum is most appropriate, setting forth the judgments of God inflicted by and upon the Chaldeans, just as the latter treated of those to be inflicted upon the Assyrians. The two prophets take up separately what Isaiah had expatiated upon at large.

In point of general style, Habakkuk is universally allowed to occupy a very distinguished place among the Hebrew prophets, and is surpassed by none of them in dignity and sublimity. Whatever he may occasionally have in common with previous writers, he works up in his own peculiar manner, and is evidently no servile copyist or imitator. His figures are well chosen, and fully carried out. His expressions are bold and animated; his descriptions graphic and pointed. The parallelisms are for the most part regular and complete. The lyric ode contained in chap. iii. is justly esteemed one of the most splendid and magnificent within the whole compass of Hebrew poetry. See the introduction to that chapter.

The words מַגְמָגָה, i. 9 שׁוֹבְרֵי עֵץ, ii. 6, and רִיבֵי עַלְמֵי, ii. 16, are peculiar to this prophet.

CHAPTER I.

THE prophet commences by briefly, yet emphatically and pathetically, setting forth the cause of the Chaldean invasion, which was to form the burden of his prophecy—the great wickedness which abounded in the Jewish nation at the time he flourished, 2-4. He then introduces Jehovah summoning attention to that invasion as the awful punishment of such wickedness, 5; describes, in a very graphic manner, the appearance, character, and operations of the invaders, 6-11; and then, by a sudden transition, expostulates with God, on account of the severity of the judgment, which threatened the annihilation of the Jewish people, 12-17.

- 1 THE Sentence, which Habakkuk the prophet saw.
- 2 How long shall I cry, O Jehovah! And thou hearest not?
How long shall I cry to thee of violence, and thou savest not?
- 3 Why dost thou permit me to see wickedness,
And beholdest misery?

1. For the signification of בְּשָׁא, see on Is. xiii. 1; and for the form וְיִבְרָקוּן, compare שֶׁעָרָרָה, Jer. v. 30, xxiii. 14.

2. The evils complained of in this and the two following verses, are, by many interpreters, considered to be those consequent upon the invasion of Judea by the Chaldeans. Such a construction, however, breaks up the symmetry of the connection, as marked by ver. 5, and leaves out of view the wickedness of the Jews as the cause of the calamity, contrary to the universal custom of the Hebrew prophets. They were the intestine broils, litigations, and acts of oppression, which sprang up in the kingdom of Judah, after the death of the pious reformer Josiah, and had been long the subject of complaint on the part of Habakkuk. That such was the state of things at that time is evident from Jer. xxii. 2, 13. The argument in favor of the contrary hypothesis, derived from the recurrence of the words הַמָּוֶל, עָמָל, etc., and the phrase הִיזָא מִשְׁפָּט, etc., in the following part of the chapter, with undoubted application to the Chaldeans, is of no weight, since they are rather to be regarded as modes of expression familiar to the prophet, than indicative of identity of subject. The influence of עַד-אֲנִי הוּא, how long, upon the Preterite and Future tenses in this verse, so modifies them as to give them the force of a present time, though the one includes what had taken place down to such time, and the other, the possibility of its being still carried forward into the future. Because הַמָּוֶל, violence, occurs without a preposition, Hitzig thinks it was what was done to the prophet himself; but it is better, with Kimchi, to suppose an ellipsis of בְּעֵבְרָה, or, to supply עַל, on account of, because of, with the Targum. Comp. Job xix. 7; Jer. xx. 8. שָׁנַע and רָגַק are synonyms, but the latter is the more expressive of the two.

3. Some, regarding הַרְאֵנִי and הַבִּיט as strictly parallel, understand the suffix נִי to be omitted in the latter verb, and render: Why dost thou cause me to see wickedness, and make me look upon wrong? but הַבִּיט, though the Hiphil conjugation, is never used in a causative sense. Besides, לִי-רָגַק, and not הַבִּיט, is the proper synonyme, corresponding to Destruction and violence are before me ;

Contention and strife exalt themselves.

4 On this account the law faileth,
And true judgment goeth not forth ;
Because the wicked circumvent the righteous,
Therefore perverted judgment goeth forth.

יְהוָה. Between the two clauses, the prophet introduces Jehovah, with whom he expostulates, as an inactive spectator of the evil, because his providence did not interfere for its removal, and it was allowed, unavenged, to take its course. The expostulation thus gains in force, and scope is afforded for the striking contrast, ver. 5, in which the Most High is represented as interposing for the punishment of the wicked. מִדּוֹךְ יֵשָׁא has been variously explained. The LXX., taking מִדּוֹךְ for מִדְּרִיךְ, render it ὁ κριτής λαμβάνει; which the Syriac explains, יִמְלֵא מִמֶּנּוּ מַחְסָא, the judge taketh a bribe. Abenezra translates thus; וַיִּהְיֶה יֵשָׁא וּמְדוֹן יֵשָׁא וְרֵיב וְיִשָּׂא וְרֵיב וְיִשָּׂא וְרֵיב, and there are men of strife and contention who lift up their head. The structure of the sentence, however, obliges us to regard יֵשָׁא as parallel to וַיִּהְיֶה, so that it stands in the same relation to מִדּוֹךְ, that the substantive verb does to רֵיב. The nouns in both cases are nominatives to the verbs, and נִשָּׂא is here to be taken intransitively in the sense of exalting or raising one's self up. Comp. Ps. lxxxix. 10; Hos. xiii. 1; Nah. i. 5. Thus Dahl, combining the two nouns, Und Hader, und Gezank erheben sich; and Perschke, Es gibt Streit, und Zwiſt erhebet sich. The language is descriptive of the prevalence of a litigious spirit, in consequence of which no one was permitted quietly to possess or enjoy his rights. What was not seized upon by main force, was obtained by perversion of law.

4. עַל-כֵּן, therefore, on this account, refers not to the state of things set forth in the verse immediately preceding, but to Jehovah's forbearing to punish, spoken of ver. 2. Of the law, which ought to have been maintained in all its vital energy, it is said עָרֵבָה, it chilleth, groweth frigid, languisheth, faileth; by which is meant, that it was not enforced, but left, as it were, to grow stiff and torpid, from want of use. The words, לֹא-יֵצֵא לְיָדָיו מִשְׁפָּט, may either be rendered, judgment, i. e., what is strictly and properly such, righteous judgment never goeth forth; or, judgment goeth not forth according to truth; לְיָדָיו, signifying to perpetuity, for ever, and, with a negative, never, like לֹא-יֵצֵא, and truly, according to truth.

Comp. the Arab. ذصح, sincerus fidelis

fruit; and the Eth. ἰδου: purus, mundus fuit. The latter signification of the word is that adopted by the Syr.

וְלֹא יֵצֵא מִפִּי טָהוֹרָה, and judgment goeth not forth in purity; and is approved by Sheltinga, Hesselberg, Wolf, Rosenmüller, De Wette, Winer, Gesenius, Lee, and Ewald, chiefly on the ground of מִשְׁפָּט מִצְדָּקָה, wrong or perverted judgment, occurring, as a contrasted formula, at the close of the verse. By the going forth of judgment is meant the publication of legal decisions delivered by a judge. In the time of the prophet, justice was utterly corrupted, in consequence of which there was no security either for person or property. מִבְּתוֹר, from בָּתַר, to surround, is here used in a bad sense, to express the ensnaring of a person by fraud and artifice; it depicts the windings of intrigue, and is best rendered by circumvent. Thus Dathe: cum impius pius circumvenit. מִצְדָּקָה, distorted, perverse, wrong, from the root

- 5 Look among the nations, and behold !
 Be ye greatly astonished ;
 For I will perform a work in your days,
 Which ye will not believe, though it should be told you.
- 6 For, behold ! I will raise up the Chaldeans,
 That bitter and impetuous nation ;
 Which traverseth the wide regions of the earth,
 To seize upon habitations belonging not to it.

פֶּגַעַ. Comp. the Syr. ܦܥܥܐ, pervertit,

Arab. عقل, constrinxit, distortos habuit pedes; عقله, distortio lingue in loquendo. LXX. κρίμα διεστραμμένον.

5. By a sudden apostrophe Jehovah calls upon the Jews, in anticipation of the punishment which their sins deserved, and which should assuredly be inflicted upon them, to direct their attention to the events that were taking place among the surrounding nations. Nabopolassar had already destroyed the mighty empire of Assyria and founded the Chaldeo-Babylonian rule; he had made himself so formidable, that Necho found it necessary to march an army against him, in order to check his progress; and though defeated at Megiddo, he had, in conjunction with his son Nebuchadnezzar, gained a complete victory over the Egyptians at Carchemish. These events were calculated to alarm the Jews, whose country lay between the dominions of the two contending powers; but, accustomed as they were to confide in Egypt, and in the sacred localities of their own capital, Is. xxxi. 1; Jer. vii. 4, and being in alliance with the Chaldeans, they were indisposed to listen to, and treated with the utmost incredulity, any predictions which described their overthrow by that people. Such overthrow God claims as his work, though he might employ men as his instruments in effecting it. הָאֵל and הַבְּרִיט are frequently combined as here for the sake of effect. The phrase בְּגוֹיִם, among the nations, is translated by the LXX., οἱ καταφρονήται, ye despisers, in which they are followed by the Syr. and Arab.; and this rendering is adopted by Paul in his quotation of the verse, Acts xiii. 41. On the other hand, the Targ. בְּגוֹיִם בְּעַמְּרֵי, Aquila, Symm., Theod., and Vulg. aspicite in gentibus, which is sustained by all the Heb. MSS. that have been collated, except five of Kennicott's, which have בְּגוֹיִם, nations, without the preposition. To account for the rendering of the LXX., some are of opinion that instead of בְּגוֹיִם, they must have read בְּגוֹיִים, בְּגוֹיִים, or בְּגוֹיִם; others, with Pococke, in his Porta Mosis, chap. iii., suggest a supposititious root, בָּגַע, the corresponding Arabic بغى, signifying, injustus fuit, superbe, insolenter se gessit; most unjustifiably insisting on the preference of some such reading to that of the Hebrew text. With respect to the quotation, Acts xiii. 41, it was obviously made by the apostle on account of the exact similarity of the case of the Jews in his day, both as regards the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the incredulity of the nation in reference to that event. "Paulus fideliter accommodat in usum suum Prophetæ verba, quia sicuti semel minatus fuerat Deus per prophetam suam Habacuc, ita etiam semper fuit sui similis." Calvin, in loc. The double form, הַתְּמָרָה הַתְּמָרָה, is used for intensity. הַתְּמָרָה is the Hithpael for הַתְּמָרָה. Comp. הַתְּמָרָה הַתְּמָרָה, Is. xxix. 9, and my note on that verse. Before פָּעַל subaud. אָנִי.

6. Now follows a lengthened and fearful description of the character and op-

- 7 It is terrible and dreadful ;
 Its judgment and its dignity are from itself.
 8 Swifter than leopards are its horses,
 And lighter than evening wolves ;
 Its horses spread proudly along ;
 Yea, its horse that come from afar :
 They fly like an eagle hastening to devour.
 9 It cometh entirely for violence ;
 The aspect of their faces is like the east wind ;
 It collecteth the captives as sand.

erations of the instrument which Jehovah would employ in executing his work.  $\text{הַיְהוָה בְּנִי מִקִּיָּם}$ , which has unquestionably the force of the future, must be referred to the special raising up of the Chaldeans to undertake the expedition against Judea, and not to their organization as a political power, since they had already been upwards of twenty years in possession of such power under Nabopolassar. On this account, some prefer rendering the phrase, Behold! I will excite. For an account of this people, see on Is. xxiii. 23. In  $\text{הַיְהוָה בְּנִי מִקִּיָּם}$  is a paronomasia. By  $\text{מִר}$ , bitter, the fierce and cruel disposition of the Chaldeans is expressed; comp. Jer. l. 42; by  $\text{רָשָׁה}$ , rash, hasty, the rapidity or impetuosity of their operations. In the latter part of the verse, their widely extended conquests under Nebuchadnezzar are clearly predicted.

7.  $\text{שָׂאָה}$ , the LXX. render  $\lambda\eta\mu\mu\alpha$ , Symm.  $\delta\acute{o}\gamma\mu\alpha$ , Vulg. onus, Syr.  $\text{ܫܘܬܐ}$ , vision. Targ.  $\text{הַצְּוֵרָה}$ , decree or sentence, all deriving it from  $\text{שָׂאָה}$ , in the sense, of  $\text{שָׂאָה קוֹל}$ , to lift up, or utter anything with the voice, and regarding it as equivalent to  $\text{שָׂאָה}$ , from the same root. The signification decree, though approved by Hesselberg, De Wette, Winer, and Gesenius, is less appropriate than that of dignity, which is that of our common version, and is adopted by Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald. Comp. Gen. xlix. 3; Job xiii. 11; Ps. lxii. 5.  $\text{שָׂאָה}$  nowhere occurs in reference to a judicial decree. What the prophet has in view appears to be the self-assumed political superiority of the Chaldeans in the Babylonian empire. As they had raised themselves to this dignity, so they would permit none to share in their counsels and determinations, but would act in the most arbitrary manner.

8. Frequent reference is made in Scripture to the "evening wolves," on account of the sudden ravages which, in the keenness of their hunger, they commit on the flocks at that time of the day. See Gen. xlix. 27; Jer. v. 6; Zeph. iii. 3; and comp. Virgil's Georg. iii. 537, iv. 431; and the Æneid, ii. 355, ix. 59. The LXX. render improperly,  $\lambda\acute{o}\kappa\omicron\upsilon\varsigma \tau\eta\varsigma \text{'Αραβίας}$ .  $\text{שָׂאָה}$ , from the root  $\text{שָׂאָה}$ , having here the signification of the Arab.  $\text{فأش}$ , superbivit, gloriatus fuit, describes the proud and spirited mien of the horses composing the Chaldean cavalry. Comp. the inimitable description of the Arabian war-horse, Job xxxix. 19–24. The meaning of the two last lines of the verse is, that the eagerness of the cavalry to plunder the Jews should be so great, that they would make no account of the fatigue occasioned by the length of their march.

9, 10.  $\text{בְּלִי}$  is the less correct orthography of  $\text{בְּלִי}$ , which occurs several times in the course of the Hebrew Bible. The affix refers to  $\text{גִּי}$ , ver. 6. So great was to be the invading army, that it would seem as if it were composed of the entire

- 10 It maketh a mockery of kings,
 And princes are a laughter to it ;
 It smileth at every fortress ;
 It heapeth up earth and taketh it.
 11 Then it gaineth fresh spirit ;

nation. Considerable difficulty has been experienced in the interpretation of the words, מִגְּבוּרַת פְּנֵי הָאֱמֹנִים קִרְיָמָה. By the LXX. the ἀπαξ λεγ. μὲνῆμα is rendered ἀνδραστήκοτας ; by Symm. πρόσψις ; by the Syr. ܐܦܫܐ, aspect ; by the Targ.

מִקְצֵב, front, what is opposite to anything. The Vulg. omits the word altogether, obviously on the principle of its being sufficiently expressed by facies immediately following. With these Abenezra and Kimchi agree ; and thus also generally, Munster, Vatablus, Pagninus, Castalio, Calvin and others. On the other hand, Gesenius derives the word from the supposititious root מִגְּבִי, Arab.

جاء, to congregate, heap up, and renders it host, troop ; but, as Lee observes, the host of their faces is anything but Hebrew phraseology. Rosenmüller, Lee, Maurer, Hitzig, and Ewald, derive it from the same root in the significations, impetus, desire, a striving after ; Ger. streben : while our own, and some other modern translators, adopt the idea of absorption, supping up, etc. from the signification, of גְּבִיָּה, גְּבִיָּה. Considering the marked and independent coincidence of the ancient versions above quoted, borne out, as they are, by the Arab. جأ, adparuit ; quod de re quavis extrinsecus apparet ; corpus rei, seu res individua existans et conspicua, I cannot but regard aspect or appearance as the term best adapted to convey the meaning of the prophet. קִרְיָמָה, in every other passage in which it occurs, has the signification of eastward, and it is taken in this acceptation by Abarbanel, Parkhurst, Dahl, Wolff, and Hitzig, who explain it either of the direction in which the Chaldeans would return home with their booty, or of their first coming down along the coast of the Mediterranean, and then turning direct east upon the Jews. Both constructions are forced. Gesenius renders forwards, and gives the whole sentence thus : the host of their faces is forwards. Here again I prefer the rendering of Symm. ἀνεμος κάβσων ; the Targ. כַּרְיָמָה קִרְיָמָה, the Vulg. ventus urens, which, or east wind, its equivalent, is the rendering of many of the moderns. It is true, that the east wind is elsewhere uniformly expressed by קִרְיָמָה, without the ה ; but this letter seems clearly to be here used paralogically, just as it is in לִרְגֵלָה לְרִגְגָה הָאֲזוּבָה, the primitive forms of which are רָגַג, רָגַג, רָגַג. In some instances, indeed, it is the ה directive, indicating motion towards the quarter specified, but in others it has lost all such power. For the east wind, or samoom, see on Is. xxvii. 8. Nothing could more appropriately describe the terrific appearance of the destructive Chaldean army, than this phenomenon, which occasions awful devastation in the regions over which it passes. The collecting of the captives like sand, which the prophet immediately adds, corroborates the opinion that the samoom is intended, as it is frequently accompanied with whirlwinds of sand, which is collected and carried with great rapidity across the desert. The 10th verse sets forth the haughty, fearless, and irresistible character of the Chaldeans. The last clause of the verse describes the throwing up of walls or batteries before fortified cities, from which to attack them. רִעַץ seldom signifies fine dust ; it is more commonly used of earth generally, including clay, mire, etc.

11. תֵּשֶׁבֶת, τ ὄ τ ε, usually, rendered then,

It passeth onward, and contracteth guilt, [saying,]
Is this his power through his God?

12 Art not Thou from eternity,
O Jehovah! my God, my Holy One?
We shall not die:

O Jehovah! thou hast appointed it for judgment.
O Rock! thou hast ordained it for correction.

13 Thou art of purer eyes than to regard evil;
Thou canst not behold injustice.
Why dost thou behold the plunderers?
Why art thou silent when the wicked destroyeth
Him that is more righteous than he?

14 And makest men as the fishes of the sea,

has here the force of thereupon, marking the transition from what had just been described to what immediately follows, and their intimate connection with each other. רַיָּהוָה is the accusative to הַלְלוּ, which denoting to succeed, exchange, change, renew, etc., the phrase means, to assume, or gain a fresh accession of courage or military spirit. For this signification of רַיָּהוָה, comp. Josh. ii. 11, v. 1. Elated by the fortresses they had taken, and the victories they had won in heathen countries, the Chaldeans are represented as passing onwards into Judea; and treating with contempt the puny resistance made to them by the Jews, asking sarcastically, "Is this all your boasted power conceded to you by the God in whom you confide?" Comp. Is. x. 10, 11, xxxvi. 19, 20; Ps. lxxix. 10, cxv.

2. The aggravated guilt which they contracted (עֲוֹנוֹתָם) lay in their vilifying Jehovah, by speaking of him as incapable of protecting his people. This simple construction of the verse at once frees it from the numerous difficulties with which it has been clogged by interpreters, and gives peculiar force to the interrogatory appeal in that which follows. The ellipsis of הַלְלוּ is of frequent occurrence in Hebrew. The absence of the interrogative הֲ is more seldom; but comp. Gen. xxvii. 24, הֲזֶה אֱלֹהֵי זֶה for הֲזֶה אֱלֹהֵי זֶה; 2 Sam. vii. 19, הֲזֶה, this is, for הֲזֶה אֱלֹהֵי זֶה, this is;

and xvi. 17, הֲזֶה חֵן לְרֵעִי, "This is thy kindness to thy friend," for, Is this, etc.

12. The contemptuous manner in which the enemy had treated the Most High calls forth an impassioned appeal from the prophet, in which he vindicates the eternal existence and purity of Jehovah, as that God who had formerly wrought deliverance for his people, and who was now employing the Chaldeans, not for their annihilation, but only for their punishment and correction. Since עַרְבַּי, Rock, is elsewhere used metaphorically of God, I have retained it in the translation. See on Is. xxvi. 4. It is here parallel to הֲזֶה הָיָה. The Tikkun Sopherim לֹא תִמְוָר is unsupported by any authority.

13. Habakkuk resumes the expostulatory mode of address which he had employed, verses 2, 3. The בֹּזְעֵי הָיָם, plunderers, were the Chaldeans who had been the allies of the Jews, but now treated them with violence. Comp. Is. xxi. 2, and xxiv. 16. The LXX., Syr., and Arab., have nothing corresponding to מְבַזְעֵי הָיָם; but it is expressed in Aquil., Sym., Theod., the Targ., and Vulg. Wicked as the Jews were, they were righteous in comparison of the Babylonians. Comp. for the sentiment, Ezek. xvi. 51, 52.

14. God is often said to do what he permits to be done by others. הֲזֶה הָיָה

As the reptiles which have no ruler ?

- 15 It bringeth up all with its hook,
It gathereth them into its net,
It collecteth them into its drag ;
Therefore it rejoiceth and exulteth.
- 16 Therefore it sacrificeth to its net,
And burneth incense to its drag ;
Because through them its portion is fat,
And its food fattened meat.
- 17 Is it for this it emptieth its net,
And spareth not to slay the nations continually ?

used of aquatic animals, such as crabs and other shell-fish, Ps. civ. 25, a sense which the parallelism and connection here require.

15-17.  $\text{הִלְכָה}$  is allowed by all to be here the accusative, though it was, in the same position, the nominative, ver. 9. Converting the simile employed in the preceding verse into a metaphor, the prophet describes the rapacity of the Chaldeans, the indiscriminate and universal havoc which they would effect, and their proud confidence in their own prowess.  $\text{הִלְכָה}$ , an unusual punctuation for  $\text{הִלְכָה}$ . The hook, the net, and the drag, are separately mentioned, to indicate that every means would be employed in taking captives, and whatever else came in their way. To their arms, signified by these implements of fishers, they rendered divine honors, ascribing to them solely the success which they had in war. Comp. Justin. 43. 3. "Ab origine rerum pro diis immortalibus veras coluere." Lucian in Trag.  $\Sigma\kappa\acute{\upsilon}\delta\alpha\iota \mu\acute{\epsilon}\nu \acute{\alpha}\kappa\iota\nu\acute{\alpha}\delta\eta \delta\acute{\iota}\theta\upsilon\sigma\iota$ . By the emptying of the net, ver. 17, is meant the depositing of the captives, etc., in Babylon, in order to go forth to fresh conquest and plunder. It is strongly implied in the questions with which the chapter concludes, that God would not permit the Chaldeans to proceed in their selfish conquests without a check, but the answer is reserved for the sequel.

---

CHAPTER II.

THIS chapter contains an introductory statement respecting the waiting posture in which the prophet placed himself, in order to obtain a divine revelation in reference to the fate of his people and of the Chaldeans, their oppressors, 1; a command which he received to commit legibly to writing the revelation which was about to be made to him, 2; an assurance, that though the prophecy should not be fulfilled immediately, yet it would certainly be at length accomplished, 3; and a contrasted description of the two different classes of the Jews to whom it was to be communicated, 4. The insolence of the Chaldeans, and their insatiable lust of conquest, are next set forth, 5; on which the proper  $\text{שִׁפְטָה}$  sentence, or prophetic denunciation, commences, in the form of a taunt on the part of the nations, in which they anticipate the downfall of that hostile power, 6-8; and the punishment of its rapacity, 9-11; of its cruelty and injustice, with a special view to the universal spread of true religion, 12-14; of its wanton and sanguinary wars, 15-17, and of its absurd and fruitless idolatry, 18, 19. The last verse of the chapter beautifully contrasts with the two preceding, by representing Jehovah as the only God, entitled to universal submission and homage.

1 I WILL stand upon my watch-post,
 And station myself upon the fortress,
 And will look out to see what he will say to me,
 And what I shall reply in regard to my argument.

1. מִשְׁמֶרֶת properly signifies observance, guard, watch, from שָׁמַר, to watch, observe, preserve, etc., but here, as a concrete, the place, or post of observation. Comp. Is. xxi. 8, where it is similarly used, with מִשְׁמֶרֶת for its parallel. Thus the Syr.

מִשְׁמֶרֶת, my place. From the use of מִצִּיּוֹר in the corresponding hemistich, it is obvious that the post of a sentinel or watchman appointed to keep an eye upon what may transpire without a fortified city, is that from which the idea is here borrowed. It has been questioned whether our prophet has any real locality in view, or whether the words are to be understood metaphorically. The former is advocated by Hitzig, who after describing it as a high and steep point, such as a tower, and comparing 2 Kings ix. 17, 2 Sam. xviii. 24, says "Here, in a solitary position, far from the bustle and noise of men, with his eye directed towards heaven, and his collected spirit fixed upon God, he looks out for revelations." With the exception, however, of Wolff, who preceded him, the hypothesis has met with no approbation. All that the passage seems to teach is, that Habakkuk, anxious to ascertain the Divine purpose relative to the enemies of his people, brought his mind into such a state of holy expectancy as was favorable to the reception of supernatural communications. מִשְׁמֶרֶת, to look about, from which מִשְׁמֶרֶת, a speculator, watchman, is derived, as likewise מִצִּיּוֹר, a watch-tower, is employed, as here in Piel, to express the looking out for an answer to prayer, Ps. v. 4. The paragogic ה of the Futures, marks the intensity of his desire. The formula מִשְׁמֶרֶת, which the Syr. and Targ. render מִשְׁמֶרֶת, in the sense of speaking or conversing with a person, the LXX. give by λαλήσει ἐν ἐμοί, "will speak in me." That the preposition מִ is here purposely used, in preference to לְ, בְ, עַל, or עִי, to denote the internal mode of the Divine communication which the prophet received, has been maintained by some who compare רִחוּן רִהוּהָ דְבַר-בְּרִי, "the Spirit of Jehovah spake in me," 2 Sam. xxiii. 2; Num. xii. 6, and particularly Zech. i. 9, 13, 14, ii. 2, 7, iv. 1, 4, 5, v. 5, 10, vi. 4, where the interpreting angel that addressed him in vision is uniformly styled מַלְאָכִי הַיְהוָה דְּבַר-בְּרִי, the Angel that spake in me, which the LXX. as uniformly render ὁ λαλῶν ἐν ἐμοί. This view was anciently expressed by Jerome, who says, "Sed et hoc notandum, ex eo quod dixerat, ut videam quid loquatur in me, propheticam visionem et eloquium Dei non extrinsecus ad Prophetas fieri, sed intrinsicus et interiori homini respondere." The same construction is put upon the phrase by Delitzsch, in his able commentary on our prophet. But it seems after all more than doubtful whether any such construction can fairly be put upon the phrase in most of the passages in which it occurs. In 2 Sam. xxxiii. 2, it may be admitted, though

2 And Jehovah answered me and said :

Write the vision and make it plain on tablets,
That he who readeth it may run.

through or by will equally well suit. The other declarations made Num. xii. 6, show that it cannot there be so understood, while what Moses states, taken in connection with 1 Samuel xxv. 39, and the passages in Zechariah, goes to prove that if any stress at all is to be laid upon the preposition, it must be regarded as conveying the idea of familiar or intimate communication. In הוֹדֵיָהוּ, the suffix is not to be taken passively, but actively; i. e. the הוֹדֵיָהוּ, argument, complaint, reproof, or in what way soever the word may be rendered, was not any employed by others, but what the prophet himself hath employed in the preceding chapter. What he was desirous of obtaining, was an answer to the statement which he had there made respecting the Divine conduct in permitting the Chaldeans to multiply their conquests without end. Maurer: "causa querimoniae meae."

2. הוֹדֵיָהוּ, the vision, or prophetic matter which was about to be communicated to the prophet. That the idea of digging, boring, or graving, is to be attached to הוֹדֵיָהוּ, the position of the verb in such connection clearly forbids. Had the character of the writing been durability, such an idea might fitly have been expressed by a word signifying to grave or dig deep, into a hard substance, but as it is unquestionably legibility that is intended, we are compelled to understand the verb as relative to הוֹדֵיָהוּ, and that either as a new Imperative, or as an adverbial Infinitive qualifying it. In the latter case the clause should be rendered, Write the vision, and that clearly. Thus the LXX.: Γράψον δρασιυ, καὶ σαφῶς. The Targ. has וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ, with which the Syr. so far agrees, rendering the verb by ܘܘܕܝܗܘܐ, to explain.

Comp. — וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ בְּאֵר, write —

very plainly, Deut. xxvii. 8. The command therefore, has respect to the size, and not to the depth of the writing. הוֹדֵיָהוּ, tables, having the article, Ewald thinks the prophet refers to the tables which were openly exhibited in the market-place, on which public announcements were graven in large and clear characters, in common use among the people. The article, however, may only designate the tables which were to be employed for the purpose. It may merely indicate these as definite in the mind of the speaker. This is often the case in Hebrew, when it cannot be rendered by the definite article in other languages. For the writing tablets of the ancients, see on Is. viii. 1. The LXX. have πύξιν, boxwood. The reason why the prophecy should be easily legible, is stated to be, that whosoever read it might run and publish it to all within his reach. It was a joyful message to the Jews, involving as it did the destruction of their oppressor, and their own consequent deliverance. Compare Dan. xii. 4, וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ רַבִּים וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ, "Many shall run to and fro," viz. with the explanation of the prophecy when unsealed, "and knowledge shall be increased." The two passages are remarkably parallel as to their general meaning, though the times and events to which they refer are totally different. Comp. also Rev. xxii. 17, Καὶ ὁ ἀκούων εἶπατε Ἐρχου! הוֹדֵיָהוּ, to run, is equivalent to הוֹדֵיָהוּ, to prophesy, Jer. xxiii. 21, obviously on the principle that those who were charged with a divine message were to use all despatch in making it known. The common interpretation, indeed, represents the meaning to consist in the writing being so large as to be easily read even by persons who were hasting past it. But in order to bear this construction, the words must read thus: וְהוֹדֵיָהוּ, to run,

3 For the vision is still for an appointed time,
 But it shall speak at the end, and not lie ;
 Though it should delay, wait for it,
 For it will surely come, and not tarry.

that the runner, or, he that runneth, may read it. Besides, such an addition would scarcely be requisite after בָּאֵרָא, and certainly would not correspond to the force of בְּמֵוֹלָדָי, in order that, with which the hemistich commences.

3. The particles כִּי, and וְ, in כִּי וְיָבִי, are correlative. מוֹדֵעַ, from מָדַע, to fix, appoint, denotes, in such connection, a season or period of time definitely fixed in the purpose of God for the occurrence of the predicted events. It is frequently employed by Daniel in this acceptation, along with קֵץ, the end, or termination of the state of the things comprehended in the prophecy. Comp. Dan. viii. 17, 19, xi. 27, 35 ; and somewhat similar phraseology, chap. viii. 26, x. 14. The term obviously implies that the period was still future, which is also expressed by the use of עוֹד, still, yet. This adverb is too closely connected in sense with מוֹדֵעַ, to admit of the rendering of Michaelis : " There will still come a vision, which shall determine the time ;" which he refers to Jeremiah's prophecy of the seventy years. הִנֵּה has been variously translated. LXX. ἀνατελεῖ ; Syr. ܐܘܪܝܢܐ, to come ; Vulg. apparebit ; Targ. מְתַקֵּן, prepared. As, like its cognates הִנֵּה and הִנְיָה, the root הִנְיָה, of which הִנֵּה is the future in Hiphil, signifies to breathe, blow, puff, Michaelis, Bauer, Stäudlin, De Wette, Hesselberg, Maurer, Winer, Hitzig, Ewald, and Hengstenberg, in his Psalms, vol. i. p. 255, contend, that it is here to be taken in the acceptation of panting, hastening, eagerly moving forward to an object, and that the meaning is, that the prophecy hastened to its accomplishment. Such construction, however, requires us to attach to קֵץ the idea of the object or objects on which a prophecy terminates, the end or extreme point beyond which its import does not extend. But the word nowhere occurs in this acceptation, but, as Delitzsch has shown, it always designates, in a prophetic-chronological sense, the time of the end, whatever may be the compass of events to which reference may be had. Besides, מוֹדֵעַ and מוֹדֵעַ are so obviously parallel, that they do not admit of being differently construed. מוֹדֵעַ here, is only an abbreviation of the phrase מוֹדֵעַ לְקֵץ, Dan. viii. 17, of which we have again a varied form in מוֹדֵעַ לְקֵץ, ver. 19. I therefore agree with Abarbanel, Jarchi, Kimchi, Vatablus, Calvin, Cocceius, Rosenmüller, Wolff, and Delitzsch, in assigning to הִנֵּה in this place the acceptation of speaking, breathing out words, in which acceptation the verb is used Prov. xii. 17, xiv. 5, 25, xix. 5, 9. This interpretation derives support from the antithetical הִנֵּה יְהִי, in which the idea of speaking is obviously implied. The meaning of the verse will accordingly be, that though the destruction of the Chaldean power, about to be predicted, was not to take place immediately, yet it was definitely fixed in the Divine counsel, and would infallibly happen at the termination of the period appointed for the exercise of its oppression, and for the deliverance of the captive Hebrews ; it was to be an object of confident expectation, though his arrival might be somewhat protracted. For מוֹדֵעַ לְקֵץ, see on Is. xxix. 9. הִנֵּה לְקֵץ, is emphatic, denoting the certainty of the event. מוֹדֵעַ, signifies to stay long, and intimates that the predicted event would not be protracted to any great length. Instead of מוֹדֵעַ לְקֵץ, upwards of forty of Kenicott and De Rossi's MSS., four ancient editions, the LXX., Aquil., Syr., Targ., and Vulg., read מוֹדֵעַ לְקֵץ.

4 Behold the proud ! his soul is not right within him ;
But the righteous shall live by his faith.

4. Most interpreters apply the former hemistich of this verse to the Chaldeans, supposing the denunciation against them to begin here ; but its coherence with the preceding verse is too close to admit of this construction, while the latter hemistich, were such application admitted, would awkwardly interrupt the prophecy at its very commencement. On the other hand, the whole verse most naturally and appropriately applies to the Jewish people, and contains a description of those who would proudly reject the prophetic vision, and of those who would give it a cordial reception : the two members forming a marked and striking antithesis. עָצָה, of which הָעָצָה may either be the third feminine singular of Pual, or a noun formed from that part of the verb, occurs elsewhere only in Hiphil, Num. xiv. 44 ; but it is evident, from the use of the derivative עָצָה, as denoting a swelling, tumor, mount, hill, etc., and the comparison of the context of both passages, that it is employed metaphorically to express the idea of mental inflation, elation, pride, presumption, or the like. Such Hebrew usage supports the relation of the verb to the Arab.

عفل, tumore laboravit, rather than to غفل, neglexit vel omisit rem, per so-cordiam non curavit, for which Pococke contends at great length in his Porta Mosis ; though the rendering of the LXX. ὑποστειλῆται, and that of Aquila, ναχλελυμένον, may both be referred to the radical notion conveyed by this root. Its reference to עָצָה, to set, become dark as proposed by Abarbanel, and approved by Deutsch and Wolff, cannot be sustained. Nor must it be overlooked, that though the following words, לֹא יֵשֶׁת׃ בּוֹי נַפְשׁוֹ בּוֹי, are not to be regarded as epexegetical of the term in question, they nevertheless appear to have been suggested by it. יָשָׁת׃ signifies not only to be straight or right, in opposition to being crooked, but also, even, level, plain, smooth, in opposition to what is rough, rugged, and difficult. See 1 Kings vi. 35 ; Ezra viii. 21 ; Ps. v. 9 ; Prov. xxiii. 31, where בְּיָהֳלֵךְ בְּמַיִם יָשָׁת׃ means, goeth sweetly or pleasantly down, or as Jerome gives it, ingreditur blande ; De Dieu, subit facilitate. Com. the Arab. يسر, facilis fuit

res ; facilitas, lenitas. Of the reading עָצָה, found in one of Kennicott's MSS., or עָצָה, as it is written in another, no account is to be made, though in his Dissert. Gen. § 72, that author prefers it to that which is attested by all the other codices. The Syr. حبل, wicked- ness, is founded upon a mistake of עָצָה for עָצָה. עָצָה I consider to be an abstract noun, used elliptically for אִישׁ הָעָצָה, a man of arrogance or presumption, and so to be rendered adjectively, the proud, presumptuous, etc. For instances of similar ellipsis, comp. אֲנִי הַפְּלִי, I am prayer, for אֲנִי אִישׁ תְּפִלָּה, I am a man of prayer, Ps. cix. 4 ; זָדוֹן, arrogance, for אִישׁ זָדוֹן, man of arrogance, i. e. arrogant, Jer. l. 31, 32 ; Dan. ix. 23. תְּמַדְדוֹת אַתָּה, thou art delights, for אִישׁ תְּמַדְדוֹת אַתָּה, thou art a man of delights, i. e. greatly beloved, as it is expressed in full, chap. x. 11, 19. See on Micah vi. 9. The term is thus strictly antithetical to צַדִּיק, the just, in the following hemistich, precisely as the predicate אֵלֹהֵי נַפְשׁוֹ בּוֹי, his soul is not right within him, is to יֵשֶׁת׃ בּוֹי, by his faith he shall live. With respect to this latter point of antithesis, it must be evident, that, as הָיָה, the latter predicate, signifies not merely to live, but to live well, be happy, the former must convey the idea of its opposite. This was clearly perceived by Luther, who often discovers a wonderful sagacity in seizing upon the meaning of a passage, though in his translation he may not adhere to the strict significations

5 Moreover wine is treacherous ;

of single words. He renders the words thus : Siehe wer halsstarrig ist, der wird keine Ruhe in seinem Herzen haben. "Behold he who is stubborn shall have no tranquillity in his heart." So also Gesenius : "Lo, the lofty-minded, his soul is not tranquil within him." Maurer : "Non planus, complanatus, compositus, tranquillus, etc., est animus ejus." To this interpretation I adhere, as best meeting the exigency of the passage. While those Jews who, elated by false views of security, refused to listen to the Divine message should have their security disturbed, and their minds agitated by the calamities with which they would be visited, such as lived righteously before God and men, should experience true happiness in the exercise of faith in that message, and others which God might communicate to them by his prophets. Thus a Lapidé : "Incredulus habet animam, id est vitam, non rectam, sed distortam, anxiam, miseram, et infelicem ; justus autem in fide et spe sua agit vitam rectam, puta letam, quietam, sanctam et felicem." בו, in, or within him, is added to show that the verb יִשָּׁר is not to be taken here as referring to anything of an objective character, such as the Divine estimation, agreeably to the meaning of the phrase יִשָּׁר בְּעֵינֵי יְהוָה, to be right in the sight of Jehovah, but must be understood as marking the subjective sphere of the predicate. For the fullest view of the various constructions, both logical and philological, that have been put upon this verse, I refer the more curious reader to Delitzsch. From the discrepancy existing between the Hebrew, and the version of the LXX., some have argued a corruption of the former, and have proposed emendations ; but the difference has arisen either from a desire on the part of these translators to render the sense plainer, or from their mistaking one letter for another that is similar. They render, ἐὰν ὑποστειλῆται οὐκ ἐδόκει ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν αὐτῷ. ὁ δὲ δίκαιος ἐκ πί-

στεως μου ζήσεται. To such rendering, its quotation by Paul in Heb. x. 38, gives no sanction, since he not unfrequently quotes passages from that version containing renderings to which there never could have been anything corresponding in the Hebrew text. In the present instance he takes a liberty with the version itself, placing the latter part of the verse first, and the former last, and omitting μου after πίστις. Nor, it must further be observed, is it his intention either here, or in Rom. i. 17, and Gal. iii. 11, in employing the words, ὁ δίκαιος ἐκ πίστεως ζήσεται, to maintain, that the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ is taught by Habakkuk ; he merely applies the principle laid down by the prophet respecting the instrumentality of faith in securing the safety and happiness of the pious portion of the Jewish people to the subject of which he is treating — the influence of faith in the gospel scheme of salvation. As יִשָּׁר is the nominative absolute, יְהוָה cannot be connected with it, except in regard to the pronominal reference, but must be joined with יִשָּׁר, as for the righteous, he shall live by his faith. From the circumstance, however, that the two former words are, in most MSS. and editions, joined by the accents Merca and Tiphca, while the latter, as a disjunctive, separates the second from the third, it might seem that the Rabbins construed the clause thus : but the just by his faith, shall live. And this construction would seem to confirm the hypothesis that in his quotation, Rom. i. 17, Gal. iii. 11, the Apostle connects ἐκ πίστεως with ὁ δίκαιος, and not with ζήσεται ; but as quoted by him, Heb. x. 38, the former division of the words alone suits the connection, in which his object evidently is to show the necessity of faith as a means of perseverance under all the afflictions and persecutions of the christian life. See Owen on the passage.

5. The two first lines of this verse partake of the nature of a proverb, being

The haughty man stayeth not at home,
 Because he enlargeth his desire as Sheol ;
 He is even as death, and cannot be satisfied ;
 He gathered for himself all the nations,
 And collecteth for himself all the people,
 6 Shall not all these utter an ode against him,
 A song of derisive taunt against him, and say :
 Wo to him that increaseth that which is not his !
 How long ?
 And ladeth himself with many pledges !

expressed in a short and pithy manner, and admitting of general application. It is, however, obvious from the connection with what follows, that they are introduced with special reference to the Chaldean power, the nefarious conduct of which the prophet immediately proceeds to describe. The phrase והגיד בויגד, wine is a deceiver, has its parallel, Prov. xxx. 1, והגיד בויגד, wine is a mocker. והגיד occurs only here, and Prov. xxi. 24, where, from its connection with והגיד, proud, as its synonyme, it clearly signifies elated, haughty, LXX. ἀλαζόν. Chald. והגיד, as used by the Rabbins, superbivit. See Buxt. in voc. Thus also in the Nazarean Syr. ܘܗܘܘܐ, Ethpa. superbivit. There is, therefore, no necessity for recurring to the Arab., the attempted derivations from which are very precarious. The introductory particles והגיד are designed to connect the proper prophecy with what had just been developed of the vision, as that which formed the most important part of it. והגיד is expressive of addition, and והגיד of certainty. That the prophet has his eye upon the intemperance to which the Babylonians were greatly addicted, there can be little doubt. Comp. Dan. v.; with Herod. i. 191; Xenoph. Cyrop. vii. 5, 15. "Babylonii maxime in vinum et quæ ebrietatem sequuntur effusi sunt." Curtius, v. 1. How strikingly was the deceptive character of wine exemplified in the case of Belshazzar! והגיד, primarily signifies to dwell, remain at rest, which signification better suits the present passage than the secondary one of being decorous, proper, etc., adopted by the Vulg., Ewald, and some others. Still it is a question, whether the not remaining tranquil is to be viewed as a voluntary or as an involuntary act. The Targ., Rashi, Kimchi, Ben-Melec, De Wette, Justi, Maurer, and Delitzsch, refer it to the forcible ejection for the Babylonians: Abenezra, Abarbanel, Rosenmüller, Wolff, Wahl, Gesenius, and Hitzig, to their restless disposition, by which they were continually impelled to go forth upon new expeditions of conquest. The latter seems, from what follows, to be the preferable interpretation. For והגיד בויגד, see on Is. v. 14, and comp. Prov. xxvii. 20, xxx. 15. The insatiable desire of conquest, which specially showed itself in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, is here forcibly predicted. והגיד בויגד and והגיד בויגד must be restricted to all the nations with which the Jews were familiar.

6. Comp. Is. xiv. 4, and see my notes on והגיד as there occurring. והגיד occurs only here, and Prov. i. 6, in which verse also all the three synonymes והגיד, והגיד, and והגיד are found. It properly signifies derision, taunt, scorn, from והגיד, to stammer, speak barbarously or unintelligibly; hence to mock, deride; and thus the substantive obtained the acceptance, taunt, taunting song. LXX. σκοτεινὸν λόγον. In the later Hebrew the word is used to denote poetry in general. והגיד means oratio inflexa, per-

- 7 Shall not they rise up suddenly that have lent thee on usury ?
 And awake that shall shake thee violently ?
 And thou shalt become their prey.
- 8 Because thou hast plundered many nations,

plexa, an enigma, highly figurative and difficult language, requiring acuteness and ingenuity fully to understand it.

Comp. the Arab, حون, حان, superavit negotii difficultatem. Delitzsch not unaptly instances the words עֲבָטִיט, ver. 6, נִשְׁפָּיִף, ver. 7, and קִרְקָלוֹךְ, ver. 16, as enigmata of this description. The derisive ode or song commences immediately, and occupies the rest of the chapter. It consists of five stanzas, the three first of which are composed of three verses each, the fourth of four verses, and the last of two. Each stanza has its distinct and appropriate subject; and with the exception of the last, they all commence with הוֹי, wo, the denunciative interjection; and have each a verse at the close, beginning with כִּי; thus forming an organic whole of singular force and beauty. הוֹי אֲנִי is to be taken impersonally or collectively. עֲבָטִיט has been variously interpreted. Several of the Rabbins, the Syr., Vulg., and after them Luther, and other translators, take it to be compounded of עָב, dense, and טִיט, clay, which ten of Kennicott's MSS. read as two words, and most commentators who follow them suppose riches or earthly goods to be meant: but it is more in accordance with the grammatical form of the word to regard it as a quadriliteral noun, from the root עָבַט, to exchange, give a pledge; in Hiph., to lend on a pledge. The signification of the noun is thus correctly given by Lee: "an accumulation of pledges in the hand of an unfeeling usurer." The form is that of בְּמִרְיָא as in חֲבִלִי־לִי from חָבַל, or בְּמִרְיָא from בָּמַר; or טִיטִיט from טָגַר; or טִיטִיטִיט from טָפַר. The reduplication expresses intensity or augmentation. Maurer, copia pignorum captorum, an interpretation already given by Nic. Fuller in his Miscell. Sac. lib. v. cap. viii. The Chaldean power is thus represented as a rapacious and cruel usurer, who had accumulated the property of others, and from whom it would again be taken. Comp. Deut. xxiv. 10-13, for the use of עָבַט, and the law against cruelty in usurers. The hypothesis of Delitzsch, that עֲבָטִיט is, as an enigmatical term, to be understood both as a compound, and as a quadriliteral, is not in keeping with his usual good sense.

7. עֲבָטִיט, suddenly, corresponds to עֲבָטִיט־מִנְתִּי, how long? in the preceding verse, and not improbably refers to the unexpectedness of the attack made upon Babylon by the Medes and Persians. See on Is. xxi. 3, 4. נִשְׁפָּיִף properly signifies to bite, and thus it is rendered in most versions. Some translate, oppress; but, since it likewise signifies to lend on usury, there can be little doubt the prophet intended it to be understood in this acceptance, as a striking antithesis to עָבַטִיט at the close of the preceding verse. Comp. the Aram. נִשְׁפָּיִף, momordit, usuras exegit. Arab. قرض, the same. The same mode of speech was not unknown both to the Greeks and Romans. Aristoph. Nub. i. 12, δακνόμενος ὅτι τῶν χρεῶν. Lucan. i. 171, usura vorax. The meaning is, that as the Babylonians had cruelly amassed the property of others, so other nations, like devouring usurers, would unmercifully deprive them of all they had acquired. נִשְׁפָּיִף, defective for נִשְׁפָּיִפִּי, as in Jud. xvi. 20. נִשְׁפָּיִפִּי, the Phil. participle of שָׁפַף, to shake, agitate. The reduplicate form conveys the idea of violent or excessive agitation. The allusion is to the violent seizure of a debtor by his creditor. See Matt. xviii. 28.

8. The remainder of the nations con-

- All the remainder of the people shall plunder thee ;
 Because of the blood of men, and of the violence done to the earth,
 To the city and all that dwell in it.
- 9 Wo to him that procureth wicked gain for his house,
 That he may establish his nest on high,
 To be preserved from the power of calamity.
- 10 Thou hast devised what is a disgrace to thy house,
 Cutting off many people, and sinning against thyself.
- 11 For the stone crieth out from the wall,
 And the brick from the timber answereth it ;

sisted of those who had escaped the devastation of the Chaldeans. The terms man, earth, and city, are to be understood generally, and are not to be restricted to the Jews, with their country and its metropolis.  $\text{אֶרֶץ-בְּנֵי-אָדָם}$  is the genitive of object.

9. In the stanza, comprising this and the two following verses, the avarice and selfishness of the Chaldeans are denounced. The phrase  $\text{בְּצַע בְּצַע}$  is very common in Hebrew. The verb denotes to cut, or break off, as the Orientals, especially the Chinese do, pieces of silver and other metals in their money transactions with each other. Hence it came to be applied, in a bad sense, to such as were greedily occupied with such transactions, and its derivative  $\text{בָּצַע}$ , to signify wicked gain, lucre. To mark it, in the present instance, as specially atrocious,  $\text{רָע}$ , wicked, is added.  $\text{בַּיִת}$ , house, stands here for the royal family;  $\text{קֶן}$ , nest, for the arx regia, to express its inaccessible height, the allusion being taken from the nest of the eagle, which is built on high rocks, difficult of access. See Job xxxix. 27, and comp. Numb. xxiv. 21; Jer. xlix. 16.

10. "Thou hast devised disgrace to thy house," means thy schemes and projects shall issue in the infamy of thy family. Instead of  $\text{קָצוֹר}$ , the infinitive of  $\text{קָצַף}$ , the ancient versions have read  $\text{קָצוּרָה}$ , the preterite of  $\text{קָצַף}$ . The infinitive may either follow in construction

$\text{הִזְעִי}$  preceding, or the following  $\text{הִזְעִי}$ . I have adopted the latter, and rendered it participially. It properly denotes the direct aim of the action predicted by the preceding finite verb. For the last clause, comp. Prov. viii. 36, xx. 2.

11. An exquisite instance of bold and daring personification, by which the materials used in the construction of the royal palace, and other sumptuous buildings, at Babylon, are introduced as responsively complaining of the injustice which they had suffered, either in their having been taken from their original owners, or in their being made subservient to the scenes of wickedness that were enacted in their presence. Comp. Luke xix. 40. The Targ. adds to the first line,  $\text{עַל דְּהָיָה לְיָמָיו}$ , because violence has been done to it.  $\text{בְּצַע}$  occurs only here, but from the signification of the cognate Syr.  $\text{ܥܦܨܐ}$ , connexuit, it has been supposed to mean the cross beam by which the walls of a building are held together. Thus Sym., Theod., and the 5th vers.,  $\text{σύνδεσμος}$ , LXX.  $\text{κάνθαρος}$ , scarabeus, but which some think was originally  $\text{κανθήριον}$ , which Vitruvius explains as signifying a cross-beam. Arab.

$\text{من الشجرة، الودد}$ , the pin from the wood. According to the Mishnah, the word signifies a half brick, which Parchon also gives as the meaning. He thus describes it:  $\text{כֵּסִים פִּי לְבֵנִים קֶטְנִים}$  עשויין בכבשן ככלי חרס ובונים בהם

- 12 Wo to him that buildeth a town through bloodshed,
 And establisheth a city through injustice.
 13 Behold ! is it not from Jehovah of hosts ?
 So that the people shall labor for the very fire ;
 Yea, the nations shall weary themselves for mere vanity.
 14 For the earth shall be filled
 With the knowledge of the glory of Jehovah,
 As the waters cover the sea.
 15 Wo to him that giveth drink to his neighbor,
 Pouring out thy wrath, and making him drunk ;
 In order to look upon their nakedness.

הַבְּנִינִים, small bricks prepared in the kiln, like pottery, and used in building edifices. This interpretation is confirmed by the rendering of Aquila, ἄζα, what is baked, and by the abundant use of bricks by the Babylonians, which are still visible in the ruins of their city. Citing this passage in the Taanith, Rashi explains it to be "half a brick which is usually laid between two layers of wood," Delitzsch. That it was not the wood itself is evident from the following מִצֵּץ, from or out of the wood, except we take the preposition as indicating the material of which the beam consisted. In this latter case, the words should be rendered, And the wooden beam answereth it; but against such construction the parallel מִצֵּיר, out of the wall, is an insuperable objection.

12, 13. The subject of the third stanza, which begins here, was naturally suggested by the concluding verse of the preceding. The riches which enabled the king of Babylon to rebuild and enlarge the royal city, were procured in the bloody wars in which he had engaged; and the works themselves were carried up by people from different parts of the empire, and by captives from other nations. The preposition מִן prefixed in מִצֵּיר הַיָּם, points out the ultimate cause of the destruction of the Babylonian empire—the overruling providence of God, who, in order to give prominence to his resistless omnipotence, is designated יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת, Jehovah of hosts. For this epithet, see on Is. i. 9. בְּרִי is not a poetic form for בַּ, but is intensive, רִי, signifying sufficiency, abundance. The preposition here points out the final issue or result of the labor and fatigue connected with the erections in question, the conflagration and depopulation of the city of Babylon. The last two lines of verse 13 are found in Jer. li. 58; only שָׁשׁ and רִיק have exchanged places, גְּעֵשׂוֹת stands for גְּעֵשׂוֹת, and the defective form הִיגָעָה for הִיגָעָה. For the destruction by fire, comp. Jer. li. 30, 58; for her desolation, ver. 43. Hitzig, from the mere circumstance of the use of the same terms Micah vii. 10, applies the prophecy to Jehoiakim!

14. This verse is clearly predictive of the gospel dispensation, to the introduction of which the destruction of the Babylonian power was indispensable, inasmuch as it involved the deliverance of the Jews from captivity, and their re-occupation of their own land before the advent of the Messiah. See on Is. xi. 9, 11, the former of which verses contains a similar prediction of the same event. יָם, sea, is used for the bed of the sea.

15. The commencement of the fourth stanza. Though the idea of the shameless conduct of drunkards, here depicted, may have been borrowed from the profligate manners of the Babylonian court, yet the language is not to be taken lit-

- 16 Thou art filled with shame, not with glory ;
 Drink thou also, and show thyself uncircumcized ;
 The cup of Jehovah's right hand shall come round to thee,
 And great ignominy shall be upon thy glory.

erally, as if the prophet were describing such manners, but, as the sequel shows, is applied allegorically to the state of stupefaction, prostration, and exposure, to which the conquered nations were reduced by the Chaldeans. See on Is. li. 17, 20; and comp. Ps. lxxv. 8; Jer. xxv. 15-28, xlix. 12, li. 7; Ezek. xxiii. 31, 32; Rev. xiv. 10, xvi. 9, xviii. 6. רָעָה is a collective, and thus is equivalent to רָעִיּוֹהוּ in the plural, which is required to agree with the suffix in מְעוֹרְרֵיהֶם. The latter noun is derived from עָרָר Arab. عار, to be naked, as its synonyme עָרָה is from עָרָה. In הִמָּתָר is a change from the third person to the second, for the sake of effect. There not being anything in the ancient Greek versions corresponding to the הָ, is no ground for its rejection, since their authors frequently took liberties even when professedly most verbal. הִמָּתָר is not the construct of הִמָּתָה or הִמָּתָה, bottle, but of הִמָּתָה, heat, or wrath. Comp. וַיִּשְׁפָּרֵם בְּהִמָּתָר, Is. lxiii. 6, and li. 17; Jer. xxv. 15; Rev. xvi. 19. Delitzsch attempts in vain to set aside the signification of pour, as inhering in the root הִפָּח; Arab. سفح, effudit. Cognate שָׁפַח. Targ. שָׁפַח is the infinitive used instead of the participle. The language of the concluding clause of the verse is expressive of the deepest humiliation on the one hand, and of the most haughty wantonness on the other.

16. The preposition in מִבְּבוֹד is negative, as in רַע מִשׂוֹב, Ps. lii. 5. The full force of the hemistich is, "Thou art satiated, but it is with shame, not with glory." Kimchi and others, comparing הִמָּתָר עֲלֶיךָ, Is. li. 17, and הָ

רָעָה, Zech. xii. 2, suppose that in הִמָּתָר, be thou uncircumcized, there is a transposition of the letters ע and ר, and that the verb has originally been רָעָה, reel or stagger. And thus the LXX. (καρδία σαλεύθητι καὶ σείσθητι) have interpreted it, and have been followed by the Arab., Syr., and Vulg. There is, however, such a manifest agreement with מְעוֹרְרֵיהֶם, pudenda eorum, at the close of the preceding verse, that the interpretation cannot be admitted. In the mouth of a Hebrew no term could have expressed more ineffable contempt. Comp. 1 Sam. xvii. 36. As the Chaldeans had treated the nations which they conquered in the most disgusting manner, so they, in their turn, should be similarly treated. To express the certainty of the event, the verbs are in the imperative. See on Is. vi. 10. הַסִּיב is the future in Niphal, and conveys the idea of the cup of suffering being transferred from one nation to another, each in its turn, being made to drink of it. Comp. Jer. xxv. 6; Lam. iv. 21. תִּקְלָיוֹן, the Vulg. renders, vomitus ignominie, as if compounded of קָי for קָיא, vomit, and קָלָיוֹן, shame. In nine MSS. it is read as two words, and this etymology is approved by most Jewish and Christian interpreters. It is, however, more in accordance with the genius of the Hebrew language, to regard it as a reduplicate form of קָלָיוֹן, employed for the sake of intensity, after the form קָלָיוֹן: only instead of קָלָיוֹן we have the softer קָלָיוֹן. Comp. the Syr.

קָלָיוֹן = קָלָיוֹן. Thus the LXX. ἀτιμῶν; Syr. كَلِيُون; Targ. קָלָיוֹן. The glory of the Babylonians was to be completely eclipsed by the deep disgrace in which they should be involved.

- 17 For the violence done to Lebanon shall cover thee,
 As the destruction of beasts terrifieth them ;
 Because of the blood of men, and the violence done to the earth,
 To the city, and all that dwell in it.
- 18 What profiteth the graven image which its maker graveth —
 The molten image, and the teacher of falsehood ?
 In which the maker of his work trusteth —
 Making dumb idols.
- 19 Woe to him that saith to the wood, Awake !
 Wake up ! to the dumb stone.
 It teach ! There it is,

17. הַחַמְסִים לְבָנוֹן and הַחַמְסִים-אֶרְצָךְ are genitives of object. That Lebanon is not here to be understood literally, but figuratively, of Jerusalem, seems fully established by the prophetic style in other passages, especially Jer. xxii. 23 ; Ezek. xvii. 3, 12 ; Zech. xi. 1. The aptness of the figure consists partly in the circumstance, that cedars from that mountain were employed in the construction of the temple and other houses in Jerusalem, 1 Kings vi. 9, 10, 18, vii. 2, ix. 10, 11 ; 2 Chron. i. 15 ; and partly in its stateliness and grandeur as the metropolis. Against this interpretation, the objections do not apply which Delitzsch makes to the opinion of those who maintain that by Lebanon the land of Palestine is meant. כִּסְיוֹ, to cover, is used emphatically to express the completeness of the destruction which should overtake the Chaldeans. Similar violence to that which they had exercised should be brought upon themselves. The ו in וְיִשְׂרָאֵל is a particle of comparison, retaining, indeed, its ordinary conjunctive power, but also introducing a clause designed to illustrate the preceding. Of this idiom, the following are instances : אֲרָמִים לְעֵמָל אֲרָמִים לְעֵמָל אֲרָמִים לְעֵמָל, Man is born to trouble, AND (AS) birds of prey fly aloft, Job v. 7. בִּרְאֵי אָזְנוֹ תִּלְוֶה וְיִתְּנֶה וְיִטְעַם בִּרְאֵי אָזְנוֹ תִּלְוֶה וְיִתְּנֶה וְיִטְעַם, For the ear trieth words, AND (AS) the palate tasteth food. This construction entirely obviates the difficulty which necessarily attaches to the attempts that have been made to interpret the בְּהַמְּוִת, beasts, of the inhabitants of Palestine. The prophet compares the confusion and destruction which should come upon the enemy of the Jews to those experienced by the wild beasts when brought into circumstances from which they cannot escape. רָצָח signifies to be broken, broken in pieces, destroyed, confounded, terrified. In the present form יִתְּנֶה, the Yod is substituted for the Dagesh in the regular form יִתְּנֶה, as יִתְּנֶה for יִתְּנֶה, Is. xxxiii. 1. The Nun appended is not paragogic, but the verbal suffix of the third feminine plural, agreeing with בְּהַמְּוִת. There is no sufficient ground for changing ו into וְ, though the authors of some of the ancient versions may have thus read. For the last clause, see on verse 8.

18, 19. These verses expose the folly of idolatry to which the Babylonians were wholly addicted. It might be supposed, from all the other stanzas having been introduced by a denunciatory וְהִי, wo, that a transposition has here taken place, and that the nineteenth ought to be read before the eighteenth : and Green has thus placed them in his translation ; but there is a manifest propriety in anticipating the inutility of idols, in close connection with what the prophet had just announced respecting the downfall of Babylon, before delivering his

Overlaid with gold and silver,
 But there is no breath at all within it.
 20 But Jehovah is in his holy temple ;
 Keep silence before him all the earth.

denunciation against their worshippers themselves. כִּי, in both instances, is used as a relative pronoun, as in Gen. iii. 19. iv. 25; Is. lvii. 20. The idol is called "a teacher of falsehood," on account of the lying oracles that were connected with its worship. For these verses, compare Is. xlv. 9-20; Jer. x. In the latter part of the nineteenth verse, the language is highly and pointedly ironical. הֲדַע יְיָ, it teach! is an emphatic form of putting a question which requires a negative reply. יְיָ forms a paronomasia with מִי יְיָ in the preceding verse. הֲהִנֵּה הוּא, there it is. Such is the force of the interjection הֲהִנֵּה in this place — it not being followed as usual by the accusative, but for the sake of making the idol more prominent, by the nominative case.

20. In striking contrast with the utter nihilism of idols, Jehovah is here introduced, at the close of the prophecy, as the invisible Lord of all, occupying his celestial temple, whence he is ever ready to interpose his omnipotence for the deliverance and protection of his people and the destruction of their enemies. Comp. Is. xxvi. 21. Such a God it becomes all to adore in solemn and profound silence. Ps. lxxvi. 8, 9; Zeph. i. 7; Zech. ii. 13.

---

CHAPTER III.

THOUGH forming a distinct whole, this chapter is intimately connected with the two preceding, the subjects contained in which it presupposes, and is evidently designed to afford consolation to the Jews during the national calamities there anticipated. It exhibits a regular ode beginning with a brief but simple and appropriate exordium; after which follows the main subject, which is treated in a manner perfectly free and unrestrained, as the different topics rose one after another in the powerfully excited mind of the prophet; and finishes with an epigrammatic resumption of the point first adverted to in the introduction, and the practical lesson which the piece was intended to teach.

With respect to the body of the ode, interpreters are greatly divided in opinion. The Fathers generally, and after them many Catholic commentators, and among Protestants, Cocceius, Bengel, Roos, and others, apply the whole chapter, with certain modifications, to New Testament times, and subject it to all the uncertainty of imaginary interpretation. But the principal point of disagreement relates to the theophania, or Divine interposition, so sublimely set forth, ver. 3-15. According to the Targum, Abarbanel, Abenezra, Tarnovius, Munster, Clarius, Drusius, Schnurrer, Herder, Michaelis, Green, Lowth, Tingstadius, Eichhorn, Justi, Hesselberg, Ackermann, and Ewald, the prophet adverts to the wonderful displays of the power and majesty of God during the early history of the Hebrews. Maurer, Hitzig, and Delitzsch, on the other hand, contend that the future interposition of Jehovah for the destruction of the Chaldeans, is what he exclusively contemplates. The last-mentioned author has not only gone at great length, and with much minuteness, into the subject, but appears to have exhausted all his critical and exegetical ingenuity in his attempt to establish his hypothesis. Taking for granted that יְהוָה, ver. 3, cannot, by any possibility, be construed otherwise than to express the strict futurity of the advent predicated, he proceeds to show, from what he considers to be the organic structure of the ode; from the connection of שָׁמַיְתָי and יְהוָה רָגַז, ver. 16; and from certain features of the picture itself, that what he calls the lyric-prophetical view is alone to be admitted. I must, however, confess, that after a careful examination of his arguments, I can discover nothing in them that goes to overturn the historical position adopted by the numerous writers above mentioned. That nothing in the shape of a regular and specific recital of distinct facts is exhibited in the tableau, cannot fairly be urged against this interpretation, since such a recital would ill accord with the enthusiasm and impetuosity which are so characteristic of the ode as a species of poetry. The abrupt and rapid transitions of the prophet did not admit of more than a slight, though sublimely figurative allusion, to one or two localities, which it was necessary to specify, in order to call up the general scene of events to the mind of the reader: all the rest is left to be supplied by his familiar acquaintance with the sacred national records. What he aims at is to produce a powerful impression by condensing, within the shortest possible limits, a view of the magnalia Dei, as exhibited in these records. And this he does by giving utterance to the total impression which they produced upon his own mind, rather than by furnishing a detailed historical description. Regarding the composition in this light, the obscurity and apparent incoherence which attach to certain parts of it are at once accounted for.

As parallels to this ode, we may adduce Deut. xxxiii. 2—5; Jud. v. 4, 5; Ps. lxxviii. 7, 8, lxxvii. 13—20, cxiv.; Is. lxiii. 11—14. That the Holy Spirit availed himself, so to speak, of some of these passages in presenting the subject to the view of the prophet, there can, I think, be little doubt. The agreement in point of phraseology, especially as it respects Ps. lxxvii. is most palpable. Some, indeed, have maintained the priority of our ode to the Psalm; but Delitzsch has proved, by an elaborate collation of passages and expressions, that this hypothesis is entirely without foundation, and that Habakkuk had the Psalm brought to his mind, just as he had the song of Moses called up to his recollection.

The following description of this sublime ode, by the master pen of Bishop Lowth, is not more beautiful than just: "The prophet, indeed, illustrates this subject throughout with equal magnificence; selecting from such an assemblage of miraculous incidents, the most noble and important, displaying them in the most splendid colors, and embellishing them with the sublimest imagery, figures, and diction, the dignity of which is so heightened and recommended by the superior elegance of the conclusion, that were it not for a few shades, which the hand of time has apparently cast over it in two or three passages, no composition of the kind, would, I believe, appear more elegant or more perfect than this poem." Lect. xxviii. Whether the hand of time has really cast any shades over it will appear in the sequel.

That it was designed for use in public worship, appears both from the inscription and the subscription, as well as from the musical term שְׁלֵחַ, Selah, occurring verses 3, 9, 13.

The chapter begins with the title and introduction, ver. 1, 2. Habakkuk then represents Jehovah as appearing in glorious majesty on Sinai, 3, 4; describes the ravages of the plague in the desert, 5; the consternation into which the nations were thrown by the victorious approach of the Hebrews to Canaan, and their wars with the inhabitants, 6—10; specially refers to the celestial phenomenon at Gibeon, 11; and then sets forth the auspicious results of the interposition of God on behalf of his people, 12—15. The prophet concludes by resuming the subject of the introduction, 16; and strongly asserting his unshaken confidence in God in the midst of anticipated calamity, 17—19.

1 A PRAYER of Habakkuk, the prophet: with triumphal music.

1. תְּפִלָּה, usually rendered prayers, supplications, etc., or not. Hence it is applied to all the Psalms of David collectively, Ps. lxxii. 20; and is otherwise

2 O Jehovah! I heard the report of thee, I was afraid;
O Jehovah! revive thy work in the midst of the years;

only used in the inscriptions of Psalms xvii. lxxxvi. xc. cii. cxlii. The term is derived from  $\text{בָּזַק}$ , to separate, distinguish; cognate to  $\text{הִבְזִק}$ ; and so to form an opinion or judgment, to judge, give a verdict. In Hithpael the verb signifies to apply to a judge for a favorable decision, to supplicate, pray, etc.; and is employed at the commencement of the song of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1. Though the only precatory sentences are those contained in ver. 2, yet there are several instances of direct address to God, which impart to the ode one of the characteristic feature of prayer. The Lamed prefixed in  $\text{לְפָנַי הִבְזִקְתָּ}$  is that of authorship.  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ בְּעַלְמֵי}$ . That this is a musical term seems beyond dispute, from similar terms occurring in the titles of the psalms, such as  $\text{לְפָנַי הִבְזִקְתָּ בְּעַלְמֵי}$ , etc. For the explanation of the noun, which only occurs here, and in the singular  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ}$ , in the title of Ps. vii., different methods have been proposed. Bauer, Herder, Perschke, De Wette, Rosenmüller, Lee, Hitzig, and Maurer, have recourse to the Arabic  $\text{شكبي}$ , anxius, tristis, mœstus fuit, and render  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ בְּעַלְמֵי}$ , after the manner of elegies, but there seems no reason deducible either from the present ode or from the Psalm, why they should be thus characterized, or why they should be sung to a plaintive tune, but the contrary. Others, as Wahl, Justi, Gesenius, derive the word from the Syriac  $\text{ܩܘܢܝܢܐ}$ , in Pael,  $\text{ܩܘܢܝܢܐ}$ , cecinit, whence  $\text{ܩܘܢܝܢܐ}$ , carmen, cantus, to which it has justly been objected, that it is too vague and indefinite to admit of adoption. The LXX., indeed, have  $\psi\alpha\lambda\mu\omicron\varsigma$  in the Psalm, and here  $\phi\delta\eta\varsigma$ ; but without any apparent reference to the specific meaning of the term. Other philologists more reasonably content themselves with  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ}$ , an indigenous Hebrew verb in common use, signifying to err, wander, reel, etc. This interpretation Aquila, Symm., and the fifth Greek version so far support, rendering  $\epsilon\pi\iota\ \alpha\gamma\upsilon\omicron\nu\mu\alpha\tau\omega\nu$ , which Jerome adopts, on the principle that  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ}$  signifies to sin through ignorance. To this derivation Hengstenberg has recently given his adhesion (Comm. on Psalms, vol. i. p. 144), but most preposterously affirms, that in our ode the sins or crimes of the Chaldeans are intended. There is nothing either in the Psalm or in the song of Habakkuk to warrant the appropriation of any such signification of the term. The most probable explanation is that given by Delitzsch, who is of opinion that  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ}$  means a dithyrambos, or cantio erratica, a species of rhythmical composition, which, from its enthusiastic irregularity, is admirably adapted for songs of victory or triumph. It is obvious, however, from the established use of the preposition  $\text{בְּ}$  upon, after the manner of, or accompanied with, in the titles of the Psalms, that the plural  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ בְּעַלְמֵי}$ , to which, in like manner, it is here prefixed, must be understood as describing a corresponding kind of music with which the ode was to be accompanied. The translation of Theodotion,  $\upsilon\pi\epsilon\rho\ \tau\omega\nu\ \epsilon\kappa\omicron\upsilon\sigma\iota\alpha\sigma\mu\omega\nu$ , i. e. as Jerome interprets the words, pro voluntariis, has, in all probability, some such reference.

2. The  $\text{הִבְזִקְתָּ}$ , report of Jehovah, here referred to by the prophet, does not mean what God had communicated to him, but a report respecting Jehovah, or the punishment which he had threatened to inflict upon the Jews for their sins. The genitive is that of object. That it cannot refer to what follows in the ode is certain, since the exhibition there given of the Divine interposition for the overthrow of the enemies of his people was calculated to inspire the prophet with joy, and not with the fear of which

In the midst of the years make it known :

In wrath remember mercy.

3 God came from Teman ;

The Holy One from mount Paran : Pause.

he declares he was conscious. His prayer also, that while punishment was being inflicted, God would exercise pity, shows that the Jews, and not the Chaldeans, were to be the subjects of the infliction. It may, therefore, be regarded as certain, that what he has in view is the prediction chap. i. 6-11. The fear with which the prophet was seized, he particularly describes ver. 16. By תְּשׁוּבָתְךָ, thy work, Abarbanel, Kimchi, Schnurrer, Justi, and some others, understand the Jews, on the ground that they are designated the עֲשֵׂה, work of Jehovah's hands, Is. xlv. 11; but the simple occurrence of the same word, irrespective of the specific claims of the connection, cannot justify such a construction of the meaning. In chap. i. 5, the term is used of the Divine judgment upon the Jews, as it also is Is. v. 12, and of that upon their enemies, Ps. lxiv. 9. This latter sense, which involves the exercise of the power and goodness of God on behalf of his people, alone suits the present context. Comp. Ps. xc. 16. What the prophet prays for is the renewal of such interposition. This he expresses by the strong term תָּקַע, quicken, restore to life, which suggests the idea of a cessation of the avenging and delivering power of the Most High. It had been, in regard to its exertion, as if it had been dead, and required to be called forth afresh into action. Thus Jarchi: חייחו פעלך הראשון שהייתה נפרע לנו מאויבינו בקרב שני הצרה שאנו שרוייהם בש הייהו כלומר עוררהו והשיבהו. Thy former work, when thou didst avenge us of our enemies, in the midst of the years of the calamity in which we live, revive it, i. e. rouse it up, cause it to return. Comp. Is. li. 9, 10. No stress is to be laid on the phrase בְּיַמֵּי שָׁנִים, in the midst of the years, from which Bengel deduced so much fanciful support to his chronological calculations; maintaining that the middle point of the years of the world is meant. שָׁנִים are unquestionably the years, or period of affliction, which was to come upon the Jewish people. בְּיַמֵּי שָׁנִים is not to be taken in the strict acceptance of the middle point of any given period of time, but is, as frequently, only a more emphatic prepositive form, instead of ב, in. The meaning, therefore, simply is, During the period of suffering, or, in the course of our punishment by the Chaldeans, interpose for our deliverance. Symm. ἐν τῶν ἐνιαυτῶν. To give pathos to the language, the phrase is repeated; and הוֹדֵיךָ is added, as synonymous with זָכַרְתָּ, the suffix of which is to be understood, though not expressed. The verb עָדָה, to know, is here used in the sense of experiencing, knowing by experience. תָּקַע, the infinitive, is to be regarded as an accusative. Comp. Ps. xxv. 6: זָכַרְתָּ יְהוָה יְהוָה בִּי מַעֲשֵׂי הַמִּינָה. It is merely necessary to exhibit the version of this verse as now found in the text of the LXX. to show that it can only have originated in the amalgamation of different readings, some of them probably marginal glosses, and that it would be most unwarrantable to attempt any correction of the Hebrew text by it: Κύριε, εἰσακήκοα τὴν ἀκοήν σου, καὶ ἐφοβήθη, κατανοήσα τὰ ἔργα σου καὶ ἐξέστην ἐν μέσῳ δύο ζῶων γνωσθήσῃ ἐν τῷ ἐγγίσειν τὰ ἔτη ἐπιγνωσθήσῃ ἐν τῷ παρεῖναι τὸν καιρὸν ἀναδειχθήσῃ, ἐν τῷ παραχθῆναι τὴν ψυχὴν μου, ἐν ὀργῇ ἐλέους μνησθήσῃ.

3. תָּקַע is not used by any of the minor prophets except Habakkuk, and by him only here, and chap. i. 11. It occurs four times in Daniel, and once in Isaiah, but never in Jeremiah or Ezekiel. There is no foundation whatever for the

His splendor covered the heavens,
And the earth was full of his praise.

position assumed by Gesenius and some others, that this use of the singular belongs to the later Hebrew, though it is allowed to belong to the poetic diction. It is employed forty times in the book of Job, one of the most ancient specimens of Hebrew composition extant, and twice by Moses, Deut. xxxii. קדוש, Holy, which is here parallel to אלהים, God, also occurs in this application to express the absolute purity of the Divine Being, Job vi. 10; Is. xl. 25; and in the plural, קדושים, Prov. ix. 10, xxx. 3; Hos. xii. 1. Delitzsch contends, that, as יבא is uninfluenced by any preceding preterite, it cannot possibly be taken otherwise than as strictly future in signification, as it is in form. But this is not the only instance in which the future stands absolutely at the commencement of a sentence or paragraph, yet clearly indicating a past transaction. Thus Num. xxiii. 7, אֲנִי בָלֵק, וְנִתְּנִי בְלֶק, מִדְּאֵרִיס; Jud. ii. 1, אֲנִי הָיִיתִי בְּמִצְרַיִם, וְאַתָּה הָיִיתָ בְּמִצְרַיִם; 2 Sam. iii. 33, הָיִיתָ יָמֹת אֲבִיךָ יוֹם; Job iii. 3, אֲנִי בָרַח מִבֶּטֶן אִמִּי, וְנִתְּנִי בְּמִצְרַיִם הַבְּרִיזָה; Ps. lxxx. 9, אֲנִי בָרַח מִבֶּטֶן אִמִּי, וְנִתְּנִי בְּמִצְרַיִם הַבְּרִיזָה. The idiom, in these and similar cases, is sufficiently accounted for on the principle that the speaker places himself, in imagination, anterior to the action expressed by the verb, and thus, regarding it as still future, puts the verb in that tense. Having prayed that God would remember the mercy which he had shown to his people in ancient days, the prophet has his mind carried back to their affliction in Egypt, in their deliverance from which that mercy was signally displayed; and assuming that as his point of observation, he proceeds at once to describe the Theophania as future in regard to such position. The past, thus implied, though not expressed, as completely modifies a future tense, as if a preterite, or any qualifying particle, had preceded it. תֵּמָנָה, Teman, the LXX. retain as a proper name: the Targ., Syr., Theod., Vulg., and many modern versions read, the south. The word is doubtless to be taken as designating the country to the south of Judea, and east of Idumea, in which latter country Mount Paran (הַר פָּאֲרָן) was situated. Some, indeed, have endeavored to indentify this mountain with Sinai, on the ground that وادي فيرلن, Wady Pheiran, which extends north-west from Sinai, is the same as מִצְרַת פָּאֲרָן, the desert of Paran, mentioned in Scripture. But although this desert might have stretched so far towards the south-west as to touch upon the Wady, and so give it the name, it is certain, from Paran being mentioned in connection with Kadesh and Beersheba, that the wilderness of that name extended to the southern confines of Palestine, including the mountainous region to the west of the Ghor, or great valley stretching from the Dead Sea to the Elanitic gulf. In 1 Kings xi. 18, it is spoken of as lying between Midian and Egypt. From Sinai occurring along with Seir and Paran, Deut. xxxiii. 2, and with Seir and the country of Edom, Jud. v. 4, 5, it is probable that Habakkuk here alludes to the regions to the south of Palestine generally, as the theatre of the Divine manifestations to Israel, only, like Moses and Deborah, specifying the two points nearer to that country. In this view, his omission of Sinia, which they notice, is not of material moment. The glorious displays of the power and majesty of Jehovah which had been made in that quarter occupied his thoughts, and inspired him with feelings of the most exalted devotion. סֵלָה, Selah. This word, which occurs thrice in this ode, and seventy-three times in the Psalms, has been variously interpreted. That it is a musical sign is now almost universally admitted. It is found at the end of certain sections, or stropes, and always at the close of a verse,

- 4 The brightness was like that of the sun,
 Rays streamed from his hand,
 Yet the concealment of his glory was there.

except Hab. iii. 3, 9; Ps. lv. 20, lvii. 4; where however, as always, it ends the hemistich. Sometimes it occurs at the end of a Psalm, as Ps. iii. ix. and xxiv. The current, and apparently the traditional interpretation, is that of the Targ.  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי־זֶרַח}$ ; Aq.  $\delta\epsilon\lambda$ ; Symm. sometimes eis tōn aiōna; Theod. sometimes eis τέλος; the V. Greek version, διαπαντός; but Symm. and Theod. most commonly coincide with the LXX., who uniformly render, διάψαλμα. This last translation is decidedly entitled to the preference, in so far as it confines the idea to the music, though the exact meaning even of this Greek term has been matter of dispute. Suidas, however, seems to come nearest to the mark, when he gives as its meaning μέλους ἐναλλαγή, a change of the modulation, and with him Hesychius agrees, explaining it by μέλους διαλλαγή. The hypothesis that  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  is merely an abbreviation, consisting of the initial letters of three Hebrew words, is altogether gratuitous, there not being the least shadow of evidence that the Jews, in ancient times, ever employed abbreviations. Pfeiffer, in his work, Die Musik der Alten Hebr. p. 17, proposes to explain the term by the Arab  $\text{شلو}$ , membrum, or section; Prof. Lee, by  $\text{صلوة}$ , صلاة, which he renders, Dei invocatio, and derives from  $\text{صلي}$ , he blessed; but neither of the derivations will suit all the passages in which it occurs. Indeed, bless! or praise! would come in most incongruously in such connections as Ps. vii. 5, xxxix. 5, 11; lii. 3. Of the two Hebrew roots to which the word has been referred,  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , to raise, elevate, and  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , which, besides signifying to raise, has been supposed to be equivalent to  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , to rest, pause, the latter, on the whole, seems to deserve the preference. There are several instances in which the letter  $\text{ו}$  has been softened into  $\text{ב}$ , as in  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  and  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ ;  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  and  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ ; just as, in most cases, we find it expressed in Arabic by  $\text{س}$ . This derivation, in which Gesenius finally acquiesced, has been approved of by Delitzsch and Hengstenberg. The term may be regarded as a substantive, signifying silence or pause; designed, in all probability, to command a cessation of the song or chant, while the instruments either repeated what had just been played, or introduced an interlude between the parts. At the end of a psalm it may have been intended to prevent a repetition on the part of the singers, while the instrumental music continued. Having, by a solemn pause, prepared the mind for the contemplation of the manifested glory of Jehovah, the prophet proceeds to describe this glory in the most sublime and magnificent language. By  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  splendor or brightness, as the Targ., Kimchi, and Hitzig interpret; nor does it here express the actual praises of the inhabitants of the earth produced by the effulgence of Deity, for the effect of this effulgence is described, ver. 6, to be fear and trembling; but matter of praise, or the glory which was calculated to call forth universal adoration.

4. By  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  we are not here to understand light simply, but the sun as the source of light. Comp. Job xxxi. 26, xxxvii. 21. The Kametz of the article in  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  renders the noun more definite,  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , which Heidenheim would connect with  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$  and Hitzig with  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , in the preceding verse, can have no other nominative than  $\text{רַיָּהֲבֵי}$ , which, like other substantives in the Oriental languages, expressive of fire or light, is conceived to be of the feminine gender, or it may be regarded as neuter in signification.

- 5 Before him went the plague ;
The burning pestilence followed him.
6 He stood, and made the earth to tremble ;
He looked, and caused the nations to shake ;
The old mountains were shattered in pieces,
The ancient hills sank down —
His ancient ways.

and so taking the feminine of the verb. That by קַרְנֵי, horns, we are here to understand rays, is obvious from the connection, from the comparison of the rising sun scattering his rays upon the earth to the gazelle, Ps. xxii. 1, and from its being common with the Arabs to compare them to the horns of that animal. Thus the Arab. قرن, cornu animalis, latus superior pars solis, primi radiis solis. Kamoos and Djauhari. Hence, the verb קָרַךְ signifies to emit rays, Exod. xxxiv. 29, 30, 35. Though in the dual, the noun, like others of that number which describe objects naturally existing in pairs, is here expressive of the plural. Comp. אָרְבַּע רִגְלִים, Lev. xi. 23 ; שְׁלֹשׁ עֵינַיִם, 1 Sam. ii. 13 ; בָּל בְּרֵבָיִם, Ezek. xxi. 12 ; and see my note on Is. vi. 2 ; שְׂבַע עֵינַיִם, Zech. iii. 9. The phrase מִיָּדוֹ from his hand, is equivalent to מִמֶּנּוּ, from him ; and a verb of flowing, streaming, or the like, must be supplied. לוֹ is the dative of possession. שָׁם, there, refers to the scene of splendor just described, which, though so excessively bright, instead of exhibiting the Divine glory, only veiled or concealed it. Comp. Ps. civ. 2. The LXX., Syr., Aq., and Symm., have read וְיָשָׁן, and he put, instead of וְיָשָׁן, and there, and are followed by Hitzig and Maurer, but this rendering is less apt. לוֹ, in such connection denotes majesty or glory rather than power. Comp. Ps. cxxxii. 8, lxxviii. 61. For עָזָה many MSS. read עָזָה, the regular affix. Whether the substratum of the vivid representation here furnished of the glorious majesty of Jehovah be the symbol of the Divine presence exhibited upon Mount Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 17, or the Shekinah which accompanied the Hebrews through the desert, chap. xvi. 7, 10 ; Lev. ix. 23, xl. 35, etc., cannot be determined. See on ver. 3.

5. רָשָׁה, from רָשָׁה, to inflame, has two leading significations, that of lightning, or flame, and that of hot, or burning fever. The latter is required in the present case to correspond to הַפֶּגֶז, plague in the preceding hemistich : a circumstance which forbids the adoption of the precarious rendering, birds of prey, though supported by the Syr., Aq., Symm., Theod., the V. Greek version, Michaelis, Schnurrer, Herder, Kofod, Dahl, Rosenmüller, and others ; as well as that of lightning, adopted by Kalinsky, Wahl, Bauer and others ; and burning coals, as in our common version. Thus Kimchi : רָשָׁה כְּמַו דְּבַר, וְהַעֲנִין כְּפוֹל ; וְהוּא בְּמִלּוֹת שׁוֹנוֹת, וְכִן וְלַחֲמוֹ רָשָׁה, וְהוּא חוֹלֵי הַקְּדָחִים שֶׁהוּא חֲמוֹ הַשׁוֹרְפֵת יִמְמִיתָהּ מֵהֵרָה, i. e. “ רָשָׁה corresponds to דְּבַר, the same thing being expressed in different words. The word has the same signification. Deut. xxxii. 24, and denotes the fever, which consists in a burning heat, and speedily causes death.” The Vulg. has, “ Et egredietur diabolus ante pedes ejus !” רָשָׁה אֶת אֲרֵצֵי, or רָשָׁה אֶת אֲרֵצֵי, means to track or follow any one. Here it is opposed to לְפָנָיו, before him. What the prophet has in view, would seem to be the plagues with which the enemies of the Hebrews were visited, of which we have an instance 1 Sam. v. 9, 11.

6. עָמַד וּבִמְהֵרָה, forms an easy and elegant paronomasia, and, at the same time, exhibits one of the boldest, most abrupt,

- 7 I saw the tents of Cushan in trouble ;
The tent-curtains of Midian trembled.
- 8 Was it against the rivers it burned, O Jehovah ?

and sublime turns to be found in sacred poetry. While Jehovah is marching forth for the deliverance of his people, he stops all of a sudden in his progress, the immediate effects of which are universal consternation and terror. Nature, in her strongest and most ancient formations, is broken in pieces before him. The inhabitants of the earth tremble at his look. מַגִּיד may either be the Poel of מָדַד, to measure, or the Pilel of מָדַד, which, like the Arab. مان, signifies to be agitated. The latter derivation best suits the connection. LXX. ἐσαλεύθη ἡ γῆ. Targ. אַרְצָא אַרְצָא. Arab.

تزعزعت الارض. Comp. the cognate מָדַד. Thus Gesenius, Lee, Maurer, Ewald, Heidenheim, Hesselberg, Delitzsch. The primary idea conveyed by מָדַד is that of bounding, springing up, as a person does when overtaken by sudden fear. In יִתְפַּצְצֵנָה we have all the force of intensive verbs, heightened in effect by the harsh sound of the reduplicated Tzade. פָּצַץ signifies to break or dash in pieces, and also to scatter, disperse. For גִּבְעוֹת עֵינָם and הַרְרֵי-עַר, comp. Gen. xlix. 26 ; Deut. xxxiii. 16. הַלְיָבוֹת עֵינָם לִי, His ancient ways, I consider to be epexegetical of the preceding ; and הַלְיָבוֹת is to be taken in the same sense as דְּרָבָיִם in the sentence הוּא רֵאשִׁית דְּרָבָיִם-אֵל, Job xl. 19, which describes the hippopotamus as "the first or principal of the ways of God," i. e. his creative acts, his works. The words may be resolved into הַלְיָבוֹת עֵינָם אֲשֶׁר לִי or into הַלְיָבוֹת עֵינָמֵי לִי. The mountains which Jehovah had created of old, and which had resisted the revolutions of ages, were now shattered in pieces, and dissipated like dust before him. The irresistibility of his power, and the utter imbecility of the most formidable enemies of his people, are the ideas conveyed by the language of the prophet.

7. תַּחַר אֲנִי, "under affliction," is more expressive than בְּאַ־יָי, "in affliction," as it suggests the idea of a heavy load by which those spoken of were oppressed. בְּאַ־יָי, Cushan, is now generally admitted to be the same as פֹּשֵׁשׁ, Cush, as לֹטָן, Lotan, Gen. xxxvi. 20, is only another form of לֹט, Lot ; but whether it be intended to designate the African or the Arabian Cush is disputed. Gesenius, Maurer, Delitzsch, and others, contend for the former ; but the connection of the name with that of מִדְיָן, Midian, is decidedly in favor of the latter. For a satisfactory refutation of the position adopted by Gesenius, that Cush, and all the tribes connected with this name, are only to be sought in Africa, see Robinson's Calmet, art. Cush. That any reference to Cushan-rishathaim, Jud. iii. 10, is intended, does not appear. Midian appears to have stretched from the eastern shores of the Elanitic Gulf to Mount Sinai, and the frontiers of Moab. Edrisi speaks of a town called مدین, Madian, about five days' journey from Ailah, or Akabah, and six from Tubuk. The "tents" and "curtains" describe the nomadic mode of life as still found among the Bedawin of the Arabian deserts. הַיָּרֵיעוֹת, the coverings of the tents, so called from their tremulous motion when hanging down like curtains and affected by the wind. The word is here used merely as a synonyme of אֹהֳלִים, tents ; and both are put by metonymy for the persons dwelling in them.

8. The prophet rising in his graphic description of the ancient manifestations of Jehovah, now by a bold apostrophe inquires why the rivers were affected by them ? Was it on account of any cause in the rivers ? The implied answer is, No ; and the true cause is assigned at the

Was thine anger against the rivers ?
 Was thy wrath against the sea ?
 That thou didst ride upon thy horses,
 In thy chariots of victory.

9 Naked and bared was thy bow,
 "Sevens of spears" was the word : Pause.
 Thou didst cleave the earth into rivers.

close of the verse — the safe and victorious deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt, and their introduction into Canaan. הַיַּרְדֵּן is in the vocative, and the subject of the verb תָּרַח is אֲפָסָה, in the second hemistich. נְהַרִּים, the rivers, mean the waters of the Red Sea, and the Jordan, which were dried up to allow them to pass over on foot. The former is not indeed a river, but may not inaptly be included under the term, on account of the flowing of the tide, which is said to rise at Suez to about the height of seven feet. On the miraculous division of the sea, recorded Exod. xiv., it was made to go or flow back the whole night, ver. 21. For the application of נְהַרִּים to the stream tide of the Mediterranean, See Jonah ii. 4. That the rivers of Cush should be intended is altogether out of the question. Specifically, however, to mark out the Red Sea, it is afterwards expressly called יָם in the third hemistich. Comp. as parallel with the present verse, Exod. xv. ; Ps. lxxvii. 13, cxiv. 3, 5. Jehovah is here, and in the following verses, represented as a mighty and victorious warrior, giving orders to his army, and, in triumphant progress, carrying all before him. Comp. Exod. xv. 3, xiv. 14. אַף, anger, and אַבְרָה, wrath, are synonymes, only the latter is the stronger of the two, signifying unrestrained indignation ; from אָבַר, to pass over, or beyond a boundary. By "horses" and "chariots," there is no necessity for our understanding either the angels, or thunder and lightning, as some would interpret. They are merely figurative expressions, designed to carry out the metaphor adopted from military operations. In the phrase מְרַכְבֵּי־יָם יִשְׁפֹּעַהּ, supply על, upon, before the former word, and repeat מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, chariots, before the latter. Comp. for instances of similar construction, מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, 2 Sam. xxii. 33. מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, Ps. lxxi. 7 ; מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, Ezek. xvi. 27.—יִשְׁפֹּעַהּ has in such connection, the specific signification of victory, though the idea of salvation or deliverance, as the result, is not to be lost sight of.

9. The combination תְּעוֹרֵר תַּעֲרֹךְ, which forms a paronomasia, determines the signification of תַּעֲרֹךְ, as here employed, to be that of being bare or naked, and not that of rousing or exciting. For though the Piel תְּעוֹרֵר is used of the lifting up of a spear, there would be no propriety in thus applying it to a bow : whereas the substantive תְּעוֹרָה, nakedness, having just been employed, nothing was more natural than to add תַּעֲרֹךְ, to be bared — תַּעֲרֹךְ being thus cognate in signification with תְּעוֹרָה, from which תְּעוֹרָה is derived, and with תְּעוֹרֵר. תַּעֲרֹךְ is used adjectively, as in וְנִשְׁפָּטָה עֵלֶם יְעוֹרָה, Ezek. xvi. 7. יְעוֹרָה is not the second, but the third person singular in Niphal, having for its nominative תְּעוֹרָה, which is of the common gender. Some of the moderns have explained תְּעוֹרָה, of the rainbow, than which nothing can be conceived more incongruously out of place in a passage containing a sublime poetical description of warlike operations. The making bare the bow, refers to the removal of the cover in which it was carefully wrapped, to prevent its receiving injury, or of such a leathern case as the γαργυρὸς, corytus, of the Greeks and Romans. Of the following words, מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים, מְרַכְבֵּי־חַיִּים,

10 The mountains saw thee, they were in pain ;
 The inundation of water overflowed ;
 The abyss uttered its voice,
 It raised its hands on high.

upwards of one hundred different interpretations have been proposed. That which I have adopted appears to me best to suit the connection. It keeps up the spirit of the poem, and is fully justified on the simplest and most legitimate etymological grounds. That  $\text{רָבִיעֵי}$  cannot signify oaths, is determined by the circumstance that "the oaths of the tribes," the rendering of our common version, affords no tolerable sense as here introduced, whether we regard the tribes as the persons swearing, or as those to whom oaths were sworn. The other signification of  $\text{רָבִיעֵי}$ , is seven, or a heptade, or what is made up of seven. It is elsewhere literally applied only to this number of weeks; but in connection with language so highly figurative as that of our prophet in the present chapter, no objection can reasonably be taken against its being used otherwise than as a designation of time. It appears to have been appropriated by him, to express the perfection, fulness, or abundance, of the number, instead of the usual numeral  $\text{שֶׁבַע}$  or  $\text{שֶׁבַע־עָרָב}$ , when employed symbolically as a sacred and indefinite number.  $\text{מִצָּה}$  signifies a tribe, but also, as  $\text{שֶׁבַע־מִצָּה}$ , 2 Sam. xviii. 14, a lance or spear; and that the latter signification is that in which Habakkuk here uses it may be inferred from his using it in this acceptance in the 14th verse. Thus the Syr.  $\text{ܩܒܠܐ}$ .  $\text{ܩܒܠܐ}$  has been variously rendered by word, promise, epicinium, commander, etc. I take it in the first of these significations, as specifically designating the military order, or word of command. Compare Ps. lxxviii. 12.  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ־יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$ , "the Lord gave the word," etc. Thus,  $\text{אֱמַר}$ , like the Arab.  $\text{أمر}$ , signifies to order, command. The meaning of the prophet will therefore be, that Jehovah prepared his bow for battle, and ordered numerous spears to be produced; in other words, that he brought the most formidable and effective instrumentality to bear against the enemies of his people. The nominative to  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$  is not  $\text{אֱמַרְתָּ}$ , as some would construe the words, but  $\text{יְהוָה}$  understood from the suffix in  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$ . Comp.  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$ , Ps. lxxviii. 15. Before  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$  supply  $\text{לְ}$  or  $\text{בְ}$ ; to cleave into rivers. The effect of the Divine command is sublimely represented under the idea of that which is frequently produced by earthquakes, when immense quantities of water gush out of the fissures, and flow like rivers through the country. The whole verse is distinguished for its sublimity and beauty; and the sentiment conveyed in the two first lines was regarded as so weighty that a  $\text{הִלָּה}$ , Selah, or pause, is added, to give time for its producing its proper effect before supplementing the concluding line.

10. The mountains being the most prominent objects on the surface of the globe, Habakkuk reiterates, in a somewhat different form, what he had expressed, ver. 6, in order to preserve the impression of the tremendous character of the transactions, to illustrate which they had been figuratively introduced. In the former case  $\text{יְהוָה}$  is used of Jehovah; in this, of the mountains, which are, by a bold figure, represented as inspired with life, and capable of taking sensible cognizance of the manifestations of Deity. To express the instantaneous character of the effect,  $\text{יְהוָה־אֱמַרְתָּ}$ , they quaked, is put in the future. The root  $\text{הָבַל}$  or  $\text{הָבַל}$  properly signifies to twist, writhe, as with pain, and is frequently used of a woman in travail. It is also employed in the sense of quaking or trembling, which idea is conveyed by it in this place.

- 11 Sun and moon stood back in their habitation
 At the light of thine arrows which flew,
 At the glittering brightness of thy lance.
- 12 Indignant thou didst march through the earth ;
 Wrathful thou didst tread down the nations.
- 13 Thou wentest forth for the deliverance of thy people,

“Silvarum juga cæpta moveri Adventante Deo.” Virgil.

זָרָם מַיִם, a torrent of water, i. e. an extremely heavy rain, in contradistinction from זָרָם בָּרָד, a hail storm, Is. xxviii. 2. רָם, elevation, is used adverbially. By יָדָיָהּ, the elongated pronominal form of יָדָי, its hands, is meant the waves of the ocean. יָם הַיָּם, the ocean, its antecedent, is of both genders. The whole of nature is here exhibited as thrown into consternation at the approach of God. The mountains tremble ; the heavens pour down sweeping torrents of rain ; the sea roars, and causes its billows to “run mountains high.” Comp. Ps. lxxvii. 17.

11. יָרָדוּ יָרָדוּ form an asyndeton, and are probably so put for the sake of effect. In many MSS., however, the ellipsis of the ו is supplied. The paragogic ה in זָבַלָהּ, is that of direction or motion, and the idea which it conveys, as here used with the verb נָמַד, is not that the sun and moon remained stationary in a part of the firmament, which is represented as their dwelling or habitation, but that they stood back or withdrew into that locality. It was usual with the Arabian astronomers to assign houses or chambers to the celestial orbs. Thus منزل, mansio, domus, is the name of the signs of the Zodiac ; and فلك البروج, the circle of the palaces which the sun occupies. Job, likewise, speaks of הַדְרֵי הַמֶּנְךָ, the chambers of the south, antithetically with the northern constellations, ch. ix. 9 ; as also of מְדַרְיָהּ, chap. xxxviii. 32, the same as מְדַרְיָהּ, inns or lodgings, 2 Kings xxiii. 5. That specific reference is made to what is recorded Josh. x. 12, is, after the Targ., very generally admitted ; but, though it were granted that the event there described may have suggested the language of the prophet, yet the point of view in which he presents the heavenly luminaries is altogether different. In the history, the construction to be put upon their standing still or being arrested in their course, is obviously their continuing to shine, in order to afford light to Joshua, while following up his victory over the enemy ; whereas, in the present connection, they are sublimely introduced as retiring into their abode before the brighter refulgence of the arrows and lances employed in the conflict. So completely were they eclipsed by this refulgence, that it seemed as if they had set. Schnurrer and Justi interpret the language of their remaining in their habitation, in the sense of not rising, but the ה of motion is directly opposed to such construction. The ל in יָרָדוּ and לְנֶגְמָהּ is the dative of cause, as in לְזִמְרֵי הַיָּם לְבָרִי, “at, or owing to this, my heart trembled,” Job xxxvii. 1. Supply אֶשְׁרָף before יָרָדוּ, which is put in Piel for the purpose of marking the velocity of the motion of the arrows. The words יָרָדוּ and לְנֶגְמָהּ, which are elsewhere used of the light of the sun and the moon respectively, are here transferred to the glitter of the weapons specified.

12. מָרַח, to march, is used of the solemn and majestic proceeding of Jehovah before the Hebrews, Judges v. 4 ; Ps. lxxviii. 8. שָׁדַח, to thresh or tread down, is applied metaphorically to the destruction of enemies, Micah iv. 13.

13. Having described, in language of

For the deliverance of thine anointed ;
 Thou dashedst in pieces the head of the house of the wicked,
 Laying bare the foundation to the very neck : Pause.

the most sublime and terrible import, the manifestations of Jehovah in reference to his enemies, Habakkuk now proceeds to specify in express terms the end which they were designed to answer, viz., the deliverance and safety of his chosen people ; and then depicts their fatal effects in the destruction of every hostile power. The second  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  is employed instead of the infinitive  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , and thus governs the accusative  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ . These last words Aq. and the author of the fifth Greek version render eis σωτηριον σου Χριστου σου, and the Vulg. in salutem cum Christo tuo, which has led many interpreters, both ancient and modern, to refer  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , the anointed, to our Saviour. This construction of the passage is adopted even by Delitzsch, on the principle that as the term here designates the regal office of those who were of the Davidic dynasty, and Christ is represented as the greatest king of that family, consequently THE ANOINTED by way of eminence, he is to be regarded as included in the prophetic reference. By the law of parallelism, however, we are compelled to identify  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , thine anointed, with  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , thy people, in the preceding hemistich. The noun is thus a collective, and is rendered in the plural by the LXX. τοὺς χριστοὺς σου, or, as in the Alex. MS., τοὺς ἐκλεκτοὺς σου. The plural  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  is actually found in two of Kennicott's MSS., and apparently in two more : in one of De Rossi's and two more originally. It is denied, indeed, by Delitzsch, that  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , anointed, is ever used of the people of Israel ; and certainly none of the passages which have usually been adduced in support of this application of the term, can be fairly vindicated to it, except, perhaps, Ps. xxviii. 8, where  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  corresponds to  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  or  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , according to the reading of six MSS., originally three more, and the rendering of the LXX., Syr., Vulg., Arab. Still, as the Hebrews were  $\text{מְלִכְוֹת כֹּהֲנִים}$ , a kingdom of priests, Exod. xix. 6, they may with as much propriety be said to have been anointed, as the patriarchs are, 1 Chron. xvi. 22 ; Ps. cv. 15. The term, as thus applied, expresses their destination. The Dagesh forte is found in the initial  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  in some editions, and is one of the few instances of its occurrence in this letter, contrary to rule. Comp. 1 Sam. i. 6, x. 24 ; 2 Kings vi. 32 ; Prov. iii. 8, xiv. 10 ; Song v. 2 ; Jer. xxxix. 12 ; Ezek. xvi. 4. Delitzsch accounts for it on the principle of the word being short, and occurring after a Milel. The prepositive  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$  intimates, that the ruler here spoken of as the head, was not merely over the house, which the simple construct form would have expressed, but that he sprung from it. It is most probable that one or other of the Canaanitish kings is intended ; perhaps Jabin, whose city Hazor is said to have been  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , the head of all the confederate kings, Josh. xi. 10 ; and was the most formidable of all the kings with whom the Hebrews had to contend, Judges iv. 3, 13. The general sense of the concluding hemistich is apparent ; but considerable difficulty attaches to the interpretation of  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , neck, as here connected with  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , foundation. This connection is so strongly marked by the force of the preposition  $\text{אֲנֹכְחֵם}$ , even to, that the former substantive cannot be separated from the latter, and referred to some supposable higher part of the figurative building. It must, from the structure of the language, describe the very lowest part of the foundation, or that on which the foundation itself rests ; but how either of these could be called the neck, it is impossible to conceive. There is, therefore, very great probability in the conjecture of Cappel-

- 14 Thou piercedst with his own spears the chief of his captains,
That rushed on like a tempest to scatter me ;
Whose joy it was to devour the poor in secret.
- 15 Thou wentest with thy horses through the sea,
The boiling up of many waters.
- 16 I heard, and my inward parts trembled,

lus, which has been approved by Herder, Green, and some others, that instead of  $\text{רֹאשׁ}$ , neck, the text originally read  $\text{בַּרְזַל}$ , rock, which makes all plain. Both words are derived from the same root; and  $\text{רֹאשׁ}$  occurs with the  $\text{א}$ , Neh. iii. 5. All the MSS. and versions support the present reading.  $\text{רֹאשׁ}$  is the infinitive absolute, which is often employed in the prosecution of a statement, instead of the finite form of the verb. The historical facts which the prophet here poetically describes, appear evidently to be those narrated Josh. xi. ; Judges iv., involving the complete destruction of the Canaanitish nations, and more especially the discomfiture of Sisera, celebrated by Deborah in her splendid triumphal song, Judges v.

14. After a solemn pause, marked by  $\text{וְהִנֵּה}$ , Selah, Habakkuk prosecutes his subject, which still embraces the discomfiture of the enemies of Israel.  $\text{בְּרִיחָוֹ$ , his own spears, the same as  $\text{רִיחָוֹ$ , ver. 9. Interpreters are divided in regard to the signification of  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ , or, as it is in the Keri, and in the text of a great number of MSS., and of four of the early editions,  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ . The traditionary interpretation is that of villagers, or the inhabitants of the country; hence hordes, which Delitzsch adopts, and explains it of armies or soldiers. Thus the Vulg., capiti bellatorum ejus. Perschke, Gesenius, Ewald, and other moderns, however, derive the word from the Arab.  $\text{فَرَز}$ , segregavit, discevit, modum præscripsit, statuit, etc., and explain it of judges, captains, etc., which appears to be the more appropriate meaning. Thus the LXX., δυνασταί; the Syr.  $\text{ܠܗܘܘܬܐܘܢܐ}$ ;

just as the former in the Vatican codex render the cognate noun  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ , Judges v. 7, 11, by δυνατοι, and the Vulg. by fortes. The pronominal suffix refers to  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ , the wicked, in the preceding verse. Before  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$  supply  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ . In using the first personal suffix singular in the following verb, the prophet so identifies himself with his people as to represent what was aimed at them as designed for him. Comp. ch. i. 12. The nominative to  $\text{וְהִנֵּה}$  is  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$ , his captains. In the last hemistich, the object of comparison is the robber who lies in wait for the poor defenceless traveller, and exults when he sees him approach. Such was the exultation of the Canaanitish chiefs when the Israelites entered the country. Comp. Ps. x. 8—10.

15.  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$  must either be taken as an accusative absolute, as to thy horses; or it must have a  $\text{ב}$  supplied before it. The latter I have adopted as the easier mode of resolving the form.  $\text{רִיחָוֹ}$  describes here the boiling up or foaming of the sea in a storm. The immediate connection, however, shows, that what the prophet has in view is not the Red Sea, but the hostile army of the Canaanites, which presented a furious and impenetrable aspect to the Hebrews. Through this army Jehovah is represented as walking with his warriors, as if a general were coolly to march his cavalry through the thickest of a proud and vaunting foe, which he knew would prove utterly powerless in the attack. Comp. Ps. ii. 4, where Jehovah is said to smile at the puny attempts of his enemies.

16. Having finished the poetic rehearsal of the mighty acts of Jehovah on behalf of his people in ancient times,

At the sound my lips quivered ;
 Rottenness entered my bones,
 I trembled in my place :
 Yet I shall have rest in the day of distress,
 When the people that shall attack us come up.
 17 Though the fig-tree should not blossom, which he had composed in order to inspire the pious with unshaken confidence in him as their covenant God, Habakkuk reverts to the fear which had seized him on hearing of the judgments that were inflicted upon his country by the Chaldeans. וַיִּרְדָּו שְׁמֵי עַתִּי וַיִּרְדָּו בְּטֵנִי is a varied repetition of וַיִּרְדָּו שְׁמֵי עַתִּי וַיִּרְדָּו בְּטֵנִי, ver. 2. Instead of there entering into a description of his feelings, he broke out in an earnest prayer that God would exercise pity toward Israel, from which there was an easy transition to the ancient Divine interpositions. He now describes those feelings in very forcible and affecting language. לִקְוֹל, the voice, is to be referred to the Divine threatening recorded chap. i. 6. The quivering of the prophet's lips is merely expressive of the effect of the fear with which he was seized, and has no reference to his delivery of the threatening. תַּחְתִּי, literally under me, i. e. my under parts, limbs, or the like. Comp. the Arab.

يَاكْت, pars inferior. LXX. ὑποκατάθεν μου ἐταράχθη ἡ ἔξῃς μου. The Syr. כַּדְּבָב my knees. Jarchi and Kimchi בַּמְקוֹמִי, in my place. אֶפְרָא אֲנִי has been variously rendered, "That I may rest;" "That I must expect;" "O that I might rest;" "Yet I shall rest," or "have rest." The last construction is alone suitable. וְאֶפְרָא, which the LXX. have entirely omitted, is here a conjunction, connecting the following clauses with those which are antecedent to it, but obviously intended to qualify what had been there expressed. It thus forms a particle of transition from one class of circumstances to another of a different character. See Noldius, sub voce. Deeply as the prophet was affected, and overpowering as were the feelings of apprehension with which he anticipated the awful calamity that was coming upon his people, he did not abandon himself to despair, but, on the contrary, consoled his mind with the assurance, that God, in whom he trusted, would keep him in perfect peace in the day of trial. Nothing can be more uncritical than the emendation of אֶפְרָא into אֶפְרָא, proposed by Houbigant, the verb אֶפְרָא or אֶפְרָא having no such signification as that which he ascribes to it. The preposition בְּ in אֶפְרָא בְּיָמַי and בְּעֵלְוֵי is to be taken as signifying the time when the events were to happen; in אֶפְרָא it is the sign of the genitive; so that אֶפְרָא בְּעֵלְוֵי is equivalent to אֶפְרָא בְּעֵלְוֵי, the coming up of the people. The infinitive is the infinitive construct. By the people, the Chaldeans are meant. They are, as usual, said to come up, because of the elevated position of Jerusalem, both in a local and a religio-political point of view. Comp. 2 Kings xxiv. 1. Before אֶפְרָא supply אֶפְרָא. The verb אֶפְרָא, like its cognate אֶפְרָא, signifies to cut, or break in upon an enemy, attack. Hence the substantive אֶפְרָא, a troop or band of warriors, chiefly used of such as engage in plundering expeditions. It is the very term employed in the account given us of the fulfilment of the prophecy, 2 Kings xxiv. 2; "And the Lord sent against him בְּשָׂרֵי בְּשָׂרֵי, the bands of the Chaldeans," etc.

17, 18. From a statement of the assurance which he possessed of the mental tranquillity which he should enjoy during the anticipated calamity, Habakkuk rises to a triumphant assertion of the holy joy and exultation which would be

- And there should be no produce on the vines ;
 Though the fruit of the olive should fail,
 And the fields should yield no food ;
 Though the flocks should be cut off from the fold,
 And there should be no cattle in the stalls :
- 18 Yet I will exult in Jehovah ;
 I will be joyful in the God of my salvation.
- 19 Jehovah the Lord is my strength ;
 He will make my feet like those of gazelles, vouchsafed to him amidst all the desolation to which his country might be subjected. The desolation here so graphically and forcibly described, is that which was to be effected by the Chaldeans, whose army would consume or destroy the best and most necessary productions of the land ; not only seizing upon the cattle, and devouring the fruits of the earth, but so injuring the trees as to render them incapable of yielding any produce. The passage contains the most beautiful exhibition of the power of true religion to be found in the Bible. The language is that of a mind weaned from earthly enjoyments, and habituated to find the highest fruition of its desires in God. When every earthly stream is dried up, it has an infinite supply in his all-sufficient and exhaustless fullness. No affliction, however severe or trying, can cut the believer off from this blessed resource. On the contrary, its tendency is to bring him into closer contact with it.  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  is not the labor bestowed upon the olive-tree, but the fruit which the tree produces. Comp. the phrase  $\text{עָשָׂה לְעֵשֶׂה}$ , to make or produce fruit. The irregular construction of the singular masculine  $\text{עָשָׂה}$  with the feminine plural  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  is to be accounted for on the principle, that in the mind of the prophet both number and gender had merged in the totality and impressiveness of his subject. Comp.  $\text{לְעֵשֶׂה מְעֵשֶׂה}$ , Is. xvi. 8. It is what is commonly called, constructio ad sensum. Some would refer  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  to an obsolete root  $\text{עָשָׂה}$ , which they take to be cognate with  $\text{עָרַשׂ}$ , to burn ; but it seems preferable to regard it as a derivative like  $\text{רָדַשׁ}$ , both signifying a smooth or level field, such as was prepared for grain or vines : from  $\text{רָדַשׁ}$ , to break, and  $\text{רָדַשׁ}$ , to be level, as ground is which is broken up and levelled by the plough, the hoe, and the harrow.  $\text{רָדַשׁ}$  is here used intransitively, and is equivalent to the Niphāl  $\text{רָדַשׁ}$ .  $\text{הַמְעֵשֶׂה}$  stands for  $\text{הַמְעֵשֶׂה}$ , just as  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  for  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$ , and  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  for  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$  or  $\text{מְעֵשֶׂה}$ . The root is  $\text{עָשָׂה}$ , to shut up, confine.  $\text{עָשָׂה}$  and  $\text{עָשָׂה}$  are synonyms in the elongated future—the  $\text{עָשָׂה}$  directive expressing the strong bent of the mind towards the exercise. The words  $\text{יְהוָה יְהוָה}$  are rendered in the Vulg. in Deo Jesu meo! The LXX. have  $\text{ἐπὶ τῷ Θεῷ τῷ σωτηρῇ μου}$ .

19. The formula  $\text{יְהוָה יְהוָה}$ , instead of  $\text{יְהוָה יְהוָה}$ , is of infrequent occurrence. Comp. Ps. lxxviii. 21, cxl. 8. The language of this verse is found in Ps. xviii. 33, 34 ; and in part, Deut. xxxii. 13 ; Is. lviii. 14. It expresses the confident hope that Jehovah would prove the support and defence of the prophet, and of all who made Him the object of their trust, and that he would grant them complete deliverance from their enemies, and restore them to the full and undisturbed possession of their own land.  $\text{הַמְעֵשֶׂה}$ , the gazelle, is so swift-footed, that grey-hounds are liable to be killed by over-exertion in the chase.  $\text{בְּמִנְתַּי}$ , my high places, stands for  $\text{בְּמִנְתַּי}$ , the heights of my country. Except for purposes of warfare, the elevated parts of a land are the last that are occupied. The present is the only instance in which a musical direction is placed at the end of a psalm or ode.  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ , which occurs fifty-five times in the titles to the Psalms, is derived from the root  $\text{לָעַד}$ , to overcome, excel, take the lead, direct, superintend, preside, etc. It is used in reference to the prefects or overseers, whom Solomon appointed over the workmen, 2 Chron. ii. 2, 18; and specially of the masters or directors of the music employed in the temple, 1 Chron. xv. 21; Neh. xii. 42. By the LXX.  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$  is almost always rendered  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \tau\omicron\ \tau\acute{\epsilon}\lambda\omicron\varsigma$ ; Aq.  $\tau\acute{\omega}\ \nu\iota\kappa\omicron\upsilon\phi\acute{\iota}$ ; Symm.  $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota\nu\acute{\iota}\kappa\iota\omicron\nu$ ; Theod.  $\epsilon\iota\varsigma\ \tau\omicron\ \nu\iota\kappa\omicron\varsigma$ ; Targ.  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ . In 2 Chron. ii. 17, however, the LXX. render the noun by  $\acute{\epsilon}\rho\gamma\omicron\delta\iota\acute{\omega}\nu\eta\tau\eta\varsigma$ , and ver. 1, and xxxiv. 13, by  $\acute{\epsilon}\pi\iota\sigma\tau\acute{\alpha}\tau\eta\varsigma$ . The form is that of the participle in Piel, the  $\text{ל}$  taking the Patach of the article—a circumstance which shows that it cannot be, as some have supposed, an infinitive.  $\text{לָעַד}$  (from  $\text{לָעַד}$ ,  $\text{לָעַד}$ , to strike the strings, play on a stringed instrument, and then, generally, to perform either vocal or instrumental music, but chiefly the latter) signifies what is thus performed: music, melody, song, and also the stringed instruments with which it was accompanied. The preposition  $\text{ל}$  is that of accompaniment. Delitzsch infers from the use of the affix in  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ , my music, that the prophet himself was to take an active part in the performance of it; and further, from this circumstance, that he was of the tribe of Levi, and engaged in carrying on the temple music. But these inferences cannot be sustained, since, if the reasoning were valid, it would equally prove that Hezekiah must have belonged to that tribe, and been thus officially engaged: for he uses the very same form:  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ , “my stringed instruments,” Is. xxxviii. 20. On what ground either the prophet or the king claimed these instruments, it is impossible to determine. The conjecture of Schnurrer, that  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$  was originally  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ , and that the termination  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$  is merely paragogic as in  $\text{לְעֹלְמֵי־עַד}$ , is overturned by the fact, that this paragogic form is never found except when the word in which it appears is in the construct state.

And cause me to walk on my heights.

To the precentor, with my stringed instruments.

ZEPHANIAH.

---

PREFACE.

ALL that we know of Zephaniah is furnished by the title to his book, in which it is stated that he was the son of Cushi, grandson of Gedaliah, great grandson of Amariah, and great great grandson of Hezekiah. As in no other instance do we find the pedigree of a prophet carried so far back, it has not unfairly been inferred that he belonged to a family of considerable respectability.* Whether, however, the Hezekiah there mentioned were the king of that name, or some other person of note so called, cannot be determined with certainty. The circumstance that the words, "king of Judah," are not added to the proper name, rather militates against the position that he was descended from that monarch, since this addition always occurs when primary reference is made to any of the Jewish kings; and, what is specially to the present point, when such reference is made to Hezekiah. See Prov. xxv. 1; Is. xxxviii. 9. The number of generations also forms an objection against the hypothesis, since it is scarcely possible to make room for them in the short space of time which elapsed between Hezekiah and Josiah.

As our prophet is stated, chap. i. 1, to have received his prophecies in the days of Josiah, he must have flourished between the years B. C. 642, and B. C. 611. This statement is corroborated by certain circumstances in the book itself. For instance, he predicts the fall of Nineveh, and the overthrow of the Assyrian empire; consequently he must have prophesied prior to the year B. C. 625, when these events took place; i. e., in the former half of the reign of Josiah. The mention, too, of the destruction of "the remnant of Baal," chap. i. 4, evidently implies, that the abolition of idolatry had been carried on to a considerable extent, but had not yet been completed. Now this exactly tallies with the state of things in Judah from the twelfth to the eighteenth year of Josiah; for though this monarch began, in the former of these years, to effect a reformation, it was not till the latter that it was prosecuted with more successful results. If, therefore, we suppose that Zephaniah delivered his predictions between these two terms, we shall not be wide of the mark. To the objection, that no mention is made of him or his labors in the historical books, which we might expect on the ground of the valuable service he must have rendered to the zealous monarch, it is sufficient to reply, that the same objection would lie against the prophetic existence of Jeremiah at the same period, though we know that he then flourished at Jerusalem, under the very eye of his sovereign. The mention made of "the king's sons," chap. i. 8, cannot be urged in favor of a later date; for it is altogether uncertain whether we are not to understand by the phrase the princes of the royal house generally, or such of the royal children as should be alive at the time of the fulfilment of the prophecy. The connection and manner in which they are introduced favor the latter construction.

* Οὐκ ἄσχημος ὢν τὸ κατὰ σάρκα γένος. — Cyril, Præf. ad Zeph.

The predictions contained in the book are chiefly directed against the Jews, on account of their idolatry, and other sins of which they were guilty. The awful judgments to be executed upon them and the neighboring nations by the Chaldeans are denounced with great force and effect. Hitzig, indeed, has recently revived the opinion advocated by Cramer and Eichhorn, that the invasion of these countries by the Scythians, about the year B. C. 630, whose incursion into Western Asia is described by Herodotus, i. 102, is what the prophet has in his eye; but the Jews appear to have been so little affected by their progress, that it by no means corresponds to that of the enemy described by Zephaniah, in the course of which not only Judea, but the adjacent countries were to be entirely laid waste. His predictions received their accomplishment during the successes of Nebuchadnezzar. Towards the close of the book the restoration and prosperity of the Jewish people are introduced.

In respect to style, Zephaniah is not distinguished either for sublimity or elegance. His rhythm frequently sinks down into a kind of prose; but many of the censures that have been passed upon his language are either without foundation, or much exaggerated. In point of purity it rivals that of any of the prophets. He has much in common with his contemporary Jeremiah, and some, after Isidore, have regarded him as his abbreviator. A careful comparison of the two, however, proves the futility of this hypothesis. Occasionally he borrows the language of former prophets. Comp. chap. ii. 14, with Is. xiii. 21, xxxiv. 11; chap. ii. 15, with Is. xlii. 8.

CHAPTER I.

THE prophet begins by announcing the universality of the judgments which God was about to bring upon the land, 2, 3; specifies the different classes of transgressors whose conduct had merited the infliction of these judgments, 4—6; and calls attention to the speedy approach, and the features of the period of punishment, which he intermingles with further descriptions of the character of the ungodly, 7—13. He then dwells upon the awfully calamitous nature of the visitation, and points out the impossibility of escape, 14—18.

1 THE word of Jehovah which was communicated to Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah :

2 I will utterly take away everything from the face of the land, Saith Jehovah.

3 I will take away man and beast ;
I will take away the birds of heaven, and the fishes of the sea,
And the cause of stumbling along with the wicked ;
And I will cut off man from the face of the land,
Saith Jehovah.

4 I will also stretch forth my hand against Judah,

1. See the Preface.

2, 3. קטף, which is variously employed in Scripture in the sense of gathering, collecting, etc., is here used, as in Jud. xviii. 25 ; 1 Sam. xv. 6 ; Ps. xxvi. 9 ; Ezek. xxxiv. 29, to denote the taking away by death, or other violent means ; to destroy. Thus Jarchi, ענין כליון, its signification is destruction." What clearly shows this, is the use of the cognate verb קטף, to scrape, or sweep off, in the form קטף=קטף, which the Rabbi just mentioned erroneously takes to be the Hiphil of קטף, by elision for קטף. The latter verb is never used in Hiphil ; but the same combination of the two verbs in the infinitive and finite forms occurs Jer. viii. 13, קטף קטף. Compare for similar usage קטף קטף, Is. xxviii. 28 ; קטף קטף, Jer. xlix. 9. The enumeration of particulars is designed to augment the fearful and universal character of the punishment. קטף does not appear to differ in this connection from קטף, a stumbling block, cause of moral offence, what occasions, excites to, or promotes sin. Syr. كف ; Symm.

τὰ σκάνδαλα. There can be no doubt that the different objects and rites of idolatrous worship are what the prophet has in view. Thus Jarchi, קטף קטף. The repetition of קטף shows the prophecy had special reference to human beings, as the guilty party. The particle קטף before קטף has the signification of with, together with, thus denoting accompaniment. Comp. Jud. i. 16. The idols and their worshippers were to be involved in one common destruction. Newcome improperly renders קטף as a sign of the genitive.

4. To stretch forth the hand against any one, means not merely to threaten, but to exert one's power to his injury. קטף, this place, means Jerusa-

And against all the inhabitants of Jerusalem ;
 And will cut off from this place the remnant of Baal,
 The name of the idolatrous with that of the other priests ;
 5 And those that worship the host of heaven on the roofs,
 And those that worship and swear to Jehovah,
 And swear by their king ;

lem. By אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, the remnant, or rest of Baal, we are to understand the statues, images, etc. dedicated to the chief domestic and tutelary god of the Phœnicians, to whose worship the Hebrews were addicted as early as the time of the Judges (ii. 13), and among whom it afterwards spread more and more, especially in the ten tribes. Altars and high places were reared to this deity by Manasseh, even in the temple of Jehovah itself, 2 Kings xxi. 3, 5, 7 ; 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3, 7. These Josiah destroyed in the reformation which he undertook in the twelfth year of his reign, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4 ; but it appears from this passage of our prophet, compared with 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8, that idols continued to be worshipped, most probably in places which were more remote from public observation, or which had been formed after the destruction of the others, and the cessation of the reformation referred to. Marckius and Gesenius interpret the phrase אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, of the people of Baal, but this seems less probable. The phrase corresponds to אֲרָם הַבְּעַל in the preceding verse, and is in like manner immediately followed by the אֲרָם of accompaniment, pointing out the persons that encouraged idolatry. For אֲרָם the LXX., who have τὰ ἰδωλάτια, must have read אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, or they may have been misled by the אֲרָם following. אֲרָם, however, is found in two of Kennicott's MSS., and in the margin of another. Upwards of twenty MSS., four ancient editions, and all the versions read אֲרָם הַבְּעַל instead of אֲרָם הַבְּעַל. For אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, the idolatrous priests, see on Hos. x. 5. Both in the ancient and in the latter Hebrew, the term כֹּהֵן is used of the priests of idols, as well as of those belonging to Jehovah. See Gen. xli. 45, 50 ; 1 Kings xiii. 2, 33 ; 2 Kings x. 19, xi. 18. It may to some appear doubtful whether the former be not here intended ; but as such are undeniably included in the אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, it is more probable that in using the term אֲרָם הַבְּעַל, the prophet had in his eye those who were professedly priests of the true God, but who, instead of checking, or endeavoring to eradicate idolatry, encouraged it by their indifference, or the inconsistency of their conduct in other respects. Comp. Jer. ii. 8, v. 31. The Targ. renders אֲרָם הַבְּעַל עִם כֹּהֲנֵיהֶן, their worshippers with their priests. Neither were he left in the land by the Chaldeans. Their very names were to be forgotten.

5. Having directed his prophecy against the priests, the prophet now denounces those of the people who indulged in idolatrous practices. He first takes up those who were the votaries of Sabiism, or the worship of the heavenly bodies : a system which had, at an early period, become extensively prevalent, and continued to exert its influence, not only over the nomades of Arabia, but over the philosophers and wise men of the East ; but which, in whatever form or degree it obtained, had the lamentable effect of deifying the creature, and obscuring the existence, claims, and glory of the Creator. That it was adopted, and its rites practised to a great extent by the Jews, appears from 2 Kings xxiii. 5, 6 ; Jer. vii. 17, 18, xlv. 17—19, 25. The גַּגֹּת, roofs or house-tops, in the East are flat, and are used for various purposes. The idolaters may have chosen them for secrecy in the time of the prophet, or they may have selected them for the purpose of obtaining a fuller view of the plane-

- 6 And those that have turned back from Jehovah,
And that neither seek Jehovah nor apply to him.
- 7 Keep silence before the Lord Jehovah,
For the day of Jehovah is near;
For Jehovah hath prepared a sacrifice,
He hath consecrated those whom he hath invited.
- 8 And it shall come to pass on the day of Jehovah's sacrifice,
That I will punish the princes and the king's sons,
And all that wear foreign apparel.

tary objects of their worship. Jer. xix. 13, xxxii. 29. The planet to which they specially burnt incense on the roofs of their houses is supposed to have been the Moon, or it was more probably Venus, called  $\text{מַלְכֵּי הַשָּׁמַיִם}$ , "the Queen of heaven," Jer. vii. 17, 18, 19, 25. The prophet next instances a mongrel class of worshippers, such as professed attachment to Jehovah, as the national God, but, at the same time, were devoted to the service of Moloch, whom in reality, they regarded and honored as their king. For the forms  $\text{מְלִיכָה}$ ,  $\text{מְלִיכָה}$ ,  $\text{מְלִיכָה}$ ,  $\text{מְלִיכָה}$ , see on Amos v. 26, and Gesenius under the word  $\text{מְלִיכָה}$ . Instead of immediately connecting these opposite objects of worship with the participle  $\text{מְשַׁבְּחֵי הָאֱלֹהִים}$ , as he had done in the preceding clause, Zephaniah stops short, as if uncertain how to describe the persons whom he had in view, and then proceeds to characterize them as combining, by acts of solemn profession, the worship of the true God with that of Moloch. Comp. 1 Kings xviii. 21.  $\text{נִשְׁבַּע בַּיְהוָה}$ , to swear by a deity, means to acknowledge him in a public, solemn, and binding manner; openly to pledge one's self to his service.

6. This verse is more comprehensive in its import, being descriptive of all who were in any way guilty of defection from Jehovah, and lived in total neglect of him and his ways.

7. For  $\text{מִשְׁבַּח הַיְהוָה}$ , comp. Hab. ii. 20; Zech. ii. 13. In the symbolical language of prophecy, a sacrifice denotes the slaughter or destruction of an army or people. In the words  $\text{אֲשֶׁר יִשְׁבַּח הַיְהוָה}$ , he hath consecrated his called ones, however, there is no allusion to guests invited to partake of a sacrificial feast, as there unquestionably is Ezek. xxxix. 17—20; Rev. xix. 17, 18. The  $\text{מְלִיכֵי הַשָּׁמַיִם}$ , called ones, were the Chaldeans, who, as the Divine army, or the instruments of his retributive justice, were called into the field against the enemies of the Most High. In this sense Cyrus is said to have been called, Is. xli. 9, xlvi. 15. Comp. also Is. xlii. 3, and my note there, in which  $\text{שְׁבַח}$ , to sanctify, consecrate, is explained of the selection of troops for war, and the religious rites engaged in when they set out upon the military expedition.

8. That by the phrase  $\text{בְּנֵי הַמֶּלֶךְ}$ , the sons of the king, we are to understand the immediate children of Josiah, does not appear. He could not have had sons of an age sufficiently mature at the time the prophet uttered his prediction, to allow of their contracting guilt to such a degree as that which the connection necessarily requires; for he could not himself have been above seventeen years old. It may either mean the princes of the royal house generally, or the children of the king who should be on the throne at the time of the accomplishment of the prophecy. That the latter supposition is the more probable, appears from 2 Kings xxv. 7, where it is stated, that the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes. By those that wore foreign attire, the prophet means the rich and great generally, who, in violation of an express ordinance relative to national

- 9 I will also punish all who leap over the threshold in that day,
 Who fill the house of their lord with violence and deceit.
- 10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith Jehovah,
 That there shall be the sound of crying from the fish-gate,
 And of wailing from the second,
 And of great destruction from the hills.
- 11 Howl, ye inhabitants of the Mortar!
 For all the people of Canaan are destroyed;
 All who are laden with money are cut off.

costume, which was designed to preserve them distinct from other people, Numb. xv. 37—40, arrayed themselves in the more costly and gorgeous garb of idolaters, and thus more easily mixed with them in the performance of their idolatrous rites.

9. Because the priests of Dagon abstained from treading on the threshold of his temple, 1 Sam. v. 5, it has been by some inferred that Zephaniah alludes here to some such superstitious custom as practised by the Jews. Thus the Targ. כל דמה לביר בנימוסי פלשתאי, all who walk in the laws of the Philistines. But this construction has little to support it beyond the simple occurrence of the word threshold, in both passages; for in Samuel it is merely said, לא ידרכו — they tread or walk not over the threshold of Dagon; whereas the language of the prophet, על-המשׁתר, him that leapeth over the threshold, is expressive of a more violent action; and as the parallel hemistich shows, characterizes the eagerness with which the servants of the great rushed out of their palaces in order to seize upon the property of others, and thereby increase the wealth of their masters. If we may apply the signification of the cognate word in Arab.

دلج, principio, or sub finem noctis iter fecit, we should interpret the term as denoting their setting out on their predatory expeditions under cloud of night. Thus, as to the general sense, the Syr.

כלס, all who com- mit violence and plunder. Kimchi explains the word of their forcibly entering the houses of the poor, and robbing them of their goods.

10, 11. These verses describe the state of Jerusalem when besieged by Nebuchadnezzar. פֶּשַׁר הַדָּגִים, the fish-gate, occurs 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14; Neh. iii. 3, xii. 39; but there is nothing in these passages by which we can determine its exact position. From the name it might be inferred, that it was situated either on the north or the north-east side of the city, that being the direction from which those would arrive who brought fish from Tiberias and the Jordan, and corresponded to what is now called the Damascus Gate, or to that of St. Stephen. It was from this side, being that which was most accessible, that Jerusalem was attacked by the enemy. That משׁתרה, the second, is not to be referred to פֶּשַׁר, gate, as its antecedent, but to עִיר, city, understood, appears from Neh. xi. 9, where we have in full העִיר השׁנייה, the second city, i. e. the second division of the city. Ewald renders the word by Neustadt, "Newtown." In all probability it was what was afterwards called Akra, or the lower city, which lay to the north of the ancient city on Mount Zion, and was separated from it by the Tyropæon, a valley which ran down between them to the present pool of Siloam. In our common version the word is improperly rendered college, 2 Kings xxii. 14, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 22, after the interpretation of the Rabbin. The גבעות, hills, here mentioned, were not those around the city, such as

- 12 And it shall come to pass at that time
That I will search Jerusalem with lights,
And punish the men who are hardened on their lees,
Who say in their hearts,
Jehovah will not do good, neither will he do evil.
- 13 And their wealth shall become a spoil,
And their houses a desolation ;
They may build houses, but they shall not inhabit them,
And plant vineyards, but they shall not drink the wine of them.
- 14 The great day of Jehovah is near ;

the Mount of Olives, the Mount of Evil Counsel, etc., but Zion, Moriah, Ophel, and other elevated localities within the walls, occupied by the temple, the royal palace, and the houses of the richer portion of the inhabitants. The prophet graphically represents the progress of the Chaldeans, from the gate at which they entered, into the second division of the city, until they had ultimately taken possession of the whole, and destroyed the principal buildings. This destruction is very appropriately expressed by the noun שִׁבְרָה, from שָׁבַר, to break, break in pieces, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 8, 9. מִצִּיּוֹן is not a proper name, as the article prefixed shows, but an appellative, signifying mortar, from בָּרַחַשׁ, to bray, pound. See Prov. xxvii. 22. It appears to have been applied, from its resemblance to that vessel, to one or other of the valleys in or about Jerusalem. Theod. ἐν τῷ βάθει. Aq. εἰς τὸν ὕλμον. According to the Targum, בְּהַלְיָא דְקִדְרוֹן, it was that through which the brook Kidron flows. Others think it was the Tyropæon, the locality of the bazaars, where the merchants carried on their business. From what follows in the verse, the latter is most probably the true interpretation. It is thought by some that the term was purposely chosen by the prophet, on account of its resemblance in sound to מִקְדָּשׁ, a holy place, and that Jerusalem itself is meant ; but this word is exclusively appropriated to the tabernacle, or temple, and other sacred places, and never to the city, though it is called עִיר יְהוּדָה, the Holy City, just as it is still known in the East by the names القدس, El-Kuds, and بیت المقدس, Beit-el-Mukeddes, of similar signification. By אֲנֹכִי מִבְּנֵי עַם כְּנָעַן, the people of Canaan, the prophet does not mean the inhabitants of Canaan generally, nor Phœnician merchants in particular, who carried on trade with those of Jerusalem, but ironically the Jerusalem merchants themselves, who not only resembled the former in their modes of acquiring gain, but adopted their idolatrous manners and customs. See on Hos. xii. 8.

12. The Divine judgments were to reach those who practised wickedness in the most hidden places, and in the most covert manner. This is metaphorically expressed by searching out with lights what is concealed in the dark. The metaphor following is taken from the firm crust which is formed on the surface of fermented liquors when they have been long left in an undisturbed state. נִסְתָּרָה, signifies, to contract, become concrete, hard, etc., and strikingly expresses the hardened state of the rich who have settled down into infidelity and atheism. Comp. Jer. xlviii. 11. Their practical denial of a superintending and governing providence is expressed in so many words at the end of the verse.

It is here implied that those of whom the prophet speaks would go on building and planting till the judgment of God overtook them, and deprived them of all their property. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 38, 39.

14. מִבְּהָרָה is not the participle in Piel,

- It is near and hasteth greatly ;
 The sound of the day of Jehovah :
 There the mighty man shrieketh bitterly.
- 15 That day is a day of indignation,
 A day of trouble and distress,
 A day of desolation and ruin,
 A day of darkness and gloom,
 A day of clouds and obscurity ;
- 16 A day of the trumpet and the war-shout,
 Against the fortified cities,
 And against the lofty towers.
- 17 And I will bring trouble upon men,
 So that they shall walk as the blind ;
 Because they have sinned against Jehovah,
 Their blood shall be poured out as dust,
 And their flesh shall be as dung.
- 18 Neither their silver nor their gold
 Shall be able to rescue them
 In the day of Jehovah's indignation ;
 But the whole land shall be consumed
 By the fire of his jealousy :
 For a consummation altogether sudden will he make with the affirmative Mem rejected, but the infinitive of the same conjugation, used as an abbreviated form of מָהַר מָהַר. מָהַר, bitter, is here used adverbially. So irresistible should be the attack of the Chaldeans, that the Jewish warrior would be compelled to abandon himself to shrieks of hopeless grief.

15, 16. A beautiful amplification, for the purpose of aggravating the character of the calamity. Passages somewhat similar occur in the prophets, but none equal to this. מָהַר וּמָהַרְתָּהּ, as well as מָהַר וּמָהַרְתָּהּ, are instances of paronomasia. Comp. Job xv. 24, xxx. 3, xxxviii. 27. מָהַר וּמָהַרְתָּהּ form a Hendiadys, and describe the high towers or turrets, at the angles of fortified walls. Gesenius assumes an obsolete root מָהַר, to separate, divide into classes, as that from which מָהַר, a turret, is derived ; but there is no occasion to depart from its usual derivation from the Piel of מָהַר, to cause to turn. It thus signifies what is at the turning, corner, or angle of a building, and that whether at the top or the bottom. Tacitus, describing the walls of Jerusalem, says: "Per artem obliquos et introrsum sinuatos, ut latera oppugnantium ad ictus, patescerent." Hist. lib. v. cap. 11, § 5.

17. מָהַר, or, as in some MSS. and editions, מָהַר, flesh. Arab. لحم, caro. Root מָהַר, to eat. מָהַר may, by zeugma, be made to govern מָהַר as well as מָהַר, but it is preferable to supply the substantive verb after מָהַר. For the latter figure, comp. Job xx. 7.

18. מָהַר — מָהַר, also — also, meaning both the one and the other. As here with a negative, neither — nor. "Fire"

Of all the inhabitants of the land.

is often used figuratively to denote war, 16, xxvi. 11.  $\text{קָרַע}$  is to be taken in the because of its devastating effects. Is. x. sense of wholly, entirely, altogether.

CHAPTER II.

A solemn admonition is now given to the Jewish people to repent during the short space of time that would be allotted to them before the Chaldean invasion, 1, 2; followed by an exhortation to the pious to persevere in their devotedness to God, and the interests of righteousness, 3. The prophet then proceeds to foretell the destruction of those nations which had always been hostile to the Jews, as the Philistines, 4—7; the Moabites and Ammonites, 8—10; parenthetically, the idols of the nations, 11; the Ethiopians, 12; and the Assyrians, 13—15.

- 1 BEND yourselves, and be ye bent,
O nation not desired!
- 2 Before the birth of the decree;
The day passeth away as chaff;
Before there come upon you the burning anger of Jehovah;
Before there come upon you the day of anger of Jehovah.

1.  $\text{קָרַע וְשָׁבַע וְקָרַע וְשָׁבַע}$ , the Hithpolel and Kal conjugations joined for the sake of intensity. Comp. Is. xxiv. 19. The words have been variously rendered. LXX.  $\text{συνάχθητε καὶ συνδέθητε}$ . Vulg. convenite et congregamini. De Wette, prüfet euch, ja prüfet. Gesenius, collect yourselves and be ye collected; i. e. collect your thoughts, look into your own mind, prove yourselves; thus agreeing with De Wette, after the interpretation of Pagninus, Vatablus, Cocceius, and others. Ewald, erleibet und bleichet. Most refer to  $\text{קָרַע}$  as the root, which signifies in Poel to collect stubble, wood, etc.; but it is never used with respect to human beings. I prefer deriving it from  $\text{קָרַע}$ , to bend, be bent. Arab.  $\text{قوس}$ . II. incurvavit arcus more; incurvatus fuit senex. Hence  $\text{קָרַע}$ , a bow, from its being bent.

Bend yourselves, and be ye bent, will then be the proper rendering. Comp. the use of  $\text{קָרַע}$ , to bow down, Is. lx. 14. The prophet calls the Jews to deep humility before God on account of their manifold sins. Because  $\text{קָרַע}$  signifies to be pale, Gesenius renders the words  $\text{לֹא נִחַיְתָה קָרַע}$ , O nation not ashamed! but  $\text{קָרַע}$  never denotes to be pale from a feeling of shame, but as the effect of desire, the verb everywhere else expressing the idea of pinning, longing, being intensely desirous of any object. The phrase  $\text{לֹא נִחַיְתָה}$ , not desired, is here used by litotes for abominated, hated.

2. The Divine decree or purpose of punishment announced in the preceding chapter, is here tropically represented as a pregnant female near the time of her delivery. The words  $\text{בְּמִן יָמֵי יְהוָה יִבְרָא יְהוָה}$ , as

- 3 Seek ye Jehovah, all ye humble of the land,
 Who perform his judgments;
 Seek righteousness, seek humility,
 If perhaps ye may be hid
 In the day of the anger of Jehovah.
- 4 For Gaza shall be forsaken,
 And Askelon a desolation;
 As for Ashdod, they shall drive her out at noon-day,
 And Ekron shall be rooted up.
- 5 Woe to the inhabitants of the line of the sea!
 The nation of Kerethites!
 The word of Jehovah is against you;
 O Canaan! the land of the Philistines,
 I will destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

chaff the day passeth, do not refer to the coming of the period of calamity, but the rapid lapse of the time of repentance. The image of chaff is always used of that which flies quickly away, never of what comes to any one. They are introduced parenthetically. The sentence הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה אֲנִי מְבַרֵךְ אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל לְמַעַן יִשְׁמְרוּ אֶת-מִצְוֹתָיו וְיִתְּנוּ אֶת-לִבָּם לְשׁוּבָה וְיִשְׁמְרוּ אֶת-דְּבָרֵי אֱלֹהֵיהֶם וְיִשְׁמְרוּ אֶת-מִצְוֹתָיו וְיִתְּנוּ אֶת-לִבָּם לְשׁוּבָה is wanting in six of Kennicott's MSS., probably in two more, and originally in eight of De Rossi's. It is also omitted in the Arabic version. The declaration, with the trifling change of a single word, is properly repeated for the sake of emphasis.

3. The prophet here addresses himself to the afflicted and humble among his people, from whom some hope of a better state of things might be expected. יְהוָה, rendered perhaps, is not intended to express a doubt respecting the safety of the pious, but the extreme difficulty of escaping the threatened judgment. The poor of the land were left by Nebuzar-adan to be vine-dressers and husbandmen. 2 Kings xxv. 12.

4. The connective force of the particle כִּי, for, with which this verse commences, lies in the universality of the calamity which was about to come, not upon the Jews only, but upon all the nations with which they had been brought into contact. There would be no country to which they might flee for safety, for all were to be visited by the Chaldeans. For the cities of the Philistines here specified, see on the parallel prophecy, Amos i. 6—8; and Is. xx. 1. צֶהְרֵי הַיּוֹם, the meridian or noon, being the hottest part of the day, is generally spent by the Orientals in sleep, and is the less likely time for any military operations to be carried on. 2 Sam. iv. 5; Jer. vi. 4, xv. 8. The paronomasias, עַתָּה עַתָּה עַתָּה and עַתָּה עַתָּה עַתָּה, are not to be overlooked.

5. This and the two following verses contain an amplification of the prediction against the Philistines. הַיָּם הַיָּבֵל, LXX. τὸ σχοίνισμα τῆς θαλάσσης, the line of the sea, i. e. the region or coast along the sea-shore, and so called from the custom of using a cord or line in measuring off or dividing a territory. Comp. with the same application, הַיָּם הַיָּבֵל, the coast of the sea, Jer. xlvi. 7; Ezek. xxv. 16. By גֵּוִי כְרֵתִים, nation of Cretians, we are not to understand the actual inhabitants of Crete, but the Philistines, a nation descended from those who originally emigrated from that island, and took possession of the south-west coast of Palestine. עַמֵּי הַפִּלִּיִּטִּים, the name of the Philistines, properly signifies the emigrants, from עַמֵּי. Eth. ኑሶሲ,

- 6 And the line of the sea shall be pastures,
With cisterns for shepherds,
And folds for sheep.
- 7 Yea, the line shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah.
Thereupon shall they feed ;
In the houses of Askelon shall they lie down at even ;
For Jehovah their God shall visit them,
And reverse their captivity.
- 8 I have heard the reproach of Moab,
And the revilings of the sons of Ammon,
Who have reviled my people,
And carried themselves haughtily against their border.
- 9 Wherefore, as I live, saith Jehovah of hosts,
The God of Israel :
Surely Moab shall be as Sodom,
And the sons of Ammon as Gomorrah ;
A region of overrunning brambles and salt pits,
And a perpetual desolation ;
The remnant of my people shall plunder them,
And the residue of my nation shall possess them.
- 10 This shall happen to them for their pride,
Because they reproached and carried themselves haughtily,
Against the people of Jehovah of hosts.

to rove, migrate. According to Stephen of Byzantium, Gaza was originally called Minoa, after Minos, king of Crete, who, with his two brothers, Arakus and Rhadamanthus, undertook an expedition to the coast, and gave the city his own name. Comp. Deut. ii. 23 ; 1 Sam. xxx. 14 ; Jer. xlvii. 4 ; Ezek. xxv. 16 ; Amos ix. 7. כַּנְעַן, Canaan, which is not only employed to designate the whole country taken possession of by the Hebrews, but more specially Phœnicia, is here to be understood as restricted to the country of the Philistines.

6. It is thought by some that there is an allusion to בְּרִיתִים in the word בְּרִית, which properly signifies wells or cisterns, from בָּרָה, to dig. Instead of continuing to be a thickly populated and well cultivated country, the land of the Philistines should be converted into a region fit only to be occupied by nomades.

7. Instead of being any longer annoyed by the Philistines, the Jews, restored to their land, would occupy the territory as described in the preceding verse.

8—10. Comp. the parallel prophecies against Moab, Is. xv. xvi. ; Jer. xlviii. ; Amos ii. 1—3 ; and Ammon, Jer. xlix, 1—6 ; Amos i. 13—15. הִגְדִּיל עַל means to carry one's self haughtily against any one. There is no occasion to supply הָעַל or any other noun. The suffix in הִגְדִּיל has עָמִי for its antecedent. The formula הַיָּיָה אֲנִי, I living, or as I live, ver. 9, and הַיָּיָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ, as Jehovah, as God liveth, are solemn modes of expression, by which the Divine Existence is pledged for the certainty of the declarations which they introduce. מִצְעָק, a drawing, or extending out, from מִצְעַק, cognate מִצְעָק, to draw out, extend. As connected with bramble, it denotes the overspreading or overrunning of that

- 11 Jehovah is to be feared above all the gods of the earth,
 For he will cause them to waste away;
 And all the inhabitants of the maritime regions
 Shall worship him — each from his place.
- 12 Also ye, O ye Cushites!
 Shall be slain by my sword.
- 13 And he will stretch forth his hand over the north,
 And destroy Assyria;
 He will also make Nineveh waste,
 An arid region like the desert.
- 14 And flocks shall lie down in the midst of her;
 All the wild beasts of the nations;
 Both the pelican and the porcupine
 Shall take up their abode in her capitals;
 A voice shall sing in the windows, shrub. מַכְרָה מַלְחָה, a pit or excavation, such as are found in the vicinity of the Dead Sea, in which, when it overflows in spring, its water is collected, and pure salt obtained by evaporation. The idea conveyed by both metaphors is that of sterility and desolation.

11. This verse connects so slightly with the preceding, and, as the former part is usually rendered, affords so little suitable a sense, that I cannot but regard the suffix in מַלְחָהּ as possessing an anticipative pronominal reference to אֱלֹהֵי הָאֲרָץ, the gods of the earth, with respect to whom Jehovah was to show himself worthy of exclusive veneration by effecting their destruction. In Hebrew poetry the pronoun or pronominal affix frequently occurs before the noun. See on Is. xxviii. 26. While announcing the destruction of the surrounding idolatrous nations, the prophet was inspired to predict the gradual, but certain destruction of idolatry universally throughout the earth. The period predicted should be one in which all peculiarity of local worship would cease, and Divine worship be acceptable wherever presented in sincerity and truth. Comp. Mal. i. 11; John iv. 21—24; 1 Cor. i. 2. For the phrase מַלְחָהּ, comp. Ps. xcvi.

4. The מ prefixed in מַמְקָרָם, expresses simply the locality in which the persons spoken of resided. Compare מַבְיָתָם, מַמְיָרָם, מַתְקָרָם, etc. רָזָה, Arab. رَزَى, to make thin, lean, diminish, cause to waste away, and to destroy. LXX. ἐξολοθρεύσει. The knowledge and worship of the true God were to be extended not only over the vast continental regions of the globe, but over those which bordered on, or existed in the sea. In אֲרָצוֹת הַיָּם, the isles, or maritime regions, there is, as usual, a special reference to the West; though in connection with כָּל, all, the universality of such regions is intended. The passage is strictly Messianic, since the accomplishment of the prediction has been, and is being effected by means of the gospel.

12. For כּוּשׁ, Cush, see on Is. xi. 11, xviii. 1. The prophecy received its fulfilment when Nebuchadnezzar invaded and conquered Egypt, with whose military operations and fate the Ethiopians were more or less mixed up. Jer. xlvi. 9; Ezek. xxx. 5, 9. There is, indeed, reason to think that Egypt herself is designed to be included in the term as here employed.

13—15. From the remote South into

- Desolation shall be in the thresholds,
 For the cedar-work is laid bare.
- 15 This is the exulting city which dwelt securely,
 Which said in her heart,
 I am, and besides me there is none.
 How she is become desolate!
 A resting-place for wild beasts!
 Every one that passeth by her shall hiss,
 He shall shake his hand.

which the prophet had carried his hearers, he turns suddenly back to the North, where there still existed a mighty empire, which must of necessity be overthrown, before the Divine sword, i. e. the arms of Babylon, could reach the countries against which he had denounced the judgments of God. This empire was the Assyrian, which was drawing towards its end, and was actually subverted when Nineveh was taken and destroyed by Cyaxares and Nabopolassar, B. C. 625. It is this catastrophe, with its disastrous consequences, which Zephaniah so graphically describes in these verses. So completely was the celebrated metropolis of the ancient world to be desolated, that not even the Nomades would seek a temporary shelter among her ruins. They should only be inhabited by the wild beasts of the desert. That by עֲרֵבִים we are to understand herds of savage animals, and not flocks of sheep, goats, etc., is apparent from the mention made in the parallelism of בְּלִי-הַיְהוּדִים, every wild beast of the nation. גֹּיִם, nation, has by some been thought to stand poetically for a collection of animals, just as עַם, people, does, Prov. xxx. 25, 26; but it is rather to be regarded as synonymous with אֶרֶץ, land, country; only restricting it to the particular country in which Nineveh had been situated; so that the phrase will be equivalent to אֶרֶץ-אֲרָבִים, Gen. i. 24. The LXX. render πάντα τὰ θηρία τῆς γῆς. Targ. כָּל הַיְיִוֹת בְּרֵא, all the beasts of the field. The ו in 'תִּי-הָאֵרֶץ is merely paragogic. For קָצַר and קָצַרְתָּ, see on Is. xxxiv. 11. Some interpret קִיבֵּל of the Arab غول, the demon of the desert, and convert הָרָב, desolation, into עֲרֵב, raven, but without sufficient ground. See Maurer, who, in opposition to Hitzig, takes both words in their usual acceptation. עָרָה, the Piel of עָרָה, is here used impersonally, and is best rendered in the passive. בִּפְתוּחַי, chapters, see on Amos ix. 1. By אֲרָבִים is meant the wainscoting and fine carved cedar work with which the walls, ceiling, etc., of the houses were ornamented. For the language of pride and carnal security expressed in ver. 15, comp. Is. xlvi. 8.

CHAPTER III.

HAVING digressed to predict the fate of the surrounding nations. Zephaniah returns to his own countrymen, and specially directs his prophecy against Jerusalem, the leading persons in which had persevered in wickedness in spite of all the warnings which they had received, 1-7. After addressing the pious members of the theocracy, and encouraging them to wait for the development of the Divine purposes, 8, he proceeds to predict the conversion of the Gentiles, 9, and of the Jews, 10; describes their character when converted, 11-13; congratulates them on their deliverance, and enjoyment of the presence of their heavenly King, 14-17; and concludes by adverting to the circumstances connected with their return to Palestine after their conversion, 18-20.

-
- 1 Wo to the rebellious and polluted,
The oppressing city!
  - 2 She listened not to the voice,
She received not instruction;
She trusted not in Jehovah,
She drew not near to her God.
  - 3 Her princes in the midst of her
Are roaring lions;
Her judges are evening wolves;
They gnaw no bones in the morning.
  - 4 Her prophets are vain-glorious,
Hypocritical men;
Her priests profane what is sacred;
They do violence to the law.

1. It has been thought by some that in מורֶשֶׁה, rebellious, as here applied to Jerusalem, there is a play upon the name of מוֹרִיָּה, Moriah, on which the temple was built. If so, it was calculated to suggest to the minds of the Jews the gross inconsistency of their laying claim to any connection with that sacred place, while they obstinately refused to obey the law of God. The root is מָרָא, cognate with מָרָה, to prove refractory, rebel. The LXX. rendering the word by ἐπιφανής, illustrious, have doubtless mistaken it as coming from רָאָה, to see; as the Syr. likewise has done, rendering מָרָא = מָרָא, noted, celebrated. יִינָה, the Benon. participle of יָנָה, to rage, be cruel, oppressive, etc. What the prophet has in his eye is the rage and cruelty with which the idolatrous inhabitants persecuted such as adhered to the worship and service of Jehovah, as well as their oppression of the widows, orphans, etc. See Jer. xxii. 3.

2-4. Not only did the inhabitants generally refuse to receive instruction from the Lord, and alienate their affections from him and his service, but the rulers, both civil and ecclesiastical, evinced the grossest dereliction of duty, and the most flagrant inconsistency of character. זֵאֵבֵי עֶרֶב, evening wolves, i. e. wolves which come forth from the forests or other lurking places in the evening, and, greedy with hunger, seize or devour during the night, whatever animals they fall in with. Comp. Hab. i. 8, λῆκοι νοκτεμῶσι, Oppian. Cynog. 3, 266. The voracious and insatiable cupidity of the judges is further expressed by לֹא גָרְמוּ לַבֵּקֶר, nothing is crunched in the morning; i. e. all is devoured in the night, and not so much as a bone left to be gnawed in the morning. גָּרַע is here used impersonally. Thus, as to the

- 5 Jehovah, the righteous One, is in the midst of her,
 He doeth no injustice;
 Every morning he bringeth his judgment to light,
 It is not lacking;
 But the unjust know no shame.
- 6 I have cut off the nations;
 Their corner-stones are laid waste;
 I have made their streets desolate,
 Without any one passing through them.
 Their cities are destroyed; they are without a man;
 There is no inhabitant.
- 7 I said: Only fear me;
 Receive instruction;
 That her habitation might not be cut off,
 According to all that I had appointed concerning her:
 But they rose up early;
 They corrupted all their doings.

sense, the LXX. and Vulg. ὄχι ὑπολείποντο; non relinquebant. The prophets, instead of evincing that gravity and humility which became those who professed to deliver Divine messages, were אֲנִי־לֵךְ, light and vain-glorious persons, trifling with the most serious subjects, and carrying themselves haughtily towards others. The verb אֲנִי־לֵךְ properly signifies to boil up like water. Comp. Gen. xlix. 4; Jud. ix. 4; Jer. xxiii. 32. Arab. فَكَز, superbivit. The priests were equally corrupt. They made no distinction between the holy and profane, and distorted the meaning of the law, when expounding it to the people. Comp. Ezek. xxii. 26, where similar language is used, and explained.

5. Jehovah had his residence in the temple, connected with the daily worship, in which were those unfailling revelations of the rectitude of his character that brought to view a glorious pattern, which it was the duty of the Jews to imitate; but, hardened in wickedness, they were conscious of no feelings of shame. בַּבֹּקֶר בַּבֹּקֶר, in the morning in the morning, i. e. according to a common Hebrew idiom, every morning.

6. Besides the plentiful instruction with which the inhabitants of Jerusalem had been furnished by the public institutions that existed among them, and from which they might conclude what punishment they had to expect if they persisted in sin, they had examples from which to take warning in the desolate condition to which other nations had been reduced on account of their wickedness. Under the long and happy reign of Josiah, the Jews enjoyed rest and tranquillity until the last year, while other neighboring nations were laid waste; for it was during his reign that the great incursion of the Scythians into western Asia took place, while Judea was spared. Michaelis. אֲנִי־לֵךְ is here to be taken in its literal acceptation of corner-stone, but the ruin or desolation of the building resting upon it is implied. אֲנִי־לֵךְ is the Niphal of אֲנִי־לֵךְ, to cut down, lay waste.

7. אֲנִי־לֵךְ and אֲנִי־לֵךְ are both futures used as imperatives. In אֲנִי־לֵךְ and אֲנִי־לֵךְ is a change, by no means uncommon, of the second person to the third. In אֲנִי־לֵךְ there is an ellipsis of אֲנִי־לֵךְ, according to.

- 8 Nevertheless, wait for me, saith Jehovah,
 In the day when I rise for the prey ;
 For my determination is to assemble the nations,
 To gather the kingdoms ;
 To pour out upon them my fury,
 All the heat of my anger ;
 For by the fire of my jealousy
 The whole earth shall be consumed.
- 9 For then I will turn to the nations a pure language;
 That they may all invoke the name of Jehovah ;
 That they may serve him with one accord.

לִּי יִקְרָא is not to be here taken in the sense of punishing, but of appointing for punishment. Comp. Jer. xv. 3. The appointed and threatened judgments should be averted from Jerusalem, if the inhabitants would only turn from their evil ways, and walk in the fear of the Lord. Such was the announcement which he graciously made to them by his servants the prophets ; but, instead of reforming, they addicted themselves more sedulously and entirely to the practice of iniquity. רִשְׁמוֹתָי, to rise early, is frequently used in the Hebrew Scriptures in a tropical sense, to indicate that a person does anything with preparedness or full purpose of mind. The primary idea conveyed by the verb seems to be that of placing the burdens on the shoulders of camels, etc., before setting out on a journey, which, in the East, is done very early in the morning. Root שָׁמַר, shoulder, Eth. ሰጠጠ ; bajulavit. אָשַׁר ; onus imposuit humeris.

8. Most expositors interpret the words יִקְרָא לִי, expect or wait for me, as if they were addressed to the profligate characters described in the preceding verse, but this construction is admissible only on the principle of their being applied ironically, since the phrase is never used except in a good sense. Yet even this but ill suits the entire connection. I consider them to form an apostrophe to the pious among the Jews, calling upon them to look forward, amid all the calamities which were approaching, to the glorious period which these calamities were designed to usher in, and which the prophet specially describes in the following verses. The LXX., and all the other Greek versions, as also the Syr., render יִקְרָא, by testimony or witness ; a signification which only attaches to the letters when pointed יִקְרָא. The signification of prey is more appropriate here. Compare for this signification Gen. xlix. 27 ; Is. xxxiii. 23. What is meant by rising up to the prey is explained in the following clause of the verse. Indeed, the very derivation of the word from קָרָא ; to pass on in a hostile manner, to rush upon, attack ; Arab. عدى, irruit in aliquem ; عدى, inimici, hostes ; at once suggests the ideas of conflict and destruction.

9. From this verse to the end of the book the prophecy relates exclusively to Messianic times. The שִׁפְהָ בְּרִירָה, purified lip or language, means the profession of pure religion, a language freed from the polluted names of idols, and of every abomination connected with their worship. As this was to be realized by the nations, the יִקְרָא, as distinguished from the Jews, it follows that the spread of Christianity, and the consequent subversion of idolatry throughout the world, are here specifically predicted. This prediction, however, has hitherto been only partially fulfilled. By the gospel, indeed, idolatry has been dislodged from many

10 From beyond the rivers of Cush,
My suppliants, the daughter of my dispersed,
Shall bring my offering.

parts of the globe, but its place has to a great extent been occupied by the pollutions of antichristian systems of worship, while vast regions are still the scenes of varied and most degrading idolatrous abominations. And, as to the unity so strikingly expressed by  $\text{וְשֵׁם ה' אֶחָד}$ , one shoulder, whatever there may be of that real substantial unity which binds all true believers to Christ as their Head, and to one another as members of the same family, there is still a deplorable want of the visible manifestation of oneness in obeying the laws of Christ, and obeying the ordinances of his house. These laws are spoken of as a burden, Matt. xi. 20; Acts xv. 28; Rev. ii. 24; and the metaphor here employed by the prophet is taken from two persons jointly carrying a burden between them, shoulder to shoulder. Compare the use of  $\delta\mu\omicron\delta\upsilon\mu\alpha\delta\delta\upsilon\upsilon$ , Acts i. 14; ii. 1, 46; iv. 24; v. 12; xv. 25; Rom. xv. 6. What has prevented the outward visibility of the unity of believers has been, that some of them have added burdens of their own to that of the Redeemer, while others have submitted to those imposed by men professing to be acting by his authority, but who have had no Scripture warranty for their pretensions. Until there is a return to an unanimous adherence to the simplicity which is in Christ, there can be no such unity as that taught in this verse. Yet for such the Bible teaches us to look; and it behooves every Christian to do whatever lies in his power, in order to bring about so blessed a consummation. Comp. 2 Cor. vi. 14,  $\text{Μὴ γίνεσθε ἑτεροζυγοῦντες ἀπίστοις}$ ; and 1 Cor. i. 10,  $\text{ἦτε δὲ κατηρητισμένοι ἐν τῷ αὐτῷ νοῦ καὶ ἐν τῇ αὐτῇ γνώμῃ}$ .

10. Having foretold the conversion of the Gentiles, the prophet in this verse predicts that of the Jews; quite in accordance with other passages of Scripture, in which they are placed in juxtaposition with each other.  $\text{עֲתִירֵי}$ , my suppliants, from  $\text{עָתַר}$ , to burn incense to a divinity; pray, supplicate. Arab.

$\text{عطر}$ , bonos odores spiravit. Syr.  $\text{ܥܦܪܐ}$ , fumavit odore suavi. Comp. Rev. v. 8, where the prayers of saints are called  $\delta\upsilon\mu\acute{\iota}\mu\alpha\tau\alpha$ , odors or incense, and Ps. cxli. 2, where David compares his prayer to  $\text{עֲתִירָה}$ , the Hebrew synonyme for incense.

Who the worshippers are, the prophet explains in the following words:  $\text{בְּתִירַת־פְּזִירֵי}$ , the daughter of my dispersed, i. e. by a common Hebrew idiom, my dispersed people, the Jews; and the locality in which we are directed to look for them is  $\text{עֲבַר לְנַהַר־כּוּשׁ}$ , beyond the rivers of Cush, i. e. Ethiopia or Abyssinia itself, the rivers of which enclose it on the north. See on Is. xviii. 1, where the same phraseology occurs, but where the Ethiopians, and not the Jews, are the subjects of the prophecy. It is a well ascertained fact, though all the historical circumstances with which it is connected have not yet been brought to light, that there has long existed in the west of Abyssinia, a people called Falashas, or emigrants (from the Eth.  $\text{ተ-ሰሰ}$ ;

to migrate; hence  $\text{ተ-ሰሰ}$ ; a sojourner, stranger, the root from which  $\text{פִּלִּשְׁתִּי}$ , Philistine, is derived, and for the same reason), who maintain that they derived their origin from Palestine, and all of whom profess the Jewish religion. They are identified, as to physical traits, not with the African races living in Ethiopia, but with the tribes of Arabia. They have their own government conceded to them by the Negus, or king of Ethiopia. When Bruce was there they had a Jewish king named Gideon, and his queen, Judith. Considering how greatly the

- 11 In that day thou shalt not be ashamed
 On account of all thy doings,
 By which thou hast transgressed against me ;
 For then I will remove from the midst of thee
 Thy proud exulters ;
 And thou shalt no more be haughty in my holy mountain.
- 12 And I will leave in the midst of thee
 An humble and poor people.
 And they shall trust in the name of Jehovah.
- 13 The residue of Israel shall not commit injustice ;
 They shall not speak lies ;
 Neither shall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth ;
 But they shall feed and lie down,
 And none shall make them afraid.
- 14 Rejoice, O daughter of Zion !
 Shout, O Israel !
 Be joyful and exult with all thy heart,
 O daughter of Jerusalem !
- 15 Jehovah hath removed thy judgments ;

Christianity of Abyssinia has been mixed up with Judaism, there is every reason to believe that most of the early converts in that country belonged to this very people. That the Falashas are part of the dispersed people whose conversion is here predicted, I can have no doubt. They are singled out as a separate portion of the scattered seed of Abraham, most probably on account of the peculiar circumstances in which they have lived during the dispersion. Their bringing of Jehovah's offering does not necessarily imply that they are, on their conversion, to come with gifts to Jerusalem ; all that is intended may only be הַמִּזְבֵּחַ הַטָּהוֹר, the pure offering, which, under the new dispensation, was to be presented in every place. See Mal. i. 11 ; and comp. ver. 9.

11—13. These verses contain a description of restored and regenerated Israel. The not being ashamed of their sinful practices does not mean their not feeling a compunctious sense of their intrinsic odiousness and demerits, but is expressive of the great change that should take place in the outward condition of the Jews. That condition into which they have been brought by their obstinate rebellion against Jehovah and his Messiah, is one of disgrace. When recovered out of it, all the marks of shame and infamy shall be removed. The Pharisaic spirit of pride, and the vain confidence in the temple and the temple worship, which proved the ruin of the nation, shall be taken away. The converted residue shall be a people humble and poor in spirit, Matt. v. 3, xi. 5, and of a truly righteous and upright character ; and having fled for refuge to the hope set before them in the gospel, shall be safe under the protecting care of their heavenly Father.

14. A call to the converted Israelites, restored to their own land, and especially to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, to exult in their distinguished experience of the Divine loving-kindness.

15. This and the following verses furnish the reasons why the Jews should indulge in exultation. הִפְתִּיחַ, in Kal, to turn ; in Piel, to cause to turn out of the

He hath cleared away thine enemies ;
The King of Israel, Jehovah, is in the midst of thee,
Thou shalt see calamity no more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear not O Zion! let not thy hands be feeble ;

17 Jehovah thy God is in the midst of thee,
The Mighty One, that will save ;
He will rejoice over thee with gladness,
He will be silent in his love !

He will exult over thee with a shout of joy.

18 I will gather those that are grieved for the festivals,
(They were of thee ;)

Burdened with reproach for her sake.

19 Behold ! I will deal with all thine oppressors at that time, way, remove, destroy. Instead of אֱיִבֶיךָ, thine enemy, thirty-two MSS., originally six more, and two by correction, read אֱיִבֵיךָ, thine enemies, which reading is also supported by two early editions, the Babyl. Talmud, and all the versions. For תִּירָאֵי, sixty-eight MSS., and among these some of the most accurate Spanish, read תִּירָאֵי. In the full enjoyment of the presence of their God, the converted Jews should have nothing to fear.

17. A beautiful description of the delight which Jehovah shall take in his recovered people, and of their consequent and continuous happiness. The phrase יְהוָה יִשְׂמַח בְּעַמּוֹתָיִךְ has occasioned some difficulty to interpreters. Houbigant, after the LXX. and Syr., and following him Newcome, and recently Ewald, propose to read יְהוָה יִשְׂמַח, "he will renew his love;" but this verb nowhere occurs in Hiphil, and the conjectural emendation is wholly unnecessary. שָׁמַט, to be dumb, keep silence, has the same signification in Hiphil, to be silent, not to speak, and is here very appropriately employed to express the non-remembrance of iniquity. Justly as God might set the sins of his people before them, he, in the exercise of his love, makes no mention of them, having freely forgiven them for the sake of the atonement made by his only-begotten

Son. Comp. Ps. xxxii. 2 ; Jer. xxxi. 34 ; Ezek. xxxiii. 16.

18. נִגְיָה, of which נִגְיָה is the Niphal participle, has two significations, that of being pained or grieved, and that of being separated, removed, etc. Both derivations may be supported by the Arab.

دَوَّيْتُ, dohuit, and Conj. iv. procul a se avovit.

The former, which is here most approved, fully meets the exigency of the passage, and may be said to imply the latter. The Jews, in a state which rendered it impossible for them to celebrate their sacred festivals at Jerusalem, are represented as filled with grief when they reflected on the privileges of their ancestors. מִיָּדָי, festival, is here a noun of multitude. הִנֵּנִי, on her account, is introduced, for the sake of emphasis, between the words מִשָּׁמַט תִּירָאֵי, the lifting up, or utterance of reproach, which would otherwise have appeared in the construct state. By metonymy, the Jews, who are the objects of such reproach, are intended. Comp. Micah vi. 16. The feminine suffix in הִנֵּנִי refers to Jerusalem or Zion, understood: the change of person is, as frequently, for the sake of effect. The various reading הִנֵּנִי, though supported by more than twelve MSS., the Targ. and Syr., is most probably an emendation.

19. יִדְּבַר עִמָּךְ, means to deal with, in

And will save her that halteth,
 And collect the expelled,
 And make them a praise and a name,
 In every country where they have been put to shame 20 At that time I will bring you in,
 Even at the time when I collect you ;
 Yea, I will make you a name and a praise
 Among all the nations of the earth,
 When I reverse your captivity in their sight,
 Saith Jehovah.

the way of retribution or punishment. Vulg. interficiam. Targ. אֲנִי אֶבְרֹךְ אֶת־הַגּוֹיִם וְאֶת־הָאֲדָמָה, I will make an end of. The restoration of the Jews is uniformly represented as taking place in connection with the destruction of those nations that are hostile to the cause of God, and that shall, in a special manner, oppose the accomplishment of his purpose respecting the final deliverance of that long depressed and scattered, yet beloved people. Comp. Is. lix. 17—21, lxvi. 15, 16. צִלְעָה, halting, and נִדְרָה, driven away, cast out, express the deplorable circumstances of the Jews during the dispersion; and the verbal forms indicate that such shall be their condition till the time of restoration. The illustrious character of that restoration, however, shall redound to the celebrity of the covenant people in all the countries where they have been the objects of reproach and ignominy. אֶרֶץ, land, is used collectively for אֲרָצוֹת, lands, and אֶרֶץ בְּשִׁמְתָהּ, the land of their shame, means the countries in which they have been the objects of contumely and disgrace. Ezek. xxxiv. 29. The occurrence of the article in אֶרֶץ, which is in construction with בְּשִׁמְתָהּ, is contrary to rule, but is otherwise not without examples. See Josh. iii. 17; 1 Sam. ii. 13; 2 Kings vii. 13. In such cases, however, the article is generally repeated before the following noun. See Josh. viii. 11; Jer. xxv. 26. Some would account for the irregularity by an understood repetition of the noun, thus, אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ בְּשִׁמְתָהּ.

20. After אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ supply אֶרֶץ אֶרֶץ. The ו in וְאֶרֶץ is exegetical. The period of the reintroduction of the Jews into their own land is here rendered distinguishingly prominent by repeated and pointed reference. So wonderful, however, shall be the circumstances connected with the event, that they shall scarcely believe it when it happens, how greatly and how long soever they may have desired it. Jehovah, to remove all doubts, declares that he will bring it about before their eyes; i. e. it shall certainly become the object of their delightful contemplation.

H A G G A I .

---

PREFACE.

It is generally thought that the prophet Haggai was among the Hebrew exiles who returned with Zerubbabel, and Joshua the high priest, from Babylon in the year B. C. 536, when Cyrus granted them their liberty, and ordered them to be furnished with what was necessary for the restoration of the temple at Jerusalem. His book itself vouches for the fact that he prophesied in the reign of Darius Hystaspis, who ascended the Persian throne B. C. 521. Having been interrupted in building the temple by an interdict, which the Samaritans obtained from Smerdis the usurper, the Jews became in some measure indifferent to the work; and when Darius came to the throne, an event which must have deprived the prohibition of all authority, instead of vigorously recommencing their labors, the more influential persons among them pretended that, as the prophecy of the seventy years applied to the temple as well as to the captivity in Babylon, and they were only yet in the sixty-eighth year, the proper time for rebuilding it had not arrived, and gave their whole attention to the erection of splendid mansions for themselves.

To rouse them from their selfish indifference to the claims of religion, Haggai and Zechariah were commissioned, in the second year of Darius, i. e. B. C. 520, to deliver to them rousing appeals from Jehovah. These appeals had the desired effect, and the work proceeded with vigor.

The book is made up of five messages, which were all delivered, at successive periods, within the short space of three months. They are so exceedingly brief, that they are, not without reason, supposed to be only a summary or epitome of the original discourses.

The style of Haggai is not distinguished by any peculiar excellence; yet he is not destitute of pathos and vehemence, when reproving his countrymen for their negligence, and exhorting them to the performance of duty. To these, the interrogatory form which he frequently adopts, in no small degree contributes. He is not without elevation when predicting the future. Certain portions of the book are purely historical; and the rest, though exhibiting more or less of the parallelism of members which characterizes the usual prophetic style, are but faintly rhythmical. The phrases, נָאֵם יְהוָה, שִׁיטוֹ לְבַבְכֶם; אָבְאוּת נָאֵם יְהוָה, are frequently repeated. נָאֵם יְהוָה occurs not less than thrice in a single verse, chap. ii. 4.

בְּמַהוּ בְּאֵר, ii. 3; אֶצְרַת מְזַט, ii. 6; אֵיךְ אֶתְרָם, ii. 16, are peculiar, and indicate the Chaldee age.

CHAPTER I.

THE prophet calls the attention of the principal civil and ecclesiastical authorities to the negligence of the people in not building the temple, 1—4; directs that of the people to this as the cause of their want of outward prosperity, 5—11; and subjoins a notice respecting the success with which the delivery of his message was accompanied.

1 IN the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, on the first day of the month, the word of the Lord was communicated through Haggai the prophet to Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying:

1. The Darius here mentioned is Darius the son of Hystaspis, of the family of the Achæmenidæ, who, in consequence of an oracle, was raised to the throne of Persia, on the death of the usurper Smerdis, B. C. 521, and reigned thirty-six years. That this must be the monarch intended is obvious from the facts, that Darius the Mede, mentioned Dan. v. 31, ix. 1, lived before the return of the Jews from Babylon; and that Darius Nothus and Darius Codomannus flourished, the former ninety-three years after the completion of the temple, and the latter at a much later period. Darius Hystaspis is represented by Herodotus as a mild and benevolent ruler. He protected the Jews from the opposition of their enemies, and carried into effect the edict of Cyrus, Ezra vi. The name דַּרְיָוֶשׁ, Daryavesh, or, as it appears in the cuneiform inscriptions of Persepolis, Daryavous, is derived by Lassen (üb. d. Keilform. Inschriften, p. 158), from the root darh, to preserve, with the affirmative awu, the s being the sign of the nominative; and thus signifies conservator. Comp. Herodotus, vi. 98, where the signification ἐργετής, coercer, is given to the name. The date in the prophecy is taken from the reign of this monarch, because at the time he swayed his sceptre over all the countries with which the Jews were brought into contact, from Lybia in Egypt, and the frontiers of Europe, to the Oxus and the Indus on the east. The months specified by Haggai and Zechariah are those not of the Persian, but of the Hebrew year. See Zech. i. 7, vii. 1, viii. 19. Zerubbabel, whose Chaldee name was Sheshbazzar, Ezra i. 8, v. 14; comp. v. 16, iii. 8, 10, was the grandson (נְבִיָּהּ is used by Haggai in its more extended signification) of Shealtiel, of the royal house of David, 1 Chron. iii. 9—19. Cyrus committed to his care the sacred vessels of the temple, and appointed him governor of the colony which returned to Judea. The title of פְּתָחָה, prefect or governor, by which he is designated, is applied to persons bearing rule in provinces or divisions of the Persian empire of less extent and importance than satrapies. Comp. the Præcit. Pakkha, and the present Turkish Pasha, though the latter word, باشا, Basha, is rather to be referred to باش, Bash, head, commander, ruler. Joshua the high priest is repeatedly mentioned in the book of Zechariah, as presiding over the Jewish affairs at the same time with Zerubbabel. That הַגִּבּוֹר הַגָּדוֹל, the high priest, is to be connected, not with the more proximate, but with the more remote noun, i. e. with יְהוֹשֻׁעַ, Joshua, is clear, not only from the sim-

- 2 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :
 This people say, The time is not come,
 The time for the house of Jehovah to be built.
- 3 Yea, the word of Jehovah was communicated through Haggai the prophet, saying :
- 4 Is it time for you, O ye,
 To dwell in your wainscoted houses,
 And this house lie waste ?
- 5 Now, therefore, thus saith Jehovah of hosts :
 Consider your ways.
- 6 Ye have sown much, but brought in little ;
 Ye have eaten, but not had enough ;
 Ye have drunk, but not to the full ;
 Ye have put on clothing, but none is warm ;

ilar coherence of תָּהָה, but from all other instances in which offices and genealogical statements are blended.

2. Simple as are the words אֵל זֶרַע בָּא " עֵת וְגו', the construction is somewhat difficult, owing to the position of the infinitive בָּא. Either we must, with Hitzig, give to the former זֶרַע the points זֶרַע=הִזְרַע, now, as in Ps. lxxiv. 6 ; Ezek. xxiii. 43 ; or convert בָּא into בִּיא of the preterite, as one of De Rossi's MSS. reads, and agreeably to the rendering of the LXX., Syr., Vulg., Targ., and Arab. ; or, what is preferable, regard בָּא as put absolutely for the purpose of more emphatically expressing the sentiment that the time was not yet really come in which to erect the temple. As two of the seventy years' captivity had yet to elapse, the colony which had arrived at Jerusalem encouraged themselves in their neglect of present duty, by assuming that the building of the temple was included in the calculation, and that, till the full time had expired, they were under no obligation to recommence the work.

4. Repeating the word זֶרַע, time, which he had employed twice, verse 2, the prophet makes an appeal full of point and cogency to those whom he addresses. The use of עֵת before זֶרַע adds to the force of the language. נִשְׁפָּט signifies to cover, cover over, wainscot, or overlay with boards, so that what is predicated of the houses is not to be confined to the ceiling, but must be extended to the walls which were thus covered, at once for comfort and ornament. How beautifully the feelings of David, 2 Sam. vii. 2, contrast with those of the persons reproved by Haggai.

5. The וְ in וְתָהָה is inferential, while תָּהָה is employed, not in its temporal acceptance, but argumentatively, as in Ps. ii. 10. שִׁימוּ לְבַבְכֶם עַל-דְּרֹתַי, lit. place your heart upon your ways, an idiomatic, but very expressive mode of speech. Comp. ver. 7, and ii. 18, twice, in the elliptical form שִׁימוּ לְבַבְכֶם.

6. הִבֵּא, לְבִי, וְשָׂתָה, וְלִבְרָשׁ, are historical infinitives, which carry forward the force of the finite form in וְזָרַעְתֶּם at the commencement of the verse, and, at the same time, give a greater degree of prominence to the actions which they express. Nothing prospered, and nothing could be expected to prosper, while the Jews were living in the flagrant neglect of their duty. They had brought property with them from Babylon, with which they had erected splendid houses for themselves, but God blasted their agricultural and other expectations ; and they had nothing in prospect but a sea-

And he that earneth wages, earneth them
To put them into a purse with holes.

7 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:

Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood,
And build the house, and I will take pleasure in it,
That I may be glorified, saith Jehovah.

9 Ye looked for much, but, behold! little;
And ye brought it home, and I blew upon it.

Wherefore? saith Jehovah of hosts.

Because of my house which lieth waste,
And ye run each to his own house.

10 Therefore, it is on your account the heavens withhold the dew,
And the earth withholdeth her produce.

11 And I have called for drought, son of scarcity and want. The necessities of life were already become so dear, that those who wrought for day's wages parted with all that they earned, as if they had put it into a bag or purse with holes. נִקְרָב, bored or perforated.

7. A reiteration of the exhortation contained in ver. 5.

8. The reason why the Jews are called to provide wood only is thought by Jerome to be, that the walls of the temple remained standing; but this hypothesis is contradicted by repeated statements in the books of Ezra and Zechariah, as well as in Haggai ii. 18, in which express mention is made of laying its foundations. It rather seems to have been on account of the time which would be necessary to procure the article in question from Lebanon, since it required first to be hewn down, and afterwards transported by sea to Joppa. By הַהָר, the mountain, Rosenmüller thinks Moriah is meant; Hitzig, the mountainous country in the vicinity of Jerusalem; but it is more natural to interpret the term of Lebanon, whence the wood was actually fetched. It is true the Jews themselves did not go to that mountain for the timber; it was conveyed by the Zidonians and Tyrians, Ezra iii. 7; but persons are often said to do what they perform through the instrumentality of others. For וְאָכְבֵּר, the textual reading, which should be pointed וְאָכְבֵּר, the Keri has וְאָכְבֵּר. The copula וְ marks here the end to be obtained, or the result that would follow the performance of the enjoined duty. In such cases the future has the force of a potential mood.

9. וְעָמַדְתִּי, the infinitive absolute, as in ver. 6. Even the small crop which was reaped had no sooner been brought into the barns or granaries, than it was dissipated. Their running each to his own house is expressive of the eagerness with which the Jews pursued their own affairs, and sought for self-indulgence. וְיָרָדְתִּי and וְיָרָדְתִּי stand here in striking contrast.

10. וְעַל־כֵּן is not to be referred to the heavens, and so rendered over you, but on your account, for your sake. Comp. וְעַל־כֵּן בְּגַלְתִּי, Micah iii. 12. The meaning is, on account of your neglecting to build the temple. The preposition in וְעַל, following וְעַל, signifies with respect to, but does not require to be translated.

11. In the use of הָרֵב, drought, there is an obvious reference to הָרֵב, dry, waste, desolate, verses 4 and 9. They form a paronomasia. The lengthened

Upon the land, and upon the mountains,
 Upon the grain, and upon the new wine,
 Upon the oil, and upon what the ground bringeth forth,
 Upon man and upon beast,
 And upon all the labor of the hands.

- 12 Then Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua, the son of Josedech the high priest, and all the residue of the people, hearkened to the voice of Jehovah their God, and to the words of Haggai the prophet, according as Jehovah their God had sent him; and the people feared Jehovah.
- 13 Then spake Haggai, the messenger of Jehovah, in the message of Jehovah to the people:
 I am with you, saith Jehovah.
- 14 And Jehovah stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua, the son of Josedech the high priest, and the spirit of all the rest of the people, and they came and did the work in the house of
- 15 Jehovah of hosts, their God, on the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king.

amplification is employed in order to add to the force of the threatening. The LXX., supposing it to be incongruous to speak of bringing a drought upon man and beast, read הַרְבַּ instead of הָרֶב, and rendered the word by μάχαιραν, a sword, not adverting to the circumstance that the latter term was still less applicable to the other subjects here enumerated. What the prophet threatens is a universal drought, the effects of which would specially be experienced by living creatures.

12. The prophet now describes the happy effect which was produced by the message which he had just delivered. All the people who had returned united with their rulers in rendering obedience to the Divine command.

13. To encourage them to proceed in the path of obedience on which they had entered, Haggai delivers to them the brief, but most cheering promise, אֲנִי אֶהְיֶה בְּתוֹכְכֶם, I am with you, saith Jehovah.

14. הִנֵּנִי רוּחַ, to excite, or stir up the spirit of any one (comp. Ezra i. 1, 5), means to render him inclined effectively to undertake the performance of any act, or to pursue a certain line of conduct.

15. From the date here assigned it appears, that most of the month elapsed before the work was fairly undertaken. Several of the early editions of the Hebrew Bible, as also the London Polyglot, improperly place this verse at the beginning of the next chapter.

CHAPTER II.

THIS chapter contains three different oracles of the prophet. The first, designed to encourage the people and their leaders to proceed with the building of the temple, by considerations derived from the Divine presence, 1-4; from their national covenant continuing in force, and that of the prophetic and gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, 5; from the advent of the person and kingdom of the Messiah, 6, 7; and from the universal proprietorship of Jehovah, the glory of the Messiah, and the reconciliation which he should effect, 8, 9. The second oracle cautions them against intermission in their labors, by showing that if they did so, nothing they did could be acceptable to God, 11-14; and by referring them to the infelicitous state of their affairs before the late revival, 15-18; and promises them prosperity, 19. The third is addressed to Zerubbabel individually, to animate and encourage him in conducting the work.

-
- 1 IN the seventh month, on the twenty-first day of the month, the word of Jehovah was communicated through Haggai the
  - 2 prophet, saying: Speak now to Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, the governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high priest, and to the rest of the people, saying:
  - 3 Who is there among you that remaineth,
That saw this house in its former glory?
And how do ye see it now?
Is it not, compared with it, as nothing in your eyes?
  - 4 Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel! saith Jehovah;
And be strong, O Joshua! son of Josedech, the high priest;
Be ye strong, also, all ye people of the land!
Saith Jehovah of hosts, and work:
For I am with you, saith Jehovah of hosts.
  - 5 The covenant which I made with you,

1, 2. This oracle was delivered nearly a month after the rebuilding of the temple had commenced, and was evidently designed to remove the despondency in which some of the people indulged, and to animate them to prosecute the work.

3. It appears from Ezra iii. 13, that there were many present at the laying of the foundation of the second temple, who had seen the first. To such of them as were still alive, few as they must have been, Haggai appeals respecting the disparity between the two, in regard to the rough and unpromising appearance of the new structure, contrasted with the elegant and splendid aspect of that of Solomon, previous to its destruction by the Chaldeans. אֲנִי וְאַתֶּם is not in apposition with בְּיָמָי, but connects with the interrogative אֲנִי. The phrase אֲנִי וְאַתֶּם is peculiar, but not difficult of resolution, the word for temple being understood.

4. The comparison instituted in the preceding verse, so far from being designed to discourage those to whom the appeal was made, was on the contrary intended to inspire them with confidence in their covenant God, whose prerogative it is to call things that are not as though they were. It is tacitly implied, that whatever might be the estimate they might make of the work, it was very different with respect to his. Comp. Zech. viii. 6. And what is here only implied is expressly declared ver. 9.

5. The government of אֶתְּרֵיבְרָא has

When ye went forth out of Egypt,
And my Spirit remain among you :
Fear not.

6 For thus saith Jehovah of hosts :

Yet once, within a little,
And I will shake the heavens, and the earth,
And the sea, and the dry land, unnecessarily puzzled interpreters. Ewald thinks the sentence is incomplete, and would supply זָכְרוּ, remember. Hengstenberg actually supplies the word in a parenthesis. Maurer endeavors to make it out to be an accusative modi s. normæ, and explains, secundum illud verbum: and connects it with the preceding verse, thus: I am with you, according to that word, etc.; and so our own translators, after Calvin. Rosenmüller would supply אֶת־הַבְּרִית from the preceding verse. The participle אֶת־אֲנִי I consider to be prefixed to הַבְּרִית, in order to give it a greater degree of prominence, and to be equivalent to that or the same covenant, etc.; while אֶת־הַבְּרִית, together with רִנְהוּי, form the nominative to the participle עֲמָנָה; only, as separated from it by the intervening predicate "אֲשֶׁר בְּרַחֲמֵי וְגו', the participle is put in the feminine singular, to agree with רִנְהוּי, the nearer antecedent. For this use of אֶת before the nominative, though rare, see Neh. ix. 19. הָעֶנְנָה לֹא־סָר מֵאֶת־עַמּוּדָהּ, the pillar of cloud did not depart, etc.; ver. 34, וְאֶת־מַלְכֵינוּ לֹא־עָשָׂה — And our kings have not kept, etc.: Dan. ix. 13, אֵת בְּלִי־הַקֶּרֶשׁ הַזֶּה אֵת בָּאָה עָלֵינוּ, All this evil hath come upon us. הַבְּרִית, word or matter, is here employed to denote the Sinaic Covenant, as the accompanying verb בְּרַחֲמָה, to cut, or make a covenant obviously shows. Notwithstanding the flagrant violation of that covenant of which the Jews had been guilty, on account of which they had been punished in Babylon, it still continued in all its force. They possessed it in its written form, and thus had the pledge which Jehovah had given them, that he was their covenant God, and would confer blessings upon the obedient. They also had his רִנְהוּי, the spirit of inspiration in the prophets who were raised up in the midst of them to declare his will, and call to the discharge of duty, Ezra, v. 1; and of efficient influence to induce them to listen to, and enable them to comply with such call, Zech. iv. 6; Hag. i. 14.

6. In this and the following verse the Jews are encouraged to proceed with the work by the assurance that Jehovah would, as the Governor among the nations, in a brief space, exert his Almighty power in effecting a great revolution in the state of the kingdoms of this world, preparatory to the establishment of the kingdom of the Messiah. This mighty change is first described in the usual figurative language of prophecy, as a convulsion of the physical universe, and then literally as a convulsion of all nations. In the phrase עוֹד אֶתֶּר מְעַט, it is only the numeral אֶתֶּר which occasions any difficulty. The combination עוֹד מְעַט, yet a little, i. e. time, occurs more than once. See Ps. xxxvii. 10; Is. xxix. 17; Jer. li. 33. But that here presented being peculiar to this passage, naturally suggests some peculiarity in the meaning. Most supply עֲשֵׂה, time, after the LXX. ἔτι ἄπαξ, quoted and reasoned upon, Heb. xii. 26, 27, and the Syr. ܐܬܪܐ ܕܥܝܢܐ. Comp. for אֶתֶּר עֲשֵׂה, one time, once, Josh. vi. 3; 1 Sam. xxvi. 8; and for the ellipsis of עֲשֵׂה, where אֶתֶּר stands by itself, as here, Exod. xxx. 10; Job. xl. 5; Ps. lxii. 12, lxxxix. 36. And certainly, as מְעַט, little, is designed to express brevity of time,

7 Yea, I will shake all the nations,
And the things desired by all the nations shall come;

nothing can be more appropriate than such construction. Hengstenberg labors hard to bring the idea of brevity of time out of  $\text{רוּחַ}$ , but fails to produce any examples to confirm his hypothesis. What the prophet has in view appears to be the convulsions which were yet to take place in the Persian and Greek empires, some of which were soon to commence, but all of which were more proximately, or more remotely connected with the complete establishment of the Jews in their own land, and the splendor of their temple as erected by Herod. The previous convulsion, implied in the phrase yet once, does not appear to be the shaking, etc., which took place at the giving of the law on Sinai, but the violent change which had lately taken place in the condition of the Babylonian empire, just as that yet to come is not to be extended to the downfall of the Roman empire, the destruction of Antichrist, etc., but must be confined to events which were to happen before the coming of Christ. We have only to call to mind the wars of the Persians in Asia Minor, Greece, Egypt, and other parts; and those of Alexander and his successors which followed, till the period when the establishment of the power of the Romans at length gave peace to the world, in order to read, in legible characters, the fulfilment of the present prophecy. Nor does the comment of the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews require any other application of it. His object is to show that the dispensation or kingdom of the Messiah is stable and immovable; and in order to illustrate his point, he introduces, by way of contrast, the natural phenomena which took place on the promulgation of the Sinaic covenant, as described by Moses, and the political phenomena predicted by Haggai, all of which indicated the mutable character of the elements upon which they were exerted. That the prophet intended to include the dissolution of the Jewish state in his prediction, does not appear; indeed, the reference to such an event must have increased the despondency of his people, instead of inspiring them with hope and courage, which formed his only object in addressing them.

7. Having figuratively set forth the great political changes which were still to take place among the nations before the introduction of the kingdom of the Messiah, Haggai here repeats his prediction in literal terms, and then at once announces the arrival of the eagerly expected blessings of that kingdom. The passage has long been regarded as one of the principal prophecies relative to the time of the Redeemer's advent. That it was so applied by some of the early Jewish Rabbins, is undeniable. Thus in the chapter of the Talmudic treatise Sanhedrin, entitled  $\text{הַלֵּק}$ , the following interpretation is given as that of Rabbi Akiba, who flourished before the time of Jerome: מעט מלכות אתך להם לישראל לאחר חרבך ולאחר איתו מלכות הנני מרעיש שמים וארץ ויבא משיח, For a little I will give the kingdom to Israel, after our desolation, and after the kingdom, behold I will shake heaven and earth, and MESSIAH SHALL COME. The rendering of the Vulg. supports the same view: "Et veniet Desideratus cunctis Gentibus." Leo Juda: "Et veniet qui desideratur ab omnibus gentibus." Dathe: "Et deinde veniet gentibus omnibus expetendus." On the other hand, Kimchi, Vatablus, Calvin, Ribera, Drusus, Gataker, Vitringa, and others, render: "The Gentiles shall come with their delightful things," i. e. their silver, gold, precious stones, etc. Some, violently, "Come to the desire," etc., meaning thereby Jerusalem. Most of the moderns, rejecting this construction as altogether unwarranted, translate after the LXX.  $\eta\lambda\epsilon\iota\tau\alpha\ \epsilon\kappa\lambda\epsilon\kappa\tau\alpha\ \pi\acute{\alpha}\nu\tau\omega\upsilon\ \tau\acute{\alpha}\nu\ \epsilon\delta\upsilon\lambda\acute{\omega}\nu$ , "the choice things," or "the pleas-

And I will fill this house with glory,
Saieth Jehovah of hosts.

ant things of all nations shall come." Ewald: "dass die liebsten aller Völker kommen:" i. e. "That the most lovely of all people may come." Hengstenberg, who renders, "the beauty of all the heathen," is at great pains in endeavoring to make good his translation, which he interprets of what he says is always beautiful among them — all their costly good things. But he fails alike in his attempt to set aside the idea of desire as expressed by  $\text{הַמְּדֵה}$ , and in that to prove that the prophet here foretells the rich contributions which the heathen would bring into the church. That the root  $\text{מְדָה}$ , primarily and most commonly signifies to desire or covet, both in a good and a bad sense, must be evident to every one who will take the trouble to consult the Hebrew concordance; and that  $\text{הַמְּדֵה}$ , which is derived from it, signifies desire, an object of desire, see the Lexicons of Gesenius and Lee. This acceptance must be vindicated to 1 Sam. ix. 20.  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$   $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$ ; to 2 Chron. xxi. 20,  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$   $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$ ; and to Dan. xi. 37,  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$   $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$ . The want of concord in  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$   $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$ , the verb expressing the predicate, being in the plural masculine, while  $\text{הַמְּדֵה}$ , the subject of the proposition, is in the singular feminine, occasions no small difficulty, and presents an insuperable objection to the usual Messianic interpretation. That  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$  should have been produced by zeugma with  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$ , is totally unsupported by analogy, just as a plural of excellence in verbs is equally without example. The only practicable solution warranted by grammatical usage, consists in assuming  $\text{הַמְּדֵה}$  to be a collective noun, conveying a plural idea, the gender of which not having yet presented itself to the mind of the prophet when he enunciated the verb, he naturally expressed it in the masculine as the more worthy gender. The construction in such cases is ad sen- sum; i. e. it is not formal, but logical. The proper translation, therefore, of  $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$   $\text{בְּלִמְדֵהוּ}$  will be, And, or, And then the things desired by all nations shall come. The Genitive being the Genitive of object, must be thus expressed. Now these objects of desire on the part of all nations, cannot mean their riches, for no such riches were brought to Jerusalem by all the nations — the gifts bestowed by some few of the heathen princes after the time of Alexander not in any degree exhausting the force of the language here employed. Neither could the prospect of contributions in more remote future time have operated in the way of encouragement upon the minds of those whom the prophet addressed, so as to induce them to proceed with their work. The objects in question, therefore, must have been of a higher order —  $\text{τὰ μελλόντα ἀγαθά}$ , the good things to come, i. e. the blessings of the New Covenant. There was found to pervade the minds of the heathen, a deep and dark feeling of the necessity of supernatural light and influence. Bewildered in the mazes of error and superstition, they could find nothing satisfactory respecting the Divine Being, pardon, emancipation from the power of moral evil, and a future state of existence; and more or less earnestly desired to obtain information in regard to these important and necessary points. To adduce only one testimony from among many to be found in ancient pagan writers. Socrates, endeavoring to satisfy the mind of Alcibiades on the subject of acceptable worship, says:  $\text{ἀναγκαῖον οὖν ἐστὶ περιμένειν ἕως ἄν τις μάθῃ ὡς δεῖ πρὸς θεοῦ καὶ πρὸς ἀνθρώπων διακεῖσθαι}$ . It is therefore necessary to wait till some one may teach us how it behooves us to conduct ourselves, both towards the gods and men. To which Alcibiades responds:  $\text{πότε οὖν παρέσται ὁ χρόνος οὗτος ὃ Σώκρατες; καὶ τίς ὁ παιδεύων; ἥδιστα γὰρ ἂν μοι δοκῶ ἰδεῖν τοῦτον τὸν ἀνθρώπον}$

8 Mine is the silver, and mine is the gold,
Saith Jehovah of hosts.

9 The glory of this latter house shall be greater than that of the former,
Saith Jehovah of hosts.

τις ἐστω ; When shall that time arrive, O Socrates? and who shall that Teacher be? for most eagerly do I wish to see such a man. — Plato, Alcibiades, ii. near the end. And, as the time of the Redeemer's advent drew near, there was a general expectation of a Teacher and Deliverer, not only in the Jewish nation, but throughout the world. To Christ, as the Light of the world, and to the spiritual blessings which flow through his mediation, the prophecy strictly applies; and, with this reference, was admirably calculated to stimulate the Jews to perseverance in building the temple, with which was inseparably connected the restoration of their ancient polity, during the existence of which the Messiah was to appear. The "glory" with which the temple was to be filled, was not the rich and splendid furniture, etc., but a resplendence, consisting in the manifestation of Jehovah himself. Comp. Zech. ii. 5, with Ezek. xliii. 4, 5; Exod. xl. 34, 35; 1 Kings viii. 11.

8. The Jews needed to be under no concern about the means requisite for the erection of the temple. The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof, so that whatever amount of earthly riches was wanted, he would in his providence supply. The declaration contained in this verse is introduced parenthetically, to relieve their minds from any momentary anxiety, arising out of the circumstances in which, as a poor and despised people, they were placed.

9. The LXX. refer the terms הַבַּיִת הַזֶּה, the latter, and הַבַּיִת הַהוּא, the former, not to הַבַּיִת הַזֶּה, this house, but to הַבְּרָזָה, the glory. And thus Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald; but Ezra iii. 12, determines to the contrary. The glory here predicted was to be greater than that of the former temple, not merely in degree, but in kind. That the second temple, even as renewed and beautified by Herod, at all equalled in magnificence that of Solomon, there is no reason to believe. This must appear on comparing the description given of the former by Josephus, Antiq. Jud. lib. xv. cap. xi., with that furnished of the latter, 1 Kings vi. vii. 13—50. In point of size, indeed, the temple of Herod exceeded the structure erected by the celebrated Jewish monarch; but this was all. The statement made by Josephus, Bell. Jud. lib. vi. cap. iv. 8, that it was the most admirable of all the works he had seen or heard of, does not include Solomon's temple, but has respect to other erections in different parts of the world. But if the second house was inferior in point of sumptuousness to the former, and wanted, as the Jews admit, the Urim and Thummim, the ark, the pot of manna, Aaron's rod, and the visible glory, which was the symbol of the Divine presence, it follows that the greater glory by which it was to be distinguished, must denote something altogether different in kind, and which could only be supplied by Him, in whose person the glory of God appeared, 2 Cor. iv. 6, who is the "Brightness of the Divine glory," Heb. i. 2; whose glory was beheld as that of the only-begotten of the Father, John i. 14; who could say of himself, "that in this place is one greater than the temple," Matt. xii. 6; and who sat in it daily teaching, Matt. xxvi. 55. In support of this interpretation, and indeed of the Messianic character of the entire prophecy, ver. 7, 9, the declaration made in the concluding clause of the latter verse may with all propriety be adduced. When "peace" is spoken of in an absolute sense, in the prophets, it

And in this place I will give peace,
Saieth Jehovah of hosts.

- 10 On the twenty-fourth of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, the word of Jehovah was communicated through 11 Haggai the prophet, saying: Thus saith Jehovah of hosts: Ask now the priests as to the law, saying: If any one should carry 12 sacred flesh in the skirt of his garment, and touch with his skirt bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any eatable, shall it be 13 holy? And the priests answered and said, No. Then said Haggai: If any one who is unclean on account of a dead body, should touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests 14 answered and said, It shall be unclean. Then Haggai continued, and said:

Thus hath this people, and thus hath this nation been,
Before me, saith Jehovah;

denotes the reconciliation between God and sinful men, to be effected by the Messiah. Comp. Is. ix. 6, 7, liii. 5, lvii. 19; Micah v. 5; Zech. vi. 13; with Luke ii. 14; Acts x. 36; Rom. v. 1; Eph. ii. 14, 17. This peace was to be granted הַיְהוָה בְּמִקְוֵי הַיְהוָה, in this place, i. e. in Jerusalem. It was there the Messiah made peace through the blood of his cross, Col. i. 20. It has with some been matter of dispute, whether the temple erected by Zerubbabel, and that built by Herod, are to be regarded as identical, or whether the latter is not to be considered as a third temple. Strictly and architecturally considered, that of Herod was entirely new, for he caused that of Zerubbabel to be taken down to the very foundations; but in the popular and religious language they were identical; just as Josephus speaks of those built by Solomon and Zerubbabel as one, Bell. Jud. lib. vi. cap. iv. 8. Accordingly nothing is more customary than for Jewish writers to speak of only the first and the second temple. In the present verse, Haggai is to be understood as speaking in an architectural sense, inasmuch as the second temple was then being actually built.

10. This prophecy was delivered rather more than two months after that contained in the preceding verses of the chapter.

11—13. To convince his countrymen of the impossibility of their conduct being well-pleasing to God, and of their obtaining his blessing, while in any one point they neglected to comply with his will, the prophet directs them to consult the priests on two legal questions; the one, relative to the communication of ceremonial sanctity to any object, by its having been brought in contact with what had been sanctified; and the other, respecting the communication of ceremonial impurity by one who was himself impure. The former was denied; the latter affirmed. Whatever the Jews might otherwise rightly perform, would not compensate for their neglect in building the temple; on the contrary, their neglect in this matter would taint or vitiate all their other actions. Comp. in illustration of these questions, Lev. vi. 27; Numb. vi. 6, xix. 13; in which latter passages the abbreviated form שֶׁנֶּזֶק, a dead body, is expressed in full by שֶׁנֶּזֶק מֵת, or by שֶׁנֶּזֶק מֵת מֵאִשׁוֹת וְיָמֵי וְיָמֵי.

14. The application of the legal decisions of the priests to the case of the Jews, who had neglected the building of the temple. It describes them, not as they

- And thus hath been every work of their hands,
 And what they have offered there hath been unclean.
- 15 And now consider, I beseech you,
 From this day and backward,
 Before one stone was laid upon another
 In the temple of Jehovah.
- 16 Since these days were,
 One came to a heap of twenty sheaves,
 And there were but ten ;
 One came to the vat to draw fifty purahs,
 And there were but twenty.
- 17 I smote you with blight, and mildew, and hail,
 In all the labors of your hands ;
 Yet ye turned not to me,
 Saith Jehovah.
- 18 Consider, I beseech you,
 From this day backward,
 From the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month,
 From the day when the temple of Jehovah was founded,
 Consider !
- 19 Is the seed still in the granary ?

now were, engaged in the work, but as they had been, and is designed to put them upon their guard against falling back into the same state. The adverb  $\text{שָׁם}$ , there, points graphically to the altar, which had been erected at Jerusalem, and which was, in all probability, within view of the audience which the prophet addressed. Ezra iii. 3.

15—17. The Jews are earnestly exhorted to reflect upon the state of their affairs during the period in which they had intermitted the work. God had frowned upon them, and rendered them infelicitous.  $\text{מַעֲלָה}$ , a substantive, with the local  $\text{ה}$ , used adverbially. Properly it signifies upward, being derived from  $\text{עָלָה}$ , to ascend; but used, as here, of time, it means back, backwards. In  $\text{הַיּוֹמֹת}$ , the word  $\text{יָמִים}$ , days, is understood.  $\text{בָּא}$  is to be taken impersonally. At  $\text{עֲרַמַת עֲשָׂרִים}$ , a heap of twenty, supply  $\text{אֶלְמָוִת}$  or  $\text{עֲמָרִים}$ , sheaves.  $\text{פַּחַה}$ , which is used for the wine-press itself,

Is. lxiii. 3, is here employed to denote a liquid measure in which the wine was drawn out. LXX.  $\mu\epsilon\tau\rho\eta\eta\tau\acute{\eta}\varsigma$ . The quantity being unknown, I have retained the original word. For ver. 17, comp. Amos iv. 9, where we have the words  $\text{לֹא-שׁוּבָתֶם עָרִי}$ , ye turned not unto me, instead of  $\text{אֵין-אָתְּם אֵלַי}$ , used by Haggai, in which there is an ellipsis of the participle  $\text{שׁוּבִים}$ . For this use of  $\text{אָל}$ , as a nominative, or as indicating the subject of discourse, see on ver. 5. In ver. 18, the exhortation is once and again reiterated for the sake of effect; and to render it still more definite, the exact date is added to the formula  $\text{הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה}$ , this day, which had been employed ver. 15.  $\text{מַעֲלָה}$  is here to be taken, as in that verse, in reference to past time, and not, as the Vulg., Hitzig, etc., in reference to the future.

19. To the question put at the beginning of the verse, a negative is to be given. The seed was no longer in the

And as yet the vine, and the fig-tree,
 And the pomegranate, and the olive have borne nothing;
 From this day will I bestow the blessing.

- 20 And the word of Jehovah was communicated a second time to Haggai on the twenty-fourth day of the month, saying :
 21 Speak to Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, saying :
 I will shake the heavens and the earth,
 22 I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms,
 I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the nations,
 And overthrow the chariots and those who ride in them ;
 The horses, also, and their riders shall come down,
 Each by the sword of another.
 23 In that day, saith Jehovah of hosts,
 I will take thee, O Zerubbabel ! the son of Shealtiel,
 My servant, saith Jehovah,

granary. It had been sown in the course of the month, and there were no signs of its springing up any more than there were of the produce of the fruit-trees. Jehovah had formerly blasted their harvest ; but now that the people were diligently engaged in building his temple, they might confidently calculate upon one of plenty. He gives them a positive promise to this effect. The repetition of בְּיָמֵינוּ הַיּוֹם, from this day, which had been twice used in the preceding verses, gives emphasis to the declaration. עַד, usually signifying until, is here employed in the sense of while, or as yet, as in Judges iii. 26 ; 2 Kings ix. 22 ; Job. i. 18, where it corresponds to עַד in verses 16 and 17.

20—23. These verses contain a special message to Zerubbabel, in which there is a repetition of the prediction, somewhat amplified, respecting the revolutions that were about to take place, which had been delivered in verses 6 and 7. In ver. 22, the verb יָרַד, to go or come down, is equivalent to נָפַל, to fall. That the promise made, ver. 23, cannot be viewed as having respect to Zerubbabel in his individual capacity, has been thought to be quite obvious from the fact, that he lived upwards of an hundred years before the time of Alexander, who overturned the Persian throne, and subdued the rest of Asia ; but the predicted convulsions did not commence with the conquests of that monarch. Many of them took place during the reign of Darius, whose arms were carried not only into Scythia, Asia Minor, and Greece, but, according to Herodotus, into India. It is, therefore, not at all improbable that Zerubbabel survived several of these wars, and thus lived in the beginning of הַיּוֹם הַהוּא, that day, or the period in the course of which the prophecy was to be fulfilled ; and as the Persians occasionally experienced serious reverses, as, for instance, in the Scythian expedition, it was natural for the Jews who were under the protection of Darius, to have their minds unsettled by apprehensions respecting the ultimate state of their affairs. To inspire them with confidence, Jehovah here assures their governor of his regard and protection amid all the commotions that might take place in the surrounding nations. אֶתְּךָ, to take, is merely employed for the purpose of introducing the action expressed by the following verb. For אֶתְּךָ אֶפְתָּח בְּחַתְּמוֹתַי, I will place thee as a signet, comp. Song viii. 6 ; Jer. xxii. 24. אֶתְּךָ אֶסְתֵּם, from סָתַם, to seal, or close by sealing, signifies a ring with the seal or signet in it, with which the impression

And will make thee as a signet ;
 For in thee I take pleasure,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts.

was made. Seals were commonly made of silver, but sometimes of the most precious stones, and, consequently, held in high estimation by their owners. Being worn on one of the fingers of the right hand, they were likewise objects of constant inspection and care. In all these points of view Zerubbabel was to be regarded by God. He was to be an object of his incessant care and delight. The latter idea is more definitely expressed by the addition בְּךָ בְּהִרְתִּי — בְּהִרַר, signifying not only to try objects, and then to select what is valuable, but also to take pleasure in what is thus selected.

Z E C H A R I A H.

---

PREFACE.

ZECHARIAH was of a sacerdotal family. His father Berechiah was a son of Iddo, one of the priests who returned with Zerubbabel and Joshua from Babylon. Neh. xii. 4. When he is said to have been the son of Iddo, Ezra v. 1, vi. 14, the word בן is used, according to a common Hebrew idiom, in the sense of grandson. He must have been born in Babylonia, and been young, rather than otherwise, at the time of his arrival in Judea. He was contemporary with Haggai, and, like him, received his prophetic commission in the second year of Darius Hystaspis, B. C. 520, only the latter began his ministry two months earlier. Both prophets were employed in encouraging Zerubbabel and Joshua to carry forward the building of the temple, which had been intermitted through the selfish and worldly spirit of the returned exiles — a spirit which they boldly and variously reprov'd.

The most remarkable portion of the book is that containing the first six chapters. It consists of a series of visions which were vouchsafed to the prophet in the course of a single night, in which, by means of symbolical representations, the dispensations of Divine Providence relative to the nations that had oppressed the Jews, the entire removal of idolatry from the latter, the re-establishment of the city and temple of Jerusalem, and the certainty of the Messiah's advent, were strikingly and impressively revealed.

The next portion contains the seventh and eighth chapters, and contains an answer to a question which the inhabitants of Bethel had proposed respecting the observance of a certain fast, together with important ethical matter necessarily arising out of the subject.

The remaining six chapters contain predictions respecting the expedition of Alexander the Great along the west coast of Palestine to Egypt; the Divine protection of the Jews both at that time, and in that of the Maccabees; the advent, sufferings, and reign of the Messiah; the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and dissolution of the Jewish polity; the sufferings of the Jews during the dispersion; their conversion and restoration; and the sacred character of their worship, in which the Gentiles shall join, after the destruction of the wicked confederacy which will be opposed to their final establishment in Canaan.

The authenticity of this last portion has been, and still is, strongly contested. Not only has it been denied to be the production of Zechariah, but it has been broken up into fragments, the independent authorship of which has been vindicated to as many anonymous authors. The first who ventured upon such a denial was Joseph Mede, whose opinion was adopted by Hammond, Kidder, Whiston, and Bridge, and more recently by Secker and Newcome in this country, and on the continent by Flügge, Döderlein, J. D. Michaelis, Seiler, Eichhorn, Bauer, Bertholdt, Forberg, Rosenmüller, Gramberg, Hitzig, Credner, Maurer, Ewald, and Knobel. The authenticity, on the other hand, has been maintained by Carpzovius, Blaney, Jahn, Beckhaus, Koester, Hengstenberg, and Burger.

The principal objection is taken to the language and character of the materials, as being very different from those which are found to distinguish what is universally allowed to have been written by Zechariah. To this, however, it has been replied, that granting such to be the case, there may have elapsed a long period of time between the composition of the former and latter portions of the book, during which any observable change in the style of the prophet might have taken place. It is evident, from there being no reference whatever in the chapters in question to the completion of the temple and the restoration of the Jewish affairs after the captivity, that, if they had not been written previously, they must have been composed long after these events had become matter of history, and in circumstances altogether different from those which occupied the attention of the prophet at the commencement of his ministry.

That these chapters were written long before, and, indeed, during the existence of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, is a position maintained by most of those who dispute their authenticity; but it is based upon too feeble and precarious a foundation to recommend it to the adoption of any who will impartially examine into all the circumstances of the case. The mere mention of Judah and Ephraim, upon which so much stress is laid, can yield it no real support. Not the smallest hint is anywhere dropped which would lead us to infer the existence, at the time, of a separate political or religious establishment in the northern part of Palestine; nor is there anything, but the contrary, to induce the conclusion that a king reigned in Judah in the days of the author. That Ephraim should be spoken of as existing after the captivity, cannot be matter of surprise, when it is considered, that a very large, if not the larger, portion of the ten tribes availed themselves of the liberty granted by the Persians to the Jews in Babylon, and likewise returned to the land of their fathers. This view of the subject is confirmed by the application of the term "Israel" to all the tribes, chap. xii. 1, just as it is used in the identical formula Mal. i. 1. Compare Mal. ii. 11, 12, iii. 6. The few references to a return relate to those Jews which were in a state of banishment or slavery under the Græco-Syrian and Græco-Egyptian kings. The historical circumstances connected with the Egyptian expedition of Alexander are so strongly marked in the prophetic announcements, that they cannot without violence be identified with any previous events. The absence, too, of the slightest allusion to the Babylonish captivity, either in the way of threatening or warning, while the prophet minutely describes the character of the Jewish rulers, and the condition of the Jewish people, in immediate connection with the sufferings of the Messiah, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the consequent fate of the people, goes convincingly to show that the captivity must have taken place, and that the whole of this portion of the book has respect to times future to those in which he flourished. So strongly, indeed, has this feature of the case presented itself to Eichhorn, and other sharp-sighted critics, that, rejecting, as their neology compelled them to do, all ideas of actual prophecy, they scruple not to affirm that the disputed chapters must have been composed in the days of Alexander, Antiochus, Epiphanes, or Hyrcanus I. It also deserves notice that no reference whatever is made to the existence of royal government among the Jews, at the time the author wrote, or to any circumstances in the history of that people previous to the captivity.

When, therefore, the difference both in regard to time and subject-matter are taken into consideration, it must be regarded as sufficient to account for any difference of style that may be detected. It is, however, after all, a question whether there really does exist such a difference in this respect, as that to which it has become so fashionable to appeal. Be it that the introductory formulas which occur in the first eight chapters do not occur in the last six, the objection, if fully carried out, would go in like manner to dismember the Book of Amos, and assign its composition at least to three different authors. The first two chapters of that prophet, it may be alleged, cannot have been written by the same person that wrote the three which follow, since in the former every prediction is ushered in by the marked formula, "Thus saith Jehovah," whereas in the latter no such formula occurs, but another equally marked: "Hear ye this word." And upon the same principle, the seventh and eighth chapters must have come from the pen of a third writer, since the distinguishing formula there is, "Thus hath Jehovah showed me."

The very peculiar character of the first six chapters of Zechariah, is such as to exclude all comparison of any other portion with it, while the more adorned and poetical style of the concluding chapters, which is so admirably adapted to the subjects treated of, ought equally to be regarded as exempting them from the category of comparison. In these no dates were requisite, though they were in the former, in which they occupy their appropriate place in necessary connection with the events which transpired at the time. With respect to the titles, chap. ix. 1, and xii. 1, they are precisely such as might be expected to mark the strictly prophetic matter to which they are prefixed. The exactly parallel title, Malachi, i. 1, naturally suggests the idea, that they belong to a common period, especially as nothing analogous is found in any of the earlier prophets.

On the whole, I cannot but regard the objections to the authenticity of the disputed chapters as the offspring either of a holy jealousy for the honor of the Evangelist Matthew, who attributes chapter xi. 12, 13, to Jeremiah, and not to Zechariah,* or of a spirit of wanton and unbridled hypercriticism, * See Comment. on the passage.

which would unsettle everything, in order to satisfy the claims of certain favorite principles of interpretation that may happen to be in vogue.

In point of style, our prophet varies, according to the nature of his subjects, and the manner in which they were presented to his mind. He now expresses himself in simple conversational prose, now in poetry. At one time he abounds in the language of symbols; at another in that of direct prophetic announcement. His symbols are, for the most part, enigmatical, and require the explanations which accompany them. His prose resembles most that of Ezekiel; it is diffuse, uniform and repetitious. His prophetic poetry possesses much of the elevation and dignity to be found in the earlier prophets, with whose writings he appears to have been familiar; only his rhythmus is sometimes harsh and unequal, while his parallelisms are destitute of that symmetry and finish, which form some of the principal beauties of Hebrew poetry.

- 4 Be not like your fathers,
 To whom the former prophets cried, saying,
 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:
 Turn now from your evil ways,
 And from your evil practices;
 But they did not hearken,
 Neither did they give heed to me, saith Jehovah.
- 5 As for your fathers, where are they?
 And as for the prophets, do they live forever?
- 6 But my words, and my decrees,
 Which I gave in charge to my servants the prophets, irresistible power of God. The ו in צִבְּיָנָה marks the apodosis, and has the force of and then, or in that case. Comp. James iv. 8.

4. The prophets here referred to are those who lived before the captivity, and the fathers are those who lived in their time, whose wicked practices had brought upon the nation that dire calamity. The appropriation of the phrase צִבְּיָנָה הַקְּדָמִים, the former prophets, as a designation of the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings, is of much later date. The returned Jews are here reminded that the same announcement which was made to them had been made to their ancestors, and that they might have escaped all the evil by a timely repentance, to which Zechariah now urgently calls them. The former ו in צִבְּיָנָה is marked in the margin as redundant, and is omitted in the text of more than twenty MSS. and some printed editions. The plural of צִבְּיָנָה, viz. צִבְּיָנָה, is the only form in which the word occurs. Comp. ver. 6.

5. Jerome refers צִבְּיָנָה to the false prophets by whom the Jews who lived before the captivity had been deceived — an interpretation which appears to have been suggested by Jer. xxxvii. 19: "Where are now your prophets, which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?" The most natural construction of the verse, however, is that which connects it closely with what goes before, and identifies "the prophets" here spoken of with "the former prophets" there mentioned, just as the "fathers" in both verses correspond to each other. The question, אַיִן הֵם, where are they? is equivalent to אֵינֶנּוּ, they are not; i. e. in the land of the living. This the following question clearly shows. In Hebrew, simple interrogatives frequently imply the contrary: so that the language of the prophet is equivalent to "your fathers are no more, neither do the prophets live forever." The latter declaration seems to involve the idea, "but my words never fail," as it follows in ver. 6. This had been proved by the fulfilment of the Divine threatenings in the mournful experience of their fathers, and would again be proved in theirs, except they repented, which idea is amplified in the following verse.

6. אֲדָבָר, my decrees, i. e. my firm and determined purposes to punish your fathers, if they did not repent, which I communicated to them by the prophets. The root is קָטַף, to hack, cut, cut letters, etc., in stone or other hard substances. Thus laws were originally written on tablets, and hung up for public inspection. The confession made in this verse is that which the captives were compelled to make by the sufferings which they endured in Babylon. How far their תַּשׁוּבָה, conversion, extended we are not informed.

Did they not overtake your fathers?
 So that they turned and said,
 According as Jehovah of hosts proposed to do to us,
 According to our ways, and according to our practices,
 So hath he dealt with us.

7 On the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month, which is the month of Shebat, in the second year of Darius, the word of Jehovah was communicated to Zechariah (the son of Berechiah, the son of Iddo), the prophet, saying :

8 I saw by night, and behold a man riding upon a red horse,

It is, however, generally admitted that, as regards the great body of the nation, it involved the entire abandonment of idolatry. That שָׁב is here to be strictly taken as signifying to turn, return from evil to good, and not according to its idiomatic usage before another verb, as simply expressing the repetition of the action described by such verb, is required by the exigency of the passage. שָׁב and שָׁב are correlates; the שָׁב repeated, qualifies a subordinate, but important part of the proposition.

7. From this part of the book to chap. vi. 8, we have a series of eight symbolical visions, the language of which is exceedingly simple, but, in many cases, the interpretation is matter of no small difficulty. The general plan on which it is constructed, is, first to present to view the symbol or hieroglyphic, and then, on a question being put respecting its import, to furnish the interpretation. Though the visions are described as distinct from each other, the one following the other in regular succession, yet they are so closely connected as to form one grand whole; and, as we learn from ver. 8, were all presented to the mind of the prophet in the course of a single night. The period of these nocturnal revelations was between two and three months after the prophet first received his commission. Comp. ver. 1. שֶׁבַט, Shebat, is the eleventh month of the Jewish year, extending from the new moon in February to the new moon in March. Like other names of the months, the word is Chaldee; Syr. مص; Arab. سباط and شباط. The etymology is not certain; but the resemblance of the word to the Hebrew שֶׁבֶט; a shoot, rod, staff, suggests the idea of the month being so called because it was that in which the trees began to put forth their shoots or sprouts. As the following statement does not contain the identical words merely of the communications made to the prophet, but an account of the scenes with all their accompanying circumstances, the formula לְעֵשֶׂה must be taken as signifying, "to the following effect," "as follows," or the like.

VISION I.

8. It has been doubted whether the article הַ in הַיָּלֵךְ is to be regarded as definitely marking the particular night on which the visions were vouchsafed to the prophet, or whether it is not rather to be taken as expressing the adverbial determination of the noun—in the night, or, by night. The latter seems preferable. Comp. הַיָּלֵךְ, Job v. 14. The person here described as riding upon a red horse, is spoken of as אִישׁ, a man, i. e. in the shape or appearance of a man; for that an angel, and not a human being, is intended, is evident from verses 11 and 12, in which he is expressly called "the angel of Jehovah." And that he was no ordinary angel, but the Divine Mediator, the Angel of the Covenant, and he stood among the myrtles in the shade, and behind him and of the presence of Jehovah, will not be denied by any who have rendered themselves familiar with the attributes and circumstances in connection with which the Person so designated is presented to view, both in our prophet and in other parts of the Old Testament. One of the most remarkable of these circumstances, is his being identified with Jehovah himself. This Gesenius, so far from denying, or attempting to explain away, expressly asserts both in his Thesaurus, and in the last edition of his Hebrew Lexicon, under the word מַלְאָכִי. "Sometimes," he writes, "the same divine appearance, which at one time is called מַלְאָכִי ה' , is afterwards called simply מַלְאָכִי , as Gen. xvi. 7, et seq. coll. v. 13 ; xxii. 11 ; coll. 12 ; xxi. 11, coll. 16 ; Exod. iii. 2, coll. 5 ; Jud. vi. 14, coll. 22 ; xiii. 18, coll. 22. This is to be so understood, that the Angel of God is here nothing else than the invisible Deity itself, which thus unveils itself to mortal eyes ; see J. H. Michaelis de Angelo Dei, Hal. 1702. Tholuck, Comment. zum Ev. Johannis, p. 36. Hence Oriental translators, as Saadias, Abusaides, and the Chaldee-Samaritan, wherever Jehovah himself is said to appear upon earth, always put for the name of God, the Angel of God." See the very satisfactory observations of Dr. McCaul on this subject, in his translation of Kimchi on Zechariah, pp. 9—27, in which he has shown that there is but one being who is called in Scripture מַלְאָכִי ה' , the Angel of Jehovah ; that the proper name of this one Being is מַלְאָכִי , Jehovah ; that this Being says of himself, distinctly and unequivocally, that He is the God whom Jacob worshipped, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob ; and that some of the Rabbins themselves have been compelled to admit the facts. See also Dr. J. Pye Smith's Scripture Testimony to the Messiah, vol. i. pp. 445—463 ; and Stonard on Zechariah, pp. 15—19. In the Babylonian Talmud, San-hedrin, fol. 93, col. 1, the following brief exposition is given of the man here referred to by the prophet : "This man is no other than the Holy One, blessed be He ; for it is said, 'The Lord is a man of war.'" The position of this Captain of the Lord's host, is stated to be "among the myrtles which were in the shady valley." Many conjectures have been advanced respecting both the myrtles and the valley, but, in my opinion, they are all gratuitous, since it does not appear that these objects were designed to be symbolically understood, but are merely added as incidental circumstances, to give vivacity and force to the representation. מַלְאָכִי ה' being always used, like מַלְאָכִי ה' and מַלְאָכִי ה' , of depth in reference to water or mire, it is clear from the connection that such cannot be the signification of מַלְאָכִי ה' , which is a derivative, not from מַלְאָכִי , to sink, be deep, but from מַלְאָכִי , to be shaded, darkened ; hence the shade or shady place, probably that of a mountain. Such derivation is indicated by the Dagesh compensative in the Lamed, and is supported by the renderings of the LXX. and Syr. κατασκίων, مظلة. Hitzig and Ewald, comparing the Arab. مظلة, umbraculum, tentorium, interpret the word as meaning tent or tabernacle, and suppose heaven, as the dwelling-place of Jehovah, to be intended ; but the exegesis is far-fetched and inept. Equally unsatisfactory is the attempt of the latter of these writers to palm upon מַלְאָכִי ה' the signification of מַלְאָכִי ה' , mountains, by comparing the term with מַלְאָכִי ה' , height, Is. xlv. 2. Τῶν ὀρέων of the LXX. must have originated in their having mistaken מַלְאָכִי ה' for מַלְאָכִי ה' , or it may be an interpretation derived from chap. vi. 1. Behind the rider, who appears as their leader or captain, follow three companies of horsemen, distinguished from each other by the color of the horses. It is not to be inferred, that, because מַלְאָכִי ה' , horses, only are mentioned, we are to 9 were horses that were red, bay and white. Then I said, What are these, my lord? And the angel who spake with me, said conceive of them as being presented to view without their riders. This is evident from the reply given by the riders, ver. 11. חֲסִים, like our English horse, is sometimes used in a military sense, to denote cavalry. Still, as the color of the horses forms an important feature in the representation, they must have been specially prominent to the mental vision of the prophet. On a comparison of the present verse with chap. vi. 1—8, and Rev. vi. 2—8, it will appear that horses with their riders are employed in the symbolical language of Scripture to denote dispensations of divine providence. The peculiar nature of the dispensations is indicated by the color of the horses, and the armor and appearance of the riders. Red, the color first mentioned, being that of fire and blood, is the appropriate symbol of war and bloodshed. That of the second company of horses is expressed by חֲסִים, bay, or brown, perhaps not differing from what is commonly called chestnut. See Bochart, Hieroz. tom. i. lib. ii. cap. 7. What induces the belief that this color is meant is, that חֲסִים signify vines which bear purple, or dark colored grapes. Comp. the Arab. شقرة, rufus color; اشقر, valde rubens seu rufus camelus. The LXX. ψαροί; Vulg. varii. The addition, καὶ ποικίλοι, in the text of the LXX. is doubtless a gloss. This color is symbolical of a middle state of things — a dispensation neither characterized by bloodshed, nor by victory and joyous prosperity, which the white color is universally allowed to represent. From what is stated, ver. 11, it is obvious we cannot interpret the dispensations, thus emblematically set forth, of events still future at the time of the vision. The different cohorts speak of their commission as already fulfilled. The colors must, therefore, denote the Medo-Per- sian war, in which the Babylonian empire was subverted; the mixed or transition state of affairs which followed; and the complete establishment of the new dynasty in the room of the tyrannical power by which the Jews had been enslaved. In consideration of the awful vengeance which had been inflicted upon that power, the color of the horse on which the commander rode is represented as being red, rather than bay or white — evidently with the design of affecting the minds of the Jews with a sense of the great deliverance which had been wrought for them by their Divine Protector.

9. Marckius, Ch. B. Michaelis, Rosenmüller, Maurer, and Ewald, are of opinion, that the angel here spoken of is identical with the man riding on the horse mentioned in the preceding verse, but the contrary is properly maintained by Vitringa and Hengstenberg, as a comparison with ver. 10 is sufficient to show. Though the angel who made the communications to the prophet had not been formerly mentioned, he had presented himself to him, or stood beside him, ready to discharge the duties of his office. This angel is uniformly spoken of as אֲנִי הַמְּלַכֵּם אֲדַבֵּר אִתְּךָ, the angel that spake with me. See verses 13, 14, chap. ii. 2, 7, iv. 1, 4, 8, v. 5, 10, vi. 4. The language is peculiar to our prophet; and from the office specially assigned to the angel, he is usually called the angelus interpres, or the angelus collocutor. That stress is to be laid upon the use of the preposition אֲדַבֵּר following the verb אֲנִי הַמְּלַכֵּם, to speak, as if it were designed to mark the internal character of communications made by the angel to the prophet — a position maintained by Jerome, Ewald, Delitzsch, and some others — cannot be satisfactorily made out. The utmost that can be conceded respecting the force of the preposition, in such connection, is its expressing the familiarity or intimacy of the intercourse between the Divine mes-

10 to me, I will show thee what these are. And the man that stood among the myrtles answered and said, These are they whom Jehovah hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth. And they answered the Angel of Jehovah that stood among the myrtles, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold! the whole earth sitteth still and is tranquil. 12 Then the Angel of Jehovah answered and said: O Jehovah of hosts! how long wilt thou not compassionate Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, with which thou hast been angry these 13 seventy years? And Jehovah answered the angel who spake senger and the prophet. When the angel says  $\text{אֲנִי אֶרְאֶה}$ , I will show, or cause thee to see these things, the reference is to a mental perception or understanding of their meaning.

10, 11.  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר}$ , signifies to commence or proceed to speak, as well as to answer. Comp. the use of  $\text{ἀποκρίνομαι}$  in the New Testament. Instead of the requisite information being communicated by the interpreting angel, it is imparted by the Angel of Jehovah himself, and by those who acted under his command. Because the phraseology  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר אֲנִי אֶרְאֶה}$  is almost identical with that employed to describe the roaming of Satan through the earth, Job. i. 7, ii. 2, it has been inferred that the horsemen represent celestial spirits sent forth for the execution of the divine purposes; but the ground is too precarious to admit of any such theory being built upon it, as a comparison with Rev. vi. 2—8, is sufficient to show. The simple occurrence of the same terms cannot of itself justify this interpretation. From the reply being given to the Angel of Jehovah, we may conclude, that he had signified to them that they should make their report for the information of the prophet. In consequence of their several operations, the obstacles had been removed out of the way which prevented the restoration of the Jews; the wars in which the Persians had been engaged had ceased; and, at the time the prophet had the vision, in the second year of Darius, universal peace obtained in all the regions with which the people of God had any connection. For the use of  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר}$  to denote a state of tranquillity after war, comp. Jud. v. 26. A similar combination of  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר}$  with  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר}$  occurs ch. vii. 7, and is intended to express the profound character of the peace which was then enjoyed.

12.  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר}$ , to answer, is here, as in other instances, used in the simple acceptation of speaking, or continuing a discourse. The language is that of intercessory expostulation. While all the heathen nations around Judea enjoyed prosperity, that country was still much in the same state in which it had been during the captivity. Some of the captives had returned, but they were too few to produce anything like a marked change in its circumstances. Vitringa, Stonard, and some others, without sufficient reason, think that a different term of seventy years is here intended from that predicted Jer. xxv. 11, xxix. 10. What in reality were the years of indignation upon the cities, but the years of the captivity of their inhabitants?  $\text{זֶה שְׁבַע־עָשָׂר שָׁנָה}$ , "these seventy years," express emphatically the period during which the captivity had continued. Two of these years, dating from the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, had yet nearly to run before the expiration of the predicted period, so that the language of the expostulation is most appropriate, when viewed as calculated to meet the feelings of the Jewish people.

13. That it is the same being who is styled  $\text{וַיִּשָּׁאֶר אֲנִי אֶרְאֶה}$ , the Angel of Jeho-

- 14 with me with good and comfortable words. And the angel who spake with me said to me, Cry, saying,
 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:
 I am zealous for Jerusalem,
 And for Zion, with great zeal;
- 15 And I am very greatly displeased
 With the nations that are at ease;
 Because I was a little displeased,
 And they helped forward the affliction.
- 16 Wherefore, thus saith Jehovah:
 I have returned to Jerusalem in compassion:
 My house shall be built in her, saith Jehovah of hosts,
 And a line shall be stretched out over Jerusalem.
- 17 Cry again, saying,
 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:
 My cities shall yet overflow with prosperity;
 For Jehovah will yet comfort Zion,
 And will yet take pleasure in Jerusalem.

vañ, that is here designated by the incommunicable name יהוה, Jehovah, just as in the passages quoted by Gesenius, ver. 8, seems past dispute. As the Divine Mediator, after having made intercession with the Father, who is addressed by the title יהוה צבאות, Jehovah of hosts, he communicates to the interpreting angel the consolatory answer which was to be made to the prophet. דְּבָרֵי נְחֻמִּים, are in apposition: lit. words, consolations, i. e. consolatory words. LXX. λόγους παρακλητικούς. Comp. Is. lvii. 18; Hos. xi. 8.

14. This and the three following verses contain the consolatory words just referred to, which the prophet is commanded by the interpreting angel to communicate to the Jews. אַנְּזָאֵן construed with אֶנְּזָאֵן, or with the accusative, signifies to envy, be jealous, indignant at any person or thing; with אֶנְּזָאֵן here, it is taken in a good sense, to be zealous for anything, actively to interest one's self on behalf of any one. Comp. Numb. xxv. 11, 13; 2 Sam. xxi. 2; 1 Kings xix. 10.

15. The adjective אֶנְּזָאֵן signifies not merely to be at rest, as the whole earth is described, ver. 11, but, in a bad sense to live at ease, be carnally secure. The enemies of the Jews had not simply executed the Divine indignation against that people, but they had done it wantonly. Such seems to be the force of אֶנְּזָאֵן אֶנְּזָאֵן.

16. The building of the temple had been begun, but it still lay for the most part in ruins, and was not finished till the sixth year of Darius. See Ezra vi. 15. אֶנְּזָאֵן, for which the Keri has, by emendation, the more usual form אֶנְּזָאֵן, occurs 1 Kings vii. 23; Jer. xxxi. 39.

17. Few as were the inhabitants of Judea at the time of the vision, the land was speedily re-occupied; and the population had greatly increased by the time of the Maccabees. Josephus informs us, that, overflowing with numbers, Jerusalem gradually crept beyond its walls, till a fourth hill, called Bezetha, was covered with habitations. אֶנְּזָאֵן, Arab.

فاض, فيض, effusus fuit, to overflow. That the overflowing, however, is to be interpreted of prosperity, and not of the 18 Then I lifted up my eyes and looked, and, behold! four horns.

 19 And I said to the angel who spake with me, What are these?
 And he answered me, These are the horns which have scat-
 20 tered Judah, Israel and Jerusalem. And Jehovah showed me
 21 four workmen. Then I said, What are these coming to do?
 And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered inhabitants, appears from the ז, indicating the subject-matter, being prefixed to זטו.

VISION II.

18, 19. (Heb. ii. 1, 2.) This vision is so intimately connected with the preceding that the break in the Hebrew Bible here, occasioned by the commencement of a new chapter, is very unhappy. As usual in these visions, the hieroglyphic is first presented. קֶרֶן, a horn, is the symbol of a kingdom, or political power, the figure being taken from bulls, and other horned animals having their strength in their horns. Thus the ten horns of the fourth beast in Daniel's vision, are symbolical of the ten kingdoms into which the Roman empire was divided on the overthrow of the imperial throne, chap. vii. 20; and in the representation made of the same subject to John, the ten horns of the seven-headed beast are said to have upon them ten crowns, Rev. xiii. 1, xvii. 3. Comp. ver. 12, where it is expressly stated, that "the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings," i. e. kingdoms, the ruling power being put for the whole government. The powers referred to by Zechariah were those which had been hostile to the Jews, and had scattered them abroad from their own land. Jerome, Kimchi, Abarbanel, Vatablus, and others, have been led by the occurrence of the number four, to interpret the horns of the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires; but to this exegesis it has justly been objected, that of these powers two were not yet in existence, and cannot be prophetically spoken of, because the hostility described was that which had already taken place. Neither is it true that the Jews were scattered by the Persian power as they had been by the Babylonian. What took place under Darius Ochus cannot be taken into the account here. The number is rather to be referred to the four quarters of the earth in their immediate relation to Palestine. Comp. chap. ii. 6. Thus Theodore, Clarius, Ribera, Sanchez, à Castro, Munster, Calvin, Newcome, Rosenmüller, Hitzig, and Maurer. "Jerusalem" is added to render the description more emphatic, being the metropolis, the site of the temple, and the royal residence.

20, 21. (Heb. ii. 3, 4.) Here, again, the same Divine Person is called יְהוָה, who was formerly spoken of as מְלִאֲכָה יְהוָה. See on ver. 13. קְרָשִׁים, workmen in iron, brass, stone, or wood, from קָרַשׁ, to cut, grave, fabricate. From the special employment assigned to these artificers, we may not inaptly compare קְרָשִׁים בְּמַחְרֵיהֶם, workmen of destruction, which is rendered in our common version, "skilful to destroy," Ezek. xxi. 36. The attempt of Blaney to justify his rendering the word by ploughmen, first suggested by Michaelis, must be regarded as a failure. On the inquiry being made, what these artificers were coming to do, a reply is given, which further describes the tyranny exercised over the Hebrew people, and then states that they were the instruments commissioned to destroy the hostile powers. By again pressing the number four, interpreters have involved themselves in inextricable difficulties. All that is meant to be conveyed, is the adequacy of the means employed to effect the punishment of the nations which had afflicted the people of God. That no appeal can be made, in illustration, Judah, so that no man lifted up his head; but these are come to terrify them, to throw down the horns of the nations, which raised the horn against the land of Judah to scatter it.

to the history of the four great monarchies, is proved by the fact that the workmen are represented as distinct from the horns, whereas these monarchies successively destroyed each other. The rabbinical reference to the days of the Messiah is altogether aside from the point, as is likewise the reference which some have made to angels. There can be no doubt that the several human instrumentalities are intended, which God called into operation to crush the powers in the different countries around Palestine, by which it had been invaded, and its inhabitants carried away captive. The conjecture of Blaney, who would read  $\text{וְהָיָה הַיָּדָיִם}$  instead of  $\text{וְהָיָה יָדָיִם}$ , and, changing the punctuation of  $\text{שֶׁאֵינָם}$  into  $\text{שֶׁאֵינָם}$ , renders, "to sharpen their coulters," has not been approved. Nor is anything of the kind necessary. Terror implies a sense of inferiority, weakness, and exposure to suffering, and is here appropriately represented, as a precursor of that overthrow to which the enemies of the Jews were to be subjected. Comp. Jud. viii. 12; 1 Sam. xiv. 15; Ezek. xxx. 9.  $\text{וְהָיָה}$  signifies to throw, cast, stretch, the particular manner of which is to be determined by the context. Here that of casting down, or effecting an overthrow, is the mode most naturally suggested. The signification to handle, exercise the hand, which some have proposed, is less apt,  $\text{יָד}$ , hand, being derived from the verb, and not the verb from the noun.  $\text{אֲרָצָה}$ , land, is here, as frequently, put for its inhabitants.

CHAPTER II.

IN a third vision, a man with a measuring line is represented as going forth to take the dimensions of Jerusalem with a view to its restoration to its former condition, ver. 1—3; an act which is virtually declared to be unnecessary, by the prediction that such should be the increase of the population, and such their prosperity, that the city should extend, like unwall'd towns, into the surrounding localities; and that, under the immediate protection of Jehovah, walls would be altogether unnecessary, 4, 5. In the faith of this prophetic announcement, and with a view to their escape from the judgment which was still about to be inflicted upon Babylon, the Jews which remained in that city are summoned to return from their captivity, 6, 7; an assurance of Divine protection, and of the destruction of their enemies, is given them, 8, 9; and they are cheered by the promises, that Jehovah would again make Jerusalem his residence, and effect, in connection with the restoration of his people, the conversion of many nations to the true religion, 10, 12. A solemn call to universal reverence concludes the scene.

THEN I lifted up my eyes, and looked, and, behold! a man

VISION III.

1—4. (Heb. ii. 5—7.) The measurement here specified was not that of the houses, but of the whole extent of the city. Jerusalem is not here considered as already rebuilt, as Stonard supposes.

2 with a measuring line in his hand. And I said: Whither art thou going? And he said to me, To measure Jerusalem, to see
 3 how much is the breadth thereof, and how much is the length thereof. And, behold! the angel who spake with me went forth,
 4 and another angel came forth to meet him. And he said to him, Run, speak to this young man, saying,
 Jerusalem shall be inhabited into the open country,
 Because of the multitude of men and cattle in the midst of her.
 5 And I will be to her, saith Jehovah,
 A wall of fire around,
 And will be the glory in the midst of her.

The dimensions are those of the city before its destruction by the Chaldeans, and were now being taken, in order to ascertain the extent of the work that was to be effected in its complete restoration. The symbolical action was calculated to encourage the Jews to proceed with the building of the temple which they had commenced. Who the measurer was has been disputed. Jarchi, J. H. Michaelis, Rosenmüller, are of opinion that the angelus interpretis is intended. Hengstenberg thinks that, in all probability, he is none other than the Angel of Jehovah himself. But for neither of these opinions is there sufficient foundation, any more than there is for the supposition of Blayney, that he was Nehemiah. He appears to be merely an additional person introduced in the scenic representation, for the purpose of calling forth, by the significant action which he was about to undertake, the important information contained in the following part of the chapter. אֲנִי, as twice used here, has reference to two different localities: in the former instance, in which it is employed of the interpreting angel, the presence of the prophet is the terminus a quo; in the latter, that of the Angel of Jehovah. In opposition to the hypothesis of the Rabbins, Vatablus, Ribera, à Lapide, Drusius, Blayney, Rosenmüller, Hengstenberg, and Knobel, who maintain that Zechariah himself is meant by הַיָּעָר הַזֶּה, this young man, and argue from it, that the prophet was of youthful age at the time he had the vision, I cannot but concur with Stonard, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, in thinking, that the person intended is the man with the measuring line, spoken of vers. 1, 2. The verb רָץ, run, implies the necessity of despatch, which could only have been occasioned by the intended procedure of the measurer. He is arrested in his progress, and virtually told, that the former dimensions of the city would be totally inadequate to contain the number of its inhabitants. יִשְׁבּוּ בְּאֵרְצָהּ הַשְּׂמֵרָה, lit. Jerusalem shall dwell, or inhabit open places, i. e. the inhabitants will not confine themselves within her walls, but will occupy the localities in the open country around. Thus Symm. ἀτειχίστως; Jarchi and Jerome, מֵאַיִן דּוּמָה, absque muro. Comp. 1 Sam. vi. 18, where כִּפְּרֵי הַבְּרָדִים, the country village, is contrasted with עִיר מְבֻצָּרָה, a fortified city. See also Esth. ix. 19; Ezek. xxxviii. 11.

5. (Heb. ver. 9.) Though "the wall of fire," and "the glory," are doubtless both to be taken figuratively, the former denoting certain protection, and the latter, illustrious displays of the Divine presence in affording all needful supplies of grace, strength, and comfort, we are not hence to conclude with Stonard, that more is meant by the city than the literal Jerusalem, as the centre of the restored theocracy. The entire connection, and all the circumstances of the prophecy, demand this limitation.

- 6 Ho! ho! flee from the north country, saith Jehovah,
 For as the winds of heaven
 Have I spread you abroad, saith Jehovah.
- 7 Ho! deliver thyself, O Zion!
 That dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.
- 8 For thus saith Jehovah of hosts:

6, 7. (Heb. 10, 11.) It is generally thought that the urgent calls here given to those Jews who still remained in Babylon were designed to induce them to leave that devoted city before its approaching siege and capture by Darius. In all probability many of them had acquired wealth, and might have been induced to remain in the enjoyment of their possessions. It was necessary that such should take the alarm, and, with the rest of their countrymen, avail themselves without delay of the opportunity they now had of returning to their own land. The urgency of the call is expressed by the repetitious form, הוי הוי, Ho! Ho! which occurs, so far as I am aware, in no other part of Scripture. The verbs קום, arise, שמע, hear, or the like, being readily suggested by the interjection, will account for the use of the conjunctive Vau in והוי והוי. The land of the north is Babylon, and the regions adjacent. See Jer. vi. 22, xvi. 15. Between the former and the latter clause of the verse there seems, at first sight, a palpable discrepancy. How, it may be asked, could the scattering of the Jews like the four winds of heaven be a reason why those, in particular, who lived in the north quarter should return? But this apparent incoherence has originated in the supposition that the prophet here asserts the dispersion of that people into the four quarters of the globe. Had this, however, been his meaning, he would have employed ל after the verb, as in Ezek. xvii. 31. Nor can such construction be supported by substituting the various reading ב, viz. בארבע, instead of ב; for the words could then only properly be rendered, "I have scattered you by," and not "in" or "into the four winds." This reading, though supported by fifteen MSS., originally by seven more, and perhaps by another, by thirteen printed editions, and by the Syr. and Vulg., is inferior in point of authority to that of the Textus Receptus. The meaning seems to be, that the scattering of the Hebrew people had been so violent and extensive, that it could only be fitly compared to the force and effect of the combined winds of heaven being brought to bear upon any object susceptible of dispersion. The scattering had been most severely felt by those resident at the time of the vision in Babylon, and other regions in that quarter; on which account it is described with special reference to them. כי is here used, not as a causative, but as a concessive participle, as in Gen. viii. 21; Exod. xiii. 17. Nothing can be more forced, or unsuited to the connection, than the interpretation, which assumes that בארבע is future in signification, and that the words contain a prediction of a future spreading abroad of the Jews as missionaries among the heathen. What can be conceived more incongruous, than a return of the Jews from Babylon, induced by the motive of a still more extended dispersion among the nations of the earth, without the smallest hint of this as their destination! By ציון, Zion, are meant the inhabitants of Jerusalem, at that time still in Babylon. The words בת-בבל are not in apposition, but in construction, and are equivalent to Habitatrix Babelis. For this idiomatic use of בת see on Is. i. 8. Comp. יושבת בת-מצרים, Jer. xli. 19.

8. (Heb. 12.) Some suppose the prophet to be the person who here speaks of himself as having been sent; others, the

After the glory he hath sent me
 To the nations which spoiled you;
 Surely he that toucheth you
 Toucheth the pupil of his eye.

9 For, behold! I will shake my fist at them, angel mentioned ver. 4; but that the Messiah is intended, must be inferred from what is predicated of him, ver. 9, that he would shake his hand at the nations which had afflicted the Jews. Comp. Is. xlviii. 16, where the divine mission of the Second Person of the Trinity is described in parallel language. Blayney, Newcome, Gesenius, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, strangely concur in rendering אֶתֶר כְּבוֹד שְׁלִיחִי, He hath sent me after glory, in the sense of, with a view to acquire it. In no other passage, however, is אֶתֶר employed, except as an adverb or preposition of place or time; nor is it ever connected as a preposition with שְׁלַח. This verb is not even here construed with it, but with the preposition אֵל immediately following. It can only, therefore, be employed to denote the posteriority of the mission specified to the restoration of the glorious presence of the manifested Jehovah to his recovered people. Thus the LXX.

ὀπίσω δοξούς. Syr. صَلَاذِ اِمْعِنَا, after the glory, which is falsely rendered in the London Polyglott, ad prosequendum honorem. Targ. בְּתַר יְקָרָא דְאִמְרֵי, after the glory which he hath promised to bring to you. Vulg. post gloriam. Such exegesis is most naturally suggested by the use of כְּבוֹד, glory, ver. 5. After what had been there promised should have been accomplished, the Divine Legate had a commission to punish the nations in the immediate vicinity of the Holy Land, such as the Moabites, Idumeans, Ammonites, Philistines, and Syrians, by whom the Jews had been attacked and plundered on various occasions, and especially on that of the Chaldean invasion. The Jews in Babylon needed, therefore, to be under no apprehension from these enemies, and might return with confidence to their own land. The tender regard which Jehovah cherished for them, is expressed with exquisite beauty in the concluding clause of the verse. No member of the body is more susceptible of pain, or more vigilantly protected, than the eye, especially the pupil, or aperture through which the rays of light pass to the retina. בְּבָה, in the phrase בְּבַת עֵינַי, the pupil of the eye, Gesenius now derives from בָּבַב, to bore, make hollow, and considers it to stand for בְּבָה, a hole gate, like the Arab. باب; but his former etymology is preferable, according to which it is to be derived from בָּבָה, Arab. بابا, dixit baba, Gr. παπαδ(ε)ιν, to say papa, spoken of a child. Hence the Arab. بُوبُو, booboo (the origin of our English booby), puellus, boy. The phrase thus corresponds to the other Hebrew mode of expressing the same thing, אִישׁוֹךְ עֵינַי, the little man of the eye, Deut. xxxii. 10; Prov. vii. 2. Both modes of expression, בּוּיּו עֵינַי and اِبْسَانِ الْعَيْنِ, are used in Arabic; and the Arabs say in language quite parallel to that of the prophet, هو اعز عندى من بوبو عيني, He is dearer to me than the pupil of mine eye. Both modes are more expressive than the Latin of Catullus; multo quod carius illi est oculis, or, ni te plus oculis meis amarem. The pronominal affix in עֵינַי, his eye, is to be referred to יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת, Jehovah of hosts, at the beginning of the verse, the nominative to שְׁלַח־נִי, and not with Kimchi, Blayney, Stonard, and others, to the enemy himself.

9. (Heb. 13.) For the phrase יְדַבֵּר־נִי, comp. Is. xi. 15, xix. 16. It is indica-

- And they shall be a spoil to their slaves :
 And ye shall know that Jehovah of hosts hath sent me.
- 10 Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion !
 For, behold ! I come,
 And I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith Jehovah.
- 11 And many nations shall join themselves to Jehovah in that day,
 And shall become my people ;
 And I will dwell in the midst of thee,
 And thou shalt know that Jehovah of hosts hath sent me unto thee.
- 12 And Jehovah shall possess Judah his portion,
 In the holy land ;
 And shall again take pleasure in Jerusalem.
- 13 Let all flesh be silent before Jehovah,
 For he is roused from his holy habitation.

tive of the threatening attitude of Jehovah when about to inflict vengeance upon his enemies. By עַבְדֵי־יְהוָה, their slaves, are meant the Jews, whom the nations, either by capture or purchase, had brought into a state of slavery. Comp. Is. xiv. 2. וְיָדַעַת, here and in ver. 11, signifies, as frequently, to know by experience.

10, 11. (Heb. 14, 15.) The divine residence here predicted, must be interpreted of that which took place during the sojourn of the Son of God in the land of Judea. The almost entire identity of the language here employed, with that used chap. ix. 9, where, in like manner, the daughter of Zion is called to hail the advent of her King, compels to this conclusion. Comp. Ps. xl. 7 ; Is. xl. 9, 10. So evidently is this the only fair construction of the meaning, that Kimchi himself refers the passage לְעֵתֵי בְיָמָיו, to future events in the times of the Messiah. The phrases הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה, that day, those days, frequently point out the period of his manifestation and reign. With this appearance and residence of the Messiah are connected, as their consequents, the extensive conversion of the heathen nations and their being constituted a people devoted to his service and glory. The repetition of the prediction relative to his residence in Zion, is designed to express the certainty of the event.

12. (Heb. 16.) As mention had just been made of the adoption of the nations to be the people of the Messiah, the prophet, to preclude the idea, that the Jews were no more to enjoy that privilege, proceeds to describe a future period, during which they should again be the objects of the Divine favor and delight. Restored to the Holy Land, they shall again be the possession of the Lord. Comp. Exod. xxxiv. 9 ; Deut. iv. 20, ix. 26, 29, xxxii. 9. The ideas suggested by their being the possession of Jehovah are those of their being the objects of his regard and care. Ps. xxviii. 9.

13. (Heb. 17.) A call to universal reverence and submission in prospect of the wonderful interpositions of Jehovah on behalf of his church. Comp. Ps. lxxvi. 8, 9 ; Zeph. i. 7.

CHAPTER III.

IN this chapter a fourth vision is described, in which Joshua the high priest is represented as occupying his official position in the Divine presence at Jerusalem, but opposed in his attempt to recommence the service of Jehovah, by Satan, who accused him of being disqualified for the discharge of his functions, ver. 1. The accusation is met by a reprimand, drawn from the Divine purpose to restore Jerusalem, and the narrow escape which the priesthood had had from total extinction, 2. The guilt attaching to the high priest, in his representative capacity, and its removal, is next figuratively set forth, 3—5. He has then a solemn charge delivered to him, followed by a conditional promise, 6, 7; after which we have a prediction of the Messiah, as a security that the punishment of the Jews would be entirely removed, their temple completely restored, and a period of prosperity introduced, 8—10.

1 AND he showed me Joshua the high priest, standing before the Angel of Jehovah, and the Adversary standing on his right hand to oppose him.

VISION IV.

1. The nominative to  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי הַיְהוָה}$  is the interpreting angel, understood. Comp. ch. i. 9. As the phrase  $\text{בְּיָמֵי הַיְהוָה}$ , to stand before, is sometimes used of appearing before a judge, Numb. xxxv. 12; Deut. xix. 17; 1 Kings iii. 16; it has been inferred that we have here the representation of a judicial transaction, an exegesis which is supposed to derive confirmation from the circumstance of an accuser being mentioned in the following verse. But as the person here described is the high priest, and the phrase in question is that which is appropriated to express the position of the priests when ministering to Jehovah, Deut. x. 8; 2 Chron. xxix. 11; Ezek. xlv. 15; it is more natural to conclude that Joshua is here represented as having entered the new temple which was in the course of erection, and taken his position in front of the altar before the holy of holies. The high priest not only entered the most sacred place once a year on the day of atonement, but was authorized to perform all the duties of the ordinary priests; so that he may here be conceived of as about to offer sacrifice for the people, when he was opposed by Satan. That the altar of burnt offering was erected before the building of the temple was proceeded with, is clear, from Ezra iii. 2, 3, 6, 7. The  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי הַיְהוָה}$ , before whom Joshua stood, was no other than  $\text{הַיְהוָה}$  himself, as ver. 2 evidently shows. It has been matter of dispute, whether by  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי הַיְהוָה}$  we are here to understand the great enemy of God and man  $\delta \text{ ἀντιδικος}$ , 1 Pet. v. 8;  $\delta \text{ κατήγυρος}$ , Rev. xii. 18; or, whether a human adversary or adversaries are intended. Those who advocate the latter position think that Sanballat, or some other enemy of the Jews, is meant; but the emphatic form of the term, investing it, as it does, with the nature of a proper name (Ges. Heb. Gram. § 107, 2), decidedly favors the former interpretation. We find this name given to the chief of the evil spirits in the book of Job, the most ancient in the Bible. See chap. i. and ii. Some have compared Ps. cix. 6, but the parallel term  $\text{אֱלֹהֵי הַיְהוָה}$  is against such construction in that passage. From the identity of the phraseology, however, which represents the adversary as taking his place at the right hand of the accused, it has been concluded, that it was customary in the Jewish courts for the accuser to assume this position. What the ground of opposition on the part of Satan was, we are not here informed; but if

- 2 And Jehovah said to the Adversary,
 Jehovah rebuke thee, O Adversary!
 Even Jehovah that taketh delight in Jerusalem, rebuke thee;
 Is not this a brand snatched from the fire?
- 3 Now Joshua was clothed with filthy garments, and he stood 4 before the Angel. And he answered and spake to those that stood before him, saying, Remove the filthy garments from him.
 And he said to him, See! I have caused thine iniquity to pass the construction put by some eminent commentators upon Jude 9, which resolves "the body of Moses," there mentioned, into the Jewish church, and supposes the apostle to refer to the passage before us, be the true one (and of this I cannot entertain a doubt), it will follow, that the character of the Jewish people, as not having been legally purified from their idolatries, and the backwardness which they evinced in rebuilding the temple, were urged as pleas against them. It is true, the opposition is said to have been made to Joshua; but it must be remembered that he appears here, not in his personal, but in his official character, as the representative of the whole body of the people.

2. Almost all the commentators, even Maurer and Hitzig, agree in the opinion, that the incommunicable name יהוה, Jehovah, is here given to the angel spoken of in the preceding verse. See on ch. i. 8. So obvious did this appear to the Syriac translator, from the spirit of the context, that he renders ܘܥܢܝܐ ܘܥܠܝܐ ܘܥܠܝܐ, the Angel of the Lord, a rendering which Newcome would, very uncritically, have admitted into the text. The interpretation of Rosenmüller, "vocatur legatus de nomine principis sui," is a pure fiction, and directly opposed to Scripture usage. The verb ענה signifies to chide, rebuke, so as to silence those who are the objects of the reproof, and restrain them from carrying their designs into effect. It is repeated for the sake of emphasis, to express the absolute certainty that the machinations of Satan should prove utterly abortive. In the reference to the Divine choice of Jerusalem, there is a recognition of the promise, ch. i. 17, ii. 12. The pointed interrogation has respect to Joshua, and forcibly, though tacitly, conveys the idea, that his deliverance, and that of the people whom he represented, from the destruction which threatened them in Babylon, was the result of sudden and efficient interposition on the part of Jehovah. It was not, therefore, for a moment to be supposed that he would now withdraw his favor from them, and abandon them to their enemies. He had rescued them, in order that they might be preserved.

3, 4. Because the Romans used to clothe persons who were accused in a sordid dress, Drusius and others have imagined that the idea of a criminal is still kept up. That the filthy garments in which Joshua appeared were symbolical of the guilt and punishment of the Jews, seems beyond dispute; just as their removal, and his investment with splendid attire, indicates a state of restoration to the full enjoyment of their religious privileges. כסוּת, filth, is used metaphorically to denote the moral pollution contracted by sin. See Prov. xxx. 12; Is. iv. 4. He is represented as appearing in the squalid garments in which he had returned from a state of captivity in Babylon, and as having restored to him the gorgeous dress of the high priest. כְּסוּתוֹ הַיָּקָרָה, costly or splendid habiliments, such as were worn on special occasions, and put off as soon as the occasion was over. See on Is. iii. 22. Those who are here commanded to change the dress of 5 away from thee, and I will invest thee with costly habiliments. He then said, Let them place a pure mitre upon his head. And they placed the pure mitre upon his head, and invested him with 6 the habiliments. Then the Angel of Jehovah stood up. And the Angel of Jehovah protested to Joshua, saying:

 7 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:
 If thou wilt walk in my ways,
 And if thou wilt observe my charge,
 Then thou shalt both judge my house,

Joshua are not, as Ewald supposes, attendant priests, but attendant angels. The nominative to וַיַּעַזְרֵהוּ and וַיִּשְׁמְרוּ is הַמַּלְאָכִים, and not הַיְהוֹשֻׁעַ. וַיִּשְׁמְרוּ does not mean, as Gesenius interprets, to let iniquity or sin pass by, but to remove its guilt or punishment, and thus effectively to remit or forgive. This guilt or punishment is represented as having lain as a heavy load upon Joshua, and to have been removed מִצַּדְקוֹ, from upon him. הַמַּלְאָכִים is not to be changed into הַמַּלְאָכִים, as in the Targ. and Syr., but is to be regarded as a not unusual elliptical form of the idiomatic הַמַּלְאָכִים הַשְׂמֹרִים.

5. The punctuation וַיַּעַזְרֵהוּ is obviously incorrect, since it introduces the prophet as taking a part in the transactions exhibited in the vision, which is altogether foreign to the position he occupied. The word should be pointed וַיִּשְׁמְרוּ, and has been so read by the Targ., Syr., and Vulg. translators. תְּקֵנָה, tiara, or turban, is used instead of מִצַּדְקוֹ, the term employed in the Pentateuch to denote this part of the high priest's dress. LXX. κίβητις. At וַיִּשְׁמְרוּ the adjective שְׂמֹרִים is to be supplied from the preceding, or the article may be understood. שְׂמֹרִים is more appropriately rendered "stood up," than, as in our common version, "stood by." The latter rendering presents the Angel of Jehovah to view as a simple spectator; the former in the solemn posture of one who is about to deliver an important charge. And this, as the following verses show, was precisely the character in which he appeared. He had been sitting upon his throne, but now rises to announce the divine decree respecting the responsible duties which devolved upon Joshua in his sacerdotal capacity. I do not agree with Dr. Stonard, who supposes that the Angel assumed the character and position of a witness. The participial form of the verb is adopted for the purpose of varying the style.

6, 7. עָזַר, as here used in Hiphil, signifies, to make a solemn declaration. LXX. διαμαρτύρομαι. Targ. and Syr. אֶשְׂמְרֵהוּ. Vulg. contestabatur. אֶשְׂמְרֵהוּ, my charge, means the laws, prescriptions, or rites, which I have given in charge, namely, the Mosaic Institute. Obedience to this the high priest was bound to render himself, and upon him supremely devolved the obligation to see that it was obeyed by others. מִשְׁמָרְתָּ, from שָׁמַר, to guard, keep, observe, is frequently used by Moses to denote the office, duty, or charge, to which the priests were to attend. See Lev. viii. 25; Numb. i. 53, iii. 28, 31, 32, 38. By the "house" of the Lord here, we are not to understand the temple, as some have imagined, but the people of Israel, viewed as composing his household or family. Comp. Numb. xii. 7; Hos. viii. 1, ix. 15. דָּיַן, to judge, is always employed in reference to persons; never with respect to things. There appears to be in the declaration here made, an anticipation of the part which the sacerdotal family of Joshua was to take in the government of the Jewish state מְשַׁמְרֵהוּ is the Hiphil participle of שָׁמַר, just as מְשַׁמְרֵהוּ is of שָׁמַר, Jer. xxix. 8; and מְשַׁמְרֵהוּ of שָׁמַר,

And keep my courts,
 And I will give thee guides among these who are standing by.
 Hear now, O Joshua! the high priest,
 Thou and thy companions that sit before thee;

2 Chron. xxviii. 23. It must, therefore, signify those who cause to go or walk, leaders, conductors, guides. Who these were we are not informed, farther than that they were standing in the presence of the Angel, and were pointed at by him. Some have thought that the subordinate priests who attended upon Joshua are intended; but such interpretation is altogether unsuitable to the dignified character which, as high priest, he sustained. As none but superior beings could be his leaders or conductors, it follows that the angels must be meant. This view is confirmed by the circumstance of their being represented as "standing," namely, in the presence of Jehovah, ready to execute his behests, whereas the subordinate priests are spoken of in the following verse as "sitting" before Joshua. The import of the promise is, that he and his successors in office should enjoy the care, direction, and aid of celestial spirits in the management of the national affairs. Munster, Vatablus, Rosenmüller, Ewald, and Hitzig, take לְיָהוֹשֻׁעַ וְלְכֹהֲנָיו to be the plural of the noun לְיָהוֹשֻׁעַ, a walk, or walking place; but this affords no appropriate sense, except it be referred to the heavenly state — a construction put upon the clause by the Targum, Kimchi, and several Christian interpreters, but which is little suited to the language of the connection, and is a mode of representation otherwise foreign to Scripture.

8. The companions of Joshua were the ordinary priests, who were associated with him for the purpose of carrying on the service of the temple. They are represented as "sitting before" him, not at the time the words are addressed to him, for they are spoken of in the third person, but usually, when consulting together about religious matters. On such occasions he occupied a more elevated seat or throne as their president, while they sat on chairs or benches before him. By אֲנִי וְכֹהֲנָיִם, men of sign, or portent, are meant symbolical men, persons prefiguring, or foreshadowing some person or persons still future. Comp. Is. viii. 18, xx. 3: Ezek. xii. 6, xxiv. 27. That only one person is here referred to as typified by the Jewish priests, and that this one person is none other than the Messiah, the following clause of the verse incontrovertibly shows. In their sacerdotal character, and in the presentation of sacrifices before Jehovah, they foreshadowed the High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, and the one sacrifice which he offered for sins, when he presented himself as a propitiatory victim in the room of the guilty. For the derivation of אֲנִי וְכֹהֲנָיִם, see on Joel ii. 30. Though הֵמָּה הֵם, they are, refers immediately to the subordinate priests, we are not to suppose that Joshua is excluded, or that he was not a symbolical person as well as they. This use of the third person of the pronoun instead of the second is not without example. See Zeph. ii. 12. The author of the Targum admits that by אֲנִי וְכֹהֲנָיִם, Branch, the MESSIAH is meant. His words are, וְיָהוֹשֻׁעַ מְשִׁיחַ דְּרַתְּמָא דְּרַתְּמָא, "My Servant, the Messiah who shall be revealed." The same interpretation is found in other Jewish authorities, as both Kimchi and Rashi admit. Some few Christian interpreters, among whom Grotius and Blayney, adopting the opinion of the two Rabbins just mentioned, suppose Zerubbabel to be intended; but in my opinion very preposterously, for that prince was already in existence, and in the full exercise of his official duties; whereas the person to whom Jehovah refers had not yet appeared. Even Gesenius, Hitzig, and Maurer, make no scruple

(For they are typical persons)

For, behold! I will introduce my servant THE BRANCH.

9 For, behold! the stone which I have laid before Joshua,

Upon the one stone shall be seven eyes:

Behold! I will form the sculpture thereof, ple in applying the title to the Messiah. It is that given to him, Is. iv. 2; Jer. xxiii. 5, xxxiii. 15; and Zech. vi. 12; and is equivalent to Son. See on Is. iv. 2, where it is shown that in the writings of the ancient Persians, "the branch" of any one means his son, or one of his posterity. The verb  $\text{נָצַח}$ , from which the noun is derived, signifies to spring forth or up, as plants; but the LXX. have adopted the word  $\text{ἀνατολή}$ , which expresses the sun-rise. Hence the Saviour is called  $\text{ἀνατολή ἐξ ὕψους}$ , "the Day-spring from on high," Luke i. 78. Comp. Mal. iv. 2, where  $\text{הַיָּרֵךְ שֶׁנֶּעְלָמָה הַיָּרֵךְ}$ , "the Sun of righteousness shall arise," is rendered by the LXX.  $\text{ἀνατελεῖ ἡλῖος δικαιοσύνης}$ . The Vulg. adducam servum meum orientem. For  $\text{יָבֵנֵנִי}$ , my servant, as a designation of the Messiah, comp. Is. xlii. 1—7, xlix. 1—9, l. 5—10, lii. 13—liii.; and see my Comm. on the first of these passages.

9. Most interpreters regard this verse as a continuation of the subject treated of at the close of the preceding, and explain the  $\text{אֶבֶן}$ , stone, of the Messiah in accordance with such passages as Ps. cxviii. 22; Is. xxviii. 16. This view is largely insisted upon by Stonard; but what, in my judgment, renders it altogether untenable, is the circumstance that the stone is spoken of as having been laid before, or in the presence of, Joshua—language which can with no propriety be employed with reference to the Messiah. Neither can the reference be to  $\text{אֶבֶן הַיָּסוּד}$ , the plummet, spoken of ch. iv. 10, that being represented as in the hand of Zerubbabel, and not placed or laid before his associate in the government. I cannot, therefore, imagine any other stone to be here intended than the foundation stone of the temple, which had been laid by Zerubbabel in the presence of Joshua and his brethren the priests, who celebrated the joyful event in songs of praise to Jehovah. Ezra iii. 8—13. When it is said, that upon this "one stone" were "seven eyes," we are not to conclude that they were exhibited upon it. The meaning is, that they were directed towards it, or intent and fixed upon it, as an object of special attention and care. While with us an eye is the hieroglyphic of Divine Providence, the Hebrews, to express the perfection of knowledge and wisdom in which all its affairs are conducted, employed the hieroglyphic of "seven eyes,"—seven, in the Oriental style, denoting fulness or perfection. Such symbolic representations were common among the Persians. Comp. Rev. i. 4, v. 6. Jehovah here declares, that the erection of the temple, the commencement of which had been made, in the course of his providence, by the laying of the foundation, should be an object of his special care and regard. For  $\text{עַל עַיִן}$ , the eye being upon any person or thing, as denoting the exercise of kind and vigilant care, see Ps. xxxii. 8. The attempt of Vitring and Blayney to explain  $\text{עַל עַיִן}$ , of fountains, and so apply the passage to living waters flowing from Christ as the antitype of the rock smitten in the wilderness is a complete failure. The singular  $\text{עַיִן}$ , signifies, indeed, fountain as well as eye, but it is a settled principle of Hebrew grammar than when fountains are intended, the plural feminine is uniformly employed, just as the dual  $\text{עַיִן עַיִן}$  is as uniformly and exclusively used to express eyes. See for the principle, Gesen. Lehrgeb. pp. 539, 540. That the dual is employed to express things that exist in pairs, even when more

- Saith Jehovah of hosts ;
 And I will remove the punishment of that land in one day.
 10 In that day, saith Jehovah of hosts,
 Ye shall each invite his neighbor,
 Under the vine, and under the fig tree.

than two is intended, see on Is. vi. 2. הִנְנִי מַשְׁתַּחֲוֵי מִסֵּפֶתֶּן פַּתְחָהּ, Behold! I will form the sculpture thereof; lit. "I will open the opening thereof." What kind of architectural ornaments are hereby intended, it is impossible to say; but that they were cut out or engraven in the foundation-stone, the exigency of the place requires, except we regard the stone as here used by synecdoche for the whole temple, in which case reference will be had to the finishing off of the structure, the foundation of which had been laid in the presence of Joshua. LXX. ἀρῦσσω βῆδρον. Syr. אֲפָתַח לְבָבַי, "Behold, I open the gates of it." בָּרַח is here used in Kal, but with a causative signification: to remove, cause to depart. בְּיָמָיו is to be understood, not of iniquity, but of the punishment of iniquity—the troubles and sufferings to which the Jews were subjected on account of it. Thus the iniquity of Sodom, Gen. xix. 15, was the punishment to be inflicted upon it; and that of Babylon, Jer. li. 6, the same. The land of Judea had borne its punishment during the captivity, but was now to be occupied and cultivated. To sufferings the Jews were still exposed on the part of their enemies, who caused an interruption of the building of the temple, and prevented the comfortable settlement of the people in their own land. For their encouragement Jehovah promises to put an end to their distress, בְּיָמָיו, in one day; i. e. soon, in the shortest space of time. הָאָרֶץ הַזֶּה is specifically the land of Palestine.

10. A promise of the tranquillity and social enjoyment that were to be experienced by the restored Hebrews.

CHAPTER IV.

UNDER the symbol of a golden candlestick is represented the pure and flourishing state of the Jewish church as restored after the captivity, 1—3. The signification of this symbol the prophet is left to find out, 4, 5; only a clue is given him in the message which he was commissioned to deliver relative to the completion of the temple, in spite of the formidable difficulties which interposed, and to the Messiah who was to come after the temple was in a finished state, 6, 7. He was further instructed to announce the certainty of the former event, on the ground that Zerubbabel, who superintended the work, was under the special care of Divine Providence, which should so arrange the course of human affairs as to render them subservient to the undertaking, 8—10. Under the additional symbol of two olive trees, which supplied the candlestick with the necessary oil, are represented Joshua and Zerubbabel, the two principal official persons in the new state, 11—14.

- 1 AND the angel who spake with me awoke me again, like one

VISION V.

1. We are not to conclude from the use of the verb בָּרַח at the beginning of this verse, that the communicating angel had removed to a distance from the prophet; and now returned to him.

2 who is waked out of his sleep. And he said to me, What dost thou see? And I said, I see, and behold! a candlestick wholly of gold, and its bowl upon the top of it, and its seven lamps

When employed by itself, שׁוּב certainly signifies to return; but, according to a common Hebrew idiom, when used before another verb, it merely indicates the repetition of the action expressed by such verb. See Gen. xxvi. 18, xxx. 31; 2 Kings i. 11, 13. Connecting the verb in this manner with וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻם, reference will be had, not to any absence of the angel, but to his renewed excitement of the prophet to give his attention to another vision which was to be presented to his view. He had become so absorbed in the contemplation of the preceding vision, that he required to be roused, as in the case of a person in profound sleep.

2. Instead of the second וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻם, a vast number of the MSS. read correctly וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, as the word is found also in some of the earliest editions. Many MSS. and several printed editions exhibit וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה without Mappick in the ה, and thus bring the word into accordance with the feminine form, as occurring in the following verse. It has been thus read by the LXX. and Syr.; still it seems preferable to regard it as a masculine noun, and read וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, with the pronominal affix. It signifies an oil-cup, bowl, or basin, and was placed at the top of the candlestick for the purpose of supplying with oil the small tubes or pipes leading to the several lamps. Considerable difficulty has been found in endeavoring to account for the double numeral form וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, seven and seven. Some think the number is to be multiplied by itself, and rendered forty-nine; but this is not only abhorrent from the representation otherwise given of the candlestick, but is unwarranted by Hebrew usage. Others, as Stonard, take the words in a distributive sense, and make the number to be fourteen, understanding by seven and seven, twice seven. To this hypothesis, however, the copulative Vau forms an insuperable objection, since it conveys the idea not of distribution merely, but also that of diversity or variety. The instance adduced from 1 Kings viii. 65, is not exactly parallel, as the noun is there repeated, which is not the case in Zechariah; nor, so far as I can find, do we meet with any instance parallel to וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה. Our translators remove the one seven, and place it before "lamps;" but such construction is altogether unwarranted, and, indeed, they appear to have placed only a qualified reliance upon it, for they render in the margin, seven several pipes. There is every reason to suspect that the former וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה is an interpolation which has found its way into some ancient MSS. and been copied into all the rest. This suspicion is confirmed by two circumstances. The word occurs only once both in the LXX. and the Vulg. The former renders: καὶ ἑπτὰ ἐπαρυστρίδες τοῖς λύχνοις τοῖς ἐπάνω αὐτῆς; the latter, et septem infusoria lucernis, quæ erant super caput ejus. The other circumstance is, that, as in conformity to the number of lamps belonging to the candelabrum in the tabernacle, Exod. xxv. 37, from which the symbol was evidently borrowed, it is expressly stated, that there were only וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, seven lamps attached to that presented to view in the vision, we cannot conceive of there being to each two pipes or conductors for the oil. The וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, reeds or tubes of Moses, Exod. xxv. 32, 33, 35, xxxvii. 18, and the וַיִּצְעֵק־נְאֻמָּה, pipes or tubes of Zechariah, both signify the same objects, viz., those used for conveying the oil into the lamps. The latter word is derived from וַיִּצְעֵק to pour or flow. Vulg. infosoria. That the candlestick was symbolical of the Jewish church cannot be doubted. Comp. Rev. i. 20; xi. 4, where the same symbol is used in reference to Christian churches. The idea which it

3 upon it, and seven pipes to the lamps which are upon the top of it. And two olive trees beside it, one on the right side of 4 the bowl, and one on the left side of it. And I addressed my-5 self farther to the angel who spake with me, saying, What are these, my lord? And the angel who spake with me answered 6 and said to me, Dost thou not know what these are? And I said, No, my lord. And he answered and spake to me, saying,
This is the word of Jehovah to Zerubbabel, saying :

Not by might, nor by power,

But by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain ?

Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain :

conveys is that such churches are placed in the world for the sake of its illumination. Thus it was with the Jewish church in the midst of the surrounding darkness of Paganism ; and thus it hath been with Christian churches in every age of their history.

3. Of what the two olive-trees were emblematical, we learn from ver. 14.

4, 5. הַיָּדָבָר, like ἀποκρίνομαι in the New Testament, signifies to proceed or begin to speak, as well as to answer. It is obviously thus used at the beginning of ver.

4. Comp. chap. i. 10. While the angel had it in commission to explain what was meant by these trees, he was to reserve the explanation till after he had made certain communications relative to the building of the temple, and the advent of Messiah.

6. From the purport of the message which the prophet was to deliver to Zerubbabel, it may be inferred that he was laboring under despondency, produced by the consideration of the powerful opposition with which he had to contend, the greatness of the undertaking in which he had embarked, and the inadequacy of the human means which he had at his disposal. Between הַיָּדָבָר and הַיָּדָבָר there is no clearly defined difference of meaning. They are both used equally of physical and of mental and moral power ; and are here employed as synonymes, to express the idea that human might, of whatever description, was of no account with the Almighty ; that he can effect his purposes by few as well as by many, by those whom the world accounts foolish as well as by those of superior intellect ; and that it is by the exercise of his own spiritual agency exciting to action, and sustaining and giving efficiency to it, that its performance is secured. There seems to be here a reference to what we read, Hag-gai, ii. 5 : " My Spirit remaineth among you : fear ye not." The truth, however, is of universal application, and is clearly taught in the New Testament in reference to the conversion of sinners, 1 Cor. iii. 6 ; 2 Cor. x. 4 ; Eph. i. 19 ; Col. i. 12.

7. However lowly the feelings entertained by Zerubbabel, he is here taught by the sublime and noble figure of the depression of a large mountain into a level plain, that none of the formidable impediments which he apprehended, should, in the smallest degree, obstruct his progress הַיָּדָבָר, who, sometimes refers to things, yet so as to include the idea of the human agency connected with them. Before הַיָּדָבָר supply הַיָּדָבָר or הַיָּדָבָר. The interpretation of Stonard, who applies the mountain to the Christian church, is altogether forced and inept. By הַיָּדָבָר הַיָּדָבָר is meant, not any stone uniting the two sides of a building at the top, but the lapis angularis, or foundation stone, on which at the angle both rest, and which, being necessarily much

And he shall bring forth the Chief Stone,

With shouts of Grace ! Grace to it !

8 And the word of Jehovah was communicated to me saying,

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have founded this house,

And his hands shall finish it :

And ye shall know that Jehovah of hosts hath sent me to you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things ?

larger and more ponderous, as well as more serviceable than any other, was fully entitled to the distinctive character of the chief or principal stone. The foundations of the literal temple having already been laid by Zerubbabel, it must be obvious, that the language is merely borrowed from that event, and that his attention is directed to Him of whom David had prophesied as  $\text{בֶּן־אֶבֶן־אֶחָד}$ , the chief or principal corner stone, Ps. cxviii. 26, and who is called in the New Testament,  $\text{Κεφαλὴ γωνίας}$ , and  $\text{Λίθος ἀκρογωνιαίος}$ . Symm. renders:  $\text{τὸν λίθον τὸν ἄκρον}$ ; Theod.  $\text{τὸν λίθον τὸν πρῶτον}$ ; Aq.  $\text{τὸν λίθον τὸν πρωτεύοντα}$ ; all conveying the idea of the primary or principal stone of the building. The LXX. mistaking  $\text{הַרְאֶנִּי הָאֵתְּ$ , render,  $\text{דַּבֵּר לִּי הָאֵתְּ}$ , And he shall reveal his Messiah, who was named of old, and he shall rule over all kingdoms. The introduction of this stone was to be accompanied with acclamations of "Grace, Grace to it."  $\text{הַרְאֵנִי הָאֵתְּ}$ , shouts or acclamations, from  $\text{הָאֵתְּ}$ , to make a noise, shout aloud, cry as a crowd; hence the noun came to signify the shouting of a multitude. The repetition of  $\text{הָאֵתְּ}$ , favor or grace, is for the sake of intensity; and the ascriptions of this favor to the stone ( $\text{אֵתְּ}$ ) implies that it was possessed of this quality, and was to be the medium or means of its conveyance to others. This prediction was clearly fulfilled in our Redeemer. "Grace," or favor, "was poured through his lips." Ps. xlv. 8. At his birth the  $\text{הַרְאֵנִי הָאֵתְּ}$ , acclamations of the heavenly choir, were, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, goodwill toward men." Luke ii. 14. As he approached Jerusalem, the multitudes were loud in their acclaims of "Hosanna to the Son of David. Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord ! Hosanna in the highest." Nor is the phrase, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," of unfrequent occurrence in the New Testament. The usual application of the words to the completion of the work of grace in the soul of a believer, or to the addition of the last convert to the church, is quite incongruous. Whatever grace is possessed by the people of God is altogether derived, and is not to be ascribed to themselves, but to him to whom alone they are indebted for its communication. It may farther be observed, that perhaps the repetition in the phrase  $\text{הָאֵתְּ הָאֵתְּ}$ , Grace, Grace, may have been intended to express the infinite value of the Corner Stone. In Prov. xvii. 8, we read that "a gift is  $\text{אֶבֶן־פְּדָיִם}$ , a precious stone in the eyes of him that hath it;" and one of the qualities of a stone laid for a foundation in Zion is, that it is  $\text{אֶבֶן־פְּדָיִם}$ , precious. Is. xxviii. 16.

9, 10.  $\text{יִסְּרֵנִי}$  is the Preterite of Piel.  $\text{בָּצַע}$  signifies to cut, cut off, bring to an end, finish, in which last acceptation it is here used. The verse contains a positive assurance that the temple should be completed by Zerubbabel. "The day of small things" means the short period which had elapsed since the Jews had begun to rebuild the temple, and the

For those seven eyes of Jehovah
Which run to and fro through the whole earth rejoiced,
When they saw the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel.

- 11 Then I proceeded and said to him, What are these two olive-trees on the right side of the candlestick, and on the left of it?
12 And I proceeded a second time, and said to him, What are the two branches of the olive-trees, which, by means of the two 13 tubes of gold, empty the golden liquid out of themselves? And 14 he spake to me, saying, Knowest thou not what these are? And commencement, which had been inconsiderable and inauspicious. The efforts bore no proportion to the magnitude of the undertaking, and could only provoke the scorn and contempt of unbelievers. בַּב is derived from בָּזָה, as בָּב is from בָּבַב; only with the signification of בָּזָה and בָּזָה, to despise. בָּזָה otherwise signifies to plunder, spoil. With the human estimate of the enterprise, forcibly expressed in the interrogative form, that of Jehovah is strikingly contrasted. His eyes rejoiced when they saw the work marked out by Zerubbabel with the plummet. This instrument was called אֶבְנֵי הַבְּדִיל, the stone of separation, because it consisted of the alloy of lead or tin, which was separated by smelting from the silver ore with which it was combined. The Vau prefixed in וְרָאָה is to be rendered when, as in וְרָאָה, Judges xix. 1. The nominative to וְרָאָה וְשָׂמָהּ is אֶבְנֵי הַבְּדִיל, with which וְרָאָה, as expletive, is in apposition. This, which appears to me to be the only tenable construction, is that given in the margin by our Translators. It relieves the passage from the burden of fanciful conjectures which had been advanced in regard to the meaning, and brings out the simple but encouraging truth, that, how much soever men might despise the commencement of the work in which Zerubbabel and his compatriots were engaged, it was the object of peculiar regard and delight to Divine Providence, which was acquainted with all human designs, and from its universal activity could not only defeat the machinations of enemies, but command the agency of those who should help forward the cause of truth and righteousness. Comp. chap. iii. 9; 2 Chron. xvi. 9; Prov. xv. 3.

11, 12. It is not a little remarkable that the prophet had to put the question three times respecting the two olive-trees, before he received any reply; first, ver. 4; a second time ver. 11; and a third time ver. 12. The question is varied each time, and becomes at last minute and particular. The reason seems to be, that it could scarcely be conceived possible for him not to understand their symbolical reference to the two most remarkable persons with whom he was conversant, Joshua and Zerubbabel. אֶבְנֵי הַבְּדִיל, a branch. LXX. κλάδος, so called from its resemblance to an ear of grain. אֶבְנֵי הַבְּדִיל, a tube or canal, through which oil or any other liquid is poured. The etymology of this quadriliteral is uncertain. LXX. μύσσοι. With the tubes the two branches were exhibited as connected, to indicate the source whence the candlestick was supplied with oil. By וְרָאָה the gold, is meant the oil, which is so called because its purity and brightness resembled those of gold.

14. אֶבְנֵי הַבְּדִיל, בְּנֵי הַבְּדִיל, two sons of oil, i. e. two anointed ones, Joshua and Zerubbabel, who are so called, because, when installed into office, they had oil poured upon their heads as a symbol of the gifts and influences of the Holy Spirit, which alone could fit them rightly to discharge their important functions. Their services to the new state were of such value that they might well be represented as furnishing it instrumentally with what was necessary for enabling it to answer the purposes of its establishment. הַעֲמִידִים עַל is elliptical for — הַעֲמִידִים עַל־פְּנֵי, who stand before. The phrase expresses the posture of servants waiting to receive orders from their masters.

I said, No, my lord. Then he said, These are the two anointed ones, that stand before the Lord of the whole earth.

CHAPTER V.

THE two visions exhibited in this chapter are of a very different character from any of the foregoing, and were designed to furnish striking and instructive warnings to such of the Jews as might refuse to render obedience to the law of God, and might not have been thoroughly weaned from idolatry. In verses 1—4, is the description of a flying roll, presented to the view of the prophet, on which were inscribed the threatenings of the Divine law, which still remained in all their force, and were ever ready to be executed upon transgressors. In verses 5—11, the means are emblematically set forth which Jehovah had employed for the entire removal of idolatry from the Holy Land, and its abandonment to mingle with its native elements in Babylon — the land of graven images.

1 AND I again raised my eyes, and looked, and, behold! a flying roll. And he said to me, What seest thou? And I said, I see a flying roll, the length of which is twenty cubits, and the

VISION VI.

1. For the adverbial use of כְּרֹלָה see on chap. iv. 1. כְּרֹלָה, a volume or roll, from the root כָּלַל, to roll. The ancients wrote upon the inner bark of trees, which was rolled up for the sake of convenience, and for the better preservation of the writing. They also used rolls of papyrus and of the dressed skins of animals. Aq. and Theod. render the word by διφδέρα, a skin or parchment; Symm. by κεφαλῆς, the term by which the LXX. have rendered it, Ps. xl. 8. Mistaking כְּרֹלָה for כְּרֹלָה, they have here translated it δρέπανον, a scythe or sickle.

2. The roll here described was of large dimensions, more than ten yards in length, by upwards of five in breadth. To compose such a roll several skins had to be sewed together, as we find to be the case with the Jewish Megillahs, or rolls containing the Pentateuch and other portions of the Old Testament, read in the synagogue at the present day. One of these synagogue rolls, preserved in the British Museum, contains the Pentateuch, written on forty brown African skins. In the Rabbinical division of the books of the Old Testament, the title of the five Megilloth is given to those of the Song of Solomon, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther; but in Ps. xl. 8, the term כְּרֹלָה is applied by way of eminence to the roll or book of the law. The large size of the roll seems to have been intended to indicate the number of the curses which it contained. The circumstance, that the di-

3 breadth of it ten cubits. And he said to me, This is the curse which goeth forth over the face of the whole land; for every one that stealeth shall be cleared away on this side, according to it, and every one that sweareth shall be cleared away on that 4 side, according to it. I bring it forth, saith Jehovah of hosts, and it shall enter the house of him that stealeth, and the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name, and it shall continue in the midst of his house, and destroy it, and its wood, and its stones.

mensions of the roll correspond to those of the porch of the temple, 1 Kings vi. 3, seems rather to be accidental than intended to convey any specific instruction. The participle פָּעֵף, flying, expresses the velocity with which the judgments denounced in the volume would come upon the wicked.

3. הַלְלָהּ רָסַר, this is, or signifies, represents the curse, a phrase altogether parallel with that used by our Lord when instituting the sacred supper: τούτο ἔστω τὸ σῶμα μου; in Heb. רָסַר אֲנִי הַלְלָהּ, this is, i. e. represents my body. הַלְלָהּ, curse, is to be taken as a collective, comprehending all the curses denounced against transgressors of the Divine law. After אֲנִי הַלְלָהּ supply הַלְלָהּ אֲנִי, “from the presence of Jehovah.” Because אֲנִי הַלְלָהּ, on this side and on that, is used when the writing of the law on both sides of the tables is spoken of, Exod. xxxii. 15, Abenezra, Kimchi, Rosenmüller, Hengstenberg, and some other interpreters, have argued in favor of the position, that the roll, like that of Ezek. ii. 9, 10, was also written in this manner; but the immediate construction of the pronoun with הַלְלָהּ in both instances shows that it cannot be maintained. Reference is had to the place where the transgressor may be. From that place, whether on the right hand or on the left, he should be swept away by the Divine judgment. Nowhere should he find protection. The curse went forth over the whole land. It has been properly remarked, that an individual example of transgression is selected from each of the two tables of the law: הַלְלָהּ, he who stealeth, standing for those who break the rule of duty in regard to their neighbor; and פָּעֵף, he who sweareth, for those who are guilty of a violation of such duties as have immediate reference to God. הַלְלָהּ is not to be taken here in the sense of treating as innocent, but with the signification of emptying, clearing, sweeping clean away. Comp. Is. iii. 26; Jer. xxx. 11. It is in the Niphal conjugation, the form of which is the same as that of Piel. The ancient translators are at fault here, having mistaken הַלְלָהּ for עָקַף. Thus the LXX. ἐκδικηθήσεται; Symm. δίκην δώσῃ. Nor can the rendering of Stonard, “pladeth not guilty,” be sustained. הַלְלָהּ, like, or according to it, if fully expressed, would be כַּכְּתוּב בַּלְלָהּ, according as it is written, referring to the curse or threatening inscribed upon the roll. Thus Jerome, sicut ibi scriptum est.

4. The pronominal affix in הַלְלָהּ refers to הַלְלָהּ in the preceding verse. הַלְלָהּ is an aggravation of הַלְלָהּ. The punctuation of הַלְלָהּ is irregular for הַלְלָהּ, the third feminine of the preterite of הַלְלָהּ, which one of De Rossi's MSS. exhibits. הַלְלָהּ not merely signifies to turn aside and spend the night in any place, but also to remain permanently. See Ps. xlix. 13. הַלְלָהּ = הַלְלָהּ. A like curse was pronounced by the Delphic oracle against perjury:

—— Κραϊνὸς δὲ μετέρχεται, εἰσόκε πᾶσαν,
Συμμάρφας ὀλέσει γενεὴν καὶ οἶκον ἅπαντα. Herodot. vi. 86.

5 Then the angel who spake with me came forth, and said to me, Raise thine eyes, now, and look what this is that cometh 6 forth. And I said, What is it? And he said, This is the ephah that cometh forth. He said, moreover, This is their appearance 7 in all the land. And, behold! a round piece of lead, and there 8 was a woman sitting in the midst of the ephah. And he said;

VISION VII.

5. אָנֹכִי, came forth, i. e. came again into view to explain the new vision.

6. The ephah was one of the larger Jewish corn measures, containing about an English bushel, or seven gallons and a half. The LXX. give it simply by τὸ μετρητόν. Symm. leaves it untranslated, οἴφι, which presents it pretty much in its Egyptian form, which was  $\Omega\Omega\Omega$ .

Comp. the Arab. وَيْبَة. Some have supposed that it is not to be specifically understood of the measure so called, on the ground that such a measure could not have contained the woman mentioned ver. 7; but the assumption is altogether gratuitous, since there is no necessity for maintaining that the female represented was actually in appearance of the ordinary size. There is equally little foundation for the interpretation of the Targum, that the use of false measures was intended by this item of the vision. עֵינֵיהֶם, their eye, has been variously regarded by different translators and expositors. The LXX., Arab., and Syr., have read עֲוֹנוֹתֵיהֶם, their iniquity, which many think much more suited to the connection, but this reading is supported by only one of De Rossi's MSS. It is clear from what Jerome says on the subject, that the text was the same in his day as we have it at present. The latter reading is adopted by Houbigant, Newcome, and others of the same school. That עֵינֵיהֶם signifies appearance, or that which presents itself to the eye, is fully established by reference to Lev. xiii. 55; Numb. xi. 7; Ezek. i. 4, 7, x. 9; and this signification is appropriately applicable in the present passage. Hengstenberg, taking the word in its primary acceptation, considers the meaning to be that their eye was universally set on evil; it was the effort of the whole people to fill up the measure of their sins, and thereby bring upon themselves a full measure of divine punishment. When it is said that the ephah (for this is the nominative to the latter עֵינֵיהֶם, this is), was their appearance, the language is metonymical; the container being used for the thing contained, i. e. הַרְשָׁעוּת, wickedness, or idolatry, as further explained, ver. 8.

7. The עֵינֵיהֶם contracted for עֵינֵיהֶם, what is round or globular, from עָרַר, to go round, was the heaviest weight in use among the Hebrews, being equal to 3000 shekels, or, according to Jahn, 125 pounds, English troy weight. Luther renders it here by centner, or hundred-weight; but it is obviously to be taken, not in its strict estimate as a measure, but in its etymological import, as signifying a flat, roundish lump or cake of lead, yet not without some respect to its heaviness, in consideration of the end it was designed to serve—the security of the woman in the vessel over which it was placed. To express the idea of weight it is called עֵינֵיהֶם, a stone, in the following verse. עֵינֵיהֶם is the feminine participle in Niphal. עֵינֵיהֶם, does not refer to the talent or weight going before, but to עֵינֵיהֶם immediately following, and is equivalent to there was. The woman was placed in the ephah in order to be conveyed to Babylon.

8. By עֵינֵיהֶם in this place is meant idolatry, which was the most flagrant kind of wickedness with respect to God, and the fruitful parent of every other

This is wickedness. And he threw her down in the midst of the ephah, and threw the weight of lead on the mouth of it.
 9 Then I raised my eyes and looked, and, behold! two women came forth, and the wind was in their wings, for they had wings like the wings of a stork; and they bore away the ephah between earth and heaven. Then I said to the angel who spake
 10 with me, Whither are these conveying the ephah? And he said to me, To build for it a house in the land of Shinar; for it shall be set up, and placed there on its own base.

species of iniquity. To mark it more emphatically, the article is prefixed.  $\eta\text{-לִשְׁתִּי}$ , as used both times, conveys the idea of a forcible action. In the preceding verse the woman is represented as already sitting in the midst of the ephah; the action here described may either be carried back to a period preceding the vision, or it may be intended to indicate what was further done, in order to cause her to occupy a lower position in the vessel, so as to allow of the leaden cover being thrown over her. The latter is the more probable interpretation. Jarchi is of opinion that the feminine suffix in  $\eta\text{-פִּי}$ , her mouth, refers to the woman; but it can alone with propriety be referred to the ephah.

9. The two females here mentioned are regarded by Maurer and Hengstenberg as merely belonging, by way of coloring, to the symbol as such, two persons being required to carry so large a measure as the ephah. I should rather, however, infer that the Assyrian and Babylonian powers are intended, by which, as instruments, God removed idolatry in the persons of the apostate Hebrews out of the holy land. By their having the wind in their wings is conveyed the idea of the celerity of their motion.  $\eta\text{-תִּרְחֹק}$ , the stork, so called from the affection which both the parent bird and her young show to each other. Aq., who frequently gives the etymology of Hebrew words, renders it Ἐρωδῖος, in which he is followed by Theod. and Symm. This Greek term is derived from ἔρως, love. The large wings of the stork greatly accelerate its flight, when aided by the wind. In  $\eta\text{-שְׁתִּי}$  is an elision of the letter ס, the third radical, for  $\eta\text{-שְׁסִי}$ , which is found in a great number of MSS. and some of the earliest printed editions.

10. Instead of the defective orthography  $\eta\text{-כִּי־לֵבִי}$ , many MSS. and some editions read in full,  $\eta\text{-כִּי־לֵבִי}$ .

11.  $\eta\text{-אֶרֶץ־שִׁנְאָר}$ , the land of Shinar, is rendered in the LXX.  $\gamma\eta\text{-Βαβυλωνος}$ , and in the Targ.  $\eta\text{-אֶרֶץ־בָּבֶל}$ , which is the proper interpretation.  $\eta\text{-בָּבֶל}$  is to be construed with  $\eta\text{-בָּבֶל}$ , and  $\eta\text{-הַיְיָהוּהוּ}$  with  $\eta\text{-אֶרֶץ־שִׁנְאָר}$ , including the idea of the woman, or of idolatry, of which she was the symbol. To the latter also the affix in  $\eta\text{-אֶרֶץ־שִׁנְאָר}$  belongs.

In this striking hieroglyphic we are taught how idolatry, with all its accompanying atrocities, was removed from the land of the Hebrews, which it had desecrated, to a country devoted to it, and where it was to commingle with its native elements, never to be re-imported into Canaan. How exactly has the prediction been fulfilled! From the time of the captivity to the present, a period of more than two thousand years, the Hebrew people have never once lapsed into idolatry! The whole vision was intended to convince them of the greatness of the evil.

CHAPTER VI.

HAVING warned the Jews against indulging in the evil practices which had occasioned their removal to Babylon, Jehovah now, in another vision, exhibits to their view the warlike and unsettled state of political affairs in the immediate future, during the reigns of Darius and his successors, 1—8. Most commentators seem to have concurred in the opinion expressed by Munster: “Hæc visio est valde obscura.” The symbols are in themselves simple, consisting of four chariots drawn by horses of different colors, which issue from between two mountains of copper, and proceed in different directions with respect to the land of Palestine. That they betoken certain dispensations of Divine Providence, in reference to the nations by which the Jews were immediately surrounded, and by whose fate they were more or less affected, appears to be the most consistent position that can be assumed in interpreting them, especially as such is the application of similar symbols elsewhere in the prophetic records. The colors of the horses denote, as usual, the character of these dispensations, as either calamitous, prosperous, or mixed. Comp. chap. i. 8; Rev. vi.

This vision, which is the last, is followed by a splendid prophecy of the Messiah in his co-ordinate offices of Priest and King, to typify which the symbolical action of making two crowns and placing them upon the head of Joshua, is ordained by Divine authority, 9—15.

1 AND I raised my eyes again, and looked, and, behold! four chariots came forth from between two mountains, and the mountains were mountains of copper. In the first chariot were red horses; and in the second chariot black horses; and in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot were piebald

1. For the idiom אֲנִי וְכָל־בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל, see on ch. iv. 1. Considering that the events referred to are those of war, it is most natural to infer that war-chariots are here intended. By mountains of copper are meant solid, strong and durable mountains, such as those in which copper and other metals are ordinarily found. Comp. Jer. i. 18. Of what these mountains were designed to be the symbols, or whether they are introduced merely as an ornamental part of the vision, have been matters of dispute. I am strongly inclined to regard them as emblems of the Medes and Persians, and thus corresponding to the two horns of the ram which are employed by Daniel to denote the same people. See chap. viii. 3, 4. From between these, or from the powerful empire which they formed, the instruments of Divine Providence were to proceed to execute his purposes in punishing the nations. That mountains are employed in the figurative language of prophecy to signify kingdoms or governments, see Is. ii. 2, xli. 15; Jer. li. 25; Dan. ii. 35.

2, 3. The red horses are symbolical of war and bloodshed; the black, of general calamity and distress; the white, of victory and prosperity; and the piebald grays, of a dispensation, mixed in its character, partly prosperous, and partly adverse. The last word, אֲנִי וְכָל־בְּנֵי־יִשְׂרָאֵל, would seem most naturally to be referrible to the root אָנַן, to be strong, active, etc.; and this mode of solution would at once be satisfactory were there no qualifying circumstances in the immediate context to require another interpretation. But as all the other terms here employed in describing the horses are expressive of colors, we should expect something of the same character to be intended by the

4 gray horses. I then proceeded and said to the angel who spake
5 with me, What are these, my lord? And the angel answered and said to me, These are the four spirits of heaven, coming 6 forth from presenting themselves before the Lord of the whole earth. That and the black horses in it are going forth into the north country; and the white go forth to the west of them; and word in question. I, therefore, prefer adopting a derivation from the Arab. مض, leviter splenduit, and regard it as qualifying בְּרִידִים, immediately preceding. Thus, the Targ. אֲשֶׁר בְּרִידֵי אֲשֶׁר, ash-colored gray; so that the most appropriate rendering of the two terms will be spotted, or piebald grays.

5. Though the phrase רָהֳרֹת רַבִּיבִים is that employed chap. ii. 10, (Heb.) to denote the four quarters of the horizon, yet, that it cannot have this meaning in the present instance, is evident from its being added that the רָהֳרֹת are such as had taken their station, or presented themselves before the Lord, in order to receive their commissions for the execution of his will. In our common version, therefore, the words are properly rendered as to the meaning, spirits of the heavens; or, as we now commonly say, celestial spirits, thereby meaning angels. These are represented, as in Job i. 6; ii. 1, as employed by God to carry into effect his high behests, which they receive in his immediate presence, and then proceed to the different quarters of the globe in which the special operations of Divine Providence are to be carried forward.

6. By אֲרָצוֹת צָפוֹן, the north country, we are to understand, as usual, the land of Babylon. Comp. Jer. iii. 18, vi. 22, x. 22, xli. 10; Zech. ii. 10. Though that empire had been subdued by Cyrus, yet the Babylonians revolted in the beginning of the fifth year of Darius, on which that monarch besieged them with all his forces; and, after much devastation, completely depopulated it, and reduced it to solitude. To set forth symbolically this fearful event, black-colored horses are represented as conveying into the country the executioner of the Divine indignation upon that devoted people. It is remarkable that the red-colored horses, which had been introduced into the vision, ver. 2, are entirely passed over. The reason may, perhaps, be, that, disastrous as was the final destruction of Babylon, it was unaccompanied with anything like the quantity of bloodshed which characterized the battles of conflicting armies in the open field, though at the commencement there was every appearance of much blood being shed. Notwithstanding, therefore, the chariot with the red horses appeared along with the others, it seems to be intimated, by no further notice having been taken of it, that it was not employed. The white horses, denoting victory and prosperity, point out the successes of Darius in different parts of Greece, which, though checked by the battle of Marathon, contributed to the strengthening of his power in that quarter. The phrase, אֲחֵרֵיהֶם, literally means behind them, but geographically, to the west of them. That it is to be so taken here, the use of אֲחֵרֵיהֶם, to, corresponding with the use of the same preposition after the verb, both before and after in the verse, sufficiently shows. The dappled horses were symbolical of the varied condition of the Persian affairs, which followed the battle of Marathon, especially the changes which took place on the death of Darius, and the expedition of Xerxes for the reduction of Egypt. This last circumstance is particularly pointed at in the reference, אֲרָצוֹת צָפוֹן, the country of the South. That by תֵּמָן, Teman, we are not here to understand the city or region so called on the east of Idumea, but a land to the

- 7 the piebald go forth to the south country. And the grays went forth, and asked to go to walk to and fro through the land; and he said, Go, walk to and fro through the land; and they walked to and fro through the land.
- 8 Then he summoned me and said to me, See, those that went to the north country have appeased my anger in the north country.
- 9 And the word of Jehovah was communicated to me, saying:
 10 Take from the captivity, from Heldai, from Tobijah, and from south of Palestine, is obvious from the article being prefixed, and from a comparison of the use of the term in such passages as the following, Job ix. 9; Is. xliii. 6. It is synonymous with רַמְיִן, on the right hand, which geographically means the South, and here specifically signifies Egypt, to express which Daniel uses the word נִבְּב, chap. xi. 40.

7. אֶרֶץ, the land here referred to, but not described by any qualifying epithet, must be understood of the country of Palestine, the peculiar features of the dispensation of Providence with respect to which are marked by two circumstances: the gray color of the horses, which indicated the mixed state of the Jewish affairs till the time of Artaxerxes Mne-mon; and the form of the verb הִלְכּוּ, to go or walk, which is in Hithpael, and signifies to go about, or to walk up and down. They were not to be molested by the hostile incursion of foreign armies, but neither were they to be free from annoyances. Accordingly, we find them involved in troubles by Sanballat, and other chiefs of the Samaritans; and, as the Persian army marched through Palestine to attack the Egyptians in the reign of Darius Nothus, the inhabitants must have been exposed to numerous inconveniences, which they could not but feel the more severely, owing to their having only just begun to take possession of their patrimonial inheritances. On the other hand, the appointment of Nehemiah to be governor of Judea, and other favors conferred by the Persian monarch, were calculated to mitigate their distress, and inspire them with the hope of a complete and happy restoration to the enjoyment of their ancient privileges. These dappled horses supply the place of the red, specified ver. 2, but are omitted in the explanation, ver. 6, so that the number of chariots is still four.

8. The nominative to נִינְזַקְתִּי must either be Jehovah, or the Angel of Jehovah, understood as the pronominal affix in רַחֲמֵי, "my anger," shows. That among other significations רַחַם has that of anger, see Jud. viii. 3; Eccles. x. 4; Is. xxxiii. 11. The phrase, רַחֲמֵי רַחַם, to cause anger to rest, is equivalent to הִרְיַת הַרְיָה, Ezek. v. 13, xvi. 42, xxiv. 13; and means to satisfy, pacify. The final judgment having been inflicted upon Babylon, the Divine displeasure should no more be manifested in that direction.

The tendency of the whole vision was to assure the Jews of the care and protection of their covenant God, and thus lead them to exercise confidence in him, while prosecuting the restoration of the temple and their former institutions.

9—11. Here commences a separate prophecy, calculated, like the preceding vision, to stimulate the Jews in their work. That what was commanded was actually performed by the prophet, and that it was not done in vision, seems the only tenable construction that can be put upon it. The infinitive לִלְכּוֹת, at the beginning of the 9th verse, is to be taken in connection with the finite form of the same verb at that of the 11th, both having בְּמַסְפָּתָם for their object.

Jedaiah, who are come from Babylon, and enter thou on that 11 day, yea, enter the house of Josiah the son of Zephaniah; yea, take silver and gold, and make crowns, and place them upon the head of Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high priest; and speak 12 to him, saying, Thus speaketh Jehovah of hosts, saying:

The preposition which is prefixed to the following nouns is not to be taken partitively, as if some of the captivity, and one of each of the families, the heads of which are supposed to be here specified, were meant, but is used in its primary and most common signification. The persons named appear to have formed a deputation from the  $\text{הַגָּלוּת}$ , captives still remaining in Babylon, who had sent them with contributions in gold and silver to help forward the building of the temple at Jerusalem. These deputies had deposited their gifts in the house of Josiah, to which the prophet is commanded to repair and take what was necessary for making the two crowns which were to be placed on the head of the high priest. It is not improbable that Josiah was public treasurer at the time. The language of Zechariah is here more heavy and verbose than usual, which has occasioned some difficulty to interpreters. Instead of  $\text{שְׁנֵי קְרָנִים אֶתְּנוּ לְיֹשִׁיָּא בְּנֵי יְהוָה}$ , two of Kennicott's MSS., the LXX., Syr., and Targ., read  $\text{אֶתְּנוּ}$  in the singular, and restrict the declaration to Josiah, mentioned immediately before; but there can be little doubt that this various reading is merely an emendation of some copyist, who took Josiah, and not the three persons spoken of at the beginning of the verse, to be the subject of the predicate. To remove the ambiguity, our translators have properly connected the words immediately with the names of the persons to whom they belong. Hengstenberg contends that only one crown is intended, and that the plural form  $\text{קְרָנִים}$ , is to be referred to several small crowns or diadems of which it consisted. With many other interpreters, he adduces in support of the opinion the δια- θήματα πολλά, many crowns, which are described as being upon the head of the Saviour, Rev. xix. 12; but the reference there is purely to the crown of a conqueror, composed of many diadems, which Christ is represented as wearing, as a symbol of the numerous victories he had won over the enemies of his church. It appears, however, essential to the thing signified, namely, the priestly and regal offices, that they should have been distinct crowns, in which case either the one may have been placed upon the head of Joshua after the other, or they may have been joined together so as to form a double crown, and so placed upon his head at once. What favors the latter view of the subject is the circumstance, that the plural  $\text{קְרָנִים}$  is construed with  $\text{אֶתְּנוּ}$ , the singular of the substantive verb, ver. 14. Maurer not inaptly illustrates this by a reference to the triple crown or the tiara of the popes, by which they arrogate to themselves a higher degree of dignity than that of Him whose servants they profess to be.

12. The symbolical action performed upon Joshua as representative of the Messiah is here followed by an explanatory prophecy, in which his person, offices, and work are distinctly set forth. For the signification of  $\text{יֵשׁוּעַ}$ , BRANCH, see on Is. iv. 2. That the Messiah is meant must be evident to all who will impartially compare Is. iv. 2; Jer. xxiii. 5, xxxiii. 15; Zech. iii. 8. Thus the Targ. expounds  $\text{הוּא גְבוּרָה מְשִׁיחָא קְרָנִים אֶתְּנוּ לְיֹשִׁיָּא בְּנֵי יְהוָה}$ , "Behold the Man, MESSIAH is his name; who is to be revealed." The same view is taken by Moses Hadarsan: the הוּא אֵלֶּי אֶשְׁ-אָקִיחַ מִכֶּם אִיךְ לִי אֵב שֵׁן הַנֶּחֱמָה "The Redeemer whom I will raise up from you shall have no father, as it is said; Behold the man, whose name is Zemach,

Behold the man whose name is THE BRANCH,

For he shall grow up out of his place,

And he shall build the temple of Jehovah.

13 Even he shall build the temple of Jehovah,

And he shall bear the glory ;

and he shall grow up from his place." The Rabbins Jarchi, Abenezra, and Kimchi, and after them, Bauer and Ewald, suppose Zerubbabel to be intended. The last-mentioned writer, after the example of Eichhorn and Theiner, conjectures that, instead of בְּרֹאשׁ יְהוֹשֻׁעַ, on the head of Joshua, the text has originally read, בְּרֹאשׁ זְרֻבְבָּל וּבְרֹאשׁ יְהוֹשֻׁעַ, on the head of Zerubbabel, and on the head of Joshua. But who does not perceive that this conjecture is to be traced to the mere love of hypothesis. Maurer scruples not to regard it as doing violence to the passage. The application of the words to Zerubbabel is decidedly rejected by Abarbanel, notwithstanding his bigoted hostility to the Messianic interpretations. The words of the text can apply to no one who was not a priest ; for it is expressly declared that such was to be the official character of him who is the subject of discourse. And that neither Joshua nor any of his descendants could be meant, is evident from the fact, that they could not exercise the regal power, none of them being entitled to occupy the throne. Simon Maccabæus, to whom Michaelis applies the prophecy, never filled the kingly office ; he was merely commander of the army, and civil governor, subject to the kings of Syria. Instead of building the temple, as is here predicted of the Branch, he erected a splendid palace for himself on the mountain on which the temple stood. Nor did the work of repairing it, after it had been pillaged by Antiochus Epiphanes, devolve upon him, but upon his brother Judas. Besides, the declaration that the Branch should be invested with the honor or glory connected with the building of the temple, would be at variance with the uniform ascription of the glory of all great undertakings to Jehovah and not to man, wherever in Scripture such works are represented as carried on under the special direction of the Most High. In the phrase, וַיִּצְמַח מִמְּקוֹמוֹ, and he shall sprout forth from his place, while there is a direct reference to the name מָצַח, here given to the Messiah, there seems to be no very indistinct allusion to the miraculous conception. מִמְּקוֹמוֹ, his place, the place which was peculiar to him. The interpretation, that "under him there shall be growth," which is adopted by Cyril, Jerome, Luther, Calovius, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, applying it to the church, the body of believers, or the affairs of Messiah's kingdom, is to be rejected on the ground of its not being warranted by Scripture usage. By בְּיָמָיו יִבְנֶה יְהוָה יְהוּדָה, the temple of Jehovah, which the Messiah was to build, the material temple then in the course of erection cannot be understood, for that was to be carried on and completed by Zerubbabel, chap. iv. 9. But, as we have just seen, Zerubbabel and the Branch are not identical. We are, therefore, compelled to interpret the phrase in application to the New Testament church, which is frequently spoken of as a temple, 1 Cor. iii. 17 ; 2 Cor. vi. 16 ; Eph. ii. 22 ; 2 Thess. ii. 4 ; and respecting which the Messiah himself declares, "Upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. xvi. 18.

13. The repetition יְהוָה יִבְנֶה יְהוּדָה יְהוּדָה is not, as has been conjectured, to be ascribed to an error of some transcriber, and on the authority of the LXX., Arab., and Syr., to be expunged as superfluous, but is singularly in its place, as giving a high degree of emphasis to the statement made respecting the personal work of the Messiah. The

And he shall sit and rule upon his throne,
 And shall be a priest upon his throne,
 And the counsel of peace shall be between them both.

14 And the crowns shall be for Helem and for Tobijah, and for Jedaiah, and for Hen the son of Zephaniah, for a memorial in erection of the spiritual temple was to be effected exclusively through his mediation. With the declaration, that he should "bear the glory," compare Ps. xxi. 5, cii. 16; Is. lii. 13; Heb. ii. 9. The declaration has reference to the crowns, the insignia of glory and majesty, which were to be placed on the head of Joshua. In the following clauses of the verse the union of the regal and sacerdotal offices in the person of the Messiah is distinctly set forth, thus exhibiting the peculiar feature of the Melchizedekian priesthood, Gen. xiv. 18; Ps. cx. 4; Heb. v. 6, 10, vi. 20, vii. While our Lord continues to officiate in the heavenly temple as the Great High Priest of his people, ever living to make intercession for them, he exercises his mediatorial rule over the world and the church — that over the former being rendered subservient to the administration of that which he exercises over the latter. Vtringa, Reuss, Dr. McCaul, and others, refer the pronominal affix in בְּסֵאתוֹ, "his throne," to Jehovah, or the Deity absolutely considered, but, in my opinion, without sufficient ground. The natural construction requires the person who is prominently before the reader to be the object of reference. The rendering of Newcome, Hitzig, and Ewald, "and a priest shall be upon his throne," is forced and unwarranted; the Vau clearly connecting the substantive verb with the preceding verbs יָשָׁב and יִבְרַךְ, the nominative to which is הוּא, the Branch, or Messiah. The nominatives to יָשָׁב and יִבְרַךְ, "them both," are neither Jehovah and the Messiah, as maintained both by ancient and by many modern interpreters, among others, Cocceius, De Dieu, Vtringa, Bengel, Reuss, Dr. McCaul, and Dr. J. Pye Smith; nor Jews and Gentiles, as Dr. Stonard strangely interprets; but the כֹּהֲנָהּ, priesthood, and the מַגֵּן, regal dignity, which had just been mentioned as unitedly exercised by the Branch. Thus Jerome, Marckius, Drusius, Lowth, Dathe, Rosenmüller, Hengstenberg, and others. The reason assigned by Dathe forms an insurmountable objection to the first opinion: "Quoniam enim Deus in toto hoc loco loquitur, affixum tertiæ personæ in יִבְרַךְ non potest ad Jovam referre." The same objection lies against the reference of the affix in בְּסֵאתוֹ to Jehovah. By שְׁלוֹמֵהֶם, the counsel or purpose of peace, is to be understood the glorious scheme of reconciliation between God and man, effected by the joint exercise of the sacerdotal and regal offices of the Lord Jesus Christ. Comp. Is. ix. 6; Micah v. 5; Eph. ii. 14—17; Col. i. 20, 21; Heb. xiii. 20.

14. Helem is, in all probability, the same as Heldia, ver. 10, and Hen another name of Josiah, there also mentioned. There seems no ground for rendering חֵן, favor, and interpreting it of the hospitality shown to the deputies by Josiah; the construction adopted by Hengstenberg, Maurer and Ewald. The words לְהֵלֵם וְלְתוֹבְיָהוּ וְלְיְדָיָהוּ וְלְהֵנִי, the crowns shall be to Helem, etc., do not mean that they were to belong to the persons specified, but that they were to be for a memorial to them of the symbolical act that had just taken place, and were for this purpose to be deposited in the temple, where it is possible they remained till the Messiah, as high priest and king of his people, had taken possession of his mediatorial throne, when temple, and crowns, and the whole Jewish polity, were taken or destroyed by the Romans.

15 the temple of Jehovah. And those who are far off shall come and build in the temple of Jehovah; and ye shall know that Jehovah of hosts hath sent me to you. And it shall come to pass, if ye will diligently obey the voice of Jehovah your God * * * *

15. This verse contains a striking prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles, together with a solemn warning to the Jews, in which, the sentence being left unfinished, their rejection in consequence of unbelief is forcibly implied. It is a striking instance of ἀποσιώπησι.

---

CHAPTER VII.

THIS and the following chapter are occupied with replies to questions which had been proposed for solution, relative to certain fasts which the Jews had observed, but which they supposed might no longer be binding after the restoration of their prosperity, 1—3. From this circumstance Zechariah is commanded to take occasion to reprove them for their selfish observance of the days appointed for fasting, 4—7; to enforce attention to the weightier matters of the law, 8—10; and to warn them, by placing before them the rebellious conduct of their fathers, and the punishment with which it had been visited, 11—14.

1 AND it came to pass in the fourth year of Darius the king, that the word of Jehovah was communicated to Zechariah on 2 the fourth day of the ninth month, which is Chislev; when Bethel sent Sherezzer, Regem-melech and his men, to conciliate

1. The occurrence here described took place two years later than those described in the preceding chapters. כִּסְלֵוֹ, Chislev, the name of the ninth month of the Hebrews, which corresponds to part of November and part of December. Some think it is of Persic origin, but the idea of torpor, rigidity, stiffness, which is conveyed by the Heb. כִּסְלֵוֹ, is sufficient to justify its being referred to this root; such being the character assumed by nature in the course of this month. The ב prefixed may be regarded as the Beth essentie.

2. The words בֵּית־חַוִּילָה בְּיָמֵינוּ have occasioned considerable perplexity to interpreters. Some of the earlier Jews took Bethel to be the name of a person. Lightfoot supposes that it means the congregation of the Jews who had remained in Babylon. To the same effect Michælis, "The congregation of God at Shazerer," though he acknowledges he had no idea of the geographical position of the city so called. Hengstenberg and Maurer think the people of the Jews are intended. The Vulg., Grotius, Dathe, Newcome, De Wette, and Arnheim, supply בֵּית־חַוִּילָה before the word, and render, "to the house of God." The LXX., Syr., Targ., Drusius, Blayney, Hitzig, and Ewald, regard it as the name of the city so called, in the tribe of Benjamin; only the ancient versions just specified repre-

3 the regard of Jehovah, speaking to the priests which were in the house of Jehovah of hosts, and to the prophets, saying: Shall I weep in the fifth month, separating myself as I have done these many years?

4 Then the word of Jehovah of hosts was communicated to me, saying: Speak to all the people of the land, and to the priests, 5 saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and in the seventh month, even those seventy years, was it at all to me that 6 ye fasted? And when ye ate, and when ye drank, was it not sent it as the place to which the deputation was sent. Against the interpretation which explains it of the temple, there lies the insuperable objection, that that sacred edifice is uniformly called בֵּית יְהוָה, the house of Jehovah,—never בֵּית-אֱלֹהִים, the house of God; and that it should have been so designated after the recovery of the Jews from idolatry is altogether incredible, considering the infamy attached to the city so named. I entirely concur in the last opinion, which refers it to the city of Bethel, which is used by metonymy for its inhabitants. The word occupies its proper place as the nominative to the verb, which cannot here be taken impersonally, as such construction would exclude all reference to those who sent the deputation, a circumstance not to be reconciled with the express specification of the names of the persons who composed it. לִפְנֵי הַיָּהוָה, lit. to stroke the face, to ingratiate oneself with another, conciliate his regard.

3. The city having been introduced in the preceding verse as sending the deputation, speaks here in the first person singular. Comp. 1 Sam. x. 10; 2 Sam. xx. 19; Zech. viii. 21. The question related to the continuance of the fast in the fifth month, which had been instituted to commemorate the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. As the city was now being restored, it was presumed there would no longer be any necessity for keeping up the humiliating memorial. הֲאֵינִי שׂוֹמֵר is not simply, Shall I fast? but, Shall I continue to fast? The following words indicate, that it was felt to be a tedious and irksome performance of duty. The persons speaking were thoroughly weary of it. וַיִּזְדָּרֵךְ, the infinitive in Niphal of זָדָרַךְ, to separate, consecrate, vow; in Niphal, to abstain from food, and the ordinary employments of life.

5, 6. Though the question had been proposed by the leading men of a single city only, yet the burden was generally felt, on which account the prophet is directed to address the Divine reply to all the inhabitants of the land, the priests not excepted, who appear to have been desirous of getting rid of the fast as well as others. Their fasts had not been performed from a purely religious motive, but were self-righteous and hypocritical. While they observed them, they neglected the weightier matters of the law. At וַיִּזְדָּרֵךְ is an ellipsis of the finite form of the same verb. In וַיִּזְדָּרֵךְ אֲנִי there is a double idiom, which renders it peculiarly emphatic. Not only is the finite form used after the infinitive of the same verb; but the nominative of the personal pronoun is employed after the usual verbal suffix. Comp. Gen. xxvii. 34. וַיִּזְדָּרֵךְ אֲנִי בַּשְּׁבִיעִתָּה. The fast in the seventh month was in commemoration of the murder of Gedaliah, and those who were with him at Mispah. See 2 Kings xxv. 25, 26; Jer. xli. 1—3. Neither in fasting nor in feasting had the Jews any regard to Jehovah, but did all from self-interested motives. The feasting referred to is that which took place on the festival days, which were always days of rejoicing.

- 7 ye that ate, and ye that drank? Are not these the words which Jehovah proclaimed by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and at peace, and her cities around her, when both the south and the plain were inhabited?
- 8 And the word of Jehovah was communicated to Zechariah, saying,
- 9 Thus spake Jehovah of hosts, saying:
Execute true judgment,
And show kindness and mercy one to another;
- 10 Oppress not the widow and the orphan,
The stranger and the poor;
And think not in your heart of the injury
Which one hath done to another.
- 11 But they refused to attend,
And turned their back rebelliously;
They made their ears heavy,
That they might not hear.
- 12 They made their heart an adamant,
That they might not hear the law,
Nor the words which Jehovah sent by his Spirit
Through the former prophets;
And there was great wrath from Jehovah of hosts.
- 13 And it came to pass,
When he called and they would not hear,
So they called, and I would not hear,
Saith Jehovah of hosts,

7. The former prophets had taught the worthlessness of attention to meats and drinks while God was forgotten, and the weightier matters of his law neglected. If the Jews had listened to, and complied with, the messages of the prophets, none of the evils which had come upon them would have been inflicted. For "the former prophets," see on chap. i. 4. By the "south and the plain," are meant the southern and western parts of Judah.

9. אָזְנֵי is here to be taken in the strictly past tense, as the beginning of the 11th verse clearly shows.

10. Though אֵינִי intervenes between וְיָדַעְתָּ and אֲזַיְרֶיךָ they are to be regarded as in construction. Comp. Is. xix. 8;

Hos. xiv. 3. No one was to harbor any feelings of resentment against another for any injury he might have done him.

11. וְנָתַתְּ בְּתֶמֶךְ, to give the shoulder, is equivalent to turning the back upon any one. The cause of such action is traced to a refractory, rebellious, and intractable disposition. The בֵּ prefixed in בְּתֶמֶךְ is privative.

12. אֲדָמָה signifies both a thorn and a diamond, from the Arab. أدوم, to pierce,

Here the idea of hardness is that conveyed by its use. In וְיָדַעְתָּ בְּיָדֵינוּ הַזֵּאת the double agency by which the Divine will was communicated is recognized — that of the inspiring Spirit, and that of the instruments inspired.

- 14 But tossed them among all the nations which they knew not,
 And the land was desolate after them ;
 No one passed through or returned,
 For they had made the land of delight desolate.

14.  $\text{עֲשָׂהָה}$  is an anomalous form, the land of delight, Canaan. Comp. Jer. after the Aramæan manner, according iii. 19. Maurer proposes to take  $\text{עֲשָׂהָה}$  impersonally. Others more properly consider the Jews to be the nominative, who Regularly, it would be  $\text{עָשָׂהָה}$ . It is by their crimes, had brought judgments upon the land. of the Piel conjugation.  $\text{עָשָׂהָה}$   $\text{עָשָׂהָה}$

CHAPTER VIII.

THIS chapter is a continuation of the subject introduced and treated of in the preceding. Having shown the awful consequences of disregarding the Divine will, which had been clearly announced by the prophets, God promises the renewal of his favor towards those who had returned from the captivity. Restored to purity, 3, Jerusalem should enjoy security and prosperity to a degree far exceeding the conceptions of those whom the prophet addressed, 4—6. Those who were still in heathen countries should be brought back, and share in the general prosperity, 7—17. The chapter closes with a direct answer to the question relating to the fasts, and a prediction of the great number of proselytes that should be made to the true religion by the display of the Divine goodness towards the Jews, 18—23.

- 1 AND the word of Jehovah was communicated to me, saying :
 2 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :

I have been zealous for Zion with great zeal,
 Yea, with great indignation have I been zealous for her.

- 3 Thus saith Jehovah, I am returned to Zion,
 And will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem ;
 And Jerusalem shall be called, The city of truth,
 And the mountain of Jehovah of hosts, The holy mountain.

- 4 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :

1. Before  $\text{אֵלַי}$  the word  $\text{אֵלַי}$ , to me, is found in thirty-three Heb. MSS. ; it has been in ten more originally, and is now in three by correction ; it is the reading of the Soncin., Brixian, and Complutensian editions, and is supported by the Syr. and Targ.

2. Comp. i. 14, 15.

3. Comp. Is. i. 26, and the remarks there made on the idiomatic use of  $\text{קָרָא}$ , to call.

4, 5. These verses beautifully depict the security and happiness of the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Longevity and a

- Aged men and aged women shall yet be sitting in the streets of Jerusalem,
Each man with his staff in his hand for very age ;
5 And the streets of the city shall be filled
With boys and girls, playing in the streets of it.
6 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :
Though it should be wonderful
In the eyes of the remnant of this people in those days,
Should it also be wonderful in my eyes ?
Saith Jehovah of hosts.
7 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :
Behold, I will deliver my people
From the land of the rising,
And from the land of the setting of the sun,
8 And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem,
And they shall become my people,
And I will become their God,
In truth and in righteousness.
9 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts :

numerous offspring were specially promised under the old dispensation, but uniformly in connection with obedience to the law. Deut. iv. 40, v. 16, 33, vi. 2, xxxiii. 6, 24; Is. lxxv. 20. The idea conveyed by מְשֻׁבְּרֵי אֲרָצוֹת in such connection is exquisite. What can be more gratifying to the uncorrupted simplicity of human feelings, than to witness a number of young children enjoying their innocent gambols? For a contrary state of things, see Jer. vi. 11, ix. 21.

6. פְּלִיאָה, though like its cognate פְּלִיאָה, is not used in Kal, yet, from its significations in Niphal, Piel, Hiphal, and Hithpael, it cannot be doubted that it must have conveyed the idea of separation, distinction, difficulty; hence in Niphal, it signifies to be distinguished, to stand out prominently, from common events, to be impossible to human power, to be miraculous. נִפְלְאוֹתַי, the participial noun, is often used for miraculous occurrences. בְּיָמַי הַהֵם, in those days, i. e. at the time when I fulfil my promise. To justify the rendering of our common version,

“in these days,” the Hebrew should have been בְּיָמַי הַהֵם. See ver. 9.

7. The east and west are here put as parts for the whole. The meaning is, I will deliver my people from every region whither they have been scattered. Were there any reason to believe that the prophecy has respect to a restoration of the Jews yet future, there would be a singular propriety in the use of מִבְּרֵאשִׁית, the setting of the sun, the Jews being now, for the most part, found in countries to the west of Jerusalem; but there is every reason to conclude that it has an exclusive reference to what was to take place soon after it was delivered. Vast numbers were carried away captive after the time of Alexander. Not fewer than 100,000 were carried by Ptolemy to Egypt, and were settled in Alexandria and Cyrene.

The words וְהָיָה אִתְּכֶם belong to both the members of the sentence, and express the reality and sincerity of the relation on both sides.

9. וְיָדְיָכֶם יִתְּנָה, let your hands be

- Let your hands be strong,
 Ye that hear in these days
 These words from the mouth of the prophets,
 Which were spoken on the day when the foundation was laid
 Of the house of Jehovah of hosts,
 The temple, in order to its being built
- 10 For before those days
 There was no hire for man,
 Neither was there any hire for beast ;
 And to him that went out or came in
 There was no peace, because of the enemy :
 Yea, I sent all men each against another.
- 11 But now I will not be as in the former days
 To the residue of this people,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 12 For the seed shall be prosperous,
 The vine shall yield her fruit,
 And the earth shall yield her produce,
 And the heavens shall yield their dew,
 And I will cause the residue of this people
 To possess all these things.
- 13 And it shall come to pass,
 As ye have been a curse among the nations,
 O house of Judah, and house of Israel,

strong, a figurative mode of expression, denoting, courage, resolution, effort. Jud. vii. 11 ; 2 Sam. xvi. 21. The prophets here referred to were Haggai and Zechariah. See Ezra v. 1, 2. The words which the people heard were those of consolation and encouragement. Haggai ii. 18, 19. After אָשֶׁר subaud. הַבְּרִיָּה.

10. Such was the danger to which the Jews were exposed before the actual commencement of building the temple, that all intercourse between the city and the country was interrupted. The Samaritans pressed sore upon them, and annoyed them in every possible way. See Ezra iv. 1—5. By צָר is not meant affliction, ἄλγος, tribulatio, as the Eng., LXX., and Vulg. ; but the enemy, or as we have it, צָרֵי יְהוּדָה וּבְנֵימִין, the enemies of Judah and Benjamin. Ezra iv. 1.

In the last clause of the verse reference is had to the intestine broils and contentions which prevailed.

11, 12. יְצִיָּה stands forcibly in contrast with לְצָרֵי at the beginning of the preceding verse. The providence of God brought about a complete change in the circumstances of a Jew who had returned. As they obeyed his voice and prosecuted his work, he gave them outward tranquillity, and prospered their agricultural pursuits. After זֶרַע הַשְּׁפִלְיָה, the seed of prosperity, i. e. healthy, prosperous seed, such as would not fail, supply יִהְיֶה, there shall be. Their fields should not be trodden down by the enemy, nor suffer from drought, mildew, locusts, and other calamities.

13. By the Jews being a curse and a blessing, is not meant that they were the

So I will deliver you, and ye shall be a blessing :
Fear not, let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith Jehovah of hosts :

As I purposed to afflict you,
When your fathers provoked me to wrath,
Saith Jehovah of hosts, and I repented not ;

15 So again I have purposed, in these days,
To do good to Jerusalem and the house of Judah :
Fear ye not.

16 These are the things which ye shall do :
Speak truth one to another ;
Execute true and sound judgment in your gates.

17 And think not in your hearts of the injury
Which one hath done to another ;
And love not the false oath ;
For all these are things that I hate,
Saith Jehovah.

18 And the word of Jehovah of hosts was communicated to me, 19 saying, Thus saith Jehovah of hosts : The fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall become joy and gladness to the instruments of communicating either evil or good to the nations, but that they themselves experienced either the one or the other. They were subjects of the curse and the blessing. "The house of Israel," or the ten tribes, as distinguished from "the house of Judah," shared in the happy fulfilment of the prophecy. It follows, that they also returned to Palestine, בְּיָמֵינוּ, in the very days to which it refers. All attempts to discover them at more recent periods have proved utterly fruitless; and the idea that they must still exist somewhere in the world, and are still to be restored in their tribal state, has arisen from a mis-construction of those prophecies which refer to the return from Babylon.

14, 15. An amplification of what had been stated in the preceding verse.

16, 17. These verses contain a virtual and instructive reply to the question relative to the celebration of the fast, chap. vii. 3. It was not in such merely external, ritual, or ceremonial observances that Jehovah delighted, but in the love and practice of moral rectitude. The "gate" was, and still is, the forum in the East. בְּיָמֵינוּ שְׁפָטָנוּ means sound, wholesome judgment. אַל תִּירָאוּ, in ver. 17, is wanting in three MSS., originally in two more, and now by correction in one; in the LXX. Syr. and Arab.

19. Now follows a formal reply to the question just referred to. The fast of the fourth month was on account of the taking of Jerusalem, Jer. xxxix. 2, lii. 5—7; that of the tenth was in commemoration of the commencement of the siege, Jer. lii. 4. For the other two fasts, see on chap. vii. 3 and 5. The Jews are distinctly informed that these fasts should be turned into festivals of joy. The וְ in וְיִשְׂמְחוּ is adversative, having the force of — but in order that ye may enjoy the predicted and promised blessing, see that ye be sincere before me, and live in harmony among yourselves.

house of Judah, even cheerful festivals; but love ye truth and 20 peace. Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:

21 There shall yet come people,
And the inhabitants of many cities,
And the inhabitants of one shall go to another, saying,
Let us go speedily to conciliate the regard of Jehovah,
And to seek Jehovah of hosts:

I will go, even I also.

22 Yea, many people and mighty nations shall come
To seek Jehovah of hosts in Jerusalem,
And to conciliate the regard of Jehovah.

23 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts:

In those days ten men,
Out of all the nations,
Shall take hold, shall even take hold

20. The prophecy concludes with the announcement that, in consequence of the distinguished favor shown to the Jewish people after their restoration to their own land, multitudes of Gentiles should be induced to embrace the worship of Jehovah. Just before the appearance of Christ, the heathen began powerfully to feel the emptiness of their false religions, and the unsatisfactoriness of their systems of philosophy, and many of them, who were brought into contact with the people of God, found in their religion, with all its imperfections, a satisfaction which they had sought in vain from any other quarter. It is evident, from various parts of the Acts of the Apostles, that proselytes were numerous in their day. Between אָזְרָא and אֲזָרָא, supply יְהוָה. Two MSS., the LXX. and Arab. read רַבִּים, many, after עַמִּים, which in all probability existed originally in the text.

21. The second אָזְרָא is equivalent to אֲזָרָא. Comp. Exod. xvii. 12, xviii. 4.

23. אֲזָרָא is redundant. Ten is put as a round number, or a definite for an indefinite, but indicating many rather than few. Comp. Gen. xxxi. 7; Mic. v. 5. מִכָּל לְשׁוֹנֵי דְבָרִים, of all the languages of the nations, means, of all the nations speaking different languages. Comp.

בְּלִ-הַגִּיִּים וְהַלְשׁוֹנֹת, all the nations and the languages, Is. lxvi. 18. See also Gen. x. 5, 20; Dan. iii. 7; Rev. v. 9, vii. 9, xiii. 7. To take hold of the skirt, is not intended to convey the idea of entreaty, or the gesture of application for assistance, but is significant of a feeling of inferiority, and a desire to enjoy the happy privileges possessed by another. The Gentile nations would be anxious to participate in the blessings of the theocracy. The repetition of the verb תִּזְקַק is emphatic. אִישׁ יְהוּדִי, a man, a Jew, is merely a periphrasis for a Jew. Comp. ἀνὴρ Ἰουδαῖος, Acts x. 28. The prophecy is generally regarded as having respect to something yet future, and is often interpreted of the instrumentality of the Jews when converted in effecting the conversion of the world. I can find no such reference in the passage. "Jerusalem" cannot be understood otherwise than literally, just as the term "Jew" is to be so understood; but, according to our Lord's doctrine respecting the New Dispensation, that city is no longer the place where men are exclusively to worship the Father, John iv. 21—23. Incense and a pure offering are now presented to his name in every place where his people assemble in the name of Jesus

Of the skirt of a Jew, saying,
We will go with you ;
For we have heard that God is with you.

and with a view to his glory, Mal. i. 10, 11. It was otherwise before the advent of Christ. Jerusalem was the place which Jehovah had chosen to put his name there, and thither all his true worshippers were expected to come to the great festivals, in whatever country they might reside. Thus, the treasurer of Candace went all the way from Abyssinia, Acts viii. 27 ; and thus numbers from all parts of the Roman empire assembled in that city at the first Pentecost after our Saviour's resurrection. As the Hellenistic Jews and the Gentile proselytes travelled along in companies, they could not but excite the curiosity of the pagans through whose countries and cities they passed ; and celebrated as the metropolis of Judea had become for the favors conferred upon it by some of the greatest monarchs of the times immediately gone by, and for the prosperity and warlike prowess of the Jewish people, it was impossible that it should not attract the attention of the surrounding nations to the character and claims of the God who was there adored, and who accorded such blessings to his worshippers.

---

CHAPTER IX.

For the arguments in opposition to, and those in favor of, the authenticity of that portion of the book of Zechariah which begins with this chapter, and comprises it and the remaining chapters, see the Preface.

Having in prophetic vision exhibited some of the more remarkable events connected with the continued rule of the Persians, Zechariah now proceeds to predict those which were to take place under that of the Greeks, during the military expeditions of Alexander and his successors, in so far as they had a bearing upon the affairs of the Jews. He describes the conquest of Syria after the battle of Issus, 1 ; and the progress of the army of Alexander along the coast of the Mediterranean, involving the capture of the principal cities of the Phœnicians and Philistines, but leaving the Jews unmolested, through the protecting care of Jehovah, 2—8. He then contrasts with the character and military achievements of that conqueror the qualities which should distinguish the Messiah and his kingdom, whom he expressly predicts, 9, 10. After which he resumes the thread of his historical discourse, and describes the wars of the Maccabees with Antiochus Epiphanes, and the victory and prosperity with which they were followed, 11—17.

---

1 THE sentence of the word of Jehovah, Against the land of Hadrach,

1. For the signification of מִשָּׁא, see on Is. xiii. 1. The combination מִשָּׁאֵי, occurs only here, chap. xii.

1, and Mal. i. 1. As הִבֵּי occurs in the sense of oracle, and מִשָּׁאֵי signifies what is taken up and uttered by the voice, the

And Damascus shall be its resting place,
When towards Jehovah shall be the eye of man,
And of all the tribes of Israel.

phrase might be rendered, The announcement of the oracle of Jehovah; but it is better for the sake of uniformity to retain the term sentence, which I have adopted in my translation of Isaiah. With respect to  $\text{הַדְּרַחַח}$ , Hadrach, it is uncertain whether it was intended to denote a country, a city, or a king. The last is the most probable, on the ground that it is not likely that the name either of a country or its metropolis, in a region near Damascus, would have entirely disappeared from the pages of history. But no such name has been found in any Arabic work either of history or geography. Joseph Abassus, indeed, a native of that country, informed Michaelis that there was a place so called at the distance of some miles from Damascus; that it was now of small consequence, but had once been a city of great celebrity; but there is every reason to believe that if he did not intend to impose upon his learned interrogator, the place he had in view was  $\text{הַדְּרַחַח}$ , in Arabic ادرعات, called by Eusebius Ἀδραά, and by Ptolemy Ἀδρα. It lay about thirty miles from Damascus. The same remark applies to the statement of Rabbi Jose, mentioned by Kimchi in his Comm. on this verse, that he was from Damascus, and that there was a place there, of which the name was Hadrach. The Rabbins consider the term to be a compound appellative of the Messiah, who was to be  $\text{דָּרַח}$ , sharp or severe towards the Gentiles, but  $\text{דָּרַח}$ , tender towards Israel! Hengstenberg, who treats on the subject at large in his Christology, vol. ii. pp. 69—77, Keith's Translation, denies that it is a proper name at all, and regards it as a symbolical appellation of the Persian empire, which he thinks Zechariah would not designate by its proper name for fear of offending the government under which he lived. His reasoning in support of his hypothesis is very unsatisfactory, and his construction of  $\text{לְבַב קָמָי}$ , Jer. li. 1, is perfectly ridiculous. I am compelled to acquiesce in the opinion, that a king of this name is meant, as the most probable of those that have been advanced, especially as the phrase, "the land of a king," is not without example in Scripture; see Neh. ix. 22; and very much suspect that the word  $\text{הַדְּרַחַח}$ , Hadrach, is after all only a corruption of  $\text{דְּרַחַח}$ , the common name of the kings of Syria, though such corruption must have taken place at a very early period, for it was found in the copy from which the version of the LXX. was made. The affix in  $\text{יְהוָה דְּרַחַח}$  is  $\text{יְהוָה דְּרַחַח}$  in the preceding hemistich. Damascus was to be the place in which the Divine word or sentence was to rest or settle; in other words, where the threatened punishment would permanently be inflicted. That ancient city was taken by Alexander the Great after the battle at Issus, and formed part of the kingdom of the Seleucidæ, from whom it passed into the hands of the Romans. The native rule, which thus ceased on the Greek conquest, was never afterwards recovered. Several commentators, following the ancient versions, render the words,  $\text{עַיִן יְהוָה עַל כָּל שְׂבָטֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , for the eye of Jehovah is upon men and all the tribes of Israel, and explain them with reference to the universal judgments which the providence of God had brought or would bring upon the people in and around Palestine. But it is more natural to regard  $\text{עַיִן יְהוָה}$  in construction with  $\text{עַל כָּל שְׂבָטֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל}$ . The reference will then be to the effect produced upon the minds of others as well as of the Israelites, by the success and progress of the army of Alexander. Apprehensive of danger, they should be compelled to look to Jehovah alone for deliverance. When Alexander threat-

- 2 Hamath also which is contiguous to it ;
Tyre and Zidon, though she be very wise.
- 3 Yea, though Tyre hath built a fortress for herself,
And heaped up silver as dust,
And fine gold as the mud of the streets ;
- 4 Behold, Jehovah will dispossess her,
And strike her wealth into the sea,
And she herself shall be burned with fire.
- 5 Askelon shall see it and be afraid ;
Gaza also, and shall be in great pain ;

ened to punish the Jews on account of the refusal of Jaddua the high priest to swear fealty to him, they were thrown into the greatest consternation, and offered many sacrifices and prayers to God for deliverance. כִּי is here used as a particle of time.

2. Hamath was the capital of a kingdom of the same name, which lay between Zobah and Rehob, and to the north of Damascus. It was called by the Greeks Epiphania, but is now known by its ancient name, which it has all along retained among the natives. That the kingdom was conterminous to that of which Damascus was the metropolis is here expressed by חֲמַתְּךָ אֶרֶץ זָבָח, the feminine affix referring to אֶרֶץ, land, in the preceding verse. The whole of Syria was subjugated by the Greeks, or submitted to Alexander. Tyre and Zidon, which lay directly in the way of that monarch, as he marched along the coast of the Mediterranean towards Egypt, are next mentioned. See on Is. xxiii. The latter city voluntarily surrendered, and had Abdolonymus appointed as viceroy. Though originally the chief of all the Phœnician cities, and the mother of many colonies, yet at the time here referred to, she had become far inferior to Tyre, and quite sunk in comparison with her ; on which account the predicate חֲמַתְּךָ בְּחָכְמָהּ, she is very wise, though, in point of position, it might seem to belong to זִידוֹן, Zidon, is nevertheless to be referred to צֵידוֹן, Tyre, as the more important of the two cities. The Tyrians, who had long been celebrated for their worldly wisdom, Ezek. xxviii. 3, 4, 5, 12, 17, gave a specimen of it on the approach of the Grecian monarch. On his intimating that he wished to offer sacrifice in the temple of Hercules, they replied that the ancient and true temple of that god was at Old Tyre on the continent, and sent him a crown of gold in testimony of their respect for so great a conqueror ; hoping by these means to induce him to pass on without visiting their island.

3. This verse is graphically descriptive of the insular and strongly fortified position of New Tyre, at the distance of seven hundred paces from the shore, and of the immense stores of wealth which it contained as the great emporium of Phœnician commerce. Ezek. xxvii.

4. Instead of אֶרֶץ צִידוֹן, many MSS., and some of them the best of the Spanish, read אֶרֶץ תֵּי, which I have adopted as the true lection. Here is set forth the conquest of Tyre by Alexander, who constructed a causeway with the rubbish of Old Tyre from the shore to the island, and after a siege of seven months took the city by storm, put eight thousand of the inhabitants, who had not taken flight to Carthage, to the sword, sold thirteen thousand into slavery, crucified two thousand, and after plundering the city, burnt it to ashes. Jahn's Heb. Commonwealth, sect. 70.

5. It may easily be imagined what terror the news of the fall of Tyre must have struck into the inhabitants of the

And Ekron, because her expectation hath made her ashamed ;
The king shall perish from Gaza,
And Askelon shall not be inhabited.

6 A foreigner shall sit as ruler in Ashdod,
And I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 I will remove his blood from his mouth,
And his abominations from between his teeth ;
And he, even he, shall be left for our God,
And shall be as a prince in Judah,
And Ekron shall be as a Jebusite.

cities further along the coast southward, who knew the destination and route of the victorious army. The prophet accordingly precedes the march of the conqueror from Phœnicia into Philistia. The principal cities of the Philistines are here enumerated. Gath only is omitted, owing, probably, to its being farther inland, and thus lying somewhat out of the route of the army. For Ashkelon, see on Amos i. 8. For Gaza and Ekron, on Amos i. 6. Ekron, lying farthest north of these cities, is represented as exercising confidence in Tyre. While that city withstood the attack, she might expect Alexander to be arrested in his course, and hope that he would give up his plan of invading Egypt. But when it fell, her hopes were gone. History is silent respecting the fate of these cities on occasion of the present expedition, but of Gaza it is recorded, that it resisted, and was captured after a siege of two months. Not fewer than ten thousand of the inhabitants were put to death, and the rest were sold into slavery. Betis, the commander or governor of the city, was bound to a chariot with thongs thrust through the soles of his feet, and in this manner dragged around the city. It is not improbable, that it is specially to this circumstance that the words אֲבָרָה מֶלֶךְ גַּזָּה יָמָה, the king shall perish from Gaza, refer. The title of king is frequently used in Scripture in a subordinate sense, to denote any chief ruler or governor. See Gen. xiv. 2.

6. For Ashdod, see on Amos i. 8. The word מִזְרֵי, which occurs only here and Deut. xxiii. 2, has been considered of uncertain etymology. Lee thinks it may probably be a compound of מִן, from, עַם, a people, and זָר, a foreigner; but this conjecture, however ingenious, is not warranted by Hebrew usage. In Deut. the LXX. render it by ἐκ πόρνης, one born of a whore, but ἄλλογενεῖς, a different race or people, best suits both passages. See Blayney. According to the form, it must be regarded as the Hiphil participle of מִזְרֵי, a root not occurring in the Hebrew Scriptures, but signifying in more modern Hebrew, to mix. Comp. the Arab. مَذ, corruptus fuit. Hengstenberg renders, rabble. By גַּזָּה, the pride of the Philistines, we are to understand the splendor of their cities, especially of their temples.

7. This verse contains a prediction of the future conversion of the Philistines to the knowledge and service of the true God. The pronominal affix י refers to מִזְרֵי, the foreign prince, as does הֵוא, he, further on in the verse. Their abandonment of idolatry, and their embracing the true religion, is represented by their no longer drinking blood, and eating things sacrificed to idols, both of which were common among the pagans, but prohibited by the Mosaic law, Numb. xxv. 2; Lev. vii. 26, xvii. 10, 12; and by the apostles, Acts xv. 29. It is implied that what the ruler did, would be done by the citizens subject to his power. He was to belong to God, as one who had

- 8 And I will encamp about my house because of the army,
 Both when it passeth through, and when it returneth ;
 And no oppressor shall pass through them any more.
 For now do I look with mine eyes.
- 9 Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion !
 Shout aloud, O daughter of Jerusalem !
 Behold thy King will come to thee ;
 Righteous, and having salvation, joined himself to him by an act of self-dedication. Comp. Is. xlv. 5, lvi. 3. On his becoming a Jewish proselyte, he should be regarded as sustaining the dignity of one of the princes of Judah; no distinction should exist between them. The same idea is expressed in the parallel clause. The Jebusites were the original inhabitants of Jerusalem, who, on their subjugation by David, were incorporated among the Jews, and enjoyed their privileges. 2 Sam. xxiv. 16, etc.

8. For קָבַץ, the Keri has the proper orthography קָבַץ, a host, or army. Jehovah here promises to afford protection to the Jews (called, as in Hos. viii. 1, בֵּית יְהוָה, the house of Jehovah). They were not to be injured by the army of Alexander, either on its march to or from Egypt, a promise which was fulfilled to the letter; for while that monarch punished the Samaritans, he showed great favor to the Jews. Nor was any foreign oppressor to invade their land, as the Assyrians and Chaldeans had done, during the period which was to intervene before the advent of the Messiah, predicted in the verse immediately following. They were, indeed, subject to much suffering, both from the Egyptian and the Syrian kings, especially from Antiochus Epiphanes, but their nationality was not destroyed, and the evils to which they were exposed only paved the way for the Maccabean victories, and the establishment of the Asmonean dynasty. For this preservation they were indebted to the providence of God which watched over them for good. This is emphatically expressed in the last clause of the verse.

9. From the great Grecian conqueror, and the temporal protection which Jehovah would accord to his people, the prophet abruptly, and in the most sublime and animated strain, calls the attention of the Jews to a Royal Personage of a very different character, the MESSIAH, meek and righteous, the Prince and pattern of peace, and the Author of spiritual salvation to all his subjects. His advent was to be accompanied by such glorious results, that it was to be hailed with the most joyful anticipation. That the subject of the prophecy is the Messiah, is not only established by the inspired authority of the Evangelist Matthew, chap. xxi. 4, but has the suffrages of all the early Jewish authorities. It was not till the twelfth century that it was otherwise interpreted. Thus the Book of Zohar: ובגנינה אומר על משיח על המור עני ורכב על המור. "On this account it is said of Messiah, Lowly and riding upon an ass;" a statement which is repeated in the same work. The same construction is put upon the passage by Joshua Ben Levi, Saadias Gaon, and others. The testimonies will be found in Wetstein on Matt. xxi. 4, who says in reference to them: "Magno consensu Judæi dictum Zachariæ de Messia interpretantur." And Solomon Jarchi has the ingenuousness to acknowledge, אפשר לומר אלא על המשיח, that "it is impossible to interpret it of any other than the Messiah." Of Him as the king of Zion it is predicted that he should be צַדִּיק, righteous, a quality frequently ascribed to him in the Old Testament. See Is. xlv. 21, liii. 11; Jer. xxiii. 5,

Lowly, and riding upon an ass,
Even upon a colt the foal of an ass.

xxxiii. 15; Mal. iv. 2. With respect to נִשְׁפָּע, or, as it is pointed in some copies, נִשְׁפָּע, of which Kimchi approves, on the ground of its being the preterite converted into the future by the ו conversive, most modern commentators construe it as strictly passive in signification, and the more orthodox interpret it with reference to Christ's deliverance from the grave, after his sufferings upon the cross, rendering the passage, "righteous and saved." But to such construction it must be objected, first, that the passive signification does not suit the connection. If the people had been the nominative to the verb, this signification would have been admissible; but it is the king who is here described, and to speak of him as saved or delivered without any reference to previous danger or suffering, would be most inappropriate. There is, therefore, a real exigentia loci: the context imperatively requires the verb to be understood in an active sense. Secondly, though the usual signification of Niph'al is passive, yet there are numerous instances in which verbs of that conjugation have a reflexive signification, which represent the agent as showing himself possessed of the quality of the action, or in which the signification is purely active, especially verbs, which are not used in Kal. Thus נִגְדָה, to show one's self glorious; נִלְיָהוּ, to show one's self obstinate, to murmur, complain; נִבְאָה, to prophecy; נִבְחָהוּ, to desire greatly; נִקְרָב, to approach; נִשְׁפָּע, to swear; נִשְׁמָע, to obey, show one's self obedient; נִשְׁעָהוּ, to lean, etc. And thus in the present case נִשְׁפָּע, showing himself a Saviour, having salvation, saving, a Saviour. Thirdly, that the verb is so to be interpreted here the combination of the term with צַדִּיקִים, righteous, clearly shows; for it occupies the same position in relation to that adjective, which the active participle רֹכֵב, riding, does to עָנִי, lowly, in the following clause of the verse. As in the latter case the Messiah's riding upon an ass was a proof or manifestation of his humility, so, in the former, his actually having salvation for others was a manifestation of his possessing that righteousness which was indispensable for the justification of the guilty. See 1 Cor. i. 30; 2 Cor. v. 21; Phil. iii. 8, 9; 1 John ii. 2. As the one feature contrasted with the haughty character of the Grecian conqueror, so the other contrasted with the cruelties that were inflicted by him on the cities which he captured. The Son of Man came not to destroy men's lives, but to save them. Fourthly, all the ancient versions render the verb actively. LXX. σώζων, Targ.

צַדִּיקִים, Syr. <sup>ܘܫܘܥܝܢܐ</sup> ܘܫܘܥܝܢܐ, Vulg. Salvator. That נִשְׁפָּע, is here to be taken in the sense of meek, lowly, and not in that of poor, or afflicted, the connection sufficiently shows. Thus the LXX. πραῦς. In proof of the mild and gentle character of the Messiah's reign, he is represented as riding upon an ass, which, though not in the East the degraded and despised animal which it is with us, being used by princes and other persons of rank, is nevertheless comparatively so as it regards the horse, and specially contrasts with the war-horse in the following verse. It was proverbially the symbol of peace, so that what the prophet here describes was at once calculated to inspire the mind with the conviction that the King of whom he spake was none other than the Prince of Peace, predicted Is. ix. 6. The וּנְשַׁל עַל צֶמֶר, "and upon a colt," is exegetical of the preceding. Comp. Gen. xlix. 11. אֲהֵנִיתִי, she-asses, does not, as Michaelis would have it, convey the idea of the pedigree of the colt, as one of excellent breed, whose mothers could be traced back through several generations, but is merely an idiomatic form, the plural being used for the singular. Comp. אֲהֵרָה אֲרָרֵה, mountains, of Ara-

- 10 And I will cut off the chariots from Ephraim,
 And the horse from Jerusalem ;
 The battle-bow also shall be cut off ;
 And he shall speak peace to the nations ;
 And his rule shall be from sea to sea,
 And from the river to the ends of the earth.
- 11 As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant,
 I will send forth thy prisoners out of the pit

rat, i. e. one of the mountains, etc., Gen. viii. 4. עָרֵי גִלְעָד, cities of Gilead, i. e. one of them, Jud. xii. 7. For the fulfilment of the prophecy, see Matt. xxi. 4, and the Commentators on that passage.

10. This verse contains a distinct announcement of the nature and extent of the Messiah's reign. Instead of leading forth the Jews to battle and conquest, as their Rabbins have long taught them to believe, he was in his providence completely to disarm them, and render them incapable of engaging in hostile conflict. How literally this was accomplished their history subsequent to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans convincingly shows. The reign of the Messiah was not to be that of a worldly conqueror, like Alexander, nor was it to be confined, as to its boundaries, within the narrow limits of Palestine ; but it was to be that under which the inestimable blessing of peace was preëminently to be enjoyed ; it was to embrace the Gentiles, who had been excluded from the commonwealth of Israel ; and, in point of extent, was to cover a vastly greater portion of territory than ever was possessed by the warrior of Macedon. On the circumstance that Ephraim is here mentioned, no valid argument can be built in favor of the hypothesis that this prophecy must have been delivered before the captivity of the ten tribes, since it is evidently the design of the prophet merely to describe the whole land of Canaan, the northern part of which still went by the ancient name, in contradistinction from Judah, which is here designated from Jerusalem, the capital. שָׁלוֹם יִדְבַר, to speak peace, means to announce the message of the reconciliation effected by the Messiah. From the express inclusion of the גוֹיִם, nations, among those who were to enjoy the benefits of the spiritual reign of the King of Zion, it is manifest that whatever may have been the originally restricted sense of מִיָּם וְעַד-יָם יִמְצְאוּ לָךְ מַלְכֵךְ, as descriptive of the utmost bounds of the Hebrew kingdom, the words must here be taken in the widest possible extent of meaning, just as in Ps. lxxii. 8, where it is declared in the connection, that all nations should serve the Messiah.

11. Having been led by his predictions respecting the expedition of Alexander in the direction of Egypt, to exhibit in boldest contrast the character and reign of the Prince of Peace, Zechariah returns to the subject which he had in hand — the state of the Jewish people in the times succeeding the captivity in Babylon. בְּ, also, connects what follows with verses 6—8. The feminine pronoun אֵת refers to בְּתוֹצִיֹךְ, or בְּתוֹצִיֹךְ אֶת-יְהוָה, ver. 9. The covenant here called בְּרִיתִי, thy covenant, means the covenant made with the Hebrews at Sinai, and ratified by the sprinkling of the blood of the victims slain upon the occasion. By that act the nation was consecrated as a peculiar people to Jehovah, and taken under his special protection. The covenant is called theirs, because it had their government and happiness for its object. In virtue of the blood then shed, it is here declared that their covenant God would release such

In which there is no water.

- 12 Return ye to the strong-hold, ye prisoners of hope,
Even to-day I declare I will render to thee double ;
- 13 For I have bent Judah for myself,
I have filled the bow with Ephraim,
And raised up thy sons, O Zion !
Against thy sons, O Greece !
And made thee as the sword of a hero.

of them as were still captives in foreign lands. By  $\text{חֲזָקֵי הַיָּמִין}$  is meant, not prisoners whom the Jews had taken, but such of their own nation as were in the condition just described. After the death of Alexander many thousands of Jews were in a state of exile in Egypt, and many thousands more in that of actual slavery in Greece and other parts of the East. Their condition is described as that of prisoners confined in dungeons, which were commonly cisterns without water. See Jer. xxxviii. 6 ; Gen. xxxvii. 24. In consequence of the mud which remained in them, they were exceedingly noxious to health, and those consigned to them were considered as subjects of the deepest misery.  $\text{חֲזָקֵי הַיָּמִין}$  is not here the proper preterite, as some interpreters construe it, but the prophetic future, which is thrown into the form of the preterite to express the certainty of the event.

12. With the Divine promise of release is connected the duty of the captives to embrace the opportunity afforded them of returning to their own land, where they should enjoy the protection and favor of the Most High.  $\text{חֲזָקֵי הַיָּמִין}$  occurs only in this place. It is derived from  $\text{חָזַק}$ , to cut off, to prevent the approach of an enemy, to erect an inaccessible fortification ; hence the signification of the noun, strong-hold, or fortress. LXX.  $\delta\chi\acute{\iota}\rho\omega\mu\alpha$ . It forcibly contrasts with  $\text{בֵּרֶךְ}$ , the pit, in the preceding verse, and for this reason is not to be interpreted of Jerusalem considered as again fortified, but is used figuratively to express the security and prosperity which those should enjoy who returned from captivity. Though captives, their condition was not hopeless. They were not to abandon themselves to despair, but to exercise confidence in the promise of God that he would assuredly deliver them, nor were they to wait for the arrival of any distant period when they might return as a body ; even then ( $\text{בְּיָמֵי חֲזָקָה}$ ) they might individually avail themselves of the invitation, and share in the blessings. The abundance of these blessings is expressed by the term  $\text{כִּפְּאוּלָה}$ , double, which is elsewhere similarly employed to convey the idea of full or ample compensation, Is. lxi. 7. There is no foundation for the opinion of Michaelis, adopted by Blayney, who takes  $\text{כִּפְּאוּלָה}$  to be a noun having the signification of  $\text{דָּבָר יָקָר}$ , something precious, and not the participle of Hiphil.

13. The declaration here made, that Jehovah would lead forth the Hebrews to military operations, and crown these operations with success, cannot be reconciled with the statement made ver. 10, on any other principle but that which refers them to two totally different periods of time. The one, as explained above, is predictive of the condition to which the nation was to be reduced after the advent of Messiah, instead of having become, under his reign, as they vainly expected, the conquerors of the world ; the other sets forth the successful wars in which they would engage with the Grecian rulers of Syria under the command of the Maccabees. The prophecy is parallel with that of Daniel, chap. xi. 32. For the fulfilment see 1 Macc. i.

- 14 And Jehovah shall appear on their behalf,
 And his arrows shall go forth as lightning ;
 Yea, the Lord Jehovah shall blow the trumpet,
 And march in the storms of the south.
- 15 Jehovah of hosts shall protect them,
 And they shall devour, and tread down the sling stones ;
 They shall drink, they shall be noisy, as those who drink wine ;
 They shall be full as the bowl,
 As the corners of the altar.
- 16 And Jehovah their God shall save his people,
 He shall save them as sheep in that day ;
 For they shall be as the stones of a crown,
 Carrying themselves highly over his land.

62, ii. 41—43, iii. 33, etc. By a bold and expressive figure, the Hebrews are represented as the bows and arrows of Jehovah, the military implements which he would employ in resisting and overcoming the Grecians under Antiochus Epiphanes. By בְּנֵי יוֹן, the sons of Greece, we are to understand, not the Greeks resident in Ionia or Greece, but those composing the army of the monarch just mentioned. Grotius remarks, that at the time here referred to, the Jews were accustomed to call the kings both of Syria and Egypt, מְלִכֵי יוֹן, kings of Greece, because they were of Grecian extraction.

14. Here commences a number of special promises of Divine interposition and protection. Considering what the Jews had experienced from hostile armies, it was necessary to disarm their fears by such assurances, that God was on their side. He is represented as appearing in the thunderstorm, with the lightnings of which his arrows are compared, and with the noise of its thunders, the sound of his trumpet, summoning to the attack. For "the storms of the south," see on Is. xxi. 1.

15. After אָכְלוּ, they shall eat, supply בָּשָׂר, flesh, i. e. of their enemies; and after יִשְׂתְּנוּ supply דָּם, their blood. This highly figurative language is frequently employed in Scripture to express the destruction of enemies in battle. כְּמִי-יִוֹן, like wine, is elliptical for כְּמִי-שִׁתְּי-יִוֹן, like those who drink wine. Before הַמָּה, thirty-two MSS., originally four more, three by correction, eight printed editions, and the Rabbins Nathan, Kimchi, and Abarbanel, supply the conjunctive וְ. By אֲבִנֵי קֶלֶעַ, sling-stones, the enemies are meant, as clearly appears from the contrasted form of expression, אֲבִנֵי-קֶרֶן, stones of a crown, descriptive of the Jews, in the following verse. The phrase conveys the idea of feebleness and contempt. The stones used for slinging are otherwise of no use or value. Carrying forward the idea of blood, reference is made to מִזְבֵּחַ, the bowl, which was used to receive that of the sacrifices, and to קַרְנֵי הַאֵלֹהִים, the corners of the altar, on the horns of which it was sprinkled. Abundant as was the blood thus shed and sprinkled should be that of the enemies of the Hebrews.

16. For כְּצֹאן עֲמָי, as sheep, his people, comp. כְּצֹאן עֲמָי. The words are neither in construction, nor in apposition, but are to be separated, so as to connect עֲמָי with הוֹשִׁיעַ, understood as repeated from the beginning of the verse. By אֲבִנֵי-קֶרֶן, crown stones, are meant the precious stones or gems which were set in crowns, and were of great value. The elevation of these, and consequently of the crown which contained them, was 17 For how great is his goodness! and how great his beauty!

 Corn shall cause the young men to thrive,
 And new wine the maids.

strongly indicative of victory. For נָסַח in the acceptation of being high, comp. the Arab. <sup>نص</sup> elevavit rem; in the viii. Conj. elatus fuit; <sup>نص</sup> elevatus thronus.

17. The affix in וְיִשְׂרָאֵל and וְיִשְׂרָאֵל is most naturally to be associated with that in אֲדַבְרֶנּוּ at the close of the preceding verse, and referred to Jehovah. The meaning is, the goodness and beauty which he bestows. Compare Jer. xxxi. 12; Ps. xxv. 7. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, though occurring in the latter half, is common to both parts of the sentence. Piel has here the causative power of Hiphil. The root is נָסַח, to sprout, germinate, grow up. The prophet refers to the plenty which there should be in the land after the destruction of the enemy. The drinking of must by young females is peculiar to this passage; but its being here expressly sanctioned by Divine authority, furnishes an unanswerable argument against those who would interdict all use of the fruit of the vine. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, new wine or must, so called from וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, to take possession of, because when taken to excess, it gains the mastery over the person who indulges in it.

CHAPTER X.

THIS chapter continues the subject with which the preceding concluded. The Hebrews are exhorted to apply to Jehovah for the constant supply of temporal blessings, 1, and are warned against an imitation of the conduct of their forefathers, who had recourse to false oracles, on account of which they and their rulers had been carried into captivity, 2, 3. Promises are then made of government by rulers of their own nation, and the victorious operations of their armies, 4, 5; the complete re-establishment of the theocracy, 6, 7; the restoration of such of the nation as still remained in foreign countries, especially in the East, and in Egypt, 8—11; and the chapter concludes with an assurance of the security and happiness which they should enjoy under the divine protection, 12.

- 1 Ask ye from Jehovah rain in the time of the latter rain:
 Jehovah maketh the lightnings,
 And giveth them the heavy rain,
 To every one grass in the field.
- 2 Surely the household gods spake vanity,

1. This verse stands in the closest connection with the preceding. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, lightnings, the precursors of rain. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, lit. rain of heavy rain, i. e. plentiful rain. Comp. Job xxxvii. 6, where the same words occur, only their order is inverted.

2. וְיִשְׂרָאֵל, the teraphim, or house-

- And the diviners saw a lie ;
 They told false dreams,
 They gave vapor for comfort ;
 Therefore they wandered as sheep ;
 They were afflicted because there was no shepherd.
 3 My anger burned against the shepherds,
 And I punished the he-goats ;
 Nevertheless Jehovah of hosts hath visited his flock, the house of Judah,
 And made them as his splendid horse in war.
 4 From him shall be the corner-stone,
 From him the peg,
 From him the battle-bow, hold gods, are opposed to Jehovah in the preceding verse. The term occurs only in the plural, and is of uncertain derivation. Gesenius refers it to the Arab.

قف, to live in comfort, and considers it as signifying the indicators or givers of pleasure or happiness ; Lee to the Eth.

†‡† ; reliquus, superfluit, and thinks relics are meant. They appear to have had the form of the human body, and to have been consulted as oracles. See on Hos. iii. 4. The preterites and futures, which are intermixed, are all to be taken in the strictly past time, reference being had to the evils which had prevailed among the Jews, on account of which they had been carried away to Babylon, and against any further indulgence in which they are here warned. They were exposed afresh to the influence of idolatrous practices by their intercourse with the Syro-Grecian and Egyptian troops, which repeatedly traversed the land. Antiochus Epiphanes actually set up a heathen idol in the temple at Jerusalem, and ordered temples and altars to be erected in the different cities throughout the country.

3. The verb פקד is here used both in a good and a bad sense ; followed by the preposition על, it signifies to visit for evil, to punish ; governing the accusative, to visit with good. The ו in על is properly the ו conversive, so that פקד is to be rendered in the preterite, to agree with פקדו. By “he-goats” are meant the chiefs or leaders of the nation. אכל all the versions render, as if it had been אכלו, in the preterite, which the connection requires. The “shepherds” and “he-goats” are used synonymously of the civil rulers. In the middle of this verse is a sudden transition from the calamitous condition to which the Jews had been reduced as a punishment for their sins, to that of prosperity and military prowess to which they were raised in the time of the Maccabees. In the preceding chapter they had been set forth under the images of the bows and arrows ; here they are represented under that of the battle-horse. The horse selected by the commander of an army on which to ride at its head, was stately and richly caparisoned. The כ in כסס is the Caph veritatis. 4. אבן thrice repeated, possesses much emphasis. The nominative is אבן in the preceding verse. The Hebrews were not now to be subject to governors of foreign extraction or appointment, but were to be independent, enjoying the benefits of a native rule. By אבן, corner-stone, is meant the prince or governor, on whom the political edifice may be said metaphorically to rest. The word is derived from פקד, to turn, and primarily

- From him shall go forth each and every ruler.
 5 And as heroes shall they trample the enemy
 In the mud of the streets in battle ;
 They shall fight, for Jehovah is with them,
 And put to shame the riders on horses.
 6 I will strengthen the house of Judah,
 And deliver the house of Joseph,
 And will settle them, because I have pitied them ;
 And they shall be as if I had not cast them off ;
 For I Jehovah am their God, and will answer them.
 7 And Ephraim shall be as a hero,
 And their heart shall rejoice, as those who drink wine ;
 Their sons shall see it and be glad ;
 Their heart shall exult in Jehovah.
 8 I will whistle for them and gather them, signifies a turning-point, angle or corner of a building. With us a nail would be an insignificant image, but נִיחַד, the Oriental nail, is a large peg in the inside of a room, wrought into the wall when the house is built, and on which is hung all kinds of household stuff, together with the different implements of war. See on Is. xxii. 23. One of these, the bow, is mentioned immediately after, and stands for the whole. נִיחַד is used here simply in the sense of ruler. Compare the Eth.

לְיָהוָה ; king.

5. Supply אֲדֵיבִיָּא, enemies, as the object to בִּזְמָתָם, trampling, and compare Is. xiv. 25, lxiii. 6. רַבְרָבֵי סִבָּיִם refer to the numerous cavalry which composed the chief strength of the Syro-Grecian army (see 1 Macc. iii. 39), but which were put to the route by a mere handful of Jews.

6. "The house of Joseph" stands for the ten tribes, in contradistinction to those of Judah and Benjamin, to which is given the name of "Judah" as the more important of the two. It is clear from the reference thus made, that part, if not most of all the tribes, returned and took possession of their patrimonial lands after the captivity. הַיְהוּדִים is a mixed form, supposed by Kimchi, Abarbanel, and some others, to have been artificially compounded of הִשְׁבִּיבֵהוּ, the Hiphil of שָׁב, to return, and הִשְׁבֵּתֵהוּ, the Hiphil of שָׁבַת, to sit or dwell, in order to express in one word both verbs as used by Jeremiah, לְשֹׁמְרֵי הַיְהוּדָה, chap. xxxii. 37 ; but it is far more probable that the word is a corruption of הִשְׁבִּיבֵהוּ, introduced through inadvertence by some transcriber. Such is, indeed, the reading of many MSS. and of four printed editions, and is supported by the LXX. κατοικεω. The reading הִשְׁבִּיבֵהוּ, has the support of the Syr., Vulg., and Targ., but is less suitable to the connection.

7. As the state of things here described was brought about by the heroic conduct of Ephraim, it is obvious the return from the captivity cannot be intended, for the Hebrews were altogether passive on that occasion. The reason why special mention is here made of the ten tribes may be their longer rejection by the Lord, and the exiled state in which many of them still were in the days of the prophet. עַמֵּי, as a collective noun, is the nominative to יָהוָה. For בְּנוֹיֵי see on chap. ix. 15.

8. An express promise of the restoration, settlement, and increase of the ten

- For I have redeemed them,
 And they shall increase, as they did increase.
 9 Though I have scattered them among the nations,
 Yet they shall remember me in the distant regions,
 And shall live with their children and return.
 10 I will bring them back from the land of Egypt,
 And gather them from Assyria ;
 And I will bring them to the land of Bashan and Lebanon,
 And room shall not be found for them.
 11 And he shall pass over the sea,
 He shall cleave and smite the waves of the sea,
 And all the deeps of the river shall dry up ;
 The pride of Assyria shall be brought down,
 And the sceptre of Egypt shall depart.

tribes, many of whom were still at that time in a state of exile. They were to be brought back to Palestine, and placed in a condition in which they should be able to act valiantly in defence of their country. The verb פָּרַץ signifies to whistle, or give a shrill sound, as those who keep bees do, who, by means of a whistle, or pipe, call them out from and back to their hives. See on Is. v. 26. Josephus informs us, that two hundred years after the time here referred to, Galilee was peopled to an amazing extent, studded with cities, towns, and villages; and adds, that the villages were not what were usually called by that name, but contained, some of them, fifteen thousand inhabitants. Jewish Wars, book iii, ch. iii. § 2.

9. The first two Vaus are employed antithetically, the former having the signification of though or indeed; the latter, that of but or yet. פָּרַץ cannot here mean saved, as Hengstenberg contends, but must be rendered scattered, which the verb primarily signifies, and the connection here requires. The last clause of the verse indicates the settled enjoyment of chartered privileges as before the dispersion, when the Hebrews should return to their own land.

10. We have no historical account of any specific removal of any belonging to the ten tribes into Egypt, but it cannot be doubted that, as in the case of the Jews in the time of Jeremiah, many of them betook themselves to that country for refuge on the invasion of Tiglath-pileser; and when Ptolemy attempted to seize the whole of Syria, and carried away 100,000 captives, whom he settled in Alexandria and Cyrene, vast numbers of them must have consisted of the descendants of those Israelites who had returned from the Eastern captivity. Those who had remained in the East were also to return. Comp. Is. xi. 11. נִמְצָא has here the signification of there being sufficient or enough, as in Kal, Numb. xi. 22; Jud. xxi. 14. חֲרוֹם, room, or place, is understood. So great should be the number of inhabitants, that the territory, however ample and fertile, would not be able to furnish them with the necessary supplies.

11. There is here an allusion to the original deliverance of the Hebrew people at the Red Sea. Comp. Is. xi. 15. The Divine interposition in behalf of those who were still in Egypt is not expressly compared with what then took place, but such comparison is implied. חֲרוֹם has been variously rendered. The LXX. σπρωγή, Vulg. freto, Syr. ܠܫܘܢܐ, angustia, Calvin, afflictio, Hengstenberg,

12 And I will strengthen them through Jehovah,
And they shall walk up and down in his name,
Saith Jehovah.

the distress, Blayney, Tyre, Hitzig, Zara, by which he understands the Nile. The difficulty is at once removed by taking הַיָּם as a verb, with the Aramaic signification of הַיָּם, יָרָה, cut, cleave, divide.

Comp. the Arab. صرى, resecut, amputavit. In which case three verbs, having Jehovah understood as their nominative, will follow in regular order: וְעָבַר בַּיָּם וְצָרָה וְהָבֵה בַּיָּם גְּלִיִּים. And he shall pass over the sea; he shall cleave and smite the waves of the sea. The last words are literally, he shall smite the sea into waves; or, as to the sea, he will smite its waves. Comp. Exod. xiv. 16, 21; Is. xi. 15, 16. That by "the river," the Nile, and not the Euphrates, is meant, the use of the Egyptian word יאיר places beyond dispute. See on Is. xix. 6. With respect to אשור, Ashur, it may justly be queried whether the Syro-Greek kingdom be not intended—that kingdom occupying not only the territory which belonged to ancient Assyria, but extending still further towards the east. The pride of that power, as well as the Egypto-Greek sceptre, was to be swept away.

12. The phrase, הַיָּהוָה בְּשֵׁם, to walk in the name of a deity, is a Hebrew mode of speech, descriptive of a course of action pursued in accordance with his character and will. Comp. Micah iv. 5.

CHAPTER XI.

IT is obvious, from the nature of the predictions contained in this and the following chapters, that they must have been delivered at a time subsequent to the erection of the temple. As they are exclusively occupied with denunciations of evil against the Jews, with the exception of interjected prophecies of the Messiah, and one relative to the final deliverance of the covenant people, they must have dispirited rather than encouraged those who were engaged in building the sacred edifice. It may be said, indeed, that there were many carnal and secure persons among the Jews, who required to be warned, and that the following denunciations were designed for their benefit; but, as the predictions do not relate to the times in which those persons lived, it is not conceivable how they could have so appropriated them as to derive effectual advantage from them. Besides, they contain no instances of direct address, or personal application of the truths delivered, such as we find in the other prophets when addressing themselves to their contemporaries for their immediate benefit. It may, therefore, be concluded, that they were communicated by Zechariah on some occasion or occasions of which we have no knowledge.

The scenes here depicted lay in the more distant future. In the present chapter the prophet furnishes a bold figurative description of the destruction of the temple by the Romans, and the utter consternation into which the priests and rulers of the people should thereby be thrown, 1—3. He then describes certain symbolical actions performed by him in vision, by which he personated the Messiah who had been promised as the Shepherd of his people, setting forth his commission to teach and rule them, 4; their deplorable condition in consequence of the rapacious disposition of their leaders, 5; and the judgments that should overtake them in consequence of their wickedness, 6. Under the emblems of two staves the relation of the whole nation to God, as their protector, and the relation of the different tribes among themselves are exhibited, and the cessation of these relations is pointed out by the act of breaking the staves, 7—14. The three last verses set forth the character of Herod, and the judgment of God upon him for his wickedness.

- 1 OPEN, O Lebanon! thy gates,
That the fire may devour thy cedars.
- 2 Howl, ye cypresses! for the cedars have fallen,
Because the magnificent are destroyed:
Howl, ye oaks of Bashan! for the fortified forest hath come down.
- 3 There is the sound of the howling of the shepherds,
Because their magnificence is destroyed;
There is the sound of the roaring of young lions,
Because the pride of Jordan is destroyed.

1. Some interpret this verse literally of the locality so called; others understand it figuratively, but apply it either to Jerusalem, or to the whole land of Palestine. The construction which most commends itself is that which applies it to the temple restrictively. Such is the ancient rabbinical interpretation. To the same effect is the remarkable declaration of Rabbi Johanan Ben Zakkai: "O sanctuary, sanctuary! why dost thou trouble thyself? I know of thee that thine end is to be left desolate, for Zechariah, the son of Iddo, has prophesied against thee long ago. Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars." Talmud, Bab. Yoma. fol. 39, col. 2. This interpretation seems to be referred to by Josephus, in his Jewish Wars, bk. vi. ch. v. § 3. The temple might with all propriety be figuratively called Lebanon, not only because the cedars with which it was built were brought from that mountain, but because as Lebanon was the most stately and magnificent of all in the vicinity of Palestine, so the temple was the most glorious of all objects in or about Jerusalem. Its gates were kept carefully shut against all who had no right to thread its courts. Now it was to become a prey to the flames. The prediction received its literal fulfilment in spite of the utmost solicitude of the Roman general to preserve the edifice. In vain did he attempt to save it from the flames, so that in a short time it was entirely consumed.

2. בְּרוֹשׁ, the cypress, was greatly inferior to the cedar, but was employed for the floor and ceilings of the temple. "The oaks of Bashan" were also used for purposes of building. These terms, however, are likewise to be interpreted figuratively of the priests and rulers of the temple, its superior and inferior officers, together with the judges of the people. אֲזֵיכָר is used both of animate and inanimate objects. It is here employed to denote those who were elevated in dignity and magnificent in apparel. Comp. אֲזֵיכָר הַצֹּאֵן. By גִּזְרֵי הַבְּצוּרָה, the fortified or inaccessible forest, is meant Jerusalem, the houses of which were numerous and close together as the trees of the forest, and round which the Jews had thrown up a wall of great strength. Comp. Micah iii. 12. For בְּצוּרָה, many MSS., and two early editions, read בְּצִירָה, which is only another form to express the same thing.

3. The Jewish rulers are called "shepherds," with reference to their office, and "young lions," in regard to their fierce and rapacious disposition. The אֲזֵיכָר, was the magnificence of the temple of which they boasted. Comp. Mark xiii. 1; Luke xxi. 5. גִּזְרֵי הַבְּצוּרָה, the pride of Jordan, i. e. the thickets which ornament its banks, and furnish excellent lairs for lions, has the same figurative reference, and is selected to correspond to the young lions immediately preceding. Comp. Jer. xii. 5, xlix. 19. The leaders of the Jews are represented as indulging in loud wailings of despair, on account of the destruction of their temple and polity.

- 4 Thus saith Jehovah my God,
Feed the sheep of slaughter ;
5 Whose possessors kill them, and are not held guilty ;
And each of those who sell them saith,
Blessed be Jehovah, I am enriched ;
And none of whose shepherds spareth them.

4, 5. The prophet now proceeds to point out the cause of the destruction which he had figuratively described, and that of the people which was connected with it—the obstinate refusal of their rulers to receive the doctrine of the Messiah. By הַצֹּמֵרִים הַשֶּׁחִיטִים, the sheep of slaughter, are meant the people devoted to destruction. Comp. הַצֹּמֵרִים הַשֶּׁחִיטִים, Ps. xlv. 23. At the fall of Jerusalem not fewer than 1,100,000 Jews perished, and near a million and a half altogether in the course of the war. It has been questioned, who is the person directed in this verse to assume the office of a shepherd, and who declares, ver. 7, that he performed the duties of that office? Frischmuth, Marekcius, Michaelis, and others, are of opinion that it is the Messiah, and, unquestionably, if ultimate reference be had to him, this is the true interpretation; but it is equally clear that the prophet is to be regarded as having received the commission, and performed, in vision, what was enjoined upon him. What proves this, is the putting into the hands of the same person the instruments of a foolish shepherd, ver. 15, an action which can with no propriety be referred to the Messiah. On this principle, most of the difficulties connected with the exegesis of the intervening verses vanish. Zechariah had all the transactions presented to his view in prophetic vision, but what he describes was actually done, not in his own personal history, or in any outward occurrences between him and the Jews of his time, but in the personal history and office of the Messiah whom he personated. He did not really feed or teach those who were to be slain, but the Messiah and his apostles did; and had the Jews believed their message, the awful calamity would have been averted. The hypothesis of a prophetic vision was first advanced by Maimonides, and is ably supported by Hengstenberg, in his Christology, and by Dr. McCaul, in his translation of Kimchi on our prophet. That by the buyers and sellers of the Jewish people, we are not to understand the Romans, but their own unprincipled teachers and rulers, the facts of the case show. The corresponding term צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, their shepherds, is merely expletive of what the same persons were officially. The avarice of the Pharisees was excessive, yet they had the barefaced hypocrisy to thank God for their ill gotten wealth, and because they were not punished, they imagined they might persevere with impunity. The construction of the plural nouns צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, and צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, with the singulars צֹמֵרֵיהֶם and צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, cannot, with any propriety, be accounted for on the principle advanced by Hengstenberg, that Jehovah himself was the principal actor, and that the wicked rulers were merely his instruments. It is only a more emphatic mode of construction, by which each of the individuals specified in the plural is represented as performing the action, see Gen. xxvii. 29; Exod. xxxi. 14; Prov. iii. 18. The masculine affix הֶם refers to the people, strictly so taken; the feminine הֵן, to them considered under the idea of the sheep that were to be fed, הֵן being of the common gender. There is, therefore, no ground for correcting the text by changing צֹמֵרֵיהֶם into צֹמֵרֵיהֶם, the reading of fifteen MSS. and some printed editions.

6 For I will no more spare the inhabitants of the land, saith Jehovah,
 But behold! I will deliver the men,
 Each into the hand of his neighbor, and into the hand of his king;
 And they shall destroy the land,
 And I will not deliver them out of their hand.
 7 And I fed the sheep of slaughter, truly miserable sheep!

6. The particle כִּי, for, connects what follows with the command, ver. 4. The Jews were no longer to have Divine pity extended to them, but were to be abandoned to all the evils of civil discord, and to the oppressions of a foreign rule. That the king here referred to was the Roman emperor, is obvious from the acknowledgment of the Jews themselves: "We have no king but Cæsar." John xix. 15. The verb בָּתַּח, to beat, or dash in pieces, is most appropriately chosen to express the destructive measures adopted by the Romans, by which the Jewish polity was broken up. The nominative is the troops of the foreign ruler that had just been spoken of.

7. The prophet declares, in the name of the Messiah, that he executed the task committed to him. This was fulfilled during the personal ministry of our Lord. לִבְרֵךְ עֲנִיִּי הַצֹּאֵן have been variously rendered. LXX. εἰς τῆν

Xavaavtur Syr. صَلْبَتَانَا صَالِبًا,

عَمَلًا بِخَنَاءٍ, the little ones on account of the collection of the sheep. Vulg. propter hoc ó paupere egregis. Leo Juda, adeoque pauperes gregis. Tremellius and Junius, vos inquam, ó pauperes gregis. Schmid, J. H. Michaelis, Newcome, Hitzig, and others, propter vos, ó miseris gregis. Maurer, pavi igitur miserimus ovium. Arnheim, fürwahr die elendesten der Heerde. Ewald, wirklich die unglücklichsten Schafe. The only real difficulty lies in the word לִבְרֵךְ. The LXX. have read it, and the following word, as one, thus, לִבְרַעֲנִי, and made

Canaanite of it. This rendering is adopted by Blayney, only he attaches to the term the idea of merchant, which it sometimes has (among those who trafficked with the flock), and explains it of the buyers and sellers of the flock, described ver. 5. The interpretation is so far specious, and is approved by Jahn, but cannot be philologically sustained. Some take לִבְרֵךְ for the infinitive in Hiphal of רָקַח, which furnishes no tolerable sense; others, for the dative of the second personal feminine pronoun, supposing the Segol to have been changed into a Tzère, but this is liable to the same objection. Most regard it as the particle כִּי, and construe it either with its causal, or its adversative signification; but neither do any of the interpretations thus brought out satisfactorily meet the exigencies of the case. I cannot help thinking that the ל is here redundant, as it is in many instances, and that we must construe בְּרֵךְ, as in ver. 11, where it occurs without the ל. The term is properly a participial noun, derived from בָּרַךְ, in the sense of the Arab. كُون, esse, and implies reality, certainty, or the like, but admits of being variously rendered, according to the context in which it is found. See Lee's Heb. Lex. in voc. And thus it is understood by Kimchi, Jarchi, Castalio, De Dieu, Drusius, Storr, Dathe, Arnheim, De Wette, and Ewald. Even were the ל retained, the same result would be brought out, the rendering in this case being, with respect to truth, i. e. truly; just as in לִבְרַעֲנִי, with respect to perpetuity, i. e. forever. The words עֲנִיִּי הַצֹּאֵן are the superlative of con-

And I took to myself two crooks; the one I called Grace, and 8 the other I called Bands, and I fed the sheep. And I cut off the three shepherds within one month; and my soul loathed 9 them, and their soul also rejected me. So that I said:

I will not feed you;

That which is dying, let it die;

And that which is being cut off, let it be cut off;

And as for the rest, let them eat each the flesh of another.

struction, as in  $\text{גִּזְרֵי גֵוִיִּם}$ , the most wicked of nations, Ezek. vii. 24;  $\text{בְּרִיבְרִיבֵי צִפְרִיבֵי}$ , the choicest of his cypresses, Jer. xxxvii. 7; or, what is quite parallel with the present case,  $\text{רֵגְלֵי הַצֹּאן הַלֵּזָה$ , rendered in our common version, the least of the flock. The article is as usual to be referred to the former of the two nouns, and both might be rendered, the most miserable of sheep, or the most miserable sheep. Such was the state to which the Jewish people were reduced in the days of our Lord. They were ἐσकुλμένοι και ἐρρῖμενοι, ὡσεὶ πρόβατα μὴ ἔχοντα ποιμένα. Matt. ix. 36. They were worried and harassed in every possible way, πρόβατα ἀπολωλότα, Matt. x. 6. The two staves were symbolical of the different modes of treatment which the Hebrews had experienced under the guidance and protection of the providence of God. One of them was called  $\text{רַחֲמֵי}$ , Grace, or Favor, to indicate the kindness of Jehovah to them in restraining the surrounding nations from overpowering them, and carrying them again into captivity. See ver. 10. To the other was given the name of  $\text{רֵבֵבֵי}$ , which Drusius, Marckius, the Dutch translators, and others, render Binders, but better, Bands, expressing the ties which unite parties together. The LXX., Aq., Symm., σχοίνισμα; Vulg. funiculi; Maurer, conjuncti, fœderati. Reference is had to the fraternal confederacy into which the Jews and Israelites had entered with each other after the return from Babylon. See ver. 14. The last clause of the verse is a repetition of the first, for the sake of emphasis.

8. Who "the three shepherds" here definitely pointed out were, cannot be determined with certainty. All kinds of interpretations have been given, from Moses, Aaron, and Miriam, suggested to Jerome, by his Hebrew Rabbi, to the Roman emperors Galbus, Otho, and Vitellius, in Calmet. The only construction which is at all entitled to any notice, is that which regards the language as descriptive of the three orders of rulers in the Jewish state—the priests, the teachers of the law, and the civil magistrates. These were the persons of influence by whom the affairs of the nation were conducted, and to whose wickedness, which reached its culminating point when they crucified the Lord of Glory, the destruction of the state is to be ascribed.  $\text{בְּרֵחַ הַחֵדֶּר}$ , one month, doubtless refers to the last period of the siege of Jerusalem, when everything was thrown into confusion, and all authority came to an end.  $\text{בְּרֵחַ}$ , to hide, conceal; in Hiphil, as here, ἀφανίζεω, to cause to disappear, to cause to cease with respect to office, to remove from it. The last two lines of the verse point out the mutual dissatisfaction and disgust with which the wicked rulers and the Messiah regarded each other.  $\text{לֵבֵבֵי}$ , occurs only here, and Prov. xx. 21. Comp. the cognate root  $\text{בָּצַב}$ , to reject, and the Arab.  $\text{بجلى}$ , impulsus valadus, propulsio vehemens;  $\text{بجلى}$ , maledixit, III. execratus fuit.

9. The entire abandonment of the Hebrew people is here most affectingly set forth. For the threefold destruction here predicted, comp. Jer. xv. 1, 2,

10 I then took my crook Grace, and cut it asunder in order to 11 break my covenant which I had made with all the nations. And it was broken in that day, and the miserable sheep that gave heed to me, knew of a truth that it was the word of Jehovah.
 12 And I said to them, If it be good in your eyes, give my reward ;
 13 and if not, forbear. So they weighed my reward, thirty pieces of silver. And Jehovah said to me, Cast it to the potter, the xxxiv. 17; Ezek. vi. 12. And for the fulfilment, see Josephus.

10. By this symbolical action, the removal of the restraint which Jehovah had exercised over the nations, whereby the destruction of the Jewish people had been prevented, is strikingly represented. The exercise of restraint with respect to hostile forces is elsewhere spoken of under the idea of a covenant. See Job v. 23; Ezek. xxxiv. 25; Hos. ii. 18. When this restraint was removed, the Romans invaded Judea, and destroyed the city and polity of the ancient people of God. That by עַמֵּי, people or nations, we are to understand foreign nations, and not the Hebrew tribes, is now agreed among the best interpreters.

11. The anticipated accomplishment of the prediction, and the conviction wrought in the minds of the pious portion of the Jewish people, that the prediction was indeed divine. For the force of כֶּן see on ver. 7. The LXX. again join the two words, and render, οἱ Χαναανοῖοι.

12, 13. On the question of the application of these verses to the circumstances narrated Matt. xxvii. 7—10, a very decided difference of opinion has obtained. This difference has been occasioned, partly by the fact of certain discrepancies existing between the accounts which they furnish of the transactions, and partly by the more important consideration that the Evangelist expressly ascribes the words which he quotes to Jeremiah, and not to Zechariah. With respect to the former of these points, it may, to a considerable extent, be obviated by the general observation, that the discrepancies are not greater than we meet with in several other quotations made from the Old Testament by the writers of the New, and are by no means such as to affect the end which either the prophet or the Evangelist had in view. In producing the citation, the latter had his eye more intent upon the historical circumstances which he had just detailed, than upon the strict grammatical construction and verbiage of the language employed in the prophecy. He fixes upon the principal points, the despicable price at which the Messiah had been sold, and the appropriation of the money as a compensation to the potter for the possession of his field; and having faithfully exhibited these to the view of his readers, he is less solicitous about the wording of the prophet. The very changes which he introduces into the phraseology are such as his position in the character of an historian required. Thus, instead of אֲשֶׁר הִעֲרִיתִי בְּמִצְלָתָהֶם, at which I was estimated by them, Matthew has ἐν ἐτιμήσαντο ἀπὸ υἱῶν Ἰσραὴλ, at which he was estimated by the sons of Israel. Instead of הִנֵּה אֲנִי מְשַׁלְּמִים לְךָ שְׁלֹשִׁים כֶּסֶף, And I took the thirty pieces of silver, we find, καὶ ἔλαβον τὰ τριάκοντα ἀργύρια, and they took the thirty pieces of silver. Instead of הִנֵּה אֲנִי מְשַׁלְּמִים, and I threw it, the Gospel has, καὶ ἔδωκαν αὐτὰ, and they gave them. The freedom with which the Evangelist renders שְׁלֹשִׁים by δίδωμι is the more noticeable, since he employs the participle δίδως in reference to the same subject in the fifth verse, where, at the same time, he renders בֵּית יְהוָה by ἐν τῷ ναῷ. The conjecture of some that יוֹצֵר, potter, is a corruption of יוֹצֵר, splendid price at which I was estimated by them! And I took treasurer, is worse than gratuitous, as the latter word nowhere occurs in Hebrew in reference to such an office, and as the potter was the most suitable person to whom to cast the despicable sum, occupying as he did a workshop in the valley of Hinnom, Jer. xviii. 1, 3, xix. 2, which was held in abomination by the Jews. That the Evangelist should have ascribed the prediction to Jeremiah has proved a source of great perplexity to critics. No person who has read the passage in Zechariah can peruse that in Matthew without at once being reminded of it. And so exactly do they tally in every important point, that no doubt of their relationship can for a moment be entertained. On the other hand, no such passage is to be found in any part of the prophecies of Jeremiah. The solution of the difficulty proposed by Hengstenberg, that it was the object of our prophet to bring forward to view the predictions contained in Jer. xviii. xix., in order to point out the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and that on this ground the Evangelist might, with all propriety, ascribe the authorship to Jeremiah, is very unsatisfactory; and we are shut up to one or other of the following conclusions: First, that the one name was substituted for the other by a lapsus memoria. Secondly, that the portion of the book of Zechariah, in which the words are found, though now bearing his name, was actually written by Jeremiah, and by some means or other, to us unknown, has been appended to the real prophecies of Zechariah. Thirdly, that the citation is made from an apocryphal book of the prophet Jeremiah. Or lastly, that there is a corruption of the name in the Greek text of Matthew. The first of these positions will not be admitted by any who believe in the plenary inspiration of the Apostles; a doctrine fully established on Scripture authority, and which, if denied, would completely annihilate our confidence in their testimony. If their memory might fail, or they might be mistaken in one instance, such might be the case in hundreds. For a refutation of the second hypothesis, see the Preface, in which it is shown that there is no solid foundation for the opinion, that the last six chapters of Zechariah were not written by that prophet. With respect to the third supposition, it cannot be denied that there was an apocryphal book of Jeremiah, containing an analogous passage. Jerome found it among the Nazarenes, and a portion of it still exists in a Sahidic Lectionary, in the Codex Huntingtonianus 5, in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, and in the Coptic language in the MS. 51 fol. in the library of St. Germain in Paris. The words are as follows: "Jeremiah spake again to Pashur, Ye and your fathers have resisted the truth, and your sons, which shall come after you, will commit more grievous sins than ye. For they will give the price of him that is valued, and do injury to him that maketh the sick whole, and forgiving iniquity. And they will take thirty pieces of silver, the price which the children of Israel have given. They have given them for the potter's field, as the Lord commanded. And thus it shall be spoken: The sentence of eternal punishment shall fall upon them, and upon their children, because they have shed innocent blood." But who does not perceive in this fragment the clumsy attempt of one of the early Christians to support the cause of truth by what was deemed a harmless fraud? Jerome at once rejected it as spurious, and expresses his belief that Matthew made his citation from Zechariah. It only remains that we assume a corruption in the Greek text of the Evangelist. That a variety of reading exists has long been matter of notoriety. Augustine mentions, that in his time some MSS. omitted the name of Ἱερεμίου. It is also omitted in the MS. 33, 157; in the Syriac, which is the most ancient of the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them into the house of Jehovah, to the potter.

14 Then I cut asunder my second crook Bands, in order to break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

15 And Jehovah said to me, Take to thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd ;

16 For, behold, I will raise up a shepherd in the land ;

Those which are perishing he will not visit,

That which strayeth he will not seek,

That which is wounded he will not heal,

That which standeth he will not nourish ;

all the versions ; in the Polyglott Persic, and in a Persic MS. in my possession, bearing date A. D. 1057 ; in the modern Greek ; in the Verona and Vercelli Latin MSS. and in a Latin MS. of Luc. Brug. The Greek MS. 22, reads Ζαχαρίου, as also do the Philoxenian Syriac in the margin, and an Arabic MS. quoted by Bengel. Origen and Eusebius were in favor of this reading. I think it very probable that Matthew did not insert either name, but simply wrote in his Hebrew Gospel, בִּיד הַבַּיִת, by the prophet, just as in chap. i. 22, ii. 5, 15, xiii. 35, xxi. 4, xxvii. 35 ; and that his Greek translator, mistaking ד in בִּיד for ר, read בִּיר, which he considered to be a contraction for בִּיר-מִיָּהוּ, and so rendered it διὰ Ἱερεμίου τοῦ προφήτου. This reading having found its way into the first Greek MS., will account for its all but universal propagation. Another conjecture supposes Ἰριου to have been written by some early copyist instead of Ζριου. I only add, that there can be no doubt the passage in question existed in the book of Zechariah in the Jewish canon in the days of the Evangelist, since it is found to occupy that place in the text of the LXX. which was formed three hundred years previously.

14. For the meaning of חֲבָטֵי בָּנִים Bands, see on ver. 7. The circumstances here predicted were those of the utter breaking up of the social condition of the Hebrews. This dissolution was in no small degree brought about by the internal dissensions which prevailed among themselves, the rage of the different parties against each other, and the barbarities that they practised, which none could have indulged in but such as had their hearts steeled against every feeling of brotherhood or humanity. "Yet by these men," says Josephus, "the ancient prediction seemed rapidly drawing to its fulfilment: That when civil war should break out in the city, and the temple be profaned by the hands of native Jews, the city should be taken, and the temple burned with fire."

15. עֵיִד, again, refers back to what is recorded ver. 7. The בָּנִים, here as a collective in the singular בָּנִי, were the articles usually belonging to shepherds, viz. a crook, a bag or wallet containing food, a pipe or reed, a knife, etc. Instead of בָּנִי, one of De Rossi's MSS., the Halle Bible of 1720, the Vatican copy of the LXX., the Syr., Vulg., and Arab., read בָּנֵי, the punctuation of the plural. חֲבָטֵי, foolish, by implication wicked, as wickedness is often represented in Scripture as folly.

16. מַעֲשֵׂים is employed here, like similar verbs in Hiphil, to denote not any direct moral excitement to action, but the operation of concurring circumstances, under the Divine government, in consequence of which certain events are brought about by responsible human agency. הַמַּעֲשֵׂה הַזֶּה, those that are perishing, the Niphal participle of מַעֲשֵׂה,

But he will eat the flesh of the fat,
And will break off their hoofs.

- 17 Woe to the worthless shepherd, that leaveth the flock ;
The sword shall be upon his arm,
And upon his right eye ;
His arm shall be utterly palsied,
And his right eye utterly darkened.

which in Hiphal and Niphal signifies to cut off or be destroyed.  $\text{זָכַר}$  is not to be taken in the sense of young, as it is interpreted by Kimchi and Hitzig, since it is never so used, except with reference to human beings, but signifies expulsion, that which has been cast out, by implication, strayed, wandered. Comp. the Arabic  $\text{نَعَار}$ , repulsus, in fugam versus.

$\text{הַיְצִיבֵהוּ}$ , that which standeth still.  $\text{בָּצַב}$  properly signifies to set or place, in Niphal, to stand, stand firm, be strong, firm, sound; and thus the LXX. here  $\delta\lambda\acute{o}\kappa\lambda\eta\gamma\omega\sigma$ , but this interpretation is quite at variance with the exigency of the place, which requires the idea of weakness rather than strength to be expressed. And this the verb naturally suggests, reference being had to the standing, or standing still of sheep that are obliged, through weakness or faintness, to lag behind. Comp. the Arabic  $\text{نَصَب}$ , posuit, fixit, and then dolore affect, lassus fuit, laboravit. Such it devolves upon the shepherd to provide with necessary nourishment, or, as it is here expressed,  $\text{בָּלֵב}$ , to sustain, furnish with provisions. Root  $\text{בָּלַב}$ , to measure grain. The words  $\text{בְּהִיטֵהוּן יַחֲרֹק}$  are expressive of the greatest cruelty, being descriptive of an act which must not only occasion the most acute pain, but disable the animals, and prevent their going about in quest of pasture. Who the ruler here depicted is, cannot with certainty be determined. If taken as pointing to an individual king, there is none to whom it will more aptly apply than to Herod, who was totally regardless of the real interest of the Jews, and whose reign was marked by the perpetration of the most shameful and barbarous cruelties. What goes to confirm this view is the circumstance of his being said to be raised up "in the land."

17. This denunciation seems to be directed against the wicked rulers of the Jews who might be in office between the time of the prophet, and that of the dissolution of the Jewish state, rather than against the person referred to in the preceding verse. The  $\text{ו}$  in  $\text{וְזָכַר}$  is not the pronominal affix, but the poetic paragogic, as in the following  $\text{וְזָכַר}$ , and other participles. See Gen. xlix. 11; Deut. xxxiii. 16; Ps. cxiv. 8, cxxiii. 1.  $\text{וְזָכַר הַיְצִיבֵהוּ}$ , the worthless or good-for-nothing shepherd. Comp. Job xiii. 4. The root must unquestionably have been  $\text{בָּצַב}$ . Comp.  $\text{בָּצַב}$  from  $\text{בָּצַב}$  from  $\text{בָּבַב}$ . The character described is that of negligence, arising from the total absence of a sense of official claims, and of personal responsibility. The rest of the verse from  $\text{וְזָכַר}$  onward, is to be taken optatively. The doom imprecated is truly awful — an utter deprivation of power and intelligence.

CHAPTER XII.

THIS chapter contains a series of predictions, which relate to the future restoration of the scattered people of the Jews, the destruction of whose national polity, and their consequent wretchedness, had been so graphically set forth in that which precedes it. On their return to their own land, Jerusalem shall prove formidable to the nations that oppose them, 2—4, having a regular government, by which, in reliance upon Jehovah, the inhabitants shall be protected, 5, 6. To prevent the inhabitants of the metropolis from glorying over their brethren in the country, the latter shall be first delivered from their invaders, 7; but Jerusalem being the principal point of attack, special promises of deliverance are made to it, 8, 9. When the Jews shall have been collected, and delivered from the opposing powers, there will be a remarkable effusion of the influences of the Holy Spirit, in consequence of which a season of great and universal mourning, on account of the crucifixion of the Messiah, will be observed, each family bewailing separately the guilt entailed upon it by the nefarious deed, 10—14.

As might be expected to be the case with unfulfilled prophecy, a considerable degree of obscurity necessarily attaches to certain portions of this and the two following chapters; but the leading features of the Divine dealings with the Jews in times yet future, are marked with a sufficient degree of distinctness to enable us to form a general idea of the circumstances in which they will be placed.

- 1 THE Sentence of the word of Jehovah concerning Israel ;
Saith Jehovah, who stretcheth forth the heavens,
Who layeth the foundations of the earth,
And formeth the spirit of man within him :
- 2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of intoxication
To all the people around ;

1. That בְּיָמָא does not necessarily involve a sentence of judgment, see on Is. xiii. 1; and for the entire phrase, בְּיָמָא דְּבֵרַי יְהוָה, see on chap. ix. 1. That it cannot be so taken here is manifest from the connection. Hengstenberg, in order to establish the contrary hypothesis, is obliged to have recourse to the desperate resort of interpreting Israel of the enemies of God! The term is obviously employed in its original acceptation, as designating the whole Hebrew people. With no other reference could it have been introduced. To remove all the doubts which unbelief might suggest respecting the possibility of the deliverance here predicted, a sublime description is given of the omnipotent Creator by whom it would be effected, than which no introduction could have been more appropriate. For בְּיָמָא דְּבֵרַי יְהוָה, compare Πατήρ τῶν πνευμάτων, Heb. xii. 9, and Numb. xvi. 22, xxvii. 16; and for the several predicates, Is. xlii. 5.

2. כַּס יְרֵעַל, some render a shaking threshold, in imitation of the LXX. ὡς πρόθυρα σαλευόμενα, and interpret the declaration here made of the concussion which Jerusalem should receive from the attack of the enemy; but it is more natural to regard the phrase as only another form for כַּס יְהוָה יְרֵעַל, Is. li. 17, 22, by which is meant a cup filled with intoxicating liquors, causing those who drink it to reel and stagger to their injury. Root רָעַל, to shake, reel, stagger. The attempt of Hengstenberg to deny that כַּס is ever used to denote a cup, is a com-

- And also with Judah it shall be thus,
In the siege of Jerusalem.
- 3 And it shall be in that day, I will make Jerusalem
A burdensome stone to all people,
All that lift it shall be cut in pieces :
Yet all the nations of the earth shall be gathered against it.
- 4 In that day, saith Jehovah,
I will smite every horse with consternation,
And his rider with madness ;
But upon the house of Judah I will keep my eyes open,
While I will smite every horse of the people with blindness.
- 5 And the chiefs of Judah shall say in their heart,
My strength is the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
Through Jehovah of hosts their God.

plete failure, as must be obvious to any one who will take the trouble to consult the Concordance. The second part of the verse has occasioned no small perplexity to interpreters. The chief difficulty is created by the position of the preposition על in the phrase על־הַיְהוּדָה. The Targ., Jerome, Kimchi, Drusius, Rosenmüller, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, suppose the meaning to be, that the inhabitants of Judah would be compelled to join the enemies in the attack upon Jerusalem, and with them share in the punishment : making על־הַיְהוּדָה the nominative to יִהְיֶה. But this interpretation ill suits the context, in the whole of which Judah is represented as triumphant, and not as placed in the degrading position of auxiliaries in a war against its own capital. I consider the preposition to be here used for the purpose of conveying the idea of addition or accompaniment, so that, connecting Judah with Jerusalem, it represents the former, as well as the latter, as a cup of intoxication to the invaders. See for this use of על, Gen. xxxii. 12 ; Exod. xxxv. 22 ; Job xxxviii. 32. In support of this interpretation, see especially ver. 6. The same result will be brought out, if we take על in the acceptation in reference to, with respect to ;

thus : " And with respect to Judah it shall also be in the siege ;" i. e. Judah shall also be a cup, etc.

3. Another metaphor employed like the preceding to represent the victory which the Jews shall obtain over their enemies, whose attack will only issue in their own injury. Jerome mentions it as a custom, which still obtained in his time, in Palestine, for young men to try their strength by lifting enormous stones so high from the ground, as to place them upon their heads. It may be from such an exercise that the metaphor is borrowed. שָׂרָץ describes the cuts or gashes made by the sharp edges or corners of the stones thus employed. Though exposed to the punishment here predicated, the nations shall confidently advance to the attack. The confederacy against the Jews will be universal in its character.

4. While Jehovah will specially interpose for the discomfiture of the enemy by rendering their cavalry incapable of performing any effective service, he will exercise the greatest watchfulness over his people.

5. הַיְהוּדָה is a substantive, but occurs only this once. The LXX. have read הַיְהוּדָה, and render εὐρήσομεν. The successful resistance offered to the enemy by

- 6 In that day I will make the chiefs of Judah
 Like a fire pot among sticks of wood,
 And like a torch of fire in a sheaf,
 And they shall consume all the people around,
 On the right hand and on the left ;
 For Jerusalem shall occupy her place in Jerusalem.
- 7 And Jehovah shall deliver the tents of Judah first,
 In order that the splendor of the house of David,
 And the splendor of the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
 May not be magnified above Judah.
- 8 In that day Jehovah shall protect the inhabitants of Jerusalem :
 So that he that stumbleth among them in that day shall be as David,
 And the house of David shall be as God,
 As the Angel of Jehovah before them.

the inhabitants of the metropolis, will inspire those of the country with the assurance, that, through the Divine aid, they shall obtain deliverance. לְיָ, which is the Dative of advantage, stands collectively for לְנֶגְדֵךְ. Two MSS. and the Targ. read לְיָ שְׂבִי, but no doubt from correction. In two other MSS. לְיָ is omitted.

6. Jerusalem, in the first instance, stands for the inhabitants. After the Jews shall have completely routed their enemies, they shall dwell in peace in their own land, and in the city of their ancient solemnities. Houbigant proposes to change לְיָ שְׂבִי, as occurring the second time, into לְיָ שְׂבִי, but, like most of his other conjectures, the change is not based upon any authority. One MS., the Arab, and the Greek MS. Pachom, omit the word altogether.

7. The inhabitants of the country being more exposed to the evils of the war than those in the fortified city, shall be the first to experience the Divine help. Standing in antithesis with the capital, their comparative helplessness is clearly implied; and the reason for the preference being given to them is assigned to be the prevention of that spirit of pride and self-exaltation, in which the inhabitants of a royal metropolis are too prone to indulge. The reading בְּרִאשֹׁנָה, "as at the first," which is found in two MSS., and is the original reading of three more, and is favored by the LXX., Arab., Syr., and Vulg., is not entitled to consideration.

8. A gracious promise of Divine assistance, supported, with admirable effect, by a beautiful climax. From the circumstance, that the LXX. have in several instances rendered מַלְאָכֵי יְהוָה, by angels, some interpreters have supposed that the term is to be so understood here. The more enlightened moderns, however, discard this signification altogether. See Gesenius, Thesaurus Ling. Heb. p. 95, and Lee's Heb. Lex. p. 32. What clearly shows that no such idea can attach to the word in this place is the corrective phrase, מַלְאָכֵי יְהוָה, as the Angel of Jehovah, immediately following. The house of David was to be as God; yet not as God in the abstract, of which no proper conception can be formed, but as God manifested to men in his glorious forthcomings under the ancient dispensation, in the Divine Person of the Son, who went before the children of Israel as their Almighty leader and Protector, and to whom are vindicated the

- 9 And it shall be in that day,
I will seek to destroy all the nations
That come against Jerusalem.
10 And I will pour out upon the house of David,
And upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
A spirit of grace and of gracious supplications,
And they shall look unto me whom they have pierced, sum total of the Divine attributes. See Exod. xxxii. 34; where the words  $\text{בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים}$  form the type of  $\text{בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים}$ , here adopted by Zechariah. Compare also Exod. xxxiii. 15, xxiii. 21; Is. lxiii. 9; Mal. iii. 1; and my Comment. on Zech. i. 11.

9.  $\text{אֲבַדְתִּי אֶת כָּל הַגּוֹיִם}$ , I will seek to destroy, is spoken more humano, but conveys no idea of weakness in the speaker. "Summo studio ero attentus. Calvin.

10. We have here a clear and definite prophecy of the future conversion of the Jews, in consequence of a special and extraordinary outpouring of the influences of the Holy Spirit. Nothing that has hitherto taken place in the history of that people can be regarded as in any degree answering to the description here furnished, not even the numerous conversions that accompanied the Apostolic preaching on the day of Pentecost, and subsequently as narrated in the Acts. By  $\text{רוּחַ}$ , spirit, is not meant a gracious and prayerful disposition produced in the minds of the Jews, but the Divine influence itself by which that disposition will be created. It is called "spirit" by metonymy of cause for effect.  $\text{רָגַל}$  and  $\text{רָגַלְתִּי$  are from the same root,  $\text{רָגַל}$ , to regard with favor, exercise mercy, etc. The verb  $\text{בָּטַט}$ , here used in Hiphil, is intensive in signification: to look to, or regard with fixed attention, to contemplate with deep interest, and with believing expectation. Such is the nature of that act of the mind which is exerted by every converted sinner, when the Saviour is spiritually discerned. In the case of the Jews there will be a special recognition of him as the Messiah whom their ancestors crucified, and whose deed they have appropriated by their personal unbelief and opposition to the truth of the Gospel, but whom they will then regard as all their salvation and all their desire. The textual reading  $\text{יִבְטְטוּ}$ , in the phrase  $\text{יִבְטְטוּ אֵלַי}$ , "they shall look to ME," has been the subject of much controversy. It is found in most MSS., and among these the best, and is supported by the LXX., Aq., Symm., Theod., Syr., Targ., Vulg., and Arab. It is the more difficult reading, and one which has always proved revolting to the mind of a Jew, as there is no other antecedent to whom it can be referred than  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , JEHOVAH, verses 1 and 4. In order to avoid this reference, Kimchi gives to the following words,  $\text{רָגַלְתִּי אֶת בְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים}$ , the interpretation, because they pierced, leaving it undetermined who was pierced. But this construction is altogether inadmissible, as it deprives the verb of its accusative case, which is expressed in every other instance in which it occurs. It has accordingly been condemned by Abenezra, Abarbanel, Alshech, and other Rabbins. The rendering given to  $\text{רָגַלְתִּי}$  by the LXX.  $\text{καταρχήσавτο}$ , they insulted, has been eagerly seized upon by some, especially by Theiner, Rosenmüller, Eichhorn, Gesenius, De Wette, Winer, and by none more than Maurer, who is at great pains to prove that, like  $\text{בָּטַט}$  and  $\text{בָּטַטְתִּי}$ , the verb  $\text{רָגַלְתִּי}$  is to be taken in the metaphorical sense of blaspheming or cursing. Against such interpretation it is justly objected that this verb, which occurs in ten other passages, is never used except in the literal acceptance of piercing the body. It

And they shall lament for him,
As one lamenteth for an only son,
And be in bitterness for him,
As one is in bitterness for a first-born.

is thus used in chap. xiii. 3, of this very book. The same objection lies against the metaphorical sense of grieving or provoking, which even Calvin adopted, though he admits that the prophecy was literally fulfilled in Christ.

That the passage has a Messianic reference has been admitted both by the ancient and the more modern Jews. In the Gemara of Jerusalem, written sometime in the third century, we read: תריין אמורין חד אמר זה הספידו של משיח וחדורנה אמר זה הספידו של יצר הרע. Two opinions are expressed: one states that they mourned on account of Messiah, and another that they mourned on account of corrupt nature. A similar passage occurs in the Gemara of Babylon, Tract Succoth, fol. 52, col. 1, in which the words of Zechariah are cited, after the declaration respecting the mourning: בשלמא למאן דאמר על משיח בן יוסף. May he be in peace who refers it to Messiah the son of Joseph, who shall be slain. See also the commentaries of Abarbanel and Abenezra, who give the same interpretation, as also does the Talmud Chasdash, fol. 24: כי אחרי שידקר: יונה שהוא משיח בי יוסף אחרי כי יבא דויד דהיינו משיח בן דויד. For after they have pierced Jonah, who is Messiah the son of Joseph, then David will come, Messiah the son of David. Hengstenberg's Christol. vol. iii. p. 222. The fiction of two Messiahs, one the son of Joseph, who should suffer and die, and another the son of David, who should prove victorious and reign forever, was invented purely with a view to reconcile those passages which describe the Messiah now as suffering, and now as reigning in glory, and thus to evade the Christian application of them to our Saviour.

It only remains to inquire how the Jews, who did not acquiesce in the interpretation adopted by Kimchi, have endeavored to get rid of the pronominal reference in מִיָּי. To this the reply is: By changing the reading into מִיָּי, which, however, they did not at first venture to insert into the text, but merely gave it as the Keri, or corrected reading in the margin. This Keri, however, is only found in sixteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.; but at length a more daring step was taken by receiving it into the text itself, in which it is found in thirty-four of Kennicott's MSS., originally in three more, perhaps in five others, and now by correction in six; in six of De Rossi's own, in two more originally, now in five others, and in twenty collated by him in other libraries. Of this insertion a serious complaint is made by Raymundus Martini, in his Pugio Fidei, p. 411, Leipsic, 1687, fol. And so ashamed have Lipmann, Abarbanel, and other Rabbins been of it, that they pass it entirely by in their controversies with the Christians, or candidly acknowledge that it is not to be regarded as forming any part of the sacred text. It is much to be regretted, that while it has been rejected by the best Jewish and Christian critics, the most free-thinking of the German school not excepted, it should have been adopted by Newcome and Boothroyd, who accordingly translate: "They shall look unto HIM whom they have pierced." It is true, they may seem to have the sanction of the Evangelist John, who quotes the passage thus: Ὁψονται εἰς ὃν ἐξεκέντησαν, xix. 37, and employs the words, καὶ οἶτινες αὐτὸν ἐξεκέντησαν, Rev. i. 7; but it must be obvious that he gives the prophecy historically, as having been literally fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, without designing to exhibit the exact wording of the prophet. See on Zech. xi. 12, 13.

- 11 In that day there shall be great lamentation in Jerusalem,
As the lamentation of Hadad-rimmon in the valley of Megiddon.
- 12 And the land shall lament, every family apart ;
The family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart ;
The family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart ;
- 13 The family of the house of Levi apart, and their wives apart ;
The family of Shimei apart, and their wives apart ;
- 14 All the families that are left,
Every family apart, and their wives apart.

It might be supposed that  $\text{זָּכַר}$  being the true reading,  $\text{זָּכַר}$ , and not  $\text{זָּכַרְו}$ , would be required in the following sentence; but the use of the expletive phrase  $\text{זָּכַרְוּ אֶתְּכֶם}$ , necessarily led to the change of construction.  $\text{זָּכַר}$  is the infinitive of Hiphil, which carries forward the description instead of the finite form. It is here used intransitively; the root is  $\text{זָּכַר}$ . The verb  $\text{זָּכַר}$  signifies primarily to beat; then, as a sign of intense grief, to smite or beat the breast. There being usually great wailing and lamentation connected with such significant action in the East, it is also used to denote the noise made by mourners. The instances selected for illustration are of the most tender and touching kind.

11. To represent the greatness and universality of the lamentation which he describes, the prophet compares it to the greatest ever known among the Jews, viz. that which took place on the death of the excellent king Josiah, the result of the wound which he received at Hadad-rimmon. 2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 23—25. See also the Lamentations of Jeremiah, composed on the occasion. Hadad-rimmon was the name of a place in the great plain of Esdraelon, near Megiddo, and was probably so called after the Syrian idol of that name. In the time of Jerome it was called Maximianopolis.

12—14. In these verses the universal character of the mourning is described, while, at the same time, its particular and individual features are likewise set forth. To show that all will be the subjects of it, the prophet begins with the descendants of David, and then proceeds to those of the priests, on account of the influence which their example would have on the rest of the people. Instead of Shimei, the LXX. have  $\Sigmaυμεων$ , supposing that a tribal division was intended; and some have thought that  $\text{זָּמַמְוּ}$ , Shammua, one of the sons of David, 2 Sam. v. 14, is meant; but it is more natural to regard the individual as one of the sons of Levi, who is classed along with that patriarch, just as Nathan, one of the sons of David, is with him, ver. 12. For  $\text{זָּמַמְוּ}$ , Shimei, see Numb. iii. 18, 21, in which latter verse  $\text{זָּמַמְוּ הַלְוִיִּם מִשְׁפַּחַת שִׁמְעִי}$ , the family of the Shimeites, occurs just as in Zechariah. It is implied in the last verse, that some families shall have become extinct at the period referred to. The men and women mourning apart has reference to the Jewish custom, according to which not only did the females dwell in separate apartments from the males, but also worshipped separately.

CHAPTER XIII.

THIS chapter contains a continuation of the prophecy respecting the future conversion of the Jews, ver. 1; predictions relating to the entire abolition of idolatry and false doctrine, 2-6; a resumption of the subject of the Messiah's sufferings, 7; and an account of the destruction of the greater part of the Jews during the Roman war, the preservation of the rest, and their ultimate restoration, 8, 9.

- 1 IN that day there shall be a fountain opened
To the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
For guilt and for uncleanness.
- 2 And it shall be in that day, saith Jehovah of hosts,
I will cut off the names of the idols from the earth;
And they shall not be remembered any more.
And I will also cause the prophets and the unclean spirit
To pass away from the earth.

1. This verse is intimately connected with the subject of the concluding verses of the preceding chapter. It is designed to relieve the anxious and troubled minds of the penitents there described. מְקִיָּא, a well, or fountain, from קָרָה, to dig; not, perhaps, without reference to chap. xii. 10. חַטָּאת, guilt, from חָטָא, to miss a mark or way, to sin; hence the substantive comes to signify the guilt contracted by sinning, the punishment to which it exposes the transgressor, and a sin offering, for the purpose of making expiation. That it is here to be taken in the sense of guilt, is shown by the accompanying term נְקִיָּא, uncleanness, or the impurity contracted by sin. That moral, and not ceremonial guilt and pollution are intended, the circumstances of the case evince; and the Jews are taught, that their deliverance from these is not to be effected by the Levitical sacrifices and purifications, but by the cleansing influence flowing from the death of the Messiah. See Heb. ix. 13, 14; 1 John i. 7. The verse exhibits the two grand doctrines of the gospel: justification and sanctification. The fountain here spoken of was opened when the Redeemer presented his sacrifice on the cross; but the Jews, with comparatively few exceptions, after the apostolic age, have shut it against themselves by their impenitence and unbelief. When, however, these shall be removed by the outpouring of Divine influence, promised, chap. xii. 10, they shall find it נִפְתָּחָה, opened, full, and overflowing with all spiritual blessings.

2. As no idolatry has existed among the Jews since their return from Babylon, and it is in the highest degree improbable that they will ever fall into it again, אֲרָצָה should not be rendered, as in our common version, the land, but the earth; so that this and the following verses describe the total extinction of that horrible evil, and all the other systems of superstition and false religion which now impose upon the human family, together with those who teach and defend them. By רֹחַ חַטָּאת, the spirit of impurity, is meant a person pretending to inspiration, and in league with Satan, the god of this world, to whom, in contradistinction to רֹחַ קֳדְשׁ, the spirit of holiness, the

- 3 So that should any one still prophesy,
His father and his mother — his parents
Shall say to him, Thou shalt not live;
For thou speakest falsehood in the name of Jehovah;
And his father and his mother — his parents
Shall thrust him through when he prophesieth.
- 4 And it shall be in that day,
That the prophets shall be ashamed,
Every one of his vision, when he prophesieth;
And they shall not wear a hairy garment to deceive.
- 5 But each shall say, I am not a prophet,
I am a tiller of the ground;
For I have been in a state of slavery from my youth.
- 6 Then shall it be said to him,
What are these wounds in thy hands?
And he will say,
Those with which I have been wounded in the house of my friends,

designation may well be applied. Compare πνεῦμα πόδωνος, Acts xvi. 16; τὸ πνεῦμα τῆς πλάνης, 1 John, iv. 6; and especially, καὶ ἐκ τοῦ στόματος τοῦ ψευδοπροφήτου πνεύματα τρία ἀκάθαρτα, Rev. xvi. 13.

3. There is in this verse a recognition of the law against those who seduced others to idolatry, Deut. xiii. 6—11. עֲרֵבְיָהּ, parents. עָרַב, signifies both to beget, and to bear children. The evil here denounced will not be connived at even by the nearest relatives. The tenderest parental feelings shall give place to the infliction of merited punishment.

4, 5. The shame with which false teachers shall be covered is here set forth. The hairy mantle, the garb of the ancient prophets, and that of certain orders of monks still, which is assumed in order to inspire the multitude with an impression of the superior sanctity of those by whom they are worn, shall be thrown aside, as dangerous to appear in. The false prophets wished to pass off as those who had really been invested with a Divine commission. The form of the infinitive יִרְאֶה, is according to the analogy of verbs in "לֵה. To the singular יִרְאֶה, at the beginning of ver. 5, each of the prophets previously mentioned is the nominative. יִרְאֶה, lit. one sold me as a slave, but taken in connection with the following, מִנְעוּרִי, from my youth, it signifies to be held in a state of slavery, to be a slave. The speaker declares that he had always been in a condition of life with which the exercise of the prophetic office was altogether incompatible. עָרַב, which some translators have preposterously retained as the proper name, Adam, is here used impersonally, precisely as the German man, and is best rendered into English by the passive of the accompanying verb.

6. This verse is commonly applied to the sufferings of Christ, but without any further ground than its mere proximity to that which follows, in which he and his sufferings are clearly predicted. In no tolerable sense could the Jews be called his מְאָהְבָיו, lovers, or friends; on the contrary, they hated both him and his Father. The words connect with the preceding thus: The false prophet, though he might rid himself of his idol-

7 Awake, O sword! against my shepherd,
 And against the man who is united to me,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts:

atrous vestments, would not be able to efface the marks that had been made on his hands in honor of the idol which he served, yet as it was customary to cut and maim the body, especially the hand, in token of grief for departed relatives, he might hope to escape detection by attributing his sears to the latter cause.

7. Various opinions have been formed respecting the person here referred to. Calvin thought he was Zechariah himself, as representative of all the prophets, and that the prophecy referred only indirectly to Christ. Grotius, Eichhorn, Bauer, and Jahn, apply it to Judas Maccabeus; Maurer to Jehoiakim; Ewald to Pekah; Hitzig to the pretended prophets spoken of in the preceding verses! The only satisfactory solution of the question is that which regards the words as directly and exclusively prophetic of the person and sufferings of the Messiah. This solution is induced not only by our Saviour's express appropriation of them to himself, Matt. xxvi. 31, but also by the manifest identity of the subject treated with that exhibited chap. xi. 4, 7, 10—14. The same subject there handled is resumed, and treated, just as it is there, in connection with the downfall of the Jewish state. The prophecy contained in this and the following verses has no coherence with what immediately precedes, and was evidently delivered upon a different occasion. A new section may, therefore, be considered as commencing here, though it only extends to chap. xiv. 5. The language employed is altogether peculiar. Not only is the Messiah designated the Shepherd of Jehovah, to indicate the relation in which he stood to the Father in the economy of redemption, but he is described as גִּבּוֹר עֲמִיתוֹ, the man of his union; i. e. conjoined or closely united to him. The term translated man, is not that usually employed in Hebrew, which in such construction would merely be idiomatic, but גִּבּוֹר, a strong, or mighty man, one who is such by way of eminence. עֲמִיתוֹ is used elsewhere only in the Pentateuch, namely, in Lev. v. 21, xviii. 20, xix. 11, 15, 17, xxiv. 19, xxv. 14, 15, 17; in all which passages it is employed to denote persons who were united together under common laws, for the enjoyment of common rights and privileges. It is derived from עָמַד, cognate with עָמַד, to bind, bind together, unite in society; Arab.

عَم, communis fuit, communem fecit rem: hence the derivatives עָמַד, a people, i. e. those united for their common interest; עָמִיד, conjunction, communion, association; עִמָּה, the conjunction with, indicating accompaniment, society. The renderings of the versions vary. LXX. ἄνδρα πολιτήν μου. Aq. ἄνδρα σύμφυλόν μου. Symm. ἄνδρα τοῦ λαοῦ μου.

Theod. ἄνδρα πλησίον μου. Syr. ܐܢܕܪܐ ܕܥܡܝ, the man my friend. Targ.

הַמֶּלֶךְ הַיְהוָה הָיָה לְעִמִּיתוֹ, the ruler his companion, his associate who is like him. Vulg. virum coherentem mihi. Leo Juda, virum coaequalem mihi. Hengstenberg, a man, my nearest relation. Burger, mon confident. De Wette, den Mann meines Gleichen, the man my equal. Arnheim, dem Manne, den ich mir zugesellt, the man whom I have associated with myself. The two last are the more remarkable, coming, as they do, the one from a Rationalist, and the other from a Jew. The idea expressed by the latter I conceive to be precisely what was intended by the Holy Spirit, by whom the words were indited. But of whom can this association be predicated, except of Him whose human

Smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered,
But I will turn back my hand upon the little ones.

8 And it shall be that in all the land,

Saith Jehovah,

Two parts therein shall be cut off and expire,

But the third part shall be left in it.

9 And I will cause the third part to go through the fire, nature was assumed into the most intimate and perfect union with the Divine — IMMANUEL, who was one with the Father, and who could say, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father! The union or association is that of the two natures, and not that of the Divine nature or substance. This the use of the word  $\text{אָדָם}$ , man, clearly proves. To the objection, that the words cannot be applied to our Saviour, since he was not cut off by a sword, it has been sufficiently replied, that  $\text{חֶבֶרֶק}$ , sword, is here used figuratively for any means of taking away human life, just as in Exod. v. 21; 2 Sam. xii. 9, compared with 2 Sam. xi. 24. That the wicked Jews are intended, see Ps. xvii. 13, where the wicked are called the sword of Jehovah. They are regarded as in a state of sleep or inactivity, and are summoned to perpetrate the awful deed. According to an idiom common in the Hebrew prophets, the imperative is used instead of the future, in order to express with greater force the certainty of the event. See my note on Is. vi. 10. For a parallel instance of the personification of the sword, see Jer. xlvi. 6, 7. As  $\text{חֶבֶרֶק}$  is feminine, and  $\text{הָיָה}$  masculine, Hitzig would refer the latter to the human agent handling the sword, but the irregularity in point of gender is sufficiently accounted for by the remoteness of the antecedent.  $\text{הָיָה}$ , smite, is quoted, Matt. xxvi. 31, as if it were  $\text{הָיָה}$ , I will smite, the first person singular of the future in Hiphil. There is no diversity of reading in the Hebrew MSS., but the Ald. and Pachom. MSS. of the LXX. read  $\text{παράξω}$ , instead of  $\text{παράξω}$ , which the Evangelist Matthew and Mark have copied. The difference is unimportant, yet there seems to be more propriety in the reading  $\text{הָיָה}$ , with reference to the sword addressed in the preceding clause, than in connecting this verb, whatever may be supposed to have been its form, with what follows in the verse. Comparing the present verse with chap. xi. 4, 7, and especially with what is predicted in the two following verses of the present chapter, in which the same subject is continued, it is evident the  $\text{צֹאֵן}$ , sheep, or flock, cannot be restricted to the disciples of Christ. The circumstances, however, in reference to which our Saviour appropriated the prophecy, afforded a striking type of the dispersion of the Jewish people, which is that intended by Zechariah. The disciples as Jews formed part of the flock which the good shepherd was commissioned to feed, but they, together with the Jewish Christians, converted by their ministry, who formed the first church at Jerusalem, were the  $\text{צֹאֵן הַקָּטָן}$ , little ones, on whom the Lord promises to turn back his hand, in order to protect them in the time of calamity. That the phrase  $\text{וְהָיָה יָדִי עָלָיָהּ}$ , to turn, or turn back the hand, upon any one, is used in a good as well as in a bad sense, see on Is. i. 25.

8, 9. In these verses are predicted the destruction of two-thirds of the inhabitants of Judea by the Roman arms, and by the famine and pestilence, the usual concomitants of war in the East, and the preservation of the remaining third part, which, after having been submitted to very trying and afflictive processes, should come forth out of the furnace a regenerated and spiritual people. The

And will refine them as silver is refined,
 And will try them as gold is tried ;
 It shall invoke my name, and I will answer it,
 I will say, It is my people ;
 And it shall say, Jehovah is my God.

former was fulfilled not only during what is commonly called the Jewish war, but also, to a fearful extent, under more than one of the succeeding emperors ; the processes pointed at in the latter have been more or less carried forward ever since, but are, it is to be hoped, soon to terminate in the conversion of the Jews to God. Then shall they enter into a new relation to him, according to the terms of the better covenant, Jer. xxxi. 33 ; Heb. viii. 10, 11.

---

CHAPTER XIV.

IN the first two verses of this chapter the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans and the calamities consequent upon that event are set forth ; after which the destruction of the forces composing the hostile army is predicted, 3. A promise of special interposition in behalf of the people of God is then given, by which effectual provision is made for their escape, 4, 5. The prophet next describes a period of great calamity, which is to give place to one of unmixed and perennial happiness, 6, 7 ; when the means of spiritual life and enjoyment shall be universal and continual, 8 ; and the true God the exclusive object of obedience and worship, 9 ; and while every barrier to the free intercourse of Christians throughout the world shall be removed, special honor will be conceded to Jerusalem as the metropolis of converted Israel, 10, 11. The dreadful judgments to be inflicted on their final enemies, and the complete discomfiture of these enemies, are depicted, 12—15 : after which follow predictions respecting an annual visit which all the nations shall pay to Jerusalem, 16 ; the punishment of those which neglect to perform it, 17—19 ; and the universally holy character which shall distinguish her inhabitants, their occupations and services, 20, 21.

---

1 BEHOLD the day of Jehovah cometh,
 And thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of thee.
 2 For I will collect all the nations against Jerusalem to battle,

1. For the phraseology הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה אֶבְרָא יְהוָה, comp. Is. xxii. 5. The criticism of Hengstenberg, who denies that it is equivalent to הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה אֶבְרָא יְהוָה, is without any foundation. By the day of Jehovah is meant the period of the infliction of judgment. See, in reference to the same event which is here predicted, Joel ii. 31, iii. 14 ; Mal. iv. 1, 5. By the spoil of Jerusalem is meant all that her inhabitants had accumulated, and which would be fit spoil for the enemy, especially the treasures of the temple. Notwithstanding all that was consumed by fire, the plunder obtained by the Romans was so great, that gold fell in Syria to half its former value.

 2. All the nations here mean soldiers from all the different nations forming

And the city shall be taken,
 And the houses plundered, and the women ravished ;
 And half the city shall go forth into captivity,
 But the rest of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

3 And Jehovah shall go forth,
 And fight with those nations,
 As in the day when he fought
 In the day of battle.

4 And his feet shall stand in that day
 On the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east ;
 And the mount of Olives shall be split in its midst,
 Toward the east and toward the west,
 Into a very great valley ;
 Half of the mountain shall recede towards the north,
 And half of it towards the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of my mountains,
 For the valley of the mountains shall reach to Azal ;
 Yea, ye shall flee as ye fled from the earthquake,
 In the days of Uzziah, king of Judah ;

the Roman empire, which composed the army of Titus. The verse contains a fearful description of the capture of Jerusalem under the command of that general. After its destruction, the more distinguished, handsome, and able-bodied Jews were sold into slavery, or condemned to work in the mines ; but the poorer and more contemptible sort were permitted to remain among the ruins. As usual, where  $\text{הַיַּמִּינִים}$  occurs in the text the Keri has  $\text{הַיַּמִּינִים}$ , for the sake of euphemism. The latter word has found its way into a great many MSS.

3. The Roman power was doomed in its turn to destruction. Formidable as it might appear, Jehovah would in his providence overthrow it, as he had done the enemies of his people in former ages. Comp. Exod. xiv. 14, xv. 3, etc.

4, 5. These verses convey, in language of the most beautiful poetical imagery, the assurance of the effectual means of escape that should be provided for the truly pious. We accordingly learn from Eusebius, that on the breaking out of the Jewish war, the Christian church at Jerusalem, in obedience to the warning of our Saviour, Matt. xxiv. 16, fled to Pella, a city beyond Jordan, where they lived in safety. As the mount of Olives lay in their way, it is represented as cleaving into two halves, in order to make a passage for them. Comp. chap. iv. 7.  $\text{הָרֵי}$  is not to be considered as the less usual form of the masculine plural, but as a proper plural with the pronominal affix. Jehovah calls them his, because he had formed them, by cleaving Olivet into two. The valley lay between them.  $\text{בְּצֵד}$  was the proper name of a place, close to one of the gates on the east side of Jerusalem, to which the cleft or valley was to extend westward, so as at once to admit those who should flee from the enemy. Most commentators think of some locality to the east of the mount of Olives, but far less aptly. The word properly signifies to join or be joined to, be at the side, near. Its proximity to the city must have originated the name. For  $\text{וְיָמְנוּ}$ , ye shall flee, we find the reading  $\text{וְיָמְנוּ}$ , shall be stopped up, in four of De Rossi's MSS. and in

For Jehovah my God shall come,
And all the holy ones with thee.

- 6 And it shall be in that day
That there shall not be the light of the precious orbs,
But condensed darkness.
- 7 But there shall be one day,

the margin of Bomberg's Hebrew Bible; but, though supported by the LXX., Arab., Targ., Symm., and the other Greek interpreters, it is utterly to be rejected, as unsuited to the connection. The very opposite of what would thus be expressed, is required. Yet it is adopted by Blayney and Boothroyd! We have nothing in Scripture relative to the earthquake here referred to except as a date, Amos i. 1. Instead of עִמָּךְ, with thee, nearly forty MSS. and all the versions read עִמָּו, with him; and instead of קְדוֹשֵׁיךָ, the holy ones, one MS., the Syr., Arab., and Targ., read קְדוֹשֵׁיךָ, his holy ones. To refer עִמָּךְ, with the Rabbins, Drusius, and Blayney, to Jerusalem, is quite inadmissible, since such construction affords no tolerable sense. The change of person was occasioned by a sudden transition in the mind of the prophet to the Lord, whom he addresses as present. For the application of this part of the prophecy, compare the parallel prediction of our Lord himself, Matt. xxiv. 30, 31, where those whom Zechariah designates קְדוֹשֵׁיךָ, holy ones, are called τὸὺς ἀγγέλους αὐτοῦ. That a future personal and pre-millennial advent of the Redeemer is here taught, I cannot find.

6. Now follows the prediction of a period of unmitigated calamity, which may be regarded as comprehending the long centuries of oppression, cruelty, mockery, and scorn, to which the Jews have been subjected ever since the destruction of Jerusalem. It has also, for the most part, been a period during which the gross darkness of superstition and delusion has reigned over the land of their fathers. וְיָצְאוּ מִן־הָאָרֶץ, have been variously rendered and interpreted. LXX. ψύχος καὶ πάγος. Vulg. frigus et gelu. Syr. ܐܘܪܘܟܝܢ ܕܥܡܝܢܝܢ, cold and ice. Thus also Maurer, and several other moderns. But whatever connection there may be between the absence of light and the production of cold and ice in the depth of winter, the contrast is not so natural as that between light and darkness. Besides, יְקָרִים cannot with any show of truth be rendered cold. It is an adjective plural from the root יָקַר, to be precious, valuable, costly. The idea of cold rests upon no better authority than a mere Rabbinical conjecture embodied in the Keri of Prov. xvii. 27, which exhibits יְקָר רַחֲמַי, instead of יְקָר רַחֲמַי, the proper and only term suitable in such connection. That יְקָרִים may fitly be understood as designating the celestial luminaries, whence we obtain what, in common parlance, we call "the precious light of heaven," will appear on comparing Job xxxi. 26, where the moon is described as הֹלֵךְ הַלָּיְלָה, walking preciously or splendidly across the heavens. With Prof. Lee, (Heb. Lex. p. 533,) I read יְקָרִים אֵרֶץ in construction, placing the accent on the latter of the two words, instead of retaining it over the former. וְיָצְאוּ מִן־הָאָרֶץ properly signifies congelation, condensation, excessive density, from צָקַק, to draw together, contract, become thick, dense, and the like. Blayney renders, thick fog. The textual reading וְיָצְאוּ מִן־הָאָרֶץ, they shall withdraw themselves, is inferior to that of the Keri וְיָצְאוּ מִן־הָאָרֶץ, which is found in the text of one hundred and thirty-four of Kennicott's MSS., and in twenty-two more originally, in nine of De Rossi's Spanish MSS., which are

(It is known to Jehovah),

When it shall not be day and night;

For at the time of the evening there shall be light.

8 And it shall be in that day

That living waters shall proceed from Jerusalem,

Half of them to the Eastern sea,

And half of them to the Western sea;

In summer and in winter shall it be.

reckoned the best in the Soncín., Brixian, and Complutensian editions, and in Machzors of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. None of the ancient versions employ a verb.

7. Another period is here predicted, but one entirely different from the preceding—a day altogether unique, יוֹם יָחִיד, one peculiar day, the only one of its kind. See Gesenius in יוֹם יָחִיד, No. 5. Its peculiarity is to consist in the absence of the alternations of day and night. It is to be all day—a period of entire freedom from war, oppression and other outward evils which induce affliction and wretchedness, interrupt the peace of the church, and prevent the spread of truth and righteousness. Νὴξ γὰρ οὐκ ἔσται ἐκεῖ, Rev. xxii. 25. עֵרֶב-עֵרֶב, the time of the evening, does not refer to the close of the happy period just described, but to that of the preceding period of afflictive darkness. At the very time when a dark and gloomy day is expected to give way to a night of still greater darkness and obscurity, light shall suddenly break forth, the light of the one long day, which is to be interrupted by no night. That this period is that of the Millennium, or the thousand years, the circumstances of which are described Rev. xx. 3—7, I cannot entertain a doubt. The time of its commencement has been variously but fruitlessly calculated. The knowledge of it the Father hath reserved in his own power. “It is known to Jehovah,” and, by implication, to him alone.

8. מַיִם חַיִּים, living, i. e. running, perennial, refreshing, and salubrious wa- ter, in opposition to that which is stagnant and noxious. יָם אֲשֵׁר־מִיָּזְרַיִם, the Eastern sea, i. e. the Asphaltic Lake; and יָם הַיְסוּדִי, the Western sea, i. e. the Mediterranean; so called because when a person resident at Jerusalem faces the East, which is the primary point of the horizon with the Orientals, the Dead Sea is before him, (יָם אֲשֵׁר־מִיָּזְרַיִם), and the Mediterranean (יָם הַיְסוּדִי) behind him. The more important portions of the globe lying to the east and west of Jerusalem, there is an obvious propriety in the selection of these two directions. The declaration that these waters are to flow יָרֵד וְיַעֲרֹב, is expressive of constancy. They shall neither be dried up by the heat of summer, nor congealed by the frost of winter. The LXX. have ἐν θέρει καὶ ἐν ἔαρι, “in summer and in spring,” which is to be accounted for on the ground that what was winter in more northerly regions, was spring in Egypt, in which country that version was made. In the figurative language of Scripture, water is not only used as an emblem of purification, but also for the purpose of representing the means of spiritual life, refreshment, and fertility—the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel. The descendants of Abraham, restored to their own land, and become his children in the faith, will go forth, full of zeal and spiritual activity, as missionaries to other nations, to promote revivals in the churches of Christ by rehearsing what great things God hath done for them, and to carry on the work of conversion among those nations and tribes that shall not then have been turned to the Lord.

- 9 And Jehovah shall become king over all the earth ;
 In that day Jehovah alone shall be,
 And his name alone.
- 10 And all the earth shall be changed
 As it were into the plain from Geba to Rimmon,
 South of Jerusalem ;
 And she shall be exalted,
 And be inhabited in her place,
 From the gate of Benjamin
 To the place of the former gate,
 To the gate of the corners ;
 And from the tower of Hananeel
 To the king's wine-vats.

9. In consequence of the universal spread of the Gospel, the multiplicity of heathen gods will be swept away from the face of the earth, the unity of Jehovah universally acknowledged, and the glorious harmony of those attributes which constitute his one Divine character (שְׁמוֹ, his name) clearly discovered, and heartily adored. According to the ordinary mode of translating the words יהוה יהוה וְשֵׁמוֹ אֶחָד, there shall be one Lord and his name one, they may seem clogged with little or no difficulty, as the true God is thus set forth in opposition to the "gods many and lords many" of the heathen; but we have only to introduce the incommunicable name JEHOVAH into the translation when the greatest incongruity at once appears. If we then render, there shall be one Jehovah, the conclusion is inevitable, that previous to the predicted period, there must have existed more Jehovahs than one. Or, if we render, Jehovah shall be one, we make the passage teach either that Jehovah was not one before, or, that he will no longer be three, or triune — Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, in the undivided unity of the Godhead. All ambiguity, however, will at once be removed, if יהוה be taken adverbially, and rendered only, alone, or the like. And thus I conceive it must be rendered in the primary article of the inspired creed of the Hebrews: יהוה אלהינו יהוה אחד, JEHOVAH is our God, JEHOVAH alone. The doctrine, therefore, taught in the present verse is simply that Jehovah shall be the only existing object of religious worship and obedience, and no characteristics but his be any longer recognized as divine.

10, 11. These verses intimate that every obstruction shall be removed which prevents the free and full flow of the living waters throughout the world. What is high shall be levelled, and what is low shall be elevated. This idea was suggested by the natural impossibility of water flowing in a westerly direction from Jerusalem to the Mediterranean, owing to the hilly country which intervenes. In יטב we have a rather unusual signification of טב, to be turned, i. e. changed. The verb הִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה is ordinarily used to express what is here intended. גֵּבָא, Geba, was a Levitical city in the tribe of Benjamin, near to Gibeah, on the northern border of the kingdom of Judah. רִמּוֹן, Rimmon, was a town in the tribe of Simeon, in the south of Palestine, and to be distinguished from the rock Rimmon, to the north-east of Michmash. הַעֲרָבָה, the Arabah, is the level or plain of the Jordan, extending from the lake of Tiberias to the Elanitic gulf, though in the present day this name is only applied to that part of it which lies

- 11 And they shall dwell in her,
And there shall be no more curse,
And Jerusalem shall dwell in safety.
- 12 And this shall be the plague
With which Jehovah will plague all the people
That shall fight against Jerusalem;
Their flesh shall consume away
While they stand upon their feet,
And their eyes shall consume away in their sockets,
And their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.
- 13 And it shall be in that day
That there shall be great confusion from Jehovah among them,
So that each shall seize the hand of another,
And his hand shall be raised against the hand of another;
- 14 And Judah also shall fight in Jerusalem,
And the wealth of all the nations around shall be collected,
Gold, and silver, and garments, in great abundance.
- 15 And the plague of the horses,
The mules, the camels, and the asses,
And all the cattle which shall be in those camps,
Shall be even as this plague.
- 16 And it shall be to the south of the Dead Sea. The nominative to  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$  and  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , is not  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , but  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , immediately preceding. For the orthography of  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , comp. Hos. x. 14, and other passages in which the  $\text{א}$  is inserted as a mater lectionis. Great uncertainty exists relative to the exact position of some of the places here mentioned.  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$  is used as in Mal. iii. 24, in the acceptance, curse, LXX.  $\text{ἀνάθεμα}$ . Comp.  $\text{πάντα κατανάθεμα οὐκ ἔσται ἔτι}$ , Rev. xxii. 3. There will be no more any civil or national punishments inflicted on account of sin, these having been rendered unnecessary by the universal prevalence of righteousness and truth.

12--15. The hostile powers whose punishment is here denounced are those which shall form the great final confederacy. Com. Is. lix. 18; Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.; Rev. xix. The representation of the punishment is the most horrible that can be imagined — a living skeleton, rapidly wasting away! From what is stated ver. 14, it appears that the Jews ( $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , Judah), shall not only defend themselves at Jerusalem, but make a successful attack upon the enemy.  $\text{בְּיְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , when used in reference to place, signifies to fight at or in such place. LXX.  $\text{παράσξεται ἐν Ἱερουσαλήμ}$ .  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$  —  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , Jud. v. 19. The collection of the wealth of the surrounding nations, refers to the gathering of the rich spoil of the contingents furnished by them to compose the hostile army. The entire encampments of the enemy, including the cavalry and beasts of burden, were all to share in the awful catastrophe. Whether God will employ the plague and other destructive diseases for the annihilation of the enemies of his people, time must show. The genitive in  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , is that of cause, a consternation sent or produced by Jehovah.

16—18.  $\text{יְהוָה וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}$ , lit. from the

That the whole residue of all the nations
 That shall come up against Jerusalem,
 Shall go up from year to year
 To worship the king, Jehovah of hosts,
 And to celebrate the feast of tabernacles.
 17 And it shall be that those who go not up
 Of the families of the earth to Jerusalem,

sufficiency of a year in a year, i. e. when time has fully satisfied the claims of one year and enters upon another. It is only an idiomatic mode of expressing from year to year, or annually. What is here predicted is expressly restricted to the particular nations which shall have engaged in the last great attack upon the Jews. And, though the language of the following verse may appear to be more general, yet the circumstances of the context require the restriction to be carried forward beyond the limits of the present. Still, however, even with this restriction, the prophecy cannot, without manifest absurdity, be interpreted of the totality of the inhabitants of the nations in question. Let steam vessels and railroads be multiplied to any imaginable extent, the idea of the possibility of conveying such immense numbers to Palestine cannot be entertained. Or, supposing them to have been conveyed thither, few of them would after all have an opportunity of worshipping at Jerusalem during the short period allotted for the Feast of Tabernacles. Not only would the country be too small to contain their encampments, and to furnish them with necessary provisions, but the pressure, noise, and bustle of the crowds would be such as to destroy everything in the shape of devotional propriety and enjoyment. I cannot, therefore, but take the meaning to be, that the nations in question will go up to Jerusalem in the persons of their representatives, just as in former times the Jews resident in foreign countries had those who went to the annual festivals in their name, or on their behalf. Why the Egyptians should be specially introduced, ver. 18, it is difficult to determine, except it be, that as their country is watered by the Nile, and is not dependent for fertility upon rain falling in the country itself, they might be considered as exempt from the threatened plague of drought. But, if the rains fail in Ethiopia, it will in effect be the same as if they fail in Egypt itself. After the words  $\text{עֲשׂוּהוּ אֶת־הַמָּטָר}$ , the repetition of  $\text{עֲשׂוּהוּ אֶת־הַמָּטָר}$ , the rain, from the end of the preceding verse, is understood.

It is worthy of notice, that the Feast of Tabernacles or Booths is the only one of all the Jewish festivals which is represented in this prophecy as being observed at the period therein specified. No mention is made of the great day of Atonement, the Passover, the Pentecost, etc. These have all been superseded by their fulfilment as types in the substantial blessings of the Christian economy. Their re-establishment would be a denial of the reality or efficacy of their antitypes. It may, however, be asked, Why should the Feast of Tabernacles form an exception? To this it may be replied, first, that such a festival may be observed without any compromise of the principles of the New Dispensation. Secondly, it may be considered as peculiarly adapted to the retrospections of the converted Jews, who will have to commemorate the sojourn of their fathers, not merely for forty years in the wilderness, but their sojourn for two thousand years in the countries of the dispersion. And thirdly, it may serve as a striking memento to them, that, though they have been restored to the rest of Canaan, they are still only strangers and pilgrims upon the earth, and that there yet remaineth a rest for the people of God. In this

- To worship the King, Jehovah of hosts,
Upon them there shall be no rain.
- 18 And if the family of Egypt should not go up, nor come,
Upon them also there shall be none ;
There shall be upon them the plague,
With which Jehovah shall plague the nations,
That will not go up
To celebrate the feast of tabernacles.
- 19 This shall be the punishment of Egypt,
And the punishment of all the nations
That will not go up
To celebrate the feast of tabernacles.
- 20 In that day there shall be upon the bells of the horses,
HOLINESS TO JEHOVAH ;
And the pots in the house of Jehovah
Shall be as the bowls before the altar.

point of view, believing Gentiles, who may go up to the festival, can find no difficulty in celebrating it with them to their mutual edification. That the sacrifices which were offered at that feast, or any other animal sacrifices, will then be renewed, is a position, to maintain which would be to counteract the express design, and contradict the express declarations of the dispensation of grace.

It may be said, that Ezekiel gives a full description of the re-establishment of the sacrificial system and of the whole of the temple worship. Nothing can be more certain. But when was this re-establishment to take place? Any one who will only cursorily examine the commencement of the fortieth chapter of that prophet will at once perceive, that, though it follows immediately after chapters relating to the destruction of Gog and Magog, it was nevertheless delivered to the prophet not fewer than thirteen years afterwards, and may, therefore, naturally be expected to refer to a subject altogether different. That subject I conceive to be the restoration of the temple and the temple worship after the return from Babylon—a subject which cannot but have lain near the heart of the exiles, and worthy to be made the theme of prophecy, but which is nowhere else referred to in the book of Ezekiel. Difficulty there may be in making the measurements there given agree with those specified by Josephus as the dimensions of the second temple; but far greater difficulties attach to every attempt to refer them to a temple still future, or to view them as wholly emblematical.

19. The connection shows that הַקִּיּוּם is not here to be taken in the sense of sin, but of the punishment of sin. Comp. Lam. iii. 38, iv. 6.

20. The הַקִּיּוּם were small metallic plates, suspended from the necks or heads of horses and camels, for the sake of ornament, and making a tinkling noise by striking against each other like cymbals. Root קָקַק, to tingle, tinkle. As the inscription הַקִּיּוּם לַיהוָה, HOLINESS TO JEHOVAH, was the sacred symbol engraved upon the golden crown of the Jewish High Priest, the design of the prophecy is evidently to teach, that when the Jews shall be restored to their own land, there shall be no greater degree of holiness attaching to what was formerly accounted most sacred, than what will attach to the ornamental trappings of the horses. Devotion of person and

- 21 Yea every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah
 Shall be holiness to Jehovah of hosts ;
 And all who slaughter shall come,
 And take of them and boil in them,
 And there shall no more be a Canaanite
 In the house of Jehovah of hosts in that day.

property to the service of God will be the only holiness then recognized. Ceremonial sanctity shall no longer exist. The same thing is expressed in the second clause of the verse. The vessels in which the flesh was cooked, and which were accounted the meanest about the temple, shall, as to the degree of holiness, be upon a par with those which had been destined for the most sacred purpose, namely, the reception of the blood of the sacrificial victims. All distinction shall be done away.

21. The same idea is here more fully carried out. Not only the common utensils used by the priests, but those employed for cooking in private houses, both at Jerusalem and throughout the country, shall all be regarded as equally holy. From its being expressly stated, that the flesh of the animals to be slaughtered is to be boiled in the pots, and no mention is made of the sprinkling of the blood, it must be inferred that killing for food, and not for sacrifice, is what the prophet has in view. Considering what stumbling-blocks a mercenary and covetous priesthood has ever proved to the world, and to what a fearful extent the ministry in holy things has been made a matter of merchandise, there is great force in the declaration with which the prophet closes: "There shall no more be a Canaanite in the house of Jehovah!" By כְּסָפִים, Canaanite, is meant a merchant; the Phœnicians, who inhabited the northern part of Canaan, having been the most celebrated merchants of antiquity. See for this acceptation of the term, Job xl. 30; Prov. xxxi. 24; Is. xxiii. 8. It is here used metaphorically.

MALACHI.

---

MALACHI (מַלְאָכִי, Messenger), is the last of all the Hebrew prophets, but we are left in profound ignorance respecting his personal history, and can only judge of the circumstances of his times from what is contained in his book. According to the tradition of the synagogue, he lived after the prophets Haggai and Zechariah, and was contemporary with Nehemiah. This statement is fully borne out by the affinity of the book written by the prophet, with that written by the patriot. Both presuppose the temple to have been already built. The same condition of the Jews is described. They both condemn foreign marriages, and enforce the due payment of tythes, which had been neglected. They likewise correct abuses which had crept in with respect to the sacrifices, and reprove their countrymen for their want of sympathy with the poor.

In all probability, Malachi occupied the same place with respect to Nehemiah, which Haggai and Zechariah did with respect to Zerubbabel. That the former was assisted in the discharge of his duties by prophets, may be inferred from the charge brought against him by Sanballat, Neh. vi. 7. He may therefore be conceived of as having flourished somewhere about the year B. C. 420. His book is composed of a series of spirited castigations, in which the persons accused are introduced as repelling the charges, but thereby only affording occasion for a fuller exposure, and a more severe reproof of their conduct. Both priests and people are unsparingly reprimanded, and while they are threatened with divine judgments, encouragement is held out to such as walked in the fear of the Lord. His predictions respecting John the Baptist, the Messiah, and the destruction of the Jewish polity, are clear and unequivocal.

Considering the late age in which he lived, the language of Malachi is pure; his style possesses much in common with the old prophets, but is distinguished more by its animation, than by its rhythmus or grandeur.

CHAPTER I.

WITH a view to work a conviction of ingratitude in the minds of his countrymen, the prophet begins by setting forth the peculiar favor which Jehovah had shown to them as a people in contradistinction to the Edomites, 1—5. He then reproaches the priests for their unworthy conduct in presenting the refuse of the animals in sacrifice, 6—8; charges them with a mercenary spirit, and threatens to reject them, and supply their place with true worshippers from among the most distant heathen, 9—11; and concludes with a renewed reprimand, and the denunciation of a curse upon those who practised deception with respect to the offerings, 12—14.

1 THE Sentence of Jehovah's oracle to Israel by Malachi.

2 I have loved you, saith Jehovah,

Yet ye say, Wherein hast thou loved us?

Was not Esau brother to Jacob? saith Jehovah,

Yet I loved Jacob,

1. For the formula מֵשֶׁלַח דְּבַר יְהוָה, see on Zech. ix. 1. That מַלְאָכִי, Mal-achi, is the proper name of the prophet, and not a mere official appellative, as the LXX., Vitringa, and others, interpret, may safely be inferred from the analogy of the title with others prefixed to the prophetic writings. As for the form of the name, Vitringa, Hiller, Michaelis, and Gesenius, take it to be compounded of מַלְאָכִי and יָהוּ, of which they consider י to be a contraction, and accordingly explain the name as meaning The Messenger of Jehovah. To this, however, it has been objected, that no examples of an abbreviation of the Divine name to this extent are to be found; and, therefore, it has been deemed more natural to regard the י as the pronominal affix of the first person singular, and to render, My Messenger. This latter solution has been adopted by Hengstenberg, who labors in vain to establish a connection between the name of the prophet, and the same word as occurring in its official signification, chap. iii. 1. The form appears to be really nothing more than an instance of what Ewald calls "the last and newest mode of deriving adjectives from nouns," and denoting origin or source. Compare עֲמֹרִי, עֲבָדִי, סִדְרִי, סִדְרֵי, נִזְכָּרִי, רִגְלִי, etc. יִשְׂרָאֵל, Israel, is here used to denote the whole of the twelve tribes, which had returned to their native land, Jer. i. 4, 5, 19, 20.

2, 3. The sovereign benevolence of Jehovah, and the ingratitude of the Hebrews in the time of the prophet, are strikingly contrasted. To the petulant question, "Wherein hast thou loved us?" which is only the first of a series which are put in the course of the book, the answer is direct and conclusive — in showing greater kindness to their progenitor Jacob, than he had done to his brother Esau. The temporal advantages of Palestine were vastly superior to those of Idumea, which was comparatively a sterile and desert country; and the Jews had, besides, experienced distinguished favor in having been restored to their land, and had prosperity conferred upon them, while the Edomites, who had suffered from the invasion of their country by the Chaldeans, five years after the capture of Jerusalem, had not been restored. It is to the desolations occasioned by this invasion that reference is

- 3 But I hated Esau,
 And made his mountains a desolation,
 And his heritage abodes of the desert.
- 4 Because Edom saith, We are impoverished,
 But we will rebuild the desolate places ;
 Thus saith Jehovah of hosts,
 They may build, but I will overthrow ;
 And men shall call them, The border of wickedness,
 And, The people against whom Jehovah is indignant forever.
- 5 And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say,
 Let Jehovah be magnified, from the border of Israel.
- 6 A son honoreth his father,
 And a servant his master :
 If then I be a father, where is my honor ?
 And if I be a master, where is my fear ?
 Saith Jehovah of hosts to you, O ye priests,
 That despise my name ; yet ye say,
 Wherein have we despised thy name ?

made ver. 3. אָשַׂא, to hate, is here used in a comparative sense, qualifying the preceding verb אָהַב, to love. As the opposite of love is hatred, when there is only an inferior degree of the former exhibited, the object of it is regarded as being hated rather than loved. See for this idiom, Gen. xxix. 30, 31; Deut. xxi. 15, 16; Prov. xiii. 24; Matt. vi. 24; Luke xiv. 26, compared with Matt. x. 37. הַנְּחִיז is considered by some to be the feminine of הַנְּחִיז, and is rendered serpents, jackals, or the like; but it is preferable to adopt the derivation from the Arabic, تَبَا, substitit, habitavit.

Hence تَبَا, habitatio, mansio. By the "habitations of the desert," are meant deserted, ruined dwellings, such as are still found in great abundance in Idumea. The phrase is parallel to שְׂמָמָה in the preceding hemistich, and corresponds to the תְּרִבּוֹת, waste places, or ruins, ver. 4.

4, 5. Every attempt on the part of the Idumeans to recover themselves, and enjoy permanent prosperity, should prove abortive, and their continually depressed condition should afford additional proof to the Israelites of the kindness of God towards his own people. גְּבוּל, boundary, is here used in the sense of territory, or the space marked out by the surrounding boundaries. Comp. Gen. x. 19; Numb. xxi. 24. מֵעַל לְגְבוּל יִשְׂרָאֵל, according to Rosenmüller, Hitzig, Maurer, and Ewald, means beyond the Hebrew territory, — construing the words with יִשְׂרָאֵל, but it seems more natural to connect them with אֶתֶּם הָאֲמֹרִי. Ye who dwell upon the land of Israel shall say from the locality you occupy, and to which, through Divine goodness, ye have been restored, Jehovah be magnified. The הַ prefixed to גְּבוּל, adds nothing to the force of the preceding preposition. See Gesen. in מֵעַל.

6. Upon the fact of the respect usually shown by inferiors to their superiors, Jehovah had a right to expect that honor and reverence which corresponded to the high position which he occupied as Author and Moral Governor of the universe. These having, however, been withheld,

- 7 In offering polluted bread upon my altar ;
 But ye say, Wherein have we polluted thee ?
 In your saying, The table of Jehovah is contemptible.
- 8 When ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil ?
 And when ye offer the lame and the sick, is it not evil ?
 Present it now to thy governor ;
 Will he be satisfied with thee,
 Or accept thy person ? saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 9 Now, then, conciliate the regard of Jehovah, that he may pity us :
 This hath been by your means ;
 Will he accept your persons ? saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 10 Who is there even among you that would shut the doors ?
 Yea, ye will not kindle the fire on my altar for nought.
 I have no pleasure in you, saith Jehovah of hosts,
 Neither will I accept an offering at your hand.
- 11 But from the rising of the sun to its setting,
 My name shall be great among the nations ;
 And in every place, incense shall be offered to my name,
 And a pure offering ;

chiefly owing to the irreligious and profane conduct of the priests, the charge is principally laid against them.

7. That לֶחֶם, bread, or food, is here to be taken as the Arab. كَلْب, caro, in the sense of animal flesh, is obvious, from its being presented on the זֶבֶח, altar of sacrifice, to which also the שֹׁלֵחַן, table, must be referred, and not to the table of shew-bread. Contempt of sacred things involves contempt of Him to whom they appertain.

8. Another argumentum ad hominem. The priests had the effrontery to present to Jehovah what they would not have dared to offer to their civil governor. To offer animals with any blemish, was expressly prohibited in the law. Lev. xxii. 22, 24 ; Deut. xv. 21.

9. How much soever the words וְיָחַן לְפָנַי וְיָחַן לְפָנַי, may at first sight appear to contain a serious exhortation to the priests to repent of their wicked conduct, and to pray for the Divine favor to themselves and the people, yet the connection requires them to be understood ironically. No prayers or supplications of theirs could avail anything while they presented such unlawful sacrifices. This is expressly declared in the form of a pointed interrogation at the close of the verse. וְיָחַן לְפָנַי וְיָחַן לְפָנַי is a more emphatic form, instead of וְיָחַן לְפָנַי.

10, 11. The rendering of the LXX., adopted by Newcome, "Surely the doors shall be closed against you," cannot be admitted. The authority for the change of וְיָחַן, who, into וְיָחַן, surely, is of no weight ; and the verb וְיָחַן is never construed with וְיָחַן, in order to express the idea of exclusion. Such was the avaricious disposition of the priests, that they would not perform even the most trivial services without payment. How could such expect to be acceptable to God ? These verses contain an explicit prediction of the rejection of the Jewish worship, and of the reception of the Gentiles to perform spiritual worship in the Church of the Lord. His name, which the priests had treated with contempt,

- For my name shall be great among the nations,
Saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 12 But ye have profaned it by your saying,
The table of Jehovah is polluted,
And its fruit, even his food, is contemptible.
- 13 Ye have also said, What a weariness!
And have contemned it, saith Jehovah of hosts;
And ye have brought the torn, and the lame, and the sick,
Yea, ye have brought the offering;
Should I accept it at your hand? saith Jehovah.
- 14 But cursed be the deceiver, who hath a male in his flock,
And voweth, and sacrificeth to Jehovah that which is corrupt;
For I am a great king, saith Jehovah of hosts,
And my name shall be feared among the nations.

ver. 6, should receive universal homage among the nations that had been addicted to idolatry, and who were now the objects of abomination on the part of the Jews. The sacrificial terms are transferred from their original application to ceremonial objects and acts, to such as are spiritual, agreeably to the nature of the new economy. Comp. John iv. 20—24; Heb. xiii. 10, 15, 16; 1 Pet. ii. 5. All that Hitzig can discover in these verses is, that God was worshipped by all nations, under the different names of Jehovah, Ormuzd, Zeus, etc.!!!

12—14. A renewal of the charge against the priests, nearly in the same words.  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$  is an abbreviated form for  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה הַזֶּה}$ . Comp.  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , Exod. iv. 2;  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , Is. iii. 15.  $\text{יְהוָה}$ , it, after  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , refers to  $\text{יְהוָה}$  in the preceding verse, and is not to be changed into  $\text{אֲנִי}$ , me, as proposed in the Tikkune Sopherim. The  $\text{י}$  in  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$  is omitted in ninety-three MSS., in seven printed editions, and in all the versions except the Syriac. Though it is not said that the  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , meat offering, consisted of inferior ingredients, yet it is either implied, or the idea is intended to be conveyed, that the presentation of the other sacrifices rendered this, however pure in itself, unacceptable to God. Hitzig and Maurer regard  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$  to be a contraction of the feminine  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ ; but I should rather think it ought to be pointed  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , as in Lev. xxii. 25, where it occurs, in application to the same subject, in the masculine gender. Many MSS. and some of the early editions read  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$  instead of  $\text{הַשִּׁבְעָה}$ , which has no doubt been substituted for it by some superstitious Jewish scribe.

CHAPTER II.

THE prophet continues to urge the charge against the priests, warning them that if they did not reform, they should be deprived of all enjoyment, and rendered the objects of shame and contempt, 1—4. The original institution, and the sacred nature and obligations of the priestly office, are then brought forward, with which to contrast the base-ness of their conduct in violating its responsibilities; and the section closes with another threatening of punishment, 5-9. In a new section the prophet takes up the subject of divorce, and marriage with foreign women, and severely reproveth the priests for the evil example which they had set in this respect, 10-16. They are finally charged with teaching immoral doctrine, 17.

- 1 AND now, unto you is this charge, O ye priests!
- 2 If ye will not hearken, nor lay it to heart,
To give glory to my name, saith Jehovah of hosts;
I will send the curse among you, and will curse your blessing,
Yea, I will curse them singly,
Because ye lay it not to heart.
- 3 Behold! I will rebuke the seed to your hurt,
And I will scatter dung upon your faces,
The dung of your festivals;
And ye shall be taken away with it.
- 4 And ye shall know that I have sent you to this charge,
Because my covenant was with Levi, saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 5 My covenant of life and peace was with him,
And I gave them to him,
For the fear which he showed for me,
And the awe in which he stood of my name.

2. הַמְאָרָה is emphatic, and doubtless has reference to Deut. xxvii. 15, etc. The feminine suffix in אֲרָתֶיךָ is to be taken distributively, with reference to the בְּרָכֹתַי, blessings, immediately preceding.

3. The לְ in לְבָמֶן is that of the Dativus incommodi, "to your detriment or disadvantage." זֶרַע, seed, is not to be changed into זֶרְעֶךָ, and rendered shoulder, as Houbigant and Newcome do, merely on the authority of the LXX. There is great force in the reference to the dung of the festivals, as the maw, which contained it, belonged to the priests, Deut. xviii. 3. אִלּוּ in יַלְגֵּי אִלּוּ has the signification of with, together with, as in Lam. iii. 41. Such usage, however, is rare. נִשָּׂא is to be taken impersonally.

4. יָדַע, to know, has here the signification, to know by experience, to feel the consequences of transgression. From the words which follow, we must infer that knowledge issuing in reformation of conduct is meant. On no other condition could the Levitical covenant continue in force.

5. In this and the following verses the prophet forcibly contrasts with the base and unworthy conduct of the priests, the noble character of their progenitor, with whom officially Jehovah had entered into covenant. The reference, however, is not to Levi personally, but to Phinehas, Numb. xxv. 12, 13, where we have an account of this covenant, there called בְּרִיתִי שְׁלֵמָה, my covenant of peace, and בְּרִיתִי קְהֹנָת עֹלָם, the covenant of an everlasting priesthood. Both ideas are expressed in the present verse, and the meaning is, that the covenant was secured in perpetuity. Before הַמְאָרָה the word בְּרִית is understood from the

- 6 The law of truth was in his mouth ;
 No iniquity was found in his lips ;
 He walked with me in peace and uprightness,
 And turned many from iniquity.
- 7 For the lips of the priest should preserve knowledge,
 And men should seek the law at his mouth,
 For he is the messenger of Jehovah of hosts.
- 8 But, as for you, ye have departed from the way,
 Ye have made many to stumble in the law ;
 Ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith Jehovah of hosts,
- 9 Therefore have I also rendered you contemptible and base to all the people ;
 Forasmuch as ye have not observed my ways,
 And have acted partially in the law.
- 10 Have we not all one Father ?

preceding.  $\text{פֶּחֶמְדָּא}$ , fear or reverence, is here the accusative absolute.  $\text{תִּרְחַח}$  is the Niph'al of  $\text{תִּרְחַח}$ , to be terrified, dismayed. This verb is here purposely employed to express the extraordinary degree of profound and holy awe with which Phinehas was inspired when zealously vindicating the honor of Jehovah.

6, 7. A comprehensive and beautiful description of the character and spiritual duties of Phinehas, which ought to have been realized in the persons and ministrations of all his successors in office, and which suggests topics of the most serious self-examination to all who engage in the work of the Christian ministry. The higher and more important functions of the sacerdotal office are here recognized, to the exclusion of such as were merely ceremonial. These the priests in the days of Malachi had neglected, while they discharged the latter in a perfunctory and niggardly manner. That  $\text{הִרְיָהוּ}$  is not here to be rendered doctrine, but is to be taken in its appropriated sense of law, appears from the use of the term in the two following verses.  $\text{הִרְיָהוּ}$  is in the accusative case, with which  $\text{אֲנִי}$ , as in other instances of passive verbs, does not agree in number. See Gesen. Gram. § 140, 1 b. The priests were the ordinary expounders of the law to the people; it was only on special and extraordinary occasions that the prophets gave their decision. Each of them was, therefore, to be regarded as  $\text{שֹׁמֵר הַדְּבָרִים}$ , a messenger, or interpreter of the Divine will.

8. The character of the priests whom Malachi was sent to reprove was the very reverse of that exhibited by Phinehas. Not only did they violate the law themselves, but, as is universally the case, induced others by their bad example to violate it likewise. They thus forfeited all right to the sacerdotal immunities of the Levitical covenant.

9.  $\text{אֲנִי הִרְיָהוּ}$  is strikingly antithetical to  $\text{אֲנִי הִרְיָהוּ}$  at the beginning of ver. 8. The priests are here threatened with a retribution corresponding to their base and contemptible character, an additional and aggravating feature of which is added, viz. partiality in the decisions which they gave on points of law. Instead of  $\text{הָעָם}$ , the people, twenty-three MSS., and a few printed editions, the LXX., Targ., Arab., and Hexapl. Syr., read  $\text{הָעַמִּים}$ , the peoples or nations, but much less appropriately.

10. The prophet now proceeds to administer reproof to the people, and especially to the priests, for their flagrant

- 13 And this ye have done a second time,
 Covering the altar of Jehovah with tears,
 With weeping and groaning,
 So that there is no longer any regard paid to the offering,
 Nor is it favorably received at your hand,
- 14 Yet ye say, Wherefore?
 Because Jehovah was witness
 Between thee and the wife of thy youth;
 To whom thou hast acted unfaithfully,
 Though she was thy companion and covenanted wife.
- 15 Yet did he not make one?
 Though he had the residue of the spirit;
 And why the one?
 That he might seek a godly seed;
 Therefore take heed to your spirit,
 That none act unfaithfully to the wife of his youth.

אֵידְנִי, both the watcher, and the answerer. The meaning is, that none should be left alive; all should be cut off. Gesenius thinks that the reference is probably to the Levites who kept watch in the temple by night, and who called and responded to each other at certain intervals; but the mention that is made of "the tents of Jacob" immediately after, shows that the words are not to be thus restricted. עָיַר is the participle of עָיַר, to wake, be awake.

13. עֵשֶׂתֶּךָ is to be taken strictly in the sense of a second time. Measures had been adopted to cure the evil in the time of Ezra, chap. ix. x.; but the Jews had relapsed into the same sin of marrying foreign wives in that of Nehemiah, and it is this latter which the prophet here reproves. Neh. xiii. 23—31. The language implies an aggravation of the offence. The crying and weeping were those of the Jewish wives who had been repudiated by their husbands.

14. The legitimate marriages had been contracted with special appeal to Jehovah as witness of the transaction. The phrase אִשְׁתְּךָ נְעוּרֶיךָ, the wife of thy youth, has reference to the early marriages among the Hebrews. In Poland, at the present day, they marry at the age of thirteen and fourteen, and the females still younger.

15, 16. Michaelis, Hitzig, Maurer, and Hengstenberg, concur in the opinion expressed in the Targum, and adopted by most of the Rabbins, that by אֶחָד, one, and אֶחָדָה, the one, Abraham is intended; and maintain, that what is here stated, was designed to repel an objection raised by the priests, viz., that Abraham took an Egyptian female in addition to Sarah. The prophet, according to them, admits the fact, but denies the consequence, by showing that Abraham still retained the Spirit of God, because his object in contracting this alliance was to obtain the seed which God had promised him, and not to gratify carnal passion, to which the evil here condemned was to be traced. Ewald refers אֶחָד, one, to God, considering the term to be used here in the same sense as in ver. 10, but fails in giving a satisfactory explanation of the passage. Nor does the other interpretation at all do justice to its claims; so that we are shut up to the conclusion, that by אֶחָדָה, the one, we are to understand אֶחָדָה בָּשָׂר, the one flesh, or conju-

- 16 For I hate divorce, saith Jehovah, the God of Israel,
 And for a man to cover over his garment with violence,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts;
 Therefore take heed to your spirit,
 That ye act not unfaithfully.
- 17 Ye have wearied Jehovah with your words,
 Yet ye say, Wherein have we wearied him?
 In your saying, Every one that doeth evil
 Is good in the sight of Jehovah, and he delighteth in them;
 Or, Where is the God of justice?

gal body into which the first couple were formed, Gen. ii. Instead of forming only two into one, the Creator might have given to Adam many wives. There was no lack of spiritual existence from which to furnish them with intelligent souls. When he gave to Eve such an existence, he did not exhaust the immense fountain of being. There remained all with which the human race hath been furnished throughout its generations. What, then, the prophet asks, was the design of the restriction? to this he replies, the securing of a pious offspring. Divorces and polygamy have ever been unfavorable to the education of children. It is only by the harmonious and loving attention bestowed by parents upon their children, that they can be expected to be brought up in the fear of God. The reply bore hard upon the priests who had married idolatrous wives. In such a connection there was everything to counteract and destroy the interests of piety.

16. אֶשׂ should be pointed אֶשׂ , with the personal pronoun אֲנִי understood. By כִּבְדוֹ , garment, it is now generally admitted we are to understand the wife, who had the most glaring injustice done to her by giving her a divorce, or by taking one or more in addition to her. Thus the Arab. لبس, tezit, induit; لباس, vestmentum, “conjug tum mulier viri, tum vir mulieris, quod sibi invicem pro tegumento sunt.” Freytag. Accordingly we read in the Koran, Sur. 183, respecting the wives: هن لباس لکم ولنتم لباس لهن, they are your garment, and you are theirs. In the ecclesiastical language of the East, matrimony was called τὸ δυνῆδον καὶ δουλικὸν ἰμῆτιον.

17. The old objection taken against the providence of God from the afflictions of the righteous, and the prosperity of the wicked.

CHAPTER III.

THIS chapter commences with a lucid prophecy of John the Baptist, as the forerunner of the Messiah, and of the Messiah himself, who was, as he had long been, the object of delightful expectation to the Jews, 1. The aspect of his advent in regard to the wicked, and especially to the ungodly priesthood, is next introduced, together with the severe judgments that were to be brought upon the nation, 2-6. The people are then reproved for having withheld the legal tithes and offerings, and are promised a profusion of blessings in case of repentance, 7-12. To the infidel objection that there is no utility in religion, seeing the wicked prosper, while the godly are oppressed, the prophet replies by pointing to the day of retribution, when all should be treated according to their character, which would then be fully disclosed, 13—18.

1 BEHOLD! I will send my messenger,
And he shall prepare the way before me,
And suddenly there shall come to his temple
The Lord whom ye seek,

1. That by מַלְאָכִי, my messenger, we are to understand John the Baptist, is placed beyond dispute by the appropriation of the words of the prophecy to him, Mark i. 1. Comp. Is. xl. 3. Hengstenberg strangely gives in to the notion of Eichhorn and Theiner, that the collective body of the prophets is intended, though he thinks that the idea of the messenger chiefly concentrates in John. Not one of his five reasons is at all satisfactory. The office of this messenger is described as preparing the way for the Messiah. The language is borrowed from the custom of sending pioneers before an Eastern monarch, to cut through rocks, and forests, and remove every impediment that might obstruct his course. פָּתַח, which in Kal is never transitive, signifies in Piel to clear, clear away, put in order, prepare. This John did by preaching repentance, and announcing the near approach of the kingdom of God. Comp. chap. iv. 5. In this prophecy of the Messiah are three palpable and incontrovertible proofs of his divinity. First, he is identified with Jehovah: "he shall prepare the way before ME" — "saith Jehovah." Secondly, He is represented as the Proprietor of the temple. Thirdly, He is characterized as הָאֱלֹהִים, THE SOVEREIGN, a title nowhere given in this form to any except Jehovah. In its anarthrous state the noun אֱלֹהִים is applicable to any owner, possessor, or ruler, and it is applied in the construct state to Jehovah as אֱלֹהֵינוּ, the Possessor of the whole earth, Josh. iii. 11, 13; but when it takes the article, as here, it is used κατ' ἐξοχην, and exclusively of the Divine Being. See Exod. xxxiii. 17, xxxiv. 23. Is. i. 24, iii. 1, x. 16, 33, xix. 4; See Dr. J. Pye Smith's Messiah, vol. i. pp. 442—444. Abenezra thus explains the term, and identifies the Sovereign Lord with the Angel spoken of immediately after: הַאֲדֹנָי הוּא הַכַּבֹּד הוּא מַלְאָךְ הַאֲדֹנָי כִּי הַשֵּׁשׁ כְּפֹלֵי הַבְּרִית, The Lord is both the Divine Majesty, and the Angel of the Covenant, for the sentence is doubled. It is likewise admitted in Mashmiah Jeshua, fol. 76, אֲפֶשֶׁר לְפָרֵשׁ הַאֲדֹנָי עַל מַלְאָךְ, The Lord may be explained of the King Messiah; and Kimchi not only, with Abenezra, identifies the Lord and the Angel, but applies both to the Messiah: הַאֲדֹנָי הוּא מַלְאָךְ הַמְּשִׁיחַ וְהוּא הַמְּשִׁיחַ, The Lord is the King Messiah, he is also the Angel of the Covenant; though, in order to elude the Christian application of the passage, he suggests another interpretation, according to which Elijah is meant. It has been questioned, whether the phrase מַלְאָכִי הַבְּרִית, the Messenger of the Covenant, is to be viewed retrospectively or prospectively; in other words, whether it be the Old or the New Covenant to which reference is made. Considering the fact, that in such parallel forms as לְטֹבֹת הַבְּרִית, the tables of the covenant, אֲרוֹן הַבְּרִית, the ark of the covenant, סֵפֶר הַבְּרִית, the book of the covenant, דַּם הַבְּרִית, the blood of the covenant, etc., the ancient dispensation which Je-

- Even the Messenger of the covenant, in whom ye delight, Behold! he shall come, saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 2 But who may endure the day of his coming?
And who may stand when he appeareth?
For he is like the fire of the refiner,
And like the soap of the fullers;
- 3 And he shall sit, refining and purifying the silver;
He shall purify the sons of Levi,
And refine them like gold and like silver,
That they may present to Jehovah an offering in righteousness.
- 4 Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem
Be pleasing to Jehovah,

hovah granted to the Hebrews at Sinai is intended, it would seem natural to infer that מַלְאָכִי הַמְבַרְכִים is to be understood in the same way. This view of the subject would seem to be corroborated by the circumstances, that a מַלְאָכִי, Angel or Messenger, who is said to possess the Divine name, i. e. whatever is distinctive of Deity, is frequently spoken of under that economy; that He is represented as leading the Israelites out of Egypt, giving them the law, and superintending the whole of the theocracy. All the theophanies or manifestations of the invisible Deity were made in his Person. He was the proper nuncius sent to reveal the will of the Father. Moses was only a δερπίτων, עֲבָד, or servant employed by him, while he was God manifested in glory. I can put no other consistent construction upon such passages as the following: Gen. xlvi. 15, 16; Exod. iii. 2—15, xxiii. 20, 21; Is. lxiii. 9; Zech. i. ii. iii. vi.; Acts vii. 38; Heb. xi. 26, xii. 26. In strict consistency with the representations of Scripture, therefore, the Messiah may be called the Messenger of that ancient economy of which he was the Founder and Head. Most interpreters, however, understand the New Covenant, or the dispensation of grace, with special reference to Heb. ix. 15, where our Saviour is called διαθήκης καινῆς μεσίτης, the Mediator of the New Covenant; among others, Grotius, Rosenmüller, and Gesenius. The Jews may be said to have sought and delighted in the Messiah, because he was the object of national expectation and desire, though the great body of them formed no higher conception of him than that of an earthly monarch, under whose reign they should enjoy a profusion of temporal blessings. When it is declared that he should come "suddenly" to his temple, it is not implied that he was to come in or near the times of the prophet, but merely that his coming would be sudden and unexpected in the circumstances under which it took place.

2—4. Employing a strong metallurgic metaphor, the prophet shows that the Covenant Messenger would be very different from that which the carnal Jews expected. Instead of flattering their prejudices, and gratifying their wishes, he would, by his pure and heart-searching doctrines, subject their principles and conduct to the severest test. Those of the priests should be specially tried. The object he was to have in view in this trial, was their purification, that they might serve him in righteousness. Matt. iii. 12; John xv. 3. And such was the result with respect to many of them. "A great company of the priests were obedient to the faith," Acts vi. 7. The influence of their conversion upon the people must have been very great, though we have no information respecting it in

As in the days of old,
And as in the former years.

- 5 But I will draw nigh to you for judgment,
And will be a swift witness
Against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers,
And against those who swear to a falsehood,
And against those who wrest the wages of the hireling,
The widow and the orphan,
Who turn aside the stranger as to his right,
And fear not me, saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 6 Because I am Jehovah, I change not ;
Therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.
- 7 Even from the days of your fathers
Ye have departed from my statutes, and have not kept them ;
Return to me, and I will return to you,
Saith Jehovah of hosts.
But ye say, Wherewith shall we return ?
- 8 Will a man defraud God ?
Yet ye have defrauded me.
But ye say, Wherein have we defrauded thee ?
In the tithes and the oblations.
- 9 Ye are cursed with the curse ;
For ye — the whole nation — have defrauded me.
- 10 Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, the Acts. The religious services of the churches composed of Jewish converts in Jerusalem and throughout Judea, are represented as peculiarly well-pleasing to God. For the meaning of מִנְחָה, offering, as here used, comp. chap. i. 10, 11.

5. Malachi here returns to his own times, and threatens his ungodly contemporaries with divine judgment, speedily to be executed upon them. Magic greatly prevailed among the Jews after the captivity, as did also the other crimes here specified. How much they obtained in the time of our Lord, we learn from the Evangelists and Josephus. The prophet traces them all back to their true source — absence of the fear of God. After בְּשֵׁמִי, the phrase בְּשֵׁמִי is found in nineteen MSS., in some printed editions, and in the LXX., Syr., Hexapl., and Arab.

6. As the incommunicable name יהוה, Jehovah, implies a futurity of reference with respect to the communication of blessings (see on Hos. xii. 5), the Divine immutability secured the preservation of the Jewish people from destruction, notwithstanding their flagrant wickedness, till he had accomplished all his purposes of mercy.

7. The ל in לְמִיָּמַי is prosthetic, with somewhat of its temporal signification. There was still mercy in store for the Jews, if they only would repent.

8. קָבַע, which occurs only in our prophet, and in Prov. xxii. 23, signifies to cover, do anything covertly, defraud. Comp. the Arab. قابع, retrahit, قابع, occulsus.

9. Comp. chap. ii. 2.

10. עַד-בְּלִי-רֵי, usque ad defectum

- That there may be meat in my house,
 And try me now with this, saith Jehovah of hosts,
 Whether I will not open for you the windows of heaven,
 And pour out a blessing for you,
 Till there shall be a superabundance.
- 11 And I will rebuke the devourer for your sake,
 And he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground;
 Neither shall your vine in the field be unfruitful,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 12 And all the nations shall pronounce you happy,
 For ye shall be a delightful land,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts.
- 13 Your words against me have been hard, saith Jehovah;
 But ye say, What have we spoken against thee?
- 14 Ye have said:
 It is vain to serve God;
 And what profit is it that we keep his ordinance,
 And that we walk mournfully before Jehovah of hosts?
- 15 For now we pronounce the proud happy;
 They also that work wickedness are built up;
 They even tempt God, yet they are delivered.
- 16 Then they that feared Jehovah
 Conversed one with another;
 And Jehovah hearkened, and heard,

sufficiente, i. e. not as Gesenius explains it, till my abundance be exhausted, which being impossible, the phrase is equivalent to, forever, without end; but where sufficiency can have no more place, more than sufficient, superabundantly. To this effect Jerome, Winer, De Wette, Hitzig, and Maurer.

11. By the לֹבֵן, devourer, noxious animals and insects are meant, especially the locusts. לֹבֵן properly signifies to cause abortion, render childless, and metaphorically, to make barren or unfruitful, when spoken of trees.

13—15. קָשָׁה signifies to bind fast, make firm, and, in a bad sense, to be hard, obstinate, or the like. Such was the language of the Jews against Jehovah. Comp. Jude 15, περὶ πάντων τῶν σκληρῶν ὧν ἐλάλησαν κατ' αὐτοῦ. Some awful specimens of their hard speeches are here exhibited, in which the usual objection against the rectitude of Providence is dressed up in some of its more taking forms. Comp. Job xxi. 14, 15; Ps. lxxiii. 1—14. קָשָׁה is here used like קָשָׁה in the bad sense of tempting, or braving the Most High by presumptuous speeches and conduct. The walking mournfully has reference to their going about in sackcloth and ashes, pretending to sorrow on account of their sins. קָשָׁה, to be dirty, to go about in filthy garments, like persons who mourn; such being universally the custom in the East.

16. אָז, then, specially marks the time in which the impious conversations were being held. Here נִדְבָר beautifully contrasts with the same term in the thirteenth verse. The verb is in Niphal, to

And a book of remembrance was written before him,
For those that feared Jehovah,
And thought upon his name.

17 And they shall be a peculiar treasure to me, saith Jehovah of hosts,

In the day which I have appointed;
And I will be kind to them

As a father is kind to his son who serveth him.

18 Then shall ye again perceive the difference Between the righteous and the wicked,
Between him that serveth God,
And him that serveth him not.

express the reciprocal or conversational character of the language. As the ungodly did not confine their hard speeches to the mere utterance of them to such individuals as they might happen to meet, but made their infidel objections the subject of mutual discussion, so the pious are here represented as holding mutual converse respecting the interests of truth and godliness. It does not appear that Niphal ever has the frequentative signification, expressed in our common version. The writing of a book of remembrance is a metaphor borrowed from the custom at the Persian court of entering in a record the names of any who have rendered service to the king, with an account of the nature of such service. See Esther vi. 1, 2.

17.  $\text{וְהָיָה סֵפֶר זִכְרוֹנָם}$  is to be construed with  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי$ , and  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי$  is connected by means of  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$  with  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$ . The phrase  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$ , to make a day, which occurs chap. iv. 3; Ps. cxviii. 24, means to fix, ordain, appoint, such a period for the execution of a special purpose.  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$ , signifies private, special, or peculiar property.  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$ , like the kindred root  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$ , has the primary signification of shutting up, closing, and then, secondarily, that of getting, or acquiring, what is shut up, in order to its being carefully preserved. Hence the idea of what is peculiarly valuable or precious. The term is applied to the people of Israel, Exod. xix. 5; Deut. vii. 6, xiv. 2, xxvi. 18. It is used of the choice treasure of kings, etc., Eccles. ii. 8. It is expressive of the high estimation in which God holds his people, and, in this connection, of their perfect safety in the day of judgment.

18.  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$  is used idiomatically in connection with  $\text{וְהָיָה לִּי}$  to express the repetition of the action, the idea of which is conveyed by the latter verb. Notwithstanding the charge brought by the wicked against the providence of God, as if he treated all alike, the righteous had already had opportunities of perceiving from observation and experience, that the position was false, viewed in application to the entire state and circumstances of the different characters; but they should have another and most convincing proof in the salvation of all who loved and feared the Lord, and in the overthrow and destruction of his enemies.

CHAPTER IV.

Most editions of the Hebrew Bible, and most of the MSS., exhibit this concluding portion of the book as a continuation of the third chapter. Not a few MSS., however, leave a blank space before it, and several editions make a separate chapter of it. As this division obtains in all the versions, it is more convenient to retain it.

The chapter continues the threatenings against the Jewish unbelievers, 1; exhibits a luminous prophecy of the Messiah, and the prosperity of his people, 2, 3; and concludes with a solemn call to the Jews, to observe the institutes of the old economy, till the forerunner of the Messiah should appear, when the Jewish polity should be destroyed, and a new and better dispensation established, 4—6.

- 1 FOR, behold! the day cometh, it shall burn as an oven,
 And all the proud, and every one that doeth wickedly, shall be stubble,
 And the day that cometh shall burn them up,
 Saith Jehovah of hosts;
 That it may not leave them either root or branch.
- 2 But unto you that fear my name,
 The Sun of righteousness shall arise,

1. Instead of אֶתְּהוּ רִשְׁעֵהוּ, nearly eighty MSS., the most ancient and several other editions, the Babylon, Talmud, the LXX., Syr., and Targ., read עֲשֵׂי רִשְׁעָהוּ in the plural. The phrase שִׁרְיָהוּ הַקֶּנֶף, root or branch, is proverbial, and signifies any, the least remnant. The persons referred to were to be consigned to utter destruction. The Targum has בֵּר וּבֵר בֵּר, son or son's son.

2. The term שֶׁמֶשׁ, Sun, is metaphorically applied to God, Ps. lxxxiv. 11, on account of that luminary being the most glorious and beneficent object which meets the human eye. It is with good reason supposed to be thus used of the Messiah in the declaration, 2 Sam. xxiii. 4 :

וּבְמֹאֲרֵי בֹקֶר יִזְרָח־שֶׁמֶשׁ,

“And as the morning light he shall arise — a Sun.”

In the present verse there can be no doubt with respect to the application. Our Lord is elsewhere called אֶרְוָה, Light, which in Hebrew poetry is used of the sun, as the source of light. See Is. ix. 1, xlix. 6; John i. 9, viii. 12. What the sun is to the natural world, that the Messiah is to the moral. The invaluable spiritual blessings which he dispenses are all comprehended under the two heads here specified — righteousness and moral health. Comp. Is. lvii. 19. Both of these are indispensably requisite to the happiness of our guilty and depraved race, and from no other quarter can they be obtained, than from Him, “who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption.” 1 Cor. i. 30. By “wings” we are to understand the beams of the sun, on account of the velocity and expansion with which they spread over the

- And there shall be healing in his wings;
 And ye shall go forth and leap as calves of the stall.
 3 And ye shall tread down the wicked;
 Surely they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet,
 In the day which I have appointed, saith Jehovah of hosts.
 4 Remember ye the law of Moses my servant,
 Which I gave him in charge in Horeb for all Israel,
 The statutes and the judgments.
 5 Behold! I will send to you Elijah the prophet, earth. Comp. Ps. cxxxix. 9. Those for whose immediate benefit the Sun of righteousness was to arise, were such as "feared the name" of Jehovah — like Simeon, who was δίκαιος καὶ εὐλαβής, righteous and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel. Luke ii. 25. ἵνα, to go forth, is here used in the sense of escaping from the judgment to be inflicted upon the unbelieving part of the Jewish nation. This the Jewish Christians did when they left Jerusalem, and proceeded to Pella, where they were preserved in safety. ὑπερβαίνειν, signifies to spread, take a wide range, and is used of the proud prancing of horses, and as here of the leaping and sporting of calves. The simile is designed to convey the ideas of freedom from outward restraint, and the enjoyment of self-conscious hilarity.

3. This verse expresses the depressed condition to which the Jews were to be reduced after the destruction of their polity, contrasted with the prosperous condition of those who embraced Christianity, and who were no longer subject to oppression on the part of their unbelieving brethren.

4. As the law and the prophets were to remain in force till the appearance of John the Baptist, no prophet intervening after Malachi to make any further communications of the Divine will, it was necessary to pay the closest attention to the enactments and observances of the Mosaic institute. That there were no more inspired messengers under the Old Economy may be inferred, not only from the nature of the injunction here given, especially as taken in connection with the promise of a new messenger in the following verse, but also from Ecclesiasticus xlix. 10, where, after mentioning Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the author closes with τῶν δώδεκα προφητῶν, the twelve prophets, as the last in the category.

5. The coherence of this verse with the first clause of chap. iii. is too palpable to be overlooked. Accordingly, the Jews in the time of Jerome interpreted the messenger of Jehovah there predicted, of Elijah the Tishbite, as they explain the present verse to this day, believing, that as the ancient prophet ascended into heaven both as to body and soul, he is destined to reappear in the same upon earth before the advent of Messiah the Son of David. That Elijah here presented to view is to be understood ideally and not historically, and that the individual personally intended is John the Baptist, are positions the certainty of which is rendered indubitable by the repeated declarations of our Lord. When John denied that he was Elias, John i. 21, he is to be understood as making the denial in reference to the personal sense of the term as employed in the question that had been proposed to him. The historical theory is entirely set aside by the express testimony of the angel, Luke i. 17, according to which all that is meant by Malachi is, that the forerunner of the Messiah was to come "in the spirit and power of Elias." Like that prophet, he was to be endowed with extraordinary

Before the great and terrible day of Jehovah come :
6 And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, power and energy, to fit him for the great work of reformation which his ministry was designed to effect. Adverting to the erroneous Jewish notion, which even then obtained, relative to the appearance of Elijah in person, our Lord says of John, "If ye will receive it, αὐτὸς ἐστὶν Ἡλίας ὁ μέλλον ἐρχεσθαι, he is Elias who was to come," Matt. xi. 17. And when the disciples asked him, "Why do the Scribes then say that Elias must first come? he replied, Elias shall, indeed, first come and restore all things. But I say unto you that Ἡλίας ἤδη ἦλθε, Elias is already come, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed." Matt. xvii. 10—13. Upon the circumstance that our Lord uses the future tense, ἐρχεται, shall come, some Christian interpreters have attempted to establish the hypothesis, that the prophecy is still to be fulfilled before his second advent; but he is obviously speaking in the style of language employed by the prophet, to whom the event was future, and in adaptation to the opinion of the Scribes, though he immediately corrects what was erroneous in their notion, declaring that the event was no longer future, but had actually taken place in the person and ministry of John. It is truly surprising that any should persist in giving to the prophecy an aspect still future, in the very face of an exposition at once positive and infallible. That John the Baptist was נביא, a prophet, Christ admits, though he at the same time declares, that he was "more than a prophet." Matt. xi. 9. The "great and terrible day of Jehovah" was the dreadful period of his judgment, effecting the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. Comp. Joel ii. 31.

6. The design of the ministry of John is described as consisting in the production of universal peace and concord. Family feuds had increased to an enormous extent by the time of John the Baptist, the removal of which by genuine repentance and reformation of conduct might be taken as a specimen of the ἀποκατάστασις, or restoration of things to a better state throughout Judea. Some have proposed to take the preposition עִם, to, as equivalent to עִי, with, a signification which it sometimes has, and so to explain the passage as simply predicting the universality of the conversion spoken of; but such an interpretation would introduce an intolerable tautology into the language of the prophet, and be at variance with the construction put upon it by the angel, Luke i. 17, in which only one member of the sentence is quoted. With respect to the extent of the effects produced by John's ministry, there can be no doubt it was very great. Not only did immense multitudes come to his baptism, confessing their sins, but the great body of the common people appear to have been prepared by him for the labors of our blessed Lord himself, and thus the foundation was laid for the recovery of tens of thousands from Judaism to the faith of the gospel, previous to the destruction of Jerusalem. See Acts xxi. 20.

The prophecy, and with it the entire Old Testament, closes with the awful alternative—the denunciation of the Divine curse, to be realized in the extermination of the impenitent Jews from their own land. שָׁמַד signifies utter destruction, from שָׁמַד, to shut or stop up, exclude from common use, place under a ban, devote to destruction. It is one of the most fearful words in use among the Jews, and was specially applied to the extermination of the Canaanites, whose cities were razed to the foundations, and their inhabitants utterly destroyed. Under this ban, the land of Palestine has lain ever since the capture

And the heart of the children to the fathers,
Lest I come and smite the land with a curse.

of Jerusalem; and the sufferings to incomparably more dreadful is the New which, in consequence, the Jews have Testament אָנָתָמָא — ANAΘEMA, MAPAN been subjected are truly appalling; but ΑΘΑ! 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

WARREN F. DRAPER,
PUBLISHER AND BOOKSELLER,
ANDOVER, MASS.

Publishes and offers for Sale the following, which will be sent post paid on receipt of the sum named.

GUERICKE'S CHURCH HISTORY. Translated by W. G. T. SHEDD, Brown Professor in Andover Theological Seminary. 438 pp. 8vo. $2.25.

This volume includes the period of the ANCIENT CHURCH (the first six centuries, A. C.) or the Apostolic and Patristic Church.

We regard Professor Shedd's version, now under notice, as a happy specimen of the TRANSLATION rather than a TRANSLATION, which many of the German treatises should receive. The style of his version is far superior to that of the original.—[Bib. Sacra, Jan. 1858.]

DISCOURSES AND ESSAYS. By PROF. W. G. T. SHEDD. 271 pp. 12mo. 85 cts.

Few clearer and more penetrating minds can be found in our country than that of Prof. Shedd. And besides, he writes with a chaste and sturdy eloquence, transparent as crystal; so that if he goes DEEP, we love to follow him. If the mind gets dull, or dry, or ungraceful, put it to grappling with these masterly productions.—[Congregational Herald, Chicago.]

The striking sincerity, vigor, and learning of this volume will be admired even by those readers who cannot go with the author in all his opinions. Whatever debate the philosophical tendencies of the book may challenge, its literary ability and moral spirit will be commended every where.—New Englander.

These discourses are all marked by profound thought and perspicuity of sentiment.—Princeton Review.

LECTURES UPON THE PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY. By PROF. W. G. T. SHEDD. 128 pp. 12mo. 60 cents.

CONTENTS.—The abstract Idea of History.—The Nature and Definition of Secular History.—The Nature and Definition of Church History.—The Verifying Test in Church History.

The style of these Lectures has striking merits. The author chooses his words with rare skill and taste, from an ample vocabulary, and writes with strength and refreshing simplicity. The Philosophy of Realism, in application to history and historical theology, is advocated by vigorous reasoning, and made intelligible by original and felicitous illustrations.—New Englander.

Professor Shedd has already achieved a high reputation for the union of philosophic insight with genuine scholarship, of depth and clearness of thought with force and elegance of style, and for profound views of sin and grace, cherished not merely on theoretical, but still more on moral and experimental grounds.—Princeton Review.

OUTLINES OF A SYSTEMATIC RHETORIC. From the German of DR. FRANCIS THEREMIN, by WILLIAM G. T. SHEDD. Third and Revised Edition, with an Introductory Essay by the translator. pp. 216. 12mo. 75 cts.

This is a work of much solid value. It is adapted to advanced students, and can be read and reread with advantage by professed public speakers, however accomplished they may be in the important art of persuasion. This edition is an improvement upon the other, containing a new introductory essay, illustrating the leading position of the work, and a series of questions adapting it to the use of the student.—Boston Recorder.

It is not a work of surface suggestions, but of thorough and philosophic analysis, and, as such, is of great value to the student, and especially to him who habitually addresses men on the most important themes.—Congregational Quarterly.

The Introductory Essay which Professor Shedd has prefixed to this valuable Treatise, is elaborate, vigorous, impressive. It excites the mind not only to thought, but also to the expression of thought, to inward and outward activity. The whole volume is characterized by freshness and originality of remark, a purity and earnestness of moral feeling.—Bib. Sacra, 1859.

Publications of W. F. Draper, Andover.

AUBERLEN ON DANIEL AND THE REVELATION. Translated by Rev. Adolph Saphir. 490 pp. $1.50.

"It is refreshing to one's spirit to receive a book of this kind from Germany. . . . The Prophecies of Daniel and of John have long been the sport of unbelieving criticism; and if their authority, as the products of Divine inspiration, could have been overthrown by learning and ingenuity and industry, this would long since have been accomplished. Undismayed by the long array of learned names against him, Außerlen, comparatively a young writer, has undertaken the defence of these books, and has manfully fulfilled his task." [See notice in Bib. Sacra, vol. 12, page 643 sq.]

HENDERSON'S COMMENTARY ON THE MINOR PROPHETS. (In press.)

The only critical Commentary on the subject accessible to English students. A work carefully prepared by an able scholar

JAHN'S BIBLICAL ARCHÆOLOGY. Translated, with Additions, by PROF. THOMAS C. UPHAM. 578 pp. 8vo. $1.75.

This is a standard work in its department. It is a very excellent book for Sabbath school teachers and advanced classes. There are probably none superior within the same compass.

SCHAUFFLER'S MEDITATIONS ON THE LAST DAYS OF CHRIST. 439 pp. 12mo. $1.00.

The first sixteen chapters of the book consist of Meditations on the last days of Christ, preached in the midst of plague and death, by Rev. Mr. Schauffler, at Constantinople; the second part, of eight sermons on the 17th chapter of John, and is a practical exposition of that chapter.

VENEMA'S INSTITUTES OF THEOLOGY. Translated by REV. A. W. BROWN, Edinburgh. 532 pp. 8vo. Fine edition. $1.50.

"It must be admitted, that Venema had far more independence, both of thought and style than belonged to many of his contemporaries. The perusal of Venema's treatise cannot fail, we think, to awaken a spirit of Biblical investigation, and to illustrate the importance of an accurate and well-balanced theological system."—[Bib. Sac., January, 1854.]

RUSSELL'S PULPIT ELOCUTION. Comprising Remarks on the Effect of Manner in Public Discourse; the Elements of Elocution applied to the Reading of the Scriptures, Hymns and Sermons; with observations on the Principles of Gesture; and a Selection of Exercises in Reading and Speaking. With an Introduction by PROF. E. A. PARK and REV. E. N. KIRK. 413 pp. 12mo. Second edition. $1.00.

"Mr. Russell is known as one of the masters of elocutionary science in the United States. He has labored long, skilfully, and successfully in that most interesting field, and has acquired an honored name among the teachers and writers upon rhetoric. It is one of the most thorough publications upon the subject, and is admirably addressed to the correction of the various defects which diminish the influence of pulpit discourses. It is already an established authority in many places."—[Literary World.]

ADDRESSES OF REV. DRS. STURTEVANT AND STEARNS at the Anniversary of the American Congregational Union, May 1855. 25 cts.

NEMESIS SACRA. A series of Inquiries, Philosophical and Critical, into the Scripture Doctrine of Retribution on Earth. 550 pp. $2.75.

The design of this work is to show that God not only chastises his friends in love, but also punishes them in anger, while on earth. This is attempted to be shown partly from reason, but chiefly from revelation. The argument from revelation consists in detailing the history of Adam, Abraham, Lot, Jacob and his sons, Moses, the Judges, Eli, David, Solomon, and others, and tracing the connection between their sufferings and their sins.—Bib. Sacra, 1839.

Publications of W. F. Draper, Andover.

---

BIBLE HISTORY OF PRAYER. By C. A. GOODRICH. 384 pp. 12mo. $1.00.

The aim of this little volume is to embody an account of the delightful and successful intercourse of believers with heaven for some four thousand years. The author has indulged a good deal in narrative, opening and explaining the circumstances which gave birth to the several prayers.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY FROM KANT TO HEGEL. From the German of Dr. H. M. CHALYBAEUS. With an Introductory Note by SIR WILLIAM HAMILTON. 1 vol. 12mo. $1.25.

Those who are in search of knowledge on this perplexed subject, without having time to investigate the original sources for information, will receive great assistance from this careful, thorough and perspicuous analysis. — [Biblical Repertory and Princeton Review, April, 1854.

See also notice of this work on page 635 of Bib. Sac., July, 1854.

VINET'S HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. 523 pp. $1.75.

WORKS OF LEONARD WOODS, D. D. 5 vols. 8vo. $10.00.

Vols. I., II and III, Lectures. — Vol. IV., Letters and Essays. — Vol. V. — Essays and Sermons. A new edition, on superior paper.

COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS. By PROF. M. STUART. Third edition. Revised by Prof. R. D. C. Robbins. 1 vol. 12mo. pp. 544. $1.50.

We heartily commend this work to all students of the Bible. The production of one of the first Biblical scholars of our age, on the most important of all the doctrinal books of the New Testament, it deserves the careful study, not only of those who agree with Prof. Stuart in his Theological and Exegetical principles, but of those who earnestly dissent from some of his views in both respects. — Watchman and Reflector.

COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS. By PROF. M. STUART. Third edition. 1 vol. 12mo. In press.

STUART'S MISCELLANIES. pp. 369. 12mo. 75 cents.

CONTENTS. — I. Letters to Dr. Channing on the Trinity. — II. Two Sermons on the Atonement. — III. Sacramental Sermon on the Lamb of God. — IV. Dedication Sermon — Real Christianity. — V. Letter to Dr. Channing on Religious Liberty. — VI. Supplementary Notes and Postscripts.

STUART'S GREEK GRAMMAR OF THE NEW TESTAMENT DIALECT. Second edition. 8vo. $1.37.

This is the cheapest work on this subject published in this country.

STUART'S HINTS ON THE INTERPRETATION OF PROPHECY. pp. 146. 12mo. 33 cents.

CODEX VATICANUS H KAINH ΔΙΑΘΗΚΗ. Novum Testamentum Græce, ex antiquissimo Codice Vaticano edidit Angelus Maius, S. R. E. Card. 8vo. $2.50.

Professor Tischendorf and Dr. Tregelles ascribe its date as early as to the middle of the fourth century. It has generally been held to be the most venerable manuscript of the New Testament. It has been guarded with great vigilance by the authorities of the Vatican. A thorough collation, even, has never before been permitted, though often sought. The present work is an exact reprint.

Publications of W. F. Draper, Andover.

WORKS OF JESSE APPLETON, D. D., with a Memoir of his Life and Character. 2 vols. 8vo. $3.00.

They will ever form standard volumes in American Theological Literature. — Bib. Repository 1837, p. 249.

AUGUSTINISM AND PELAGIANISM. By G. F. WIGGERS, D. D. Translated from the German, by PROF. R. EMERSON, D. D. pp. 383. 8vo. $1.00.

CUDWORTH'S TRUE INTELLECTUAL SYSTEM OF THE UNIVERSE: Wherein all the Reason and Philosophy of Atheism is Confuted, and its Impossibility Demonstrated. Also, a Treatise on Immutable Morality, with a discourse on the True Notion of the Lord's Supper; and two Sermons on 1 John 2: 3, 4, and 1 Cor. 15: 57; with an account of the Life and Writings of the Author. 2 vols. 8vo. pp. 804, 756. $4.00.

DR. DODDRIDGE'S LECTURES ON PREACHING. 15 cents.

SELECTIONS FROM GERMAN LITERATURE. By B. B. EDWARDS and E. A. PARK. pp. 472. 8vo. $2.00.

CONTENTS. — I. Introduction by the Translators. — II. The Life, Character, and Style of the Apostle Paul, by Prof. Tholuck. — III. The Tragical Quality in the Friendship of David and Jonathan, by Prof. Frederic Koster. — IV. The Gifts of Prophecy and of Speaking with Tongues in the Primitive Church, by Dr. L. J. Ruckert. — V. Sermons by Prof. Tholuck. 1. The Relation of Christians to the Law; 2. Gentleness of Christ; 3. Fruitless Resolutions; 4. Earnest of Eternal Life; 5. The Penitent Thief; 6. The Presence of God with His Children. — VI. Sketch of Tholuck's Life and Character, by Prof. Park. — VII. The Doctrine of the Resurrection of the Dead, by Dr. L. J. Ruckert. — VIII. The Resurrection of the Body, by J. P. Lange. — IX. The Life of Plato, by W. G. Tennemann. — X. Sketch of the Biographers of Plato, and of the Commentators upon his Writings, by Prof. Edwards. — XI. The Sinless Character of Jesus Christ, by Dr. C. Ullmann.

GURNEY ON THE SABBATH. With Introduction by PROF. STUART. 12 cents.

WRITINGS OF W. B. HOMER. With a Memoir by PROF. PARK. 12mo. 80 cents.

PLUTARCHUS DE SERA NUMINIS VINDICTA. Plutarch on the Delay of the Deity in the Punishment of the Wicked. With Notes by H. B. HACKETT, Professor of Biblical Literature in Newton Theological Institution. pp. 172. 12mo. 60 cents.

[See a review of this work in Bib. Sacra, p. 609, 1856.]

PUNCHARD'S VIEW OF CONGREGATIONALISM, its Principles and Doctrines, the Testimony of Ecclesiastical History in its favor, its Practice and its advantages. With an Introductory Essay by R. S. STORRS, D. D. Second edition. 16mo. pp. 331. 38 cents.

TYNDALE'S NEW TESTAMENT. The original edition, 1526, being the first vernacular translation from the Greek. With a Memoir of his Life and Writings. With Variations and Marginal Readings. 12mo. $1.00.

This is one of the most interesting books — we say it without misgiving — ever issued from the American press. — Bib. Repository 1837, p. 495.

WINER'S CHALDEE GRAMMAR. Translated by PROF. H. B. HACKETT. 8vo. $1.50.

WOODS ON INFANT BAPTISM. Second edition. pp. 222. 25 cents.

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
BERKELEY

Return to desk from which borrowed.
This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

1 Mar '54 SB
FEB 26 1954 LU

8 May '54 JB

MAY 19 1954 LU

12 Nov '57 GC

REC'D LD
NOV 12 1957

18 Feb '58 FB

REC'D LD
FEB 7 1958

10 Jun '59 JB
REC'D LD

MAY 27 1958

22 APR '63 PY

REC'D LD
APR 8 1963

2 May '63 RA

REC'D LD

MAY 4 1963

LD 21-100m-7,'52(A2528s16)476

YC 40730

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY

IVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

IVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

IVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

LIBRARY

