PREFACE

SPENSER is not a popular poet. He has never been in any marked degree even fashionable. Milton, content with fit audience though few, ranked in Pope's and Johnson's time with Shakespeare and the musical glasses. Ladies read his poetry in their boudoirs, and chatted about its beauties in company—absurdly enough no doubt. But such admiration could never befall Spenser. His materials, quality, and intention forbid that a multitude of readers should ever gather about him.

Yet his is a peculiar glory. From the appearance of the Shepherd's Calendar to this day he has been neither ignored nor neglected. An ardent and undying appreciation, glowing round about his poetry, has given constant proof of the abundant vitality within. In steadiness of appreciation from his first signal performance, and in absence of strong disapproval at any time, he seems to be distinguished above all other English poets.

But if this appreciation has been fairly constant in degree, it has further distinguished Spenser by its variety. Each generation of critics has discovered new things in him, and each has admired him for a different quality. And though all these qualities are actual, the sum of all is not the sum of his poetry. A new generation, with new knowledge and philosophies, will correct and enlarge the critical measure of the man and his work. Spenser is like a landscape of rugged mountain or restless sea, qualified with glimpses of more genial and intimate details—sunlit meadow, or human habitation. Viewed in the changing lights of history and opinion, by interpreters of varying temper and judgment, he changes in significance, and indeed in total appearance, though essentially ever the same. While this is the case in the history of any great artist, it is peculiarly so with Spenser. To the classicist he is classic; to the romanticist, romantic. To Milton he is "sage and serious," a higher teacher than Scotus or Aquinas, one in whose rapturous song more is meant than meets the ear; to a man of the senses his imagination teems with loveliness, and riots in a boundless paradise of beautiful things. To the mystic he is a seer, to the moralist an expositor of ethics. For the historian he embodies and illustrates in essence the noblest traits of the two great cultures from which his work drew its sustenance. He is lyric or epic, satiric or philosophical, naïve or sophisticated. To all men of finer perceptions and sensibilities he is all things. He is the poet's poet.

Viewed historically, all great art is of two kinds. Especially so is poetry. Either its creative influence is not exerted much beyond itself, and its glory is primarily its own; or it reveals the power to propagate itself through succeeding generations, to found a school, to poetize material and language for artists in ages to come, to exert subtle and pervading influences in creating and shaping new artists, new mediums, new art. Of the first kind is the art of Dante and Shakespeare and Beethoven. For, though these have unquestionably influenced successors, yet in proportion to their greatness their power in this respect is small. Of the second kind is the poetry of the Greeks, whose material, drawn from ordinary sources in life common to all men, is refined, heightened, transmuted by their touch, and handed down to singers of later ages already filled with the sublimer meaning essential to poetry. Thus a roving and unscrupulous adventurer, with a talent for sensation, was so transformed by Homer and others that Dante employs him to express, in one of its purest and earliest forms, the energy and aspiration of the Renaissance, and in Tennyson he symbolizes the heroic curiosity of science that marks the later age. So also the language of the Greek poets was in essence the common speech of men in their times; but it too has been purged and elevated by their use of it in poetry until it has become a quickening, purifying, and ennobling influence in the poetic language of all other tongues upon which it has breathed. In this sense Greek poetry is normalizing and standard; in this sense especially it is classic.

In much the same sense Milton and Spenser are classic. Though usually ranked in English poetry fourth among the sons of light, Spenser is in this respect perhaps the first of them all. From his contemporary, Marlowe, to the present day, virtually all great poets of whatever manner or school bear witness, conscious or unconscious, to his power. Works consciously imitated from Spenser—The Purple Island, The Castle of Indolence, Childe Harold—though numerous enough, represent but a more superficial and less significant phase of it. In subtler and more essential ways Spenser's power exerts itself in Marlowe, Shakespeare, the Fletchers, Jonson, Milton, Dryden, Pope, Gray, Collins, Goldsmith, Chatterton, Burns, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Scott, Shelley, Keats, Tennyson, and a host of minor writers. Here it is seen in the metrical form, there in the fable or matter, now in the style, now in the single phrase or word; it appears even in the transformed aspect of things which Spenser has helped his successors to perceive. Indeed, much of the traditional language and idiom of our poetry has been made poetical by Spenser, and begins with him.

As yet the just measure of this far-reaching power in Spenser is undetermined. In truth the exact appraisal and description of the poet's work as a whole is but begun. Criticism of his poetry, however appreciative, has been hitherto almost entirely impressionistic and variable, and we are still far from the whole truth concerning him. We are told by various writers that he is gentle, or coarse, or saccharine, or formless, or artificial, or excessive, or recondite, or obvious. One who reads Spenser thoughtfully, and continues to read him, readily grows sceptical of the generalizations vainly repeated from critic to critic. But Spenser can yet be known. He is discoverable in the use which he made of all the materials ready to his hand, in the services which he rendered to the English language, in his daring and exquisite manipulation of words, in the beauty and the meaning of story, picture, song, idea that constitute his poetry, and in their structural relation to each other. A concordance to his poems, whatever its minor uses, is content to justify itself as a means to the discovery of these real values in Spenser, that his cultural and spiritualizing power may be enlarged among readers who are by nature capable of his influence.

The first of many questions to confront the maker of a concordance is the choice of a text. In 1907, at the inception of the work, the text of Morris¹ (cited as M.), then the best, was adopted for this concordance. Work was well under way when, in 1908, was published a new and more accurate text by Professor R. E. Neil Dodge² (cited as D.). D., like M., is founded upon all the first editions; but it is more nearly free from misprints, and is on the whole more judicious and consistent in its readings from later editions. It therefore is, to my mind, the best text. In 1909 appeared an edition of the Faery Queen by Mr. J. C. Smith, and in 1910 an edition of the Minor Poems by Professor Ernest de Sélincourt; the two constitute a complete edition in three volumes,³ which is here cited as Oxf.

D., since it is founded upon the same originals as M., has served to correct numerous misprints, inaccuracies, and inconsistencies of M. To this end I have collated the two editions nearly throughout. Oxf., where it is based upon the same originals as M. and D., has often served to settle a difference between them. For Books I–III of the Faery Queen, however, it follows the edition of 1596, where the others follow that of 1590. Where Oxf. differs in vocabulary from the others, I have recorded the variants that the word-list of the poet might be as nearly complete as possible. A few errors in Oxf. have been disregarded, such as “chased” for “chafed,” Hub. 6; “runes” for “tunes,” Mui. 412 (corrected in the one-volume reprint, 1912); “Coloffes” for “Colosses,” Ti. 409; “loves” for “Joves,” Epith. 99.

Here it may be remarked that the diæresis used occasionally in the original text, and more frequently by M., to indicate the pronunciation of a syllable otherwise silent, and the accent used by M. for the same purpose, have been regularly omitted.

The concordance, then, is based upon M. corrected by D., and includes the variants of vocabulary in Oxf. All these quotations from Oxf. are designated by an asterisk (*).

The text of Spenser, for whatever reason, was left by the poet in much disorder. It was inaccurately printed during his life, and deteriorated through subsequent editions, so that a complete restoration will never be possible. In fact it does not seem reasonable to expect great improvement upon what we now have, though a concordance, among other uses, may serve to determine the correct reading in a considerable number of cases. This imperfection of the text presents many difficulties to the editor of a concordance which cannot arise from the more exact and consistent text of a later poet.

² Cambridge Poets, Houghton Mifflin Company.

One of these is the distinguishing of compounds. Spenser sparingly used the hyphen to designate a compound, nor was he consistent in his practice. Thus "sea god" (III. iv. 43. 9), "sea-god" (IV. xi. 8. 2), and "seagod" (IV. xi. 6. 6). This confusion is further confounded by M.'s only partial endeavor to bring about uniformity. Where the original has "steeleheaded" once, and "steele-headed" twice, M. alters only one "steeleheaded" to "steele-headed." The original reads "over all" consistently; M., in two thirds of the instances, reads "over-all," but leaves the others unaltered. In following M., therefore, the concordance does not always show the use or disuse of the hyphen in the original text. This can be correctly observed in D. and Oxf. Similar is the case of such words as afresh, as well, awhile, instead, which the original printed sometimes as one word, sometimes as two, but which M. does not accurately reproduce in this respect. Then, too, it is often hard to tell whether two words are essentially compound or distinct, such as "loving lays" (T. M. 413), "heavie wounded" (I. viii. 14. 5), "mad man" (in which the position of the stress is a criterion). Many words in Spenser may seem compound to the modern ear which perhaps were not so to him. The most numerous of doubtful cases are the combinations of adverb and participle, made more doubtful by the poet's habit of placing the adverb, in form often the same as the adjective, before the verb. Such are "sad amazed" (I. v. 32. 5), "soft growing" (IV. vii. 33. 4), "sweete smyling" (IV. Pr. 5. 7), and combinations with out—"out boasts" (II. v. 33. 9), "out budding" (I. vii. 17. 4), "out crying" (II. iii. 34. 8), "out find," "out showe" (S. C. Ap. 78). In deciding questions of compounds, including those of an adverb and a participle, I have appealed to the New English Dictionary. When this has failed, I have usually listed such combinations as compounds where they are clearly attributive. Particularly numerous are combinations of half and well, for which useful rules may be found in the New English Dictionary, vol. 5, p. 32, middle column, s. v. half- "in comb.," and in the Concise Oxford Dictionary, p. 1013, top of the first column. When all is done, a few doubtful cases remain.

The compound adjective in a predicate use found in other Elizabethans appears in Spenser; for example, "Still solemne sad, or still disdainfull coy" (II. vi. 37. 5; cf. I. ii. 2. 8), "cruell kynde" (IV. vii. 30. 5), "greedie fiers" (IV. ii. 21. 5), "mellow ripe" (S. C. D. 107), "sullein sad" (III. xii. 18. 2). Such compounds were of course less subject to custom than to individual choice. In Spenser they are not hyphenated, and in these, as in all doubtful cases, I have classified them as they were printed in the first editions.

The distinction between the possessive singular and the possessive plural is sometimes difficult, since the apostrophe is almost never used. Doubtful instances are "lives" (VI. iii. 31. 9), "others" (Gn. 408), "spirits" (VI. xi. 44. 5), and certain cases under heaven's and heavens'. Cases in translations were decided by consulting the originals; certain others by considering Spenser's practice in the use of the word; but a few, when other means failed, by arbitrary judgment.

The poems indexed in the concordance are all found in M., D., and Oxf., except a slightly variant version of Am. i, which was published by Professor Gollancz in Proceedings of the British Academy, 1907-8, p. 100.

I have omitted The Doleful Lay of Clorinda, The Mourning Muse of Thestylis, and other poems originally printed with Astrophel, because they are obviously not Spenser's. It is hard to see why editors continue religiously to include them in every edition. I have included two stanzas which form an interlude between The Doleful Lay of Clorinda and The Mourning Muse of Thestylis. They are unmistakably Spenser's.

The numbering of references applies to all editions except in the cases of the Dedicatory Sonnets to the Faery Queen and the Amoretti. The following table gives the corresponding numbers of the Dedicatory Sonnets in M. and Oxf.:

M.	Oxf.	M.	Oxf.	M.	Oxf.
1.....	1	7.....	10	13.....	12
2.....	6	8.....	14	14.....	13
3.....	3	9.....	2	15.....	15
4.....	4	10.....	5	16.....	16
5.....	7	11.....	9	17.....	17
6.....	8	12.....	11

The last of the Amoretti are numbered as follows:

M.	Oxf.	M.	Oxf.
82.....	82	86.....	87
83.....	84	87.....	88
84.....	85	88.....	89
85.....	86

The sonnet numbered 83 in Oxf. is a slight variant of 35.

The order of words is strictly alphabetical. The inflected forms of all words are separately listed. The possessive singular precedes the nominative and objective plural form, and the possessive plural follows it.

The varied and often whimsical spelling in Spenser is no doubt chiefly owing to the poet's intention or indifference, but in many cases to the printer's carelessness. The word afraid, for example, appears as affraid, affraide, affrayd, afraid, afrayd, afrayde. To make a manageable concordance it is necessary to marshal such variants under a normal spelling, and I have, with a few necessary exceptions, indexed all quotations under the modern spelling, in general using the index-form found in the New English Dictionary. Numerous cross-references should obviate all difficulty in finding a word, but in any case the reader has only to recall its modern spelling to find its place in the concordance. There are apparent exceptions to this rule, as in unfamiliar proper names and obsolete words or forms. For the unfamiliar names from British history I have sought the forms in Miss Harper's study of The Sources of the British Chronicle History in Spenser's Faerie Queene. Names invented by Spenser I have indexed under the most frequent spelling (Artegall, rather than Arthegall). An exception to my practice is furnished by the preterites of several verbs of the third ablaut class, such as begon, dronk, rong, song, spon. Where by rhyme or grammar it is clear that the form is equivalent to the u-form, it is listed thereunder. If in any case this is not clear, a separate list of the o-forms is made.

Homographs are not distinguished. Read, pres. and pret., are in one list; so bear, v., and bear, n.; wind, v., and wind, n.

Certain words which are distinct in modern English were evidently identical to Spenser, with two not always distinct meanings. Such are fain, feign (cf. II. iv. 1. 8; vii. 61. 6; V. i. 22. 8; vi. 3. 8; Am. lxxxvi. 10); throe, n., "pain," throw, n., "cast," which sometimes merge in the sense "blow causing pain" (cf. Mui. 414); travail, travel (cf. IV. x. 3. 1; VI. iii. 9. 9). Read and rede are not distinguished in spelling by Spenser. In the sense "advise" I list the word under rede, in other senses under read, though the participle at V. viii. 13. 6, properly classified under rede (cf. N. E. D., s. v., 1. 3), is for convenience listed under read. Lea and lee are uncertain. The word which occurs at Ti. 135, 603; V. ii. 19. 1; Proth. 38, 115 surely has a meaning different from any given in N. E. D., though this meaning is not altogether clear. Dr. Henry Bradley in a letter to the editor suggests: "Perhaps 'watercourse' or 'river-bed' might do, but even that seems to yield an awkward tautology in connexion with channell. It looks as if Spenser took the word to mean the 'descending tract traversed by a river.' How he got this notion it would be difficult to say." Even these explanations do not wholly satisfy Proth. 38 and 115-18. No doubt here is another case of Spenser's vague use of a musical word. The classification of race, "scratch, demolish," raced, rast, rased, presented difficulty. Race, rase, raze, are variants of one verb, though race was doubtless pronounced differently from the others in Spenser's time, as it is now. In the sense "demolish" he evidently distinguished it by the spelling and the unvoiced pronunciation, for he spells it race, raced; his spellings rast, ras't, raste, indicate the same pronunciation. In rased, "scratched" (III. i. 65. 7), he apparently understands a different word. Therefore I have followed his spelling and classified the instances meaning "demolish" under race, and the instance meaning "scratch" under rase, with cross-reference from raze.

Past participles with the prefix y-, which serves in Spenser only a metrical purpose, are listed not under Y, but with the simple form of the participle. Under Y, however, they are all given with cross-references, so that the reader can at a glance see what words were so used. In one or two instances the prefix y- appears in another form of the verb. Such instances are of course recorded under Y.

When the work of compilation began, I purposed to follow, as nearly as possible, a chronological order in citing the quotations. In general the reasons for so doing are obvious; in Spenser's case, however, it has proved impracticable, since the chronology of his works must ever remain in many details doubtful. His practice of postponing publication for years, and of revising at publication, or during the preceding interval, greatly complicates the problem. I have departed from the usual order of the editions, however, and made some rearrangement of the Minor Poems, guided in part by Professor Dodge's opinions in his prefaces to them. If the work were to be done over, the order of texts would be that of his edition, which at any rate is an improvement over the traditional one.

I have endeavored to represent every word in Spenser's verse by at least one quotation. There are, of course, many common words of which a complete list of instances would be too long for convenience. For these I have followed the example of Professor Cooper in his Concordance to Wordsworth, and given partial lists. They are:

A	Canst	Hither	Ours	Till
About	Could	How	Ourselves	To
Above	Couldst	I	Out	Toward (prep.)
Adown	Did (aux.)	If	Over	Towards

Can	Himself	Ought	Thy
Cannot	His	Our	Thyself

In compiling these lists some care has been taken to include peculiar or significant instances of each word. Thus the lists for as, as if, than, include all similes introduced by these words. By consulting these and the complete list s. v. like, the reader is enabled quickly to consider this very interesting and important element in the poet's art. For I, me, my, all cases are retained in which "Spenser" is the antecedent. The varied uses of preposition, conjunction, or modal auxiliary, I have tried to illustrate in each case. But if these lists do not satisfy a reader's curiosity, he may easily consult various monographs, such as K. Boehm, Spensers Verbalflexion; R. Liese, Die Flexion des Verbums bei Spenser; H. Boehm, Spensers Relativsatz; H. Düring, Über die Pronomina bei Spenser; H. Brendel, Über die Konjunctionen bei Spenser; Steininger, Der Gebrauch der Präposition bei Spenser. Instances have often been retained because of the peculiar part which the word, insignificant in itself, plays in the cadence or alliteration of a line, or for the value of the instances in determining, either through rhyme or metre, the Spenserian pronunciation of the word. As it is, most of the partial lists are sufficiently long—perhaps in some cases too long.

This work was begun, and has in large part gone forward, under the auspices of the Concordance Society. The burden of compilation has been much relieved by the help of many collaborators, a number of them volunteers. Not only was my wife's share in the mere labor very heavy, but to her the book owes many a device by which the task was shortened, and the detection of many an inaccuracy which would have impaired its usefulness. I would particularly make acknowledgments to Mr. Alain C. White, who paid for nearly all the transcription, and took part in the earlier stages of the work. To Professor Lane Cooper I am indebted for expert advice, as well as for an actual share in the labor. Others who have given generously of their time and strength are Miss Mary Hollingsworth Beach, Miss Sylvia Woodbridge Beach, Miss Mildred Emily Cook, Miss Elsie Lydia Croll, Miss Natalie Merrill, Miss Margaretta Paxton, and Miss Adeline Mitchill Scott. Acknowledgment is also due the Right Honorable Lewis Harcourt for permission to reproduce the portrait of Spenser in his possession. Finally, I would acknowledge the liberal facilities which the Carnegie Institution of Washington has provided for the publication of this work.

Doctor Johnson good-humoredly defined a lexicographer as "a harmless drudge," and concordance-making, which is but a lower form of lexicography, surely escapes none of its drudgery. But for this drudgery the labor yields compensations, if only in handling from day to day bright ravelings from the rich fabric of Spenser's poetry, or in hearing, until their cadence falls familiarly upon the ear, snatches of his incomparable music in all the changes of instrument and voice of which he is preëminently the master.

Or as that famous Queene Of Amazons,	II. iii. 31. 5
shake, and rowze as comming late from rest.	II. iii. 35. 9
As fearfull fowle, that long in secret cave	II. iii. 36. 1
I hid my selfe from it, as one affeard;	II. iii. 45. 8
gan to ride As one unfit therefore,	II. iii. 46. 4
as a blindfold Bull, at ranson fares,	II. iv. 7. 8
as the Sunny beames do glance and glide	II. v. 2. 4
As one affright With hellish feends,	II. v. 37. 6
as swift as glance of eye, A little Gondelay,	II. vi. 2. 6
Sometimes shee song as lowd as lark in ayre,	II. vi. 3. 3
Sometimes shee laught, as merry as Pope Jone;	II. vi. 3. 4
dull billowes thicke as troubled mire,	II. vi. 20. 7
helmet, which as Titan shone,	II. vi. 31. 6
still he stood as senselesse stone.	II. vi. 31. 9
bitter rate, As Shepherdes curie, that in darke	II. vi. 39. 4
As Pilot well expert in perilous wave,	II. vii. 1. 1
Ihis hand that trembled as one terrifyde;	II. vii. 6. 7
uncertain light: Such as a lamp,	II. vii. 29. 7
uncertain light: as the Moone,	II. vii. 29. 8
such exceeding store, As eie of man did never see	II. vii. 31. 5
whose dore did open, as it had bene taught.	II. vii. 35. 3
wyde, As it some Gyeld or solemne Temple weare.	II. vii. 43. 4
There, as in glistring glory shee did sitt,	II. vii. 46. 1
loaden all with fruit as thicke as it might bee.	II. vii. 53. 9
Gaz'd after him, as fowle escapt by flight,	II. viii. 9. 4
courd it tenderly, As chicken newly hatcht,	II. viii. 9. 9
knights al armd as bright as skie,	II. viii. 10. 2
'no knight so rude As to doen outrage	II. viii. 26. 2
make his carkas as the outcast dong?	II. viii. 28. 6
as thicke as stormie showre, Their strokes did raime:	II. viii. 35. 5
as a stedfast towre, Whom foe doth assaile,	II. viii. 35. 7
a large lukewarme flood, Red as the Rose,	II. viii. 39. 2
As salvage Bull, whom two fierce mastives hayt,	II. viii. 42. 1
as a man whom hellish feendes have frayd,	II. viii. 46. 4
all desperat, as loathing light,	II. viii. 47. 1
As when a windy tempest bloweth hie,	II. viii. 48. 1
The cloudes, as things affrayd, before him flye;	II. viii. 48. 3
as in scorn their mallice forth do poure:	II. viii. 48. 6
as a Bitur in the Eagles clawe,	II. viii. 50. 2
As one that loathed life, and yet despyd to dye.	II. viii. 50. 9
Whose glory shineth as the morning starre,	II. ix. 4. 6
it shooke as it would fall.	II. ix. 11. 5
As when a swarme of Gnats at eventide	II. ix. 16. 1
as a cloud doth seeme to dim the skies;	II. ix. 16. 5
faire as faire mote ever bee,	II. ix. 18. 6
so high as foe might not it clime,	II. ix. 21. 2
Lady right faire and fresh as morning rose,	II. ix. 36. 7
blood her snowy cheekes did dye as polisht yvory	II. ix. 41. 5
it doth, as cloud from sea, aryse.	II. ix. 42. 5
so wisely as I may.'	II. ix. 42. 9
survevd as hills doen lower ground;	II. ix. 45. 4
all that fained is, as leasings, tales,	II. ix. 51. 9
flying fast as Roebucke	II. x. 7. 5
dreadful wights As far exceeded men	II. x. 8. 9
flitting arrows, thicke as flakes of snow,	II. xi. 18. 2
him fell before; As withered leaves drop	II. xi. 19. 4
a Tygre That as the winde ran	II. xi. 20. 5
Those could he well direct and streight as line,	II. xi. 21. 6
As pale and wan as ashes	II. xi. 22. 1
His body leane and meagre as a rake,	II. xi. 22. 2
as cold and drery as a snake,	II. xi. 22. 4
as swift on foot as chased Stags;	II. xi. 23. 5
as the winged wind his Tigre fled,	II. xi. 26. 1
(As wonis the Tartar by the Caspian lake,	II. xi. 26. 7
As one awakte out of long slombing shade,	II. xi. 31. 7
as a Beare, whom angry curres have touzd,	II. xi. 33. 3
fierce returning, as a faulcon fayre,	II. xi. 36. 6
As when Joves harness-bearing Bird	II. xi. 43. 1
the Carle as fast Can heape huge strokes	II. xi. 43. 8
Can heape huge strokes on him, as ere he down was cast.	II. xi. 43. 9
Rocke of Reproch, and it as death to dred!	II. xii. 9. 9
'As th' Isle of Delos whylome,	II. xii. 13. 1
bravely furnished as ship might bee,	II. xii. 19. 3
the great sea As threatening to devoure	II. xii. 21. 9

As—Continued.

The waves as they enraged were,	II. xii. 22. 2
all we dreadfull hold, Be but as bugs	II. xii. 25. 3
Art, as halfe in scorn of niggard Nature,	II. xii. 50. 6
bouches hanging As freely offering to be gathered;	II. xii. 54. 6
deepe empurpled as the Hyacine,	II. xii. 54. 7
as the Rubine laughing sweetely red,	II. xii. 54. 8
emongst the leaves entold, As lurking from the vew	II. xii. 55. 4
downe againe Her plong, as over-maystered	II. xii. 64. 3
as through a vele, So through the christall waves	II. xii. 64. 6
As that faire Starre, the messenger of morne,	II. xii. 65. 1
Or as the Cyprian goddess, newly borne	II. xii. 65. 3
Such as attonce might not be heard elsewhere:	II. xii. 70. 3
made him stagger, as he were not well:	III. i. 6. 5
Whose face did seeme as cleare as Christall stone,	III. i. 15. 4
And eke, through feare, as white as whales bone:	III. i. 15. 5
as a blazing starre doth farre outcast Ihis hearie beames,	III. i. 16. 5
As the proud Persian Queenes accustomed,	III. i. 41. 4
As when fayre Cynthia, in darke some night,	III. i. 43. 1
As hee that hath espide a vermeill Rose,	III. i. 46. 6
as a cole to kindle fleshy flame,	III. i. 50. 2
as it had bene a flake Of lightning	III. ii. 5. 7
The loving mother not so much joyce as shee	III. ii. 11. 9
Lookt forth, as Phoebus face out of the east	III. ii. 24. 6
As one with vew of ghastly feends affright:	III. ii. 29. 7
As one in wifull bale for ever buried.	III. ii. 31. 9
As smoke and sulphure mingled with confused stryfe.	III. ii. 32. 9
languish, as the leafe falln from the tree,	III. ii. 39. 8
As it an Earth-quake were:	III. ii. 42. 9
As fayre Aurora, rysing hastily,	III. iii. 20. 4
As, when a foggy mist hath overcast The face of heven,	III. iv. 13. 1
lay as in a swowne,	III. iv. 30. 6
As swift as swallowes on the waves they went,	III. iv. 33. 5
fled, as light-foot hare	III. iv. 46. 4
affraid of him as feend of hell.	III. iv. 47. 9
bold, as ever Squire that waited	III. v. 12. 9
as faire as Phoebus sunne.	III. v. 27. 9
As it an earthly Paradyze had bene:	III. v. 40. 6
mightie ill, Which, as a victour proud, gan ransack	III. v. 48. 4
drye up and blast; As percing levin,	III. v. 48. 8
wasted, as the snow congeald When the bright sunne	III. v. 49. 5
Such as the Angels weare before Gods tribunal!	III. v. 53. 9
shund dishonor which as death she feard:	III. vi. 10. 6
from her fled as flit as ayery Dove,	III. vi. 11. 4
fresh in face and guize As any Nimphe;	III. vi. 23. 8
blandishment, Which as a fontaine from her sweete lips went.	III. vi. 25. 5
as faire as springing day,	III. vi. 26. 9
So faire a place as Nature can devize:	III. vi. 29. 3
beautie fades away, As doth the lilly	III. vi. 38. 9
Stared as one astonnd,	III. vii. 7. 7
As glad of that small rest as Bird of tempest gon.	III. vii. 10. 9
as one, which hath gaz'd On the bright Sunne	III. vii. 13. 6
she, as one nigh of her wits depriv'd,	III. vii. 14. 6
in hands, as conquered To be her thrall,	III. vii. 17. 7
mone, as they had bene undone,	III. vii. 19. 9
feeds on womens flesh as others feede on gras.	III. vii. 22. 9
swifte as word that from her went,	III. vii. 23. 6
Lightly she leaped, as a wight forlore,	III. vii. 26. 7
As Florimell fled from that Monster	III. vii. 26. 5
As he that strives to stop a suddain flood,	III. vii. 34. 1
As white seemes fayrer nacht with blacke attone;	III. ix. 2. 4
Ihis mone, which he lov'd as living breath;	III. x. 2. 8
As Hellene, when she saw The Trojan flames	III. x. 12. 7
I loath as doung, ne deeme my dew reward:	III. x. 31. 6
As one out of a dreame not waked well	III. x. 49. 7
That, as a Snake, still lurked	III. x. 55. 9
That was as trew in love as Turtle to her make.	III. xi. 2. 9
he was long, and swift as any Roe,	III. xi. 5. 8
implore As gentle Ladies helpless misery:	III. xi. 18. 6
foolhardy as th' Earthes children,	III. xi. 22. 8
as a thonder bolt Perceth the yielding ayre,	III. xi. 25. 6
As faining to be hidd from envious eye:	III. xi. 28. 5
playd In the rich metall as they living were.	III. xi. 61. 6
As it with mighty levers had bene fore;	III. xii. 3. 4
as on the readie flore Of some Theatre,	III. xii. 3. 5
as to heare a play,	III. xii. 4. 4
As those same plumes so seemd he vaine and light,	III. xii. 8. 5
For still he far'd as dauncing in delight,	III. xii. 8. 7
nycelly trode, as thornes lay in his way,	III. xii. 10. 6
As ashes pale of hew,	III. xii. 12. 6
As a dismayd Deare in chace embost,	III. xii. 17. 8
Her brest all naked, as nett yvory	III. xii. 20. 1
she, as morrow fresh, her selfe did reare	III. xii. 28. 8
Fell softly forth, as of his owne accord,	III. xii. 38. 2
Was closed up, as it had not bene bor'd,	III. xii. 38. 5
vanisht quite, as it were not the same,	III. xii. 43. 5
So seemd those two, as growne together quite,	III. xii. 46. or. 5
as thing reserv'd from stealth.	IV. i. 6. 7
Like as the shining skie in summers night,	IV. i. 13. 6
was, as it were, her baude	IV. i. 31. 3
As fresh and fragrant as the floure-deluce	IV. i. 31. 7
As when two billowes Do meete together,	IV. i. 42. 1
as when in chace The Parthian strikes a stag	IV. i. 49. 7
a God or godlike man Such as was Orpheus,	IV. ii. 1. 7
Or such as that celestiall Psalmist was,	IV. ii. 2. 1
wise words, Such as that prudent Romane well	IV. ii. 2. 7
flitting as the wavering wind After each beantie	IV. ii. 5. 2
As when two warlike Brigandines at sea,	IV. ii. 16. 1
As men awaked rashly out of dreame,	IV. ii. 17. 2
To see their thrids so thin as spiders frame,	IV. ii. 50. 8

As—Continued.

As when two Tygers prickt with hungers rage	IV. iii. 16. 1
As when a Vulture greedie of his pray,	IV. iii. 19. 1
As one whose inner parts had bene ythrid	IV. iii. 22. 4
As thicke as hayle forth poured from the skie:	IV. iii. 25. 5
As fast as water-sprinkles gainst a rocke are dash't	IV. iii. 25. 9
And tribute oke withall, as to his Sovereaine	IV. iii. 27. 9
fell as dead . . . Yet dead he was not,	IV. iii. 30. 5
As one that had out of a dreame bene heard,	IV. iii. 31. 4
halfe affeard . . . as he some ghost had scene,	IV. iii. 31. 6
As one in feare the Stygian gods t' offend,	IV. iii. 32. 2
Such as the troubled Theatres oft times	IV. iii. 37. 9
Such famous men, . . . As Jove will have advanced	IV. iii. 44. 2
Canacee, as fresh as morning rose,	IV. iii. 51. 7
as life were to each other life,	IV. iii. 52. 7
As two fierce Bulls,	IV. iv. 18. 3
As one that seemed doubtfull,	IV. iv. 20. 4
As two wild Boares together grappling go,	IV. iv. 29. 8
As when two greedy Wolves doe breake	IV. iv. 35. 6
as her life by her esteemed deare,	IV. v. 6. 2
daz'd the eyes of all as with exceeding light,	IV. v. 10. 9
shone as Phebes light Amongst the lesser starres	IV. v. 14. 3
As guilefull Goldsmith that by secret skill	IV. v. 15. 1
as thing devis'd her to defame,	IV. v. 17. 5
faire a crew, As like can not be scene	IV. v. 18. 4
their words as wind esteemed light,	IV. v. 27. 7
started up as one affrayd,	IV. v. 42. 6
in his face, as in a looking glasse,	IV. v. 45. 7
Did leape to her, as doth an eger hound	IV. vi. 12. 3
Heaping huge strokes as thicke as showre of hayle,	IV. vi. 16. 5
He blest himselfe as one sore terrifide;	IV. vi. 24. 7
trussing me, as Eagle doth his pray,	IV. vii. 18. 6
as swift as wind,	IV. vii. 18. 7
with her body, as a buckler,	IV. vii. 26. 4
winged feete as nimble as the winde,	IV. vii. 30. 2
As when Latonaes daughter,	IV. vii. 30. 5
As one with griefe and anguish overcum,	IV. vii. 44. 4
As blasted bloosme through heat doth languish	IV. viii. 2. 9
flew away as lightly as the wind;	IV. viii. 7. 7
as one daunted with her presence dread,	IV. viii. 13. 7
As messengers of his true meaning	IV. viii. 13. 9
steps so soft as foot could stryde,	IV. viii. 37. 2
So faire as ever yet saw living eie;	IV. viii. 49. 5
as faire as any under skie:	IV. viii. 49. 7
I to him as to my soule did beare,	IV. viii. 55. 3
lov'd me deare, as dearest thing alive,	IV. viii. 56. 6
as the soule doth rule the earthly masse,	IV. ix. 2. 6
though Poena were as faire as morne,	IV. ix. 3. 6
so to ride as it alive was found,	IV. ix. 4. 9
as he captive were,	IV. ix. 5. 2
minde did travell as with chylde	IV. ix. 17. 3
She was as safe as in a Sanctuary,	IV. ix. 19. 6
As when Dan Acolus, in great displeasure	IV. ix. 23. 1
As when two Barkes . . . contrary courses sew,	IV. ix. 26. 7
Against those two let drive, as they were wood:	IV. ix. 29. 5
As when an eger mastife once doth prove The tast of blood	IV. ix. 31. 5
the ground was strow'd with flowrea as fresh as May,	IV. x. 37. 9
As with a robe,	IV. xi. 11. 8
made the rockes to roare as they were rent,	IV. xi. 12. 5
that upon them goth As on the ground,	IV. xi. 14. 6
it encompass round as with a golden fret,	IV. xi. 27. 9
whom as with a Crowne He doth adorne,	IV. xi. 34. 7
flowres . . . all her shoulders spred As a new spring;	IV. xi. 46. 5
As withered weed through cruell winters tine,	IV. xii. 34. 6
A sorie sight as ever scene	V. i. 14. 2
so light, As that it seem'd above the ground he went;	V. i. 20. 3
he was swift as swallow in her flight,	V. i. 20. 4
strong as Lyon in his lordly night,	V. i. 20. 5
As rated Spanicll takes his burden up for feare,	V. i. 29. 9
As when a Dolphin and a Sele are met,	V. ii. 15. 1
As when a Falcon hath with nimble flight	V. ii. 54. 1
As when two sunnes appeare in the azure skye,	V. iii. 19. 1
As roses did with lilies interlace;	V. iii. 23. 5
Her snowy substance melted as with heat,	V. iii. 24. 7
As when the daughter of Thaumantes faire	V. iii. 25. 1
as the death he hated such despight,	V. iii. 31. 8
he stood as still as any stake,	V. iii. 34. 5
As when a Beare hath seiz'd her cruell clawes	V. iv. 40. 6
quilted upon sattin white as milke;	V. v. 2. 3
As the faire Moone in her most full aspect	V. v. 3. 8
flakes of fire, bright as the sunny ray,	V. v. 8. 3
As one that would confesse, yet faire would it denie,	V. v. 31. 9
As one adaw'd, and halfe confus'd	V. v. 45. 5
As a bad Nurse, which, faying to receive	V. v. 53. 1
There as she looked long, at last she spide	V. vi. 8. 1
mute, as one in great suspence;	V. vi. 9. 7
As when the flashing Levin haps to light	V. vi. 40. 1
Her seem'd, as she was doing sacrifice	V. vii. 13. 1
As when a Tygre and a Lionesse Are met	V. vii. 30. 1
all they, as a Goddesses her adoring,	V. vii. 42. 8
So ran they all, as they had bene at bace,	V. viii. 5. 4
Serves her as any Princesse under skye,	V. viii. 18. 7
shone as bright as doth the heaven sheene:	V. viii. 29. 5
As when the fire-mouthed steedes,	V. viii. 40. 1
as that madding mother, mongst the rout Of Bacchus	V. viii. 47. 5
As a mad bytch,	V. viii. 49. 1
dreadfull wight he was as ever went	V. ix. 10. 4
all his bones as small as sandy grayle He broke,	V. ix. 19. 4
Whom seeing all in armour bright as day,	V. ix. 24. 2
like a cloud, as likest may be told,	V. ix. 28. 4

As the bright sunne, what time his ferie teme	V. ix. 35. 1
To see if entrance there as yet obtaine he might,	V. x. 33. 9
As three great Culverings for battrie bent,	V. x. 34. 6
As fast as feete could carry them,	V. x. 36. 2
trembling joynts, as he for terrour shooke;	V. xi. 28. 8
As when the Mast of some well-timberd hulke	V. xi. 29. 1
makes her ribs to cracke as they were torne;	V. xi. 29. 4
ye promist, as ye were a Knight,	V. xi. 39. 2
flocking round about them, as a swarme Of flies	V. xi. 58. 1
As when the wrathfull Boreas doth bluster,	V. xi. 58. 7
As thicke as doth the seede after the sowers hand:	V. xii. 7. 9
As when a skilfull Marriner doth reed A storme approaching	V. xii. 18. 5
pleasure take, As she had got thereby	V. xii. 32. 9
loudly cryde, As it had bene two shepheards curres	V. xii. 38. 5

plates asunder brake, As they had potshares bene;	VI. i. 37. 5
Calidore rising up as fresh as day	VI. iii. 13. 8
as a well it were That . . . gushing did appere,	VI. iii. 50. 8
he was swift as any Bucke in chace)	VI. iv. 8. 3
shows, as fitter bene For courting fooles	VI. v. 38. 7
As doth the poysonous sting, which intamy	VI. vi. 1. 3
a doughty Knight, As any one	VI. vi. 4. 2
still did lie as dead,	VI. vi. 32. 3
As one that had no life him left through former feare,	VI. vi. 32. 9
As when a cast of Falcons make their flight	VI. vii. 9. 1
his locks, as blacke as pitchy night,	VI. vii. 43. 7
As when a sturdy ploughman with his hynde	VI. viii. 12. 1
rest her selfe as in a gladsome port,	VI. x. 9. 4
Another Damzell, as a precious gemme	VI. x. 12. 7
made him pipe so merrily, as never none	VI. x. 15. 9
'So farre, as doth the daughter of the day	VI. x. 26. 1
Like as a sort of hungry dogs, ymet	VI. xi. 17. 1
lustie knight as ever wielded speare,	VI. xii. 3. 6
as a girlond seemes to deck the locks	VII. vi. 41. 3
Shouting as they the heavens would have brast;	VII. vi. 52. 7
Not such as Craftes-men by their idle skill	VII. vii. 8. 3
knittest each to each, as brother unto brother	VII. vii. 14. 9
even the gods to thee, as men to gods, do seeme	VII. vii. 15. 9
'As for her tenants, that is, man and beasts,	VII. vii. 19. 1
Autumne all in yellow clad, As though he joyed	VII. vii. 30. 2
As from a limbeck did adown distill,	VII. vii. 31. 5
wanton as a Kid whose horne new buds;	VII. vii. 33. 2
All in greene leaves, as he a Player were;	VII. vii. 35. 2
backward yode, as Bargemen wont to fare	VII. vii. 35. 7
full grosse and fat As fed with lard,	VII. vii. 40. 2
Such as they faire Dan Cupid to have bene,	VII. vii. 46. 7
'as changefull as the Moone' men use to say	VII. vii. 50. 9
Am. xviii. 14	Am. xviii. 14
My soule was ravisht quite as in a trance;	Am. xxxix. 10
kill with looks as Cockatrices doo:	Am. xlix. 10
cruell and unkind, As is a Tygre,	Am. lvi. 2
proud and pitiflesse, As is a storme,	Am. lvi. 6
hard and obstinate, As is a rocke	Am. lvi. 10
As Mars in three-score yeares doth run his speare,	Am. lx. 4
As a steed refreshed after toyle,	Am. lxxx. 5
I wander as in darkenesse of the night,	Am. lxxxvii. 3
Behold your faces as the christall bright,	Epith. 64
And, as ye use to Venus, to her sing,	Epith. 108
There vertue raynes as Queene in royal throne,	Epith. 194
Yet so, as that . . . They mixe themselves,	H.L. 90
As after stormes, . . . The Sunne	H.L. 276
An heavenly Hymne, such as the Angels sing,	H.L. 302
As plaine as light discovers dawning day,	H.B. 238
And as these heavens still by decrees arize,	H.H.B. 71
And shew himselfe . . . As in a looking-glasse,	H.H.B. 115
And in the same, as in a brasen booke,	H.H.B. 130
As each had bene a Bryde;	Proth. 23
shone as heavens light,	Proth. 52
So fresh they seem'd as day,	Proth. 70
Even as their Brydale day, which was not long:	Proth. 71
murmure low, As he would speake,	Proth. 116
Ascend. Though meane her lot, yet higher did her mind ascend, VI. ix. 10. 9
To Joves high Palaece straight cast to ascend,	VII. vi. 23. 8
fill to his perfect end Of purest beautie it at last ascend;	H.H.B. 47
