

A SELECT LIBRARY

OF THE

NICENE AND POST-NICENE FATHERS

OF

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

EDITED BY

PHILIP SCHAFF, D.D., LL.D.,

PROFESSOR OF CHURCH HISTORY IN THE UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, NEW YORK.

IN CONNECTION WITH A NUMBER OF PATRISTIC SCHOLARS OF EUROPE AND AMERICA.

VOLUME IX.

SAINT CHRYSOSTOM:

ON THE PRIESTHOOD; ASCETIC TREATISES; SELECT HOMILIES AND LETTERS; HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.

NEW YORK

THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE COMPANY

BR 60 .563

COPYRIGHT, 1889, BY

THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE COMPANY.

ELECTROTYPED AND PRINTED BY THE PUBLISHERS' PRINTING COMPANY, 157 & 159 WILLIAM St.,
New York.

.4 128

PREFACE.

With this volume, we begin the Works of St. Chrysostom. It contains a sketch of his life and labors, the book on the priesthood, the letters to Theodore, the catechetical instructions, and a selection of ascetic treatises, special homilies, letters to Olympias and Innocent, and the twenty-one Homilies on the Statues.

The translations are entirely new, or thoroughly revised, by the Rev. W. R. W. Stephens, whose services I was so fortunate as to secure. He has written the best biography of St. Chrysostom and is thoroughly at home in his writings. He has taken great pains, with the aid of two friends, the Rev. T. P. Brandram and Rev. R. Blackburn, and is responsible for the whole volume, with the exception of the Prolegomena, which I wrote myself, to correspond with the Prolegomena to the works of St. Augustin.

The other volumes of St. Chrysostom in this series will be devoted to his exegetical Homilies on the greater part of the New Testament.

PHILIP SCHAFF.

NEW YORK, March, 1889.

CONTENTS.

PROLEGOMENA BY THE GENERAL EDITOR	3-23
INTRODUCTION TO THE TREATISE ON THE PRIESTHOOD	27-29
Six Books on the Priesthood	33-83
Two Letters to Theodore after his Fall	87-116
LETTER TO A YOUNG WIDOW	119-128
Two Homilies. (I.) On St. Babylas: (II.) On St. Ignatius Introduction by the Rev. W. R. W. Stephens; translation and notes by Rev. T. P. Brandram.	131-143
HOMILY CONCERNING "LOWLINESS OF MIND"	147-155
Two Instructions to Candidates for Baptism	159-171
THREE HOMILIES. (I.) THAT DEMONS DO NOT GOVERN THE WORLD:
(II. and III.) CONCERNING THE POWER OF THE TEMPTER Introduction by Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS; translation and notes by Rev. T. P. Brandram.	177-197
THREE HOMILIES. (I.) AGAINST MARCIONISTS AND MANICHÆANS, ON THE PASSAGE "FATHER, IF IT BE POSSIBLE," ETC.: (II.) ON THE PARALYTIC
LET DOWN THROUGH THE ROOF: (III.) TO THOSE WHO HAD NOT AT-TENDED THE ASSEMBLY; ON THE PASSAGE, "IF THINE ENEMY HUNGER
FEED HIM"	201-232
Translated with notes by Rev. W. R. W. Stephens,

HOMILY AGAINST PUBLISHING THE ERRORS OF THE BRETHREN	235-24
Two Homilies on Eutropius	245-265
TREATISE TO PROVE THAT NO ONE CAN HARM THE MAN WHO DOES NOT INJURE HIMSELF	269-284
FOUR LETTERS TO OLYMPIAS AND ONE TO PRESBYTERS AT ANTIOCH Translated with introduction and notes by Rev. W. R. W. Stephens.	287-304
CORRESPONDENCE OF INNOCENT, BISHOP OF ROME, WITH ST. CHRYSOSTOM
AND THE CHURCH OF CONSTANTINOPLE	307-314
TWENTY-ONE HOMILIES ON THE STATUES	317-489

CONTENTS OF PROLEGOMENA.

											P
CHAPTER	I.—LITERATURE .									•		3
CHAPTER	II.—Chrysostom's You	UTH AND	TRAI	NING,	A.D.	347-	370					5
CHAPTER	III.—His Conversion	AND AS	CETIC	Life	, A.D.	370-	-374					6
CHAPTER	IV.—HE EVADES ELEC				- /
	THE PRIESTH	OOD .		٠								7
CHAPTER	V.—CHRYSOSTOM AS A	Monk,	A.D. 3	74-38	81							9
CHAPTER	VI.—CHRYSOSTOM AS	Deacon,	PRIES	r An	D Pr	ЕАСН	ER A	т Ан	TIOC	н, а.1),
	381-398 .											10
CHAPTER	VII.—CHRYSOSTOM AS	PATRIAL	RCH OF	Con	STAN	TINO	PLE, A	A.D. 3	98–40	3		Ι 2
CHAPTER	VIII.—CHRYSOSTOM AN	тр Тнео	PHILUS	. H	is Fi	RST	Depo	SITIO	N AN	D BA	ς-
	ISHMENT .											13
CHAPTER	IX.—CHRYSOSTOM AND	Eudox	ia. l	His S	SECON	D B	ANISI	HMEN	Т, А.	D. 40	3.	1.4
CHAPTER	X.—Chrysostom in E	XILE. H	lis De	атн,	A.D	104-4	107					15
CHAPTER	XI.—HIS CHARACTER											16
CHAPTER	XII.—HIS WRITINGS											17
CHAPTER	XIII.—HIS THEOLOGY	AND EX	EGESIS	;								18
CHAPTER	XIV.—CHRYSOSTOM AS	S A PREA	CHER									22

PROLEGOMENA.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF

ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM.

BY PHILIP SCHAFF.

CHAPTER I.—Literature.

I. EDITIONS OF CHRYSOSTOM'S WORKS.

S. JOANNIS CHRYSOSTOMI, archiepiscopi Constantinopolitani, Opera omnia quae exstant vel quae ejus nomine circumferuntur, ad MSS. codices Gallicos, l'aticanos, Anglicos, Germanicosque castigata, etc. Opera et studio D. BERNARDI DE MONTFAUCON, monachi ordinis S. Benedicti e congregatione S. Mauri, opem ferentibus aliis ex codem sodalitio, monachis. Greek and Latin, Paris, 1718-'38, in 13 vols., fol. This is the best edition, and the result of about twenty years of the patient labor of Montfaucon (d. Dec. 21, 1741, 86 years old), and several assistants of the brotherhood of St. Maur. More than three hundred Mss. were made use of, but the eight principal Mss., as Field has shown, were not very carefully collated. Montfaucon, who at the date of the completion of his edition was 83 years old, prepared valuable prefaces to every treatise and set of homilies, arranged the works in chronological order, and added in vol. XIII. learned dissertations on the life, doctrine, discipline and heresies of the age of Chrysostom.

The Benedictine edition was reprinted at Venice, 1734-'41, in 13 vols. fol.; at Paris, ed. by F. DE SINNER (GAUME), 1834-'39, in 13 vols. (an elegant edition, with some additions); and, with various improvements and corrections, by J. P. Migne, Petit-Montrouge, 1859-'63, in 13 vols. The last is the most complete edition, but inferior in paper and type to that of Gaume. Migne uses the critical text of Field in Matthew and the Pauline Epp. He had previously edited a Latin Version, 1842, in 9 vols.

The edition of Sir Henry Saville (Provost of Eton). Etonæ, 1612, in 8 vols. fol., is less complete than the Benedictine edition, but gives a more correct Greek text (as was shown by F. Dübner from a collation of manuscripts) and valuable notes. Savile personally examined the libraries of Europe and spent £8,000 on his edition. His wife was so jealous of his devotion to Chrysostom that she threatened to burn his manuscripts.

The edition of FRONTON LE DUC, a French Jesuit, and the two brothers, FREDERICK and CLAUDE MOREL, was published at Paris, 1636, in 12 vols. fol., Greek and Latin.

A selection of Chrysostom's works (Opera præstantissima) in Greek and Latin, was edited by T. G. LOM-LER, Rudolphopoli (Rudolstadt), 1840 (unfinished).

The best edition of the Greek text of the Homilies on Matthew, and all the Pauline Epistles is by Dr. FREDERICK FIELD, of the Church of England (d. 1883), in the "Bibliotheea Patrum Ecclesia Orientalis qui ante Orientis et Occidentis schisma floruerunt." The Homilies on Matthew appeared at Cambridge, 1839, 3 vols.; the Homilies on the Epistles of Paul and the Hebrews, Oxford, 1839-'62, in 7 vols.

The treatise De Sacerdotio (περί Ιερωσίνης) was separately edited by Erasmus in Greek (Basel, 1525, from the press of Frobenius), by J. Hughes, in Greek and Latin (Cambridge, 1710), and by J. A. Bengel, the commentator, in Greek (Stuttgart, 1725, and repeatedly reprinted since at Leipzig, 1825, 1834, 1872, by C. Tauchnitz). Lomler (Chrys. Opera, pp. viii. and ix.) enumerates twenty-three separate editions and translations of the treatise on the Priesthood.

11. TRANSLATIONS .- (a) GERMAN TRANSLATIONS.

The treatise on the Priesthood has been translated by Hasselbach, 1820; Ritter, 1821, and others. The Bibliothek der Kirchenväter (Rom. Cath.), published at Kempten in Bavaria, devotes ten small volumes to St. Chrysostom, including the Priesthood, ascetic Treatises, and Homilies, translated by John Chrysostomus Mitternutzner, 1869–184. German translations of selected Homilies by J. A. Cramer (Leipzig, 1748–151, 10 vols.); Feder (Augsburg, 1786); Ph. Mayer (Nurnberg, 1830); W. Arnoldi (Trier, 1835); Augusti (Predigten der Kirchenväter, vols. I. and II., Leipzig, 1839); Jos. Luuz (Tübingen, 2d ed. 1859); Gust. Leon-Hardi (Leipzig, 1888, selected sermons and orations, in vol I. of Klassikerbibliothek der Christl. Predigtliteratur).

(b) ENGLISH TRANSLATIONS.

The work on the Priesthood was translated by Hollier (London, 1728); Bunce (London, 1759); Hohler (Cambridge, 1837); Marsii (London, 1844); Harris Cowper (London, 1866); and Stephens (N. York, 1888, prepared for this "Library").

The Homiües on the Statues and on the New Testament were translated by several scholars for the "Oxford Library of the Fathers," 1839-'77, 16 vols. The earlier parts (on the First Epistle to the Corinthians, and on the Statues) are based on the text of Montfaucon and Savile, the later parts on the improved text of Field. The Oxford translation has been revised and annotated by American scholars for this "Library," and new translations of other works of St. Chrysostom have been added, namely, the treatise on the Priesthood, the Exhortation to the fallen Theodore, Letters, Tracts, and Special Homilies (in this first volume).

III. BIOGRAPHIES AND ESSAYS.

PALLADIUS (a friend of Chrysostom and bishop of Helenopolis in Bithynia, author of the Historia Lausiaca; according to others a different person): Dialogus historicus de vita et conversatione beati Joannis Chrysostomi cum Theodoro ecclesiæ Romanæ diacono (in the Bened. edition of the Opera, tom. xiii. pp. 1-89; in MIGNE's ed., tom. i., Pars prior, 5-84, in Greek and Latin). HIERONYMUS: De viris illustribus, c. 129 (a very brief notice, mentioning only the work De Sacerdotio). Socrates: Hist. Eccl. VI., 3-21. Sozomen: Hist. Eccl. VIII. 2-23. THEODORET: Hist, Eccl. V. 27-36. B. DE MONTFAUCON: Vita Joannis Chrysost. (in his edition of the Opera, tom, xiii, 91-178; in MIGNE, I.I. 84-264): Testimonia Veterum de S. Joann. Chrys. scriptis, ibid. tom. xiii. 256-292. TILLEMONT: Mémoires, vol. XI. pp. 1-405, 547-626 (exceedingly minute and accurate from the works of Chrys.). F. STILTING: Acta Sanctorum, Sept. 14 (the day of Chrysostom's death), tom. iv. pp. 401-709; comp. STILTING'S Compendium chronologicum gestorum et scriptorum S. Joh. Chrys., in MIGNE, tom. i. 264-272. ALBAN BUTLER: Lives of Saints, sub. Jan. 27 (the day of the translation of the remains of Chrys.). W. CAVE: Lives of the Fathers, vol. III. p. 237 sqq. J. A. FABRICIUS: Biblioth Gr., tom, viii. 454 sqq. Schröckh: Kirchengeschichte, vol. X. p. 309 sqq. Gibbon: Decline and Fall, ch. xxxii. (a brilliant and appreciative sketch). NEANDER: Der heilige Chrysostomus, 1821-'22, in 3 vols., second ed. 1832, third ed. Berlin, 1848, in 2 vols. (English translation of the same by J. C. Stapleton, vol. I., London, 1838, unfinished). The best monograph in the German language. Neander represents Chrysostom as a type of the Johannean tendency among the Fathers, as distinct from Augustin, the strongest type of the Pauline tendency. He gives a full account of the opinions and religious life of Chrysostom, but without a clear picture of his personality. (HASE says: "Neander hat uns das Lebensbild des Chrys, aufgestellt als ein Herzensverwandter, doch nicht ohne einige Abschwächung seiner Kraft und seines Gegensatzes zur Regierung." K. Gesch. I. 511.) J. PETTERSSON: Chrys. homileta, Lund, 1833. C. DATT: S. Jean Chrys. comme prédicateur, Strassb., 1837. A. F. VILLEMAIN: Tableau de l'éloquence chrétienne au quatrième siècle, Paris, 1849, new ed. 1857. Perthes: Life of Chrysostom, Boston, 1854. P. Albert: St. Jean Chrysostome considéré comme orateur populaire, Paris, 1858. Abbé E. Mar-TIN: Saint Jean Chrysostome, ses œuvres et son siècle, Montpellier and Paris, 1861, 3 vols. Abbé ROCHET: Histoire de S. Jean Chrysostome, Paris, 1866, 2 vols. AMÉDÉE THIERRY: St. Chrysostome et l'imperatrice Eudoxie, 2d ed., Paris, 1874 (originally in the " Revue des deux Mondes"). Böhringer: Johann Chrysostomus und Olympias, in "Kirchengesch. in Biogr.," vol. IX. new ed. 1876. TH. FÖRSTER: Chrysostomus in seinem Verhältniss zur Antiochenischen Schule, Gotha, 1869. W. MAGGILORY: John of the Golden Mouth, Lond. 1871. W. R. W. STEPHENS: St. John Chrysostom, his Life and Times, London, 1872, 2d ed. 1880, 3rd ed. 1883 (the best biography of Chr.). R. W. Bush, Life and Times of Chrysostom, London, Rel. Tract Soc., 1885.

Canon E. VENABLES: in "Smith and Wace," I. 518-535 (a very good sketch). C. Burk: in Herzog, 2d ed.,

III. 225-231. E. DANDIRAN: in LIGHTENBERGER'S "Encyclopédie," etc., III. 165-176. SCHAFF: Church Hist. III. 702 sqq., 933 sqq., 1036 sq. HASE: Kirchengesch. (Vorlesungen, 1885), l. 510 sqq. F. W. FARRAR: Lives of the Fathers, London, 1889, Vol. II. 460-527.

CHAPTER II.—Chrysostom's Youth and Training, A.D. 347-370.

"Almighty God, who hast given us grace at this time with one accord to make our common supplications unto Thee; and doest promise, that when two or three are gathered together in Thy name Thou wilt grant their requests: fulfil now, O Lord, the desires and petitions of Thy servants, as may be most expedient for them; granting us in this world knowledge of Thy truth, and in the world to come life everlasting, Amen."

This beautiful and comprehensive prayer, which is translated from the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom, has made his name a household word wherever the Anglican Liturgy is known and used.

John, surnamed Chrysostom (Ἰωάννης Χρυσώστωμως) is the greatest pulpit orator and commentator of the Greek Church, and still deservedly enjoys the highest honor in the whole Christian world. No one of the Oriental Fathers has left a more spotless reputation; no one is so much read and so often quoted by modern preachers and commentators. An admiring posterity, since the close of the fifth century, has given him the surname Chrysostom (The Golden Mouth), which has entirely superseded his personal name John, and which best expresses the general estimate of his merits.

His life may be divided into five periods: (1) His youth and training till his conversion and baptism, A.D. 347-370. (2) His ascetic and monastic life, 370-381. (3) His public life as priest and preacher at Antioch, 381-398. (4) His episcopate at Constantinople, 398-404. (5) His exile to his death, 404-407.

John (the name by which alone he is known among contemporary writers and his first biographers) was born in 347,2 at Antioch, the capital of Syria, and the home of the mother church of Gentile Christianity, where the disciples of Jesus were first called "Christians."

- His father, Secundus, was a distinguished military officer (magister militum) in the imperial army of Syria, and died during the infancy of John, without professing Christianity, as far as we know. His mother, Anthusa, was a rare woman. Left a widow at the age of twenty, she refused all offers of marriage, and devoted herself exclusively to the education of her only son and his older sister. She was probably from principle averse to a second marriage, according to a prevailing view of the Fathers. She shines, with Nonna and Monica, among the most pious mothers of the fourth century, who prove the ennobling influence of Christianity on the character of woman, and through her on all the family relations. Anthusa gained general esteem by her exemplary life. The famous advocate of heathenism, Libanius, on hearing of her consistency and devotion, felt constrained to exclaim: "Bless me! what wonderful women there are among the Christians." ³

She gave her son an admirable education, and early planted in his soul the germs of piety, which afterwards bore the richest fruits for himself and the church. By her admonitions and the teachings of the Bible, he was secured against the seductions of heathenism.

^{} See the Greek original of this collect in Chrysostom's Liturgy, in Migne's edition, Tom. xii. 908; Daniel's Codex Liturgicus, tom. iv.; Fasc, II. p. 343 (comp. the foot-note in tom. iii. 358); and Fa. Proctee's History of the Book of Common Prayer (11th ed. 1874), p. 245 90. The precise origin of this prayer is uncertain. It does not occur in the oldest Mass, of Chrysostom's Liturgy, but in those of the Liturgy of St. Basil. It precedes the third anthem in the communion service, and was used since the ninth century or earlier in the exarchate of Cæsarea and the patriarchate of Constantinople. In the Oriental churches the prayer is said silently by the priest. See Birkenko, The Offices of the Oriental Church, p. 43. In the Anglican Church, it was placed at the end of the Litany (by Cranmer), in 1544, and at the close of the daily Morning and Evening Prayer in 1661. In the English Homilies (Hom. I.), Chrysostom is called "that godly clerk and great preacher."

² So Montfaucon, Tillemont, Neander, Stephens, Venables, and others. Baur (Vorlesungen über die Dogmengeschichte, Bd. I. Abthlg. II., p. 50) and others erroneously state the year 354 or 355, Villemain assigns the year 344 as that of his birth.

³ Βαβαί, οίαι παρά χριστιανοίς γυναϊκές είσι. Chrysostom himself relates this of his heathen teacher (hy whom, undoubtedly, we are to understand Libanius), though, it is true, with immediate reference only to the twenty years' widowhood of his mother, and adds: "Such is the praise and admiration of widowhood not only with us, but even with the heathen." Ad viduam juniorem (Opera, Bened, ed. Tom, i, 340; in Micros's ed. Tom, i., P. II., 601).

Yet he was not baptized till he had reached the age of maturity. In that age of transition from heathenism to Christianity, the number of adult baptisms far exceeded that of infant baptisms. Hence the large baptisteries for the baptism of crowds of converts; hence the many sermons and lectures of Chrysostom, Cyril of Jerusalem and other preachers to catechumens, and their careful instruction before baptism and admission to the Missa Fidelium or the holy communion. Even Christian parents, as the father and mother of Gregory Nazianzen, the mother of Chrysostom, and the mother of Augustin, put off the baptism of their offspring, partly no doubt from a very high conception of baptism as the sacrament of regeneration, and the superstitious fear that early baptism involved the risk of a forfeiture of baptismal grace. This was the argument which Tertullian in the second century urged against infant baptism, and this was the reason why many professing Christians put off their baptism till the latest hour; just as now so many from the same motive delay repentance and conversion to their death-bed. Chrysostom often rebukes that custom. The Emperor Constantine who favored Christianity as early as 312, and convened the Council of Nicæa in 325, postponed baptism till 337, shortly before his death. The orthodox Emperor Theodosius the Great was not baptized till the first year of his reign (380), when attacked by a serious illness.

Chrysostom received his literary training chiefly from Libanius, the admirer and friend of Julian the Apostate, and the first classical scholar and rhetorician of his age, who after a long career as public teacher at Athens and Constantinople, returned to his native Antioch and had the misfortune to outlive the revival of heathenism under Julian and to lament the triumph of Christianity under his successors. He was introduced by him into a knowledge of the Greek classics and the arts of rhetoric, which served him a good purpose for his future labors in the church. He was his best scholar, and when Libanius, shortly before his death (about 393), was asked whom he wished for his successor, he replied: "John, if only the Christians had not stolen him from us." ¹

After the completion of his studies Chrysostom became a rhetorician, and began the profitable practice of law, which opened to him a brilliant political career. The amount of litigation was enormous. The display of talent in the law-courts was the high-road to the dignities of vice-prefect, prefect, and consul. Some of his speeches at the bar excited admiration and were highly commended by Libanius. For some time, as he says, he was "a neverfailing attendant at the courts of law, and passionately fond of the theatre." But he was not satisfied. The temptations of a secular profession in a corrupt state of society discouraged him. To accept a fee for making the worse cause appear the better cause, seemed to him to be taking Satan's wages.

CHAPTER III.—His Conversion and Ascetic Life.

The quiet study of the Scriptures, the example of his pious mother, the acquaintance with Bishop Meletius, and the influence of his intimate friend Basil, who was of the same age and devoted to ascetic life, combined to produce a gradual change in his character.²

He entered the class of catechumens, and after the usual period of three years of instruction and probation, he was baptized by Meletius in his twenty-third year (369 or 370). From this time on, says Palladius, "he neither swore, nor defamed any one, nor spoke falsely, nor cursed, nor even tolerated facetious jokes." His baptism was, as in the case of St. Augustin, the turning point in his life, an entire renunciation of this world and dedication to the service of Christ. The change was radical and permanent.

Meletius, who foresaw the future greatness of the young lawyer, wished to secure him for the active service of the church, and ordained him to the subordinate office of lector (anagnostes, reader), about A.D. 370. The lectors had to read the Scripture lessons in the first part of divine service (the "Missa Catechumenorum"), and to call upon the people to pray, but could not preach nor distribute the sacraments.

SOZOMEN, Ch. Hist., VIII. 2.

² SOCRATES and Kurtz (in the 10th edition of his Kirchengeschichte, I. 223), confound this Basil with Basil the Great of Cappados, who was eighteen years older than Chrysostom and died in 379. Chrysostom's friend was probably (as Baronius and Montfaucon conjecture) identical with Basil, bishop of Raphanea in Syria, near Antioch, who attended the Council of Constantinople in 381. Comp. STEPMENS, I. c. p. 14; and VEXABLES in Smith & Wace, I. 297.

The first inclination of Chrysostom after baptism was to adopt the monastic life as the safest mode, according to the prevailing notions of the church in that age, to escape the temptations and corruptions of the world, to cultivate holiness and to secure the salvation of the soul. But the earnest entreaties of his mother prevailed on him to delay the gratification of his desire. He relates the scene with dramatic power. She took him to her chamber, and by the bed where she had given him birth, she adjured him with tears not to forsake her. "My son," she said in substance, "my only comfort in the midst of the miseries of this earthly life is to see thee constantly, and to behold in thy features the faithful image of my beloved husband who is no more. This comfort commenced with your infancy before you could speak. I ask only one favor from you: do not make me a widow a second time: wait at least till I die; perhaps I shall soon leave this world. When you have buried me and joined my ashes with those of your father, nothing will then prevent you from retiring into monastic life. But as long as I breathe, support me by your presence, and do not draw down upon you the wrath of God by bringing such evils upon me who have given you no offence."

These tender, simple and impressive words suggest many heart-rending scenes caused by the ascetic enthusiasm for separation from the sacred ties of the family. It is honorable to Chrysostom that he yielded to the reasonable wishes of his devoted mother. He remained at home, but turned his home into a monastery. He secluded himself from the world and practised a rigid asceticism. He ate little and seldom, and only the plainest food, slept on the bare floor and frequently rose to prayer. He kept almost unbroken silence to prevent a relapse into the habit of slander.

His former associates at the bar called him unsociable and morose. But two of his fellow-pupils under Libanius joined him in his ascetic life, Maximus (afterwards bishop of Seleucia), and Theodore of Mopsuestia. They studied the Scriptures under the direction of Diodorus (afterwards bishop of Tarsus), the founder of the Antiochian school of theology, of which Chrysostom and Theodore became the chief ornaments.

Theodore was warmly attached to a young lady named Hermione, and resolved to marry and to leave the ascetic brotherhood. This gave rise to the earliest treatise of Chrysostom—namely, an exhortation to Theodore, in two letters.¹ He plied all his oratorical arts of sad sympathy, tender entreaty, bitter reproach, and terrible warning, to reclaim his friend to what he thought the surest and safest way to heaven. To sin, he says, is human, but to persist in sin is devilish; to fall is not ruinous to the soul, but to remain on the ground is. The appeal had its desired effect; Theodore resumed his monastic life and became afterwards bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia and one of the first biblical scholars. The arguments which Chrysostom used, would condemn all who broke their monastic vows. They retain moral force only if we substitute apostasy from faith for apostasy from monasticism, which must be regarded as a temporary and abnormal or exceptional form of Christian life.

CHAPTER IV.—Chrysostom evades Election to a Bishopric, and writes his Work on the Priesthood.

About this time several bishoprics were vacant in Syria, and frequent depositions took

De Sacerd, I. 5.

^{*} Socrates and Sozomenus represent Diodor and Karterius as abbots under whom Chrysostom lived as menk, but Neander (in the 3d ed. I. 29) thinks it more likely that Chrysostom was previously instructed by Diodor at Antioch.

³ Paranesis ad Theodorum Lapsum, in Migne's ed. 1., Pars 1, 277-319. The second letter is milder than the first, and was only is addressed to Theodore.

NEANDER (1, 38 sq.) conjectures that the second only is addressed to Theodore.

place with the changing fortunes of orthodoxy and Arianism, and the interference of the court. The attention of the clergy and the people turned to Chrysostom and his friend Basil as suitable candidates for the episcopal office, although they had not the canonical age of thirty. Chrysostom shrunk from the responsibilities and avoided an election by a pious fraud. He apparently assented to an agreement with Basil that both should either accept, or resist the burden of the episcopate, but instead of that he concealed himself and put forward his friend whom he accounted much more worthy of the honor. Basil, under the impression that Chrysostom had already been consecrated, reluctantly submitted to the election. When he discovered the cheat, he upbraided his friend with the breach of compact, but Chrysostom laughed and rejoiced at the success of his plot. This conduct, which every sound Christian conscience must condemn, caused no offense among the Christians of that age, still less among the heathen, and was regarded as good management or "economy." The moral character of the deception was supposed to depend altogether on the motive, which made it good or bad. Chrysostom appealed in justification of laudable deception to the stratagems of war, the conduct of physicians in dealing with refractory patients, to several examples of the Old Testament (Abraham, Jacob, David), and to the conduct of the Apostle Paul in circumcising Timothy for the sake of the Jews (Acts xvi. 3) and in observing the ceremonial law in Jerusalem at the advice of James (Acts xxi. 26).

The Jesuitical maxim, "the end justifies the means," is much older than Jesuitism, and runs through the whole apocryphal, pseudo-prophetic, pseudo-apostolic, pseudo-Clementine and pseudo-Isidorian literature of the early centuries. Several of the best Fathers show a surprising want of a strict sense of veracity. They introduce a sort of cheat even into their strange theory of redemption, by supposing that the Devil caused the crucifixion under the delusion that Christ was a mere man, and thus lost his claim upon the fallen race. Origen, Chrysostom, and Jerome explain the offense of the collision between Paul and Peter at Antioch (Gal. ii. 11 sqq.) away by turning it into a theatrical and hypocritical farce, which was shrewdly arranged by the two apostles for the purpose of convincing the Jewish Christians that circumcision was not necessary. Against such wretched exegesis the superior moral sense of Augustin rightly protested, and Jerome changed his view on this particular passage. Here is a point where the modern standard of ethics is far superior to that of the Fathers, and more fully accords with the spirit of the New Testament, which inculcates the strictest veracity as a fundamental virtue.

The escape from the episcopate was the occasion for one of the best and most popular works of Chrysostom, the Six Books On the Priesthood, which he wrote probably before his ordination (between 375 and 381), or during his diaconate (between 381 and 386). It is composed in the form of a Platonic dialogue between Chrysostom and Basil. He first vindicates by argument and examples his well-meant but untruthful conduct towards his friend, and the advantages of timely fraud; and then describes with youthful fervor and eloquence the importance, duties and trials of the Christian ministry, without distinguishing between the priestly and the episcopal office. He elevates it above all other offices. He requires whole-souled consecration to Christ and love to his flock. He points to the Scriptures (quoting also from the Apocrypha) as the great weapon of the minister. He assumes, as may be expected, the then prevailing conception of a real priesthood and sacrifice, baptismal regeneration, the corporal presence, the virtue of absolution, prayers for the dead, but is silent about pope and councils, the orders of the clergy, prayers to saints, forms of prayer, priestly vestments, incense, crosses and other doctrines and ceremonies of the Greek and Roman churches.

² Comp. on the patristic views of accommodation, Neander, Geschichte der Christl. Ethik., p. 156 sqq.; and Wuttke, Christl. Sittenichre, 3d ed. vol. II., 325 sq. Canon Vernelles of Lincoln (in Smith & Wace, I. 519 sq.) justly condemns Chrysostom's conduct on this occasion "as utterly at variance with the principles of truth and honor."

He holds up St. Paul as a model for imitation. The sole object of the preacher must be to please God rather than men (Gal. i. 10). "He must not indeed despise approving demonstrations, but as little must he court them, nor trouble himself when they are withheld." He should combine the qualities of dignity and humility, authority and sociability, impartiality and courtesy, independence and lowliness, strength and gentleness, and keep a single eye to the glory of Christ and the welfare of the church.

This book is the most useful or at least the best known among the works of Chrysostom, and is well calculated to inspire a profound sense of the tremendous responsibilities of the ministry. But it has serious defects, besides the objectionable justification of pious fraud, and cannot satisfy the demands of an evangelical minister. In all that pertains to the proper care of souls it is inferior to the "Reformed Pastor" of Richard Baxter.

CHAPTER V.— Chrysostom as a Monk. A.D. 374-381.

After the death of his mother, Chrysostom fled from the seductions and tumults of city life to the monastic solitude of the mountains south of Antioch, and there spent six happy years in theological study and sacred meditation and prayer. Monasticism was to him (as to many other great teachers of the church, and even to Luther) a profitable school of spiritual experience and self-government. He embraced this mode of life as "the true philosophy" from the purest motives, and brought into it intellect and cultivation enough to make the seclusion available for moral and spiritual growth.

He gives us a lively description of the bright side of this monastic life. The monks lived in separate cells or huts $(xi\lambda v_0 \beta ut)$, but according to a common rule and under the authority of an abbot. They wore coarse garments of camel's hair or goat's hair over their linen tunics. They rose before sunrise, and began the day by singing a hymn of praise and common prayer under the leadership of the abbot. Then they went to their allotted task, some to read, others to write, others to manual labor for the support of the poor. Four hours in each day were devoted to prayer and singing. Their only food was bread and water, except in case of sickness. They slept on straw couches, free from care and anxiety. There was no need of bolts and bars. They held all things in common, and the words of "mine and thine," which cause innumerable strifes in the world, were unknown among the brethren. If one died, he caused no lamentation, but thanksgiving, and was carried to the grave amidst hymns of praise; for he was not dead, but "perfected," and permitted to behold the face of Christ. For them to live was Christ, and to die was gain.

Chrysostom was an admirer of active and useful monasticism, and warns against the dangers of idle contemplation. He shows that the words of our Lord, "One thing is needful;" "Take no anxious thought for the morrow;" "Labor not for the meat that perisheth," do not inculcate total abstinence from work, but only undue anxiety about worldly things, and must be harmonized with the apostolic exhortation to labor and to do good. He defends monastic seclusion on account of the prevailing immorality in the cities, which made it almost impossible to cultivate there a higher Christian life.

In this period, from 374 to 381, Chrysostom composed his earliest writings in praise of monasticism and celibacy.² The letters "to the fallen Theodore," have already been mentioned. The three books against the Opponents of Monasticism were occasioned by a decree of the Arian Emperor Valens in 373, which aimed at the destruction of that system and compelled the monks to discharge their duties to the state by military or civil service. Chrysostom regarded this decree as a sacrilege, and the worst kind of persecution.

¹ On the origin and character of early monasticism, see Schaff, Ch. Hist. vol. III., 147 sqq.

² In the first volume, first part, of MIGNE's edition, col. 277-532.

CHAPTER VI.—Chrysostom as Deacon, Priest and Preacher at Antioch. A.D. 381-398.

By excessive self-mortifications John undermined his health, and returned to Antioch. There he was immediately ordained deacon by Meletius in 380 or 381, and a few years afterwards presbyter by Flavian (386).

As deacon he had the best opportunity to become acquainted with the practical needs of the population, the care of the poor and the sick. After his ordination to the priesthood he preached in the presence of the bishop his first sermon to a vast crowd. It abounds in flowery Asiatic eloquence, in humble confession of his own unworthiness, and exaggerated praise of Meletius and Flavian.

He now entered upon a large field of usefulness, the real work of his life. The pulpit was his throne, and he adorned it as much as any preacher of ancient or modern times.

Antioch was one of the great capitals of the Roman empire along with Alexandria, Constantinople, and Rome. Nature and art combined to make it a delightful residence, though it was often visited by inundations and earthquakes. An abundance of pure water from the river Orontes, a large lake and the surrounding hills, fertile plains, the commerce of the sea, imposing buildings of Asiatic, Greek, and Roman architecture, rich gardens, baths, and colonnaded streets, were among its chief attractions. A broad street of four miles, built by Antiochus Epiphanes, traversed the city from east to west; the spacious colonnades on either side were paved with red granite. Innumerable lanterns illuminated the main thoroughfares at night. The city was supplied with good schools and several churches; the greatest of them, in which Chrysostom preached, was begun by the Emperor Constantine and finished by Constantius. The inhabitants were Syrians, Greeks, Jews, and Romans. The Asiatic element prevailed. The whole population amounted, as Chrysostom states, to 200,000, of whom one half were nominally Christians. Heathenism was therefore still powerful as to numbers, but as a religion it had lost all vitality. This was shown by the failure of the attempt of the Emperor Julian the Apostate to revive the sacrifices to the gods. When he endeavored in 362 to restore the oracle of Apollo Daphneus in the famous cypress grove at Antioch and arranged for a magnificent procession, with libation, dances, and incense, he found in the temple one solitary old priest, and this priest ominously offered in sacrifice—a goose! Iulian himself relates this ludicrous farce, and vents his anger at the Antiochians for squandering the rich incomes of the temple upon Christianity and worldly amusements.

Chrysostom gives us in his sermons lively pictures of the character of the people and the condition of the church. The prevailing vices even among Christians were avarice, luxury, sensuality, and excessive love of the circus and the theatre. "So great," he says, "is the depravity of the times, that if a stranger were to compare the precepts of the gospel with the actual practice of society, he would infer that men were not the disciples, but the enemies of Christ." Gibbon thus describes the morals of Antioch: "The warmth of the climate disposed the natives to the most intemperate enjoyment of tranquility and opulence, and the lively licentiousness of the Greeks was blended with the hereditary softness of the Syrians. Fashion was the only law, pleasure the only pursuit, and the splendor of dress and furniture was the only distinction of the citizens of Antioch. The arts of luxury were honored, the serious and manly virtues were the subject of ridicule, and the contempt for female modesty and reverent age announced the universal corruption of the capital of the East. The love of spectacles was the taste, or rather passion of the Syrians; the most skilful artists were procured from the adjacent cities. A considerable share of the revenue was devoted to the public amusements, and the magnificence of the games of the theatre and circus was considered as the happiness and as the glory of Antioch."

The church of Antioch was rent for eighty-five years (330-415) by heresy and schism. There were three parties and as many rival bishops. The Meletians, under the lead of Meletius, were the party of moderate orthodoxy holding the Nicene Creed; the Arians, headed by Eudoxius, and supported by the Emperor Valens, denied the eternal divinity of Christ; the Eustathians, under the venerated priest Paulinus, were in communion with Athanasius, but were accused of Sabellianism, which maintained the Divine unity and strict deity of Christ and the Holy Spirit, but denied the tri-personality except in the form of three modes of self-revelation. Pope Damasus declared for Paulinus and condemned Meletius as a heretic. Alexandria likewise sided against him. Meletius was more than once banished from his see, and recalled. He died during the sessions of the Council of Constantinople, 381, over which he presided for a while. His remains were carried with great solemnities to Antioch and buried by the side of Babylas the Martyr. Chrysostom reconciled Flavian, the successor of Meletius, with Alexandria and Rome in 398. Alexander, the successor of Flavian, led the Eustathians back into the orthodox church in 415, and thus unity was restored.

Chrysostom preached Sunday after Sunday and during Lent, sometimes twice or oftener during the week, even five days in succession, on the duties and responsibilities of Christians, and fearlessly attacked the immorality of the city. He declaimed with special severity against the theatre and the chariot-races; and yet many of his hearers would run from his sermons to the circus to witness those exciting spectacles with the same eagerness as Jews and Gentiles. He exemplified his preaching by a blameless life, and soon acquired great reputation and won the love of the whole congregation. Whenever he preached the church was crowded. He had to warn his hearers against pickpockets, who found an inviting harvest in these dense audiences.

A serious disturbance which took place during his career at Antioch, called forth a remarkable effort of his oratorical powers. The populace of the city, provoked by excessive taxes, rose in revolt against the Emperor Theodosius the Great, broke down his statues and those of his deceased excellent wife Flacilla (d. 385) and his son Arcadius, dragged the fragments through the streets, and committed other acts of violence. The Emperor threatened to destroy the whole city. This caused general consternation and agony, but the city was saved by the intercession of Bishop Flavian, who in his old age proceeded to Constantinople and secured free pardon from the Emperor. Although a man of violent temper, Theodosius had profound reverence for bishops, and on another occasion he submitted to the rebuke of St. Ambrose for the wholesale massacre of the Thessalonians (390).

In this period of public anxiety, which lasted several months, Chrysostom delivered a series of extempore orations, in which he comforted the people and exhorted them to correct their vices. These are his twenty-one Homilies on the Statues, so-called from the overthrow of the imperial statues which gave rise to them. They were preached during Lent 387. In the same year St. Augustin submitted to baptism at the hands of St. Ambrose in Milan. One of the results of those sermons was the conversion of a large number of heathens. Thus the calamity was turned into a blessing to the church.

During the sixteen or seventeen years of his labors in Antioch Chrysostom wrote the greater part of his Homilies and Commentaries; a consolatory Epistle to the despondent Stagirius; the excellent book on the martyr Babylas, which illustrates by a striking example the divine power of Christianity; a treatise on Virginity, which he puts above marriage; and an admonition to a young widow on the glory of widowhood, and the duty of continuing in it.

¹ Montfaucon goes with tedious minuteness into the chronology of these sermons. The twentieth was delivered ten days before Easter, the twenty-first on Easter, after the return of Flavian from Rome with the Emperor's pardon. The first sermon was preached shortly before the sedition and has nothing to do with it, but is alluded to in the second. It is a temperance sermon, based on Paul's advice to Timothy, 1 Tim. v. 23, where he emphasizes the word "little" and the "often infirmities."

He disapproved of second marriage, not as sinful or illegal, but as inconsistent with an ideal conception of marriage and a high order of piety.'

CHAPTER VII.—Chrysostom as Patriarch of Constantinople. A.D. 398-404.

After the death of Nectarius (successor to Gregory Nazianzen), towards the end of the year 397, Chrysostom was chosen, entirely without his own agency and even against his remonstrance, archbishop of Constantinople. He was hurried away from Antioch by a military escort, to avoid a commotion in the congregation and to make resistance useless. He was consecrated Feb. 26, 398, by his enemy Theophilus, patriarch of Alexandria, who reluctantly yielded to the command of the Emperor Arcadius or rather his prime minister, the eunuch Eutropius, and nursed his revenge for a more convenient season.

Constantinople, built by Constantine the Great in 330, on the site of Byzantium, assumed as the Eastern capital of the Roman empire the first position among the episcopal sees of the East, and became the centre of court theology, court intrigues, and theological controversies. The second œcumenical council, which was held there in 381, under Theodosius the Great, the last Roman emperor worthy of the name (d. 395), decided the victory of Nicene orthodoxy over the Arian heresy, and gave the bishop of Constantinople a primacy of honor, next in rank to the bishop of old Rome—a position which was afterwards confirmed by the Council of Chalcedon in 451, but disputed by Pope Leo and his successors.

Chrysostom soon gained by his eloquent sermons the admiration of the people, of the weak Emperor Arcadius, and, at first, even of his wife Eudoxia, with whom he afterwards waged a deadly war. He extended his pastoral care to the Goths who were becoming numerous in Constantinople, had a part of the Bible translated for them, often preached to them himself through an interpreter, and sent missionaries to the Gothic and Scythian tribes on the Danube. He continued to direct by correspondence those missionary operations even during his exile. For a short time he enjoyed the height of power and popularity.

But he also made enemies by his denunciations of the vices and follies of the clergy and aristocracy. He emptied the episcopal palace of its costly plate and furniture and sold it for the benefit of the poor and the hospitals. He introduced his strict ascetic habits and reduced the luxurious household of his predecessors to the strictest simplicity. He devoted his large income to benevolence. He refused invitations to banquets, gave no dinner parties, and ate the simplest fare in his solitary chamber.2 He denounced unsparingly luxurious habits in eating and dressing, and enjoined upon the rich the duty of almsgiving to an extent that tended to increase rather than diminish the number of beggars who swarmed in the streets and around the churches and public baths. He disciplined the vicious clergy and opposed the perilous and immoral habit of unmarried priests of living under the same roof with "spiritual sisters" (συνείσακται). This habit dated from an earlier age, and was a reaction against celibacy. Cyprian had raised his protest against it, and the Council of Nicæa forbade unmarried priests to live with any females except close relations. Chrysostom's unpopularity was increased by his irritability and obstinacy, and his subservience to a proud and violent archdeacon, Serapion. The Empress Eudoxia was jealous of his influence over Arcadius and angry at his uncompromising severity against sin and vice. She became the chief instrument of his downfall,

The occasion was furnished by an unauthorized use of his episcopal power beyond the lines of his diocese, which was confined to the city. At the request of the clergy of Ephesus and the neighboring bishops, he visited that city in January, 401, held a synod and deposed six bishops convicted of shameful simony. During his absence of several months he left the

I NEANDER (vol. I.) gives large extracts from these ascetic treatises with many judicious and discriminating observations.

² SOCRATES (VI. 5) says that some justified this habit by his delicate stomach and weak digestion, others attributed it to his rigid abstinence. His enemies construed it as pride, and based upon it a serious accusation.

episcopate of Constantinople in the hands of Severian, bishop of Gabala, an unworthy and adroit flatterer, who basely betrayed his trust and formed a cabal headed by the empress and her licentious court ladies, for the ruin of Chrysostom. On his return he used unguarded language in the pulpit, and spoke on Elijah's relation to Jezebel in such a manner that Eudoxia understood it as a personal insult. The clergy were anxious to get rid of a bishop who was too severe for their lax morals.

CHAPTER VIII.— Chrysostom and Theophilus. His first Deposition and Banishment.

At this time Chrysostom became involved in the Origenistic controversies which are among the most violent and most useless in ancient church history, and full of personal invective and calumny.¹ The object in dispute was the orthodoxy of the great Origen, which long after his death was violently defended and as violently assailed.

Theophilus of Alexandria, an able and vigorous but domineering, contentious and unscrupulous prelate, was at first an admirer of Origen, but afterwards in consequence of a personal quarrel joined the opponents, condemned his memory and banished the Origenistic monks from Egypt. Some fifty of them, including the four "Tall Brethren," so-called on account of their extraordinary stature, fled to Constantinople and were hospitably received by Chrysostom (401). He had no sympathy with the philosophical speculations of Origen, but appreciated his great merits, and felt that injustice was done to the persecuted monks. He interceded in their behalf with Theophilus, who replied with indignant remonstrance against protecting heretics and interfering in another diocese.

Theophilus, long desirous of overthrowing Chrysostom, whom he had reluctantly consecrated, set every instrument in motion to take revenge. He sent the octogenarian bishop Epiphanius of Salamis, a well-meaning and learned but bigoted zealot for orthodoxy. to Constantinople, as a tool of his hierarchical plans (402): but Epiphanius soon returned and died on the ship (403). Theophilus now traveled himself to Constantinople, accompanied by a body-guard of rough sailors and provided with splendid presents. He appeared at once as accuser and judge, aided by Eudoxia and the disaffected clergy. He held a secret council of thirty-six bishops, all of them Egyptians except seven, in a suburb of Chalcedon on the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus, and procured in this so-called synod at the Oak, the deposition and banishment of Chrysostom, on false charges of immorality and high treason (403). Among the twenty-nine charges were these: that Chrysostom had called the saintly Epiphanius a fool and a demon, that he abused the clergy, that he received females without witnesses, that he ate sumptuously alone and bathed alone, that he had compared the empress to Jezebel.

The innocent bishop refused to appear before a packed synod of his enemies, and appealed to a general council. As the sentence of banishment for life became known, the indignation of the people was immense. A single word from him would have raised an insurrection: but he surrendered himself freely to the imperial officers, who conveyed him in the dark to the harbor and put him on board a ship destined for Hieron at the mouth of the Pontus. Theophilus entered the city in triumph and took vengeance on Chrysostom's friends.

The people besieged the palace and demanded the restoration of their bishop. Constantinople was almost in a state of insurrection. The following night the city was convulsed by an earthquake, which was felt with peculiar violence in the bedroom of Eudoxia and frightened her into submission. She implored the emperor to avert the wrath of God by recalling Chrysostom. Messengers were despatched with abject apologies to bring him back. A whole fleet of barks put forth to greet him, the Bosphorus blazed with torches and resounded with songs of rejoicing. On passing the gates he was borne aloft by the people to the church, seated in the episcopal chair and forced to make an address. His triumph was complete, but of short duration. Theophilus felt unsafe in Constantinople and abruptly sailed in the night for Alexandria.

SCHAFF, Church History, 111. 698 sqq.

The feelings with which Chrysostom went into his first and second exile, he well describes in a letter to Bishop Cyriacus: "When I was driven from the city, I felt no anxiety, but said to myself: If the empress wishes to banish me, let her do so; 'the earth is the Lord's.' If she wants to have me sawn asunder, I have Isaiah for an example. If she wants me to be drowned in the ocean, I think of Jonah. If I am to be thrown into the fire, the three men in the furnace suffered the same. If cast before wild beasts, I remember Daniel in the lion's den. If she wants me to be stoned, I have before me Stephen, the first martyr. If she demands my head, let her do so; John the Baptist shines before me. Naked I came from my mother's womb, naked shall I leave this world. Paul reminds me, 'If I still pleased men, I would not be the servant of Christ.'"

CHAPTER IX .- Chrysostom and Eudoxia. His second Banishment, A.D. 403.

The restored patriarch and the repentant empress seemed reconciled, and vied with one another in extravagant laudations for two months, when the feud broke out afresh and ended in perpetual exile and death.

Eudoxia was a beautiful, imperious, intriguing and revengeful woman, who despised her husband and indulged her passions. Not content with the virtual rule of the Roman empire, she aspired to semi-divine honors, which used to be paid to the heathen Cæsars. A column of porphyry with her silver statue for public adoration was erected in September, 403, on the forum before the church of St. Sophia, and dedicated amid boisterous and licentious revelry, which disturbed the sacred services.

Chrysostom ascended the pulpit on the commemoration day of the martyrdom of John the Baptist, and thundered his righteous indignation against all who shared in these profane amusements, the people, the prefect, and the haughty woman on the throne. In the heat of his zeal the imprudent words are said to have escaped his lips: "Again Herodias is raging, again she is dancing, again she demands the head of John on a platter." The comparison of Eudoxia with Herodias, and himself (John) with John the Baptist was even more directly personal than his former allusion to the relation of Jezebel and Elijah. Whether he really spoke these or similar words is at least doubtful, but they were reported to Eudoxia, who as a woman and an empress could never forgive such an insult. She demanded from the emperor signal redress. In the conflict of imperial and episcopal authority the former achieved a physical and temporary, the latter a moral and enduring victory.

The enemies of Chrysostom flocked like vultures down to their prey. Theophilus directed the plot from a safe distance. Arcadius was persuaded to issue an order for the removal of Chrysostom. He continued to preach and refused to leave the church over which God had placed him, but had to yield to armed force. He was dragged by imperial guards from the cathedral on the vigil of the resurrection in 404, while the sacrament of baptism was being administered to hundreds of catechumens. "The waters of regeneration," says Palladius, "were stained with blood." The female candidates, half dressed, were driven by licentious soldiers into the dark streets. The eucharistic elements were profaned by pagan hands. The clergy in their priestly robes were ejected and chased through the city. The horrors of that night were long afterwards remembered with a shudder. During the greater part of the Easter week the city was kept in a state of consternation. Private dwellings were invaded, and suspected Joannites—the partisans of Chrysostom—thrown into prison, scourged and tortured. Chrysostom, who was shut up in his episcopal palace, twice narrowly escaped assassination.

¹ According to the report of Socrates, VI. 18, and Sozomenus, VIII. 20. A homily which begins with this exordium: πάλυ 'Πρωθεία μαίνεται, πάλιν ταρασσεται, πάλιν δρχείται, πάλιν ἐπὶ πίνακι τὴν κεφαλὴν τοῦ 'Ισινονο ἔρτεῖ λαβεῖν (comp. Mark vl. 25), is unworthy of his pen and rejected as spurious by Tillemont, Savile and Montfaucon. But it guite probable that Chrysostom made some allusion to Eudoxia which might be construed by his enemies in that way. See Neander, II. 177 sq.

At last on June 5, 404, the timid and long hesitating Arcadius signed the edict of banishment. Chrysostom received it with calm submission, and after a final prayer in the cathedral with some of his faithful bishops, and a tender farewell to his beloved Olympias and her attendant deaconesses, he surrendered himself to the guards and was conveyed at night to the Asiatic shore. He had scarcely left the city, when the cathedral was consumed by fire. The charge of incendiarism was raised against his friends, but neither threats, nor torture and mutilation could elicit a confession of guilt. He refused to acknowledge Arsacius and Atticus as his successors; and this was made a crime punishable with degradation, fine and imprisonment. The clergy who continued faithful to him were deposed and banished. Pope Innocent of Rome was appealed to, pronounced the synod which had condemned Chrysostom irregular, annulled the deposition, and wrote him a letter of sympathy, and urged upon Arcadius the convocation of a general council, but without effect.

CHAPTER X.— Chrysostom in Exile. His Death. A.D. 404-407.

Chrysostom was conveyed under the scorching heat of July and August over Galatia and Cappadocia, to the lonely mountain village Cucusus, on the borders of Cilicia and Armenia, which the wrath of Eudoxia had selected for his exile. The climate was inclement and variable, the winter severe, the place was exposed to Isaurian brigands. He suffered much from fever and headache, and was more than once brought to the brink of the grave. Nevertheless the bracing mountain air invigorated his feeble constitution, and he was hopeful of returning to his diocese. He was kindly treated by the bishop of Cucusus. He received visits, letters and presents from faithful friends, and by his correspondence exerted a wider influence from that solitude than from the episcopal throne.

His 242 extant letters are nearly all from the three years of his exile, and breathe a noble Christian spirit, in a clear, brilliant and persuasive style. They exhibit his faithful care for all the interests of the church and look calmly and hopefully to the glories of heaven. They are addressed to Eastern and Western bishops, presbyters, deacons, deaconesses, monks and missionaries; they describe the fatigues of his journey, give advice on a variety of subjects, strengthen and comfort his distant flock, urge the destruction of heathen temples in Phœnicia, the extirpation of heresy in Cyprus, and encourage the missions in Persia and Scythia.¹ Two letters are addressed to the Roman bishop Innocent I., whose sympathy and assistance he courted. Seventeen letters—the most important of all—are addressed to Olympias, the deaconess, a widow of noble birth, personal beauty and high accomplishments, who devoted her fortune and time to the poor and the sick. She died between 408 and 420. To her he revealed his inner life, upon her virtues he lavished extravagant praise, which offends modern taste as fulsome flattery. For her consolation he wrote a special treatise on the theme that "No one is really injured except by himself."

The cruel empress, stung by disappointment at the continued power of the banished bishop, forbade all correspondence and ordered his transfer by two brutal guards, first to Arabissus, then to Pityus on the Caucasus, the most inhospitable spots in the empire.

The journey of three months on foot was a slow martyrdom to the feeble and sickly old man. He did not reach his destination, but ended his pilgrimage five or six miles from Comana in Pontus in the chapel of the martyr Basiliscus on the 14th of September, 407, in his sixtieth year, the tenth of his episcopate. Clothed in his white baptismal robes, he partook of the eucharist and commended his soul to God. His last words were his accustomed doxology, the motto of his life: "Glory be to God for all things, Amen."

^{*} See Tom. iii. of the Bened. ed. (in Migne, III, 529 sqq.)

² Comp. on Olympias the Mémoirs of TILLEMONT, XI. 416-440; STEPHENS, L. c., 280, 367-373; and VENABLES in Smith & Wace, IV. 73-75. The letters to Olympias and Innocent are also published in LOMLER's selection (pp. 165-252).

He was buried by the side of Basiliscus in the presence of monks and nuns.

He was revered as a saint by the people. Thirty-one years afterwards, January 27, 438, his body was translated with great pomp to Constantinople and deposited with the emperors and patriarchs beneath the altar of the church of the Holy Apostles. The young Emperor Theodosius II. and his sister Pulcheria met the procession at Chalcedon, kneeled down before the coffin, and in the name of their guilty parents implored the forgiveness of heaven for the grievous injustice done to the greatest and saintliest man that ever graced the pulpit and episcopal chair of Constantinople. The Eastern church of that age shrunk from the bold speculations of Origen, but revered the narrow orthodoxy of Epiphanius and the ascetic piety of Chrysostom.

The personal appearance of the golden-mouthed orator was not imposing, but dignified and winning. He was of small stature (like David, Paul, Athanasius, Melanchthon, John Wesley, Schleiermacher). He had an emaciated frame, a large, bald head, a lofty, wrinkled forehead, deep-set, bright, piercing eyes, pallid, hollow cheeks, and a short, gray beard.²

CHAPTER XI.—His Character.

Chrysostom was one of those rare men who combine greatness and goodness, genius and piety, and continue to exercise by their writings and example a happy influence upon the Christian church. He was a man for his time and for all times. But we must look at the spirit rather than the form of his piety, which bore the stamp of his age.

He took Paul for his model, but had a good deal of the practical spirit of James, and of the fervor and loveliness of John. The Scriptures were his daily food, and he again and again recommended their study to laymen as well as ministers. He was not an ecclesiastical statesman, like St. Ambrose, not a profound divine like St. Augustin, but a pure man, a practical Christian, and a king of preachers. "He carried out in his own life," says Hase, "as far as mortal man can do it, the ideal of the priesthood which he once described in youthful enthusiasm." He considered it the duty of every Christian to promote the spiritual welfare of his fellowmen. "Nothing can be more chilling," he says in the 20th Homily on Acts, "than the sight of a Christian who makes no effort to save others. Neither poverty, nor humble station, nor bodily infirmity can exempt men and women from the obligation of this great duty. To hide our light under pretense of weakness is as great an insult to God as if we were to say that He could not make His sun to shine."

It is very much to his praise that in an age of narrow orthodoxy and doctrinal intolerance he cherished a catholic and irenical spirit. He by no means disregarded the value of theological soundness, and was in hearty agreement with the Nicene creed, which triumphed over the Arians during his ministry in Antioch; he even refused a church in Constantinople which the Arian Goths claimed. But he took no share in the persecution of heretics, and even sheltered the Origenistic monks against the violence of Theophilus of Alexandria. He hated sin more than error, and placed charity above orthodoxy.

Like all the Nicene Fathers, he was an enthusiast for ascetic and monastic virtue, which shows itself in seclusion rather than in transformation of the world and the natural ordinances of God. He retained as priest and bishop his cloister habits of simplicity, abstemiousness and unworldliness. He presents the most favorable aspect of that mode of life, which must be regarded as a wholesome reaction against the hopeless corruption of pagan society. He thought with St. Paul that he could best serve the Lord in single life, and no one can deny that he was unreservedly devoted to the cause of religion.

ι Δόξα τῷ θεῷ πάντων ἔνεκεν.

² See the frontispiece in the edition of FRONTO DUCAUS, and in the monograph of STEPHENS.

He was not a man of affairs, and knew little of the world. He had the harmlessness of the dove without the wisdom of the serpent. He knew human nature better than individual men. In this respect he resembles Neander, his best biographer. Besides, he was irritable of temper, suspicious of his enemies, and easily deceived and misled by such men as Serapion. He showed these defects in his quarrel with the court and the aristocracy of Constantinople. With a little more worldly wisdom and less ascetic severity he might perhaps have conciliated and converted those whom he repelled by his pulpit fulminations. Fearless denunciation of immorality and vice in high places always commands admiration and respect, especially in a bishop and court preacher who is exposed to the temptations of flattery. But it is unwise to introduce personalities into the pulpit and does more harm than good. His relation to Eudoxia reminds one of the attitude of John Knox to Mary Stuart. The contrast between the pure and holy zeal of the preacher and the reformer and the ambition and vanity of a woman on the throne is very striking and must be judged by higher rules than those of gallantry and courtesy. But after all, the conduct of Christ, the purest of the pure, towards Mary Magdalene and the woman taken in adultery is far more sublime.

The conflict of Chrysostom with Eudoxia imparts to his latter life the interest of a romance, and was over-ruled for his benefit. In his exile his character shines brighter than even in the pulpit of Antioch and Constantinople. His character was perfected by suffering. The gentleness, meekness, patience, endurance and devotion to his friends and his work which he showed during the last three years of his life are the crowning glory of his career. Though he did not die a violent death, he deserves to be numbered among the true martyrs, who are ready for any sacrifice to the cause of virtue and piety.

CHAPTER XII .- The Writings of Chrysostom.

Chrysostom was the most fruitful author among the Greek Fathers. Suidas makes the extravagant remark that only the omniscient God could recount all his writings. The best have been preserved and have already been noticed in chronological order. They may be divided into five classes: (1) Moral and ascetic treatises, including the work on the Priesthood; (2) About six hundred Homilies and Commentaries; (3) Occasional, festal and panegyrical orations; (4) Letters; (5) Liturgy.

His most important and permanently useful works are his Homilies and Commentaries, which fill eleven of the thirteen folio volumes of the Benedictine edition. They go together; his homilies are expository, and his commentaries are homiletical and practical. Continuous expositions, according to chapter and verse, he wrote only on the first eight chapters of Isaiah, and on the Epistle to the Galatians. All others are arranged in sermons with a moral application at the close. Suidas and Cassiodorus state that he wrote commentaries on the whole Bible. We have from him Homilies on Genesis, the Psalms, the Gospel of Matthew, the Gospel of John, the Acts, the Pauline Epistles including the Hebrews, which he considered Pauline. Besides, he delivered discourses on separate texts of Scripture, on church festivals, eulogies on apostles and martyrs, sermons against the Pagans, against the Jews and Judaizing Christians, against the Arians, and the famous twenty-one orations on the Statues.

He published some of his sermons himself, but most of them were taken down by short-

Luther's intense aversion to monkery, although he himself passed through its discipline, must be taken into account in his unfavorable judgments of Chrysostom, Jerome and other Fathers except St. Augustin, whom he esteemed very highly. Of Chrysostom he must have read very little, or he could not have called him a "rhetorician full of words and empty of matter." He spoke well, however, of Theodoret's commentaries on the Pauline Epistles, which is an indirect testimony in favor of Chrysostom's excessis. See Schaff, Church Hist. vol. VI. 536.

hand writers.' Written sermons were the exceptions in those days. The preacher usually was seated, the people were standing.

Of the letters of Chrysostom we have already spoken.

The Liturgy of Chrysostom so-called is an abridgment and improvement of the Liturgy of St. Basil (d. 379), and both are descended from the Liturgy of James, which they superseded. They have undergone gradual changes. It is impossible to determine the original text, as no two copies precisely agree. Chrysostom frequently refers to different parts of the divine service customary in his day, but there is no evidence that he composed a liturgy, nor is it probable. The Liturgy which bears his name is still used in the orthodox Greek and Russian church on all Sundays, except those during Lent, and on the eve of Epiphany, Easter and Christmas, when the Liturgy of Basil takes its place.

CHAPTER XIII.—His Theology and Exegesis.

Chrysostom belonged to the Antiochian school of theology and exegesis, and is its soundest and most popular representative. It was founded by his teacher Diodor of Tarsus (d. 393), developed by himself and his fellow-student Theodore of Mopsuestia (d. 429), and followed by Theodoret and the Syrian and Nestorian divines. Theodore was the exegete, Chrysostom the homilist, Theodoret the annotator. The school was afterwards condemned for its alleged connection with the Nestorian heresy; but that connection was accidental, not necessary. Chrysostom's mind was not given to dogmatizing, and too well balanced to run into heresy.

The Antiochian school agreed with the Alexandrian school founded by Origen, in maintaining the divine inspiration and authority of the Scriptures, but differed from it in the method of interpretation, and in a sharper distinction between the Old and the New Testaments, and the divine and human elements in the same.

To Origen belongs the great merit of having opened the path of biblical science and criticism, but he gave the widest scope to the allegorizing and mystical method by which the Bible may be made to say anything that is pious and edifying.³ Philo of Alexandria had used that method for introducing the Platonic philosophy into the Mosaic writings. Origen was likewise a Platonist, but his chief object was to remove all that was offensive in the literal sense. The allegorical method is imposition rather than exposition. Christ sanctions parabolic teaching and typical, but not allegorical, interpretation. Paul uses it once or twice, but only incidentally, when arguing from the rabbinical standpoint.

The Antiochian school seeks to explain the obvious grammatical and historical sense, which is rich enough for all purposes of instruction and edification. It takes out of the Word what is actually in it, instead of putting into it all sorts of foreign notions and fancies.

Chrysostom recognizes allegorizing in theory, but seldom uses it in practice, and then more by way of rhetorical ornament and in deference to custom. He was generally guided by sound common sense and practical wisdom. He was more free from arbitrary and absurd interpretations than almost any other patristic commentator. He pays proper attention to the connection, and puts himself into the psychological state and historical situation of the writer. In one word, he comes very near to what we now call the grammatico-historical exegesis. This is the only solid and sound foundation for any legitimate use of the Scriptures. The sacred writers had one definite object in view; they wished to convey one particular sense by the ordinary use of language, and to be clearly understood by their readers. At the same time the truths of revelation are so deep and so rich that they can be indefinitely expanded and applied to all circumstances and conditions. Interpretation is one thing, application is another thing. Chrysostom knew as well as any allegorist how to derive spiritual nourishment from the Scriptures and to make them "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, thoroughly furnished unto every good work." As to the text of the Greek Testament, he is the chief witness of the Syro-Constantinopolitan recension, which was followed by the later Greek Fathers. He accepts the Syrian canon of the Peshito, which includes the Old Testament with the Apocapha, but omits from the New Testament the Apocalypse and four Catholic Epistles (2 Peter, 2 and 3 John, and Jude); at least in the Synopsis Veteris et novi Testamenti which is found in his works, those five books are wanting, but this does not prove that he did not know them.³

¹ ὁξυγράφοι, Socrates, VI. 5. The term occurs also in the Septuagint (Ps. xlv. 2) and in Philo. The Byzantine writers use the verb ὁξυγραφίω, to write fast, and the noun ὁξυγραφία, the art of writing fast.

² The liturgical references in Chrysostom's works are carefully collected by Bingham, in Bk. XV. of his Antiquities. Comp. STEPHENS, p. 419 sqq.

³ Allegorical interpretation makes the writer say something else than what he meant, ἄλλο μἐν ἀγορεύει, ἄλλο δὲ νοει.

The commentaries of Chrysostom are of unequal merit. We must always remember that he is a homiletical commentator who aimed at the conversion and edification of his hearers. He makes frequent digressions and neglects to explain the difficulties of important texts. Grammatical remarks are rare, but noteworthy on account of his familiarity with the Greek as his mother tongue, though by no means coming up to the accuracy of a modern expert in philology. In the Old Testament he depended altogether on the Septuagint, being ignorant of Hebrew, and often missed the mark. The Homilies on the Pauline Epistles are considered his best, especially those to the Corinthians, where he had to deal with moral and pastoral questions. The doctrinal topics of Romans and Galatians were less to his taste, and it cannot be said that he entered into the depths of Paul's doctrines of sin and grace, or ascended the height of his conception of freedom in Christ. His Homilies on Romans are argumentative; his continuous notes on Galatians somewhat hasty and superficial. The eighty Homilies on Matthew from his Antiochian period are very valuable. Thomas Aquinas declared he would rather possess them than be the master of all Paris. The eighty-eight Homilies on John, also preached at Antioch, but to a select audience early in the morning, are more doctrinal and controversial, being directed against the Anomœans (Arians).4 We have no commentaries from him on Mark and Luke, nor on the Catholic Epistles and the Apocalypse. The fiftyfive homilies on the Acts, delivered at Constantinople between Easter and Whitsuntide, when that book was read in the public lessons, contain much interesting information about the manners and customs of the age, but are the least polished of his productions. Erasmus, who translated them into Latin, doubted their genuineness. His life in Constantinople was too much disturbed to leave him quiet leisure for preparation. The Homilies on the Hebrews, likewise preached in Constantinople, were published after his death from notes of his friend, the presbyter Constantine, and the text is in a confused state.

The Homilies of Chrysostom were a rich storehouse for the Greek commentators, compilers and epitomizers, such as Theodoret, Oecumenius, Theophylact, and Euthymius Zigabenus, and they are worth consulting to this day for their exegetical as well as their practical value.

The theology of Chrysostom must be gathered chiefly from his commentaries. He differs from the metaphysical divines of the Nicene age by his predominantly practical ten-

¹ On the school of Antioch, see Schaff, Church Hist. 11. 816-818; 111. 612, 707, 937; NEANDER, Chrysost. 1. 35 sqq.; Förster, Chrysostomus in scinem Verhallniss zur Antioch. Schule (1869); REUSS, Geschichtedes N. T., 6th ed. (1887), sees, 320, 518, 321; Far. Rak, History of Interpretation (1886), pp. 210 sqq., 220 sqq. Reuss, Paste in tibute to Chrysostom (p. 593): The Christian people of ancient times never enjoyed richer instruction out of the Bible than from the golden mouth of a genuine and thoroughly equipped biblical preacher." Farrar calls Chrysostom "the ablest of Christian homilists and one of the best Christian men," and "the bright consummate flower of the school of Antioch."

² WESTCOTT & HORT, Gr. Test., 11. 141 sqq.; Schaff, Companion to the Greek Test. (3rd ed.), p. 206.

³ REUSS, I. c. sec. 320 (p. 359); HOLTZMANN, Einleitung ins N. T., ed. II. (1886), p. 171.

⁴ So called because they taught that the Son is unlike or distinular (ἀνόμοιος) to the Father and of a different substance, in opposition to the Nicene doctrine of equal substance (ὁμοουσία), and the semi-Arian doctrine of like, or similar substance (ὁμοουσία).

dency, and in this respect he approaches the genius of the Western church. He lived between the great trinitarian and christological controversies and was only involved incidentally in the subordinate Origenistic controversy, in which he showed a charitable and liberal spirit. He accepted the Nicene Creed, but he died before the rise of the Nestorian and Eutychian heresies. Speculation was not his forte, and as a thinker he is behind Athanasius, Gregory of Nyssa, and John of Damascus. He was a rhetorician rather than a logician.

Like all the Greek fathers, he laid great stress on free-will and the co-operation of the human will with divine grace in the work of conversion. Cassian, the founder of Semi-Pelagianism, was his pupil and appealed to his authority. Julian of Eclanum, the ablest opponent of Augustin, quoted Chrysostom against original sin; Augustin tried from several passages to prove the reverse, but could only show that Chrysostom was no Pelagian. We may say that in tendency and spirit he was a catholic Semi-Pelagian or Synergist before Semi-Pelagianism was brought into a system.

His anthropology forms a wholesome contrast and supplement to the anthropology of his younger contemporary, the great bishop of Hippo, the champion of the slavery of the human will and the sovereignty of divine grace.

We look in vain in Chrysostom's writings for the Augustinian and Calvinistic doctrines of absolute predestination, total depravity, hereditary guilt, irresistible grace, perseverance of saints, or for the Lutheran theory of forensic and solifidian justification. He teaches that God foreordained all men to holiness and salvation, and that Christ died for all and is both willing and able to save all, but not against their will and without their free consent. The vessels of mercy were prepared by God unto glory, the vessels of wrath were not intended by God, but fitted by their own sin, for destruction. The will of man, though injured by the Fall, has still the power to accept or to reject the offer of salvation. It must first obey the divine call. "When we have begun," he says, in commenting on John i. 38, "when we have sent our will before, then God gives us abundant opportunities of salvation." God helps those who help themselves. "When God," he says, "sees us eagerly prepare for the contest of virtue, he instantly supplies us with his assistance, lightens our labors and strengthens the weakness of our nature." Faith and good works are necessary conditions of justification and salvation, though Christ's merits alone are the efficient cause. He remarks on John vi. 44, that while no man can come to Christ unless drawn and taught by the Father, there is no excuse for those who are unwilling to be thus drawn and taught. Yet on the other hand he fully admits the necessity of divine grace at the very beginning of every good action. "We can do no good thing at all," he says, "except we are aided from above." And in his dying hour he gave glory to God "for all things."

Thus Augustinians and Semi-Pelagians, Calvinists and Arminians, widely as they differ in theory about human freedom and divine sovereignty, meet in the common feeling of personal responsibility and absolute dependence on God. With one voice they disclaim all merit of their own and give all glory to Him who is the giver of every good and perfect gift and works in us "both to will and to work, for his good pleasure" (Phil. ii. 12).

I ladd the remarks of Stephens on the difference between Chrysostom and Augustin (p. 430): "Unquestionable as the intellectual genius of Chrysostom was, yet it is rather in the purity of his moral character, his single-minded boldness of purpose, and the glowing piety which burns through all his writings, that we find the secret of his influence. If it was rather the mission of Augustin to mould the minds of men so as to take a firm grasp of certain great doctrines, it was the mission of Chrysostom to inflame the whole heart with a fervent love of God. Rightly has he been called the great teacher of consummate holiness, as Augustin was the great teacher of efficient grace: rightly has it been remarked that, like Fénélon, he is to be ranked mong those who may be termed disciples of St. John, men who seem to have been pious without intermission from their childhood upwards, and of whose piety the leading characteristics are ease, cheerfulness and elevation; while Augustin belongs to the disciples of St. Paul, those who have been converted from error to truth, or from sin to holiness, and whose characteristics are gravity, cannets, edpth. If Augustin has done more valuable service in building up the church at large, Chrysostom is the more lovable to the individual, and speaks out of a heart overflowing to God and man, unconstrained by the fetters of a severe and rigid system. Yet it is precisely on this account that he has not been so generally appreciated as he deserves. His tone is too catholic for the Romanics, or for the sectatian partisan of any denomination. 'It would be easy to produce abundant instances of his oratorial abilities; I wish it were in my power to record as

As to the doctrines which separate the Greek, Roman and Protestant churches, Chrysostom faithfully represents the Greek Catholic church prior to the separation from Rome. In addition to the œcumenical doctrines of the Nicene Creed, he expresses strong views on baptismal regeneration, the real presence, and the eucharistic sacrifice, yet without a clearly defined theory, which was the result of later controversies; hence it would be unjust to press his devotional and rhetorical language into the service of transubstantiation, or consubstantiation, or the Roman view of the mass."

His extravagant laudations of saints and martyrs promoted that refined form of idolatry which in the Nicene age began to take the place of the heathen hero-worship. But it is all the more remarkable that he furnishes no support to Mariolatry, which soon after his death triumphed in the Greek as well as the Latin church. He was far from the idea of the sinless perfection and immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary. He attributes her conduct at the wedding of Cana (John ii. 3, 4) to undue haste, a sort of unholy ambition for the premature display of the miraculous power of her Son; and in commenting on Matthew xii. 46-49, he charges her and his brethren with vanity and a carnal mind.² He does not use the term theotokos, which twenty years after his death gave rise to the Nestorian controversy, and which was endorsed by the third and fourth œcumenical councils.

As to the question of the papacy he considered the bishop of Rome as the successor of Peter, the prince of the Apostles, and appealed to him in his exile against the unjust condemnation of the Council at the Oak. Such appeals furnished the popes with a welcome opportunity to act as judges in the controversies of the Eastern church, and greatly strengthened their claims. But his Epistle to Innocent was addressed also to the bishops of Milan and Aquileia, and falls far short of the language of submission to an infallible authority. He conceded to the pope merely a primacy of honor (προστασία, άργη), not a supremacy of jurisdiction. He calls the bishop of Antioch (Ignatius and Flavian) likewise a successor of Peter, who labored there according to the express testimony of Paul. In commenting on Gal. i. 18, he represents Paul as equal in dignity (ἐσότιμος) to Peter.3 He was free from jealousy of Rome, but had he lived during the violent controversies between the patriarch of new Rome and the pope of old Rome, it is not doubtful on which side he would have stood.

In one important point Chrysostom approaches the evangelical theology of the Reformation, his devotion to the Holy Scriptures as the only rule of faith. "There is no topic on which he dwells more frequently and earnestly than on the duty of every Christian man and woman to study the Bible; and what he bade others do, that he did pre-eminently him-many of his evangelical excellencies.' Such is the verdict of a narrow-minded historian [Milner], and the comparative estimation in which he held St. Augustin and St. Chrysostoni may be inferred from the number of pages in his History given to each: St. Augustin is favored with 187, Chrysostom with 20. But he whose judgment is not cramped by the shackles of some harsh and stiff theory of gospel truth will surely allow that Chrysostom not only preached the gospel, but lived it. To the last moment of his life he exhibited that calm, cheerful faith, that patient resignation under affliction, and untiring perseverance for the good of others, which are preeminently the marks of a Christian saint. The cause for which he fought and died in a corrupt age was the cause of Christian holiness."

In his comments on Heb. ix. 26 (Hom. XVII. on Hebrews, in the Bened. ed. XII. 241 sq.; in the Oxford translation, p. 213), he expresses himself on the sacrificial aspect of the eucharist in these words: "Christ is our High Priest, who offered the sacrifice that cleanses us. That sacrifice we offer now also, which was then offered, which cannot be exhausted. This is done in remembrance of what was then done. For, saith He, 'Do this in remembrance of Me.' It is not another sacrifice that we make (ποιούμεν), as the High Priest of old, but always the same, or rather we perform a remembrance of a sacrifice (μάλλον δε ανάμνησιν έργαζόμεθα θυσιας)." The word remembrance would favor the Protestant rather than the Roman view, which demands an actual, though unbloody, repetition of the sacrifice of the cross in the mass. Other passages, however, are much stronger, though highly rhetorical, e. g., De Sacerd. 111. 4: "When you behold the Lord slain, and lying there, and the priest standing over the sacrifice and praying, and all stained with that precious blood, do you then suppose you are among men, and standing upon earth? Are you not immediately transported to Heaven?" In another place he says, "Christ lies slain (τεθυμένος) upon the altar. ' And yet the people were so indifferent that Chrysostom laments: "In vain is the daily sacrifice, in vain stand we at the altar; there is no one to take part" (Third Hom. on Ephesians).

² See his 21st Homily on John, and his 44th Homily on Matthew. Comp. Stephens, p. 417 sqq.
3 See his letter to Innocent I, and his comments on Gal. i, and ii. The passages of Chrysostom on Peter and his successors are collected in Berington & Kirk, The Faith of Catholics, ed. 3, vol. II. 32-35, 80, but the important passage from his Commentary on Galatians is omitted. See TREAT, The Catholic Faith (1888), p. 396.

self." He deemed the reading of the Bible the best means for the promotion of Christian life. A Christian without the knowledge of the Scriptures is to him a workman without tools. Even the sight of the Bible deters from sin, how much more the reading. It purifies and consecrates the soul, it introduces it into the holy of holies and brings it into direct communion with God.²

CHAPTER XIV .- Chrysostom as a Preacher.

The crowning merit of Chrysostom is his excellency as a preacher. He is generally and justly regarded as the greatest pulpit orator of the Greek church. Nor has he any superior or equal among the Latin Fathers. He remains to this day a model for preachers in large cities.

He was trained in the school of Demosthenes and Libanius, and owed much of his literary culture to the classics. He praises "the polish of Isocrates, the gravity of Demosthenes, the dignity of Thucydides, and the sublimity of Plato." He assigns to Plato the first rank among the philosophers, but he places St. Paul far above him, and glories in the victory of the tent-maker and fishermen over the wisdom of the Greeks.

He was not free from the defects of the degenerate rhetoric of his age, especially a flowery exuberance of style and fulsome extravagance in eulogy of dead martyrs and living men. But the defects are overborne by the virtues: the fulness of Scripture knowledge, the intense earnestness, the fruitfulness of illustration and application, the variation of topics, the command of language, the elegance and rhythmic flow of his Greek style, the dramatic vivacity, the quickness and ingenuity of his turns, and the magnetism of sympathy with his hearers. He knew how to draw in the easiest manner spiritual nourishment and lessons of practical wisdom from the Word of God, and to make it a divine voice of warning and comfort to every hearer. He was a faithful preacher of truth and righteousness and fearlessly told the whole duty of man. If he was too severe at times, he erred on virtue's side. He preached morals rather than dogmas, Christianity rather than theology, active, practical Christianity that proves itself in holy living and dying. He was a martyr of the pulpit, for it was chiefly his faithful preaching that caused his exile. The effect of his oratory was enhanced by the magnetism of his personality, and is weakened to the reader of a translation or even the Greek original. The living voice and glowing manner are far more powerful than the written and printed letter.

Chrysostom attracted large audiences, and among them many who would rather have gone to the theatre than hear any ordinary preacher. He held them spell-bound to the close. Sometimes they manifested their admiration by noisy applause, and when he rebuked them for it, they would applaud his rebuke. "You praise," he would tell them, "what I have said, and receive my exhortation with tumults of applause; but show your approbation by obedience; that is the only praise I seek."

The great mediaval poet assigns to Chrysostom a place in Paradise between Nathan the prophet and Anselm the theologian, probably because, like Nathan, he rebuked the sins of the court, and, like Anselm, he suffered exile for his conviction. The best French pulpit orators—Bossuet, Massilon, Bourdaloue—have taken him for their model, even in his faults, the flattery of living persons. Villemain praises him as the greatest orator who combined all the attributes of eloquence. Hase calls his eloquence "Asiatic, flowery, full of spirit

¹ STEPHENS, p. 422. 3 De Sacerd., IV. 6.

² Comp. the rich extracts from his writings bearing on the Bible, in Neander, I. 211-226. 4 Paradiso, XII. 136-139:

[&]quot;Natan profeta e il metropolitano Chrisostomo, ed Anselmo, e quel Donato, Che alla prim' arte degnò poner mano."

⁵ Tableau, etc., p. 154: "Ce sont ces qualités plus hautes, ou plutot c'est la réunion de tous les attributs oratoires, le naturel, le pathétique et la grandeur, qui ont fait de saint Jean Chrysostome le plus grande orateur de l'église primitive, le plus éclatant interprête de cette mémorable époque."

and of the Holy Spirit, based on sound exegesis, and with steady application to life." English writers compare him to Jeremy Taylor. Gibbon (who confesses, however, to have read very few of his Homilies) attributes to him "the happy art of engaging the passions in the service of virtue, and of exposing the folly as well as the turpitude of vice, almost with the truth and spirit of a dramatic representation." Dean Milman describes him as an "unrivalled master in that rapid and forcible application of incidental occurrences which gives such life and reality to eloquence. He is at times, in the highest sense, dramatic in manner." Stephens thus characterizes his sermons: ²

"A power of exposition which unfolded in lucid order, passage by passage, the meaning of the book in hand; a rapid transition from clear exposition, or keen logical argument, to fervid exhortation, or pathetic appeal, or indignant denunciation; the versatile ease with which he could lay hold of any little incident of the moment, such as the lighting of the lamps in the church, and use it to illustrate his discourse; the mixture of plain common sense, simple boldness, and tender affection, with which he would strike home to the hearts and consciences of his hearers—all these are not only general characteristics of the man, but are usually to be found manifested more or less in the compass of each discourse. It is this rare union of powers which constitutes his superiority to almost all other Christian preachers with whom he might be, or has been, compared. Savonarola had all, and more than all, his fire and vehemence, but untempered by his sober, calm good sense, and wanting his rational method of interpretation. Chrysostom was eager and impetuous at times in speech as well as in action, but never fanatical. Jeremy Taylor combines, like Chrysostom, real earnestness of purpose with rhetorical forms of expression and florid imagery; but, on the whole, his style is far more artificial, and is overlaid with a multifarious learning, from which Chrysostom's was entirely free. Wesley is almost his match in simple, straightforward, practical exhortation, but does not rise into flights of eloquence like his. The great French preachers, again, resemble him in his more ornate and declamatory vein, but they lack that simpler commonsense style of address which equally distinguished him."

¹º Seine Beredstambeit ist asiatisch, bilderreich, geistwoll und H. Geistes voll, auf gesunder Schriftauslegung, mit steter Anwendung auf's Leben, in seinen Forderungen an Andere sittlich ernst ohne asketische Veberspannung:"—Kirchenge-schichte, 1. 511.

² St. Chrysostom, p. 426 sq.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

TREATISE CONCERNING THE CHRISTIAN PRIESTHOOD.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY REV. W. R. W. STEPHEXS, M.A.,

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

INTRODUCTION TO THE TREATISE ON THE PRIESTHOOD.

The events recorded in this celebrated treatise on the Priesthood must have occurred when St. John Chrysostom was about twenty-eight years of age. His father had died when he was a young child; his mother was a devout Christian, but had not destined him for the clerical vocation. The great ability which he showed in early youth seemed to mark him out for distinction in one of the learned professions, and at the age of eighteen he began to attend the school of Libanius, the most celebrated sophist of the day, who had won a great reputation as a professor of philosophy and rhetoric, and as an eloquent opponent of Christianity, not only in his native city, Antioch, but also in Athens, Nicomedia, and Constantinople. The artificial character however of his writings indicates the decadence of literary power; he could skillfully imitate the style of ancient writers but he could not inform himself with their spirit; "his productions" says Gibbon [ch. xxiv], "are for the most part the vain and idle composition of an orator who cultivated the science of words."

In the school of Libanius Chrysostom no doubt studied the best classical Greek authors, and although he retained little admiration for them in later life and probably read them but rarely, his tenacious memory enabled him to the last to adorn his homilies with quotations from Homer, Plato and the Tragedians. In the school of Libanius also he began to practise his nascent power of eloquence, and a speech which he made in honor of the Emperors is highly commended in an extant letter of his master. Thus the Pagan sophist helped to forge the weapons which were destined to be turned against his own cause. When he was on his deathbed being asked by his friends who was most worthy to succeed him, "it would have been John" he replied, "if the Christians had not stolen him from us."

In due time Chrysostom began to practise as a lawyer; and as the profession of the law was reckoned one of the surest avenues to political distinction for a man of talent, and the speeches of Chrysostom excited great admiration, a brilliant and prosperous career seemed to lie before him. But the soul of the young advocate had drunk draughts from a purer well-spring than the school of Libanius could supply, and like many other Christians in that age when society, even Christian society, was deeply tainted by Pagan sentiments and habits of life, especially in a profligate city like Antioch, he recoiled from the contrast between the morality of the world in which he lived, and the standard of holiness which was presented in the Gospel. The chicanery and rapacity also prevalent in the profession which he had adopted became especially repugnant to his conscience. And these feelings were strengthened by the influence of his intimate friend Basil who had been a fellow pupil with him at the school of Libanius.

The first book of the treatise on the Priesthood opens with a description of his friendship with Basil; how they studied the same subjects together under the same teachers, and how entirely harmonious they were in all their tastes, and inclinations [ci and ii.] Nevertheless when Basil decided to follow what Chrysostom calls the "true philosophy," by which he means a life of religious seclusion and study, Chrysostom could not immediately make up his mind to follow his example. The balance he says was no longer even between them; the scale of Basil mounted heavenward, while his own was depressed by the weight of earthly interests, and youthful ambitions. For a time he continued to practise in the law courts and to frequent the theatre, and other places of amusement. But gradually the study of Scripture, the longing for renewed intercourse with his friend, and the influence of Meletius the amiable and saintly Bishop of Antioch so wrought upon his mind that he resolved to abandon his secular calling. And in the first place after the usual course of probation he was baptized. It may seem surprising that he had not been baptized in childhood; but a corrupt practice of delaying baptism (which Chrysostom himself often reprobates in his Homilies) was prevalent at that time. It was due in some persons to a notion that sin before Baptism was comparatively venial, in others to a dread of binding themselves or their children to the purity of life which was demanded by the Baptismal vows. In the case of Chrysostom it is possible, I think, that the distracted condition of the church in Antioch may have operated as a reason, perhaps the chief reason for the delay. At the date of his birth (about A.D. 345) and for sixteen years afterwards the See was occupied by Arian Bishops of the most worldly time-serving type. The good Catholic Bishop Meletius was appointed in 361 and it was probably some seven or eight years later that Chrysostom was baptized by him, and ordained to the office of Reader in the Church.

There can be no doubt that Baptism, from whatever cause delayed, must have come home to the recipient at last with all the more solemnity of meaning. It was often a decisive turning point in the life, the beginning of a definite renunciation of the world, and dedication of the whole man to God. To Chrysostom it evidently was this. For a time he became an enthusiastic ascetic; and then settled down into that more tranquil, but intense glow of piety which burned with unabated force to the close of his life. His baptism and the relinquishment of his secular calling are probably alluded to in the following treatise c. 3. where he speaks of "emerging a little from the flood of worldliness" in which he had been involved. His friend Basil who received him with open arms does not seem to have joined any monastic community, but merely to have been living in retirement and practising some of the usual monastic austerities. The two friends now formed a plan for withdrawing together to some quiet retreat, there to support one another in habits of study, meditation, and prayer. c. 4. The execution of the project was delayed for a time by the passionate entreaties of Chrysostom's mother that he would not deprive her of his companionship and protection. c. 5. He must have been a poor companion however, for we learn (vi. c. 12) that he rarely went outside the house, maintained an almost perpetual silence, and was constantly absorbed in study and prayer. He and Basil in fact formed with a few other friends a voluntary association of youthful ascetics who lived under a strict rule. We might compare it with the association or club formed by John Wesley and his brother at Oxford which first earned for them the nickname of "Methodists." Chrysostom and his friends placed the general regulation of their studies and religious life under Diodorus and Carterius the presidents of the two principal monastic communities in the neighborhood of Antioch. Diodorus was a man of learning and ability, opposed to those mystical and allegorical interpretations of Holy Scripture which often disguised rather than elucidated the real meaning of the sacred text, so that to his training probably we are largely indebted for that clear, sensible practical method of exposition in which Chrysostom so remarkably excels nearly all the ancient fathers of the Church.

Not long after the two friends had adopted this course of life, probably about the year 374, they were agitated by a report that they were likely to be advanced to the Episcopate (c. 6.) By a custom which was then common in the Church they were liable if elected by the clergy and people to be forcibly seized and ordained however unwilling they might be to accept the dignity [see notes to chapters 6 and 7]. Basil entreated his friend that in this crisis of their lives they might act as in former times in concert, and together accept, or evade if possible the expected but unwelcome honor. Chrysostom affected assent to this proposal, but secretly resolved to entrap Basil into the sacred office for which he considered him to be as eminently fitted, as he deemed himself to be unworthy. The Church should not on account of his own feebleness be deprived if he could help it, of the able ministrations position of this body, see note 3, p. 21] were sent to seize the two young men, Chrysoston contrived to hide himself. His language c. 6. seems to imply that he had some intimation of their coming which he purposely withheld from Basil who consequently was caught. He made at first a violent resistance, but the officials led him to suppose that Chrysostom had already submitted, and under this delusion he acquiesced. When he discovered the trick which had been played upon him he naturally reproached Chrysostom bitterly for his unkind treachery. But the conscience of Chrysostom seems to have been quite at ease throughout the transaction. He regarded it as a pious fraud and when he saw the mingled distress and anger of his friend he could not refrain, he says, from laughing aloud for joy, and thanking God for the success of his stratagem. The remainder of the 1st Book [chs. 8, 9] is occupied by Chrysostom's vindication of his conduct, the principle that deceit for a righteous end is often salutary and justifiable being maintained with an ingenuity and skill which bespeaks a man who had recently practised in the law-courts. His arguments indeed savor somewhat unpleasantly of casuistry, and it must be confessed that in his conduct on this occasion there is a tinge of something like oriental duplicity which is repugnant to our moral sense. On the other hand it must be borne in mind that neither in the East nor in the West, for many ages were "pious frauds" absolutely condemned by the conscience of Christendom; there was always an inclination to judge each case on its own merits, and to condone if not to approve those in which the balance of evidence was in favor of a righteous or holy purpose, and a beneficial result. And it must also be owned, in justice to Chrysostom, that one of the qualities most conspicuous in him throughout the whole of his subsequent career is fearless, straightforward honesty alike in act and in speech; and this under the pressure very often of strong temptation to dissemble and temporize.

The remaining books on the Priesthood treat of the pre-eminent dignity, and sanctity of the priestly office and the peculiar difficulties and perils which beset it. They abound with wise and weighty observations instructive for all times, but they are also interesting from the light which they throw upon the condition of the Church and of society in the age when Chrysostom lived. It is to be noted that he is speaking of the priesthood generally and that it is not always easy to say in any given passage which of the first two orders in the ministry he has in his mind. In many instances perhaps he was not thinking of one more than the other. Where, as was very commonly the case, the jurisdiction of a bishop did not extend very far beyond the limits of the city in which his See was placed, his functions would more nearly resemble those which in our day are discharged by the incumbent of a large town parish than those which are performed by the modern Bishop of a large diocese. He was the chief pastor of the people, as well as the overseer of the clergy. Chrysostom's friend Basil has been confused by some with the great Basil, Bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, who was fifteen years older than Chrysostom, by others with Basil Bishop of Seleucia, who was many years younger. Nothing in fact is known about him beyond what is recorded in this treatise. but he has been conjecturally identified with Basil Bishop of Raphnea in Syria, not far from Antioch, who attended the Council of Constantinople in 381.

CONTENTS.

BOOK L

I. How Basil excelled all the friends of Chrysostom

PAGE

										00
2.	The unanimity of Basil and Chrysostom, and their joint study of all subjects .									33
3.	The balance upset in the pursuit of the monastic life									33
4.	The proposal to occupy a common home									33
5.	The fond entreaties of Chrysostom's mother									34
6.	The deceit employed by Chrysostom in the matter of ordination									34
7.	Chrysostom's defence in reply to objections									35
8,	The great advantage of deceit when well timed; conclusion and general remarks									37 воок п.
ī.	The priesthood the greatest evidence of love to Christ									39
2.	The service of the priesthood greater than all other services									40
3.	The priesthood has need of a large and excellent spirit									41
4.	It is full of great difficulty and danger									41
5.	The office avoided by Chrysostom out of his love to Christ									43
	A demonstration of the virtue of Basil, and of his ardent love
	In avoiding ordination Chrysostom had no intention of insulting the electors
8.	By his flight he saved them from blame									44
	воок ии.
I.	Those who suspected me of declining this office through arrogance injured their of)W	n r	epu	tat	ion				45
2.	I did not avoid it through vainglory									46
3.	If I had desired glory I should rather have chosen the work									46
4.	The priesthood is an awful thing, and the service thereof under the new dispension	sat	ion	ı fi	ar I	nor	e a	wf	ul
	than under the old									46
5.	The great authority and dignity of the priesthood									47
6.	Sacred ministries are amongst the greatest of God's gifts									47
7.	Even Paul was filled with fear when he considered the magnitude of the office.									48
S.	He who enters upon it is often snared into sin, unless he is very noble-minded .									49
9.	He is caught by vainglory and its attendant evils									49
IO.	The priesthood is not the cause of these things, but our own indolence									49
II.	The lust of domination should be cast out of the soul of a priest									50
(Se	e note I, p. 45)
	BOOK IV.
I.	Those who allow themselves to be forced into the clerical office, no less than the	ney	W	ho	ent	er	up	on	it
	from ambitious motives, are sorely punished hereafter for their sin									60

		PA	AGE
2.	They who ordain unworthy men, even where they do not know their character, will share their punishment.		63
3.	The priest ought to have great powers of speaking		64
4.	He should be fully prepared for controversy with all adversaries—Greeks, Jews, and heretics		65
5.	He should be very skillful in argument		66
6.	In which Saint Paul especially excelled		66
7.	So that he became illustrious not so much for his miracles as for his words		67
8.	Herein he would have us excel also		68
9.	For the lack of this in the priest must injuriously affect those over whom he is set		69
	BOOK V.
ı.	Public preaching needs much labor and study	,	70
2.	He who is appointed to this work must be indifferent to praise, and able in speaking		70
3.	Unless he have both these qualifications he will be unserviceable to the multitude		71
4.	He should above all take no notice of slander	,	71
5.	The skillful in preaching need more study than the unlearned	,	71
6.	He must not think too little or too much of the unreasoned verdict of the multitude		72
7.	He must order his words with a view to pleasing God alone		72
8.	He who is not indifferent to praise will undergo many sufferings		73
	BOOK VI.
I.	Priests are liable to render account for the sins committed by others		74
2.	They need more circumspection than the recluses		75
3.	The recluse enjoys more ease of mind than he who is set over the church		75
4.	The priest has been entrusted with the government of the world and with other formidable duties		76
5.	The priest must be adapted to all circumstances		77
6.	To live the life of a recluse is not such a mark of endurance as to govern the multitude well		77
7.	The habits of him who lives alone, and of him who has his conversation in the world are not for the same ends		77
8.	They who live alone become proficient in virtue more easily than they who have the care of many \cdot .		78
9.	One ought not to think lightly of popular suspicion, even though it happen to be false		79
10.	It is no very great matter to save oneself	*.	79
	Much sorer punishment awaits the sins of the priests than those of the laity		80
12.	A representation by way of example both of the pain and of the fear which arises from the expectation of the priesthood		80
13.	The warfare of the devil against us is more severe than any other	- 8	82

TREATISE ON THE PRIESTHOOD.

BOOK I.

CONTENTS.

- I. HOW BASIL EXCELLED ALL THE FRIENDS OF CHRYSOSTOM.
- II. THE UNANIMITY OF BASIL AND CHRYSOSTOM, AND THEIR JOINT STUDY OF ALL SUBJECTS.
- III. THE BALANCE UPSET IN THE PURSUIT OF THE MONASTIC LIFE.
- IV. THE PROPOSAL TO OCCUPY A COMMON HOME.
- V. THE FOND ENTREATIES OF CHRYSOSTOM'S MOTHER.
- VI. THE DECEIT EMPLOYED BY CHRYSOSTOM IN THE MATTER OF ORDINATION.
- VII. CHRYSOSTOM'S DEFENCE IN REPLY TO OBJECTIONS.
- VIII. THE GREAT ADVANTAGE OF DECEIT WHEN WELL TIMED; CONCLUSION AND GENERAL REMARKS.
- we found ourselves to be of the same mind.
- 2. And in addition to these, there were other soared to a great height. things also which preserved and maintained this concord unbroken and secure. For as high value on my friendship, he separated himregarded the greatness of our fatherland self from all the rest (of the brethren), and neither had one cause to vaunt himself over spent the whole of his time with me, which he the other, nor was I burdened with riches, and had desired to do before, but had been prehe pinched by poverty, but our means corre-vented as I was saying by my frivolity. For sponded as closely as our tastes. Our families it was impossible for a man who attended the also were of equal rank, and thus everything law-courts, and was in a flutter of excitement concurred with our disposition.
- 1. I HAD many genuine and true friends, \ 3. But when it became our duty to pursue men who understood the laws of friendship, the blessed life of monks, and the true philoand faithfully observed them; but out of this sophy, our balance was no longer even, but large number there was one who excelled all his scale mounted high, while I, still entangled the rest in his attachment to me, striving to in the lusts of this world, dragged mine down outstrip them as much as they themselves out- and kept it low, weighting it with those fancies stripped ordinary acquaintance. He was one in which youths are apt to indulge. For the of those who were constantly at my side; for future our friendship indeed remained as firm we were engaged in the same studies, and as it was before, but our intercourse was inemployed the same teachers.' We had the terrupted; for it was impossible for persons same eagerness and zeal about the studies at who were not interested about the same things which we worked, and a passionate desire pro- to spend much time together. But as soon as duced by the same circumstances was equally I also began to emerge a little from the flood strong in both of us. For not only when we of worldliness, he received me with open arms; were attending school, but after we had left it, yet not even thus could we maintain our when it became necessary to consider what former equality: for having got the start of course of life it would be best for us to adopt, me in time, and having displayed great earnestness, he rose again above my level, and
 - 4. Being a good man, however, and placing a

Androgathius in philosophy, Libanius in rhetoric,

² An expression frequently employed by St. Chrysostom in the sense of a life of religious contemplation and study.

about the pleasures of the stage, to be often in was no small consolation to me under those the company of one who was nailed to his terrible trials to look continually on thy face books, and never set foot in the market place. and to preserve in thee a living image of him Consequently when the hindrances were re- who had gone, an image indeed which was a moved, and he had brought me into the same fairly exact likeness. condition of life as himself, he gave free vent of the great expense which one is compelled for thy welfare. to incur if she wishes to bring him up in a help indeed was the grace from above; but it

On this account, even when thou wast an to the desire with which he had long been infant, and hadst not yet learned to speak, a laboring. He could not bear leaving me even time when children are the greatest delight to for a moment, and he persistently urged that their parents, thou didst afford me much comwe should each of us abandon our own home fort. Nor indeed can you complain that, aland share a common dwelling: -in fact he though I bore my widowhood bravely, I diminpersuaded me, and the affair was taken in ished thy patrimony, which I know has been the fate of many who have had the misfortune 5. But the continual lamentations of my to be orphans. For, besides keeping the whole mother hindered me from granting him the of it intact, I spared no expense which was favor, or rather from receiving this boon at needful to give you an honorable position, his hands. For when she perceived that I spending for this purpose some of my own was meditating this step, she took me into her fortune, and of my marriage dowry. Yet do own private chamber, and, sitting near me on not think that I say these things by way the bed where she had given birth to me, she of reproaching you; only in return for all shed torrents of tears, to which she added these benefits I beg one favor: do not plunge words yet more pitiable than her weeping, in me into a second widowhood; nor revive the the following lamentable strain: My child, it grief which is now laid to rest: wait for my was not the will of Heaven that I should long death: it may be in a little while I shall deenjoy the benefit of thy father's virtue. For part. The young indeed look forward to a his death soon followed the pangs which I en- distant old age; but we who have grown old 3 dured at thy birth, leaving thee an orphan have nothing but death to wait for. When, and me a widow before my time to face all the then, you shall have committed my body to horrors of widowhood, which only those who the ground, and mingled my bones with thy have experienced them can fairly understand. father's, embark for a long voyage, and set For no words are adequate to describe the sail on any sea thou wilt: then there will be tempest-tossed condition of a young woman no one to hinder thee: but as long as my life who, having but lately left her paternal home, lasts, be content to live with me. Do not, I pray and being inexperienced in business, is sud-you, oppose God in vain, involving me without denly racked by an overwhelming sorrow, and cause, who have done you no wrong, in these compelled to support a load of care too great great calamities. For if you have any reason for her age and sex. For she has to correct to complain that I drag you into worldly cares, the laziness of servants, and to be on the watch and force you to attend to business, do not be for their rogueries, to repel the designs of re-restrained by any reverence for the laws of lations, to bear bravely the threats of those nature, for training or custom, but fly from who collect the public taxes,' and harshness in me as an enemy; but if, on the contrary, I do the imposition of rates. And if the departed everything to provide leisure for thy journey one should have left a child, even if it be a through this life, let this bond at least if nothing girl, great anxiety will be caused to the mother, else keep thee by me. For couldst thou say although free from much expense and fear: that ten thousand loved thee, yet no one will but a boy fills her with ten thousand alarms afford thee the enjoyment of so much liberty, and many anxieties every day, to say nothing seeing there is no one who is equally anxious

6. These words, and more, my mother spake liberal way. None of these things, however, to me, and I related them to that noble youth. induced me to enter into a second marriage. But he, so far from being disheartened by these or introduce a second husband into thy father's speeches, was the more urgent in making the house: but I held on as I was, in the midst of same request as before. Now while we were the storm and uproar, and did not shun the thus situated, he continually entreating, and iron furnace of widowhood. My foremost I refusing my assent, we were both of us disturbed by a report suddenly reaching us that we were about to be advanced to the dignity of

¹ For an account of the oppressive way in which the public taxes were collected, see Gibbon's History (Milman's edition), vol. iii., 78.

² The iron furnace was a Hebrew proverbial expression signifying "a furnace hot enough to melt iron," and so a condition of peculiar trial. See Deut, iv. 20, and Jer, xi. 4.

³ This must be regarded as a kind of rhetorical expression, as we learn from Chrysostom's "Letter to a young widow" (see page), that his mother was not much past 40 at this time.

I was seized with alarm and perplexity: with speak, but was hindered by distress of mind alarm lest I should be made captive against and inability to express in words the violence my will, and perplexity, inquiring as I often to which he had been subjected. No sooner did whence any such idea concerning us could had he opened his mouth than he was prehave entered the minds of these men; for vented from utterance by grief cutting short looking to myself I found nothing worthy of his words before they could pass his lips. Seesuch an honor. But that noble youth having ing, then, his tearful and agitated condition, and come to me privately, and having conferred knowing as I did the cause, I laughed for joy, with me about these things as if with one who and, seizing his right hand, I forced a kiss was ignorant of the rumor, begged that we on him, and praised God that my plan had might in this instance also as formerly shape ended so successfully, as I had always prayed our action and our counsels the same way: for it might. But when he saw that I was dehe would readily follow me whichever course lighted and beaming with joy, and understood I might pursue, whether I attempted flight or that he had been deceived by me, he was yet submitted to be captured. Perceiving then more vexed and distressed. his eagerness, and considering that I should inflict a loss upon the whole body of the this agitation of mind, he began: If you have Church if, owing to my own weakness, I were rejected the part allotted to you, and have no to deprive the flock of Christ of a young man further regard for me (I know not indeed for who was so good and so well qualified for the what cause), you ought at least to consider supervision of large numbers, I abstained from your own reputation; but as it is you have disclosing to him the purpose which I had opened the mouths of all, and the world is formed, although I had never before allowed saying that you have declined this ministry any of my plans to be concealed from him. I through love of vainglory, and there is no one now told him that it would be best to post- who will deliver you from this accusation. As pone our decision concerning this matter to for me, I cannot bear to go into the market another season, as it was not immediately place; there are so many who come up to me pressing, and by so doing persuaded him to and reproach me every day. For, when they dismiss it from his thoughts, and at the same see me anywhere in the city, all my intimate time encouraged him to hope that, if such a friends take me aside, and cast the greater thing should ever happen to us, I should be part of the blame upon me. Knowing his inof the same mind with him. But after a short tention, they say, for none of his affairs could time, when one who was to ordain us arrived, I be kept secret from you, you should not have kept myself concealed, but Basil, ignorant of concealed it, but ought to have communicated this, was taken away on another pretext, and it to us, and we should have been at no loss made to take the yoke, hoping from the prom- to devise some plan for capturing him. But ises which I had made to him that I should I am too much ashamed and abashed to tell certainly follow, or rather supposing that he them that I did not know you had long been was following me. For some of those who plotting this trick, lest they should say that our it was that one who was generally reputed to deny it after what you have done to me-yet it the episcopate.' As soon as I heard this rumor deep dejection, sat down near me and tried to

7. And when he had a little recovered from were present, seeing that he resented being friendship was a mere pretence. For even if seized, deceived him by exclaiming how strange it is so, as indeed it is -nor would you yourself be the more hot tempered (meaning me), had is well to hide our misfortune from the outyielded very mildly to the judgment of the side world, and persons who entertain but a Fathers, whereas he, who was reckoned a much moderate opinion of us. I shrink from telling wiser and milder kind of man, had shown himself them the truth, and how things really stand hotheaded and conceited, being unruly, restive, with us, and I am compelled in future to keep and contradictory.2 Having yielded to these silence, and look down on the ground, and remonstrances, and afterwards having learned turn away to avoid those whom I meet. For that I had escaped capture, he came to me in if I escape the condemnation on the former charge, I am forced to undergo judgment for speaking falsehood. For they will never believe me when I say that you ranged Basil amongst those who are not permitted to know your secret affairs. Of this, however, I will not take much account, since it has seemed agreeable to you, but how shall we endure the future disgrace? for some accuse you of arrogance, others of vainglory: while those

¹ ἐπισκοπῆς is the reading of most Mss., but four have ἰερωσυὐκης '' the priesthood,'' which Bengel adopts, thinking that neither Basil nor Chrysostom could have been elected for the higher order at so early an age, but see below, p. 4, note τ.

2 Forcible ordinations were not uncommon in the Church at this time. St. Augustin was dragged weeping by the people before the Bishop, and his ordination demanded. St. Martin of Tours was torn from his cell, and conveyed to ordination under a the state of the state who are our more merciful accusers, lay both transgressing against me, but because from make to those who accuse us.

wrongs which I have sustained at your hands, nor for the deceit or treachery you have pracin dealing with one who was wont to display the utmost sincerity and candor in speech and action towards thee. Nevertheless, as I said, I do not now accuse you of any of these things, which you have placed me by breaking off those conferences from which we often derived no small pleasure and profit; but all these things I pass by, and bear in silence and meekness, not that thou hast acted meekly in these offences to our charge, and add that we the day that I cherished thy friendship I laid have insulted those who did us honor, although it down as a rule for myself, that whatever had they experienced even greater indignity sorrow you might cause me I would never it would only have served them right for pass- force you to the necessity of an apology. For ing over so many and such distinguished men you know yourself that you have inflicted no and advancing mere youths,' who were but small loss on me if at least you remember what vesterday immersed in the interests of this we were always saying ourselves, and the outworld, to such a dignity as they never have side world also said concerning us, that it was dreamed of obtaining, in order that they may a great gain for us to be of one mind and be for a brief season knit the eyebrows, wear guarded by each other's friendship. Every dusky garments, and put on a grave face. one said, indeed, that our concord would bring Those who from the dawn of manhood to ex- no small advantage to many besides ourselves; treme old age have diligently practised self- I never perceived, however, so far as I am condiscipline, are now to be placed under the cerned, how it could be of advantage to others: government of youths who have not even but I did say that we should at least derive heard the laws which should regulate their ad- this benefit from it: that those who wished to ministration of this office. I am perpetually contend with us would find us difficult to assailed by persons who say such things and master. And I never ceased reminding you worse, and am at a loss how to reply to them; of these things: saying the age is a cruel one, but I pray you tell me: for I do not suppose and designing men are many, genuine love is that you took to flight and incurred such hatred no more, and the deadly pest of envy has from such distinguished men without cause or crept into its place: we walk in the midst of consideration, but that your decision was made snares, and on the edge of battlements;2 those with reasoning and circumspection: whence who are ready to rejoice in our misfortunes, if also I conjecture that you have some argu- any should befall us, are many and beset us ment ready for your defence. Tell me, then, from many quarters: whereas there is no one whether there is any fair excuse which I can to condole with us, or at least the number of such may be easily counted. Beware that we For I do not demand any account for the do not by separation incur much ridicule, and damage worse than ridicule. Brother aided by brother is like a strong city, and well fortitised, nor for the advantage which you have fied kingdom.3 Do not dissolve this genuine derived from me in the past. For I placed intimacy, nor break down the fortress. Such my very life, so to say, in your hands, yet you things and more I was continually saying, not have treated me with as much guile as if it indeed that I ever suspected anything of this had been your business to guard yourself kind, but supposing you to be entirely sound against an enemy. Yet if you knew this de- in your relation towards me, I did it as a supercision of ours to be profitable, you ought not to fluous precaution, wishing to preserve in health have avoided the gain: if on the contrary in- one who was already sound; but unwittingly, jurious, you should have saved me also from the as it seems, I was administering medicines to loss, as you always said that you esteemed me a sick man: and even so I have not been forbefore every one else. But you have done tunate enough to do any good, and have everything to make me fall into the snare: gained nothing by my excess of forethought. and you had no need of guile and hypocrisy For having totally cast away all these considerations, without giving them a thought, you have turned me adrift like an unballasted vessel on an untried ocean, taking no heed of those fierce billows which I must encounter. or reproach you for the lonely position in For if it should ever be my lot to undergo calumny, or mockery, or any other kind of insult or menace (and such things must frequently occur), to whom shall I fly for refuge: to whom shall I impart my distress, who will be willing to succour me and drive back my assailants and put a stop to their assaults? who will solace me and prepare me to bear the tion from the earliest ages, you will find that wrought? now that thou hast dealt the blow, greater expenditure of money and men, so dost thou perceive what a deadly wound thou that they gain nothing by the victory, but suffer hast inflicted? But let all this pass: for it is just as much distress as those who have been impossible to undo the past, or to find a path defeated, both in the sacrifice of troops and make to their accusations.

¹ Chrysostom was about 28 at this time. The Council of Neo Cassarea (about 320) fixed 30 as the age at which men were eligible for the presthood, and the same age at least must have been required for a bishop, yet Remigius was consecrated to the See of Reims at the age of 22, A.D. 457; and there are many other instances of bishops, under the prescribed age.

² A metaphorical expression to denote a perilous position, as those who walked on the edge of the walls would be exposed to the missiles of the enemy.

3 Proverbs xviii. 19. LXX, version.

question in consideration for mine.

or bad according to the intention of those who weapon as the wife.2 practise it, you must desist from complaining Basil: But none of these cases apply to of deceit, and prove that it has been devised me: for I am not an enemy, nor one of those ly, not only to abstain from reproaches and accu- ever you bid me. to undergo punishment for abstaining from in war, and in dealing with enemies, but also fraud. And if you investigate the history of |generals who have enjoyed the highest reputa- 1 1 Sam. xix. 12-18.

coarse ribaldry which may yet be in store for most of their triumphs were achieved by stratme. There is no one since you stand aloof from agem, and that such are more highly comthis terrible strife, and cannot even hear my mended than those who conquer in open fight. cry. Seest thou then what mischief thou hast For the latter conduct their campaigns with through pathless difficulties. What shall I say the exhaustion of funds. But, besides this, they to the outside world? what defence shall I are not even permitted to enjoy all the glory which pertains to the victory; for no small 8. Chrysostom: Be of good cheer, I re- part of it is reaped by those who have fallen, plied, for I am not only ready to answer for because in spirit they were victorious, their myself in these matters, but I will also endefeat was only a bodily one: so that had it deavor as well as I am able to render an ac- been possible for them not to fall when they count of those for which you have not held were wounded, and death had not come and me answerable. Indeed, if you wish it, I will put the finishing stroke to their labors, there make them the starting-point of my defence. would have been no end of their prowess. For it would be a strange piece of stupidity But one who has been able to gain the victory on my part if, thinking only of praise from the by stratagem involves the enemy in ridicule outside public, and doing my best to silence as well as disaster. Again, in the other case their accusations, I were unable to convince my both sides equally carry off the honors bedearest of all friends that I am not wronging stowed upon valor, whereas in this case they him, and were to treat him with indifference do not equally obtain those which are begreater than the zeal which he has displayed stowed on wisdom, but the prize falls entirely on my behalf, treating me with such forbear- to the victors, and, another point no less imance as even to refrain from accusing me of portant is that they preserve the joy of the the wrongs which he says he has suffered from victory for the state unalloyed; for abundance me, and putting his own interests out of the of resources and multitudes of men are not like mental powers: the former indeed if con-What is the wrong that I have done thee, tinually used in war necessarily become exsince I have determined to embark from this hausted, and fail those who possess them, point upon the sea of apology? Is it that I mis-led you and concealed my purpose? Yet I the more it is exercised. And not in war only, did it for the benefit of thyself who wast de- but also in peace the need of deceit may be ceived, and of those to whom I surrendered you found, not merely in reference to the affairs by means of this deceit. For if the evil of of the state, but also in private life, in the deception is absolute, and it is never right to dealings of husband with wife and wife with make use of it, I am prepared to pay any pen- husband, son with father, friend with friend, alty you please: or rather, as you will never and also children with a parent. For the daughendure to inflict punishment upon me, I shall ter of Saul would not have been able to rescue subject myself to the same condemnation which her husband out of Saul's hands' except by is pronounced by judges on evil-doers when deceiving her father. And her brother, wishtheir accusers have convicted them. But if the ing to save him whom she had rescued when thing is not always harmful, but becomes good he was again in danger, made use of the same against you for a bad purpose; and as long as who are striving to injure thee, but quite the this proof is wanting it would only be fair for contrary. For I entrusted all my interests to those who wish to conduct themselves prudent- your judgment, and always followed it when-sation, but even to give a friendly reception to Chrysostom: But, my admirable and exthe deceiver. For a well-timed deception, undertaken with an upright intention, has such advantages, that many persons have often had thing to employ this kind of deceit, not only in peace, and in dealing with our dearest of deceit? And if any one were to reckon up skill alone, but sometimes conduct the sick to Jews: 3 with this purpose he circumcised Timhealth by availing themselves of deceit, and othy, 4 although he warned the Galatians in his of the patient and the obstinacy of the com- to the law, although he reckoned the righteousin order that, as on the stage, they may be able the value of deceit, provided it be not introto hide what really takes place. But, if you duced with a mischievous intention. In fact please, I will relate to you one instance of action of this kind ought not to be called destratagem out of many which I have heard of ceit, but rather a kind of good management, being contrived by the sons of the healing cleverness and skill, capable of finding out art.' A man was once suddenly attacked by ways where resources fail, and making up for a fever of great severity; the burning heat in- the defects of the mind. For I would not creased, and the patient rejected the remedies call Phinees a murderer, although he slew two which could have reduced it and craved for a human beings with one stroke: 7 nor yet Elias draught of pure wine, passionately entreating after the slaughter of the 100 soldiers, and all who approached to give it him and enable the captain, and the torrents of blood which him to satiate this deadly craving—I say he caused to be shed by the destruction of deadly, for if any one had gratified this re- those who sacrificed to devils.9 For if we quest he would not only have exasperated the were to concede this, and to examine the bare fever, but also have driven the unhappy man deeds in themselves apart from the intention frantic. Thereupon, professional skill being of the doers, one might if he pleased judge baffled, and at the end of its resources and Abraham guilty of child-murder 10 and accuse utterly thrown away, stratagem stepped in and his grandson 12 and descendant 12 of wickedness displayed its power in the way which I will and guile. For the one got possession of the now relate. For the physician took an earthen birthright, and the other transferred the wealth cup brought straight out of the furnace, and of the Egyptians to the host of the Israelites. having steeped it in wine, then drew it out But this is not the case: away with the audaempty, filled it with water, and, having ordered cious thought! For we not only acquit them the chamber where the sick man lay to be of blame, but also admire them because of darkened with curtains that the light might these things, since even God commended them not reveal the trick, he gave it him to drink, for the same. For that man would fairly depretending that it was filled with undiluted serve to be called a deceiver who made an wine. And the man, before he had taken it unrighteous use of the practice, not one who in his hands, being deceived by the smell, did did so with a salutary purpose. And often it not wait to examine what was given him, but is necessary to deceive, and to do the greatest convinced by the odor, and deceived by the benefits by means of this device, whereas he darkness, eagerly gulped down the draught, who has gone by a straight course has done and being satiated with it immediately shook great mischief to the person whom he has not off the feeling of suffocation and escaped the deceived. imminent peril.2 Do you see the advantage friends. For as a proof that it is beneficial all the tricks of physicians the list would run not only to the deceivers, but also to those on to an indefinite length. And not only those who are deceived; if you go to any of the who heal the body but those also who attend physicians and ask them how they relieve their to the diseases of the soul may be found conpatients from disease, they will tell you that tinually making use of this remedy. Thus the they do not depend upon their professional blessed Paul attracted those multitudes of blending the assistance which they derive from letter 5 that Christ would not profit those who it with their art. For when the waywardness were circumcised. For this cause he submitted plaint baffle the counsels of the physicians, it ness which came from the law but loss after is then necessary to put on the mask of deceit receiving the faith in Christ.6 For great is

¹ Literally, 's ons of physicians.' Compare the expression 's ons of the prophets' in the Old Testament.

² Clement of Alexandria (Stromata vii.) illustrates the same doctrine of allowable deceit for a useful purpose by a similar reference to the practice of physicians.

³ Acts xxi. 26.

⁶ Philipp. iii. 7.
9 1 Kings xviii. 34.
12 Exod. xi. 2. 7 Numb. xxv. 7. 10 Gen. xxii. 3.

⁵ Gal. v. 2. 8 2 Kings i. 9-12. 11 Ib. xxvii. 19.

BOOK II.

CONTENTS.

- I. THE PRIESTHOOD THE GREATEST EVIDENCE OF LOVE TO CHRIST.
- II. THE SERVICE OF THE PRIESTHOOD GREATER THAN ALL OTHER SERVICES.
- III. THE PRIESTHOOD HAS NEED OF A LARGE AND EXCELLENT SPIRIT.
- IV. IT IS FULL OF GREAT DIFFICULTY AND DANGER.
- V. THE OFFICE AVOIDED BY CHRYSOSTOM OUT OF HIS LOVE TO CHRIST.
- VI. A DEMONSTRATION OF THE VIRTUE OF BASIL, AND OF HIS ARDENT LOVE.
- VII. IN AVOIDING ORDINATION CHRYSOSTOM HAD NO INTENTION OF INSULTING THE ELECTORS. VIII. BY HIS FLIGHT HE SAVED THEM FROM BLAME.

deceit for a good purpose, or rather that in such we see any one bestowing care upon members a case it ought not to be called deceit, but a of our household, or upon our flocks, we count kind of good management worthy of all adhis zeal for them as a sign of love towards miration, might be proved at greater length; ourselves: yet all these things are to be bought but since what has already been said suffices for money:—with how great a gift then will for demonstration, it would be irksome and He requite those who tend the flock which He tedious to lengthen out my discourse upon the purchased, not with money, nor anything of subject. And now it will remain for you to that kind, but by His own death, giving his prove whether I have not employed this art to own blood as the price of the herd. Whereyour advantage.

I derived from this piece of good management, loved one Himself as a witness of his love, the or wise policy, or whatever you may please to Saviour did not stop there, but added that call it, so as to persuade me that I have not which was the token of love. For He did not tion (how should He who penetrates the hearts what purpose did He shed His blood? reward will be reserved for him whose labors make ruler over His household." 3 Again, the are concerned with these sheep, upon which

I. That it is possible then to make use of Christ places such a high value. For when Basil: And what kind of advantage have fore when the disciple said, "Thou knowest Lord that I love Thee," and invoked the bebeen deceived by you?

CHRYSOSTOM: What advantage, pray, could loved Him, but how much He Himself loved at that time wish to show how much Peter be greater than to be seen doing those things His own Church, and he desired to teach Peter which Christ with his own lips declared to be and all of us that we also should bestow much proofs of love to Himself?' For addressing the zeal upon the same. For why did God not leader of the apostles He said, "Peter, lovest spare His only-begotten Son, but delivered thou me?" and when he confessed that he did, Him up, although the only one He had?" It the Lord added, "if thou lovest me tend my was that He might reconcile to Himself those sheep." The Master asked the disciple if He who were disposed towards Him as enemies, was loved by him, not in order to get informa- and make them His peculiar people. For of all men?), but in order to teach us how great was that He might win these sheep which He an interest He takes in the superintendence entrusted to Peter and his successors. Naturof these sheep. This being plain, it will like- ally then did Christ say, "Who then is the wise be manifest that a great and unspeakable faithful and wise servant, whom his lord shall words are those of one who is in doubt, yet beyond material things and touches his own the speaker did not utter them in doubt, but life: and in the second place he has to carry just as He asked Peter whether he loved Him, on a far greater and more difficult contest. not from any need to learn the affection of the disciple, but from a desire to show the exceeding depth of his own love: so now also avert pestilence from the flock. With whom when He says, "Who then is the faithful and then has he to fight? with whom has he to wise servant?" he speaks not as being ig- wrestle? Listen to the words of St. Paul. norant who is faithful and wise, but as desir- "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but ing to set forth the rarity of such a character, against principalities, against powers, against and the greatness of this office. Observe at the rulers of the darkness of this world, against any rate how great the reward is—"He will ap-spiritual wickedness in high places." 4 Do point him," he says, "ruler over all his goods." you see the terrible multitude of enemies, and 2. Will you, then, still contend that you were their fierce squadrons, not steel clad, but ennot rightly deceived, when you are about to dued with a nature which is of itself an equivsuperintend the things which belong to God, alent for a complete suit of armor. Would and are doing that which when Peter did the you see yet another host, stern and cruel, be-Lord said he should be able to surpass the leaguering this flock? This also you shall berest of the apostles, for His words were, "Peter, hold from the same post of observation. For lovest thou me more than these?" 2 Yet He he who has discoursed to us concerning the might have said to him, "If thou lovest me others, points out these enemies also to us, practise fasting, sleeping on the ground, and speaking in a certain place on this wise: "The prolonged vigils, defend the wronged, be as a works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, father to orphans, and supply the place of a fornication, adultery, uncleanness, lascivioushusband to their mother." But as a matter of ness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, fact, setting aside all these things, what does emulation, wrath, strife, backbitings, whisper-He say? "Tend my sheep." For those things ings, swellings, tumults, and many more bewhich I have already mentioned might easily sides; for he did not make a complete list, but be performed by many even of those who are left us to understand the rest from these. under authority, women as well as men; but Moreover, in the case of the shepherd of irrawhen one is required to preside over the tional creatures, those who wish to destroy the Church, and to be entrusted with the care of flock, when they see the guardian take to flight, so many souls, the whole female sex must retire cease making war upon him, and are contented before the magnitude of the task, and the majority of men also; and we must bring forward even should they capture the whole flock, they those who to a large extent surpass all others, do not leave the shepherd unmolested, but atand soar as much above them in excellence of tack him all the more, and wax bolder, ceasing spirit as Saul overtopped the whole Hebrew not until they have either overthrown him, nation in bodily stature: or rather far more.3 or have themselves been vanquished. Again, For in this case let me not take the height of the afflictions of sheep are manifest, whether it shoulders as the standard of inquiry; but let be famine, or pestilence, or wounds, or whatthe distinction between the pastor and his soever else it may be which distresses them, charge be as great as that between rational and this might help not a little towards the man and irrational creatures, not to say even relief of those who are oppressed in these greater, inasmuch as the risk is concerned ways. And there is yet another fact greater with things of far greater importance. He than this which facilitates release from this indeed who has lost sheep, either through the kind of infirmity. And what, is that? The ravages of wolves, or the attacks of robbers, or shepherds with great authority compel the through murrain, or any other disaster befall-ing them, might perhaps obtain some indul-willingly submit to it. For it is easy to bind gence from the owner of the flock; and even if them when cautery or cutting is required, and the latter should demand satisfaction the pen- to keep them inside the fold for a long time, alty would be only a matter of money: but he whenever it is expedient, and to bring them who has human beings entrusted to him, the ra- one kind of food instead of another, and to tional flock of Christ, incurs a penalty in the cut them off from their supplies of water, and all first place for the loss of the sheep, which goes other things which the shepherds may decide to be conducive to their health they perform with great ease.

² Rom, viii. 32; John iii. 16. 3 Matt. xxiv. 45. Some Mss. of Chrysostom have the future καποτήσει, shall make ruler, but all Mss. of the New Testament have the norist κατέστησε, made ruler.

Matt. xxiv. 47. 2 In some editions the words "tend my sheep" are added here. 3 1 Sam. x. 23.

⁴ Ephes. vi. 12. 5 Gal. v. 19, 20, 21.

3. But in the case of human infirmities, it headlong, "breaking the yoke and bursting to cure a man by compulsion against his will.

you remove one part of the sore but leave the requisite incision unsparingly, the patient, driven to desperation by his sufferings, will often fling everything away at once, both the remedy and the bandage, and throw himself down is not easy in the first place for a man to dis- the band." I could tell of many who have cern them, for no man "knoweth the things of run into extreme evils because the due penalty a man, save the spirit of man which is in of their sins was exacted. For we ought not, him." How then can any one apply the in applying punishment, merely to proportion remedy for the disease of which he does not it to the scale of the offence, but rather to know the character, often indeed being un- keep in view the disposition of the sinner, lest able to understand it even should he happen whilst wishing to mend what is torn, you make to sicken with it himself? And even when it the rent worse, and in your zealous endeavors becomes manifest, it causes him yet more to restore what is fallen, you make the ruin trouble: for it is not possible to doctor all greater. For weak and careless characters, men with the same authority with which the addicted for the most part to the pleasures of shepherd treats his sheep. For in this case the world, and having occasion to be proud also it is necessary to bind and to restrain from on account of birth and position, may yet, if food, and to use cautery or the knife: but the gently and gradually brought to repent of their reception of the treatment depends on the will errors, be delivered, partially at least, if not of the patient, not of him who applies the perfectly, from the evils by which they are posremedy. For this also was perceived by that sessed: but if any one were to inflict the diswonderful man (St. Paul) when he said to the cipline all at once, he would deprive them of Corinthians - "Not for that we have dominion this slight chance of amendment. For when over your faith, but are helpers of your joy." once the soul has been forced to put off shame For Christians above all men are not permitted it lapses into a callous condition, and neither forcibly to correct the failings of those who sin. yields to kindly words nor bends to threats, Secular judges indeed, when they have cap- nor is susceptible of gratitude, but becomes tured malefactors under the law, show their far worse than that city which the prophet reauthority to be great, and prevent them even proached, saying, "thou hadst the face of a against their will from following their own deharlot, refusing to be ashamed before all men." vices: but in our case the wrong-doer must Therefore the pastor has need of much discrebe made better, not by force, but by persuasion. tion, and of a myriad eyes to observe on every For neither has authority of this kind for the side the habit of the soul. For as many are restraint of sinners been given us by law, nor, uplifted to pride, and then sink into despair of if it had been given, should we have any field their salvation, from inability to endure severe for the exercise of our power, inasmuch as remedies, so are there some, who from paying God rewards those who abstain from evil by no penalty equivalent to their sins, fall into their own choice, not of necessity. Conse-negligence, and become far worse, and are quently much skill is required that our patients impelled to greater sins. It behoves the priest may be induced to submit willingly to the therefore to leave none of these things unextreatment prescribed by the physicians, and amined, but, after a thorough inquiry into all not only this, but that they may be grateful of them, to apply such remedies as he has apalso for the cure. For if any one when he is positely to each case, lest his zeal prove to be bound becomes restive (which it is in his in vain. And not in this matter only, but also power to be), he makes the mischief worse; in the work of knitting together the severed and if he should pay no heed to the words members of the Church, one can see that he which cut like steel, he inflicts another wound has much to do. For the pastor of sheep has by means of this contempt, and the intention his flock following him, wherever he may lead to heal only becomes the occasion of a worse them: and if any should stray out of the straight disorder. For it is not possible for any one path, and, deserting the good pasture, feed in unproductive or rugged places, a loud shout 4. What then is one to do? For if you suffices to collect them and bring back to the deal too gently with him who needs a severe fold those who have been parted from it: but application of the knife, and do not strike if a human being wanders away from the right deep into one who requires such treatment, faith, great exertion, perseverance and patience are required; for he cannot be dragged back other: and if on the other hand you make the by force, nor constrained by fear, but must be led back by persuasion to the truth from which be originally swerved. The pastor therefore ought to be of a noble spirit, so as not to despond, or to despair of the salvation of wanderers from the fold, but continually to reason with himself and say, "Peradventure God will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil." Therefore the Lord, when addressing His disciples, said, "Who then is the faithful and wise servant?"2 For he indeed who disciplines himself compasses only his own advantage, but the benefit of the pastoral function extends to the whole people. And one who dispenses money to the needy, or otherwise succors the oppressed, benefits his neighbors to some extent, but so much less than the priest in proportion as the body is inferior to the soul. Rightly therefore did the Lord say that zeal for the flock was a token of love for Himself.

Basil: But thou thyself—dost thou not love Christ?

Chrysostom: Yea, I love Him, and shall never cease loving Him; but I fear lest I should provoke Him whom I love.

BASIL: But what riddle can there be more obscure than this—Christ has commanded him who loves Him to tend His sheep, and yet you say that you decline to tend them because you love Him who gave this command?

CHRYSOSTOM: My saying is no riddle, but very intelligible and simple, for if I were well qualified to administer this office, as Christ desired it, and then shunned it, my remark might be open to doubt, but since the infirmity of my spirit renders me useless for this ministry, why does my saying deserve to be called in question? For I fear lest if I took the flock in hand when it was in good condition and well nourished, and then wasted it through my unskilfulness, I should provoke against myself the God who so loved the flock as to give Himself up for their salvation and ransom.

BASIL: You speak in jest: for if you were in earnest I know not how you would have proved me to be justly grieved otherwise than by means of these very words whereby you have endeavored to dispel my dejection. knew indeed before that you had deceived and betrayed me, but much more now, when you have undertaken to clear yourself of my accusations, do I plainly perceive and understand the extent of the evils into which you have led me. For if you withdrew yourself from this ministry because you were conscious that your spirit was not equal to the burden of the task, I ought to have been rescued from it before you, even if I had chanced to have a great desire for it, to say nothing of having confided to you the entire decision of these matters: but as it is, you have looked solely to your own interest and neglected mine. Would indeed you had entirely neglected them; then I should have been well content: but you plotted to facilitate my capture by those who wished to seize me. For you cannot take shelter in the argument that public opinion deceived you and induced you to imagine great and wonderful things concerning me. For I was none of your wonderful and distinguished men, nor, had this been the case, ought you to have preferred public opinion to truth. For if I had never permitted you to enjoy my society, you might have seemed to have a reasonable pretext for being guided in your vote by public report; but if there is no one who has such thorough knowledge of my affairs, if you are acquainted with my character better than my parents and those who brought me up, what argument can you employ which will be convincing enough to persuade your hearers that you did not purposely thrust me into this danger: say, what answer shall I make to your accusers?

CHRYSOSTOM: Nay! I will not proceed to those questions until I have resolved such as concern yourself alone, if you were to ask me ten thousand times to dispose of these charges. You said indeed that ignorance would bring me forgiveness, and that I should have been free from all accusation if I had brought you into your present position not knowing anything about you, but that as I did not betray you in ignorance, but was intimately acquainted with your affairs, I was deprived of all reasonable pretext and excuse. But I say precisely the reverse: for in such matters there is need of careful scrutiny, and he who is going to present any one as qualified for the priesthood ought not to be content with public report only, but should also himself, above all and before all, investigate the man's character. For when the blessed Paul says, "He must also have a good report of them which are without," 3 he does not dispense with an exact and rigorous inquiry, nor does he assign to such testimony precedence over the scrutiny required in such cases. For after much previous discourse, he mentioned this additional testimony, proving that one must not be contented with it alone for elections of this kind, but take it into consideration along with the rest. For public report often speaks false; but when careful investigation precedes, no further danger need be apprehended from it. On this account, after the other kinds of evidence he places that which comes from those who are without. For he did not simply say, "he must have a good report," but added the words, "from them which are without," wishing past, as oblivion would then prevent any obblame.

ordinary cares?

you attempt to convict me of saying what is friends." the miracles which were to be wrought by the course? apostles, Christ said, "Hereby shall men know that ye are my disciples if ye love one ansufficient for the correction of one's fellowother," and Paul said that it was the fulfill- men? ing of the law, and that in default of it no spiritual gift had any profit. Well, this choice ute in a great measure to this end. But if good, the distinguishing mark of Christ's dis- you wish me to produce evidence of your ciples, the gift which is higher than all other practical wisdom also, I will proceed to do so, gifts, I perceived to be deeply implanted in and will prove that your understanding exceeds your soul, and teeming with much fruit.

BASIL: I acknowledge indeed that the matter is one of deep concern to me, and said, "Let my character be now dismissed: that I endeavor most earnestly to keep this for it was not about this that I originally decommandment, but that I have not even half manded an explanation; but if you have any succeeded in so doing, even you yourself just answer to make to those who are without, would bear me witness if you would leave off I would gladly hear what you have to say. talking out of partiality, and simply respect Wherefore, abandoning this vain contest, tell the truth.

myself to my evidences, and shall now do tressed on their account, considering them to what I threatened, proving that you wish to be insulted. disparage yourself rather than to speak the truth. But I will mention a fact which has which I am finally hastening, for as my exonly just occurred, that no one may suspect to show that before the report of those with-jection being made to the things which I out he must be carefully examined. Inasmuch, might say with a view to gratification.³ For then, as I myself knew your affairs better than when one of our intimate friends, having been your parents, as you also yourself acknowl- falsely accused of insult and folly, was in exedged, I might deserve to be released from all treme peril, you then flung yourself into the midst of the danger, although you were not sum-BASIL: Nay this is the very reason why moned by any one, or appealed to by the peryou could not escape, if any one chose to in- son who was about to be involved in danger. dite you. Do you not remember hearing from Such was the fact: but that I may convict you me, and often learning from my actual con- out of your own mouth, I will remind you of duct, the feebleness of my character? Were the words you uttered: for when some did not you not perpetually taunting me for my pusil- approve of this zeal, while others commended lanimity, because I was so easily dejected by and admired it, "How can I help myself?" you said to those who accused you, "for I do 5. Chrysostom: I do indeed remember not know how otherwise to love than by givoften hearing such things said by you; I would ing up my life when it is necessary to save not deny it. But if I ever taunted you, I did it any of my friends who is in danger:" thus rein sport and not in serious truth. However, I peating, in different words, indeed, but with the do not now dispute about these matters, and I same meaning, what Christ said to his disciples claim the same degree of forbearance from when he laid down the definition of perfect you while I wish to make mention of some of love. "Greater love," He said, "hath no man the good qualities which you possess. For if than this that a man lay down his life for his If then it is impossible to find untrue, I shall not spare you, but shall prove greater love than this, you have attained its that you say these things rather by way of limit, and both by your deeds and words have self-depreciation than with a view to truth, crowned the summit. This is why I betrayed and I will employ no evidence but your own you, this is why I contrived that plot. Do I words and deeds to demonstrate the truth of now convince you that it was not from any my assertion. And now the first question I malicious intent, nor from any desire to thrust wish to ask of you is this: do you know how you into danger, but from a persuasion of your great the power of love is? For omitting all future usefulness that I dragged you into this

Basil: Do you then suppose that love is CHRYSOSTOM: Certainly it would contribyour lovingkindness.

At these remarks he blushed scarlet and me what defence I shall make, both to those who 6. Chrysostom: Well, then, I shall betake have honored you and to those who are dis-

7. Chrysostom: This is just the point to me of attempting to obscure the truth by the great lapse of time in relating events long at lapse of time in relating events long at lapse of time in relating events long are lapse of time in relating events long at lapse of time in relating events long long long the lapse of time in relating events long time longer fresh in people's recollection, the accuracy of his substantial people's recollection, the accuracy of his substantial long in the bested, and he might be suspected of partiality.

planation to you has been completed I shall port themselves by daily labor: but if there be easily turn to this part of my defence. What any one who devotes himself to secular learning, then is the accusation made by these persons, and is brought up in idleness, him they receive and what are their charges? They say that and admire. For why, pray, have they passed they have been insulted and grievously by men who have undergone innumerable wronged by me because I have not accepted toils in the service of the Church, and sudthe honor which they wished to confer upon denly dragged into this dignity one who has count should be taken of the insult shown to has spent all his youth in the vain study of men, seeing that by paying honor to them I secular learning." These things and more they should be compelled to offend God. And I might have said had I accepted the office: should say to those who are displeased that it but not so now. For every pretext for malignis not safe to take offence at these things, but ing is now cut away from them, and they can does them much harm. For I think that those neither accuse me of flattery, nor the others they happened to be a thousand times dishon- obtain the dignity, have abandoned it to others even to think of daring anything of this kind would be just as if a man who had bestowed if indeed I had been induced by arrogance the corn field might be laden with abunslanderously affirm, to assent to my accusers, I wine, after innumerable toils and great exshould have been one of the most iniquitous penditure of money were to surrender the of mankind, having treated great and excellent fruits to others just when it was time to reap men, my benefactors moreover, with contempt. his corn and gather in his vintage. Do you For if men ought to be punished for wronging see that although what was said might be far could possibly say that they were requiting made without fair judgment and considerame for any benefits small or great which they had received at my hands. How great a punbeing open mouthed, or even uttering a single ishment then would one deserve if one re- word on the subject. Such then and more even honored them by my refusal.

speedy solution of it.

all men, but those who take pleasure in speak- they have defiled the flock of God, and Chriscannot say whether some one might not have not to be the test of an elder—that the young fishermen, tentmakers, and publicans to this difference between the two is great. dignity, whereas these men reject those who sup-1 Ps. cvii. 42.

Now in the first place I say that no ac- never experienced any labors of this kind, but who stay themselves on God and look to Him of receiving bribes, unless some choose to act alone, ought to be so religiously disposed as like mere madmen. For how could one who not to account such a thing an insult, even if used flattery and expended money in order to ored. But that I have not gone so far as when he might have obtained it? For this is manifest from what I am about to say. For much labor upon the ground in order that and vainglory, as you have often said some dant produce, and the presses overflow with those who have never wronged them, how from the truth, nevertheless those who wished ought we to honor those who have spontane- to calumniate the electors would then have ously preferred to honor us? For no one had a pretext for alleging that the choice was quited them in the contrary manner. But if would have been their remarks at the outset. such a thing never entered my mind, and I But after undertaking the ministry I should declined the heavy burden with quite a differ- not have been able day by day to defend myent intention, why do they refuse to pardon self against accusers, even if I had done everyme (even if they do not consent to approve), thing faultlessly, to say nothing of the many but accuse me of having selfishly spared my mistakes which I must have made owing to own soul? For so far from having insulted my youth and inexperience. But now I have the men in question I should say that I had saved the electors from this kind of accusation also, whereas in the other case I should And do not be surprised at the paradoxical have involved them in innumerable reproaches. nature of my remark, for I shall supply a For what would not the world have said? "They have committed affairs of such vast in-8. For had I accepted the office, I do not say terest and importance to thoughtless youths, ing evil, might have suspected and said many tian affairs have become a jest and a laughingthings concerning myself who had been elected stock." But now "all iniquity shall stop her and concerning them, the electors: for in- mouth.": For although they may say these stance, that they regarded wealth, and admired things on your account, you will speedily teach splendor of rank, or had been induced by flat- them by your acts that understanding is not tery to promote me to this honor: indeed I to be estimated by age, and the grey head is suspected that they were bribed by money, man ought not to be absolutely excluded from Moreover, they would have said, "Christ called the ministry, but only the novice: and the

BOOK III

CONTENTS.

- I. THOSE WHO SUSPECTED ME OF DECLINING THIS OFFICE THROUGH ARROGANCE INJURED THEIR OWN REPUTATION.
- II. I DID NOT AVOID IT THROUGH VAINGLORY.
- III. IF I HAD DESIRED GLORY I SHOULD RATHER HAVE CHOSEN THE WORK.
- IV. THE PRIESTHOOD IS AN AWFUL THING, AND THE SERVICE THEREOF UNDER THE NEW DISPEN-SATION FAR MORE AWFUL THAN UNDER THE OLD.
 - V. THE GREAT AUTHORITY AND DIGNITY OF THE PRIESTHOOD.
- VI. SACRED MINISTRIES ARE AMONGST THE GREATEST OF GOD'S GIFTS.
- VII. EVEN PAUL WAS FILLED WITH FEAR WHEN HE CONSIDERED THE MAGNITUDE OF THE OFFICE.
- VIII. HE WHO ENTERS UPON IT IS OFTEN SNARED INTO SIN, UNLESS HE IS VERY NOBLE-MINDED.
 - IX. HE IS CAUGHT BY VAINGLORY AND ITS ATTENDANT EVILS.
 - X. THE PRIESTHOOD IS NOT THE CAUSE OF THESE THINGS, BUT OUR OWN INDOLENCE.
 - XI. THE LUST OF DOMINATION SHOULD BE CAST OUT OF THE SOUL OF A PRIEST.
- 1. Chrysostom: As regards the insult to tempt on a herd of oxen and refused to be a It is just as if one were to accuse, not of pride, but of insanity, a man who looked with con-

those who have done me honor, what I have herdsman, and yet were to say that a man already said might be sufficient to prove that who declined the empire of the world, and the in avoiding this office I had no desire to put command of all the armies of the earth, was them to shame; but I will now endeavor to not mad, but inflated with pride. But this make it evident, to the best of my ability, that assuredly is not the case; and they who say I was not puffed up by arrogance of any kind, such things do not injure me more than they For if the choice of a generalship or a king-injure themselves. For merely to imagine it dom had been submitted to me, and I had possible for human nature to despise this digthen formed this resolution, any one might nity is an evidence against those who bring naturally have suspected me of this fault, or this charge of the estimate which they have rather I should have been found guilty by all formed of the office. For if they did not conmen, not of arrogance, but of senseless folly. sider it to be an ordinary thing of no great ac-But when the priesthood is offered to me, count, such a suspicion as this would never which exceeds a kingdom as much as the spirit have entered their heads. For why is it that differs from the flesh, will any one dare to ac no one has ever dared to entertain such a suscuse me of disdain? And is it not preposte- picion with reference to the dignity of the rous to charge with folly those who reject small angels, and to say that arrogance is the reason things, but when any do this in matters of why human nature would not aspire to the pre-eminent importance, to exempt such per- rank of the angelic nature? It is because we sons from accusations of mental derangement, imagine great things concerning those powers, and yet subject them to the charge of pride? and this does not suffer us to believe that a man can conceive anything greater than that honor. Wherefore one might with more justice indite those persons of arrogance who accuse me of it. For they would never have suspected this of others if they had not previously depreciated the matter as being of no account. But if they say that I have done this with a view to glory, they will be convicted of fighting openly against themselves and falling into their own snare; for I do not know ¹ There are six chapters more, but the headings are wanting in the Greek copies. They have been added by one of the Latin translators, and are as follows: XII. That the priest ought to be very wise.

XII. I had the priest ought to be very wise.
XIII. Besides the greatest forbearance other things also are needed in the soul of a priest.
XIV. Nothing blunts the purity and keenness of the mind so much as unregulated anger.
XV. Chrysostom points out another form of strife full of perils.
XVI. How great he ought to be, who has to confront such size of the priest of what kind of arguments they could have sought the deep silence within.' But if any one should release me from the charge of vainglory.

XVII. How much there is to dread in the management of virgins.

mind, I ought to have accepted the office rather and that what was spoken concerning the law than avoided it. Why? because it would have is true in this case also, that "what has been brought me much glory. For the fact that made glorious hath no glory in this respect by one of my age, who had so recently abandoned reason of the glory which excelleth." For secular pursuits, should suddenly be deemed by all worthy of such admiration as to be adupon the altar, and the priest standing and vanced to honor before those who have spent praying over the victim, and all the worshipall their life in labors of this kind, and to ob- pers empurpled with that precious blood,4 tain more votes than all of them, might have canst thou then think that thou art still persuaded all men to anticipate great and amongst men, and standing upon the earth? marvellous things of me. But, as it is, the Art thou not, on the contrary, straightway greater part of the Church does not know me translated to Heaven, and casting out every even by name: so that even my refusal of the carnal thought from the soul, dost thou not office will not be manifest to all, but only to a with disembodied spirit and pure reason confew, and I am not sure that all even of these template the things which are in Heaven? know it for certain; but probably many of Oh! what a marvel! what love of God to them either imagine that I was not elected at man! He who sitteth on high with the Father all, or that I was rejected after the election, is at that hour held in the hands of all,5 and being considered unsuitable, not that I avoided gives Himself to those who are willing to emthe office of my own accord.

3. BASIL: But those who do know the truth will be surprised.

CHRYSOSTOM: And lo! these are they who, according to you, falsely accuse me of vainglory and pride. Whence then am I to hope for praise? From the many? They do not know the actual fact. From the few? Here again the matter is perverted to my disadvantage. For the resisons which in later times would have been liable to objection or misconstruction.

The passage before us must be read in the light of other passages in Chrysostom's works; but one of these is sufficient to learn what answer ought to be given to them. And what shall I now certainly say on account of these things? For wait a little, and you will clearly perceive that even if all know the truth they ought not to condemn me for pride and love of glory. And in addition to this there is another consideration: that not only those who make this venture, if there be any such (which for my part I do not believe), but also those who suspect it of others, will be involved in no small danger.

4. For the priestly office is indeed discharged on earth, but it ranks amongst heavenly ordinances; and very naturally so: for neither man, nor angel, nor archangel, nor any other created power, but the Paraclete Himself, instituted this vocation, and persuaded men whils still abiding in the flesh to represent the ministry of angels. Wherefore the consecrated priest ought to be as pure as if he were standing in the heavens themselves in the midst of those powers. Fearful, indeed, and of most awful import, were the things which were used before the sacrifice is not plate of gold, the holy of holies, and he light of other passages in the writing to depth in this works; but one of these is sufficient to indicate the sense in which it is to be understood. In Homily wite, 2, on the Firstle to the Hebrews, after contrasting the many and ineffectual secrifices was efferced and efficient sensities series in which it is to be understood. In Homily wite, 2, on the Firstle to the Hebrews, after contrasting the many and ineffectual secrifices was efferced and efficient series in which it is one house after contrasting the early and efficient series of the jews with the one perfect and efficient series on the Holy of Holies. This is a figure of the series of th in preference to these if they had wished to examine the things which belong to the dispensation of grace, he will find that, small as 2. For if this desire had ever entered my they are, yet are they fearful and full of awe, brace and grasp Him. And this all do through

> ¹ Exod, xxviii, 4 sq.
>
> ² The Holy Eucharist is frequently called by St. chrysostom and other Greek Fathers the Sacrifice, sometimes the "unbloody Sacrifice," partly as being an offering of praise and thanksgiving, partly as being a commemoration or representation of the sacrifice of Christ. We must bear in mind that no controversy had then arrisen about this Sacrament, and that writers could freely use expressions which in later times would have been liable to objection or misconstruction. or misconstruction.

The passage before us must be read in the light of other pasthe eyes of faith!' Do these things seem to trates the heavens; and what priests do here you fit to be despised, or such as to make it below God ratifies above, and the Master conthem?

sistance of God's grace been great.

the Spirit has vouchsafed to priests; since by blood is excluded from eternal life, and if all their agency these rites are celebrated, and these things are accomplished only by means of our dignity and our salvation. For they priest, how will any one, without these, be able there are entrusted with the administration of crowns which are reserved for the victorious? things which are in Heaven, and have received 6. These verily are they who are entrusted angels or archangels. For it has not been said birth which comes through baptism: by their possible for any one to be uplifted against firms the sentence of his servants. For indeed what is it but all manner of heavenly authority Would you also learn from another miracle which He has given them when He says, the exceeding sanctity of this office? Picture "Whose sins ye remit they are remitted, and Elijah and the vast multitude standing around whose sins ye retain they are retained?"4 him, and the sacrifice laid upon the altar of What authority could be greater than this? stones, and all the rest of the people hushed "The Father hath committed all judgment into a deep silence while the prophet alone offers up prayer: then the sudden rush of fire hands of these men by the Son. For they have from Heaven upon the sacrifice:—these are been conducted to this dignity as if they were marvellous things, charged with terror. Now already translated to Heaven, and had tranthen pass from this scene to the rites which scended human nature, and were released are celebrated in the present day; they are from the passions to which we are liable. not only marvellous to behold, but transcend-ent in terror. There stands the priest, not upon any of his subjects, authorizing him to bringing down fire from Heaven, but the Holy cast into prison whom he pleased and to re-Spirit: and he makes prolonged supplication, lease them again, he becomes an object of not that some flame sent down from on high envy and respect to all men; but he who has may consume the offerings, but that grace de-received from God an authority as much scending on the sacrifice may thereby en- greater as heaven is more precious than earth, lighten the souls of all, and render them more and souls more precious than bodies, seems to refulgent than silver purified by fire. Who some to have received so small an honor that can despise this most awful mystery, unless they are actually able to imagine that one of he is stark mad and senseless? Or do you those who have been entrusted with these not know that no human soul could have en- things will despise the gift. Away with such dured that fire in the sacrifice, but all would madness! For transparent madness it is to have been utterly consumed, had not the as-despise so great a dignity, without which it is not possible to obtain either our own salvation, 5. For if any one will consider how great a or the good things which have been promised thing it is for one, being a man, and compassed to us. For if no one can enter into the kingwith flesh and blood, to be enabled to draw dom of Heaven except he be regenerate nigh to that blessed and pure nature, he will through water and the Spirit, and he who does then clearly see what great honor the grace of not eat the flesh of the Lord and drink His others nowise inferior to these both in respect of those holy hands, I mean the hands of the who inhabit the earth and make their abode to escape the fire of hell, or to win those an authority which God has not given to with the pangs of spiritual travail and the to them, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth means we put on Christ, and are buried with shall be bound in Heaven, and whatsoever ye the Son of God, and become members of that shall loose on earth shall be loosed in Heav- blessed Head. Wherefore they might not en."3 They who rule on earth have indeed only be more justly feared by us than rulers authority to bind, but only the body: whereas and kings, but also be more honored than this binding lays hold of the soul and pene- parents; since these begat us of blood and the will of the flesh, but the others are the authors 1. Some MSS. omit the word πίστεως "of faith," having in its place rore "hit that time."

2. In the Little word πίστεως "of faith," having in its place rore "hit that time."

3. In the Little word πίστεως "of faith," having in its place rore. "hit that time."

4. In the Little word πίστεως "of faith," having in its place with the word middlowing interestion of the Holy Spirit occurs: "Grant that we may find grace and the the sonship according to grace. The Jewish proposed with the word middlow with the sonship according to grace. The Jewish proposed with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed with the deacon bids the people." The people with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed with the deacon bids the people." The people with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed with the deacon bids the people." The people with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed with the deacon bids the people." The people with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed before with the deacon bids the people." The people with the deacon bids the people. "Let's proposed before with the deacon bids the was contended for at that time. But our Well! after this will any one venture to priests have received authority to deal, not condemn me for arrogance? For my part, with bodily leprosy, but spiritual uncleanness after what has been said, I imagine such re-—not to pronounce it removed after examina- ligous fear will possess the souls of the hearers tion, but actually and absolutely to take it that they will no longer condemn those who away. Wherefore they who despise these avoid the office for arrogance and temerity, priests would be far more accursed than but rather those who voluntarily come forward Dathan and his company, and deserve more and are eager to obtain this dignity for themsevere punishment. For the latter, although selves. For if they who have been entrusted they laid claim to the dignity which did not with the command of cities, should they chance belong to them, nevertheless had an excellent to be wanting in discretion and vigilance, have opinion concerning it, and this they evinced sometimes destroyed the cities and ruined by the great eagerness with which they pursued themselves in addition, how much power think it; but these men, when the office has been you both in himself and from above must he better regulated, and has received so great a need, to avoid sinning, whose business it is to development, have displayed an audacity which beautify the Bride of Christ? exceeds that of the others, although manifested 7. No man loved Christ more than Paul: in a contrary way. For there is not an equal no man exhibited greater zeal, no man was amount of contempt involved in aiming at an counted worthy of more grace: nevertheless, honor which does not pertain to one, and in after all these great advantages, he still has despising such great advantages, but the latter fears and tremblings concerning this governexceeds the former as much as scorn differs ment and those who were governed by him, from admiration. What soul then is so sordid "I fear," he says, "lest by any means, as the as to despise such great advantages? None serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so whatever, I should say, unless it were one sub- your minds should be corrupted from the simject to some demoniacal impulse. For I return plicity which is in Christ." And again, "I once more to the point from which I started: was with you in fear and in much trembling;"3 not in the way of chastising only, but also and this was a man who had been caught up in the way of benefiting, God has bestowed a to the third Heaven, and made partaker of power on priests greater than that of our the unspeakable mysteries of God,4 and had natural parents. The two indeed differ as endured as many deaths as he had lived days much as the present and the future life. For after he became a believer—a man, moreover, our natural parents generate us unto this life who would not use the authority given him only, but the others unto that which is to come. from Christ lest any of his converts should be And the former would not be able to avert offended.5 If, then, he who went beyond the death from their offspring, or to repel the as- ordinances of God, and nowhere sought his saults of disease; but these others have often own advantage, but that of those whom he govsaved a sick soul, or one which was on the point erned, was always so full of fear when he conof perishing, procuring for some a milder chas-sidered the greatness of his government, what tisement, and preventing others from falling shall our condition be who in many ways seek altogether, not only by instruction and ad- our own, who not only fail to go beyond the monition, but also by the assistance wrought commandments of Christ, but for the most through prayers. For not only at the time of part transgress them? "Who is weak," he regeneration, but afterwards also, they have says, "and I am not weak? who is offended authority to forgive sins. "Is any sick among and I burn not?" Such an one ought the you?" it is said, "let him call for the elders priest to be, or, rather, not such only: for of the Church and let them pray over him, these are small things, and as nothing comanointing him with oil in the name of the pared with what I am about to say. And sick, and the Lord will raise him up: and if myself were accursed from Christ for my he have committed sins they shall be forgiven brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh."7 him." Again: our natural parents, should If any one can utter such a speech, if any one their children come into conflict with any men has the soul which attains to such a prayer, he of high rank and great power in the world, are might justly be blamed if he took to flight: unable to profit them: but priests have recon- but if any one should lack such excellence as ciled, not rulers and kings, but God Himself much as I do, he would deserve to be hated, when His wrath has often been provoked not if he avoided the office, but if he accepted against them.

Lord. And the prayer of faith shall save the what is this? "I could wish," he says, "that it. For if an election to a military dignity acts of fellow ministers, sorrow at their proswas the business in hand, and they who had perity, love of praise, desire of honor (which the right of conferring the honor were to drag indeed most of all drives the human soul such artisan, and entrust the army to his please, servile flatteries, ignoble fawning, conhands. I should not praise the wretched man tempt of the poor, paying court to the rich, if he did not take to flight, and do all in his senseless and mischievous honors, favors attrouble. If, indeed, it be sufficient to bear the and those who accept them, sordid fear suited name of pastor, and to take the work in hand only to the basest of slaves, the abolition of hap-hazard, and there be no danger in this, plain speaking, a great affectation of humility, rightness of conduct, and purity of life and open his lips. superhuman virtue, do not deprive me of forgiveness if I am unwilling to perish in vain these, are bred upon that rock of which I have without a cause.

4 2 Cor. xii. 4. 6 2 Cor. xi. 29.

² ² Cor. xi. 3. ⁵ ² Cor. xi. 9; Thess. ii. 9. ⁷ Rom. ix. 3. 1 James v. 14, 15.

sized merchant ship, full of rowers, and laden depth of servitude that even to please women with a costly freight, were to station me at the they often do many things which it is well not helm and bid me cross the Ægean or the Tyr- to mention. The divine law indeed has exrhene sea, I should recoil from the proposal at cluded women from the ministry, but they enonce: and if any one asked me why? I should deavor to thrust themselves into it; and since say, "Lest I should sink the ship." Well, they can effect nothing of themselves, they do where the loss concerns material wealth, and all through the agency of others; and they the danger extends only to bodily death, no have become invested with so much power one will blame those who exercise great pru-dence; but where the shipwrecked are destined will: 'things in fact are turned upside down, to fall, not into the ocean, but into the abyss and the proverbial saying may be seen realized of fire, and the death which awaits them is not -"The ruled lead the rulers:" and would that which severs the soul from the body, but that it were men who do this instead of women, one which together with this dismisses it to who have not received a commission to teach. eternal punishment, shall I incur your wrath Why do I say teach? for the blessed Paul did and hate because I did not plunge headlong not suffer them even to speak in the Church." into so great an evil?

know my own soul, how feeble and puny it is: as even to rebuke the prelates of the Churches, I know the magnitude of this ministry, and and censure them more severely than masters the great difficulty of the work; for more do their own domestics. stormy billows vex the soul of the priest than the gales which disturb the sea.

of vainglory, more dangerous than that of the tanglements, and exceed in number those who Sirens, of which the fable-mongers tell such have been caught by them. Nor would I marvellous tales: for many were able to sail indeed make the priesthood responsible for past that and escape unscathed; but this is to these evils: far be such madness from me. me so dangerous that even now, when no ne- For men of understanding do not say that the cessity of any kind impels me into that abyss, I sword is to blame for murder, nor wine for am unable to keep clear of the snare: but if drunkenness, nor strength for outrage, nor courwild beasts are? They are wrath, despondency, envy, strife, slanders, accusations, falsehood, hypocrisy, intrigues, anger against those who have done no harm, pleasure at the indecorous forward a brazier, or a shoemaker, or some headlong to perdition), doctrines devised to power to avoid plunging into such manifest tended with danger both to those who offer then let whoso pleases accuse me of vainglory; but banishment of truth, the suppression of but if it behoves one who undertakes this care convictions and reproofs, or rather the excessive to have much understanding, and, before un- use of them against the poor, while against derstanding, great grace from God, and up- those who are invested with power no one dare

For all these wild beasts, and more than spoken, and those whom they have once cap-Moreover, if any one in charge of a full-tured are inevitably dragged down into such a But I have heard some one say that they have 8. Do not thus, I pray and beseech you. I obtained such a large privilege of free speech,

10. And let not any one suppose that I subject all to the aforesaid charges: for there are q. And first of all is that most terrible rock some, yea many, who are superior to these enany one were to commit this charge to me, it age for foolhardiness, but they lay the blame would be all the same as if he tied my hands on those who make an improper use of the behind my back, and delivered me to the wild gifts which have been bestowed upon them by beasts dwelling on that rock to rend me in God, and punish them accordingly. Certainly, pieces day by day. Do you ask what those at least, the priesthood may justly accuse us if we do not rightly handle it. For it is not oneself from the dignity; for thus one might itself a cause of the evils already mentioned, but we, who as far as lies in our power have but to cling to it in defiance of propriety is to defiled it with so many pollutions, by entrusting it to commonplace men who readily accept kindle the wrath of God, by adding a second what is offered them, without having first ac- error more offensive than the first. quired a knowledge of their own souls, or contheir care. This is the very thing which was he? "If any man desireth the office of a bish-God speedily delivered me from those dangers, mercifully sparing his Church and my own work, but only the authority and power. And soul. For, tell me, whence do you think such this desire I think one ought to expel from great troubles are generated in the Churches? the soul with all possible earnestness, not dure innumerable evils in order to keep a secure hold upon it, even to the extent of using flattery, or submitting to something base and ignoble, or expending large sums of money. For I will not now speak of the murders with which some have filled the Churches," or the desolation which they have brought upon cities in contending for the dignity, lest some persons should think what I say incredible. But I am of opinion one ought to exercise so much caution in the matter, as to shun the burden of the office,2 and when one has entered upon it, not to wait for the judgment of others should any fault be committed which warrants deposition, but to anticipate it by ejecting probably win mercy for himself from God: deprive oneself of all forgiveness, or rather to 11. But no one will always endure the strain; sidered the gravity of the office, and when for fearful, truly fearful is the eager desire after they have entered on the work, being blinded this honor. And in saying this I am not in by inexperience, overwhelm with innumerable opposition to the blessed Paul, but in comevils the people who have been committed to plete harmony with his words. For what says very nearly happening in my case, had not op, he desireth a good work." 3 Now I have not said that it is a terrible thing to desire the I, for my part, believe the only source of them permitting it at the outset to be possessed by to be the inconsiderate and random way in such a feeling, so that one may be able to do which prelates are chosen and appointed. For everything with freedom. For he who does the head ought to be the strongest part, that not desire to be exhibited in possession of this it may be able to regulate and control the authority, does not fear to be deposed from evil exhalations which arise from the rest of it, and not fearing this will be able to do the body below; but when it happens to be everything with the freedom which becomes weak in itself, and unable to repel those Christian men: whereas they who fear and pestiferous attacks, it becomes feebler itself tremble lest they should be deposed undergo than it really is, and ruins the rest of the body a bitter servitude, filled with all kinds of evils, as well. And to prevent this now coming to and are often compelled to offend against both pass, God kept me in the position of the feet, God and man. Now the soul ought not to be which was the rank originally assigned to me. affected in this way; but as in warfare we see For there are very many other qualities, Basil, those soldiers who are noble-spirited fight willbesides those already mentioned, which the ingly and fall bravely, so they who have atpriest ought to have, but which I do not pos- tained to this stewardship should be contented sess; and, above all, this one:—his soul ought to be consecrated to the dignity or removed to be thoroughly purged from any lust after from it, as becomes Christian men, knowing the office: for if he happens to have a natural that deposition of this kind brings its reward inclination for this dignity, as soon as he at no less than the discharge of the office. For tains it a stronger flame is kindled, and the when any one suffers anything of this kind, in man being taken completely captive will en- order to avoid submitting to something which is unbecoming or unworthy of this dignity, he procures punishment for those who wrongfully depose him, and a greater reward for himself. "Blessed," says our Lord, "are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake; rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in Heaven." 4 And this, indeed, is the case when any one is expelled by those of his own rank either on account of envy, with a view to the favor of others, or through hatred, or from any other wrong motive: but when it is the lot of any one to experience this treatment at the hand of opponents, I do not think a word is needed to prove what great gain they confer upon him by their wickedness.

It behoves us, then, to be on the watch on all sides, and to make a careful search lest any

Possibly the building, not the body of Christians is here signified; for in the contest between Damasus and Ursicinus for the See of Rome, A.D. 367, which Chrysostom probably had in his mind, 137 persons are said to have been slain in one of the Churches in a single day, to another reading the passage must be rendered, "shun the burden at the outset."

with the expectation.

himself alone but for so great a multitude. charge. But that I am sluggish and slack, and scarcely me art especially eager to conceal my faults, along with violent impetuosity. "For wrath, to their improvement unless he possesses a robust and exceedingly vigorous character?

13. And do not be surprised if, in connexion with such endurance, I seek another test of fortitude in the soul. For to be indifferent to its strength and resist so great an impulse. food and drink and a soft bed, we see is to as are of a rough habit of life and have been moved you are from this infirmity? brought up in this way from early youth, and spark of this desire should be secretly smoul- to many others also; bodily discipline and dering somewhere. For it is much to be custom softening the severity of these laborious wished that those who are originally free from practices: but insult, and abuse, and coarse this passion, should also be able to avoid it language, and gibes from inferiors, whether wanwhen they have lighted upon this office. But tonly or justly uttered, and rebukes vainly and if any one, before he obtains the honor, cheridly spoken both by rulers and the ruled—this ishes in himself this terrible and savage mon- is what few can bear, in fact only one or two ster, it is impossible to say into what a furnace here and there; and one may see men, who he will fling himself after he has attained it. are strong in the former exercises, so com-Now I possessed this desire in a high degree pletely upset by these things, as to become (and do not suppose that I would ever tell more furious than the most savage beasts. you what was untrue in self-disparagement): Now such men especially we should exclude and this, combined with other reasons, alarmed from the precincts of the priesthood. For if me not a little, and induced me to take flight. a prelate did not loathe food, or go barefoot, For just as lovers of the human person, as long no harm would be done to the common interas they are permitted to be near the objects of ests of the Church; but a furious temper causes their affection, suffer more severe torment from great disasters both to him who possesses it, their passion, but when they remove as far as and to his neighbours. And there is no divine possible from these objects of desire, they threat against those who fail to do the things drive away the frenzy: even so when those referred to, but hell and hell-fire are threatened who desire this dignity are near it, the evil be- against those who are angry without a cause.' comes intolerable: but when they cease to As then the lover of vainglory, when he takes hope for it, the desire is extinguished together upon him the government of numbers, supplies additional fuel to the fire, so he who by 12. This single motive then is no slight one: himself, or in the company of a few, is unable and even taken by itself it would have sufficed to control his anger, but readily carried away to deter me from this dignity: but, as it is, by it, should he be entrusted with the direcanother must be added not less than the tion of a whole multitude, like some wild beast former. And what is this? A priest ought goaded on all sides by countless tormentors, to be sober minded, and penetrating in dis-would never be able to live in tranquillity cernment, and possessed of innumerable eyes himself, and would cause incalculable mischief in every direction, as one who lives not for to those who have been committed to his

14. For nothing clouds the purity of the able to bring about my own salvation, even reason, and the perspicuity of the mental you yourself would admit, who out of love to vision so much as undisciplined wrath, rushing Talk not to me in this connexion of fasting, says one, "destroys even the prudent." For and watching, or sleeping on the ground, and the eye of the soul being darkened as in some other hard discipline of the body: for you nocturnal battle is not able to distinguish know how defective I am in these matters: friends from foes, nor the honorable from the and even if they had been carefully practised unworthy, but handles them all in turn in the by me they could not with my present slug-same way; even if some harm must be sufgishness have been of any service to me with fered, readily enduring everything, in order to a view to this post of authority. Such things satisfy the pleasure of the soul. For the fire might be of great service to a man who was of wrath is a kind of pleasure, and tyrannizes shut up in a cell, and caring only for his own over the soul more harshly than pleasure, concerns: but when a man is divided among completely upsetting its healthy organization. so great a multitude, and enters separately into For it easily impels men to arrogance, and unthe private cares of those who are under his seasonable enmities, and unreasonable hatred, direction, what appreciable help can be given and it continually makes them ready to commit wanton and vain offences; and forces them to say and do many other things of that kind, the soul being swept along by the rush of passion, and having nothing on which to fasten

BASIL: I will not endure this irony of yours many no hard task, especially at least to such any longer: for who knows not how far re-

¹ Matt. v. 22. * Prov. xv. z, the Septuagint version.

CHRYSOSTOM: Why then, my good friend, Thus the priest ought to be protected on all do you wish to bring me near the pyre, and to sides by a kind of adamantine armour, by in-provoke the wild beast when he is tranquil? Are you not aware that I have achieved this concerning his manner of life, lest some one condition, not by any innate virtue, but by my discovering an exposed and neglected spot love of retirement? and that when one who is should inflict a deadly wound: for all who so constituted remains contented by himself, surround him are ready to smite and overor only associates with one or two friends, he throw him: not enemies only and adversaries, is able to escape the fire which arises from this but many even of those who profess friendship. passion, but not if he has plunged into the The souls therefore of men elected to the matters these trifles seem great to others: for so well as these; and if anything occurs, beall men measure the sin, not by the magnitude |of the offence, but by the rank of the offender. Dan. iii.

abyss of all these cares? for then he drags not priesthood ought to be endued with such power only himself but many others with him to the as the grace of God bestowed on the bodies brink of destruction, and renders them more of those saints who were cast into the Babyloindifferent to all consideration for mildness. nian furnace. Faggot and pitch and tow are For the mass of people under government not the fuel of this fire, but things far more are generally inclined to regard the manners dreadful: for it is no material fire to which of those who govern as a kind of model type, they are subjected, but the all-devouring flame and to assimilate themselves to them. How of envy encompasses them, rising up on every then could any one put a stop to their fury side, and assailing them, and putting their life when he is swelling himself with rage? And to a more searching test than the fire then was who amongst the multitude would straightway to the bodies of those young men. When then desire to become moderate when he sees the it finds a little trace of stubble, it speedily fasruler irritable? For it is quite impossible for tens upon it; and this unsound part it entirethe defects of priests to be concealed, but ly consumes, but all the rest of the fabric, even trifling ones speedily become manifest. even if it be brighter than the sunbeams, is So an athlete, as long as he remains at home, scorched and blackened by the smoke. For and contends with no one, can dissemble his as long as the life of the priest is well reguweakness even if it be very great, but when lated in every direction, it is invulnerable to he strips for the contest he is easily detected. plots; but if he happens to overlook some And thus for some who live this private and trifle, as is natural in a human being, traversinactive life, their isolation serves as a veil to ling the treacherous ocean of this life, none of hide their defects; but when they have been his other good deeds are of any avail in enabrought into public they are compelled to dibling him to escape the mouths of his accusers; vest themselves of this mantle of seclusion, and but that little blunder overshadows all the rest. to lay bare their souls to all through their visi- And all men are ready to pass judgment on ble movements. As therefore their right deeds the priest as if he was not a being clothed profit many, by provoking them to equal zeal, with flesh, or one who inherited a human naso their shortcomings make men more indiffer- ture, but like an angel, and emancipated from ent to the practice of virtue, and encourage them to indolence in their endeavours after fear and flatter a tyrant as long as he is strong, what is excellent. Wherefore his soul ought because they cannot put him down, but when to gleam with beauty on every side, that it may they see his affairs going adversely, those who be able to gladden and to enlighten the souls were his friends a short time before abandon of those who behold it. For the faults of or- their hypocritical respect, and suddenly become dinary men, being committed as it were in the his enemies and antagonists, and having disdark, ruin only those who practise them: but covered all his weak points, make an attack the errors of a man in a conspicuous position, upon him, and depose him from the governand known to many, inflicts a common injury ment; so is it also in the case of priests. Those upon all, rendering those who have fallen more who honored him and paid court to him a supine in their efforts for good, and driving to short time before, while he was strong, as soon desperation those who wish to take heed to as they have found some little handle eagerly themselves. And apart from these things, the prepare to depose him, not as a tyrant only, faults of insignificant men, even if they are but something far more dreadful than that. exposed, inflict no injury worth speaking of And as the tyrant fears his body guards, so upon any one: but they who occupy the high-est seat of honor are in the first place plainly bours and fellow-ministers. For no others visible to all, and if they err in the smallest covet his dignity so much, or know his affairs ing near at hand, they perceive it before others, and even if they slander him, can easily command belief, and, by magnifying trifles, take their victim captive. For the apostolic saying is reversed, "whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it;" unless indeed a man should be able by his great discretion to stand his ground against everything.

Are you then for sending me forth into so great a warfare? and did you think that my soul would be equal to a contest so various in character and shape? Whence did you learn this, and from whom? If God certified this to you, show me the oracle, and I obey; but if you cannot, and form your judgment from human opinion only, please to set yourself free from this delusion. For in what concerns my own affairs it is fairer to trust me than others; inasmuch as "no man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him." 2 That I should have made myself and my electors ridiculous, had I accepted this office, and should with great loss have returned to this condition of life in which I now am, I trust I have now convinced you by these remarks, if not before. For not malice only, but something much stronger—the lust after this dignity—is wont to arm many against one who possesses it. And just as avaricious children are oppressed by the old age of their parents, so some of these, when they see the priestly office held by any one for a protracted time-since it would be wickedness to destroy him—hasten to depose him from it, being all desirous to take his place, and each expecting that the dignity will be transferred to himself.

15. Would you like me to show you yet another phase of this strife, charged with innumerable dangers? Come, then, and take a peep at the public festivals when it is generally the custom for elections to be made to ecclesiastical dignities, and you will then see the priest assailed with accusations as numerous as the people whom he rules. For all who have the privilege of conferring the honor are then split into many parties; and one can never find the council of elders 3 of one mind with each other, or about the man who has won the prelacy; but each stands apart from the others, one preferring this man, another that. Now the reason is that they do not all look to one thing, which ought to be the only object kept in view, the excellence of the character; but other qualifications are alleged as recommending to this honor; for instance, of one it is said, "let him be elected because he belongs to an illustrious family," of another "because he is possessed of great wealth, and would not need to be supported out of the revenues of the Church," of a third "because he has come over from the camp of the adversary;" one is eager to give the preference to a man who is on terms of intimacy with himself, another to the man who is related to him by birth, a third to the flatterer, but no one will look to the man who is really qualified, or make some test of his character. Now I am so far from thinking these things trustworthy criteria of a man's fitness for the priesthood, that even if any one manifested great piety, which is no small help in the discharge of that office, I should not venture to approve him on that account alone, unless he happened to combine good abilities with his piety. For I know many men who have exercised perpetual restraint upon themselves, and consumed themselves with fastings, who, as long as they were suffered to be alone, and attend to their own concerns, have been acceptable to God, and day by day have made no small addition to this kind of learning; but as soon as they entered public life, and were compelled to correct the ignorance of the multitude, have, some of them, proved from the outset incompetent for so great a task, and others when forced to persevere in it, have abandoned their former strict way of living, and thus inflicted great injury on themselves without profiting others at And if any one spent his whole time in the lowest rank of the ministry, and reached extreme old age, I would not, merely out of reverence for his years, promote him to the higher dignity; for what if, after arriving at that time of life, he should still remain unfit for the office? And I say this now, not as wishing to dishonor the grey head, nor as laying down a law absolutely to exclude from this authority those who come from the monastic circle (for there are instances of many who issued from that body, having shone conspicuously in this dignity); but the point which I am anxious to prove is, that if neither piety of itself, nor advanced age, would suffice to show that a man who had obtained the priesthood really deserved it, the reasons formerly alleged would scarcely effect this. There are also men who bring forward other pretexts yet more

¹¹ Cor. xii. 26.

3 It is not possible to say precisely who the electors to bishoprics were at this time, but probably a mixed body of the clergy and leading laymen of the discesse. Chrysostom calls the electors "fathers," of elders," which may mean the whole peoples (a council of elders," which may mean the whole be speaks (e.g. years) second order, or a select body of laymen, or possibly the two combined. In one way or other, during the first five centuries, the people certainly had a considerable voice in the election of bishops. Socrates, the bistorian, vi. c. 2, says that Chrysostom bimself was chosen for the See of Constantinople "by the common vote of all, elergy and people." Pope Leo (A.D. 440–467) lays down the rule that "when the election of a bishop is handled he is to be preferred who is demanded by the unanimous consent of clergy and people." Epist. 84. A law of the Emperor Justinian restricted the right of election to the elergy and the "optimates" or people of chief rank.

absurd; for some are enrolled in the ranks of the clergy, that they may not range themselves among opponents, and others on account of their evil disposition, lest they should do great mischief if they are overlooked. Could anything be more contrary to right rule than this? that bad men, laden with iniquity, should be courted on account of those things for which they ought to be punished, and ascend to the priestly dignity on account of things for which they ought to be debarred from the very threshold of the Church. Tell me, then, shall we seek any further the cause of God's wrath, when we expose things so holy and awful to be defiled by men who are either wicked or worthless? for when some men are entrusted with the administration of things which are not at all suitable to them, and others of things which exceed their natural power, they make the condition of the Church like that of Euripus."

Now formerly I used to deride secular rulers, because in the distribution of their honors they are not guided by considerations of moral excellence, but of wealth, and seniority, and human distinction; but when I heard that this kind of folly had forced its way into our affairs also, I no longer regarded their conduct as so atrocious. For what wonder is it that worldly men, who love the praise of the multitude, and do everything for the sake of gain, should commit these sins, when those who affect at least to be free from all these influences are in no wise better disposed than they, but although engaged in a contest for heavenly things, act as if the question submitted for decision was one which concerned acres of land, or something else of that kind? for they take commonplace men off-hand, and set them to preside over those things, for the sake of which the only begotten Son of God did not refuse to empty Himself of His glory and become man, and take the form of a servant, and be spat upon, and buffeted, and die a death of reproach in the flesh. Nor do they stop even here, but add to these offences others still more monstrous; for not only do they elect unworthy men, but actually expel those who are well qualified. As if it were necessary to ruin the safety of the Church on both sides, or as if the former provocation were not sufficient to kindle the wrath of God, they have contrived yet another not less pernicious. For I consider it as atrocious to expel the useful men as to force in the useless. And this in fact takes place, so that the flock of Christ is unable to find consolation in any direction, or draw its breath freely. Now do not such deeds deserve to be punished by ten thousand thunder-bolts, and a hell-fire hotter than that with which we are threatened [in Holy Scripture]? Yet these monstrous evils are borne with by Him who willeth not the death of a sinner, that he may be converted and live. And how can one sufficiently marvel at His lovingkindness, and be amazed at His mercy? They who belong to Christ destroy the property of Christ more than enemies and adversaries, yet the good Lord still deals gently with them, and calls them to repentance. Glory be to Thee, O Lord! Glory to Thee! How vast is the depth of Thy lovingkindness! how great the riches of Thy forbearance! Men who on account of Thy name have risen from insignificance and obscurity to positions of honor and distinction, use the honor they enjoy against Him who has bestowed it, do deeds of outrageous audacity, and insult holy things, rejecting and expelling men of zeal in order that the wicked may ruin everything at their pleasure in much security, and with the utmost And if you would know the fearlessness. causes of this dreadful evil, you will find that they are similar to those which were mentioned before; for they have one root and mother, so to say-namely, envy; but this is manifested in several different forms. For one we are told is to be struck out of the list of candidates, because he is young; another because he does not know how to flatter; a third because he has offended such and such a person; a fourth lest such and such a man should be pained at seeing one whom he has presented rejected, and this man elected; a fifth because he is kind and gentle: a sixth because he is formidable to the sinful; a seventh for some other like reason; for they are at no loss to find as many pretexts as they want, and can even make the abundance of a man's wealth an objection when they have no other. Indeed they would be capable of discovering other reasons, as many as they wish, why a man ought not to be brought suddenly to this honor, but gently and gradually. And here I should like to ask the question, "What, then, is the prelate to do, who has to contend with such blasts? How shall he hold his ground against such billows? How shall he repel all these assaults?"

For if he manages the business a upon upright principles, all those who are enemies and adversaries both to him and to the candidates do everything with a view to contention, provoking daily strife, and heaping infinite scorn upon the candidates, until they have got difficulty of the judicial function. For in each some pilot had pirates sailing with him in his lety. ship, perpetually plotting every hour against shipwrecks.

¹ A narrow strait between the island of Eubera and the mainland of Greece, in which the tide was very rapid. Hence the "condition of Euripus" became a proverbial expression indicative of agretation and fluctuation.

² i. e., the business of elections. Chrysostom seems to have passed on from the elections of bishops to the consideration of elections to clerical offices over which the bishop had to preside.

ought to be dignified yet free from arrogance, formidable yet kind, apt to command yet sociservile, strong yet gentle, in order that he difficulties. And he ought to bring forward with great authority the man who is properly qualified for the office, even if all should oppose him, and with the same authority to reject the man who is not so qualified, even if all should conspire in his favor, and to keep one aim only in view, the building up of the Church, in nothing actuated either by enmity or favor. Well, do you now think that I acted reasonably in declining the ministry of this office? But I have not even yet gone through all my reasons with you; for I have some others still to mention. And do not grow impatient of listening to a friendly and sincere man, who wishes to clear himself from your accusations; for these statements are not only serviceable for the defence which you have to make on my behalf, but they will also prove of no small help for the due administration of the office. For it is necessary for one who is going to enter upon this path of life to investigate all matters thoroughly well, before he sets his hand to the ministry. Do you ask why? Because one who knows all things clearly will have this advantage, if no other, that he will not feel strange when these things befall him. Would you like me then to approach the question of superintending widows, first of all, or of the care of virgins, or the them struck off the list, or have introduced of these cases there is a different kind of their own favorites. In fact it is just as if anxiety, and the fear is greater than the anx-

Now in the first place, to start from that him, and the sailors, and marines. And if he subject which seems to be simpler than the should prefer favor with such men to his own others, the charge of widows appears to cause salvation, accepting unworthy candidates, he anxiety to those who take care of them only will have God for his enemy in their stead; so far as the expenditure of money is conand what could be more dreadful than cerned; but the case is otherwise, and here that? And yet his relations with them will also a careful scrutiny is needed, when they be more embarrassing than formerly, as they have to be enrolled, for infinite mischief has will all combine with each other, and thereby been caused by putting them on the list withbecome more powerful than before. For as out due discrimination. For they have ruined when fierce winds coming from opposite direc- households, and severed marriages, and have tions clash with one another, the ocean, hither- often been detected in thieving and pilfering to calm, becomes suddenly furious and raises and unseemly deeds of that kind. Now that its crested waves, destroying those who are such women should be supported out of the sailing over it, so also when the Church has Church's revenues provokes punishment from admitted corrupt men, its once tranquil sur- God, and extreme condemnation among men, face is covered with rough surf and strewn with and abates the zeal of those who wish to do good. For who would ever choose to expend 16. Consider, then, what kind of man he the wealth which he was commanded to give ought to be who is to hold out against such a to Christ upon those who defame the name tempest, and to manage skillfully such great of Christ? For these reasons a strict and achindrances to the common welfare; for he curate scrutiny ought to be made so as to prevent the supply of the indigent being wasted, not only by the women already mentioned, able, impartial yet courteous, humble yet not but also by those who are able to provide for themselves. And this scrutiny is succeeded may contend successfully against all these by no small anxiety of another kind, to ensure an abundant and unfailing stream of supply as from a fountain; for compulsory poverty is an insatiable kind of evil, querulous and ungrateful. And great discretion and great zeal is required so as to stop the mouths of complainers, depriving them of every excuse. Now most men, when they see any one superior to the love of money, forthwith represent him as well qualified for this stewardship. But I do not think that this greatness of soul is ever sufficient of itself, although it ought to be possessed prior to all other qualities: for without this a man would be a destroyer rather than a protector, a wolf instead of a shepherd; nevertheless, combined with this, the possession of another quality also should be demanded. And this quality is forbearance, the cause of all good things in men, impelling as it were and conducting the soul into a serene haven. For widows are a class who, both on account of their poverty, their age and natural disposition, indulge in unlimited freedom of speech dance, does not feel the advantage of his (so I had best call it); and they make an un-wealth, on account of the blow which he has seasonable clamor and idle complaints and received from the insult; so on the other hand, lamentations about matters for which they the man who has been addressed with kindly ought to be grateful, and bring accusations words, and for whom the gift has been accomconcerning things which they ought content- panied with encouragement, exults and rejoices edly to accept. Now the superintendent should all the more, and the thing given becomes endure all these things in a generous spirit, doubled in value through the manner in which and not be provoked either by their unreason- it is offered. And this I say not of myself, able annoyance or their unreasonable com- but borrow from him whose precept I quoted plaints. For this class of persons deserve to just now: "My son, blemish not thy good be pitied for their misfortunes, not to be in- deeds, neither use uncomfortable words when sulted; and to trample upon their calamities, thou givest anything. Shall not the dew asand add the pain of insult to that which pov-erty brings, would be an act of extreme bru-gift. Lo! is not a word better than a gift? tality. On this account one of the wisest of but both are with a gracious man." 2 men, having regard to the avarice and pride But the superintendent of these persons of human nature, and considering the nature ought not only to be gentle and forbearing, of poverty and its terrible power to depress but also skillful in the management of propeven the noblest character, and induce it often erty; for if this qualification is wanting, the to act in these same respects without shame, affairs of the poor are again involved in the in order that a man should not be irritated same distress. One who was entrusted not when accused, nor be provoked by continual long ago with this ministry, and got together a importunity to become an enemy where he large hoard of money, neither consumed it ought to bring aid, he instructs him to be affa- himself, nor expended it with a few exceptions ble and accessible to the suppliant, saying, upon those who needed it, but kept the greater "Incline thine ear to a poor man and give him part of it buried in the earth until a season of a friendly answer with meekness." passing by the case of one who succeeds in into the hands of the enemy. Much foreexasperating (for what can one say to him thought, therefore, is needed, that the resources who is overcome?), he addresses the man who of the Church should be neither over abunis able to bear the other's infirmity, exhorting dant, nor deficient, but that all the supplies him before he bestows his gift to correct the which are provided should be quickly distribsuppliant by the gentleness of his countenance uted among those who require them, and the and the mildness of his words. But if any treasures of the Church stored up in the hearts one, although he does not take the property of those who are under her rule. (of these widows), nevertheless loads them with innumerable reproaches, and insults them, and the care of the sick, consider how great an is exasperated against them, he not only fails expenditure of money is needed, and how much through his gift to alleviate the despondency exactness and discernment on the part of produced by poverty, but aggravates the dis- those who preside over these matters. For it tress by his abuse. For although they may be is often necessary that this expenditure should compelled to act very shamelessly through the be even larger than that of which I spoke just necessity of hunger, they are nevertheless dis- now, and that he who presides over it should tressed at this compulsion. When, then, owing combine prudence and wisdom with skill in to the dread of famine, they are constrained the art of supply, so as to dispose the affluent to beg, and owing to their begging are con- to be emulous and ungrudging in their gifts, strained to put off shame, and then again on lest while providing for the relief of the sick, account of their shamelessness are insulted, he should vex the souls of those who supply the power of despondency becoming of a com- their wants. But earnestness and zeal need to plex kind, and accompanied by much gloom, be displayed here in a far higher degree; for settles down upon the soul. And one who the sick are difficult creatures to please, and has the charge of these persons ought to be prone to languor; and unless great accuracy so long-suffering, as not only not to increase and care are used, even a slight oversight is their despondency by his fits of anger, but also enough to do the patient great mischief. to remove the greater part of it by his exhor- 17. But in the care of virgins, the fear is tation. For as the man who has been insulted, greater in proportion as the possession is more although he is in the enjoyment of great abun-precious, and this flock is of a nobler character

And distress occurred, when it was all surrendered

Moreover, in the reception of strangers, and the band of these holy ones, an infinite num- certificate of divorce and so to depart, but she ber of women have rushed full of innumerable has to pay the penalty of everlasting punishbad qualities; and in this case our grief is ment. Moreover, a father according to the greater than in the other; for there is just the flesh has many things which make the custody same difference between a virgin and a widow of his daughter easy; for the mother, and going astray, as between a free-born damsel nurse, and a multitude of handmaids share in and her handmaid. With widows, indeed, it helping the parent to keep the maiden safe. has become a common practice to trifle, and to For neither is she permitted to be perpetually rail at one another, to flatter or to be impu- hurrying into the market-place, nor when she dent, to appear everywhere in public, and to does go there is she compelled to show herself perambulate the market-place. But the virgin to any of the passers-by, the evening darkness has striven for nobler aims, and eagerly sought concealing one who does not wish to be seen the highest kind of philosophy,' and professes no less than the walls of the house. And apart to exhibit upon earth the life which angels from these things, she is relieved from every lead, and while yet in the flesh proposes to do cause which might otherwise compel her to deeds which belong to the incorporeal powers. meet the gaze of men; for no anxiety about Moreover, she ought not to make numerous or the necessaries of life, no menaces of opunnecessary journeys, neither is it permissible pressors, nor anything of that kind reduces her for her to utter idle and random words; and to this unfortunate necessity, her father actas for abuse and flattery, she should not even ing in her stead in all these matters; while she know them by name. On this account she herself has only one anxiety, which is to avoid needs the most careful guardianship, and the doing or saying anything unworthy the modest greater assistance. For the enemy of holi-conduct which becomes her. But in the other ness is always surprising and lying in wait for case there are many things which make the these persons, ready to devour any one of them custody of the virgin difficult, or rather imposif she should slip and fall; many men also sible for the father; for he could not have her there are who lay snares for them; and besides in his house with himself, as dwelling together all these things there is the passionateness of in that way would be neither seemly nor safe. their own human nature, so that, speaking For even if they themselves should suffer no generally, the virgin has to equip herself for a loss, but continue to preserve their innocence twofold war, one which attacks her from with- unsullied, they would have to give an account out, and the other which presses upon her from for the souls which they have offended, just within. For these reasons he who has the as much as if they happened to sin with one superintendence of virgins suffers great alarm, another. And it being impossible for them and the danger and distress is yet greater, to live together, it is not easy to understand should any of the things which are contrary to the movements of the character, and to suphis wishes occur, which God forbid. For if press the impulses which are ill regulated, or a daughter kept in seclusion is a cause of train and improve those which are better orsleeplessness to her father, his anxiety about dered and tuned. Nor is it an easy thing to her depriving him of sleep, where the fear is interfere in her habits of walking out; for her so great lest she should be childless, or pass poverty and want of a guardian does not perthe flower of her age (unmarried), or be hated mit him to become an exact investigator of (by her husband), what will he suffer whose the propriety of her conduct. For as she is anxiety is not concerned with any of these compelled to manage all her affairs she has things, but others far greater? For in this many pretexts for going out, if at least she is case it is not a man who is rejected, but Christ not inclined to be self-controlled. Now he Himself, nor is this barrenness the subject who commands her to stay always at home merely of reproach, but the evil ends in the ought to cut off these pretexts, providing for destruction of the soul; "for every tree," it is said, "which bringeth not forth good fruit, is and giving her some woman who will see to hewn down and cast into the fire." And for the management of these things. He must also one who has been repudiated by the divine keep her away from funeral obsequies, and

than the others. Already, indeed, even into Bridegroom, it is not sufficient to receive a her independence in the necessaries of life, nocturnal festivals; for that artful serpent knows only too well how to scatter his poison through the medium even of good deeds. And the maiden must be fenced on every side, and rarely go out of the house during the whole year, except when she is constrained by inexorable necessity. Now if any one should say

i. e., a life of religious contemplation, not, however, as a memi. ¿., a lite of religious contemplation, not, nowever, as a member of a monastic community, for Chrysostom, throughout this section, appears to be speaking of the canonical or ecclesiastical virgins who were consecrated to a religious life, yet remained at home under the care of their parents (if living) or of the Church. The first notices of separate houses for women who had taken the vow of virginity occur in the middle of the 4th century. St. Ambrose mentions one at Bologna. De Virg. i. to. St. Basil is said to have founded some (See St. Greg. Naz. Orat. 47).

2 Ecclus, Xili, q. 3 Matt. iii. 10.

concerned with the care of virgins; for when declare that his conduct is insulting. they have to be entered on the list, they ocwith this business.

bishop's office involves innumerable vexa- without any accusers, or, if this is impossible, ations, great consumption of time, and diffi- purge himself of the accusations which are culties exceeding those experienced by men brought against him; and if this again is not who sit to judge secular affairs; for it is a an easy matter, as some men delight in maklabor to discover exact justice, and when ing vain and wanton charges, he must make a it is found, it is difficult to avoid destroy- brave stand against the dejection produced by ing it. And not only loss of time and diffi-these complaints. He, indeed, who is justly culty are incurred, but also no small danger. accused, may easily tolerate the accuser, for For ere now, some of the weaker brethren hav-there is no bitterer accuser than conscience; ing plunged into business, because they have wherefore, if we are caught first by this most not obtained patronage have made shipwreck terrible adversary, we can readily endure the concerning the faith. For many of those who milder ones who are external to us. But he have suffered wrong, no less than those who who has no evil thing upon his conscience, have inflicted wrong, hate those who do not when he is subjected to an empty charge, is assist them, and they will not take into account speedily excited to wrath, and easily sinks into either the intricacy of the matters in question, dejection, unless he happens to have practised or the difficulty of the times, or the limits of beforehand how to put up with the follies of sacerdotal authority, or anything of that kind; the multitude. For it is utterly impossible but they are merciless judges, recognizing only for one who is falsely accused without cause, one kind of defence—release from the evils and condemned, to avoid feeling some vexawhich oppress them. And he who is unable to tion and annoyance at such great injustice. furnish this, although he may allege innumerable excuses, will never escape their condembishops undergo, whenever it is necessary to nation.

another pretext for fault-finding. For if the went no further than distress! but in fact the should ever happen to visit more constantly one of the richer and more powerful men, un-1 2 Cor. ii. 7.

that none of these things is the proper work of der the pressure of some necessity, with a view a bishop to take in hand, let him be assured to the common benefit of the Church, he is that the anxieties and the reasons concerning immediately stigmatized with a character for what takes place in every case have to be re- fawning and flattery. But why do I speak of ferred to him. And it is far more expedient patronage and visiting? For merely from that he should manage everything, and so be their mode of accosting persons, bishops have delivered from the complaints which he must to endure such a load of reproaches as to be otherwise undergo on account of the faults of often oppressed and overwhelmed by desponothers, than that he should abstain from the dency; in fact, they have also to undergo a management, and then have to dread being scrutiny of the way in which they use their called to account for things which other men eyes. For the public rigorously criticize their have done. Moreover, he who does these simplest actions, taking note of the tone of things by himself, gets through them all with their voice, the cast of their countenance, and great ease; but he who is compelled to do it the degree of their laughter. He laughed by converting every one's opinion does not heartily to such a man, one will say, and acget relief by being saved from working single- costed him with a beaming face, and a clear handed, equivalent to the trouble and turmoil voice, whereas to me he addressed only a which he experiences through those who op-slight and passing remark. And in a large pose him and combat his decisions. How- assembly, if he does not turn his eyes in every ever, I could not enumerate all the anxieties direction when he is conversing, the majority

Who, then, unless he is exceedingly strong, casion no small trouble to him who is entrusted | could cope with so many accusers, so as either to avoid being indited altogether, or, if he is Again, the judicial department of the indited, to escape? For he must either be

And how can one speak of the distress which cut some one off from the full communion of And talking of patronage, let me disclose the Church? Would indeed that the evil bishop does not pay a round of visits every mischief is not trifling. For there is a fear day, more even than the idle men about lest the man, if he has been punished beyond town, unspeakable offence ensues. For not what he deserves, should experience that only the sick, but also the whole, desire to be which was spoken of by the blessed Paul and looked after, not that piety prompts them to "be swallowed up by overmuch sorrow.": this, but rather that in most cases they pretend The nicest accuracy, therefore, is required in claims to honor and distinction. And if he this matter also, lest what is intended to be profitable should become to him an occasion for so many others? To prove the truth of misdeeds, believing that we shall not be able tion of the gravity of the office. to escape the fire of the other world, what must one expect to suffer who has to answer | 1 Hebrews XIII. 17.

of greater damage. For whatever sins he may this, listen to the blessed Paul, or rather not to commit after such a method of treatment, the him, but to Christ speaking in him, when he wrath caused by each of them must be shared says: "Obey them that have the rule over you, by the physician who so unskillfully applied and submit, for they watch for your souls as his knife to the wound. What severe punish-they that shall give account." Can the dread ment, then, must be expected by one who has of this threat be slight? It is impossible to not only to render an account of the offences say: but these considerations are sufficient to which he himself has separately committed, convince even the most incredulous and obbut also incurs extreme danger on account of durate that I did not make this escape under the sins committed by others? For if we the influence of pride or vainglory, but merely shudder at undergoing judgment for our own out of fear for my own safety, and considera-

BOOK IV.

CONTENTS.

- I. THOSE WHO ALLOW THEMSELVES TO BE FORCED INTO THE CLERICAL OFFICE, NO LESS THAN THEY WHO ENTER UPON IT FROM AMBITIOUS MOTIVES, ARE SORELY PUNISHED HEREAFTER FOR THEIR SIN.
- II. THEY WHO ORDAIN UNWORTHY MEN, EVEN WHERE THEY DO NOT KNOW THEIR CHARACTER, WILL SHARE THEIR PUNISHMENT.
- III. THE PRIEST OUGHT TO HAVE GREAT POWERS OF SPEAKING.
- IV. HE SHOULD BE FULLY PREPARED FOR CONTROVERSY WITH ALL ADVERSARIES-GREEKS, JEWS, AND HERETICS.
- V. HE SHOULD BE VERY SKILFUL IN ARGUMENT.
- VI. IN WHICH SAINT PAUL ESPECIALLY EXCELLED.
- VII. SO THAT HE BECAME ILLUSTRIOUS NOT SO MUCH FOR HIS MIRACLES AS FOR HIS WORDS,
- VIII. HEREIN HE WOULD HAVE US EXCEL ALSO.
- IX. FOR THE LACK OF THIS IN THE PRIEST MUST INJURIOUSLY AFFECT THOSE OVER WHOM HE IS SET.

thus replied:

after it has been entrusted to him, he cannot ample ground for excuse. take refuge in the plea of inexperience, for he Chrysostom: At this I shook my head and

Basil heard this, and after a little pause nothing of this kind to condemn thyself for; and it is evident to all that thou wert in no If thou wert thyself ambitious of obtain- degree ambitious of this dignity, for the accoming this office, thy fear would have been reasonable; for in being ambitious of undertaking it, a man confesses himself to be qualified those who are ambitious of this office no chance for its administration, and if he fail therein, of pardon when they err therein, afford thee has deprived himself of this excuse before- smiled a little, admiring the simple-mindedness hand, by having hurriedly seized upon the of the man, and thus addressed him: I could ministry, and whoever willingly and delibe- wish indeed that matters were as thou sayest, rately enters upon it, can no longer say, "I most excellent of men, but not in order that I have sinned in this matter against my will- might be able to accept that office from which and against my will I have ruined such and I lately fled. For if, indeed, no chastisement such a soul;" for He who will one day judge were to await me for undertaking the care of him, will say to him, "Since then thou wert the flock of Christ without consideration and conscious of such inexperience, and hadst not experience, yet to me it would be worse than ability for undertaking this matter without in- all punishment, after being entrusted with so curring reproach, why wert thou so eager and great a charge, to have seemed so base towards presumptuous as to take in hand what was so Him who entrusted me with it. For what far beyond thy power? Who compelled thee to reason, then, did I wish that thou wert not misdo so? Didst thou shrink or fly, and did any taken in this opinion of thine? truly for the one drag thee on by force?" But thou wilt sake of those wretched and unhappy beings hear nothing like this, for thou canst have (for so must I call them, who have not found out how to discharge the duties of this office well, though thou wert to say ten thousand times

ε προλαβών γὰρ αὐτὸς ἐαυτοῦ ταύτην ἀφείλετο την ἀπολογίαν.

it, and that, therefore, their errors therein are away into the insane folly of such people, but sins of ignorance) -- for the sake, I say, of such be ambitious at all times to make the most that they might succeed in escaping that un- of such powers as we have, and to be reverent quenchable fire, and the outer darkness ' and both in speech and thought.

with the hypocrites. I will give thee a proof of what I maintain, from the case of a kingdom, which is not of such account with God as the priesthood.

Saul, that son of Kish, was not himself at all it. For he was of the tribe of Levi, and was drew back and deprecated it, saying, "Who am I, and what is my father's house." What so great a multitude, was he not very nearly words of his able to rescue him from the And since we have mentioned Moses, it will wrath of Him who had made him king? And be well to show the truth of what we are saylife of ordinary men, but thou didst drag me manded him to take it, and so to provoke to this post of honor. Had I remained in my the wrath of Him who appointed him; and low estate I should easily have escaped all not only then, but afterwards when he enmitted to me, I should not have sinned this sin." But all such arguments are weak as excuses, and not only weak, but perilous, inas-fore was he deprived of the promised land?

over that they had been driven to undertake to be on no account thus minded, nor to fall

the worm that dieth not? and the punishment For (to leave the kingdom and to come to of being cut asunder,3 and perishing together the priesthood, which is the more immediate subject of our discourse) neither was Eli am-But what am I to do for thee? It is not as bitious of obtaining his high office, yet what thou sayest; no, by no means. And if thou wilt, advantage was this to him when he sinned ambitious of becoming a king, but was going bound to undertake that high office which dein quest of his asses, and came to ask the scended to him from his forefathers, notwithprophet about them. The prophet, however, standing which even he paid no small penalty proceeded to speak to him of the kingdom, for the lawlessness of his sons. And the very but not even then did he run greedily after it, first High Priest of the Jews,6 concerning whom though he heard about it from a prophet, but God spake so many words to Moses, when he then? When he made a bad use of the honor being destroyed, but for the intercession of his which had been given him by God, were those brother, which averted the wrath of God?7 was he able to say to Samuel, when reing from what happened to him. For this buked by him: "Did I greedily run and rush same saintly Moses was so far from grasping after the kingdom and sovereign power? I at the leadership of the Jews as to deprecate wished to lead the undisturbed and peaceful the offer," and to decline it when God comthese stumbling blocks, for were I one of the tered upon his rule, he would gladly have died obscure multitude, I should never have been to have been set free from it: "Kill me," saith sent forth on this expedition, nor would God he, "if thou art going to deal thus with me." 9 have committed to my hands the war against But what then? when he sinned at the waters the Amalekites, and if I had not had it com- of strife,10 could these repeated refusals be much as they rather kindle the wrath of God. for no other reason, as we all know, than for For he who has been promoted to great honor this sin of his, for which that wondrous man by God, must not advance the greatness of his was debarred from enjoying the same blesshonor as an excuse for his errors, but should ings which those over whom he ruled obmake God's special favor towards him the mo-tained; but after many labors and sufferings, tive for further improvement; whereas he who after that unspeakable wandering, after so thinks himself at liberty to sin because he has many battles fought and victories won, he obtained some uncommon dignity, what does died outside the land to reach which he had he but study to show that the lovingkindness undergone so much toil and trial; and though of God is the cause of his personal transgres- he had weathered the storms of the deep, he sion, which is always the argument of those who failed to enjoy the blessings of the haven after lead godless and careless lives. But we ought all. From hence then thou seest that not only they who grasp at this office are left without excuse for the sins they commit in the dis-

¹ Matt. xxv. 30. 31; Luke xii. 46. Διχοτωμήθησαι. Some take this word to express the severance of the unrighteous from the godly priest, but others seek its meaning rather in the "dividing saunder" of sacrificial victims (Heb. iv. 21), or in the punishment of "sawing asunder" (Dan. iii. 20; Heb. xi. 37): so that its use by SS. Matthew and Luke would point to the distress caused by the severance between conscience and practice, which will be the reflective torment of lost souls.

^{4 1} Sam. ix. 21.

⁵ παρανομίας. If παροινίας be read, then "excesses" must be understood:—the word meaning, 1st, excess in drink; and 2d, excess of any kind.

6 Aaron.

7 Ex. xxxii. το, τι.

8 Ex. iv. τ3.

9 Numb. xi. 15. Ει δ'ούτω σὺ ποιέις μοι ἀπόκτεινουμε, Lxx.

¹⁰ Numb. xx. 12.

through the ambitious desire of others; for wilt both suffer punishment for them, and also truly if those persons who have been chosen because for thy part thou madest God's solicifor this high office by God himself, though they tude for thy good of none effect. Therefore have never so often refused it, have paid such we who act like this are not subjected to the heavy penalties, and if nothing has availed to same torment after as before we received deliver any of them from this danger, neither honor at God's hands, but far severer torment Aaron nor Eli, nor that holy man the Saint, the prophet, the wonder worker, the meek above all the men which were upon the face of the earth, who spake with God, as a man speaketh unto his friend,2 hardly shall we who fall so infinitely short of the excellence of uge in it, but exposes them so much the more, that great man, be able to plead as a sufficient excuse the consciousness that we have never been ambitious of the dignity, more especially and counted him one of the sacred band, and said. committed to him, as to the rest, the dignity charge thereof, but they too who come to it these infirmities, and as thou art unable, thou after than before. For he who has not become good even by being well treated, deserves all the bitterer punishment. Since, then, this excuse of thine has been shown to be weak, and not only fails to save those who take refwe must provide ourselves with some other means of safety.

BASIL: Tell me of what nature is that? when many of the ordinations now-a-days do since, as for me, I am at present scarce masnot proceed from the grace of God, but are ter of myself, thou hast reduced me to such a due to human ambition. God chose Judas, state of fear and trembling by what thou hast

CHRYSOSTOM: Do not, I beseech and imof the apostolic office; yea he gave him some- plore thee, do not be so downcast. For while what beyond the others, the stewardship of there is safety for us who are weak, namely, in the money.3 But what of that? when he not undertaking this office at all, there is afterwards abused both these trusts, betraying safety for you too who are strong, and this Him whom he was commissioned to preach, consists in making your hopes of salvation and misapplying the money which he should depend, next to the grace of God, on avoidhave laid out well; did he escape punish- ing every act unworthy of this gift, and of God ment?4 nay for this very reason he even who gave it. For they certainly would be brought upon himself greater punishment, and deserving of the greatest punishment who, very reasonably too. For we must not use the after obtaining this dignity through their own high honors given to us by God so as to offend ambition, should then either on account of Him, but so as to please Him better. But he sloth, or wickedness, or even inexperience, who claims exemption from punishment where abuse the office. Not that we are to gather it is due, because he has been exalted to higher from this that there is pardon in store for those honor than others, acts very much like one of who have not been thus ambitious. Yea, even those unbelieving Jews, who after hearing they too are deprived of all excuse. For in Christ say, "If I had not come and spoken my judgment, if ten thousand were to entreat unto them, they had not had sin," "If I had not and urge, a man should pay them no attendone among them the works which none other tion, but should first of all search his own did, they had not had sin," 5 should reproach heart, and examine the whole matter carefully the Saviour and benefactor of mankind by re- before yielding to their importunities. Now plying," Why, then, didst thou come and speak? no one would venture to undertake the buildwhy didst thou work miracles? was it that ing of a house were he not an architect, nor thou mightest punish us the more?" But these will any one attempt the cure of sick bodies are the words of madness and of utter sense- who is not a skilled physician; but even lessness. For the Great Physician came not to though many urge him, will beg off, and will give thee over, but to heal thee-not to pass not be ashamed to own his ignorance; and thee by when thou wert sick, but to rid thee shall he who is going to have the care of so entirely of disease. But thou hast of thine own many souls entrusted to him, not examine accord withdrawn thyself from his hands; re- himself beforehand? will he accept this minisceive therefore the sorer punishment. For as try even though he be the most inexperienced thou wouldest have been freed from thy of men, because this one commands him, or former maladies if thou hadst yielded to his that man constrains him, or for fear of offendtreatment, so if, when thou sawest him com- ing a third? And if so, how will he escape ing to thine aid thou fleddest from him, thou casting himself together with them into maniwilt no longer be able to cleanse thyself of fest misery. Had he continued as he was, it were possible for him to be saved, but now he involves others in his own destruction. For whence can he hope for salvation? whence beloved son, "Lay hands suddenly on no port. But he who is elected could not say, man, neither be partaker of other men's "I am ignorant of myself," as others were sins." Dost thou not see from what great of him. As one who will receive therefore a us forward for this office.

5 John xv. 22-24.

³ John xii. 6. ¹ Numb. xii. 3. ² Ex. xxxiii. 11. ³ J 4 i. e., because he had been chosen an apostle.

who ordain them to say that they did not den of so high an office. know him who was ordained. The charge doing, and knowing a man to be unworthy urged by others and did not come of his own have brought him forward on some pretext or accord? in no wise; and very reasonably and other, the amount of their punishment shall justly so. For he ought to have refused even pointed the unfit man.

to obtain pardon? Who will then successfully authority to any one who is minded to destroy intercede for us? they who are now perhaps the Church, would be certainly to blame for urging us and forcibly dragging us on? But the outrages which that person commits. But who will save these same at such a moment? if he is guilty of no such thing, and says that For even they too will stand in need in their he has been misled by the opinions of others, turn of intercession, that they may escape the even then he shall not altogether remain unfire. Now, that I say not these things to punished, but his punishment shall be a little frighten thee, but as representing the matter lighter than his who has been ordained. What as in truth it is, hear what the holy Apostle then? It is possible that they who elect may Paul saith to Timothy his disciple, his own and come to the election deceived by a false reblame, yea and vengeance, we, so far as in us sorer punishment than they who put him forlies, have delivered those who were ready to put ward, so should he make his scrutiny of himself more careful than that which they make 2. For as it is not enough for those who are of him; and if they in ignorance drag him on, chosen to say in excuse for themselves, "I did he ought to come forward and instruct them not summon myself to this office, nor could I carefully about any matters whereby he may avoid what I did not see beforehand;" so stop their being misled; and so having shown neither will it be a sufficient plea for those himself unworthy of trial may escape the bur-

For what is the reason why, in the arts of against them becomes greater on account of war, and merchandize,2 and husbandry, and their ignorance of him whom they brought other departments of this life, when some plan forward, and what seems to excuse them only is proposed, the husbandman will not unserves to accuse them the more. For how dertake to navigate the ship, nor the soldier to absurd a thing, is it not? that they who want till the ground, nor the pilot to lead an army, to buy a slave, show him to the physician, and under pain of ten thousand deaths? Is it not require sureties for the sale, and information plainly this? that each foresees the danger about him from their neighbours, and after all which would attend his incompetence? Well, this do not yet venture on his purchase without where the loss is concerned with trifles shall asking for some time for a trial of him; while we use so much forethought, and refuse to they who are going to admit any one to so great yield to the pressure of compulsion, but where an office as this, give their testimonial and the punishment is eternal, as it is for those their sanction loosely and carelessly, without who know not how to handle the Priesthood, further investigation, just because some one shall we wantonly and inconsiderately run wishes it, or to court the favor, or to avoid the into so great danger, and then advance, as our displeasure of some one else. Who shall then excuse, the pressing entreaties of others? successfully intercede for us in that day, when But He who one day will judge us will enterthey who ought to defend us stand themselves tain no such plea as this. For we ought to in need of defenders? He who is going to show far more caution in spiritual matters ordain, therefore, ought to make diligent in- than in carnal. But now we are not found quiry, and much more he who is to be or- exhibiting as much caution. For tell me: if dained. For though they who ordain him supposing a man to be an artificer, when he is share his punishment, for any sins which he not so, we invited him to do a piece of work, may commit in his office, yet so far from es- and he were to respond to the call, and then caping vengeance he will even pay a greater having set his hand to the material prepared penalty than they-save only if they who for the building, were to spoil the wood and chose him acted from some worldly motive spoil the stone, and so to build the house that contrary to what seemed justifiable to them- it straightway fell to pieces, would it be suffiselves. For if they should be detected so cient excuse for him to allege that he had been be equivalent to his, nay perhaps the punish- at the call of others. So for the man who only ment shall be even greater for them who ap- spoils wood and stone, there will be no escape For he who gives from paying the penalty, and is he who dejected to excessive pressure and divers artful all healing proper for the soul? devices, and then fell into a snare; will this therefore rescue him from punishment? hypocrites.

² Εμπορίας, restricted here to commerce carried on by sea, as the context shows.

of these things. For otherwise they would emulation. But in the matter of spurious docto perish without cause. It is not the manage- there is great need of the Word, not only in ment of corn and barley, oxen or sheep, that view of the safety of our own people, but in is now under our consideration, nor any such view of the enemy without. If, indeed, one like matters, but the very Body of Jesus. For had the sword of the spirit, and the shield of the Church of Christ, according to St. Paul, faith, so as to be able to work miracles, and ness. For what is this but to make it appear other rules (for the omission of the merest asketh you a reason concerning the hope that stroys souls, and builds the temple of God care-trifle upsets and spoils the whole), how shall lessly, to think that the compulsion of others they to whose lot falls the care of the body, is his warrant for escaping punishment? Is which has its conflict not against flesh and not this very absurd? For I omit the fact blood, but against powers unseen, be able to as yet that no one is able to compel the man keep it sound and healthy, unless they far surwho is unwilling. But be it that he was sub- pass ordinary human virtue, and are versed in

3. Pray, art thou not aware that that body is I subject to more diseases and assaults than this beseech thee, let us not deceive ourselves, flesh of ours, is more quickly corrupted, and and pretend that we know not what is obvious more slow to recover? and by those who have to a mere child. For surely this pretence of the healing of these bodies, divers medicines ignorance will not be able to profit in the day have been discovered, and an apparatus of difof reckoning. Thou wert not ambitious, thou ferent instruments, and diet suitable for the sayest, of receiving this high office, conscious sick; and often the condition of the atmosof thine own weakness. Well and good, phere is of itself enough for the recovery of a Then thou oughtest, with the same mind, to sick man; and there are instances of seasonahave declined the solicitation of others; or, ble sleep having saved the physician all further when no one called thee, wast thou weak and labor. But in the case before us, it is imposincapable, but when those were found ready to sible to take any of these things into considoffer thee this dignity, didst thou suddenly be- eration; nay there is but one method and way come competent? What ludicrous nonsense! of healing appointed, after we have gone worthy of the extremest punishment. For wrong, and that is, the powerful application of this reason also the Lord counsels the man the Word. This is the one instrument, the who wishes to build a tower, not to lay the only diet, the finest atmosphere. This takes foundation before he has taken his own ability the place of physic, cautery and cutting, and to build into account, lest he should give the if it be needful to sear and amputate, this is passers by innumerable opportunities of mock- the means which we must use, and if this be ing at him.' But in his case the penalty only of no avail, all else is wasted; with this we consists in becoming a laughing-stock; while both rouse the soul when it sleeps, and reduce in that before us the punishment is that of fire it when it is inflamed; with this we cut off exunquenchable, and of an undying worm,2 cesses, and fill up defects, and perform all gnashing of teeth, outer darkness, and being manner of other operations which are requisite cut asunder,3 and having a portion with the for the soul's health. Now as regards the ordering of our daily life for the best, it is true But my accusers are unwilling to consider any that the life of another may provoke us to cease to blame a person who is unwilling trine, when any soul is diseased thereby, then is Christ's Body, and he who is entrusted with by means of these marvels to stop the mouths its care ought to train it up to a state of health- of impudent gainsayers, one would have little iness, and beauty unspeakable, and to look need of the assistance of the Word; still in the everywhere, lest any spot or wrinkle,5 or other days of miracles the Word was by no means like blemish should mar its vigor and comeli-useless, but essentially necessary. For St. Paul made use of it himself, although he was worthy, so far as human power can, of the in- everywhere so great an object of wonder for corruptible and ever-blessed Head which is his miracles; and another 8 of those who beset over it? If they who are ambitious of longed to the "glorious company of the Aposreaching an athletic condition of body need tles" exhorts us to apply ourselves to acquirthe help of physicians and trainers,6 and exact ing this power, when he says: "Be ready diet, and constant exercise, and a thousand always to give an answer to every man that is in you," and they all, with one accord, com- clutches of the Manichæans? 3 or after he has mitted the care of the poor widows to Stephen, proved himself superior to them even, if they and in order that we may wound him.

¹ See Luke xiv. 28, 29, 3. The Revised Version in the margin renders, the lord of that servant shall severely scourge him. See above, p. 61, note. 4 Col. 1, 18, 24, 2 F. ph. v. 27, 6 Hat607ptβáv, literally, those who teach boys wreatling.

⁷ Eph. vi. 16, 17. 8 1 Pet. iii. 15. Haud seio an ita loqui possit primatus Ro-mani defensor." Bengel's Edition of this Treatise, Leipzig, 1834p. 145, note 17.

he has undertaken. But here it is otherwise; tend for the observance of all its contents, in this warfare, he must understand all forms Church of God, avoiding either extreme, has of the art, as the devil knows well how to in- trodden a middle path, and is neither induced troduce his own assailants through any one on the one hand to place herself under its quainted with his plottings. Wherefore we who is going to fight with both these enemies,6 gate, the rest of the circuit is of no use, al- wish to pull it to pieces; and if in his ambipresence of mind and wisdom of the shepherd, which answers to the wall, protect it on all sides, all the enemy's devices end in his confusion and ridicule, and they who dwell within the body of every about matter led him to hold that the body of every about matter led him to hold that the body of every about matter led him to hold that the body of every about matter led him to hold that the body of every about matter led himself at liberty and the led himself at liberty and the led himself at liberty and the liminated the body of every least was an incorporate plantom. the wall abide unmolested, but wherever any one has been able to demolish a single part, though the rest stand never so fast, through that breach ruin will enter upon the whole. For to what purpose does a man contend earnestly with the Greeks, if at the same time he becomes a prey to the Jews? or get the better of both these and then fall into the

for no other reason than that they themselves who introduce fatalism enter in, and make might have leisure "for the ministry of the havoc of the flock? But not to enumerate Word." To this we ought equally to apply all the heresies of the devil, it will be enough ourselves, unless indeed we are endued with a to say that unless the shepherd is well skilled power of working miracles. But if there is in refuting them all, the wolf, by means of not the least sign of such a power being left any one of them, can enter, and devour the us, while on every side many enemies are constantly attacking us, why then it necessarily we must always look for victory being won or follows that we should arm ourselves with this weapon, both in order that we may not be the field of battle. But in the spiritual warwounded ourselves with the darts of the enemy, fare the case is quite different. For there it often happens that the combat with one set of 4. Wherefore it should be our ambition that enemies secures a victory for others who never the Word of Christ dwell in us richly.2 For it engaged in battle at all, nor took any trouble, is not for one kind of battle only that we have but were sitting still all the while; and he who to be prepared. This warfare is manifold, and has not much experience in such occurrences is engaged with a great variety of enemies; will get pierced, so to say, with his own sword, neither do all these use the same weapons, nor and become the laughing-stock of friends and do they practice the same method of attack; foes alike. I will try by an example to make and he who has to join battle with all, must clear what I am saying. They who receive needs know the artifices of all, and be at once both archer and slinger, captain and general, and of all whose minds are similarly diseased, in the ranks and in command, on foot and on exclude the Law given by God to Moses from horseback, in sea-fight and in siege. In com- the catalogue of the Divine Scriptures. But mon warfare, indeed, each man repels the enemy by discharging the particular duty which time has come which annuls it, they still conand if any one wishes to come off conqueror contrary to the purpose of God. But the spot which may happen to be unguarded, and to carry off the sheep. But not so where he being slandered, but commends it, though its perceives the shepherd coming equipped with day is over, because of its profitableness while accurate knowledge at all points, and well ac- its season lasted. Now it is necessary for him ought to be well-guarded in all parts; for a to be fully conversant with this middle course. city, so long as it happens to be surrounded. For if in wishing to teach the Jews that they with a wall, laughs to scorn the besiegers, abid- are out of date in clinging to the old law, he ing in great security; but if any one makes a begins to find fault with it unsparingly, he breach in the wall, though but of the size of a gives no little handle to those heretics who though the whole of it stand quite securely; tion to stop their mouths he extols it immodso it is with the city of God: so long as the erately, and speaks of it with admiration, as the body of Jesus was an incorporeal phantom. He eliminated the Old Testament from the Scriptures, and held himself at liberty also to reject such passages in the New Testament as were opposed to his own opinions. See Robertson: Hist, of the Christian Church, vol. i. 139-145.

4 "οι την εμαρμνήν εισάγοντες," sc. The Stoics. They were still a numerous body, and St. Chrysostom himself wrote six Homilies against them

Homilies against them.

5 Marcion and Valentinus (A.D. 140) were each founders of a form of Gnosticism. Each held that the God of the Old Testament was morally contrary to the God of the New! while the system of Valentinus represented the imaginative and speculative side of Gnosticism, that of Marcion represented its practical side, and was rather religious than theological. The sect of the Valentinians lasted as late as the 5th century; and Marcionism was not extinct till the 6th.

6 Sc. Jews and Marcionites.

necessary for this present time, he unseals the are neither possible for them to know, nor of if any one examines their doctrines, he will find Scriptures, "are a great deep," 6 and about Paul of Samosata,3 and that both are very wide of the truth. Great, therefore, is the danger in such cases, and the way of ortholest when intending to strike at one enemy we and there only remains for us the danger arisof substance; 5 so we must turn and flee both censures. In short, to meet all these difficulfrom the impious confounding of the Persons ties, there is no help given but that of speech, by the one, and the senseless division of the substance by the other, confessing, indeed, that the Godhead of the Father and of the of the weaker and more meddlesome kind) are Son and of the Holy Ghost, is all one, while we add thereunto a Trinity of Persons. For tossed. So that the Priest should do all that then we shall be able to fortify ourselves against the attacks of both heretics. I might tell thee besides these, of several other adver- bitious of becoming perfect in this art? He saries against which, except we contend bravely and carefully, we shall leave the field covered with wounds.

5. Why should any one describe the silly chatter of our own people? For these are not less than the attacks upon us from without, while they give the teacher even more trouble. Some out of an idle curiosity are rashly bent upon busying themselves about matters which lips of the Iews. Again they who labor under any advantage to them if they could know the frenzy of Sabellius and the craze of Arius, them. Others again demand from God an have both fallen from a sound faith for want account of his judgments, and force themselves of observing a middle course. The name of to sound the depth of that abyss which is un-Christian is applied to both these heretics; but fathomable. "For thy judgments," saith the the one sect not much better than the Jews, their faith and practice thou wouldest find and differing from them only in name, and few of them anxious, but the majority curithe other very nearly holding the heresy of ously inquiring into matters which it is not possible to discover, and the mere inquiry into which provokes God. For when we make a determined effort to learn what He does not doxy is narrow and hemmed in by threatening wish us to know, we fail to succeed (for how crags on either side, and there is no little fear should we succeed against the will of God?); should be wounded by the other. For if any ing from our inquiry. Now, though this be the one assert the unity of the Godhead, Sabellius case, whenever any one authoritatively stops straightway turns that expression to the ad- the search, into such fathomless depths, he vantage of his own mental vagary,4 and if he gets himself the reputation of being proud and distinguish the Persons, and say that the Father ignorant; so that at such times much tact is is one, and the Son another, and the Holy needed on the Bishop's part, so as to lead his Spirit a third, up gets Arius, ready to wrest people away from these unprofitable questhat distinction of Persons into a difference tions, and himself escape the above-named and if any be destitute of this power, the souls of those who are put under his charge (I mean no better off than ships continually stormin him lies, to gain this means of strength.

6. BASIL: "Why, then, was not St. Paul ammakes no secret of his poverty of speech, but distinctly confesses himself to be unskilled, even telling the Corinthians so,7 who were admired for their eloquence, and prided themselves upon it."

CHRYSOSTOM: This is the very thing which has ruined many and made them remiss in the study of true doctrine. For while they failed to fathom the depths of the apostle's mind, and to understand the meaning of his words, they passed all their time slumbering and yawning, and paying respect not to that ignorance which St. Paul acknowledges, but to a kind from which he was as free as any man ever was in the world.

But leaving this subject to await our consideration, I say this much in the meantime. Granting that St. Paul was in this respect as unskilled as they would have him to be, what has that to do with the men of to-day? For he had a greater power by far than power of speech, power which brought about greater results too; which was that his bare presence, even though he was silent, was terrible to the

¹ Sabellius was condemned in a Council held in Rome, A.D., 263, for holding that there is but one person in the Godhead, and that the Word and Holy Spirit are only virtues or emanations of the Deity. Arius held that our Lord Jesus Christ existed before His Incarnation, that by Him as by an instrument the Supreme God made the worlds, and that as being the most ancient and the highest of created beings, He is to be worshipped; but that He had a beginning of existence, and so is not God's co-eternally begotten Son, nor of the very substance of the Supreme God. See Liddon, Bampton Lectures, i. p. 25. The heresy of Arius was condemned at the Council of Nicea, A.D. 325. Esabellius was condemned in a Council held in Rome, A.D. 263, Arius was condemned at the Council of Nicæa, A.D. 325, 28c. The Arians.

3 Poul of Samosata was appointed Bishop of Antioch about 566 A.D. The Humanutaran movement culminated in his teaching, which maintained that the Word was only in the Father, as reason is in man; that Jesus was a mere man, and that he is called Son of God as having, in a certain sense, become such through the influence of the Divine Word which dwelt in him, but without any personal union.

4 i.e., while he maintained the Unity of the Godhead against the Arians there was danger of slipping into the Sabellian error of "confounding the Persons,"

5 i.e., while he divided the Persons against the Sabellians he had to guard against the Arian error of "dividing the substance" also.

⁶ Ps. xxxvi. 6. 7 2 Cor. xi. 6. See also, 2 Cor. x. 10 demons. But the men of the present day, if tinual cares, and incessant anxiety for the deprive that holy apostle of the greatest of Churches; his sympathy with the weak, his his gifts, and the sum of his praises. many afflictions, his unwonted persecutions, it often sheltered him in time of danger. For sus? Was it not because he was so mighty and he underwent every species of attack, and victorious in the word, and brought his adver-

come over to Christ.4 Now who so longed for it not owing to his long attendance even until Christ? If, indeed, his feelings towards him midnight to St. Paul's preaching? How do we ought not to be described as something find him employed at Thessalonica and Cocompare ourselves with this saint, after so he not spend whole nights and days in intergreat grace was imparted to him from above, preting the Scriptures in their order? and after so great virtue was manifested in himself? What could be more presumptuous?

Now, that he was not so unskilled, as some they were all collected in one place, would not count him to be, I shall try to show in what be able, with infinite prayers and tears, to do follows. The unskilled person in men's estithe wonders that once were done by the hand- mation is not only one who is unpracticed in kerchief of St. Paul. He too by his prayers the tricks of profane oratory, but the man who raised the dead,' and wrought such other mi- is incapable of contending for the defence of racles, that he was held to be a god by the right faith, and they are right. But St. heathen; and before he was removed from Paul did not say that he was unskilled in both this life, he was thought worthy to be caught these respects, but in one only; and in support up as far as the third heaven, and to share in of this he makes a careful distinction, saying such converse as it is not lawful for mortal that he was "rude in speech, but not in knowlears to hear." But the men of to-day—not edge." Now were I to insist upon the that I would say anything harsh or severe, for polish of Isocrates, the weight of Demosindeed I do not speak by way of insult to thenes, the dignity of Thucydides, and the them, but only in wonder—how is it that they sublimity of Plato, in any one bishop, St. Paul do not shudder when they measure themselves would be a strong evidence against me. But with so great a man as this? For if we leave I pass by all such matters and the elaborate the miracles and turn to the life of this blessed ornaments of profane oratory; and I take no saint, and look into his angelic conversation, account of style or of delivery; yea let a man's it is in this rather than in his miracles that diction be poor and his composition simple thou wilt find this Christian athlete a con- and unadorned, but let him not be unskilled queror. For how can one describe his zeal in the knowledge and accurate statement of and forbearance, his constant perils, his con-doctrine; nor in order to screen his own sloth,

7. For how was it, tell me, that he confoundhis deaths daily? Where is the spot in the ed the Jews which dwelt at Damascus, though world, where is the continent or sea, that is a he had not yet begun to work miracles? How stranger to the labours of this righteous man? was it that he wrestled with the Grecians and Even the desert has known his presence, for threw them? and why was he sent to Tarachieved every kind of victory, and there was saries to such a pass that they, unable to never any end to his contests and his triumphs. brook their defeat, were provoked to seek Yet, all unawares, I have been led to do this his life? At that time, as I said, he had not man an injury. For his exploits are beyond begun to work miracles, nor could any one all powers of description, and beyond mine in say that the masses looked upon him with asparticular, just as the masters of eloquence tonishment on account of any glory belonging surpass me. Nevertheless, since that holy to his mighty works, or that they who conapostle will judge us, not by the issue, but by tended with him were overpowered by the the motive, I shall not forbear till I have stated force of public opinion concerning him. For one more circumstance which surpasses any- at this time he conquered by dint of argument thing yet mentioned, as much as he himself only. How was it, moreover, that he consurpasses all his fellow men. And what is tended and disputed successfully with those this? After so many exploits, after such a who tried to Judaize in Antioch? and how multitude of victories, he prayed that he might was it that that Areopagite, an inhabitant of go into hell, and be handed over to eternal Athens, that most devoted of all cities to the punishment, if so be that those Jews, who had gods, followed the apostle, he and his wife? was often stoned him, and done what they could it not owing to the discourse which they heard? to make away with him, might be saved, and And when Eutychus " fell from the lattice, was nobler than longing; shall we then any more rinth, in Ephesus and in Rome itself? Did

Acts xx. 10 3 2 Cor. xii. 2-4.

² Acts xiv 11. 4 Rom, ix. 3.

⁵ τερθρείαν, from τέρθρον, literally, a sail-rope. The man who condescends to catching the ear by mere rhetorical artifice being like the mountebank on the trapeze, fascinating the spectators in a circus by his performances.

9 2 Cor. xi. δ.
7 Acts ix. 22. δ See Acts ixi. 29. 9 Acts xvii. 34. 10 Acts xx. 9.

why should any one recount his disputes with the Epicureans and Stoics.' For were we resolved to enter into every particular, our story would grow to an unreasonable length.

When, therefore, both before working miracles, and after, St. Paul appears to have made much use of argument, how can any one dare to pronounce him unskillful whose sermons and disputations were so exceedingly admired by all who heard them? Why did the Lycaonians 2 imagine that he was Hermes? The opinion that he and Barnabas were gods indeed, arose out of the sight of their miracles; but the notion that he was Hermes did not arise from this, but was a consequence of his speech. In what else did this blessed saint excel the rest of the apostles? and how comes it that up and down the world he is so much on every one's tongue? How comes it that not merely among ourselves, but also among Jews and Greeks, he is the wonder of wonders? Is it not from the power of his epistles? whereby not only to the faithful of to-day, but from his time to this, yea and up to the end, even the appearing of Christ, he has been and will be profitable, and will continue to be so as long as the human race shall last. For as a wall built of adamant, so his writings fortify all the Churches of the known world, and he as a most noble champion stands in the midst, bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ, casting down imaginations, and every high thing which exalts itself against the knowledge of God,3 and all this he does by those epistles which he has left to us full of wonders and of Divine wisdom. For his writings are not only useful to us, for the overthrow of false doctrine and the confirmation of the true, but they help not a little towards living a good life. For by the use of these, the bishops of the present day fit and fashion the chaste virgin, which St. Paul himself espoused to Christ,4 and conduct her to the state of spiritual beauty; with these, too, they drive away from her the noisome pestilences which beset her, and preserve the good health thus obtained. Such are the medicines and such their efficacy left us by this so-called unskillful man, and they know them and their power best who constantly use them. From all this it is evident that St. Paul had given himself to the study of which we have been speaking with great diligence and zeal.

8. Hear also what he says in his charge to his disciple: 5 "Give heed to reading, to exhortation, to teaching," and he goes on to show the usefulness of this by adding, "For in doing this thou shalt save both thyself and them that hear thee."6 And again he says, "The Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle towards all, apt to teach, forbearing;" 7 and he proceeds to say, "But abide thou in the things which thou hast learned, and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them, and that from a babe thou hast known the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation," and again, "Every Scripture is inspired of God, and also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness, that the man of God may be complete."9 Hear what he adds further in his directions to Titus about the appointment of bishops. "The bishop," he says, "must be holding to the faithful word which is according to the teaching, that he may be able to convict the gainsayers." 10 But how shall any one who is unskillful as these men pretend, be able to convict the gainsayers and stop their mouths? or what need is there to give attention to reading and to the Holy Scriptures, if such a state of unskillfulness is to be welcome among us? Such arguments are mere makeshifts and pretexts, the marks of idleness and sloth. But some one will say, "it is to the priests that these charges are given:"-certainly, for they are the subjects of our discourse. But that the apostle gives the same charge to the laity, hear what he says in another epistle to other than the priesthood: "Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom," " and again, "Let your speech be always with grace seasoned with salt, that ye may know how ye ought to answer each one," 12 and there is a general charge to all that they "be ready to" 13 render an account of their faith, and to the Thessalonians, he gives the following command: "Build each other up, even as also ye do." 14 But when he speaks of priests he says, "Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially those who labor in the word, and in teaching." 15 For this is the perfection of teaching when the teachers both by what they do, and by what they say as well, bring their disciples to that blessed state of life which Christ appointed for them. For example alone is not enough to instruct others. Nor do I say this of myself; it is our Saviour's own word. "For whosoever shall do and teach them, he shall be called great.16 Now if doing were the same as teaching, the second word here would be superfluous; and it had been enough to have said "whosoever shall ^{6 1} Tim, iv. 16. 7 2 Tim, ii. 24. 8 2 Tim, iii, 14, 15. 9 2 Tim, iii. 16, 17, or "every Scripture inspired of God is also profitable," etc., so rendered in the Kevised Version.

10 Titus i. 7, 9. Revised Version.

11 Col. iv. 6. 31 Peter iii. 15. 14 1 Thess. v. 11. 15 1 Tim. v. 17. 16 Matt. v. 19.

¹ Acts xvii. 18. 2 Acts xiv. 11. 5 1 Tim. iv. 13. 4 2 Cor. xi. 2.

do" simply. But now by distinguishing the in disputations of this kind. For though he could accomplish everything.

ters of doctrine, and all take their weapons quence of their leader's defeat, so great a storm from the same Scriptures, of what weight will settles down upon their souls, that the mischief any one's life be able to prove? What then ends in their shipwreck altogether. But how will be the good of his many austerities, when dire is the destruction, and how terrible the after such painful exercises, any one from the fire which such a leader brings upon his own into heresy, and be cut off from the body of lost, thou wilt not need to learn from me, as seen many suffering. Of what profit then pride is this vainglory in me, to be unwilling two, he shows that practice is one thing, and himself stands safely, and is unhurt by the doctrine another, and that each needs the help gainsayers, yet the simple multitude under his of the others in order to complete edification. direction, when they see their leader defeated, Thou hearest too what the chosen vessel of and without any answer for the gainsayers, Christ says to the Ephesian elders: "Where- will be apt to lay the blame of his discomfitfore watch ye, remembering that for the space ure not on his own weakness, but on the docof three years, I ceased not to admonish every trines themselves, as though they were faulty; one, night and day, with tears." But what and so by reason of the inexperience of one, need was there for his tears or for admonition great numbers are brought to extreme ruin; by word of mouth, while his life as an apostle for though they do not entirely go over to the was so illustrious? His holy life might be a adversary, yet they are forced to doubt about great inducement to men to keep the com- matters in which formerly they firmly believed, mandments, yet I dare not say that it alone and those whom they used to approach with unswerving confidence, they are unable to Q. But when a dispute arises concerning mat- hold to any longer steadfastly, but in conse-Priest's great unskillfulness in argument fall wretched head for every soul which is thus the Church, a misfortune which I have myself thou knowest all this perfectly. Is this then will his patience be to to him? None; no to be the cause of the destruction of so many more than there will be in a sound faith if the souls? and of procuring for myself greater life is corrupt. Wherefore, for this reason punishment in the world to come, than that more than for all others, it concerns him whose which now awaits me there? Who would say office it is to teach others, to be experienced so? surely no one, unless he should wish to find fault where there is none, and to moralize over other men's calamities.

I Acts xx. 31.

BOOK V.

Contents.

- I. PUBLIC PREACHING NEEDS MUCH LABOR AND STUDY.
- II. HE WHO IS APPOINTED TO THIS WORK MUST BE INDIFFERENT TO PRAISE, AND ABLE IN SPEAKING.
- III. UNLESS HE HAVE BOTH THESE QUALIFICATIONS HE WILL BE UNSERVICEABLE TO THE MULTITUDE.
- IV. HE SHOULD ABOVE ALL TAKE NO NOTICE OF SLANDER.
- V. THE SKILLFUL IN PREACHING NEED MORE STUDY THAN THE UNLEARNED.
- VI. HE MUST NOT THINK TOO LITTLE, OR TOO MUCH OF THE UNREASONED VERDICT OF THE MULTITUDE.
- VII. HE MUST ORDER HIS WORDS WITH A VIEW TO PLEASING GOD ALONE.
- VIII. HE WHO IS NOT INDIFFERENT TO PRAISE WILL UNDERGO MANY SUFFERINGS.
- some attach themselves to one, and some to not possible to arrive at, except by two means: become the partisans now of this teacher, now preaching well." of that, listening to them with a view to favor curred to any preacher to weave into his ser- to praise, and yet cannot produce the doctrine mons any part of other men's works, he is ex-

1. How great is the skill required for the money. Nay, often where he has not even teacher in contending earnestly for the truth, borrowed anything from any one, but is only has been sufficiently set forth by us. But I suspected, he has suffered the fate of a thief. have to mention one more matter beside this, And why do I speak of the works of others which is a cause of numberless dangers, when it is not permitted to him to use his own though for my own part I should rather say resources without variety? For the public are that the thing itself is not the cause, but they accustomed to listen not for profit, but for who know not how to use it rightly, since it is pleasure, sitting like critics of tragedies, and of itself a help to salvation and to much good of musical entertainments, and that facility of besides, whenever thou findest that earnest and speech against which we declaimed just now, good men have the management of it. What in this case becomes desirable, even more than then, do I mean by this? The expenditure of in the case of barristers, where they are obliged great labor upon the preparation of discourses to contend one against the other. A preacher to be delivered in public. For to begin with, then should have loftiness of mind, far exthe majority of those who are under the ceeding my own littleness of spirit, that he preachers' charge are not minded to behave may correct this disorderly and unprofitable towards them as towards teachers, but dis-pleasure on the part of the multitude, and daining the part of learners, they assume in- be able to lead them over to a more useful stead the attitude of those who sit and look way of hearing, that his people may follow on at the public games; and just as the mul- and yield to him, and that he may not be titude there is separated into parties, and led away by their own humors, and this it is another, so here also men are divided, and indifference to their praise, and the power of

2. For if either of these be lacking, the remainor spite. And not only is there this hardship, ing one becomes useless, owing to its divorce but another quite as great. For if it has oc- from the other, for if a preacher be indifferent posed to greater disgrace than those who steal which he always severely reprimanded.

"which is with grace seasoned with salt," he becomes despised by the multitude, while he gains nothing from his own nobleness of mind; and if on the other hand he is successful as a preacher, and is overcome by the thought of applause, harm is equally done in turn, both to himself and the multitude, because in his desire for praise he is careful to speak rather with a view to please than to profit. And as he who neither lets good opinion influence him, nor is skillful in speaking, does not yield to the pleasure of the multitude, and is unable to do them any good worth mentioning, because he has nothing to say, so he who is carried away with desire for praise, though he is able to render the multitude better service, rather provides in place of this such food as will suit their taste, because he purchases thereby the tumult of acclamation.

3. The best kind of Bishop must, therefore, be strong in both these points, so that neither may supplant the other. For if when he stands up in the congregation and speaks words calculated to make the careless wince,2 he then stumbles, and stops short, and is forced to blush at his failure, the good of what he has spoken is immediately wasted. For they who are rebuked, being galled by what has been told them, and unable to avenge themselves on him otherwise, taunt him, with jeers at this ignorance of his, thinking to screen their own reproach thereby. Wherefore he ought, like some very good charioteer, to come to an accurate judgment about both these good things, in order that he may be able to deal with both as he may have need; for when he is irreproachable in the eyes of all, then he will be able, with just so much authority as he wishes, both to correct and to remit from correction all those who are under his rule. But without this it will not be easy for him to do so. But this nobleness of soul should be shown not only up to the limit of indifference to praise, but should go further in order that the gain thus gotten may not in its turn be fruitless.

4. To what else ought he then to be indifferent? Slander and envy. Unseasonable evil speaking, however (for of course the Bishop undergoes some groundless censure), it is well that he should neither fear nor tremble at excessively, nor entirely pass over; but we ought, though it happen to be false, or to be brought against us by the common herd, to try and extinguish it immediately. For nothing so magnifies both an evil and a good report as the undisciplined mob. For accustomed to hear and to speak without stopping to make inquiry, they repeat at random everything which comes in their way, without any regard to the truth of it. Therefore the Bishop ought not to be unconcerned about the multitude, but straightway to nip their evil surmisings in the bud; persuading his accusers, even if they be the most unreasonable of all men. and to omit nothing which is able to dispel an ill-favored report. But if, when we do all this, they who blame us will not be persuaded, thenceforward we should give them no concern. Since if any one be too quick to be dejected by these accidents, he will not be able at any time to produce anything noble and admirable. For despondency and constant cares are mighty for destroying the powers of the mind, and for reducing it to extreme weakness. Thus then must the Priest behave towards those in his charge, as a father would behave to his very young children; and as such are not disturbed either by their insults or their blows, or their lamentations, nor even if they laugh and rejoice with us, do we take much account of it; so should we neither be puffed up by the promises of these persons nor cast down at their censure, when it comes from them But this is hard, my good unseasonably. friend; and perhaps, methinks, even impossible. For I know not whether any man ever succeeded in the effort not to be pleased when he is praised, and the man who is pleased at this is likely also to desire to enjoy it, and the man who desires to enjoy it will, of necessity, be altogether vexed and beside himself whenever he misses it. For as they who revel in being rich, when they fall into poverty are grieved, and they who have been used to live luxuriously cannot bear to live shabbily; so, too, they who long for applause, not only when they are blamed without a cause, but when they are not constantly being praised, become, as by some famine, wasted in soul, particularly when they happen themselves to have been used to praise, or if they hear others being praised. He who enters upon the trial of preaching with desires of this kind, how many annoyances and how many pangs dost thou think that he has? It is no more possible for the sea to be without waves than that man to be without cares and grief.

5. For though the preacher may have great ability (and this one would only find in a few), not even in this case is he released from perpetual toil. For since preaching does not come by nature, but by study, suppose a man to reach a high standard of it, this will then forsake him if he does not cultivate his power by constant application and exercise. So that there is greater labor for the wiser than for the unlearned. For there is not the same degree him, but that he is generally approved of, hate of loss attending negligence on the part of the one and the other, but the loss is in exact proportion to the difference between the two possessions. For the latter no one would blame, as they furnish nothing worth regard-But the former, unless they are constantly producing matter beyond the reputation in which all hold them, great censure attends on all hands; and besides these things, the latter would meet with considerable praise, even for small performances, while the efforts of the former, unless they be specially wonderful and startling, not only fail to win applause, but meet with many faultfinders. For the audience set themselves to be critics, not so much in judgment of what is said as of the reputation of the speaker, so that whenever any one excels all others in oratorical powers, then especially of all others does he need laborious study. For this man is not allowed to avail himself of the usual plea which human nature urges, that one cannot succeed in everything; but if his sermons do not throughout correspond to the greatness of the expectations formed, he will go away without having gained anything but countless jeers and censures; and no one takes this into consideration about him, that dejection and pain, and anxiety, and often anger, may step in, and dim the clearness of his thoughts and prevent his productions from coming from him unalloyed,2 and that on the whole, being but a man, he cannot be constantly the same, nor at all times acquit himself successfully, but naturally must sometimes fall short of the mark, and appear on a lower level of ability than usual. None of these things, as I said, are they willing to take into consideration, but charge him with faults as if they were sitting in judgment on an angel; though in other cases, too, a man is apt to overlook the good performances of his neighbor, though they be many and great, and if anywhere a defect appears, even if it be accidental, even if it only occur at long intervals, it is quickly perceived, and always remembered, and thus small and trifling matters have often lessened the glory of many and great doings.

^{. . . .}

² ξαιστύψαι, literally, to purse up the mouth, as at the taste of what is tart and sour.

³ κακηγορία - if κατηγορία be read, "accusation" will be the meaning.

6. Thou seest, my excellent friend, that the man who is powerful in preaching has peculiar need of greater study than others; and besides study, of forbearance also greater than what is needed by all those whom I have already mentioned. For thus are many constantly springing up against him, in a vain and senseless spirit, and having no fault to find with him; and he must bear their bitter malice nobly, for as they are not able to hide this cursed hatred, which they so unreasonably entertain, they both revile, and censure, and slander in private, and defame in public, and the mind which has begun to be pained and exasperated, on every one of these occasions, will not escape being corrupted by grief. For they will not only revenge themselves upon him by their own acts, but will try to do so by means of others, and often having chosen some one of those who are unable to speak a word, will extol him with their praises and admire him beyond his worth. Some do this through ignorance alone,3 some through ignorance and envy, in order that they may ruin the reputation of the other, not that they may prove the man to be wonderful who is not so, and the noble-minded man has not only to struggle against these, but often against the ignorance of the whole multitude; for since it is not possible that all those who come together should consist of learned men, but the chances are that the larger part of the congregation is composed of unlearned people, and that even the rest, who are clearer headed than they, fall as far short of being able to criticize sermons as the remainder again fall short of them; so that only one or two are seated there who possess this power; it follows, of necessity, that he who preaches better than others carries away less applause, and possibly goes home without being praised at all, and he must be prepared to meet such anomalies nobly, and to pardon those who commit them in ignorance, and to weep for those who acquiesce in them on account of envy as wretched and pitiable creatures, and not to consider that his powers have become less on either of these accounts. For if a man, being a pre-eminently good painter, and superior to all in his art, sees the portrait which he has drawn with great accuracy held up to ridicule, he ought not to be dejected, and to consider the picture poor, because of the judgment of the ignorant; as he would not consider the drawing that is really poor to be something wonderful and lovely, because of the astonishment of the inartistic.

7. For let the best artificer be himself the critic of his own designs, and let his performances be determined to be good or poor, according as the mind which designed them gives sentence upon them. But let him not even consider the opinion, so erroneous and inartistic, of the outside world. Let, therefore, the man who undertakes the strain of in them.

² Sc. The unlearned.
² ειλικρινή—hterally, so that the sunlight fails to discern a flaw

³ Another reading is μονία, infatuation.

teaching never give heed to the good opinion his authority, and who are placed in the infebe indifferent to praise no less than the other, for he will be forced to do many wrong things them of the household of the faith?

of the outside world, nor be dejected in soul rior order, be able in that position to appear on account of such persons; but laboring at to better advantage than he; what a divine his sermons so that he may please God, (For mind must he have, so as not to be seized with let this alone be his rule and determination, envy or cast down by despondency. For, for in discharging this best kind of workmanship, one to be placed in a station of higher dignity, not acclamation, nor good opinions,) if, in- and to be surpassed by his inferior in rank, deed, he be praised by men, let him not repu- and to bear this nobly, would not be the part diate their applause, and when his hearers do of any ordinary mind, nor of such as my own, not offer this, let him not seek it, let him not but of one as hard as adamant; and if, indeed, be grieved. For a sufficient consolation in the man who is in greater repute be very forhis labors, and one greater than all, is when he bearing and modest, the suffering becomes so is able to be conscious of arranging and order- much the more easily borne. But if he is ing his teaching with a view to pleasing God. bold and boastful and vainglorious, a daily 8. For if he be first carried away with the death would be desirable for the other; he will desire for indiscriminate praise, he will reap no so embitter his life, insulting him to his face, advantage from his labors, or from his power and laughing at him behind his back, wresting in preaching, for the mind being unable to much of his authority from him, and wishing bear the senseless censures of the multitude to be everything himself. But he is possessed is dispirited, and casts aside all earnestness of the greatest security, in all these circumabout preaching. Therefore it is especially stances, who has fluency in preaching, and the necessary to be trained to be indifferent to all earnest attention of the multitude about him, kinds of praise. For to know how to preach and the affection of all those who are under is not enough for the preservation of that his charge. Dost not thou know what a paspower, if this be not added: and if any one sion for sermons has burst in upon the minds would examine accurately the man who is des- of Christians now-a-days? and that they who titute of this art, he will find that he needs to practice themselves in preaching are in especial honor, not only among the heathen, but among in placing himself under the control of popular then could any one bear such disgrace as to find opinion. For not having the energy to equal that all are mute when he is preaching, and those who are in repute for the quality of their think that they are oppressed, and wait for the preaching, he will not refrain from forming ill end of the sermon, as for some release from designs against them, from envying them, work; while they listen to another with eagerand from blaming them without reason, and ness though he preach long, and are sorry when from many such discreditable practices, but he is about to conclude; and almost angry will venture everything, even if it be needful when it is his purpose to be silent. If these to ruin his own soul, for the sake of bringing matters seem to thee to be small, and easily down their fame to the level of his own insig- to be despised, it is because of thine inexpenificance. And in addition to this, he will rience. They are truly enough to quench zeal, leave off his exertions about his work; a kind and to paralyze the powers of the mind, unof numbness, as it were, spreading itself over less a man withdraw himself from all human his mind. For much toil, rewarded by scanty passions, and study to frame his conduct after praise, is sufficient to cast down a man who the pattern of those incorporeal powers, who cannot despise praise, and put him into a deep are neither pursued by envy, nor by longing lethargy, since the husbandman even when he for fame, nor by any other morbid feeling. If spends time over some sorry piece of land, then there be any man so constituted as to be and is forced to till a rock, quickly desists able to subdue this wild beast, so difficult to from his work, unless he is possessed of much capture, so unconquerable, so fierce: that is earnestness about the matter, or has a fear of to say, public fame, and to cut off its many famine impending over him. For if they who heads, or rather to forbid their growth altoare able to speak with considerable power, need gether; he will easily be able to repel these such constant exercise for the preservation of many violent assaults, and to enjoy a kind of their talent, he who collects no materials at quiet haven of rest. But he who has not freed all, but is forced in the midst of his efforts to himself from this monster, involves his soul in meditate; what difficulty, what confusion, what struggles of various kinds, and perpetual agitatrouble will he experience, in order that he tion, and the burden both of despondency and may be able at great labor to collect a few of other passions. But why need I detail ideas! and if any of those clergy who are under the rest of these difficulties, which no one will be able to describe, or to learn unless he has had actual experience of them.

BOOK VI.

CONTENTS.

- I. PRIESTS ARE LIABLE TO RENDER ACCOUNT FOR THE SINS COMMITTED BY OTHERS.
- II. THEY NEED MORE CIRCUMSPECTION THAN THE RECLUSES.
- III. THE RECLUSE ENJOYS MORE EASE OF MIND THAN HE WHO IS SET OVER THE CHURCH.
- IV. THE PRIEST HAS BEEN ENTRUSTED WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD AND WITH OTHER FORMIDABLE DUTIES.
- V. THE PRIEST MUST BE ADAPTED TO ALL CIRCUMSTANCES.
- VI. TO LIVE THE LIFE OF A RECLUSE IS NOT SUCH A MARK OF ENDURANCE AS TO GOVERN THE MULTITUDE WELL.
- VII. THE HABITS OF HIM WHO LIVES ALONE, AND OF HIM WHO HAS HIS CONVERSATION IN THE WORLD ARE NOT FOR THE SAME ENDS.
- VIII. THEY WHO LIVE ALONE BECOME PROFICIENT IN VIRTUE MORE EASILY THAN THEY WHO HAVE THE CARE OF MANY.
- IX. ONE OUGHT NOT TO THINK LIGHTLY OF POPULAR SUSPICION, EVEN THOUGH IT HAPPEN TO BE FALSE.
 - X. IT IS NO VERY GREAT MATTER TO SAVE ONESELF.
- XI. MUCH SORER PUNISHMENT AWAITS THE SINS OF THE PRIESTS THAN THOSE OF THE LAITY.
- XII. A REPRESENTATION BY WAY OF EXAMPLE BOTH OF THE PAIN AND OF THE FEAR WHICH ARISES FROM THE EXPECTATION OF THE PRIESTHOOD.
- XIII. THE WARFARE OF THE DEVIL AGAINST US IS MORE SEVERE THAN ANY OTHER.
- thou hast heard. But our condition hereafter stroy not one only, or two, or three, but so how shall we endure, when we are compelled many multitudes? For it is not possible for to give our account for each of those who have inexperience to be urged as an excuse, nor to awaits us as well. As for the passage, "Obey it were possible, one of those under their charge them that have the rule over you, and submit to them, for they watch in behalf of your souls his own sins than bishops in the case of the as they that shall give account;" though I sins of others. Dost thou ask why? Because have mentioned it once already, yet I will he who has been appointed to rectify the ignobreak silence about it now, for the fear of its rance of others, and to warn them beforehand warning is continually agitating my soul. For of the conflict with the devil which is coming if for him who causes one only, and that the upon them, will not be able to put forward igleast, to stumble, it is profitable that "a great norance as his excuse, or to say, "I have never millstone should be hanged about his neck, heard the trumpet sound, I did not foresee the sciences of the brethren, sin against Christ for others, and warn them of the dangers at

1. Our condition here, indeed, is such as what kind of penalty will they pay, who debeen entrusted to us? For our penalty is not take refuge in ignorance, nor for the plea of limited to shame, but everlasting chastisement necessity or force to be put forward. Yea. if and that he should be sunk in the depth of conflict." For he is set for that very purpose, the sea;" 2 and if they who wound the con-says Ezekiel, that he may sound the trumpet Himself,3 what then will they one day suffer, hand. And therefore his chastisement is inevitable, though he that perishes happen to be but one. "For if when the sword comes, the watchman does not sound the trumpet to the drawn on the beholder to pity, and next to add to it numberless other safeguards, hedging disturbed by polluting thoughts? themselves round on every side, and studying And I pass by honors, which are the cause both to speak and to act with great circum-

people, nor give them a sign, and the sword utter ruin; and many who have escaped the come and take any man away, he indeed is former nets, in the way of gold ornaments and taken away on account of his iniquity, but his perfumes, and apparel, and all the rest, of blood will I require at the watchman's hands." which I have spoken as connected with them, 2. Cease then to urge us on to a penalty so have easily fallen into these so widely differinevitable; for our discourse is not about an ing from them, and have perished. When then army, or a kingdom; but about an office which both by poverty and by riches, both by the needs the virtues of an angel. For the soul adornment and the neglect of the personal apof the Priest ought to be purer than the very pearance, both by studied and unaffected sunbeams, in order that the Holy Spirit may manners, in short by all those means which I not leave him desolate, in order that he may have enumerated, war is kindled in the soul be able to say, "Now I live; and yet no longer of the beholder, and its artifices surround him I, but Christ liveth in me." For if they who on every side, how will be be able to breathe dwell in the desert, and are removed far from freely while so many snares encompass him? the city and the market-place, and the tumult and what hiding-place will he be able to find therein, and who enjoy all their time a haven -I do not say so as to avoid being forcibly of rest, and of peacefulness, are not willing to seized by them (for this is not altogether rely on the security of that manner of life, but difficult)—but so as to keep his own soul unspection, so that to the utmost extent of human the hands of women are ruinous to the vigor power they may draw near to God with assur- of self-restraint, and often overthrow it when a ance, and with unstained purity, what power man does not know how to watch constantly and strength, thinkest thou, does the ordained against such designs; while those which come Priest need so as to be able to tear his soul from the hands of men, unless a man receive away from every defilement, and to keep its them with much nobleness of mind, he is spiritual beauty unsullied? For he has need seized with two contrary emotions, servile of far greater purity than they; and whoever flattery and senseless pride. To those who has need of greater purity, he too is subject patronize him, he is obliged to cringe; and to more pressing temptations than they, which towards his inferiors he is puffed up, on acare able to defile him, unless by using con- count of the honors which the others confer, stant self-denial and much labor, he renders and is driven into the gulf of arrogance. We his soul inaccessible to them. For beauty of have mentioned these matters indeed, but face, elegance of movement, an affected gait how harmful they actually are, no one could and lisping voice, pencilled eyebrows and enamelled cheeks, elaborate braiding and dyeing these snares, but greater and more delusive of hair, costliness of dress, variety of golden or- than these, he must needs encounter, who has naments, and the glory of precious stones, the his conversation in the world. But he who scent of perfumes, and all those other matters is content with solitude, has freedom from all to which womankind devote themselves, are this, and if at any time a strange thought creenough to disorder the mind, unless it happen ates a representation of this kind, the image to be hardened against them, through much is weak, and capable of being speedily subausterity of self restraint. Now to be dis- dued, because there is no fuel added to the turbed indeed by such things is nothing won- flame from without, arising from actual sight. derful. But on the other hand, that the devil For the recluse has but himself to fear for; or should be able to hit and shoot down the souls of should he be forced to have the care of others men by the opposite of these—this is a matter they are easily counted: and if they be many, which fills us with astonishment and perplexity.

yet they are less than those in our Churches, and they give him who is set over them much these snares, have been caught by others lighter anxiety about them, not only on acwidely differing from these. For even a neg-count of their fewness, but because they are lected appearance, unkempt hair, squalid dress, all free from worldly concerns, and have neither and an unpainted face, simple behavior, and wife nor children, nor any such thing to care homely language, unstudied gait, and unaf- about; and this makes them very deferential fected voice, a life of poverty, a despised, un- to their rulers, and allows them to share the patronized and lonely condition, have first same abode with them, so that they are able to take in their failings accurately at a glance and correct them, seeing that the constant advance in virtue.

sins, not even the smallest part can become it. those the majority of whom they do not know even by sight?

The Priest's relations with his people in volve thus much difficulty. But if any inquire about his relations with God, he will find the others to be as nothing, since these require a greater and more thorough earnestness. For he who acts as an ambassador on behalf of the whole city—but why do I say the city? on behalf of the whole world indeed-prays that God would be merciful to the sins of all, not only of the living, but also of the departed.1 What manner of man ought he to be? For my part I think that the boldness of speech of Moses and Elias, is insufficient for such supplication. For as though he were entrusted with the whole world and were himself the father of all men, he draws near to God, beseeching that wars may be extinguished everywhere, that tumults may be quelled; asking for peace and plenty, and a swift deliverance from all the ills that beset each one, publicly and privately; and he ought as much to excel in every respect all those on whose behalf he prays, as rulers should excel their subjects.

And whenever he invokes the Holy Spirit, and offers the most dread sacrifice, and constantly handles the common Lord of all, tell me what rank shall we give him? What great purity and what real piety must we demand of him? For consider what manner of hands they ought supervision of a teacher is no little help towards to be which minister in these things, and of what kind his tongue which utters such words,2 4. But of those who are subject to the Priest, and ought not the soul which receives so great the greater number are hampered with the a spirit to be purer and holier than anything cares of this life, and this makes them the in the world? At such a time angels stand by slower in the performance of spiritual duties. the Priest; and the whole sanctuary, and the Whence it is necessary for the teacher to sow space round about the altar, is filled with the every day (so to speak), in order that by its powers of heaven, in honor of Him who lieth frequency at least, the word of doctrine may thereon. For this, indeed, is capable of being be able to be grasped by those who hear. For proved from the very rites which are being excessive wealth, and an abundance of power, then celebrated. I myself, moreover, have and sloth the offspring of luxury, and many heard some one once relate, that a certain other things beside these, choke the seeds aged, venerable man, accustomed to see revewhich have been let fall. Often too the thick lations, used to tell him, that he being thought growth of thorns does not suffer the seed to worthy of a vision of this kind, at such a time, drop even upon the surface of the soil. Again, saw, on a sudden, so far as was possible for excess of trouble, stress of poverty, constant him, a multitude of angels, clothed in shining insults, and other such things, the reverse of robes, and encircling the altar, and bending the foregoing, take the mind away from anxiety down, as one might see soldiers in the presabout things divine; and of their people's ence of their King, and for my part I believe Moreover another told me, without learnapparent; for how should it, in the case of ing it from some one else, but as being himself thought worthy to be both an ear and eye witness of it, that, in the case of those who are about to depart hence, if they happen to be partakers of the mysteries, with a pure conscience, when they are about to breathe their last, angels keep guard over them for the sake of what they have received, and bear them hence. And dost thou not yet tremble to introduce a soul into so sacred a mystery of this kind, and to advance to the dignity of the Priesthood, one robed in filthy raiment, whom Christ has shut out from the rest of the band of guests?3 The soul of the Priest should shine like a light beaming over the whole world. But mine has so great darkness overhanging it, because of my evil conscience, as to be always cast down and never able to look up with confidence to its Lord. Priests are the salt of the earth.4 But who would easily put up with my lack of understanding, and my inexperience in all things, but thou, who hast been wont to love me beyond measure. For the Priest ought not only to be thus pure as one who has been dignified with so high a ministry, but very discreet, and skilled in many matters, and to be as well versed in the affairs of this life as they who are engaged in the world, and yet to be free from them all more than the recluses who occupy the mountains. For since he must mix with men who have wives, and who bring up children, who possess servants, and are surrounded with

All the ancient Liturgies contained prayers for the departed. St. Cyril of Jerusalem (Catech. Mystag., v. n. vi.), speaking of the prayer after consecration, says: "and then we pray for our holy fathers and bishops, and for all that have fallen asleep before us, believing that it will be a very great benefit to their souls to have supplication offered for them whilst the holy and most awful sacrifice is lying upon the altar," but the practice was not based upon anything like the later Roman doctrine of purgatory. It was the natural expression of a devout belief in the "communion of saints." See Bingham's Antiquities, Book xv.

^{2 &}quot;And we pray and beseech Thee, send down thy Holy Ghost upon us and upon these gifts here outspread, and make this bread to be the precious body of thy Christ, and that which is in the cup the precious blood of Christ, having so changed them by thy Holy Spirit that to us who partake of them they may be for the cleansing of our souls, the remission of sins, the communion of the Holy Spirit." (Liturgy of St. Chrysostom.) 3 Matt. xxii. 13.
4 Matt. v. 13.

wealth, and fill public positions, and are per- may not be settled too far from intercourse with a king and a commoner. For there, if the an excellent steersman. labor is great indeed, yet the conflict is com- 7. It would be, therefore, in no wise excessmon to body and soul, or rather the greater ively surprising to us, that the recluse, living part of it is accomplished by the condition of as he does by himself, is undisturbed and does the body, and if this be not strong, the incli- not commit many and great sins. For he nation remains undeveloped, and is unable to does not meet with things which irritate and come out into action. For the habit of in- excite his mind. But if any one who has detense fasting, and sleeping on the ground, and voted himself to whole multitudes, and has keeping vigil, and refraining from the bath, been compelled to bear the sins of many, has and great toil, and all other means which they remained steadfast and firm, guiding his soul use for the affliction of the body are given up, in the midst of the storm as if he were in a when the body to be thus disciplined is not calm, he is the man to be justly applauded and business in hand, and no bodily vigor is re-quired to show its excellence. For what does therefore, for thy part wonder if I, who avoid strength of body contribute towards our being the market-place and the haunts of the multinot self-willed, or proud, or headstrong, but tude, have not many to accuse me. For I ought sober and prudent, and orderly, and all else, not to wonder, if I sinned not when asleep, wherein St. Paul filled up the picture of the nor fell when I did not wrestle, nor was hit if perfect Priest? But no one could say this of I did not fight. For who, tell me, who will be the virtues of the recluse.

ropes and daggers; while the philosopher has the whole of his art stored up in his mind, not requiring any external appliances: So accordingly sons of influence, he too should be a many- their fellow men, and may have the tranquillity sided man—I say many-sided, not unreal, nor which belongs to desert places, and yet fur-yet fawning and hypocritical, but full of much ther, may not fail to enjoy the most favorable freedom and assurance, and knowing how to climate. For nothing is so unbearable to a adapt himself profitably, where the circum- body worn with fastings as a climate which is stances of the case require it, and to be both not equable. And what trouble they are comkind and severe, for it is not possible to treat pelled to take in the preparation of their clothall those under one's charge on one plan, since ing and daily food, as they are themselves amneither is it well for physicians to apply one bitious of doing all with their own hands, I course of treatment to all their sick, nor for a need not speak of now. But the Priest will repilot to know but one way of contending with quire none of these things to supply his wants, the winds. For, indeed, continual storms be- but is unconcerned about them, and particiset this ship of ours, and these storms do not pates in all things which are harmless, while assail from without only, but take their rise he has all his skill stored up in the treasurefrom within, and there is need of much con- house of his mind. But if any one admire a descension, and circumspection, and all these solitary life, and retirement from the society different matters have one end in view, the of the multitude, I should say myself that glory of God, and the edifying of the Church, such a life was a token of patience, but not a 5. Great is the conflict which recluses under-sufficient proof of entire fortitude of soul. For go, and much their toil. But if any one com- the man who sits at the helm in harbor, does pare their exertions with those which the right not yet give any certain proof of his art. But exercise of the Priesthood involves, he will find if one is able to guide his ship safely in the the difference as great as the distance between midst of the sea, no one would deny him to be

But in this case purity of soul is the admired of all, for he has shown sufficient able to speak against me, and reveal my de-6. But as in the case of wonder-workers, a pravity? Can this roof or cell? Nay, they would large apparatus is required, both wheels and not be able to give tongue? Would my mother, who best of all knows my affairs? Well, certainly with her I am neither in communication, nor have we ever come to a quarin the case before us. The recluse requires rel, and if this had happened, no mother is so both a good condition of body, and a place heartless and wanting in affection for her suitable for his course of life, in order that such child as to revile and accuse before all him whom she travailed with, and brought forth, and reared, if there were no reason to constrain her, nor any person to urge her to such an act. Nevertheless, if any one desires to make a careful inspection of my mind, he will discover much which is corrupt there. Nor art thou unaware of this who art specially wont to extol me with these things out of mere modesty, recollect ways? how often I said to thee, when this subject lost that which they brought with them.

¹ The following descriptions of monastic life were no doubt drawn from the habits of the monks in the neighbourhood of Antioch, who dwelt on the mountainous heights of Silpius and Casius, south of dwelt on the mountainous heights of Silpius and Casius, south of the city. They lived in separate huts or cabins, but were subject to an abbot and a common rule, probably very similar to that which Pachonius had recently established in Expyt, and which became very generally adopted in the East. There are frequent allusions to the habits of these monks in Chrysostom is Homilies See especially St. Matt. Hom. LXVIII. c. 3, and LXIX. c. 3; also Life of St. Chrysostom by the translator, pp. 59-68, 3d ed.

move in society, and who are careful about ful, and to reprove them when they are idle, the concerns of this world, who are adepts at wrangling and vituperation, are full of Another reading gives its "career towards God."

praises before all. Now that I do not say countless artifices, and versed in luxurious CHRYSOSTOM: Hush, dear friend that was being discussed between us, "If any one thou art! Thou shouldest never entertain in were to give me my choice whether I would thy thoughts such men as these, when the rather gain distinction in the oversight of the Priesthood is under discussion, but only such Church, or in the life of the recluse, I would as are able after mixing and associating with vote a thousand times over for accepting the all, to keep their purity undefiled, and their unformer. For I have never failed to congratu-worldliness, their holiness, constancy and late those who have been able to discharge sobriety unshaken, and to possess all other this office well, and no one will gainsay that virtues which belong to recluses, in a greater what I counted blessed I would not have degree than they. He who has many defects, shunned were I able to take part in it fitly, but is able to hide them, by means of his se-But what am I to do? There is nothing so clusion, and to make them ineffectual, because prejudicial to the oversight of the Church as he does not associate with any one, when he this inactivity and negligence of mine, which comes into society will gain nothing, but the others think to be a sort of self-discipline, but position of a laughing-stock, and will run which I hold to be a veil as it were of my per- greater risks still, which I was very nearly exsonal infirmity, covering the greater number periencing myself, had not the providence of of my defects and not suffering them to ap- God quickly warded off such fire from my pear. For he who is accustomed to enjoy head. For it is not possible for one in such a such great freedom from business, and to pass position to escape notice when he is so conhis time in much repose, even if he be of a spicuously placed, but everything then is denoble nature, is confused by his inexperience, tected, and as the fire tests the material of and is disturbed, and his inactivity deprives metals, so too the trial of the clerical office him of no small part of his natural ability, searches the souls of mortal men; and if any But when, besides, he is of slow intellect, and one be passionate or mean, or ambitious of ignorant also of these severe trials, which I fame, if he be boastful, or anything else of the take it is my case, he will carry on this min- kind, it unveils all; and speedily lays bare his istry which he has received no better than a defects, and not only lays them bare, but instatue. Wherefore of those who have come to creases their painfulness and strength. For such great trial, out of that school, few shine; the wounds of the body, if they are galled, beand the greater part betray themselves, and come harder to heal, and the emotions of the fall, and undergo much hardship and suffer- mind when chafed and irritated, are naturally ings; and no wonder. For the trials and the more exasperated, and those who possess them discipline are not concerned with the same are driven to commit greater sins. For they things. The man who is contending in no wise excite him who does not restrain them, to love differs from those who are untrained. He who of glory, and to boastfulness, and to desire for thus enters this list should despise glory, be su- this world's goods, and draw him downwards, perior to anger, full of great discretion. But for both to luxury and laxity of life, and to lazithe exercise of these qualities there is no scope ness, and, little by little, to evils worse than in his case who affects a secluded life. For he these which result from them. For many are does not have many to provoke him in order the circumstances in society which have the that he may practise chastising, the force of his anger: nor admirers and applauders in order to hinder its straightforward course; and first that he may be trained to despise the praises of of all is his social intercourse with women. the multitudes. And of the discretion which For it is not possible for the Bishop, and one is required in the Church, there is no taking who is concerned with the whole flock, to have account in their case. Whenever, therefore, a care for the male portion of it, but to pass they come to the trials of which they have over the female, which needs more particular never had practical experience, they get be-wildered, their heads are turned, they fall into a state of helplessness, and besides adding tration of a Bishopric must have a care for nothing to their excellence, may have often the moral health of these, if not in a greater, at least in no less a degree than the others. 8. BASIL: What then? shall we set over For it is necessary to visit them when they are the administration of the Church those who sick, to comfort them when they are sorrow-session of all the inner man.

of these, but to clear himself with all men of those around him. the charges which they bring against him, with their unreasonable fault-finding, rather than self? being indignant and angry about it. For if this evil practice, he did not, therefore, slight from the waves, I shall be contented. the suspicion of the world, although it was BASIL: Dost thou then think this to be a that blessed and admirable character. But other? none the less does he remove far off the causes and to help them when they are distressed; vide things honest not only before the Lord, and in such cases the evil one would find many but before all men." So great, yea and far opportunities of approach, if a man did not greater zeal must we use, to uproot and prefortify himself with a very strict guard. For vent floating reports which are not good, but the eye, not only of the unchaste, but of the to see beforehand from afar whence they come, modest woman pierces and disturbs the mind. and to remove beforehand the causes from Flatteries enervate it, and favors enslave it, and which they are produced, not to wait till they fervent love—the spring one may say of all are established and are the common topics in good—becomes the cause of countless evils to every one's mouth. For then it is not easy in those who do not make a right use of it. Con- the future to destroy them, but very difficult, stant cares too have ere now blunted the edge perhaps impossible, and not without mischief, of the understanding, and have made that because this is done after many have been inwhich was buoyant heavier than lead, while jured. But how far shall I continue pursuing anger has burst in like smoke, and taken pos- the unattainable? For to enumerate all the difficulties in this direction, is nothing more Q. Why should any one speak of the injuries nor less than measuring the ocean. Even that result from grief, the insults, the abuse, when any one should clear himself from every the censure from superiors, from inferiors, from passion (which is a thing impossible) in order the wise, and from fools; for the class who to correct the failings of others, he is forced are wanting in right judgment are particutoundergo countless trials, and when his own larly fond of censuring, and will never infirmities are added, behold, an abyss of toil readily allow any excuse. But the truly ex- and care, and all that he must suffer, who cellent Bishop ought neither to think lightly wishes to subdue the evils in himself and in

10. BASIL: And now, art thou free from toils? great forbearance and meekness, pardoning hast thou no cares while thou livest by thy-

CHRYSOSTOM: I have indeed even now. St. Paul feared lest he should incur a sus- For how is it possible for one who is a man, picion of theft, among his disciples, and there- and who is living this toilsome life of ours, to fore procured others for the management of be free from cares and conflict? But it is not the money, that "no one" he says, "should quite the same thing for man to plunge into a blame us in this abundance which is adminis-boundless ocean and to cross a river, so great tered by us, how ought we not to do all so is the difference between these cares and those. as to remove evil suspicions, even if they hap- For now, indeed, if I were able to become pen to be false, and most unreasonable, and serviceable to others, I should wish it myself, very foreign to our thought? For we are not and this would be a matter of prayer with me. so utterly removed from any sin as St. Paul But if it is not possible to help another, yet if from theft; notwithstanding, though so far from it be practicable to save and rescue myself very absurd, and even insane. For it was great thing? and dost thou fancy that thou wilt madness to have any such suspicion about be saved when thou art not profitable to any CHRYSOSTOM: Thou hast spoken well and of this suspicion, unreasonable though it was, nobly, for I am not myself able to believe that and such as no one who was in his senses it is possible for one who has not labored for would entertain, and he neither disdained the the salvation of his fellow to be saved, nor folly of the multitudes, nor did he say, "To did it at all profit the wretched man in the whose mind did it ever occur to suspect such Gospel that he had not diminished his talent; things of us, after the signs which I have but he perished through not increasing it and wrought, and the forbearance which has marked bringing it doubled to his master.4 Neverthemy life, and when you all revered and admired less, I think that my punishment will be milder us?" Quite the contrary: he foresaw and when I am called to account, because I have expected this base suspicion, and pulled it up not saved others, than it would be if I should by the roots, or rather did not suffer it to grow destroy myself and others too by becoming far at all. Why? "Because," saith he, "we pro- worse after so great an honor. For now I trust that my chastisement will be proportioned

¹ According to a different reading, τὰς λσιπὰς βχάβας, "The injuries which remain 2 2 Cor. viii. 20,

threefold, but manifold, because I should have a glance that I have been taken, and there are caused very many to stumble, and after addi- times when I rebuke my soul, which has been tional honor should have offended the God enslaved; outrageous desires even now come who honored me. the rams and of the sheep.5

whelmed by the passions of my soul, yet I and fear. endure the toil, and I do not shun the conflict.

to the amount of my sins, but after receiving For even now I am taken captive by vainthis office, I fear it would be not double, or glory, but I often recover myself, and I see at over me, but they kindle only a languid flame, 11. For this very cause God accuses the Is- since my bodily eyes cannot fasten upon any raelites more vehemently, and shows that they fuel to feed the fire. From speaking ill of were worthy of greater chastisement, because any, or from hearing any one evil spoken of, they sinned after so many honors had come I am utterly removed, since I have no one to to them from Him, saying in one place: "But talk with; for surely these walls would never you only have I known of all the families of give tongue; yet it is not altogether in like the earth, therefore will I punish you for your manner possible to avoid anger, although there iniquities," and again, "and I raised up of be none to provoke it. For often when the your sons for prophets, and of your young men recollection of outrageous men has come over for Nazarites; and before the times of the me, and of the deeds done by them, it makes prophets, wishing to show that sins receive my heart swell. But not permanently, for I sorer punishment by far when they occur in quickly subdue its kindling, and persuade it the case of the Priest than in the case of the to be quiet, saying that it is very inexpedient laity, He enjoins as great a sacrifice to be and extremely despicable to leave one's own offered for the Priest as for the whole people,3 fault alone, and to busy one's self about the and this amounts to a proof on his part, that faults of one's neighbors. But were I to come the wounds of the Priesthood need more as- among the multitude, and to be involved in sistance—that is, as great as those of all the countless excitements, I should not be able to people together, and they would not have have the benefit of this warning, nor to expeneeded a greater, except they were worse; and rience reflections which take me thus to task. they are not worse in their nature, but are ag- But just as they who are driven over precipices gravated through the dignity of the Priest, by a torrent, or in some other way, are able to who dares to commit them. And why do I speak foresee the destruction to which they are of the men who follow this ministration. For finally going, and are unable to think of any the daughters of the Priests, who have no part means of help, so I, when I have fallen into in the Priestly office, yet on account of their the great tumult of my passions, shall be able father's dignity undergo a far bitterer punish- to see at a glance my chastisement daily inment for the same sins as others, and the creasing. But to be master of myself as I am offense is the same in their case and in the now, and to rebuke diseases of this sort raging daughters of the laity; namely, fornication in on every side, would not be equally easy for both; yet the penalty is far severer for the me as it was before. For my soul is weak former. Dost thou see with what abundant and puny, and easily mastered, not only by proof God shows thee that he demands much these passions, but by envy, which is bitterer greater punishment for the ruler than for the than all of them. Neither does it know how to ruled? For no doubt he who punishes to a bear insults or honors temperately. But these greater degree than others the daughter of a do exceedingly elate it, while those depress it. certain man for that man's sake, will not ex- As, then, savage wild beasts, when they are in act the same penalty from the man who is the good condition, and in full vigor, overcome cause of her additional chastisement as from those that fight with them, particularly, too, others, but a much heavier one; and very if they be feeble and unskillful; but if any reasonably; for the mischief does not merely one were to weaken them by starvation, he will involve himself, but it destroys the souls of put their rage to sleep, and will extinguish the weaker brethren and of them who look up most of their strength; so that one, not over to him, and Ezekiel, writing to show this, dis-valiant, might take up the conflict and battle tinguishes from one another the judgment of with them: so also with the passions of the soul. He who makes them weak, places 12. Do we then seem to thee to entertain a them in subjection to right reason; but he reasonable fear? for in addition to what has who nourishes them carefully, makes his batbeen said, although much toil is needful on my tle with them harder, and renders them so forpart, so that I should not be completely over- midable that he passes all his time in bondage

> What then is the food of these wild beasts? Of vainglory, indeed, it is honors and applause; of pride, abundance of authority and power; of envy, the reputation of one's neighbors; of to pass the time that is gone; but thou wast and there will not be anything worse then than please to infer my condition. their bark. For these reasons I keep to this cell, and am inaccessible, self-contained, and King of all the earth under the sun is the beunsociable, and I put up with hearing countless trothed of a certain man, and that this damsel complaints of this kind, although I would has matchless beauty, transcending that of gladly efface them, and have been vexed and human nature, and that in this respect she outgrieved because I cannot; for it is not easy strips by a long distance the whole race of for me to become sociable, and at the same women; also that she has virtues of the soul, time to remain in my present security. There- so great as to distance by a long way the whole fore I beseech thee, too, to pity rather than to generation of men that have been, or that censure one beset with such great difficulty. shall be; and that the grace of her manners spoken. Perhaps it may seem to many to be trothed, not only for the sake of these things, is said is proof of an evil conscience and of his ardor throws into the shade the most pascion of the bishopric, my whole system has this wondrous, well-beloved maiden. Have dency which seized my soul; for on consider- tration at this point? So far as my desponfaults, I used not to cease bewailing both her you the measure of my fear, and my terror, and myself, and amidst continual distress and let me proceed to another description. perplexity, I kept saying—who then made such Let there be an armament composed of intered in their stead, disturbing, confusing and agitating my mind. In such a tempest I used one suddenly seize some young lad, one of avarice, the munificence of the generous; of ignorant of it, and thoughtest that I was spendincontinence, luxury and the constant society ing my time in a perfect tranquillity, but I will of women; and other passions have their proper now try and unveil to thee the storm of my nutriment? And all these things will sorely soul, for it may be thou wilt henceforth pardon attack me if I come forth into the world, and me, abandoning your accusations. How then will tear my soul to pieces, will be the more shall I unveil this to thee? For if thou would formidable and will make my battle with them est see this clearly, it is not otherwise possible the harder. Whereas, while I am established than by laying bare my own heart; but as this here they will be subdued; and then, indeed, is impossible, I will try and show you as well only with great exertion; yet at the same time, as I can, by a certain faint illustration, the by the Grace of God, they will be subdued, gloom of my despondency, and from this image

Let us suppose that the daughter of the But we cannot yet persuade thee. Accordingly the time is now come that I should utter to thee the only thing which I have left unbeauty of her countenance; and that her beauty of her countenance; and that her beauty of her countenance; incredible, but even so I shall not be ashamed is enamored of the maiden, but apart from to bring it before the world, for though what these things has an affection for her, and by many sins, yet, since God, who is about to judge sionate of lovers that ever were. Then let us us, knows all accurately, what gain will result suppose, whilst he is burning with love, he to us from the ignorance of men? What then hears from some quarter that some mean, abis this, which is yet unspoken? From that day ject man, low born, and crippled in body, in on which thou didst impart to me the suspi- fact a thoroughly bad fellow, was about to wed often been in danger of being completely un-hinged, such was the fear, such the despon-of our grief? and is it enough to stay my illusing the glory of the Bride of Christ, the holidency is concerned, I think it is enough; for ness, the spiritual beauty and wisdom, and this was the only purpose for which I introcomeliness, and then reckoning up my own duced the comparison, but that I may show a suggestion as this? why has the Church of fantry, cavalry, and marines, and let a number God made so great a mistake? why has she so of triremes cover the sea, and phalanxes of provoked her Master, as to be delivered over foot and horse cover most of the plains, and to me, the unworthiest of all men, and to un- the ridges of the mountains, and let the metal dergo such great disgrace? Considering these of their armor reflect the sunshine, and the things often by myself, and being unable to bear the thought of so monstrous a thing, I by the beams which are emitted from them; let used to be like thunderstruck people, speechthe clashing of spears and the neighing of less, and unable either to see or hear. And horses be borne up to the very heavens, and when this condition of great helplessness left let neither sea nor land appear, but only brass me, for there were times when it passed off, and iron in every direction. Let the enemy tears and despondency succeeded to it, and be drawn up in battle array opposite to these, after the flood of tears, then fear again, en- fierce and savage men, and let the time of the those brought up in the country, knowing is overstated. For thou wouldest see a far nothing but the use of the shepherd's pipe and greater and more formidabl econflict than this, number of corpses, the ground a scene of tween the soul from the body, so great is the difcommand of all that armament.

heart?

of the invisible world, that what has been said attacks our souls; and the period of the war-

crook; let him be clad in brazen armor, and let couldest thou ever behold, with these eyes of him be led round the whole camp and be thine, the devil's most gloomy battle array, shown the squadrons and their officers, the and his frantic onset. For there is no brass archers, slingers, captains, generals, the foot or iron there. No horses, or charjots or and horse, the spearmen, the triremes and wheels, no fire and darts. These are visible their commanders, the dense mass of soldiers things. But there are other much more fearin the ships, and the multitude of engines of ful engines than these. One does not need war lying ready on board. Let him be shown, against these enemies breastplate or shield, moreover, the whole array of the enemy, their sword and spear, yet the sight only of this repulsive aspect, and the varied stores and accursed array is enough to paralyze the soul, unusual quantity of their arms; the ravines unless it happen to be very noble, and to also and precipices of the mountains, deep and enjoy in a high degree as a protection to its difficult. Let him be shown further on the enemies' side, horses flying by some enchantment and infantry borne through the air, and body, or still keeping it, to see clearly and sorcery of every power and form; and let him fearlessly with the naked eye the whole of his consider the calamities of war, the cloud of battle array, and his warfare against us. spears, the hailstorm of arrows, that great mist thou wouldest see no torrents of blood, nor and obscurity, that gloomiest night which the dead bodies, but so many fallen souls, and multitude of weapons occasions, eclipsing the such disastrous wounds that the whole of that sunbeams with their cloud, the dust no less description of warfare which I just now dethan the darkness baffling the eyesight. The torrents of blood, the groanings of the falling, child's sport and pastime rather than war: so the shouts of the surviving, the heaps of slain, many are there smitten every day, and the wheels bathed in blood, horses with their wounds in the two cases do not bring about the riders thrown headlong down, owing to the same death, but as great as is the difference begeneral confusion, blood, and bows, and ar-ference between that death and this. For when rows, hoofs of horses and heads of men lying the soul receives a wound, and falls, it does not together, a human arm and a chariot wheel lie as a lifeless body, but it is thenceforth torand a helmet, a breast pierced through, brains mented, being gnawed by an evil conscience; sticking to swords, the point of a dart broken and after its removal hence, at the time of off with an eye transfixed upon it. Then let judgment, it is delivered over to eternal punhim reckon up the sufferings of the naval ishment; and if any one be without grief in force, the triremes burning in the midst of regard to the wounds given by the devil, his the waves, and sinking with their armed crews, danger becomes the greater for his insensibilthe roaring of the sea, the tumult of the sailors, ity. For whoever is not pained by the first the shout of the soldiers, the foam of the wound, will readily receive a second, and after waves mixed with blood, and dashing over that a third. For the unclean spirit will not into all the ships; the corpses on the decks, cease assaulting to the last breath, whenever some sinking, some floating, some cast upon he finds a soul supine and indifferent to his the beach, overwhelmed by the waves, and first wounds; and if thou wouldest inquire into obstructing the passage of the ships. And the method of attack, thou wouldest find this when he has been carefully instructed in all much more severe and varied. For no one the tragedy of warfare, let the horrors of cap- ever knew so many forms of craft and deceit tivity and of slavery be added to it, worse than as that unclean spirit. By this indeed, he has any kind of death; and having told him all this, acquired the greater part of his power, nor can bid him mount his horse straightway, and take any one have so implacable a hatred against his worst enemies as the evil one against the Dost thou really think that this lad would human race. And if any one inquire into the be equal to more than the mere description, vehemence with which he fights, here again it and would not, at the very first glance, lose would be ludicrous to bring men into comparison with him. But if any one choose out the 13. Do not think that I have exaggerated the fiercest and most savage of beasts, and is matter by my account, nor suppose that be-minded to set their fury against his, he will cause we are shut up in this body, as in some find that they were meek and quiet in comparprison house, and are unable to see anything ison, such rage does he breathe forth when he fare indeed in the former case is brief, and in yet to understand to what degree of evil thou we for our salvation.

assails us, which things are a source of count- | Chrysostom: But I smiled, and said, how less evils to those who are not always on the shall I be able to help, how to profit thee unwatch, proves this kind of war to be harder der so great a burden of office? But since this than the other. Couldest thou wish us, then, is pleasant to thee, take courage, dear soul, for in such a case to command the soldiers of at any time at which it is possible for thee to Christ? yea, this were to command them for have leisure amid thine own cares, I will the devil's service, for whenever he who ought come and will comfort thee, and nothing shall to marshal and order others is the most inex- be wanting of what is in my power.

joy and gladness.

BASIL: But not my case, yea this calls for lasting tabernacle. countless lamentations. For I am hardly able Phil. ii. 1.

this brief space there are respites; for the hast brought me. For I came to thee wanting approach of the night and the fatigue of to learn what excuse I should make on thy slaughter, meal-times also, and many other behalf to those who find fault with thee; but things, afford a respite to the soldier, so that thou sendest me back after putting another he can doff his armor and breathe a little, and case in the place of that I had. For I am no refresh himself with food and drink, and in longer concerned about the excuses I shall many other ways recover his former strength. give them on thy behalf, but what excuse I But in the case of the evil one it is not possi- shall make to God for myself and my own ble ever to lay aside one's armor, it is not pos-faults. But I beseech thee, and implore thee, sible even to take sleep, for one who would if my welfare is at all regarded by thee, if remain always unscathed. For one of two there be any consolation in Christ, if any comthings must be: either to fall and perish un- fort of love, if any bowels, and mercies, for armed, or to stand equipped and ever watch- thou knowest that thyself above all hast ful. For he ever stands with his own battle brought me into this danger, stretch forth array, watching for our indolence, and labor- thine hand, both saying and doing what is able ing more zealously for our destruction, than to restore me, do not have the heart to leave me for the briefest moment, but now rather And that he is not seen by us, and suddenly than before let me pass my life with thee.

perienced and feeble of all men, by betraying On this, he weeping yet more, rose up. But through this inexperience those who have I, having embraced him and kissed his head, led been entrusted to his charge, he commands him forth, exhorting him to bear his lot them in the devil's interests rather than in bravely. For I believe, said I, that through Christ who has called thee, and set thee over But why dost thou sigh? why weep? For his own sheep, thou wilt obtain such assurance my ease does not now call for wailing, but for from this ministry as to receive me also, if I am in danger at the last day, into thine ever-

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

AN EXHORTATION TO THEODORE AFTER HIS FALL.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

INTRODUCTION TO THE LETTERS TO THEODORE.

THESE two letters, which are the earliest of Chrysostom's extant works, are addressed to a friend who had been a member of the little ascetic brotherhood which Chrysostom and Basil formed, soon after they had abandoned secular life, as described in the first book of the Treatise on the Priesthood. Theodore, like Maximus, afterwards Bishop of Isaurian Seleucia, who was another member of the same fraternity, had been a fellow student with Chrysostom and Basil in the school of Libanius,' but was a few years younger than either of them. The strain upon his powers of religious devotion had proved too much for him; he had withdrawn from the ascetic brotherhood, and relapsed for a season into worldly habits, being fascinated by the beauty of a young lady named Hermione, whom he was anxious to marry. His fall was regarded with almost as much sorrow and dismay by his austere friends as if he had plunged into deadly vice. Prayers were continually offered, and great efforts made for his restoration, amongst which must be reckoned the two letters which are here translated. They are the productions of a youthful enthusiast, and as such allowances must be made for them; but they abound in passages of great beauty and power, especially upon the infinite love and forbearance of God, as encouraging to repentance and withholding from despair and recklessness into which Theodore seems to have been inclined to sink. The appeal of Chrysostom, combined with the efforts of his other friends, was not in vain. Theodore once more renounced the world and his matrimonial intentions, and retired into the seclusion of the fraternity. In A.D. 383, when he was about thirty-three years of age, he was ordained priest, and in 392 he became Bishop of Mopsuestia, where he died in A.D. 428 at the age of seventyeight. Chrysostom seems to have retained his affection to him to the last, and during his own exile at Cucusus, A.D. 404-7, wrote a letter to him which is full of expressions of fervent admiration and regard. He was a most voluminous writer, and may be regarded as the ablest representative of the school of Biblical interpretation founded by Diodorus of Tarsus, under whom he had studied, together with Chrysostom and Basil. A fierce controversy raged during the fifth and sixth centuries respecting the orthodoxy of some of his writings which some accused of preparing the way for Nestorianism. When this had died down his name was comparatively forgotten, and it is only in modern times that his great merits as a commentator, who boldly applied the historical and grammatical methods of examination to the books of Holy Scripture, have been fully recognized.

Tillemont was of opinion that of the two letters of Chrysostom the second only was addressed to Theodore, who was afterwards Bishop of Mopsuestia. Montfaucon, however, Dupin, and Savile, maintain that both were addressed to him, and their view is confirmed by the fact that Leontius of Byzantium (in Nest. et. Eutych. lib. iii. c. 7) and Isidore of Seville (de Script. Eccl. c. 6.) mention two letters of Chrysostom to Theodore of Mopsuestia.

^{*} See introduction to the "Treatise on the Priesthood."

CONTENTS.

LETTER I	Ι.															÷	PAG
LETTER	II.																11	I

AN EXHORTATION TO THEODORE AFTER HIS FALL.

LETTER I.

and the temple is desolate, and bare of its former beauty and comeliness, unadorned with "OH! that my head were water, and mine its divine and unspeakable adornments, destieyes a fountain of tears!" it is seasonable for tute of all security and protection; it has me to utter these words now, yea much more neither door nor bolt, and is laid open to all than for the prophet in his time. For almanner of soul-destroying and shameful though I am not about to mourn over many thoughts; and if the thought of arrogance or cities, or whole nations, yet shall I mourn over fornication, or avarice, or any more accursed a soul which is of equal value with many such than these, wish to enter in there is no one to nations, yea even more precious. For if one hinder them; whereas formerly, even as the man who does the will of God is better than Heaven is inaccessible to all these, so also was ten thousand transgressors, then thou wast formerly better than ten thousand Jews. Wherefore no one would now blame me if I were to now witness thy desolation and overthrow; for compose more lamentations than those which on this account I wail and mourn, and shall are contained in the prophet, and to utter not cease doing so, until I see thee again escomplaints yet more vehement. For it is not tablished in thy former lustre. For although the overthrow of a city which I mourn, nor the this seems to be impossible to men, yet to God captivity of wicked men, but the desolation of all things are possible. For it is He "who a sacred soul, the destruction and effacement raiseth the poor from the earth, and lifteth up of a Christ-bearing temple.' For would not the beggar from the dunghill, to set him with any one who knew in the days of its glory that the princes, even with the princes of his well-ordered mind of thine which the devil has people." It is He "who makes the barren now set on fire, groan, imitating the lamenta- woman to dwell at home, a mother rejoicing tion of the prophet; when he hears that bar- over her children."3 Do not then despair of barian hands have defiled the holy of holies, the most perfect change. For if the devil had and have set fire to all things and burned them such great power as to cast thee down from up, the cherubim, the ark, the mercy seat, the that pinnacle and height of virtue into the extables of stone, the golden pot? For this tremity of evil doing, much more will God be calamity is bitterer, yea bitterer than that, in able to draw thee up again to thy former conproportion as the pledges deposited in thy soul fidence; and not only indeed to make you were far more precious than those. This tem-ple is holier than that; for it glistened not with Only be not downcast, nor fling away good gold and silver, but with the grace of the hopes, nor fall into the condition of the un-Spirit, and in place of the ark and the cheru- godly. For it is not the multitude of sins bim, it had Christ, and His Father, and the which is wont to plunge men into despair, but Paraclete seated within. But now all is changed, impiety of soul. Therefore Solomon did not make the unqualified statement "every one who has entered into the den of the wicked, despiseth;" but only "he who is ungodly." 4 For

¹ Jer. ix. 1. 25e e r. Cor. iii. 16, 17; and vi. 10. Ignatius the martyr had the name Θεοφόρος, "the God-bearer," which was probably given at the time of his conversion, or of haptism, to remind him continually of his Christian privileges and duties. See note, p. 73.

is the mark of a noble soul, not to be cast tion. down, nor be dismayed at the multitude of the after praying many times without success, but words of the prophet, saying "Let me alone, I to persevere, until He have mercy upon us, will weep bitterly; labour not to comfort me. even as the blessed David saith.

into thoughts of despair is that he may cut off for excess in lamentation, but the cause is one the hope which is towards God, the safe for which even Paul, or Peter, had they been anchor, the foundation of our life, the guide here, would not have been ashamed to weep of the way which leads to heaven, the salvation and mourn, and reject all kinds of consolation. of perishing souls. "For by hope" it is said, For those who bewail that death which is "we are saved." For this assuredly it is common to all one might reasonably accuse of which, like some strong cord suspended from much feebleness of spirit; but when in place the heavens, supports our souls, gradually of a corpse a dead soul lies before us, pierced drawing towards that world on high those who with innumerable wounds, and yet even in its cling firmly to it, and lifting them above the death manifesting its former natural comelitempest of the evils of this life. If any one ness, and health, and beauty now extinguished, then becomes enervated, and lets go this who can be so harsh and unsympathetic as to sacred anchor, straightway he falls down, and utter words of encouragement in place of wailis suffocated, having entered into the abyss of ing and lamentation? For as in the other wickedness. And the Evil One knowing this, world the absence of mourning is a mark of when he perceives that we are ourselves op- divine wisdom, so in this world the act of pressed by the consciousness of evil deeds, mourning is a mark of the same. He who had steps in himself and lays upon us the addi- already mounted to the sky, who was laughing tional burden, heavier than lead, of anxiety to scorn the vanity of this life, who regarded arising from despair; and if we accept it, it bodily beauty no more than if it had been in follows of necessity that we are forthwith forms of stone, who despised gold as it had dragged down by the weight, and having been mud, and every kind of luxury as mire, parted from that cord, descend into the depth even he, having been suddenly overwhelmed of misery where thou thyself art now, having with the feverish longing of a preposterous forsaken the commandments of the meek and passion, has ruined his health, and manly lowly Master and executing all the injunctions strength, and the bloom of his youth, and of the cruel tyrant, and implacable enemy of it is such persons only who are affected in this our salvation; having broken in pieces the easy way when they have entered the den of the yoke, and cast away the light burden, and havwicked. And this it is which does not suffer ing put on the iron collar instead of these them to look up, and re-ascend to the position things, yea, having hung the ponderous mill-from which they fell. For this accursed stone 3 from thy neck. Where then canst thou thought pressing down like some yoke upon find a footing henceforth when thou art subthe neck of the soul, and so forcing it to stoop, merging thy unhappy soul, imposing on thyself hinders it from looking up to the Master, this necessity of continually sinking down-Now it is the part of a brave and excellent wards? Now the woman who had found the man to break this yoke in pieces, to shake off one coin called her neighbors to share her joy; the tormentor fastened upon him; and to utter saying, "Rejoice with me;" but I shall now the words of the prophet, "As the eyes of a invoke all friends, both mine and thine, for the maiden look unto the hands of her mistress, contrary purpose, saying not "Rejoice with even so our eyes look unto the Lord our God me" but "Mourn with me," and take up the until He have mercy upon us. Have pity same strain of mourning, and utter the same upon us, O Lord, have pity upon us, for we cry of distress with me. For the worst possible have been utterly filled with contempt." loss has befallen me, not that some given Truly divine are these precepts, and decrees of number of talents of gold, or some large the highest form of spiritual wisdom. We quantity of precious stones have dropped out have been filled, it is said, with contempt, and of my hand, but that he who was more prehave undergone countless distresses; never-cious than all these things, who was sailing theless we shall not desist from looking up to over this same sea, this great and broad sea God, neither shall we cease praying to him with me, has, I know not how, slipped over-until He has received our petition. For this board, and fallen into the very pit of destruc-

3. Now if any should attempt to divert me calamities which oppress it, nor to withdraw, from mourning, I shall reply to them in the For the mourning with which I mourn now is 2. For the reason why the devil plunges us not of a kind to subject me to condemnation weep then, I pray you, for such a man and taken to flight? thing of the kind, and this when we know that this great and unspeakable wickedness.

³ μύλος δυικός, lit. the mill stone turned by an ass, as being heavier than the common hand-mill. So in Matt. xviii. 6, 4 ls, xxii. 4.

² Rom, viii. 24.

become a slave of pleasure. Shall we not to prevail, and to resist, having on the contrary bewail him, until we have got him back again?

4. And speak not to me of those who have And where do these things concern the human committed small sins, but suppose the case of soul? It is not possible indeed to discover one who is filled full of all wickedness, and let in this world the means of release from the him practice everything which excludes him death of the body, and yet even this does not from the kingdom, and let us suppose that this stay the mourners from lamenting; but only man is not one of those who were unbelievers in this world is it possible to bring to naught from the beginning, but formerly belonged to the death of the soul. "For in Hades" we the believers, and such as were well pleasing read, "who will confess thee?" Is it not to God, but afterwards has become a fornithen the height of stupidity that they who cator, adulterer, effeminate, a thief, a drunkard, mourn the death of the body should do this a sodomite, a reviler, and everything else of so earnestly, although they know that they will this kind; I will not approve even of this man not raise the dead man to life by their lamen- despairing of himself, although he may have tation; but that we should not manifest any- gone on to extreme old age in the practice of often there is hope of conducting the lost soul if the wrath of God were a passion, one might back to its former life? For many both now well despair as being unable to quench the and in the days of our forefathers, having been flame which he had kindled by so many evil perverted from the right position, and fallen doings; but since the Divine nature is passionheadlong out of the straight path, have been less, even if He punishes, even if He takes so completely restored as to eclipse their former vengeance, he does this not with wrath, but deeds by the latter, and to receive the prize, with tender care, and much lovingkindness; and be wreathed with the garland of victory, wherefore it behoves us to be of much good and be proclaimed among the conquerors, and courage, and to trust in the power of repentbe numbered in the company of the saints. ance. For even those who have sinned against For as long as any one stands in the furnace Him He is not wont to visit with punishment of pleasures, even if he has countless examples for His own sake; for no harm can traverse of this kind before him, the thing seems to that divine nature; but He acts with a view him to be impossible; but if he once gets a to our advantage, and to prevent our perverseshort start upon the way out from thence, by ness becoming worse by our making a praccontinually advancing he leaves the fiercer tice of despising and neglecting Him. For part of the fire behind him and will see the even as one who places himself outside the parts which are in front of him, and before his light inflicts no loss on the light, but the footsteps full of dew and much refreshment; greatest upon himself being shut up in darkonly let us not despair or grow weary of the ness; even so he who has become accustomed return; for he who is so affected, even if he to despise that almighty power, does no injury has acquired boundless power and zeal, has to the power, but inflicts the greatest possible acquired it to no purpose. For when he has injury upon himself. And for this reason God once shut the door of repentance against him- threatens us with punishments, and often inself, and has blocked the entrance into the flicts them, not as avenging Himself, but by race-course, how will be able while he way of attracting us to Himself. For a physiabides outside to accomplish any good thing, cian also is not distressed or vexed at the ineither small or great? On this account the sults of those who are out of their minds, but Evil One uses all kinds of devices in order to yet does and contrives everything for the purplant in us this thought (of despair); for (if pose of stopping those who do such unseemly he succeeds) he will no longer have to sweat acts, not looking to his own interests but to and toil in contending with us; how should their profit; and if they manifest some small he, when we are prostrate and fallen, and un-degree of self-control and sobriety he rejoices willing to resist him? For he who has been and is glad, and applies his remedies much able to slip out of this chain, will recover his more earnestly, not as revenging himself upon own strength and will not cease struggling them for their former conduct, but as wishing against the devil to his last gasp, and even if he to increase their advantage, and to bring them had countless other falls, he will get up again, back to a purely sound state of health. Even and will smite his enemy; but he who is in so God when we fall into the very extremity bondage to the cogitations of despair, and has of madness, says and does everything, not by unstrung his own strength, how will he be able way of avenging Himself on account of our former deeds; but because He wishes to release us from our disorder; and by means of concerning these things we will confirm them out of the divine oracles. For who, I ask, became more depraved than the king of the Baby. lonians, who after having received such great into the furnace the servants of God who did experience of God's power as to make obeisance to His prophet, and command offerings did God visit the apostate, as he deserved to and incense to be sacrificed to Him was again be visited? No! He supplied him with carried away to his former pride, and cast greater tokens of His own power, drawing him bound into the furnace those who did not back again after so great a display of arrohonour himself before God. Nevertheless this gance to his former condition; and, what is man who was so cruel and impious, and rather yet more wonderful, that owing to the abuna beast than a human being, God invited to dance of the miracles he might not again disrepentance, and granted him several oppor- believe what was done, the subject upon which tunities of conversion, first of all the miracle He wrought the sign was none other than the which took place in the furnace, and after that furnace which the king himself kindled for the the vision which the king saw but which Daniel children whom he bound and cast therein. interpreted, a vision sufficient to bend even a Even to extinguish the flame would have been heart of stone; and in addition to these things a wonderful and strange thing; but the benign after the exhortation derived from events the Deity in order to inspire him with greater fear, prophet also himself advised him, saying and increase his dismay, and undo all his hard-"Therefore, O king, let my counsel please ness of heart, did what was greater and thee, and redeem thy sins by alms, and thy in-stranger than this. For, permitting the furnace iquities by showing mercy to the poor; it may be that long suffering will be shown to thy offence." What sayest thou O wise and blessed man? After so great a fall is there but by frustrating them when they were set on again a way of return? and after so great a disease is health possible? and after so great a madness is there again a hope of soundness of mind? The king has deprived himself beforehand of all hope, first of all by having ignored Him who created him; and conducted him to this honour, although he had many evidences of His power and forethought to recount which occurred both in his own case and in the case of his forefathers; but after this them into being out of nothing; which was again when he had received distinct tokens of God's wisdom and foreknowledge, and had seen magic, and astronomy and the theatre of the aloof from them as if they had been imperishawhole satanic system of jugglery overthrown, he exhibited deeds yet worse than the former. much lustre, the deposit entrusted to it. For For things which the wise magi, the Gazarenes, could not explain, but confessed that they were beyond human nature, these a captive youth having caused to be solved for him, so moved him by that miracle that he not only himself believed, but also became to the whole world a clear herald and teacher of this doctrine.2 Wherefore if even before having received such a token it was unpardonable in those faithful ones, who tarried long in the fire. him to ignore God, much more so was it after that miracle, and his confession, and the teaching which was extended to others. For if he had not honestly believed that He was the only true God he would not have shown right reason it is quite possible to be convinced such honour to His servant, or have laid down such laws for others. But yet after making 5. Now if any one should dispute with us this kind of confession, he again lapsed into idolatry, and he who once fell on his face and made obeisance to the servant of God, broke out into such a pitch of madness, as to cast not make obeisance to himself. What then? to be kindled to as high a pitch as he desired, He then exhibited his own peculiar power, not by putting down the devices of his enemies, foot. And, to prevent any one who saw them survive the flame from supposing that it was a vision, He suffered those who cast them in to be burned, thus proving that the thing seen was really fire; for otherwise it would not have devoured naphtha and tow, and fagots and such a large number of bodies; but nothing is stronger than His command; but the nature of all existing things obeys Him who brought just what He manifested at that time; for the flame having received perishable bodies, held ble, and restored in safety, with the addition of like kings from some royal court, even so did those children come forth from the furnace, no one having the patience to look any longer at the king, but all transferring their eyes from him to the strange spectacle, and neither the diadem nor the purple robe, nor any other feature of royal pomp, attracted the multitudes of unbelievers so much as the sight of and then came out of it as men might have done who had undergone this in a dream. For the most fragile of all our features, I mean the hair, prevailed more mightily than adamant against the all-devouring flame. And the fact that when they were cast into the midst of the fire they suffered no harm was not the only wonder, but the further fact that they were how Ahab is pricked in the heart before my means of visions and by His prophet. But transgressions, and having broken in sunder when he was not made anywise better by any the bonds of the devil, he rose up and conhimself on account of his former deeds, but also by the words of the prophet does God cutting off the occasion of future evils, and destroy the counsels of despair, speaking on checking the advance of wickedness, and He this wise: "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, did not inflict even this permanently, but after harden not your hearts, as in the provocahaving suffered any loss from his punishment, but on the contrary having gained the greatest possible good; a firm hold upon faith in God, and repentance on account of his former misdeeds.

6. For such is the loving-kindness of God; He never turns his face away from a sincere repentance, but if any one has pushed on to the very extremity of wickedness, and chooses to return thence towards the path of virtue, God accepts and welcomes, and does everything so as to restore him to his former position. And He does what is yet more merciful; for even should any one not manifest complete repentance, he does not pass by one which is small and insignificant, but assigns a great reward even to this; which is evident from what Esaias the prophet says concerning the people of the Jews, speaking on this wise: "On account of his sin I put him to pain for a little while, and smote him, and turned my face away from him, and he was pained, and walked sorrowfully, and then I healed him. and comforted him." 2 And we might cite as another witness that most ungodly king, who was given over to sin by the influence of his wife: yet when he only sorrowed, and put on sackcloth, and condemned his offences, he so won for himself the mercy of God, as to be released from all the evils which were impending over him. For God said to Elias "Seest thou speaking the whole time. Now all who have face? I will not bring the evil upon him in witnessed persons burning are aware, that if his own days, because he hath wept before they keep their lips fast closed, they can hold me." 3 And after this again, Manasses, having out for a short time at least against the con- exceeded all in fury and tyranny, and having flagration; but if any one chances to open his subverted the legal form of worship, and shut mouth, the soul instantly takes its flight from up the temple, and caused the deceit of idolathe body. Nevertheless after such great mira- try to flourish, and having become more uncles had taken place, and all who were present godly than all who were before him, when he and beheld were amazed, and those who were afterwards repented, was ranked amongst the absent had been informed of the fact by means friends of God. Now if, looking to the magof letters, the king who instructed others re- nitude of his own iniquities, he had despaired mained himself without amendment, and went of restoration and repentance, he would have back again to his former wickedness. And yet missed all which he afterwards obtained: but even then God did not punish him, but was as it was, looking to the boundlessness of God's still long-suffering, counselling him both by tender mercy instead of the enormity of his of these things, then at last God inflicted pun-tended with him, and finished the good course.4 ishment upon him, not by way of avenging And not only by what was done to these men, having chastised him for a few years, He re-tion." 5 Now that expression "to-day," may stored him again to his former honour, without be uttered at every time of life, even on the verge of old age, if you desire it: for repentance is judged not by quantity of time, but by disposition of the soul. For the Ninevites did not need many days to blot out their sin, but the short space of one day availed to efface all their iniquity: and the robber also did not take a long time to effect his entrance into Paradise, but in such a brief moment as one might occupy in uttering a single word, did he wash off all the sins which he had committed in his whole life, and received the prize bestowed by the divine approval even before the Apostles. And we also see the martyrs obtain glorious crowns for themselves in the course, not of many years, but of a few days, and often in a single day only.

7. Wherefore we have need of zeal in every direction, and much preparation of mind: and if we so order our conscience as to hate our former wickedness, and choose the contrary path with as much energy as God desires and commands, we shall not have anything less on account of the short space of time: many at least who were last have far outstripped those who were first. For to have fallen is not a grievous thing, but to remain prostrate after falling, and not to get up again; and, playing the coward and the sluggard, to conceal feebleness of moral purpose under the reasoning of despair. To whom also the prophet spoke in perplexity saying "Doth he who falleth not rise

¹ Dan, iv.
² Isa, Ivii. 17, 18, 1xx., which has after "sorrowfully" the words "in his ways." 1 beheld his ways and healed him, etc.

³ r Kings xxi. 29. The words "because he hath wept before me," are not in the Lxx.
4 2 Chron. xxxiii. 10-19. 5 Ps. xcv. 9.

up, or he who turneth away not turn back?" | gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with But if you inquire of me for instances of per- my friends; but when this thy son is come who sons who have fallen away after having be- hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou lieved, all these things have been said with hast killed for him the fatted calf." 3 So great reference to such persons, for he who has fallen is the power of repentance. belonged formerly to those who were standing, not to those who were prostrate; for how not continue in evil, nor despair of reconciliashould one in that condition fall? But other tion, but let us say also ourselves "I will go to things also shall be said, partly by means of parables, partly by plainer deeds and words. Now that sheep which had got separated from the ninety and nine, and then was brought God" we read "at hand and not a God afar back again, represents to us nothing else than off." 4 And again, when He was rebuking them the fall and return of the faithful; for it was a by the mouth of this prophet He said "Do not sheep not of some alien flock, but belonging your sins separate between you and me?"5 to the same number as the rest, and was for merly pastured by the same shepherd, and it us far from God, let us remove this obnoxious strayed on no common straying, but wandered barrier, which prevents any near approach beaway to the mountains and in valleys, that is ing made. to say some long journey, far distant from the shoulders. For as the best physicians bring man was a believer and belonged to the house-back those who are far gone in sickness with hold of Christ; and some say that he was actgratification: even so God conducts to virtue no means: for he himself it is who rebukes the those who are much depraved, not with great Corinthians countless times, backwards and forseverity, but gently and gradually, and supporting them on every side, so that the separation may not become greater, nor the error to us that there is no sin which cannot be more prolonged. And the same truth is im- healed, he said again concerning the man who as in this. For he also was no stranger, but a Gentiles: "Deliver such an one to Satan for son, and a brother of the child who had been destruction of the flesh that his spirit may be well pleasing to the father, and he plunged into saved in the day of the Lord Jesus Christ."6 no ordinary vice, but went to the very extrem-ity, so to say, of evil, he the rich and free and he had repented "Sufficient," said he, "for well-bred son being reduced to a more miser- such an one is this punishment which was inable condition than that of household slaves, flicted by the many 7, 3 and he charged them by strangers, and hirelings. Nevertheless he re- a letter to console the man again, and to welturned again to his original condition, and had come his repentance, so that he should not be his former honour restored to him. But if he got the better of by Satan. Moreover when had despaired of his life, and, dejected by what the whole Galatian people fell after having behad befallen him, had remained in the foreign lieved, and wrought miracles, and endured land, he would not have obtained what he did many trials for the sake of their faith in Christ obtain, but would have been consumed with he sets them up again. For that they had hunger, and so have undergone the most pitia- done miracles he testified when he said: ble death: but since he repented, and did not "He therefore that supplieth to you the Spirit despair, he was restored, even after such great and worketh miracles among you: "8 and that corruption, to the same splendour as before, they endured many contests for the sake of and was arrayed in the most beautiful robe, and the faith, he also testified when he says: enjoyed greater honours than his brother who had not fallen. For "these many years," saith he "do I serve thee, neither transgressed I thy commandment at any time, and yet thou never

8. Having then such great examples, let us my Father," and let us draw nigh to God. For He Himself never turns away from us, but it is we who put ourselves far off: for "I am a Inasmuch then as this is the cause which puts

But now hear how this has actually occurred right path. Did he then suffer it to stray? in real instances. Amongst the Corinthians By no means, but brought it back neither driv- some man of mark committed a sin such as ing it, nor beating it, but taking it upon his was not named even among the Gentiles. This careful treatment to a state of health, not only ually a member of the priesthood. What then? treating them according to the laws of the Did Paul cut him off from the communion of medical art, but sometimes also giving them those who were in the way of salvation. By plied in the parable of the prodigal son as well had transgressed more grievously than the ³ Luke xv. 29, 30.

4 Jer. xxiii. 23, where the passage is interrogatory, "Am I a God at hand and not?" etc., being a warning addressed to those who hoped to elude the vigilance of God, so that it is not quite appropriate here.

5 Isa, lix. 2. Chrysostom by mistake attributes the quotation to Jeremiah.

6 t Cor. v. 5.

7 2 Cor. ii. 6.

8 Gal, iii. 5.

"Have ye suffered so many things in vain if it everything in motion in order to root in us the be indeed in vain." Nevertheless after mak-reasoning which comes of despair: for he ing so great an advance they committed sin knows that if we repent even a little we shall sufficient to estrange them from Christ con- not do this without some reward. But just as cerning which he declares saying: "Behold, he who gives a cup of cold water has his I Paul tell you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ recompense reserved for him, so also the man will profit you nothing:" and again "ye who who has repented of the evils which he has would be justified by the law are fallen away done, even if he cannot exhibit the repentance from grace: "and yet even after so great a which his offences deserve, will have a comlapse he welcomes them saying "my little chil-mensurate reward. For not a single item of dren of whom I am in travail again until Christ good, however small it may be, will be overbe formed in you 3" showing that after extreme looked by the righteous judge. For if He perversion it is possible for Christ to be formed makes such an exact scrutiny of our sins, as to again in us: for He doth not desire the death require punishment for both our words and friend, and execute the will of God. For He thou art not able to return again to the most created us and brought us into being, that He exact state of discipline, yet if thou withdraw might make us partakers of eternal blessings, thyself in a slight degree at least from thy that He might offer us the kingdom of Heaven, present disorder and excess, even this will not not that He might cast us into Hell and debe impossible: only set thyself to the task at liver us to the fire; for this was made not for once, and open the entrance into the place of saith to those on the right hand, "Come ye things are easy and manageable they are blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom pre- wont to present an appearance of much diffibut the kingdom has been prepared for us reason also the wicked one dragged Judas out festing repentance for our offences: but when cour which is brought to us from repentance. once we have departed to the other world, even if we display the most earnest repentance all this Satanic mode of thinking from your soul, calls for succour, no one with the tip of his finger will apply a drop to our burning bodies, but we shall only hear those words which the culty in doing this: but if all which I now ask and you a great gulf has been fixed." 5 Let the opposite direction, why do you hesitate, us then, I beseech you, recover our senses here and shrink, and make a retrograde movement? and let us recognize our Master as He ought Have you not seen those who have died in the to be recognized. For only when we are in midst of luxury and drunkenness, and sport from repentance: for there only is this remedy weak and unprofitable: but while we are here, even if it is applied in old age itself it exhibits tendants? who were clothed in silk and redoof a sinner, but rather that he should be con-verted and live. thoughts, much more will our good deeds, whether they be great or small, be reckoned o. Let us then turn to Him, my beloved to our credit at that day. Wherefore, even if us, but for the devil: but for us the kingdom contest; but as long as thou tarriest outside has been destined and made ready of old time. this naturally seems difficult and impracticable And by way of indicating both these truths He to thee. For before making the trial even if pared for you from the foundation of the culty to us: but when we are actually engaged world:" but to those on the left "Depart from in the trial, and making the venture the greater me, ye cursed, into fire everlasting prepared" part of our distress is removed, and confidence (he no longer says "for you" but) "for the taking the place of tremor and despair, lessens devil and his angels." 4 Thus hell has not the fear and increases the facility of operation, been made for us but for him and his angels: and makes our good hopes stronger. For this before the foundation of the world. Let us not of this world, lest he should make a fair beginthen make ourselves unworthy of entrance into ning, and so return by means of repentance to the bride-chamber: for as long as we are in the point from which he fell. For although it this world, even if we commit countless sins, may seem a strange thing to say, I will not it is possible to wash them all away by mani- admit even that sin to be too great for the sucit will be of no avail, not even if we gnash our and to return to this state of salvation. For teeth, beat our breasts, and utter innumerable if indeed I were commanding you to ascend to rich man heard in the parable "Between us you to do is to get up and return thence in Hades should we abandon the hope derived and all the other folly of this life? Where are much strength. Wherefore also the devil sets lent with perfumes, and kept a table for their parasites, and were in constant attendance at the theatre? What has now become of all that splendour of their banquets, the throng of and intolerable punishments? For here inmusicians, the attentions of flatterers, the loud deed both good and evil things have an end, laughter, the relaxation of spirit, the enervation of mind, the voluptuous, abandoned, excoextensive with immortal ages, and in their travagant manner of life—it has all come to an end. Where now have all these things taken which now are. their flight? What has become of the body which enjoyed so much attention, and cleanli- pose the fire in that world to be like this: for ness. Go thy way to the coffin, behold the fire in this world burns up and makes away dust, the ashes, the worms, behold the loath- with anything which it takes hold of; but that someness of the place, and groan bitterly. And fire is continually burning those who have once would that the penalty were limited to the been seized by it, and never ceases: therefore ashes! but now transfer thy thought from the also is it called unquenchable. For those also coffin and these worms to that undying worm, who have sinned must put on immortality, not to the fire unquenchable, to the gnashing of for honour, but to have a constant supply of teeth, to the outer darkness, to affliction and material for that punishment to work upon; straitness, to the parable of Lazarus and the and how terrible this is, speech could never rich man, who although the owner of so much depict, but from the experience of little things wealth, and clothed in purple could not be-come the owner of even a drop of water; and these great ones. For if you should ever be this when he was placed in a condition of such in a bath which has been heated more than it great necessity. The things of this world are ought to be, think then, I pray you, on the fire in their nature no-wise better than dreams, of hell: or again if you are ever inflamed by For just as those who work in the mines or some severe fever transfer your thoughts to suffer some other kind of punishment more that flame, and then you will be able clearly to severe than this, when they have fallen asleep discern the difference. For if a bath and a owing to their many weary toils and the extern the difference. For if a bath and a fever so afflict and distress us, what will our treme bitterness of their life, and in their dreams condition be when we have fallen into that river see themselves living in luxury and prosperity, of fire which winds in front of the terrible are in no wise grateful to their dreams after judgment-seat. Then we shall gnash our teeth they have awaked, even so that rich man hav- under the suffering of our labours and intoleraing become rich in this present life, as it were ble pains: but there will be no one to succour in a dream, after his departure hence was us: yea we shall groan mightily, as the flame punished with that bitter punishment. Con- is applied more severely to us, but we shall see sider these things, and having contrasted that no one save those who are being punished with fire with the conflagration of desires which now us, and great desolation. And how should possesses thee, release thyself from the fur- any one describe the terrors arising to our souls nace. For he who has thoroughly quenched from the darkness? for just as that fire has no this furnace here, will have no experience of consuming power so neither has it any power that in the other world: but if a man does not of giving light: for otherwise there would not get the better of this furnace here, the other be darkness. The dismay produced in us then will lay hold of him more vehemently when he by this, and the trembling and the great ashas departed hence. How long a time dost tonishment can be sufficiently realized in that thou wish the enjoyment of the present life to day only. For in that world many and various be extended? For I do not suppose indeed kinds of torment and torrents of punishment that more than fifty years remain to thee so as are poured in upon the soul from every side. to reach extreme old age, nor indeed is even And if any one should ask, "and how can the this at all assured to us: for how should they soul bear up against such a multitude of punwho cannot be confident about living even to ishments and continue being chastised through the evening rely upon so many years as these? interminable ages, let him consider what hap-And not only is this uncertain, but there is pens in this world, how many have often borne the uncertainty also of a change in our affairs, up against a long and severe disease. And for often when life has been extended for a if they have died, this has happened not belong period, the conditions of luxury have not cause the soul was consumed but because the been extended with it, but have come, and at body was exhausted, so that had the latter not the same time hastily departed. However, if broken down, the soul would not have ceased you like, let it be granted for argument's sake, being tormented. When then we have received that you will live so many years, and will not an incorruptible and inconsumable body there sustain any reverse of fortune what is this com- is nothing to prevent the punishment being in-parade of theirs? It is all gone;—the costly pared with the endless ages, and those bitter

² Gal. v. 2, 4. 5 Luke xvi. 26. I Gal. iii. 4. 3 Gal. iv. 19. 4 Matt. xxv. 34.

10. For when you hear of fire, do not sup-of being, but the one contends with the other, selves while it is the acepted time, while it is because the nature of the body is perishable the day of salvation, while the power of reand cannot bear the concurrence of both: but pentance is great. For not only the evils althere would be an end of this strife, and both these await us if we are indolent. These inthese terrible things will keep their hold upon deed, and some bitterer than these have their us for infinite time with much force. Let place in hell: but the loss of the good things us not then so dispose ourselves now as if the involves so much pain, so much affliction and excessive power of the tortures were destructive straitness, that even if no other kind of pun-of the soul: for even the body will not be able ishment were appointed for those who sin here, to experience this at that time, but will abide it would of itself be sufficient to vex us more together with the soul, in a state of eternal bitterly than the torments in hell, and to conpunishment, and there will not be any end to found our souls. look to beyond this. How much luxury then, and how much time will you weigh in the bal-other life, so far as it is possible to consider ance against this punishment and vengeance? it; for no words will suffice for an adequate Do you propose a period of a hundred years description: but from the things which are told or twice as long? and what is this compared us, as if by means of certain riddles, let us try with the endless ages? For what the dream and get some indistinct vision of it. "Pain of a single day is in the midst of a whole life- and sorrow and sighing," we read "have fled time, that the enjoyment of things here is as away."2 What then could be more blessed contrasted with the state of things to come. than this life? It is not possible there to fear Is there then any one who, for the sake of poverty and disease: it is not possible to see seeing a good dream, would elect to be per- any one injuring, or being injured, provoking, petually punished? Who is so senseless as to or being provoked, or angry, or envious, or have recourse to this kind of retribution? For burning with any outrageous lust, or anxious I am not yet accusing luxury, nor revealing concerning the supply of the necessaries of life, now the bitterness which lurks in it: for the or bemoaning himself over the loss of some present is not the proper time for these redignity and power: for all the tempest of pasmarks, but when ye have been able to escape sion in us is quelled and brought to nought, it. For now, entangled as you are by this and all will be in a condition of peace, and passion, you will suspect me of talking non- gladness and joy, all things serene and transense, if I were to call pleasure bitter: but quil, all will be daylight and brightness, and when by the grace of God you have been re- light, not this present light, but one excelling leased from the malady then you will know its this in splendour as much as this excels the misery full well. Wherefore, reserving these brightness of a lamp. For things are not contopics for another season, what I will say now cealed in that world by night, or by a gatheris just this: Be it so, that luxury is luxury, ing of clouds: bodies there are not set on fire and pleasure, pleasure, and that they have noth- and burned: for there is neither night nor ing in them painful or disgraceful, what shall evening there, nor cold nor heat, nor any other we say to the punishment which is in store for variation of seasons: but the condition is of a us? and what shall we do then if we have different kind, such as they only will know taken our pleasure now, as it were in a shadow who have been deemed worthy of it; there is and a figure, but undergo everlasting torment no old age there, nor any of the evils of old there in reality, when we might in a short space age, but all things relating to decay are utterly of time escape these tortures already mentioned, removed, and incorruptible glory reigns in and enjoy the good things which are stored up every part. But greater than all these things for us? For this also is the work of the lov- is the perpetual enjoyment of intercourse with ing-kindness of God, that our struggles are not Christ in the company of angels, and archprotracted to a great length, but that after angels, and the higher powers. Behold now struggling for a brief, and tiny twinkling of an the sky, and pass through it in thought to the eye (for such is present life compared with the region beyond the sky, and consider the transother) we receive crowns of victory for endless figuration to take place in the whole creation; ages. And it will be no small affliction to the for it will not continue to be such as it is now, souls of those who are being punished at that but will be far more brilliant and beautiful, time, to reflect, that when they had it in their power in the few days of this life to make all definitely extended. For here indeed it is im- good, they neglected their opportunity and possible that the two things should coexist. I surrendered themselves to everlasting evil. mean severity of punishment and permanence And lest we should suffer this let us rouse ourwhen the imperishable state has supervened, ready mentioned, but others also far worse than

and just as gold glistens more brightly than to thee who alone had garments wrought with demons, or the threatenings of hell, or death, blessings, in order to avoid suffering for a brief either that death which now is, or the other period? For if we had to endure countless brought up in mean guise, and subject to fear ought we not to undergo all tnose things? and threats, lest he should deteriorate by indulgence and become unworthy of his paternal for us to be here." 3 But if he, when he beinheritance, as soon as he has attained the held some dim image of the things to come, royal dignity, immediately exchanges all his immediately cast away all other things out of former raiment for the purple robe, and the his soul, on account of the pleasure produced diadem and the crowd of body-guards, and in it by that vision; what would any one say assumes his state with much confidence, having cast out of his soul thoughts of humility sented, when the palace is thrown open and it and subjection, and having taken others in is permitted to gaze upon the King Himself, their place; even so will it happen then to all no longer darkly, or by means of a mirror, but the saints.

And to prove that these words are no empty by sight? vaunt let us journey in thought to the mountain where Christ was transfigured: let us be- not very sensibly minded propose to be conhold him shining as He shone there; and yet tent with escaping hell; but I say that a far even then He did not display to us all the more severe punishment than hell is exclusion splendour of the world to come. For that the from the glory of the other world, and I think vision was accommodated to human eyes, and that one who has failed to reach it ought not not an exact manifestation of the reality is to sorrow so much over the miseries of hell, as plain from the very words of the Evangelist. over his rejection from heaven, for this alone Sun." 2 But the glory of incorruptible bodies does not emit the same kind of light as this we see a king, attended by a large body-guard, body which is corruptible, nor is it of a kind enter the palace, we count those happy who to be tolerable to mortal eyes, but needs in- are near him, and have a share in his speech corruptible and immortal eyes to contemplate and mind, and partake of all the rest of his it. But at that time on the mountain He disclosed to them as much as it was possible for ings, we have no perception of any of them, them to see without injuring the sight of the and deem ourselves miserable when we look beholders; and even so they could not endure it but fell upon their faces. Tell me, if any one led thee into some bright place, where all were midst of the multitude pointed out one other these things it is not in itself worthy of any lead, so will the future constitution of the uni- precious stones, and a crown upon his head, verse be better than the present: even as the and then promised to place thee in the ranks blessed Paul saith "Because the creation also of this people, wouldst thou not do everything itself shall be delivered from the bondage of to obtain this promise? Open then even now For now indeed, seeing that in imagination thine eyes, and look on that it partakes of corruption, it is subject to many assembly, composed not of men such as we things such as bodies of this kind naturally are, but of those who are of more value than experience: but then, having divested itself of gold and precious stones, and the beams of the all these things, we shall see it display its sun, and all visible radiance, and not consistbeauty in an incorruptible form: for inasmuch ing of men only but of beings of much more as it is to receive incorruptible bodies, it will dignity than men,—angels, archangels, thrones, in future be itself also transfigured into the dominions, principalities, powers. For as connobler condition. Nowhere in that world will cerning the king it is not even possible to say there be sedition and strife: for great is the what he is like: so completely do his beauty, his concord of the band of saints, all being ever grace, his splendour, his glory, his grandeur and in harmony with one another. It is not possi- magnificence elude speech and thought. Shall ble there to fear the devil, and the plots of we then, I ask, deprive ourselves of such great death which is far worse than this, but every deaths every day, or even hell itself, for the sake terror of this kind will have been done away. of seeing Christ coming in His glory, and be-And just as some royal child, who has been ing enrolled in the company of the saints, face to face; no longer by means of faith, but

12. The majority it is true of those who are For what saith he? "He did shine as the is more dreadful than all other things in respect of punishment. But frequently now when glory; and even if we have countless blessat the glory of those who are round about him, although we know that such splendour is slippery and insecure, both on account of wars, sitting arrayed in vestures of gold, and in the and plots, and envy, and because apart from consideration. But where the king of all is the earth, and He shall gather together the sinners out of it. For the stars of Heaven, like the Son of Man, and reached unto the darkened in its going down,3 and the moon and the kingdom, and all the people, tribes waxed mighty therein. And God shall set His world.12 For if when a single city is being hand upon the host of the Heaven in the judged before rulers in this world, all men height in that day, and upon the kingdoms of concerned, he who holds not a portion of the congregation thereof into a prison, and shall earth but the whole circuit of it, or rather who shut them up in a stronghold." And Malachi comprehends it all in the hollow of his hand, speaking concordantly with these said "Behold and measures the Heavens with a span, who the Lord almighty cometh, and who shall abide upholdeth all things by the word of His power, the day of His coming or who shall stand by whom all the nations are counted as nought, when He appeareth? for He cometh like a reand as a drop of spittle; -in the case of such finer's fire, and like fuller's soap: and He shall a king I say shall we not reckon it the most sit refining and purifying as it were silver, and extreme punishment to miss being enrolled in as it were gold." And again, "Behold," he that company which is round about him, but saith, "the day of the Lord cometh, burning be content if we merely escape hell? and what like an oven, and it shall consume them, and could be more pitiable than this condition of all the aliens, and all who work iniquity shall soul? For this king does not come to judge be stubble, and the day which is coming shall the earth, drawn by a pair of white mules, nor set fire to them saith the Lord almighty; and riding in a golden chariot, nor arrayed in a there shall be left neither root nor branch."8 purple robe and diadem. How then does He And the man greatly beloved saith "I beheld come? Hear the prophets crying aloud and until thrones were placed, and the Ancient of saying as much as it is possible to tell to men: Days was seated, and his raiment was white for one saith "God shall come openly, even our as snow, and the hair of his head was pure as God and shall not keep silence: a fire shall be wool: His throne was a flame of fire, and the kindled before Him, and a mighty tempest wheels thereof burning fire: a stream of fire shall be round about Him: He shall call the wound its way in front of Him. Thousand Heaven from above and the earth that He thousands ministered unto Him, and ten may judge His people." 2 But Esaias depicts thousand times ten thousand stood before the actual punishment impending over us Him. The judgment was set and the books speaking thus: "Behold the day of the Lord were opened."? Then after a little space "I cometh, inexorable, with wrath and anger; to beheld," he says, "in a vision of the night and lay the whole world desolate, and to destroy behold" with the clouds of Heaven, one came and Orion, and the whole system of the heaven. Ancient of Days, and was brought near before shall not give their light, and the sun shall be Him, and to Him was given rule, and honor, shall not give her light; and I will ordain evils and tongues serve Him. His dominion is an against the whole world, and visit their sins everlasting dominion, which shall not pass upon the ungodly, and I will destroy the inso- away, and His kingdom shall not be destroyed. lence of the lawless, and humble the insolence As for me Daniel, my spirit shuddered of the proud, and they who are left shall be within me, and the visions of my head troubled more precious than unsmelted gold, and a me." 10 Then all the gates of the heavenly man shall be more precious than the sapphire vaults are opened, or rather the heaven itself stone. For the heaven shall be disturbed and is taken away out of the midst "for the the earth shall be shaken from its foundations, heaven," we read "shall be rolled up like a by reason of the fury of the wrath of the Lord scroll," in wrapped up in the middle like the skin of Sabaoth, in the day when His wrath shall and covering of some tent so as to be transcome upon us."5 And again "windows" he formed into some better shape. Then all saith "shall be opened from the Heaven, and things are full of amazement and horror and the foundations of the earth shall be shaken: trembling: then even the angels themselves the earth shall be mightily confounded, the are holden by much fear, and not angels only earth shall be bent low, it shall be perplexed but also archangels and thrones, and dominwith great perplexity, the earth shall stagger ions, and principalities and authorities. "For grievously like the drunkard and the reveller; the powers" we read "of the heavens shall be the earth shall shake as a hut, it shall fall, and shaken," because their fellow-servants are renot be able to rise up again: for iniquity has quired to give an account of their life in this

5 Isa. xiii. 9, 13.

^{1,} Heb. i. 3. The other expressions in this passage are most of them taken from Isaiah xl.
2 Ps. iv. 4. 3 There is a variation from the LXX, here.
4 The LXX, has θυμωθήσεται, "shall be made wroth."

⁶ Isa, xxiv. 19-22, a very loose quotation from the LXX.

⁷ Mal. iii. 2, 3. Slightly varied from the Lxx.: for the designation of Dan, vii. 9. to.
Slightly varied from the Lxx.: for the designation of Daniel as "greatly beloved," see Dan. v. i.
10 Dan, vii. 13-15, a closer rendering of the Hebrew than the Lxx.
11 lsan, xxxiv. 4.

shudder, even those who are outside the dan- good, and do not abide with them, but take such a judge as this who needs no witnesses, if they should even last for a little time, their or proofs, but independently of all these things favour is displayed within the limits of this presbrings forward deeds and words and thoughts, ent life, and cannot accompany us further. and exhibits them all as in some picture both Now if these things uplift those who possess to those who have committed the sins and to them to such a pitch of joy, what do you supthose who are ignorant of them, how is it not pose is the condition of those souls which are natural that every power should be confounded invited to enjoy the countless blessings in and shake? For if there were no river of fire Heaven which are always securely fixed and winding by, nor any terrible angels standing stable? And not only this, but also in their by the side of the throne, but men were merely quantity and quality they excel present things summoned some to be praised and admired, to such an extent as never entered even the heart others to be dismissed with ignominy that of man.2 For at the present time like an inthey might not see the glory of God, ("For let fant in the womb, even so do we dwell in this the ungodly" we read "be taken away that he world confined in a narrow space, and unable may not see the glory of the Lord";) and if to behold the splendour and the freedom of the this were the only punishment would not the world to come: but when the time of travail loss of such blessings sting the souls of those arrives and the present life is delivered at the who were deprived of them more bitterly than day of judgment of all men whom it has conall hell itself? For how great an evil this is tained, those who have been miscarried go cannot possibly be represented now in words; from darkness into darkness, and from afflicbut then we shall know it clearly in the ac- tion into more grievous affliction: but those tual reality. But now I pray add the punish- which are perfectly formed and have preserved ment also to the scene, and imagine men not the marks of the royal image will be presented only covered with shame, and veiling their to the king, and will take upon themselves that heads, and bending them low, but also being service which angels and archangels minister dragged along the road to the fire, and haled to the God of all. I pray thee then, O friend, away to the instruments of torture and de- do not finally efface these marks, but speedily livered over to the cruel powers, and suffering restore them, and stamp them more perfectly these things just at the time when all they who on thy soul. For corporeal beauty indeed God have practised what is good, and wrought has confined within the limits of nature, but deeds worthy of eternal life, are being grace of soul is released from the constraint crowned, and proclaimed conquerors, and presented before the royal throne.

in that day: but the things which will follow, grace of God. For our Master, being merciafter these, what language can describe to us ful, has in this special way honoured our race, -the pleasure, the profit, the joy of being in that He has entrusted to the necessity of nathe company of Christ? For when the soul ture the inferior things which contribute nothhas returned to the proper condition of nobil- ing much to our advantage, and in their issue ity, and is able henceforth with much boldness are matters of indifference, but of the things to behold its Master it is impossible to say what which are really noble He has caused us to great pleasure it derives therefrom, what great be ourselves the artificers. For if He had gain, rejoicing not only in the good things actually in hand, but in the persuasion that these trol we should have been subjected to exthings will never come to an end. All that cessive anxiety, and should have wasted all gladness then cannot be described in words, our time upon things which are of no profit, nor grasped by the understanding: but in a and should have grievously neglected our soul. dim kind of way, as one indicates great things by means of small ones, I will endeavour to power in ourselves, we make violent efforts, make it manifest. For let us scrutinize those and give ourselves up to shadow painting, and who enjoy the good things of the world in this because we cannot in reality produce bodily present life, I mean wealth and power, and beauty, cunningly devise imitations by means glory, how, exulting with delight, they reckon of paints, and dyes, and dressing of hair, and themselves as no longer being upon the earth, arrangement of garments, and pencilling of and this although the things which they are eyebrows, and many other contrivances: what enjoying are acknowledged not to be really leisure should we have set apart for the soul ger, when the whole world is arraigned before to flight more quickly than a dream: and even and bondage arising from that cause inasmuch as it is far superior to any bodily symmetry: 13. Now these are things which will happen and it depends entirely upon ourselves and the placed corporeal beauty also under our con-

For if, even as it is, when we have not this and serious matters, if we had it in our power former." 4 Now if God did not exclude from disdain of glory as to release from that bondage the women who have often been disgraced in the brothel, and to place them in the posi"For the carnal mind" we read "is enmity. of this present life. And you will find the of God.

I have not succeeded in finding the source of this quotation. Comp. Ps. i. 5.

to transfigure the body into a really symmetri- repentance her who who had many times comcal shape? For probably, if this were our mitted fornication, much more will He embusiness, we should not have any other, but brace thy soul, which has now fallen for the should spend all our time upon it: decking the first time. For certainly there is no lover of bondmaid with countless decorations, but corporeal beauty, even if he be very frantic, letting her who is the mistress of this bond- who is so inflamed with the love of his mistress maid lie perpetually in a state of deformity as God longs after the salvation of our souls; and neglect. For this reason God, having and this we may perceive both from the things delivered us from this vain occupation, im- which happen every day and from the divine planted in us the power of working upon the Scriptures. See at least, both in the introducnobler element, and he who cannot turn an tion of Jeremiah, and many other places of the ugly body into a comely one, can raise the prophets, when He is despised and consoul, even when it has been reduced to the temned, how He again hastens forward and extremity of ugliness, to the very acme of pursues the friendship of those who turn away grace, and make it so amiable and desirable from him; which also He Himself made clear that not only are good men brought to long in the Gospels saying, "() Jerusalem! Jerusaafter it but even He who is the sovereign and lem! thou that killest the prophets and stonest God of all, even as the Psalmist also when disthem that are sent unto thee, how often would coursing concerning this beauty, said "And I have gathered thy children together even as a the king shall have desire of thy beauty." hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, Seest thou not also that in the houses of pros- and ye would not?" 5 And Paul writing to the titutes the women who are ugly and shameless Corinthians said "that God was in Christ would hardly be accepted by prize-fighters, and reconciling the world unto Himself, not reckrunaway slaves, and gladiators: but should oning their trespasses unto them, and having any comely, well-born and modest woman, committed unto us the word of reconciliation, owing to some mischance, have been reduced. We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of to this necessity, no man, even amongst those Christ, as though God were entreating by us; who are very illustrious and great, would be we beseech you on behalf of Christ be ye ashamed of marriage with her? Now if there reconciled to God." 6 Consider that this has is so much pity amongst men, and so much now been said to us. For it is not merely tion of wives, much more is this the case with against God." Let us then break down the God, and those souls which, owing to the barrier, and hew it in pieces, and destroy it, usurpation of the devil, have fallen from that we may enjoy the blessed reconciliation, their original noble condition into the harlotry that we may become again the fondly beloved prophets filled with examples of this kind, when 14. I know that thou art now admiring the they address Jerusalem; for she fell into for- grace of Hermione, and thou judgest that nication, and a novel form of it, even as Eze- there is nothing in the world to be compared kiel says: "To all harlots wages are given, to her comeliness; but if you choose, O friend, but thou hast given wages to thy lovers, and you shall yourself exceed her in comeliness and there hath been perversion in thee beyond all gracefulness, as much as golden statues surother women," a and again another saith pass those which are made of clay. For if "Thou didst sit waiting for them like a de- beauty, when it occurs in the body, so fasciserted bird." 3 This one then who hath com- nates and excites the minds of most men, when mitted fornication in this fashion God calls the soul is refulgent with it what can match back again. For the captivity which took place beauty and grace of this kind? For the was not so much by way of vengeance as for groundwork of this corporeal beauty is nothing the purpose of conversion and amendment; else but phlegm, and blood, and humor, and since if God had wished to punish them out- bile, and the fluid of masticated food. For right, He would not again have brought them by these things both eyes and cheeks, and all back to their home. He would not have es- the other features, are supplied with moisture; tablished their city and their temple in greater and if they do not receive that moisture, daily splendour than before: "For the final glory of ascending from the stomach and the liver, the this house" He said "shall exceed the skin becoming unduly withered, and the eyes sunken, the whole grace of the countenance things which are not seen; for the things which forthwith vanishes; so that if you consider what are seen are temporal, but the things which are is stored up inside those beautiful eyes, and that straight nose, and the mouth and the Paul called such afflictions as thou wottest of cheeks, you will affirm the well-shaped body to light and easy, because he did not look at the be nothing else than a whited sepulchre; things which are seen, much more tolerable is the parts within are full of so much unclean- it merely to cease from wantonness. For we any of these things on it, such as phlegm, or underwent, nor to those deaths which he inspittle you cannot bear to touch it with even curred daily, the constant beatings and scourgthe tips of your fingers, nay you cannot even ings, the bonds, the enmity of the whole world, endure looking at it; and yet are you in a flut- the hatred of his own people, the frequent ter of excitement about the storehouses and vigils, the long journies, the shipwrecks, the depositories of these things? But thy beauty attacks of robbers, the plots of his own kinswas not of this kind, but excelled it as heaven folk, the distresses on account of his friends, is superior to earth; or rather it was much the hunger, the cold, the nakedness, the burnbetter and more brilliant than this. For no one ing, the despondency on account both of those has anywhere seen a soul by itself stripped of who belonged to him, and those who did not the body; but yet even so I will endeavour to belong to him. None of these things do we present to you the beauty of this soul from an- now demand of thee; all that we ask for is that other source. I mean from the case of the you would release yourself from your accursed greater powers. Hear at least how the beauty bondage, and return to your former freedom, of these struck the man greatly beloved; for having considered both the punishment arising wishing to set forth their beauty and being from your wantonness, and the honor belong-unable to find a body of the same character, ing to your former manner of life. For that he had recourse to metallic substances, and unbelievers should be but languidly affected he was not satisfied even with these, but took by the thought of the resurrection and never the brilliancy of lightning for his illustration. be in fear of this kind, is nothing wonderful; Now if those powers, even when they did not but that we who are more firmly persuaded disclose their essential nature pure and bare, concerning the things of the other world than but only in a very dim and shadowy way, nev- those of the present, should spend our life in ertheless shone so brightly, what must natu- this miserable and deplorable way and be norally be their appearance, when set free from wise affected by the memory of those things, every veil? Now we ought to form some such but sink into a state of extreme insensibilityimage of the beauty of the soul. "For they this is irrational in the highest degree. For shall be," we read "equal unto the angels." 2 Now in the case of bodies the lighter and finer lievers, or rather are in a more miserable kinds, and those which have retreated to the path which tend towards the incorporeal, are them who have been eminent for the virtue of very much better and more wonderful than the their life), what consolation, what excuse will others. The sky at least is more beautiful be left for us? And many merchants indeed than the earth, and fire than water, and the who have incurred shipwreck have not given stars than precious stones; and we admire the way, but have pursued the same journey, and rainbow far more than violets and roses, and this when the loss which has befallen them all other flowers which are upon the earth. was not owing to their own carelessness, but And in short if it were possible with the bodily eyes to behold the beauty of the soul you have reason to be confident concerning the would laugh to scorn these corporeal illustra- end, and know certainly that if we do not wish tions, so feebly have they presented to us the it, neither shipwreck nor accident of any kind gracefulness of the soul. Let us not then ne- will bring us damage, not lay hold of the work glect such a possession, nor such great happi- again, and carry on our business as we did ness, and especially when the approach to that aforetime, but lie in idleness and keep our kind of beauty becomes easy to us by our hands to ourselves? And would that we kept hopes of the things to come. "For our light them merely to ourselves and did not use them affliction," we read, "which is but for the mo- against ourselves which is a token of stark ment, worketh for us more and more exceed- madness. For if any pugilist, leaving his annot at the things which are seen but at the head, and deal blows to his own face, should Morever when you see a rag with are not calling thee to those dangers which he when we who believe do the deeds of unbeplight than they (for there are some among to the force of the winds; and shall we who ingly an eternal weight of glory, while we look tagonist were to turn his hands against his own

¹ Ps. xlv. 12. ² Ezek. xvi. 33, an inexact quotation from LXX. 3 Jer. iii. 2.

⁴ Hagg. ii, 10.

⁵ Matt. xxiii. 37.

we not, I ask, rank him among madmen? For subject to the necessity of nature; here, as if the devil has upset us and cast us down; the infirmities were strange we are negligent therefore we ought to get up, and not to be and despairing; and where the nature of the dragged down again and precipitate ourselves, disorder might naturally plunge us into deand add blows dealt by ourselves to the blows spair, we take as much pains as if there were dealt by him. For the blessed David also great hope of restoration to health; but where had a fall like that which has now happened there is no occasion to renounce hope, we deto you; and not this only but another also sist from efforts, and become as heedless as if which followed it. I mean that of murder, matters were desperate; so much more ac-What then? did he remain prostrate? Did count do we take of the body than of the soul. he not immediately rise up again with energy. And this is the reason why we are not able to and place himself in position to fight the save even the body. For he who neglects the enemy? In fact he wrestled with him so leading element, and manifests all his zeal bravely, that even after his death he was the about inferior matters destroys and loses both; protector of his offspring. For when Solomon whereas he who observes the right order, and had perpetrated great iniquity, and had de-preserves and cherishes the more commanding served countless deaths, God said that He element, even if he neglects the secondary would leave him the kingdom intact, thus element yet preserves it by means of saving speaking "I will surely rend the kingdom out the primary one. Which also Christ signified of thine hand and will give it to thy servant. to us when He said, "Fear not them which kill Nevertheless I will not do this in thy days." the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but Wherefore? "For David thy father's sake, I rather fear Him who is able to destroy both will take it out of the hand of thy son." And soul and body in Hell."3 again when Hezekiah was about to run the Well, do I convince you, that one ought greatest possible risk, although he was a right-never to despair of the disorders of the soul eous man, God said that He would succour as incurable? or must I again set other argu-him for the sake of this saint. "For I will ments in motion? For even if thou shouldst cast my shield," He saith, "over this city to despair of thyself ten thousand times, I will save it for my own sake, and for my servant never despair of thee, and I will never myself David's sake." 2 So great is the force of re- be guilty of that for which I reproach others; pentance. But if he had determined with him- and yet it is not the same thing for a man to self, as you do now, that henceforth it was impossible to propitiate God, and if he had said renounce hope of him. For he who has this within himself: "God has honoured me with suspicion concerning another may readily obgreat honour, and has given me a place among tain pardon; but he who has it of himself will the prophets, and has entrusted me with the not. Why so pray? Because the one has government of my countrymen, and rescued no controlling power over the zeal and repentme out of countless perils, how then, when I ance of the other, but over his own zeal and have offended against Him after such great repentance a man has sole authority. Neverbenefits, and have perpetrated the worst theless even so I will not despair of you; crimes, shall I be able to recover his favour?" though you should any number of times be have done the things which he afterwards did, will be some return to virtue, and to restora-

death, if they are neglected, but also those of heard the prophet vehemently declaring, and the soul; and yet we have arrived at such a plainly threatening; "yet three days and Nine-pitch of folly as to take the greatest care of veh shall be overthrown," even then did not the former, and to overlook the latter; and lose heart, but, although they had no confialthough in the case of the body it naturally dence that they should be able to move the often happens that many wounds are incura- mind of God, or rather had reason to suspect ble, yet we do not abandon hope, but even the contrary from the divine message (for the when we hear the physicians constantly de-claring, that it is not possible to get rid-of this suffering by medicines, we still persist in exhorting them to devise at least some slight

"Who knoweth whether God will repent and alleviation; but in the case of souls, where be entreated, and turn from the fierceness of there is no incurable malady; for it is not His wrath, and that we perish not? And God

If he had thought thus, not only would he not affected in this way; for it may be, that there but he would have aggravated his former evils. tion to thy former manner of life. And now 15. For not only the bodily wounds work hear what follows: The Ninevites when they saw their works that they turned from their only begotten Son on account of His love evil ways, and God repented of the evil which towards us, and who counts it a desirable thing He said He would do unto them and He did if at any time we become reconciled to Himit not." Now if barbarian, and unreasoning self, how shall He not welcome and love us men could perceive so much, much more ought when we repent? Hear at least what He says we to do this who have been trained in the divine doctrines and have seen such a crowd of examples of this kind both in history and actual fied." Now this He demands from us in experience. "For my counsels" we read "are order to intensify our love towards Him. For not as your counsels nor my ways as your when one who loves, after enduring many inways; but far as is the Heaven from the sults at the hands of those who are beloved, earth, so far are my thoughts from your mind, even then does not extinguish his fondness and my counsels from your counsels." Now for them, the only reason why he takes pains if we admit to our favour household slaves to make those insults public, is that by diswhen they have often offended against us, on playing the strength of his affection he may their promising to become better, and place induce them to feel a larger and warmer love. them again in their former position, and some- Now if the confession of sins brings so much times even grant them greater freedom of speech consolation, much more does the endeavour to than before; much more does God act thus. For wash them away by means of our deeds. For if God had made us in order to punish us, you if this was not the case, but those who had might well have despaired, and questioned the once swerved from the straight path were forpossibility of your own salvation; but if He bidden to return to it again, perhaps no one, created us for no other reason than His own except a few persons whose numbers would good will, and with a view to our enjoying be easily reckoned, would ever enter the kingeverlasting blessings, and if He does and con- dom of Heaven; but as it is we shall find the trives everything for this end, from the first most distinguished among those who have day until the present time, what is there which fallen. For those who have exhibited much can ever cause you to doubt? Have we provehemence in evil things, will also in turn exvoked Him severely, so as no other man ever hibit the same in good things, being conscious did? this is just the reason why we ought what great debts they have incurred; which specially to abstain from our present deeds Christ also declared when He spoke to Simon and to repent for the past, and exhibit a great concerning the woman: "For seest thou," change. For the evils we have once perpesaith He, "this woman? I entered into thine trated cannot provoke Him so much as our house, thou gavest me no water for my feet; being unwilling to make any change in the but she hath washed my feet with her tears, future. For to sin may be a merely human and wiped them with the hairs of her head. failing, but to continue in the same sin ceases Thou gavest me no kiss, but she since the time to be human, and becomes altogether devilish. I came in hath not ceased to kiss my feet. For observe how God by the mouth of His Mine head with oil thou didst not anoint; but prophet blames this more than the other, she hath anointed my feet with ointment. "For," we read, "I said unto her after she Wherefore I say unto thee: her sins which had done all these deeds of fornication, return are many are forgiven; for she loved much; unto me, and yet she returned not." And but to whom little is forgiven, the same loveth again: from another quarter, when wishing to little. And He said unto her, thy sins are forshow the great longing which He has for given."? our salvation, having heard how the people promised, after many transgressions, to tread that they who have committed great evils, when the right way He said: "Who will grant unto they have begun to repent, do this with much them to have such an heart as to fear me, and zeal, inasmuch as they are conscious of their to keep my commandments all their days, that offences, fears and trembles lest they should it may be well with them and with their chil- make a beginning of the work; for after they dren forever?" And Moses when reasoning have made it they are no longer capable of with them said, "And now, O Israel, what being checked, and, kindling like fire under doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to the influence of repentance, they render their fear the Lord thy God, and to walk in all His souls purer than pure gold, being impelled by ways, and to love Him?"5 He then who is their conscience, and the memory of their so anxious to be loved by us, and does every-former sins, as by some strong gale, towards thing for this end, and did not spare even His the haven of virtue. And this is the point in

16. For this reason also the devil, knowing

² Isa. lv. 8, 9, varied a little from the LXX. ⁴ Deut. v. 29. 5 Deut. x. 12. ¹ Jonah iii. 9, 10. 3 Jer. iii. 7.

which they have an advantage over those who of the way of virtue. For dejection now have never fallen, that they exercise more holds possession of the band of brethren, while vehement energy; if only, as I said, they can pleasure and cheerfulness prevail in the counlay hold of the beginning. For the task which cils of the unbelieving, and of those young is hard and difficult of accomplishment is to be men who are disposed to indolence. But if able to set foot on the entrance, and to reach thou return again to thy former strictness of the vestibule of repentance, and to repulse and life the result will be reversed, and all our overthrow the enemy there when he is fiercely shame will be transferred to them, while we raging and assaulting us. But after this, he shall enjoy much confidence, seeing thee again will not display so much fury when he has once crowned and proclaimed victor with more been worsted, and has fallen where he was splendour than before. For such victories strong, and we shall receive greater energy, bring greater renown and pleasure. For you and shall run this good race with much ease. will not only receive the reward of your own Let us then in future set about our return, let achievements, but also of the exhortation and us hasten up to the city which is in Heaven, consolation of others, being exhibited as a in which we have been enrolled, in which also striking model, if ever any one should fall into we have been appointed to find our home as the same condition, to encourage him to get citizens. For to despair of ourselves not only up and recover himself. Do not neglect such has this evil that it shuts the gates of that city an opportunity of gain, nor drag our souls against us, and that it drives us into greater down into Hades with sorrow, but let us indolence and contempt, but also that it breathe freely again, and shake off the cloud plunges us into Satanic recklessness. For the of despondency which oppresses us on thy aconly cause why the devil became such as he is count. For now, passing by the consideration was that he first of all despaired, and after- of our own troubles, we mourn over thy cawards from despair sank into recklessness, lamities, but if thou art willing to come to thy For the soul, when once it has abandoned its senses, and see clearly, and to join the angelic own salvation, will no longer perceive that it host, you will release us from this sorrow, and is plunging downwards, choosing to do and say will take away the greater part of sins. For everything which is adverse to its own salva-tion. And just as madmen, when once they back again after repentance to shine with have fallen out of a sound condition, are much lustre, and oftentimes more than those neither afraid nor ashamed of anything, but who have never fallen at all, I have demonfearlessly dare all manner of things, even if strated from the divine writings. Thus at they have to fall into fire, or deep water, or least both the publicans and the harlots inherit down a precipice; so they who have been the kingdom of Heaven, thus many of the last seized by the frenzy of despair are hencefor- are placed before the first. ward unmanageable, rushing into vice in every direction, and if death does not come to put have happened in our own time, and of which a stop to this madness, and vehemence, they thou mayest thyself have been witness. You do themselves infinite mischief. Therefore I know probably that young Phoenician, the son entreat you, before you are deeply steeped in of Urbanus, who was untimely left an orphan, this drunkenness, recover your senses and but possessed of much money, and many slaves rouse yourself up, and shake off this Satanic and lands. This man, having in the first place fit, doing it gently and gradually if it be not bidden complete farewell to his studies in the possible to effect it all at once. For to me schools, and having laid aside the gay clothing indeed the easier course seems to be to wrench which he formerly wore, and all his worldly hold you down, and transfer yourself to the cloak, and retreating to the solitude of the school of epentance. But if this seems to mountains, exhibited a high degree of Chrison thy account, those who are falling, who are becoming more indolent, who are despairing ascended to the true height. Now while he

17. But I will tell thee also of events which yourself once for all out of all the cords which grandeur, suddenly arraying himself in a shabby you a difficult thing, that you should be will-tian philosophy not merely in proportion to ing to enter on the path which leads to better his age, but such as any great and wonderful things, simply enter upon it, and lay hold on man might have displayed. And after this, eternal life. Yea, I beseech and implore you having been deemed worthy of initiation into by your former reputation, by that confidence the sacred mysteries, he made still greater adwhich once was yours, let us see you once vances in virtue. And all were rejoicing, and again standing on the pinnacle of virtue, and glorifying God, that one nurtured in wealth, in the same condition of perseverance as be- and having illustrious ancestors, and being still fore. Spare those who are made to stumble a mere youth, should have suddenly trodden tion, certain corrupt men, who according to and released himself from all care of that kind, the law of kindred had the oversight of him he cut off every pretext for an attack from those dragged him back again into the former sea who wished to make designs upon him; and of worldliness. And so, having flung aside all now treading the path which leads to heaven, his habits, he again descended from the moun- he has already arrived at the very goal of virtue. tains into the midst of the forum, and used to This man indeed fell and rose again while go all round the city, riding on horseback, and he was still young; but another man, after accompanied by a large retinue; and he was enduring great toils during his sojourn in the no longer willing to live even soberly; for being deserts, with only a single companion, and inflamed by much luxury, he was constrained leading an angelic life, and being now on the to fall into foolish love intrigues, and there was way to old age, afforded I know not how a no one of those conversant with him, who did little loophole to the evil one, through some not despair of his salvation; he was encom- Satanic condition of mind, and carelessness; passed by such a swarm of flatterers, besides and although he had never seen a woman the snares of orphanhood, youth, and great since he transferred himself to the monastic wealth. And persons who readily find fault life, he fell into a passionate desire for interwith everything, accused those who originally course with women. And first of all he beconducted him to this way of life, saying that sought his companion to supply him with meat he had both missed his spiritual aims, and and wine, and threatened, if he did not receive would no longer be of any use in the manage- it, that he would go down into the marketment of his own affairs, having prematurely place. And this he said, not so much out of abandoned the labours of study, and having a longing for meat, as because he wished to been consequently unable to derive any bene-fit therefrom. Now while these things were into the city. The other being perplexed at being said, and great shame was felt, certain these things, and fearing, that if he hindered holy men who had often succeeded in this kind this he might drive him into some great evil, of chase, and had thoroughly learned by ex- suffered him to have his fill of this craving. perience that those who are armed with hope But when his companion perceived that this in God ought not to despair at all of such was a stale device, he openly threw off shame, characters, kept a continual watch upon him, and unmasked his pretence, and said that he and if ever they saw him appear in the market- must positively himself go down to the city, place they approached and saluted him. And and as the other had not power to prevent at first he spoke to them from horseback, him, he desisted at last from his efforts, and askance, as they followed by his side; so great following him at a distance, watched to see was the shamelessness which had at first got what the meaning of this return could possibly possession of him. But they, being merciful be. And having seen him enter a brothel, and loving men, were not ashamed at all of and knowing that he had intercourse with a this treatment, but continually looked to one harlot there, he waited until he had satiated thing only, how they might rescue the lamb that foul desire, and then, when he came out, from the wolves; which in fact they actually he received him with uplifted hands, and having accomplished by means of their perseverance. embraced and fervently kissed him, without For afterwards, as if he had been converted uttering any rebuke on account of what had by some sudden stroke, and were put to shame happened he only besought him, seeing that by their great assiduity, if ever he saw them he had satiated his desire, to return again to in the distance approaching, he would in-stantly dismount, and bending low would lis-ten silently in that attitude to all which fell mediately smitten at the heart, and being full from their lips, and in time he displayed even of compunction for the deed which he had greater reverence and respect towards them. perpetrated, followed him to the mountain: And then, by the grace of God having gradu- and there he begged the man to shut him up ally rescued him out of all those entanglements, they handed him over again to his former state of seclusion and devout contemplation. And now he became so illustrious, that his former hit, and, having closed the doors of the dwelling, to supply him with bread and water on certain days, and to inform those who enquired for him that he was laid to rest. And when he had said this, and persuaded well aware by experience of the snare, and tinually, with fastings and prayers and tears, was in this condition, and an object of admira- having expended all his wealth upon the needy, that which he lived after his fall. For being him, he shut himself up, and was there conwiping off from his soul the defilement of his sin. And not long after when a drought had settled on the neighbouring region, and all in goodness should not be as of necessity, but of him back to his former condition.

I i. e., the life of monastic seclusion.

welcomes Onesimus the unprofitable runaway for you to be persuaded that it can justify you. thief, because he was converted, but also asks For as long as you make this confession unhis master to treat him who had repented, on profitable, even if you accuse yourself, you equal terms of honour with his teacher, thus will not be able to desist from the sins which saying: "I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, follow it. For no one will be able to do anywhom I have begotten in my bonds, who was thing with zeal and the proper method, unless aforetime unprofitable to thee, but now is he has first of all persuaded himself that he profitable to thee and to me, whom I have sent does it to advantage. For even the sower, back to thee; thou therefore receive him, after he has scattered his seed, unless he exthat is my very heart, whom I would fain have pects the harvest, will never reap. For who kept with me, that in thy behalf he might min- would choose to fatigue himself in vain, if he ister unto me in the bonds of the Gospel; but was not to gain any good from his labor? So without thy mind I would do nothing that thy that country were lamenting over it, a certain free will. For perhaps he was therefore parted man was commanded by a vision to depart, from thee for a season that thou shouldest and exhort this recluse to pray, and put an have him back for ever; no longer as a servant, end to the drought. And when he had de- but above a servant, a brother beloved, speciparted, taking companions with him, they ally unto me; but how much rather to thee found the man, who formerly dwelt with him, both in the flesh and in the Lord? If then there alone; and on enquiring concerning the thou holdest me as a partner, receive him as other they were informed that he was dead. myself." And the same apostle, in writing But they, believing that they were deceived, to the Corinthians, said, "Lest when I come I betook themselves again to prayer, and again should mourn over many of those who have by means of the same vision heard the same sinned beforehand and have not repented;"3 things which they had heard before. And and again, "as I have said beforehand, so do then, standing round the man who really had I again declare beforehand, that if I come deceived them, they be sought him to show the again I will not spare." 3 Seeest thou who other to them; for they declared that he was they are whom he mourns, and whom he does not dead but living. When he heard this, and not spare? Not those who have sinned, but perceived that their compact was exposed, he those who have not repented, and not simply brought them to that holy man; and they those who have not repented, but those who having broken through the wall (for he had have been called once and again to this work, even blocked up the entrance) and having all and would not be persuaded. For the exof them entered, prostrating themselves at pression "I have said beforehand and do now his feet, and informing him of what had hap- say beforehand, as if I were present the second pened, besought him to succour them against time, and being absent I write," implies exthe famine. But he at first resisted, saving that actly that which we are afraid may take place he was far from such confidence as that; for now in our case. For although Paul is not he ever had his sin before his eyes, as if it had present who then threatened the Corinthians, only just taken place; but when they related yet Christ is present, who was then speaking all which had happened to them they then induced him to pray; and having prayed he put rate, He will not spare us, but will smite us an end to the drought. And what happened to with a mighty blow, both in this world and the that young man who was at first a disciple of next. "Let us then anticipate His counte-John the son of Zebedee, but afterwards for a nance by our confession," 4 let us pour out our long time became a robber chief, and then hearts before Him. For "thou hast sinned," again, having been captured by the holy hands of the blessed Apostle returned from the robber pray on behalf of thy former deeds;" 5 and dens and lairs to his former virtue, thou art not again "a righteous man is his own accuser in ignorant, but knowest it all as accurately as I the first instance."6 Let us not then tarry for do: and I have often heard thee admiring the the accuser, but let us seize his place beforegreat condescension of the saint, and how he hand, and so let us make our judge more first of all kissed the blood-stained hand of the merciful by means of our candour. Now I young man, embracing him, and so brought know indeed that you confess your sins, and call yourself miserable above measure; but 18. Moreover also the blessed Paul not only this is not the only thing I wish, but I long

¹ The story is told by Clement of Alexandria in his treatise entitled "Who is the rich man that is saved?" and has been inserted by Eusebius in his History, iii. 23.

² Philem. 10-18.

^{3 2} Cor. xii. 21; xiii. 2. 5 Ecclus. xxi. 1. 4 Ps. xcv. 42, LXX. 5 Ecclus. xxi. 1.
6 Prov. xviii. 17; but a different meaning is given to the passage in our English Version [Revised].

then he also who sows words, and tears, and indolence; or rather one would not call it the confession, unless he does this with a good root only, but also the nurse and mother. For hope, will not be able to desist from sinning, as in the case of wool decay breeds moths, and being still held down by the evil of despair; is in turn increased by them; so here also inbut just as that husbandman who despairs of dolence breeds despair, and is itself nourished any crop of fruit will not in future hinder any in turn by despair; and thus supplying each of those things which damage the seeds, so also other with this accursed exchange, they ache who sows his confession with tears, but does quire no small additional power. If any one not expect any advantage for this, will not be then cuts one of these off, and hews it in able to overthrow those things which spoil re- pieces, he will easily be able to get the better pentance. And what does spoil repentance is of the remaining one. For on the one hand being again entangled in the same evils. he who is not indolent will never fall into de-"For there is one" we read, "who builds, and spair, and on the other he who is supported by one who pulls down, what have they gained good hopes, and does not despair of himself, more than toil? He who is dipped in water will not be able to fall into indolence. Pray because of contact with a dead body, and then then, wrench this pair asunder, and break the touches it again, what has he gained by his yoke in pieces, by which I mean a variable washing?" Even so if a man fasts because and yet depressing habit of thought; for that of his sins, and goes his way again, and doeth which holds these two things together is not the same things, who will hearken to his pray-uniform, but manifold in shame and character. er? And again we read "if a man goes back And what is this? It happens that one who from righteousness to sin the Lord will prepare has repented has done many great and good him for the sword," and, "as a dog when he deeds, but meanwhile he has committed some has returned to his vomit, and become odious, sin equivalent to those good deeds, and this so is a fool who by his wickedness has returned especially is sufficient to plunge him into deto his sin."3 being thy own accuser, but as one who ought which he had bestowed upon them had been to be justified by the method of repentance; vain and come to naught. But this must be for thus thou wilt be able to put thy soul, taken into account, and such reasoning must which makes its confession, to shame, so that be repelled, because, if we do not store up in it falls no more into the same sins. For to good time a measure of good deeds equivalent accuse ourselves vehemently and call ourselves to the sins which are committed after them, sinners is common, so to say, to unbelievers nothing can hinder us from sinking grievously also. Many at least of those who belong to and completely. But as it is, (right action 4) the stage, both men and women, who habitu-like some stout breastplate does not suffer the ally practise the greatest shamelessness, call sharp and bitter dart to accomplish its work, themselves miserable, but not with the proper but even if it is itself cut through, it averts aim. Wherefore I would not even call this much danger from the body. For he who deconfession; for the publication of their sins is parts to the other world with many deeds both not accompanied with compunction of soul, good and bad, will have some alleviation in nor with bitter tears, nor with conversion of respect of the punishment and the torment life, but in fact some of them make it in quest there; but if a man is destitute of these good of a reputation for the hearers for candor of works, and takes only the evil with him, it is speech. For offences do not seem so grievous impossible to say what great sufferings he will when some other person announces them as undergo, when he is conducted to everlasting when the perpetrator himself reports them. punishment. For a balance will be struck And they who under the influence of strong there between the evil deeds and those which despair have lapsed into a state of insensibility, are not such; and should the latter weigh and treat the opinion of their fellowmen with down the scale they will to no small extent contempt proclaim their own evil deeds with have saved the doer of them, and the injury much effrontery, as if they were the doings of arising from the doing of evil deeds is not so others. But I do not wish thee to be any of strong as to drag the man down from the forethese, nor to be brought out of despair to con- most place; but if the evil deeds exceed, they fession, but with a good expectation, after cut- carry him off into hell fire, because the numting away the whole root of despair, to mani- ber of his good actions is not so great as to be fest zeal in the contrary direction. And what able to make a stand against this violent im-spair, as if the buildings which had been set 19. Do not then merely set forth thy sins up were all pulled down, and all the labor is the root and mother of this despair? it is pulse. And these things are not merely sug-

⁴ These words seem to be understood, although they are not expressed in the original. Ecclus. xxxiv. 23, 25. 2 Ecclus. xxvi. 28.

by the divine oracles; for He Himself saith, wouldst never rise again; but if he sees thee "He shall reward every man according to his again lifting up thy hands against him, he will works." And not only in hell, but also in the receive such an unexpected blow that he will kingdom one will find many differences; for be less forward in trying to upset thee again, He saith, "in my Father's house are many mansions;" and, "there is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon." And For if the calamities of others are sufficient to what wonder, if in dealing with such great instruct us, much more those which we have matters he has spoken with such precision, ourselves undergone. And this is what I exseeing that He declares there is a difference pect speedily to see in the case of thy own in that world even between one star and an-dear self, and that by the grace of God thou other? Knowing then all these things let us art again become more radiant than before, never desist from doing good deeds, nor grow and displaying such great virtue, as even to be weary, nor, if we should be unable to reach a protector of others in the world above. the rank of the sun or of the moon, let us de- Only do not despair, do not fall back; for I spise that of the stars. For if only we display will not cease repeating this in every form of thus much virtue at least, we shall be able to speech, and wherever I see you, as well as by have a place in Heaven. And though we the lips of others; and if you listen to this you may not have become gold, or precious stone, will no longer need other remedies. yet if we only occupy the rank of silver we shall abide in the foundation; only let us not fall back again into that material which the fire readily devours, nor, when we are unable to accomplish great things, desist also from small ones, for this is the part of extreme folly, groans by means of writing I would have filled which I trust we may not experience. For the letter, which I now send to you, with them. just as material wealth increases if the lovers Now I weep not because you are anxious conof it do not despise even the smallest gains, so cerning your patrimony, but because you have is it also with the spiritual. For it is a strange blotted out your name from the list of the thing that the judge should not overlook the brethren, because you have trampled upon the reward of even a cup of cold water, but that covenant which you had made with Christ. we, if our achievements are not altogether This is the reason why I shudder, this is the great, should neglect the performance of little cause of my distress. On this account do I things. For he who does not despise the fear and tremble, knowing that the rejection lesser things, will exercise much zeal concern- of this covenant will bring great condemnaing the greatest; but he who overlooks the tion upon those who have enlisted for this former will also abstain from the latter; and noble warfare, and owing to indolence have to prevent this taking place Christ has defined deserted their proper rank. And that the great rewards even for these small things. For punishment for such is heavier than for others what is easier than to visit the sick? Yet even is manifest for this reason. For no one would this He requites with a great recompense, indite a private individual for shunning milieasy yoke, bow thyself beneath the light bur- ranks, he runs a risk of suffering the most exden, put a finish to thy life worthy of the be- treme penalty. There is nothing strange, beginning; do not suffer so great a stream of loved Theodore, in a wrestler falling, but in wealth to slip past thee. For if thou shouldst continue provoking God by thy deeds, thou wilt destroy thyself; but if before much dam-wounded, but to despair after the blow has been overwhelmed with a flood, thou wilt dam merchant, having once suffered shipwreck, and up the channels of wickedness, thou wilt be lost his freight, desists from sailing, but again able to recover again what has been spoiled crosses the sea and the billows, and the broad the dust, get up from the ground, and thou gained the wreath of victory; and often, before wilt be formidable to the adversary; for he now, a soldier who has once ran away has gested by our own reasoning, but declared also himself indeed has overthrown thee, as if thou

LETTER II.

1. If it were possible to express tears and Lay hold then on eternal life, delight in the tary service; but when once a man has be-Lord, and supplicate Him; take up again the come a soldier, if he be caught deserting the age has been done, and all thy husbandry has been struck, and to neglect the wound. No and to add to it not a little further produce. Ocean, and recovers his former wealth. We Having considered all these things, shake off see athletes also who after many falls have - turned out a champion, and prevailed over the enemy. Many also of those who have denied fought again, and departed at last with the one would have said that the damage was crown of martyrdom upon their brows. But great if defeat had taken place after many if each of these had despaired after the first toils, and labours, and victories; but inasmuch blow, he would not have reaped the subse- as he upset you as soon as you had stripped quent benefits. Even so now, beloved Theo- for the contest with him, all that he accomdore, because the enemy has shaken thee a plished was to render you more eager to do little from thy position, do not thou give thy-battle with him. For that fell pirate attacked self an additional thrust into the pit, but stand thee just as thou wast sailing out of the harup bravely, and return speedily to the place bor, not when thou hadst returned from thy from which thou hast departed, and deem not trading voyage, bringing a full cargo. And this blow, lasting but for a little while, any as when one has attempted to stay a fierce reproach. For if you saw a soldier returning wounded from war you would not reproach him no injury but only stirred him up the more him: for it is a reproach to cast away one's against himself, and rendered him more conarms, and to hold aloof from the enemy; but fident, and difficult to capture afterwards: as long as a man stands fighting, even if he even so the common enemy of all has atbe wounded and retreat for a short time, no tempted to strike a deep blow, but has missed one is so unfeeling or inexperienced in matters it, and consequently made his antagonist more of war, as to find any fault with him. Exemp- vigilant and wary for the future. tion from wounds is the lot of non-combatants; 2. For human nature is a slippery thing, but those who advance with much spirit quick to be cheated, but quick also to recover against the enemy may sometimes be wounded from deceit, and as it speedily falls, so also and fall; which is exactly what has now occurred in your case; for suddenly, while you man, I mean David the chosen king and attempted to destroy the serpent you were prophet, after he had accomplished many good bitten. But take courage, you need a litle deeds, betrayed himself to be a man, for once vigilance, and then not a trace of this wound he fell in love with a strange woman, nor did will be left; or rather by the grace of God he stop there but he committed adultery on thou wilt crush the head of the Evil One him- account of his passion, and he committed murself: nor let it trouble thee that thou art soon der on account of his adultery; but he did not impeded, even at the outset. For the eye, the try to inflict a third blow upon himself because keen eye of the Evil One perceived the excel- he had already received two such heavy ones, lence of thy soul, and guessed from many but immediately hastened to the physician, tokens that a brave adversary would wax strong and applied the remedies, fasting, tears, lamagainst him; for he expected that one who entation, constant prayer, frequent confession had promptly attacked him with such great of the sin; and so by these means he propitiated vehemence would easily overcome him, if he God, insomuch that he was restored to his persevered. Therefore he was diligent, and former position, insomuch that after adultery watchful, and mightily stirred up against thee, and murder the memory of the father was able or rather against his own head, if thou wilt to shield the idolatry of the son. For the son bravely stand thy ground. For who did not of this David, Solomon by name, was caught change to good? For delicacy of food was complaisance to women fell away from the God disregarded, and costliness of raiment was de- of his fathers.' Thou seest how great an spised, all manner of parade was put down, evil it is not to master pleasure, not to upset the feet of the brethren thou didst recognize ment on account of the renown of his father.2 as something nobler than high birth. These Now if thy zeal had been concerned with things irritated the Evil One, these things worldly eloquence, and then thou hadst given stirred him up to more vehement strife; but it up in despair, I should have reminded thee yet he did not give a deadly blow. For if of the law courts and the judgment seat and after a long time, and continual fastings, and the victories achieved there and the former sleeping on the bare ground and the rest of the discipline he overthrew you, even then I Kings xi. 3, 4.

Christ owing to the pressure of torture, have there was no need to despair; nevertheless marvel at thy quick, sincere, and fervent by the same snare as his father, and out of and all the zeal for the wisdom of this world the ruling principle in nature, and for a man was suddenly transferred to the divine oracles; to be the slave of women. This same Solowhole days were spent in reading, and whole mon then, who was formerly righteous and nights in prayer; no mention was made of thy wise but who ran a risk of being deprived of family dignity, nor any thought taken of thy all the kingdom on account of his sin, God wealth; but to clasp the knees and hasten to permitted is keep the sixth part of the govern-boldness of thy speech, and should have ex- from a stage, but just as there, one man fills judgment seat of Christ." "And He will is glory a precious thing which perishes like then sit as judge who is now disregarded by the power of grass? or wealth, the possessors thee. What shall we say then, let me ask at of which are pronounced unhappy? "For that time? or what defence shall we make, if woe" we read, "to the rich;" and again, we continue to disregard Him? What shall "Woe unto them who trust in their strength we say then? Shall we plead the anxieties and boast themselves in the multitude of their of business? Nay He has anticipated this by riches!" But the Christian never becomes a saying, "What shall it profit a man if he gain private person after being a ruler, or a poor the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Or man after being rich, or without honour after that we have been deceived by others? But being held in honour; but he abides rich even it did not help Adam in his defence to screen when he is poor, and is exalted when he strives himself behind his wife, and say "the woman to humble himself; and from the rule which whom thou gavest me, she deceived me; "3 he exercises no human being can depose him, even as the serpent was no excuse for the but only one of those rulers who are under the woman. Terrible, O beloved Theodore, is power of this world's potentate of darkness. that tribunal, one which needs no accusers, and waits for no witnesses; for "all things are to this. For "marriage," we read, "is honournaked and laid open to Him" 4 who judges us, able and the bed undefiled; but fornicators and we must submit to give an account not of and adulterers God will judge;" 9 but it is no deeds only but also of thoughts; for that judge longer possible for thee to observe the right is quick to discern the thoughts and intents of conditions of marriage. For if he who has the heart.5 But perhaps you will allege weak- been attached to a heavenly bridegroom deness of nature as the excuse, and inability to serts him, and joins himself to a wife the act bear the yoke. And what kind of defence is is adultery, even if you call it marriage ten this, that you have not strength to bear the thousand times over; or rather it is worse than easy yoke, that you are unable to carry the adultery in proportion as God is greater than light burden? Is recovery from fatigue a man. Let no one deceive thee saying: "God grievous and oppressive thing? For it is to hath not forbidden to marry;" I know this as this that Christ calls us, saying, "Come unto well as you; He has not forbidden to marry, me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and but He has forbidden to commit adultery, I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you which is what thou art wishing to do; and and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in may you be preserved from ever engaging thyheart; for my yoke is easy and my burden is self in marriage! And why dost thou marvel light." For what can be lighter I ask, than to be released from anxieties, and business, when God is disregarded? Slaughter has and fears, and labors, and to stand outside the brought about righteousness, and mercy has rough billows of life, and dwell in a tranquil been a cause of condemnation more than haven?

you most desirable and enviable? No doubt been forbidden. It was reckoned to Phinees you will say government, and wealth, and pub- for righteousness that he pierced to death the lic reputation. And yet what is more wretched woman who committed fornication, together than these things when they are compared with the fornicator; to but Samuel, that saint with the liberty of Christians. For the ruler of God, although he wept and mourned and is subjected to the wrath of the populace and entreated for whole nights, could not rescue to the irrational impulses of the multitude, Saul from the condemnation which God issued and to the fear of higher rulers, and to anxie- against him, because he saved, contrary to the ties on behalf of those who are ruled, and the design of God, the king of the alien tribes ruler of yesterday becomes a private citizen whom he ought to have slain." If then mercy to-day; for this present life in no wise differs has been a cause of condemnation more than horted thee to return to your labours in that the position of a king, a second of a general, behalf: but inasmuch as our race is for heav- and a third of a soldier, but when evening has enly things, and we take no account of the come on the king is no king, the ruler no ruler, things which are on earth, I put thee in re- and the general no general, even so also in membrance of another court of justice, and of that day each man will receive his due reward that fearful and tremendous seat of judgment; not according to the outward part which he "for we must all be made manifest before the has played, but according to his works. Well!

slaughter; because the latter has been accord-3. Which of all things in the world seems to ing to the mind of God, but the former has

^{1 2} Cor. v. 10. 4 Heb. iv. 13.

² Matt. xvi. 26. 5 Heb. iv. 12.

³ Gen. iii. 12. 6 Matt. xi. 28.

⁷ Luke vi. 24. 10 Num. xxv. 7-11.

⁸ Ps. xlix. 6. 9 Heb. xiii. 4.

slaughter because God was disobeyed, what wonder is it if marriage condemns more than great men who sympathize with thy trouble, adultery when it involves the rejection of who encourage you to the fight, who tremble you were a private person no one would indict Florentius who is in every respect his brother, you for shunning to serve as a soldier; but Porphyrius who is wise with the wisdom of but the husband, much more they who live in asked for, long ago, if only thou hadst been Christ must be unable to have authority over willing to withdraw thyself a little space out of their body. He who is now despised, the same the hands of the enemy. Now then is it not will then be our judge; think ever on Him strange that, whilst others do not even now and the river of fire: "For a river of fire" we despair of thy salvation, but are continually praypunishment. But the unseemly pleasures of trate, all but crying aloud to the enemy: "Slay this life no-wise differ from shadows and me, smite me, spare not?" "Does he who dreams; for before the deed of sin is com- falls not rise up again?" 5 so speaks the divine pleted, the conditions of pleasure are extin-oracle. But thou art striving against this and guished; and the punishments for these have contradicting it; for if one who has fallen deno limit. And the sweetness lasts for a little spairs it is as much as to say that he who falls while, but the pain is everlasting.

evening? Or glory? Hear what a certain present time, when thou hast not yet completed before it has fairly reached us. Nothing is enced this attack, even then it would not have more precious than the soul; and even they been right to despair, but to call to mind the not been ignorant of this; for "there is no labourers who wrought about the eleventh equivalent of the soul" is the saying of a hour, and received the wages of the whole heathen poet.' I know that thou hast become day. But as it is not well that those who have much weaker for the struggle with the Evil fallen near the very extremity of life should thou wilt say to the enemy "We do not serve hope, and say, "Here for a while I will enjoy thy pleasures, and we do not bow down to the the sweets of life, but afterwards, when I have root of all thy evils; if thou wilt bend thine worked for a short time, I shall receive the eye upward, the Saviour will even now shake wages of the whole working time. do not consume thyself with fire. For the nor put off day after day?"", Recover this the treachery of one or two of the citizens because it comes upon us unawares. Conagainst thee from without he will bring them in vain.

¹ ¹ Cor. vii. 4. ³ Job ix. 25.

4. Thou hast by the grace of God many and Christ? For, as I said at the beginning, if for thy soul,-Valerius the holy man of God, now thou art no longer thy own master, being christ, and many others. These are daily engaged in the service of so great a king. For if the wife hath not power over her own body, ing; and they would have obtained what they read, "winds before His face;" for it is impossible for one who has been delivered over by Him to the fire to expect any end of his unwilling to get up again, and remainest prosdoes not rise up again I entreat thee do not Tell me, what is there stable in this world? so great a wrong to thyself; do not pour upon Wealth which often does not last even to the us such a flood of sorrow. I do not say at the righteous man says: "My life is swifter than a thy twentieth year, but even if, after achieving runner." 3 For as they dash away before they many things, and spending thy whole life in stand still, even so does this glory take to flight Christ thou hadst, in extreme old age, experiwho have gone to the extremity of folly have robber who was justified on the cross, the One; I know that thou art standing in the abandon hope, if they be sober minded, so on very midst of the flame of pleasures; but if the other hand it is not safe to feed upon this out the fire, and will burn up those who have recollect hearing you often say, when many flung thee into it, and will send to thee in the were exhorting you to frequent the schools; midst of the furnace a cloud, and dew, and a "But what if I bring my life to a bad end in a rustling breeze, so that the fire may not lay short space of time, how shall I depart to Him hold of thy thought or thy conscience. Only who has said 'Delay not to turn to the Lord, arms and engines of besiegers have often been thought, and stand in fear of the thief; for by unable to destroy the fortification of cities, but this name Christ calls our departure hence, dwelling inside has betrayed them to the enemy without any trouble on his part. And now if none of thy thoughts within betray thee, should the Evil One bring countless engines of rulers, the envy of citizens, the danger which

⁵ Jer. viii. 4.
6 i. e., schools of Pagan philosophy: probably thos er which Libenius presided in Antioch.
Libenius v. 9. ² Dan. vii. 10. 4 Homer II. ix. 401.

often hangs over us imperilling even life itself, dread, departure hence to the other world,the labours, the distresses, the servile flatteries, this is to him sweeter than life itself. For as such as are unbecoming even to slaves if they when one has climbed to the top of a cliff and be earnest minded men, the fruit of our labours gazes on the sea and those who are sailing coming to an end in this world, a fact which upon it, he sees some being washed by the is the most distressing of all. It has been the waves, others running upon hidden rocks, some lot indeed of many to miss the enjoyment of hurrying in one direction, others being driven the things for which they have laboured, and in another, like prisoners, by the force of the after having consumed the prime of their man- gale, many actually in the water, some of them hood in labours and perils, just when they using their hands only in the place of a boat hoped that they should receive their reward and a rudder, and many drifting along upon a they have departed taking nothing with them. single plank, or some fragment of the vessel, For if, after undergoing many dangers, and others floating dead, a scene of manifold and completing many campaigns, one will scarcely various disaster; even so he who is engaged look upon an earthly king with confidence, in the service of Christ drawing himself out of how will any one be able to behold the heavenly the turmoil and stormy billows of life takes his king, if he has lived and fought for another all seat upon secure and lofty ground. For what tic cares of wife, and children and slaves? It "How he ought to please God?" Hast thou is an evil thing to wed a very poor wife, or a seen the shipwrecks, Theodore, of those who very rich one; for the former is injurious to the sail upon this sea? Wherefore, I beseech husband's means, the latter to his authority and thee, avoid the deep water, avoid the stormy independence. It is a grievous thing to have billows, and seize some lofty spot where it is children, still more grievous not to have any; not possible to be captured. There is a resurfor in the latter case marriage has been to no rection, there is a judgment, there is a terrible purpose, in the former a bitter bondage has to tribunal which awaits us when we have gone be undergone. If a child is sick, it is the oc- out of this world; "we must all stand before casion of no small fear; if he dies an untimely the judgment-seat of Christ." 4 It is not in death, there is inconsolable grief; and at every vain that we are threatened with hell fire, it is stage of growth there are various anxieties on not without purpose that such great blessings their account, and many fears and toils. And have been prepared for us. The things of what is one to say to the rascalities of domes- this life are a shadow, and more naught even tic slaves? Is this then life, Theodore, when than a shadow, being full of many fears, and one's soul is distracted in so many directions, many dangers, and extreme bondage. Do not when a man has to serve so many, to live for then deprive thyself both of that world, and of so many, and never for himself? Now amongst this, when you may gain both, if you please. us, O friend, none of these things happen, I Now that they who live in Christ will gain the appeal to yourself as a witness. For during things of this world Paul teaches us when he that short time when you were willing to lift says: "But I spare you:" and again "But your head above the waves of this world, you this I say for your profit." Seest thou that know what great cheerfulness and gladness even here he who cares for the things of the you enjoyed. For there is no man free, save Lord is superior to the man who has married? only he who lives for Christ. He stands sn- It is not possible for one who has departed to perior to all troubles, and if he does not choose the other world to repent; no athlete, when he to injure himself no one else will be able to do has quitted the lists, and the spectators have this, but he is impregnable; he is not stung dispersed, can contend again. by the loss of wealth; for he has learned that we "brought nothing into this world, neither in pieces the sharp sword of the Evil One, by can we carry anything out;" he is not caught means of which he destroys many. And this by the longings of ambition or glory; for he is despair, which cuts off from hope those who has learned that our citizenship is in heaven; have been overthrown. This is the strong no one annoys him by abuse, or provokes him weapon of the enemy, and the only way in by blows; there is only one calamity for a which he holds down those who have been Christian which is, disobedience to God; but made captives is by binding them with this all the other things, such as loss of property, chain, which, if we choose, we shall speedily exile, peril of life, he does not even reckon to be able to break by the grace of God. I know be a grievance at all.

position can be loftier or more secure than 5. Would you have me speak of the domes- that in which a man has only one anxiety,

Be always thinking of these things, and break And that which all that I have exceeded the due measure of a letter, but forgive me; for I am not willingly been broken to pieces by the winds and waves, in this condition, but have been constrained take down their sails, and cast anchor, and get by my love and sorrow, owing to which I forced into a boat and try to rescue the men, although myself to write this letter also, although many strangers, known to them only in consequence would have prevented me. "Cease labouring in of their calamity. But if the others were unvain and sowing upon rock" many have been willing to be rescued no one would accuse saying to me. But I hearkened to none of those of their destruction who attempted to them. For there is hope I said to myself that, save them. This is what we offer; but we God willing, my letter will accomplish some- trust that by the grace of God you also will do thing; but if that which we deprecate should your part, and we shall again see you occupytake place, we shall at least have the advantage ing an eminent place in the flock of Christ. of escaping self reproach for keeping silence, In answer to the prayers of the saints may we and we shall not be worse than sailors on the speedily receive thee back, dear friend, sound sea, who, when they behold men of their own in the true health. If thou hast any regard craft drifting on a plank, because their ship has for us, and hast not utterly cast us out of thy memory, please vouchsafe a reply to our letter; for in so doing thou wilt give us much pleasure.

^{3 1} Thess. iv. 1. 5 1 Cor. vii. 28.

⁴ Rom. xiv. 10. 6 1 Cor. vii. 35.

I This seems to imply a previous letter.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

LETTER TO A YOUNG WIDOW.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

INTRODUCTION TO THE LETTER TO A YOUNG WIDOW.

The date of the following letter can be determined within very narrow limits. It contains a reference (c. 5) to the defeat and death of the Emperor Valens in the battle with the Goths at Hadrianople, in A.D. 378, as a recent event. The Emperor who is described as having been incessantly engaged in war ever since his accession (c. 4) must be Theodosius, who succeeded Valens, and as the Goths are said to be still overrunning large regions with impunity, and insolently mocking the timidity of the imperial troops (ib.) the letter must have been written prior to the crushing defeat which Theodosius inflicted upon them in 382. The whole epistle is deeply tinged with that profound sense of the unhappiness and instability of human life which the moral corruption of society and recent calamities of the empire impressed with peculiar force on the minds of men; producing too often amongst Pagans either a cynical gloom or reckless indifference, but leading Christians to cling more closely and earnestly to the hopes and consolations of the Gospel.

LETTER TO A YOUNG WIDOW,

and foolish person. But when the troubled dress the wound and make us whole."2 spread the sails of our discourse. For in a care and zealous attention; in fact you enlence because I have heard from thy uncle the fatherless and the widow," 3 and elsewhere that one may begin to take courage, as some of your more esteemed handmaids are now

1. That you have sustained a severe blow, venturing to discourse at length upon these and that the weapon directed from above has matters, women also outside your own housebeen planted in a vital part all will readily ad- hold, who are your kinsfolk, or are otherwise mit, and none even of the most rigid moralists qualified for this office. Now if you allow will deny it; but since they who are stricken them to talk to you I have the greatest hope with sorrow ought not to spend their whole time and confidence that you will not disdain my in mourning and tears, but to make good pro- words but do your best to give them a calm vision also for the healing of their wounds, lest, and quiet hearing. Under any circumstances if they be neglected their tears should aggravate indeed the female sex is the more apt to be the wound, and the fire of their sorrow become sensitive to suffering; but when in addition inflamed, it is a good thing to listen to words there is youth, and untimely widowhood, and of consolation, and restraining for a brief sea- inexperience in business, and a great crowd of son at least the fountain of thy tears to sur- cares, while the whole life previously has been render thyself to those who endeavour to con- nurtured in the midst of luxury, and cheerfulsole thee. On this account I abstained from ness and wealth, the evil is increased many troubling you when your sorrow was at its fold, and if she who is subjected to it does not height, and the thunderbolt had only just fallen obtain help from on high even an accidental upon you; but having waited an interval and thought will be able to unhinge her. Now I permitted you to take your fill of mourning, hold this to be the foremost and greatest evinow that you are able to look out a little dence of God's care concerning thee; for that through the mist, and to open your ears to thou hast not been overwhelmed by grief, nor those who attempt to comfort you, I also would driven out of thy natural condition of mind second the words of your handmaids by some when such great troubles suddenly concurred contributions of my own. For whilst the tem- to afflict thee was not due to any human aspest is still severe, and a full gale of sorrow is sistance but to the almighty hand the underblowing, he who exhorts another to desist from grief would only provoke him to increased dom which is past finding out, the "Father of lamentations and having incurred his hatred mercies and the God of all comfort." "For would add fuel to the flame by such speeches He Himself" it is said "hath smitten us, and besides being regarded himself as an unkind He will heal us; He will strike, and He will water has begun to subside, and God has al- For as long as that blessed husband of thine layed the fury of the waves, then we may freely was with thee, thou didst enjoy honour, and moderate storm skill may perhaps play its part; joyed such as you might expect to enjoy from but when the onslaught of the wind is irre- a husband; but since God took him to Himsistible experience is of no avail. For these self He has supplied his place to thee. And reasons I have hitherto held my peace, and this is not my saying but that of the blessed even now have only just ventured to break si- prophet David for he says "He will take up he calls Him "father of the fatherless and who was a widow, he asked of me the age of cause of this class of mankind.

calamity but of honour, aye the greatest honour, amongst those who are outside the Church. For do not quote the erroneous opinion of the And being aware of all this the blessed Paul world as a testimony, but the admonition of said "Let not a widow be enrolled under threethe blessed Paul, or rather of Christ. For in score years of age." And even after this great his utterances Christ was speaking through him as he himself said "If ye seek a proof of Christ, who is speaking in me?" What then does some additional requisites "well reported of he say? "Let not a widow be enrolled under for good works, if she have brought up children threescore years of age" and again "but the if she have lodged strangers if she have washed younger widows refuse" intending by both the saints feet if she have relieved the afflicted, these sayings to indicate to us the importance if she have diligently followed every good of the matter. And when he is making regulations about bishops he nowhere prescribes a how much virtue does he demand from the not because widowhood is greater than priest-tended to entrust to her a position of honour hood, but because widows have greater labour and dignity. And "the younger widows" he to undergo than priests, being encompassed says "refuse; and then he adds the reason; on many sides by a variety of business public "for when they have waxed wanton against and private. For as an unfortified city lies Christ they will marry." By this expression exposed to all who wish to plunder it, so a he gives us to understand that they who have young woman living in widowhood has many lost their husbands are wedded to Christ in who form designs upon her on every side not their stead. Observe how he asserts this by only those who aim at getting her money but way of indicating the mild and easy nature of also those who are bent upon corrupting her this union; I refer to the passage "when modesty. And besides these we shall find they have waxed wanton against Christ they that she is subjected to other conditions also will marry," as if He were some gentle huslikely to occasion her fall. For the contempt band who did not exercise authority over them, of servants their negligence of business, the but suffered them to live in freedom. Neither loss of that respect which was formerly paid, did Paul confine his discourse on the subject the sight of contemporaries in prosperity, and to these remarks, but also in another place often the hankering after luxury, induce women again he has manifested great anxiety about to engage in a second marriage. Some there it where he says "Now she who liveth in are who do not choose to unite themselves to pleasure is dead while she liveth; but she who men by the law of marriage, but do so secretly is a widow indeed and desolate hath set her and clandestinely. And they act thus in order hope in God, and continueth in prayers and to enjoy the praise of widowhood; thus it is a supplications day and night."7 And writing state which seems to be not reproached, but to the Corinthians he says "But she is more admired and deemed worthy of honour among blessed if she abide thus.8 You see what great men, not only amongst us who believe, but praise is bestowed upon widowhood, and this even amongst unbelievers also. For once in the New Testament, when the beauty of when I was still a young man I know that the sophist who taught me (and he exceeded all Nevertheless even the lustre of this state could men in his reverence for the gods) expressed not obscure the glories of widowhood, which admiration for my mother before a large com- shines on brightly all the same, keeping its own pany. For enquiring, as was his wont, of those value. When then we make mention of widow who sat beside him who I was, and some one hood from time to time, do not be cast down, having said that I was the son of a woman nor consider the matter a reproach; for if this judge of the widow;" thus in many passages my mother and the duration of her widowthou wilt see that He earnestly considereth the hood, and when I told him that she was forty years of age of which twenty had elapsed since 2. But lest the continual repetition of this she lost my father he was astonished and utname of widow should upset thy soul, and distered a loud exclamation, and turning to those concert thy reason, having been inflicted on present "Heavens I" cried he "what women thee in the very flower of thy age, I wish first there are amongst the Christians." So great of all to discourse on this point, and to prove is the admiration and praise enjoyed by widow-to you that this name of widow is not a title of hood not only amongst ourselves, but also standard of age, but in this case he is very widow, and how precisely does he define it! particular on the point, and, pray, why so? which he would not have done, had he not in-

² Ps. lxviii. 5. 3 1 Tim. v. 9, 11.

² ² Cor. xiii. 3. ⁴ Libanius.

^{5 1} Tim. v. 10. 7 1 Tim. v. 6, 5.

^{6 1} Tim. v. 11. 8 1 Cor. vii. 40.

be a matter of reproach, far more so is virginity. thine had been one of those who lived a shamesorrow, and not suffering thee to undergo any- formerly did. thing undesirable. Now if He has not perquences of it which seem to be so terrible.

heaven is far better than earth, and yet to of these things both in the Old and in the New mourn those who are translated from this world to the other? For if that blessed husband of

But this is not the case; no! God forbid. For ful life contrary to what God approved it would inasmuch as we all admire and welcome women have been right to bewail and lament for him who live continently whilst their husbands are not only when he had departed, but whilst he yet alive must we not be delighted with those was still living; but inasmuch as he was one who manifest the same good feeling concern- of those who are the friends of God we should ing their husbands when they have departed take pleasure in him not only whilst living, but this life, and praise them accordingly? As I also when he has been laid to rest. And that was saying then, as long as you lived with the we ought to act thus thou hast surely heard blessed Therasius you enjoyed honour and the words of the blessed Paul "to depart and consideration such as is natural for a wife to to be with Christ which is far better." But receive from a husband; but now in his place perhaps you long to hear your husband's words, you have God who is the Lord of all, who hath and enjoy the affection which you bestowed of old been thy protector and will be so now upon him, and you yearn for his society, and still more and with yet greater earnestness; the glory which you had on his account, and and as I have already said He hath displayed the splendour, and honour, and security, and no slight token of his providential care by all these things being gone distress and darken having preserved thee whole and unharmed in your life. Well! the affection which you bethe midst of such a furnace of anxiety and stowed on him you can keep now just as you

For such is the power of love, it embraces, mitted any shipwreck to take place in the midst and unites, and fastens together not only those of so much rough water, much more will He who are present, and near, and visible but also preserve thy soul in calm weather and lighten those who are far distant; and neither length the burden of thy widowhood, and the conse- of time, nor separation in space, nor anything else of that kind can break up and sunder in 3. Now if it is not the name of widow which pieces the affection of the soul. But if you distresses you, but the loss of such a husband wish to behold him face to face (for this I I grant you that all the world over amongst know is what you specially long for) keep thy men engaged in secular affairs there have been bed in his honour sacred from the touch of any few like him, so affectionate, so gentle, so other man, and do thy best to manifest a life humble, so sincere, so understanding, so de-like his, and then assuredly thou shalt depart vout. And certainly if he had altogether per- one day to join the same company with him, ished, and utterly ceased to be, it would be not to dwell with him for five years as thou right to be distressed, and sorrowful; but if he didst here, nor for 20, or 100, nor for a thouhas only sailed into the tranquil haven, and sand or twice that number but for infinite and taken his journey to Him who is really his endless ages. For it is not any physical relaking, one ought not to mourn but to rejoice tion, but a correspondence in the way of living on these accounts. For this death is not which qualifies for the inheritance of those death, but only a kind of emigration and trans- regions of rest. For if it was identity of moral lation from the worse to the better, from earth constitution which brought Lazarus although a to heaven, from men to angels, and archangels, stranger to Abraham into the same heavenly and Him who is the Lord of angels and archan-bosom with him, and qualifies many from east gels. For here on earth whilst he was serving the and west to sit down with him, the place of emperor there were dangers to be expected and rest will receive thee also with the good Theramany plots arising from men who bore ill-will, sius, if thou wilt exhibit the same manner of for in proportion as his reputation increased life as his, and then thou shalt receive him did the designs also of enemies abound; but back again no longer in that corporeal beauty now that he has departed to the other world which he had when he departed, but in lustre none of these things can be suspected. Where- of another kind, and splendour outshining the fore in proportion as you grieve that God has rays of the sun. For this body, even if it taken away one who was so good and worthy reaches a very high standard of beauty is nevyou ought to rejoice that he has departed in ertheless perishable; but the bodies of those much safety and honour, and being released who have been well pleasing to God, will be from the trouble which besets this present sea- invested with such glory as these eyes cannot son of danger, is in great peace and tranquillity. even look upon. And God has furnished us For is it not out of place to acknowledge that with certain tokens, and obscure indications

¹ Phil. i. 33.

Dispensation. For in the former the face of deprived even of her freedom also, and enearth, and then had commanded you to withdraw for twenty years on his account, and had promised after that to restore him to you with the diadem and the purple, and to place you again in the same rank with him, would you not have meekly endured the separation with due self-control? Would you not have been well pleased with the gift, and deemed it a thing worth praying for? Well then submit to this now, not for the sake of a kingdom on earth, but of a kingdom in Heaven; not to receive him back clad in a vesture of gold but robed in immortality and glory such as is fitting for them to have who dwell in Heaven. And if you find the trial very unbearable owing to its long duration, it may be that he will visit you by means of visions and converse with you as he was wont to do, and show you the face for which you yearn: let this be thy consolation taking the place of letters, though indeed it is far more definite than letters. For in the latter case there are but lines traced with the pen to look upon, but in the former you see the form of his visage, and his gentle smile, his figure and his movements, you hear his speech and recognize the voice which you loved so well.

4. But since you mourn also over the loss of security which you formerly enjoyed on his account, and perhaps also for the sake of those great hopes of distinction which were dawning (for I used to hear that he would speedily arrive at the dignity of præfect, and this, I fancy, it is which more especially upsets and distresses thy soul) consider I pray the case of those who have been in a higher official position than his, and yet have brought their life to a very pitiable end. Let me recall them to your memory: you probably know Theodore of Sicily by reputation: for he was one of the most distinguished men; he surpassed all in bodily stature and beauty as well as in the confidence which he enjoyed with the Emperor, and he had more power than any member of the royal household, but he did not bear this prosperity meekly, and having entered into a plot against the Emperor he was taken prisoner and miserably beheaded; and his wife who was not a whit inferior to thy noble self in education and birth and all other respects was suddenly stripped of all her possessions,

Moses shone with such glory as to be intoler-rolled amongst the household slaves, and comable to the eyes of the Israelites, and in the pelled to lead a life more pitiable than any New the face of Christ shone far more bril- bondmaid, having this advantage only over the liantly than his. For tell me if any one had rest that owing to the extreme severity of her promised to make your husband king of all the calamity she moved to tears all who beheld her. And it is said also that Artemisia who was the wife of a man of high reputation, since he also aimed at usurping the throne, was reduced to this same condition of poverty, and also to blindness; for the depth of her despondency, and the abundance of her tears destroyed her sight; and now she has need of persons to lead her by the hand, and to conduct her to the doors of others that she may obtain the necessary supply of food.2 And I might mention many other families which have been brought down in this way did I not know thee to be too pious and prudent in disposition to wish to find consolation for thy own calamity out of the misfortunes of others. And the only reason why I mentioned those instances to which I referred just now was that you might learn that human things are nothingness but that truly as the prophet says "all the glory of man is as the flower of grass." For in proportion to men's elevation and splendour is the ruin wrought for them, not only in the case of those who are under rule, but also of the rulers themselves. For it would be impossible to find any private family which has been immersed in such great calamities as the ills in which the imperial house has been steeped. For untimely loss of parents, and of husbands, and violent forms of death, more outrageous and painful than those which occur in tragedies, especially beset this kind of government.

> Now passing over ancient times, of those who have reigned in our own generation, nine in all, only two have ended their life by a natural death; and of the others one was slain by a usurper,4 one in battle,5 one by a conspiracy of his household guards,6 one by the very man who elected him, and invested him with the purple, and of their wives some, as it is reported, perished by poison, others died of mere sorrow; while of those who still survive one, who has an orphan son, is trembling with alarm lest any of those who are in power dreading what may happen in the future should destroy him; 8 another has reluctantly yielded to much entreaty to return from the exile into

i According to Ammianus Marcellinus, B. xxxiv., this Theodore was a native of Gaul. He is probably called Theodore of Sicily by Chrysostom because he attempted to make himself a tyrant in that island. He was executed for treason in the year 371.

² I have not been able to discover any further information concerning Artemisia or her husband.
³ Is. xl., 2
⁵ Constantine the younger.
⁶ Jovian: there were several other versions of his death. See Gibbon, iv. 221 (Milman's edition). Chrysostom repeats this story in Homily XV., ad Philipper of Callus Cassar (who never became Augustus) by Constantius.
⁸ Widow of Jovian, whose son Varronianus had been deprived of one eye (see Gibbon as above).

which she had been driven by him who held honour, and didst everything necessary for his present rulers the one who has recovered a visits to his grave thou hast no slight consolalittle from her former calamities has much tion of thy sorrow. But these women have sorrow mingled with her joy because the pos- been deprived of all these things, having all sessor of power is still young and inexperienced sent out their husbands to war in the hope of and has many designing men on all sides of receiving them back again, instead of which it him; and the other is ready to die of fear, and has been their lot to receive the bitter tidings spends her time more miserably than criminals of their death. Neither has any one come condemned to death because her husband ever back to them with the bodies of their slain, or since he assumed the crown up to the present bringing anything save a message describing day has been constantly engaged in warfare the manner of their death. And some there and fighting, and is more exhausted by the are who have not even been youchsafed this shame and the reproaches which assail him on record, or been enabled to learn how their all sides than by actual calamities.3 For that husbands fell, as they were buried beneath a which has never taken place has now come to heap of slain in the thick of battle. pass, the barbarians leaving their own country have overrun an infinite space of our territory, perished thus, when even the Emperor himself and that many times over, and having set fire having been blockaded in a certain village with to the land, and captured the towns they are a few soldiers did not dare to go out and opnot minded to return home again, but after the pose the assailants, but remained inside and manner of men who are keeping holiday rather when the enemy had set fire to the building than making war, they laugh us all to scorn; was burnt to death together with all that were and it is said that one of their kings declared therein, not men only, but horses, beams and that he was amazed at the impudence of our walls, so that the whole was turned into a heap soldiers, who although slaughtered more easily of ashes? And this was the tale which they than sheep still expect to conquer, and are not who departed to war with the Emperor brought willing to quit their own country; for he said back to his wife in place of the Emperor himthat he himself was satiated with the work of self.5 For the splendours of the world differ cutting them to pieces. Imagine what the in no-wise whatever from the things which feelings of the Emperor and his wife must be happen on the stage, and the beauty of spring on hearing these words!

war, a great crowd of widows has occurred to even if they have strength to last a little while. me, who in past times derived very great lustre they speedily become ready to decay. For from the honour enjoyed by their husbands, what is more worthless than the honour and but now are all arrayed in a dark mourning glory which is paid by the multitude? what robe and spend their whole time in lamentation. For they had not the advantage which iceable end does it meet? And would that was enjoyed by thy dear self. For thou, my this only was the evil! but in fact besides failexcellent friend, didst see that goodly husband ing to get anything good from the possession, of thine lying on his bed, and didst hear his he who owns this most cruel mistress is conlast words, and receive his instructions as to what should be done about the affairs of the family, and learn how by the provisions of his will they were guarded against every kind of encroachment on the part of rapacious and designing men. And not only this, but also when he was yet lying dead thou didst often fling thyself upon the body, and kiss his eyes, and embrace him, and wail over him, and thou didst see him conducted to burial with much the chief power.' And of the wives of the obsequies, as was fitting, and from frequent

And what wonder if most of the generals flowers. For in the first place they flee away 5. And since I have made mention of this before they have been manifested; and then, fruit has it? what kind of profit? what servtinually forced to bear much which is painful and injurious; for mistress she is of those who own her, and in proportion as she is flattered by her slaves does she exalt herself against them, and ties them down by increasingly harsh commands; but she would never be able to revenge herself on those who despise and neglect her; so much fiercer is she than any tyrant and wild beast. For tyrants and wild animals are often mollified by humouring, but her fury is greatest when we are most complaisant to her, and if she finds any one who will listen to her, and yield to her in everything there is no kind of command from which in future she can be induced to abstain.

¹ Doubtful, possibly first wife of Valentinian I., divorced from

houstful, possing mas the him and sent into exile, 2 Constantia, wife of Gratian.

3 Flacilla, wife of Theodosius. The two emperors who died natural deaths were Constantine the Great, and his son Constantius. Compare this mournful list with the celebrated passage in Shakespeare's Richard II., act III. se. 2.

[&]quot;For Heaven's sake let's sit upon the ground And tell sad stories of the death of kings," etc.

⁴ See Introduction,

⁵ The best account of the destruction of the Emperor Valeos and his army in the battle of Hadrianople A.D. 378, is to be found in Hodgkin's "Italy and her Invaders," vol. i. pp. 120-6 (Clarendon Press, Oxford).

Moreover she has also another ally whom one view to glory. For it is only he who has not would not do wrong to call her daughter. For after she herself has grown to maturity and fairly taken root amongst us, she then produces arrogance, a thing which is no less able than herself to drive the soul of those who possess it into headlong ruin.

6. Tell me then dost thou lament this that God hath reserved thee from such a cruel bondage, and that He has barred every avenue against these pestilential diseases? For whilst thy husband was living they ceased not continually assaulting the thoughts of thy heart, but since his death they have no starting point whence they can lay hold of thy understand-This then is a discipline which ought to be practised in future—to abstain from lamenting the withdrawal of these evils, and from hankering after the bitter tyranny which they exercise. For where they blow a heavy blast they upset all things from the foundation and shatter them to pieces; and just as many highest advantages in addition to those which prostitutes, although by nature ill favoured and ugly, do yet by means of enamels and pigments excite the feelings of the youthful whilst they are still tender, and when they have got them all worldly things. For he who feels no need under their control treat them more insolently than any slave; so also do these passions, vainglory and arrogance, defile the souls of men more than any other kind of pollution.

On this account also wealth has seemed to the majority of men to be a good thing; at least when it is stripped of this passion of vainglory it will no longer seem desirable. At any rate those who have been permitted to obtain empt from change of any kind. And this I in the midst of their poverty popular glory expect will speedily be the case with your own have no longer preferred wealth, but rather have despised much gold when it was bestowed from all worldly interests you will display upon them. And you have no need to learn amongst us a heavenly manner of life, and in from me who these men were, for you know a little while will laugh to scorn the glory them better than I do, Epaminondas, Socrates, which you now lament, and despise its hollow Aristeides, Diogenes, Krates who turned his and vain mask. But if you long for the securown land into a sheep walk. The others indeed, inasmuch as it was not possible for them to get rich, saw glory brought to them in and immunity from the designs of any of those the midst of their poverty, and straightway persons who trample upon the misfortunes of devoted themselves to it, but this man threw others "Cast thy care upon the Lord and He away even what he possessed; so infatuated will nourish thee." 2 "For look," it is said, were they in the pursuit of this cruel monster. Let us not then weep because God has rescued his hope on the Lord and was put to shame, us from this shameful thraldom which is an or who ever called upon Him, and was neobject of derision and of much reproach; for glected, or who ever remained constant to His there is nothing splendid in it save the name commandments and was forsaken?" 3 For He it bears, and in reality it places those who who has alleviated this intolerable calamity, possess it in a position which belies its appella- and placed you even now in a state of trantion, and there is no one who does not laugh quillity will also avert impending evils; for to scorn the man who does anything with a that you will never receive another blow more an eye to this who will be enabled to win respect and glory; but he who sets a great value on popular glory, and does and endures everything for the sake of obtaining it is the very man who will fail to attain it, and be subjected to all the exact opposites of glory, ridicule, and accusation, scoffing, enmity and hatred. And this is wont to happen not only among men, but also among you women, and indeed more especially in your case. For the woman who is unaffected in mien, and gait, and dress, and seeks no honour from any one is admired by all women, and they are ecstatic in their praise and call her blessed, and invoke all manner of good things upon her; but a vain-glorious woman they behold with aversion and detestation, and avoid her like some wild beast and load her with infinite execrations and abuse. And not only do we escape these evils by refusing to accept popular glory, but we shall gain the have been already mentioned, being trained gradually to loosen our hold of earth and move in the direction of heaven, and despise of the honour which comes from men, will perform with security whatever good things he does, and neither in the troubles, nor in the prosperities of this life will he be very seriously affected; for neither can the former depress him, and cast him down, nor can the latter elate and puff him up, but in precarious and troubled circumstances he himself remains exsoul, and having once for all torn yourself away ity which you formerly enjoyed owing to your husband, and the protection of your property, "to past generations and see, who ever placed severe than this you would yourself admit.

¹ Krates was a cynic philosopher, a disciple of Diogenes. He flourished about 330 B.C. He was heir to a large fortune, but bestowed the whole of it upon his native city Thebes. Diogenes Laertius relates many curious stories about him.

Having then so bravely borne present troubles, fidently expected having remained unfulfilled, and this when you were inexperienced, you whereas those which never even entered the will far more easily endure future events should mind have frequently come to pass, and this any of the things contrary to our wishes, which we constantly see occurring everywhere in God forbid, occur. Therefore seek Heaven, cases of governments and kingdoms, and inand all things which conduce to life in the heritances, and marriages. Wherefore even other world, and none of the things here will if the opportunity were very near at hand, yet be able to harm thee, not even the world-ruler as the proverb says "between the cup and the of darkness himself, if only we do not injure lip there is many a slip" and the Scripture ourselves. For if any one deprives us of our saith "from the morning until the evening the substance, or hews our body in pieces, none time is changed." of these things concern us, if our soul abides in its integrity.

designs upon it will be allowed to enter. What tain that if he lived he would arrive at this then is the place? It is Heaven. Send away then belongs to the future thy possessions to that good husband of thine is uncertain, and causes us to have various promised to those who love God, "which eye feetly evident that in any case had he survived hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have he would have obtained this high distinction; with this property there will probably be some quillity; then tell me what is the goal? not is very irrational, when one wishes to buy land, and is seeking for productive ground, if, Heaven being proposed to him instead of it; for it often disappoints our hopes.

was only a human hope, which often falls to that case after long contact with public busithe ground; and we see many things of this kind happening in life, those which were con-

So also a king who is here to-day is dead tomorrow; and again this same wise man illus-7. Now, once for all, if you wish your prop-trating the reversal of men's hopes says erty to abide with you in security and yet "many tyrants have sat down upon the ground, further to increase I will show thee the plan, and one that was never thought of has worn and the place where none of those who have the crown." And it was not absolutely cerand neither thief, nor schemer, nor any other suspicions. For on what grounds was it evidestructive thing will be able to pounce upon dent that had he lived he would have attained them. If you deposit these goods in the other that dignity and that things would not have world, you will find much profit arising from turned out the other way, and that he would For all things which we plant in have lost the office he actually held either from Heaven yield a large and abundant crop, such falling a victim to disease, or from being exas might naturally be expected from things posed to the envy and ill will of those who which have their roots in Heaven. And if wished to excel him in prosperity, or from you do this, see what blessings you will enjoy, suffering some other grievous misfortune. But in the first place eternal life and the things let us suppose, if you please, that it was perthey entered into the heart of man," and in then in proportion to the magnitude of the the second place perpetual intercourse with thy dignity would have been the increased dangers, good husband; and you will relieve yourself and anxieties, and intrigues which he must from the cares and fears, and dangers, and have encountered. Or put these even on one designs, and enmity and hatred which beset side, and let us suppose him to traverse that you here. For as long as you are surrounded sea of difficulties safely, and in much tranto make attempts upon it; but if you transfer that which he has now reached; no, not that, it to Heaven, you will lead a life of security but something different, probably unpleasant and safety, and much tranquillity, enjoying in- and undesirable. In the first place his sight dependence combined with godliness. For it of heaven, and heavenly things would have earth, and the possibility presented of obtain- pure life yet the length of his life and the exiing an estate there he abides still on earth, and gencies of his high office would have prevented puts up with the toils that are connected with his departing in such a pure condition as has now been the case. In fact it is uncertain But since thy soul is grievously upset and whether he might not have undergone many vexed on account of the expectation often en- changes and given way to indolence before he tertained that thy husband would attain the breathed his last. For now we are confident rank of prefect, and the thought that he was that by the grace of God he has taken his untimely snatched away from that dignity con-flight to the region of rest, because he had not sider first of all this fact, that even if this hope committed himself to any of those deeds which was a very well grounded one nevertheless it exclude from the kingdom of Heaven; but in and standing by the side of the King as he nobler kind.

¹ Ecclus, xviii. 26.

ness, he might probably have contracted great gives judgment, and acting as one of His chief defilement. For it is an exceedingly rare thing ministers. Wherefore desisting from mourn-for one who is moving in the midst of such ing and lamentation do thou hold on to the great evils to hold a straight course, but to go same way of life as his, yea even let it be more astray, both wittingly and against his will, is a exact, that having speedily attained an equal natural thing, and one which constantly oc- standard of virtue with him, you may inhabit But, as it is, we have been relieved the same abode and be united to him again from this apprehension, and we are firmly per- through the everlasting ages, not in this union suaded that in the great day he will appear in of marriage but another far better. For this much radiance, shining forth near the King, is only a bodily kind of intercourse, but then and going with the angels in advance of Christ there will be a union of soul with soul more and clad with the robe of unutterable glory, perfect, and of a far more delightful and far

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILIES ON S. IGNATIUS AND S. BABYLAS.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.,

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

ASSISTED BY

REV. T. P. BRANDRAM, M.A.,

RECTOR OF RUMBOLDSWHYKE, CHICHESTER.

INTRODUCTION TO THE HOMILIES ON S. IGNATIUS AND S. BABYLAS.

The following homilies have been selected out of a large number delivered by Chrysostom on the festivals of saints and martyrs, not only because they are good samples of his discourses on such occasions, but also on account of the celebrity of the two saints in whose honour they were spoken. There is really very little known about Ignatius beyond the fact that he was Bishop of Antioch, and suffered martyrdom at Rome in the reign of Trajan about the year 110 A.D.: being torn to death by wild beasts in the colossal amphitheatre erected for the display of such inhuman sports by the emperors of the Flavian dynasty. The tradition that he was a disciple of St. John does not rest on any trustworthy evidence, but on the other hand there is nothing inherently impossible or even improbable in the supposition.

According to a tradition which cannot be traced back earlier than the latter part of the fourth century the reliques were translated from Rome to Antioch and deposited in the Christian cemetery outside the gates called the Daphnitic gate, because it led from the city to the famous suburb of Daphne, on which we shall have more to say presently. It is clear from the following eulogy that Chrysostom accepted this tradition, and his repeated invitation to his hearers to "come hither" to enjoy the beneficent influence of the saint seems to imply that his discourse was delivered in the "martyry," that is the chapel erected to contain the martyr's remains, not in the "Great Church" of Antioch where he commonly preached. In the next generation the reliques of the saint were again translated by the Emperor, the younger Theodosius, to the building which had been the temple of the "Fortune of Antioch," and then the illustrious Christian martyr was substituted for the mythical goddess on the tute-lary genius of the city.

The fame of S. Babylas rivalled and for a time almost threatened to overshadow that of S. Ignatius. He had been Bishop of Antioch from about 237 to 250. The heroic courage with which he had once repulsed the Emperor Philip from the church until he should have submitted to penance for some offence committed, and his martyrdom in the persecution under Decius were his original claims to popular veneration. But some later events shed a fresh lustre on his name. In the year 351 the Cæsar Gallus, brother of Julian, being resident in Antioch, transferred the reliques of Babylas from their resting place within the city to the beautiful suburb the garden or grove of Daphne. "In the history of this spot we have a singular instance of the way in which Grecian legend was transplanted into foreign soil. Daphne the daughter of the river-god Ladon were according to the Syrian version of the myth, overtaken by her lover Apollo near Antioch. Here it was, on the banks not of the Peneus but of the Oronete, that the maiden prayed to her mother earth to open her arms and shelter her from the pursuit of the amorous god, and that the laurel plant sprang out of the spot where she vanished from the eyes of her disappointed lover. The house of Seleucus Nicator, founder of the Syrian monarchy was said to have struck his hoof upon one of the arrows dropped by Apollo in the hurry of his pursuit; in consequence of which the king dedicated the place to the god. A temple was erected in his honour, ample in its proportions, sumptuous in its adornments; the internal walls were resplendent with polished marbles, the lofty ceiling was of cypress wood. The colossal image of the god, enriched with gold and gems, nearly reached the top of the roof. * * * With one hand the deity lightly touched the lyre which hung from his shoulders and in the other he held a golden dish, as if about to pour a libation on the earth "and supplicate the venerable mother to give to his arms the cold and beauteous Daphne.": The whole grove became consecrated to pleasure under the guise of festivity in honor of the god. * * * It contained everything which could gratify and charm the senses; the deep impenetrable shade of cypress trees, the delicious noise and coolness of falling waters, the fragrance of aromatic shrubs;" there were also baths, and grottos, porticoes, and colonnades. Such materials for voluptuous enjoyment told with fatal effect upon the morals of a people addicted at all times to an immoderate indulgence in luxurious pleasure." 2 Daphne became one of those places where gross and shameless vice was practised under the sanction of religion. The intention of Cæsar Gallus in translating the reliques of Babylas to Daphne was as Chrysostom expresses it to "bring a physician to the sick;" to introduce a pure and Christian association into a spot hitherto consecrated to Pagan and licentious rites. The bones of the saint were laid near the shrine of Apollo, and the Christian church standing hard by the heathen temple was a visible warning to any Christian who might visit the place to abstain from deeds abhorrent to the faith for which the bishop had died. But the remains of the martyr were not permitted to rest in peace. When the Emperor Julian visited Antioch 362, he consulted the oracle of Apollo at Daphne respecting the issue of the expedition which he was about to make into Persia. But the oracle was dumb. At length the god yielded to the importunity of prayers and sacrifices so far as to explain the cause of his silence. He was offended by the proximity of dead men. "Break open the sepulchres, take up the bones, and carry them hence." No name was mentioned, but the demand was interpreted as referring to the remains of Babylas, and the wishes of the affronted deity were complied with. The Christians were commanded by Julian to remove the bones of their saint from the neighbourhood of Apollo's sanctuary. They obeyed, but what was intended to be a humiliation was converted into a triumph. The reliques were conveyed to their resting place within the city as in a kind of festive procession, accompanied by crowds along the whole way, four or five miles, chanting the words of the Psalm, "Confounded be all they that worship carved images and delight in vain gods." In vain were some of the Christians seized and tortured. The popularity of the saint grew in proportion as Julian tried to put it down; and the insults done to him were speedily avenged. A fire, mysterious in its origin, broke out soon after the removal of the martyr's reliques in the shrine of Apollo, consuming the roof of the building, and the statue of the god. At the time when Chrysostom preached, about twenty years later, the columns and walls were still standing, the melancholy wreck serving as a memorial and witness of the judgment which had fallen upon the place.

The remains of Babylas were not brought back to Daphne, but removed from the city to a magnificent church built to receive them on the other side of the Orontes. Near the close of his discourse Chrysostom refers to the erection of this church and to the zeal of the Bishop Meletius in promoting it, who actually took part in the work with his own hands, as we are told that Hugh did in the building of the Minster at Lincoln. But although the body of the martyr rested elsewhere, his spirit and influence were supposed to inhabit in a special manner the spot where he had put the heathen deity to silence and shame, and to confer blessings on the pilgrims who resorted in crowds to his martyry in Daphne. The ruined and deserted temple indeed, and the well preserved Christian church thronged with worshippers, standing as they did side by side, formed a striking emblem of the two religions to which they were devoted—the one destined to crumble and vanish away, the other to endure and conquer.

² Gibbon, vol. iv. p. 111. Milman's ed.

CONTENTS.

Edward Hall Mark Cale In the Pid of Advis										PAG
Eulogy on the Holy Martyr Saint Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch			0	٠	٠	٠	٠	٠	*	13
Eulogy on the Holy Martyr Saint Babylas										141

HOMILIES ON S. IGNATIUS AND S. BABYLAS.

EULOGY.

On the holy martyr Saint Ignatius, the god-bearer, arch-bishop of Antioch the great, who was carried off to Rome, and there suffered martyrdom, and thence was conveyed back again to Antioch.

1. Sumptuous and splend identertainers give nor weakness of body, nor age, nor any such frequent and constant entertainments, alike thing could be a hindrance to those who run to display their own wealth, and to show good- in the course of religion; if there be a noble will to their acquaintance. So also the grace readiness, and an eager mind, and a fear of of the Spirit, affording us a proof of his own God, fervent and kindling, be established in our power, and displaying much good-will towards souls. On this account both maidens and the friends of God, sets before us successively women, and men, both young and old, and and constantly the tables of the martyrs. slaves, and freemen, and every rank, and every Lately, for instance, a maiden quite young, age, and each sex, disrobe for those contests, and unmarried, the blessed martyr Pelagia, and in no respect suffer harm, since they have entertained us, with much joy. To-day again, brought a noble purpose to these wrestlings. this blessed and noble martyr Ignatius has The season then already calls us to discourse succeeded to her feast. The persons are dif- of the mighty works of this saint. But our ferent: The table is one. The wrestlings are reckoning is disturbed and confused, not knowvaried: The crown is one. The contests are ing what to say first, what second, what third, manifold: The prize is the same. For in the so great a multitude of things calling for case of the heathen contests, since the tasks eulogy surrounds us, on every side; and we are bodily, men alone are, with reason, ad-experience the same thing as if any one went mitted. But here, since the contest is wholly into a meadow, and seeing many a rosebush concerning the soul, the lists are open to each and many a violet, and an abundance of lilies, sex, for each kind the theatre is arranged, and other spring flowers manifold and varied, Neither do men alone disrobe, in order that should be in doubt what he should look at the women may not take refuge in the weak- first, what second, since each of those he ness of their nature, and seem to have a plau- saw invites him to bestow his glances on sible excuse, nor have women only quitted itself. For we too, coming to this spiritual themselves like men, lest the race of men be meadow of the mighty works of Ignatius, and put to shame; but on this side and on that beholding not the flowers of spring, but the many are proclaimed conquerors, and are manifold and varied fruit of the spirit in the crowned, in order that thou mayest learn by soul of this man, are confused and in perplex-means of the exploits themselves that in Christ ity, not knowing to which we are first to give Jesus neither male nor female,2 neither sex, our consideration, as each of the things we see draws us away from its neighbours, and entices sumed by Ignatius, perhaps at the time of his conversion or baptism. Legendary interpretations of it afterwards arose, which varied according as it was understood in an active or passive sense, the "god-bearer" or the "god-borne." See Bishop Lightfoot's among us nobly, and with such carefulness as Christ desires. For that which Christ declared the sheep.

and drank of spiritual fountains. What kind according to the teaching, that he may be able of person then is it likely that he was who had both to exhort in the sound doctrine, and to been reared, and who had everywhere held convict the gainsayers;" 3 and to Timothy converse with them, and had shared with them again, when writing upon this subject, he says truths both lawful and unlawful to utter, and somewhat like this: "If a man seeketh the who seemed to them worthy of so great a dignity? The time again came on, which demanded courage; and a soul which despised all proach, the husband of one wife, temperate, things present, glowed with Divine love, and sober-minded, orderly, given to hospitality, valued things unseen before the things which apt to teach, no brawler, no striker, but gentle, are seen; and he lay aside the flesh with as not contentious, no lover of money. Dost much ease as one would put off a garment. thou see what strictness of virtue he demands What then shall we speak of first? The teaching of the apostles which he gave proof of throughout, or his indifference to this present if he be about to furnish an original likeness life, or the strictness of his virtue, with which of the royal form, works with all accuracy, so he administered his rule over the Church: that all who are copying it, and painting from which shall we first call to mind? The martyr it, may have a likeness accurately drawn, so acor the bishop or the apostle. For the grace of the spirit having woven a threefold crown, thus bound it on his holy head, yea rather a manifold crown. For if any one will consider them carefully, he will find each of the crowns, office of bishop complete, in order that each blossoming with other crowns for us.

praise of his episcopate. Does this seem to with just such strictness. be one crown alone? come, then, let us unfold Boldly, therefore, would I say that Ignatius showing this said, "Whether therefore they, or I, so we preach." This man, then, writing men's sins." What dost thou say? Has an-

to be the highest standard and rule of the to Titus, and showing what kind of man the Episcopal office, did this man display by his bishop ought to be, says, "For the bishop must deeds. For having heard Christ saying, the be blameless as God's steward; not self-willed, good shepherd layeth down his life for the not soon angry, no brawler, no striker, not sheep, with all courage he did lay it down for greedy of filthy lucre; but given to hospitality, a lover of good, sober-minded, just, holy, tem-He held true converse with the apostles perate, holding to the faithful word, which is of those who mount to that dignity, looking 2. And if you will, let us come first to the thereupon, may administer their own affairs it in speech, and you will see both two, and took an accurate impression of the whole of three, and more produced from it. For I do this, in his own soul; and was blameless and not wonder at the man alone that he seemed without reproach, and neither self-willed, nor to be worthy of so great an office, but that he soon angry, nor given to wine, nor a striker, obtained this office from those saints, and that but gentle, not contentious, no lover of money, the hands of the blessed apostles touched his just, holy, temperate, holding to the faithful sacred head. For not even is this a slight word which is according to the teaching, sober, thing to be said in his praise, nor because he won greater grace from above, nor only because hey caused more abundant energy of the this?" says one. They who said these things Spirit to come upon him, but because they ordained him, and they who suggest to others bore witness that every virtue possessed by with so great strictness to make proof of those man was in him. Now how this is, I tell you.

Paul writing to Titus once on a time—and when I say Paul, I do not speak of him alone, but also of Peter and James and John, and virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not themselves have done this virtue planted in the soul of this martyr would not the soul of this martyr would not the soul of the the whole band of them; for as in one lyre, not have entrusted him with this office. the strings are different strings, but the har- For they knew accurately how great danger mony is one, so also in the band of the apos- besets those who bring about such ordinatles the persons are different, but the teach- tions, carelessly and hap-hazard. And Paul ing is one, since the artificer is one, I mean the again, when showing this very thing to the Holy Spirit, who moves their souls, and Paul same Timothy wrote and says, "Lay hands sud-other sinned, and do I share his blame and his heavy voke, continually oppress and afflict the punishment? Yes, says he, the man who author-neck of their soul. Hear at least how Paul, izes evil; and just as in the case of any one entrusting into the hands of a raging and inabout these. "For who, saith he, is weak, sane person a sharply pointed sword, with and I am not weak? who is offended, and I which the madman commits murder, that man burn not?" 3 and again, "I fear lest when I who gave the sword incurs the blame; so any come I shall find you not such as I would, one who gives the authority which arises from and I be found of you such as ye would not." this office to a man living in evil, draws down and a little afterwards, "Lest when I come on his own head all the fire of that man's again to you, God humble me, and I shall sins and audacity. For he who provides the mourn many of those who have sinned before, root, this man is the cause of all that springs and have not repented of their uncleanness, from it on every side. Dost thou see how in and wantonness, and fornication which they the meanwhile a double crown of the episco- have committed." 5 And throughout thou pate has appeared, and how the dignity of seest that he is in tears and lamentations on those who ordained him has made the office account of members of the household, and more illustrious, bearing witness to every ex- evermore fearing and trembling for the behibition of virtue in him?

you another crown springing from this very board safe to shore when the sea is calm, and thing to administer the Church now as then, tending, and the passengers themselves within just as it is not the same thing to travel along in revolt, and a great storm within and withwithout, nay rather much more. For the they, he says: "Others have laboured, and ye fightings without, and the plottings, afforded have entered into their labour." 6 And yet the much pleasure to them on account of the hope apostles toiled much more than the prophets. of the rewards awaiting them. On this ac- But since they first sowed the word of piety, count the apostles returned from the presence of and won over the untaught souls of men to the beaten; and Paul cries out, saying: "I rejoice in them. For it is by no means the same thing for my sufferings," and he glories in his afflictions one to come and teach after many teachers, and everywhere. But the wounds of those at home, bition of virtue in him?

3. Do you wish that I should also reveal to when he is able to bring those who are on matter? Let us consider the time at which he the ship is borne along by favourable winds, but obtained this dignity. For it is not the same when the deep is raging and the waves cona road well trodden, and prepared, after many out besets those who are on board, and he is wayfarers; and along one about to be cut for able to steer the ship with all security; so we the first time, and containing ruts, and stones, ought to wonder at, and admire those who and full of wild beasts, and which has never then had the Church committed to their hands, yet, received any traveller. For now, by the much more than those who now have the grace of God, there is no danger for bishops, management of it; when there was a great but deep peace on all sides, and we all enjoy war without and within, when the plant of the a calm, since the Word of piety has been ex- faith was more tender, and needed much care, tended to the ends of the world, and our rulers when, as a newly-born babe, the multitude in keep the faith with strictness. But then there the church required much forethought, and the was nothing of this, but wherever any one greatest wisdom in any soul destined to nurse might look, precipices and pitfalls, and wars, it; and in order that ye may more clearly and fightings, and dangers; both rulers, and learn, how great crowns they were worthy of, kings, and people and cities and nations, and who then had the Church entrusted to them, men at home and abroad, laid snares for the and how great work and danger there was in faithful. And this was not the only serious undertaking the matter on the threshold and thing, but also the fact that many of the be at the beginning, and in being the first to enlievers themselves, inasmuch as they tasted ter upon it, I bring forward for you the testifor the first time strange doctrines, stood in mony of Christ, who pronounces a verdict on need of great indulgence, and were still in a these things, and confirms the opinion which somewhat feeble condition and were often up- has been expressed by me. For when he saw set. And this was a thing which used to many coming to him, and was wishing to show grieve the teachers, no less than the fightings the apostles that the prophets toiled more than the Sanhedrin rejoicing because they had been truth, the greater part of the work is credited to himself to be the first to sow seeds. For that and the falls of the brethren, do not suffer them which has been already practised, and has beto breathe again, but always, like some most come customary with many, would be easily who comes to it by experience.

accepted; but that which is now for the first more than these; but in order that we may time heard, agitates the mind of the hearers, not, by spending the whole time on the conand gives the teacher a great deal to do. This sideration of the episcopate, miss the details at least it was which disturbed the audience about the martyr, come from this point, let at Athens, and on this account they turned us pass to that conflict. At one time a grievaway from Paul, reproaching him with, ous warfare was rekindled against the Church, "Thou bringest certain strange things to our and as though a most grievous tyranny overears." For if the oversight of the Church now spread the earth, all were carried off from the furnishes much weariness and work to those midst of the market-place. Not indeed charged who govern it, consider how double and treble with anything monstrous, but because being and manifold was the work then, when there freed from error, they hastened to piety; bewere dangers and fighting and snares, and cause they abstained from the service of defear continually. It is not possible to set mons, because they recognized the true God, forth in words the difficulty which those saints and worshipped his only begotten Son, and for then encountered, but he alone will know it things for which they ought to have been crowned, and admired and honoured, for these 4. And I will speak of a fourth crown, arising they were punished and encountered countless for us out of this episcopate. What then is this? tortures, all who embraced the faith, and much The fact that he was entrusted with our own more they who had the oversight of the native city. For it is a laborious thing indeed churches. For the devil, being crafty, and to have the oversight of a hundred men, and apt to contrive plots of this kind, expected of fifty alone. But to have on one's hands so that if he took away the shepherds, he would great a city, and a population extending to two easily be able to scatter the flocks. But He hundred thousand, of how great virtue and who takes the wise in their craftiness, wishing wisdom dost thou think there is a proof? For to show him that men do not govern His as in the care of armies, the wiser of the gen-church, but that it is He himself who everyerals have on their hands the more leading where tends those who believe on Him, agreed and more numerous regiments, so, accord- that this should be, that he might see, when ingly, in the care of cities. The more able of they were taken away, that the cause of piety the rulers are entrusted with the larger and was not defeated, nor the word of preaching more populous. And at any rate this city was quenched, but rather increased; that by these of much account to God, as indeed He manivery works he might learn both himself, and fested by the very deeds which He did. At all all those who minister to him, that our affairs events the master of the whole world. Peter, are not of men, but that the subject of our to whose hands He committed the keys of teaching has its root on high, from the heavheaven, whom He commanded to do and to ens; and that it is God who everywhere leads bear all. He bade tarry here for a long period. the Church, and that it is not possible for him Thus in His sight our city was equivalent to who fights against God, ever to win the day. the whole world. But since I have mentioned But the Devil did not only work this evil, but Peter, I have perceived a fifth crown woven another also not less than this. For not only from him, and this is that this man succeeded in the cities over which they presided, did he to the office after him. For just as any one suffer the Bishops to be slaughtered; but he taking a great stone from a foundation hastens took them into foreign territory and slew them; by all means to introduce an equivalent to it, and he did this, in anxiety at once to take lest he should shake the whole building, and them when destitute of friends, and hoping to make it more unsound, so, accordingly, render them weaker with the toil of their when Peter was about to depart from here, the journey, which accordingly he did with this grace of the Spirit introduced another teacher saint. For he called him away from our city equivalent to Peter, so that the building al- to Rome, making the course twice as long, exready completed should not be made more pecting to depress his mind both by the length unsound by the insignificance of the successor. of the way and the number of the days, and We have reckoned up then five crowns, from not knowing that having Jesus with him, as a the importance of the office, from the dignity fellow traveller, and fellow exile on so long a of those who ordained to it, from the difficulty journey, he rather became the stronger, and of the time, from the size of the city, from afforded more proof of the power that was the virtue of him who transmitted the episco- with him, and to a greater degree knit the pate to him. Having woven all these, it was Churches together. For the cities which were lawful to speak of a sixth, and seventh, and on the road running together from all sides, encouraged the athlete, and sped him on his way with many supplies, sharing in his conflict

Acts xvii. 20.

by their prayers, and intercessions. And they derived no little comfort when they saw the martyr hastening to death with so much readiness, as is consistent in one called to the realms which are in the heaven, and by means of the works themselves, by the readiness and by the joyousness of that noble man, that it was not death to which he was hastening, but a kind of long journey and migration from this world, and ascension to heaven; and he departed teaching these things in every city, both by his words, and by his deeds, and as happened in the case of the Jews, when they bound Paul, and sent him to Rome, and thought that they were sending him to death, they were sending a teacher to the Jews who dwelt there. This indeed accordingly happened in the case of Ignatius in larger measure. For not to those alone who dwell in Rome, but to all the cities lying in the intervening space, he went forth as a wonderful teacher, persuading them to despise the present life, and to think naught of the things which are seen, and to love those which are to come, to look towards heaven, and to pay no regard to any of the terrors of this present life. For on this and on more than this, by means of his works, he went on his way instructing them, as a sun rising from the east, and hastening to the west. But rather more brilliant than this, for this is wont to run on high, bringing material light, but Ignatius shone below, imparting to men's souls the intellectual light of doctrine. And that light on departing into the regions of the west, is hidden and straightway causes the night to come But this on departing to the regions of the west, shone there more brilliantly, conferring the greatest benefits to all along the road. And when he arrived at the city, even that he instructed in Christian wisdom. For on this account God permitted him there to end his life, so that this man's death might be instructive to all who dwell in Rome. For we by the grace of God need henceforward no evidence, being rooted in the faith. But they who dwelt in Rome, inasmuch as these was great impiety there, required more help. On this account both Peter and Paul, and this man after them, were all slain there, partly, indeed, in order that they might purify with their own blood, the city which had been defiled with blood of idols, and partly in order that they might by their works afford a proof of the resurrection of the crucified Christ, persuading those who dwell in Rome, that they would not with so much pleasure disdain this present life, did they not firmly persuade themselves that they were about to ascend to the crucified Jesus, and to see him in the heavens.

For in reality it is the greatest proof of the resurrection that the slain Christ should show forth so great power after death, as to persuade living men to despise both country and home and friends, and acquaintance and life itself, for the sake of confessing him, and to choose in place of present pleasures, both stripes and dangers and death. For these are not the achievements of any dead man, nor of one remaining in the tomb but of one risen and living,. Since how couldest thou account, when he was alive, for all the Apostles who companied with him becoming weaker through fear to betray their teachers and to flee and depart; but when he died, for not only Peter and Paul, but even Ignatius, who had not even seen him, nor enjoyed his companionship, showing such earnestness as to lay down life itself for his sake?

5. In order then that all who dwell in Rome might learn that these things are a reality, God allowed that there the saint should be perfected, and that this was the reason I will guarantee from the very manner of his death. For not outside the walls, in a dungeon, nor even in a court of justice, nor in some corner, did he receive the sentence which condemned him, but in the midst of the theatre, while the whole city was seated above him, he underwent this form of martyrdom, wild beasts being let loose upon him, in order that he might plant his trophy against the Devil, beneath the eyes of all, and make all spectators emulous of his own conflicts. Not dying thus nobly only, but dying even with pleasure. For not as though about to be severed from life, but as called to a better and more spiritual life, so he beheld the wild beasts gladly. Whence is this manifest? From the words which he uttered when about to die, for when he heard that this manner of punishment awaited him, "may I have joy," said he, "of these wild beasts." 2 For such are the loving. For they receive with pleasure whatever they may suffer for the sake of those who are beloved, and they seem to have their desire satisfied when what happens to them is more than usually Which happened, therefore, in grievous. this man's case. For not by his death alone, but also by his readiness he studied to emulate the apostles, and hearing that they, after they had been scourged retired with joy, himself too wished to imitate his teachers, not only by his death, but by his joy. On this account he said, "may I have joy of thy wild beasts." and much milder than the tongue of the tyrant did he consider the mouths of these; and very reasonably. For while that invited him to Gehenna, their mouths escorted him to a kingdom. When, therefore, he made an end of life there, yea rather, when he ascended to heaven, he departed henceforward crowned. For this also happened through the dispensation of God, that he restored him again to us, and distributed the martyr to the cities. that city received his blood as it dropped, but ye were honoured with his remains, ye enjoyed his episcopate, they enjoyed his martyrdom. They saw him in conflict, and victorious, and crowned, but ye have him continually. For a little time God removed him from you, and with greater glory granted him again to you. And as those who borrow money, return with interest what they receive, so also God, using this valued treasure of yours, for a little while, and having shown it to that city, with greater brilliancy gave it back to you. Ye sent forth a Bishop, and received a martyr; ye sent him forth with prayers, and ye received him with crowns; and not only ye, but all the cities which intervene. For how do ye think that they behaved when they saw his remains being brought back? What pleasure was produced! how they rejoiced! with what applause on all sides they beset the crowned one! For as with a noble athlete, who has wrestled down all his antagonists, and who comes forth with radiant glory from the arena, the spectators receive him, and do not suffer him to tread the earth, bringing him home on their shoulders, and besetting him with countless praises: so also the cities in order receiving this saint then from Rome, and bearing him upon their shoulders as far as this city, escorted the crowned one with praises, celebrating the champion, in song; laughing the Devil to scorn, because his artifice was turned against him, and what he thought to do against the martyr, this turned out for his behoof. Then, indeed, he profited, and encouraged all the cities; and from that time to this day he enriches this city, and as some perpetual treasure, drawn upon every day, yet not failing, makes all who partake of it more prosperous, so also this blessed Ignatius filleth those who come to him with blessings, with boldness, pobleness of spirit, and much courage, and so sendeth them home.

Sc., suffer a martyr's death.
2 Quoted from Epistle of Ignatius to the Romans, c. v.

Not only to-day, therefore, but every day let us go forth to him, plucking spiritual fruits from him. For it is, it is possible for him who comes hither with faith to gather the fruit of many good things. For not the bodies only, but the very sepulchres of the saints have been filled with spiritual grace. For if in the case of Elisha this happened, and a corpse when it touched the sepulchre, burst the bands of death and returned to life again,' much rather now, when grace is more abundant, when the energy of the spirit is greater, is it possible that one touching a sepulchre, with faith, should win great power; thence on this account God allowed us the remains of the saints, wishing to lead by them us to the same emulation, and to afford us a kind of haven, and a secure consolation for the evils which are ever overtaking us. Wherefore I beseech you all, if any is in despondency, if in disease, if under insult, if in any other circumstance of this life, if in the depth of sins, let him come hither with faith, and he will lay aside all those things, and will return with much joy, having procured a lighter conscience from the sight alone. But more, it is not only necessary that those who are in affliction should come hither, but if any one be in cheerfulness, in glory, in power, in much assurance towards God, let not this man despise the benefit. coming hither and beholding this saint, he will keep these noble possessions unmoved, persuading his own soul to be moderate by the recollection of this man's mighty deeds, and not suffering his conscience by the mighty deeds to be lifted up to any self conceit. And it is no slight thing for those in prosperity not to be puffed up at their good fortune, but to know how to bear their prosperity with moderation, so that the treasure is serviceable to all, the resting place is suitable, for the fallen, in order that they may escape from their temptations, for the fortunate, that their success may remain secure, for those in weakness indeed, that they may return to health, and for the healthy, that they may not fall into weakness. Considering all which things, let us prefer this way of spending our time, to all delight, all pleasure, in order that rejoicing at once, and profiting, we may be able to become partakers with these saints, both of their dwelling and of their home, through the prayers of the saints themselves, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, with whom be glory to the Father with the Holy Spirit, now and always forever and ever amen.

^{1 2} Kings xili. 21.

ON THE HOLY MARTYR, S. BABYLAS.

I promised you when I was lately here. But what am I to do? In the meanwhile, the blessed Babylas has appeared, and has called me to himself, uttering no voice, but attracting our attention by the brightness of his countenance. Be ye not, therefore, displeased at the delay in my payment; at all events, the longer the time is, the more the interest will increase. For we will deposit this money with interest.1 Since thus did the master command who entrusted it to us. Being confident, therefore, about what is lent, that both the principal and the profit await you, let us not pass by the gain which falls in our way to-day, but revel in the noble actions of the blessed Baby-

How, indeed, he presided over the Church which is among us, and saved that sacred ship, in storm, and in wave, and billow; and what a bold front he showed to the emperor, and how he lay down his life for the sheep and underwent that blessed slaughter; these things and such as these, we will leave to the elder among our teachers, and to our common father, to speak of. For the more remote matters, the aged can relate to you but as many things as happened lately, and within our lifetime, these, I a young man will relate to you, I mean those after death, those after the burial of the martyr, those which happened while he remained in the suburbs of the city. And I know indeed that the Greeks will laugh at my promise, if I promise to speak of the noble deeds after death and burial of one who was buried, and had crumbled to dust. We shall not assuredly on this account keep silence, but on this very account shall especially speak, in order that by showing this marvel truly, we may turn their laughter upon their own head. For of an ordinary man there would be no noble deeds after death. But of a martyr, many and great deeds, not in order that he might become more illustrious (for he has no need of glory from the multitude), but that thou, the unbeliever mayest learn that the death of the martyrs is not death, but the beginning of a better life, and the prelude of a more spiritual conversation, and a change from the worse to the better. Do not then look at the fact, that the mere body of the martyr lies destitute of energy of soul; but observe this, that a greater power takes its place by the side of it, different from the soul itself-I mean the grace of

I. I was anxious to-day to pay the debt which | the Holy Spirit, which pleads to all on behalf of the resurrection, by means of the wonders which it works. For if God has granted greater power to bodies dead and crumbled to dust, than to all living, much more will he grant to them a better life than the former, and a longer, at the time of the bestowal of his crowns; what then are this saint's noble deeds? But be not disturbed, if we take our discourse a little further back. For they who wish to display their portraits to advantage, do not uncover them until they have placed the spectators a little way off from the picture, making the view clearer by the distance. Do you then also have patience with me while I direct my discourse into the past.

> For when Julian who surpassed all in impiety, ascended the imperial throne, and grasped the despotic sceptre, straightway he lifted up his hands against the God who created him, and ignored his benefactor, and looking from the earth beneath to the heavens, howled after the manner of mad dogs, who alike bay at those who do not feed them and those who do feed them. But he rather was mad with a more savage madness than theirs. For they indeed turn from, and hate their friends and strangers alike. But this man used to fawn upon demons, strangers to his salvation, and used to worship them with every mode of worship. But his benefactor, and Saviour, and him who spared not the only Begotten, for his sake, he turned from and used to hate, and made havoc of the cross, the very thing which uplifted the whole world when it was lying prostrate, and drave away the darkness on all sides, and brought in light more brilliant than the sunbeams; nor yet even then did he desist from his frenzy, but promised that he would tear the nation of the Galilæans, out of the midst of the world; for thus he was wont to call us; and yet if he thought the names of the Christians an abomination, and Christianity itself to be full of much shame, for what reason did he not desire to put us to shame by that means, but with a strange name? Yea because he knew clearly, that to be called by what belongs to Christ, is a great ornament not only to men, but to angels, and to the powers above. On this account he set everything in motion, so as to strip us of this ornament, and put a stop to the preaching of it. But this was impossible, O wretched and miserable man! as it was impossible to destroy the heaven and to quench the sun, and to shake and cast down the foundations of the earth, and those things

¹ Luke xix, 23.

Christ foretold, thus saying: "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

Well, thou dost not submit to Christ's words; accept therefore the utterance which thus his deeds give. For I indeed having been privileged to know what the declaration of God is, how strong, how invincible a thing, have believed that is more trustworthy than the order of nature, and than experience in all matters. But do thou still creeping on the ground, and agitated with the investigations of human reasoning, receive the witness of the deeds. I gainsay nothing. I strive not.

2. What then do the deeds say? Christ said that it was easier for heaven and earth to be destroyed, than for any of his words to fail.2 The emperor contradicted these words, and threatened to destroy his decrees. Where then is the emperor who threatened these things? He is perished and is corrupted, and is now in Hades, awaiting the inevitable punishment. But where is Christ who uttered these decrees? In Heaven, on the right hand of the Father, occupying the highest throne of glory; where are the blasphemous words of the Emperor, and his unchastened tongue? They are become ashes, and dust and the food of worms. Where is the sentence of Christ? It shines forth by the very truth of the deed, receiving its lustre from the issue of the events, as from a golden column. And yet the emperor left nothing undone, when about to raise war against us, but used to call prophets together, and summon sorcerers, and everything was full of demons and evil spirits.

What then was the return for this worship? The overturning of cities, the bitterest famine of all famines. For ye know doubtless, and remember, how empty indeed the market place was of wares, and the workshops full of confusion, when everyone strove to snatch up what came first and to depart. And why do I speak of famine, when the very fountains of waters were failing, fountains which by the abundance of their stream, used to eclipse the rivers. But since I have mentioned the fountains, come, forthwith, let us go up to Daphne, and conduct our discourse to the noble deeds of the martyr. Although you desire me still to parade the indecencies of the Greeks, although I too desire this, let us abstain; for wherever the commemoration of a martyr is, there certainly also is the shame of the Greeks. This emperor then, going up to Daphne used to weary Apollo, praying, supplicating, entreating, so that the events of the future might be foretold to him. What then did the prophet, the great God of the Greeks? "The dead prevent me from uttering," saith he, "but break open the graves, dig up the bones, move the dead.' What could be more impious than these commands? The Demon of grave-robbing, introduces strange laws and devises new methods of expelling strangers. Who ever heard of the dead being driven forth? who ever saw lifeless bodies ordered to be moved as he commanded, overturning from their foundations the common laws of nature. For the laws of nature are common to all men, that he who departs this life should be hidden in the earth, and delivered over for burial, and be covered up in the bosom of the earth the mother of all; and these laws, neither Greek, barbarian, Scythian, nor if there be any more savage than they, ever changed, but all reverence them, and keep them, and thus they are sacred and venerated by all. But the Demon raises his mask, and with bare head, resists the common laws of nature. For the dead, he says, are a pollution. The dead are not a pollution, a most wicked demon, but a wicked intention is an abomination. But if one must say something startling, the bodies of the living full of evil, are more polluting than those of the dead. For the one minister to the behests ofthe mind, but the other lie unmoved. Now that which is unmoved, and destitute of all perception would be free from all accusation. Not that I even would say that the bodies of the living are by nature polluting; but that everywhere a wicked and perverted intention is open to accusations from all.

The dead body then is not a pollution O Apollo, but to persecute a maiden who wishes to be modest, and to outrage the dignity of a virgin, and to lament at the failure of the shameless deed, this is worthy of accusation, and punishment. There were at all events, many wonderful and great prophets among ourselves, who spake also many things concerning the future, and they in no case used to bid those who asked them to dig up the bones of the departed. Yea Ezekiel standing near the bones themselves was not only not hindered by them, but added flesh, and nerves and skin to them, and brought them back to life again.3 But the great Moses did not stand near the bones of the dead, but bearing off the whole dead body of Joseph, thus foretold things to come.4 And very reasonably, for their words were the grace of the Holy Spirit. But the words of these, a deceit, and a lie which is no wise able to be concealed. For that these things were an excuse, and pretence and that he feared the blessed Babylas, is manifest from what the emperor did. For leaving all the other dead, he only moved that martyr. And yet if he did these things, in disgust at him, and the bedchambers were destitute of maidto the city.

even dared to put the roof on to the temple handled stone, and dragged a rope, and listened, was divinely sent, and he feared lest by form- who wanted to erect any building, For he ing any further plan, he should call down that knew, he knew what rewards lie in store for endured to see the shrine of Apollo brought to continued doing service to the martyrs, not so great desolation; For there was no other only by splendid buildings nor even by contincause, on account of which he did not rectify ual feasts, but by a better method than these. us, to those men which shall be hereafter, they of beasts, but this man bore off the most declare everything by their appearance, the dangerous of our passions, anger. For all wrestling, the struggle, the victory of the these things let us give thanks to God, because martyr. For it is likely that he who dwells far he hath thus granted us noble martyrs, and off from the suburb, when he sees the chapel pastors worthy of martyrs, for the perfecting of of the saint deprived of a shrine, and the tem- the saints, for the edifying of the body of ple of Apollo deprived of its roof would ask Christ 3 with whom be glory, honor, and might the reason of each of these things; and then to the Father, with the Holy and lifegiving after learning the whole history would depart Spirit, now and always, for ever and ever. hence. Such are the noble deeds of the mar- Amen. tyr after death, wherefore I count your city this holy man. For then, when he returned from Daphne, all our city poured forth into the road, and the market places were empty of men, and the houses were empty of women, one of the houses were empty of the house were emp and not in fear, it were necessary that he ens. Thus also every age and each sex passed should order the coffin to be broken, thrown forth from the city, as if to receive a father into the sea, carried to the desert, be made to long absent who was returning from sojourn disappear by some other method of destruc- far away. And you indeed gave him back to tion; for this is the part of one who is dis- the band of fellow enthusiasts. But the grace gusted. Thus God did when he spake to the of God did not suffer him to remain there for Hebrews about the abominations of the Gen- good, but again removed him beyond the tiles. He bade their statues to be broken, not river, so that many parts of the country were to bring their abominations from the suburbs filled with the sweet savor of the martyr. Neither even when he came hither was he 3. The martyr then was moved, but the destined to be alone, but he quickly received, demon not even then enjoyed freedom from a neighbor, and a fellow-lodger, and one of fear, but straightway learned that it is pos- similar life.2 For he shared with him the same sible to move the bones of a martyr, but dignity, and for the sake of religion shewed not to escape his hands. For as soon as the forth equal boldness. Wherefore he obtained coffin was drawn into the city, a thunderbolt the same abode as he, this wonderful man came from above upon the head of his image, being no vain imitator, as it seems, of the and burnt it all up. And yet, if not before, martyr. For for so long a time he laboured then at least there was likelihood that the im- there, sending letters continually to the empious emperor would be angry, and that he peror, wearying the authorities, and bringing would send forth his anger against the testi- the ministry of the body to bear upon the mony of the martyr. But not even then did martyr. For ye know, doubtless, and rememhe dare, so great fear possessed him. But ber that when the midday summer sun posalthough he saw that the burning was intolera- sessed the heaven, he together with his acble, and knew the cause accurately; he kept quaintances, used to walk thither everyday, quiet. And this is not only wonderful that he not as spectator only, but also, as intending to did not destroy the testimony, but that he not be a sharer in what was going on. For he often again. For he knew, he knew, that the stroke in advance of the workmen themselves, to one fire upon his own head. On this account he him for these things. And on this account he that which had happened, but fear alone. For And what is this? He imitates their life, which reason he unwillingly kept quiet, and emulates their courage, throughout according knowing this left as much reproach to the to his ability he keeps the image of the martyrs demon, as distinction to the martyr. For the alive, in himself. For see, they gave their walls are now standing, instead of trophies, bodies to the slaughter, he has mortified the uttering a voice clearer than a trumpet. To members of his flesh which are upon the earth. those in Daphne, to those in the city, to those They stopped the flame of fire, he quenched who arrive from far off, to those who are with the flame of lust. They fought against the teeth

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY

CONCERNING LOWLINESS OF MIND; AND COMMENTARY ON PHILIPPIANS I. 18

TRANSLATED BY

R. BLACKBURN, M.A.,

RECTOR OF SELHAM, SUSSEX, AND LATE FELLOW OF BRASENOSE COLLEGE, OXFORD.

CONTENTS.

														PAGE
Ι.	How much good there is in humility, and how much	ı ev	il i	n a	rrc	gai	nce							147
2.	The uselessness of other virtues without humility													148
3.	Misinterpretation of the passage in Philipp. i. 18.													148
4.	The circumstances under which St. Paul wrote that	Ep	ist	le										149
5.	His tender care for all his converts													150
6.	Examples of this													150
7.	Love knows no distinctions of rank and is insensible	to:	fe:	ar										151
8.	St. Paul's captivity a source of encouragement to his	s di	sci	ple	S.									151
9.	The true meaning of the passage in Philipp. i. 18.													152
10.	How St. Paul turned evil to good account													152
II.	An exhortation to prayer									٠.				153
12.	The efficacy of persevering prayer													153
	A warning against despondency

CONCERNING LOWLINESS OF MIND.

HOMILY.

AGAINST THOSE WHO IMPROPERLY USE THE APOSTOLIC DECLARATION WHICH SAYS, "WHETHER IN PRETENCE, OR IN SINCERITY, CHRIST IS PREACHED:" (Phil. i. 18), AND ABOUT HUM-BLENESS OF MIND.

INTRODUCTION.

THERE is an allusion at the beginning of this Homily to some remarks recently made on the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican. These occur in Chrysostom's fifth Homily against the Anomeans, one of a set of Homilies which, from internal evidence, may be assigned to the close of the year 386, or beginning of 387. The following homily therefore was delivered at Antioch, probably just before Christmas 386. There were some persons who explained the words of St. Paul cited in the title as signifying that provided Christ was preached it mattered not whether the actual doctrines taught were true or heretical. The main object of the homily is to vindicate the language of the Apostle from this erroneous and mischievous interpretation.

isee and the publican, and hypothetically this account Paul also exhorts and says "Let yoked two chariots out of virtue and vice, we each one prove his own work; and then he pointed out each truth, how great is the gain will have his ground of boasting for himself, of humbleness of mind, and how great the and not for the other." Whereas he publicly damage of pride. For this, even when con- came forward 3 as an accuser of the whole joined with righteousness and fastings and world; and said that he himself was better tithes, fell behind; while that, even when than all living men. And yet even if he had yoked with sin, out-stripped the Pharisee's set himself before ten only, or if five, or if pair, even although the charioteer it had was a two, or if one, not even was this endurable; poor one. For what was worse than the pub but as it was, he not only set himself before lican? But all the same since he made his the whole world, but also accused all men. soul contrite, and called himself a sinner; On this account he fell behind in the running. which indeed he was; he surpassed the Phar- And just as a ship, after having run through isee, who had both fastings to tell of and innumerable surges, and having escaped many tithes; and was removed from any vice. On storms, then in the very mouth of the harbour account of what, and through what? Because having been dashed against some rock, loses even if he was removed from greed of gain and robbery, he had rooted over his soul 2 the

I. When lately we made mention of the Phar-I mother of all evils—vain-glory and pride. On the whole treasure which is stowed away in herso truly did this Pharisee, after having undergone the labours of the fasting, and of all the

¹ Chrysostom is referring to his Homily "on the incomprehensible: against the Anomeans," ν. 6, 7. ""or playera δυσ ποιγρον το δρόφος κ.τ.λ., "the Pharisee's pair of horses being Righteousness and Pride; the publican's, Sin and Humility.

2 Έκτι της ψυχής. The fibres spreading and entwining over it. Home strength of the spreading the strength of the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the strength of the spreading that the sprea rest of his virtue, since he did not master his placed on the sand.5 For there is no one, no tongue, in the very harbour underwent ship- one of our good deeds, which does not need wreck of his cargo.' For the going home from this; there is no one which separate from this prayer, whence he ought to have derived gain, will be able to stand. But even if thou having rather been so greatly damaged, is nothing else than undergoing shipwreck in ity, even if despising of money, even if anyharbour.

even if we should have mounted to the very pinnacle of virtue, let us consider ourselves with us,6 in words, in deeds, in thoughts, and last of all; having learned that pride is able to with this let us build these (graces). cast down even from the heavens themselves are conscious to themselves of many good own salvation—to this let us direct our disqualities, yet humble their own souls, how course. What then is this saying? "Whether great crowns will they not win. For when in pretence," it says, "or in sincerity, Christ sinfulness be put together with humbleness of is preached." This many wrest absolutely to mind it runs with such ease as to pass and and just as happens, without reading what If therefore thou have put it to with right- cut it off from the sequence of the remaining eousness, whither will it not reach? through members, to the destruction of their own soul how many heavens will it not pass? By the they put it forward to the more indolent. For throne of God itself surely it will stay its attempting to seduce them from the sound course; in the midst of the angels, with much faith; then seeing them afraid and trembling; confidence. On the other hand if pride, hav- on the ground of its not being without danger ing been yoked with righteousness, by the ex- to do this," and desiring to relieve their fear, cess and weight of its own wickedness had they bring forward this apostolic declaration, strength enough to drag down its confidence; saying, Paul conceded this, by saying, "Whether if it be put together with sinfulness, into how in pretence or in sincerity, let Christ be prodeep a hell will it not be able to precipitate claimed." But these things are not (true), him who has it? These things I say, not in they are not. For in the first place he did order that we should be careless of righteousness, but that we should avoid pride; not that we should sin, but that we should be soberminded. For humbleness of mind is the foundation of the love of wisdom which pertains to us. Even if thou shouldest have built a superstructure of things innumerable; even if almsgiving, even if prayers, even if fastings, even if all virtue; unless this have first been laid as a foundation, all will be built upon it 4 to no purpose and in vain; and it will fall down easily, like that building which had been shouldest mention temperance, even if virginthing whatever, all are unclean and accursed 2. Knowing therefore these things, beloved, and loathsome, humbleness of mind being absent. Everywhere therefore let us take her

3. But the things belonging to humbleness of him who takes not heed, and humbleness of mind have been sufficiently spoken of; not for mind to bear up on high from the very abyss the value of the virtue; 7 for no one will be of sins him who knows how to be sober. For able to celebrate it in accordance with its this it was that placed the publican before the value; but for the intelligence of your love. Pharisee; whereas that, pride I mean and an For well do I know that even from the few overweening spirit, surpassed even an incorthings that have been said you will embrace it poreal power, that of the devil; while humble- with much zeal. But since it is also necessary ness of mind and the acknowledgment of his to make clear and manifest the apostolic sayown sins committed brought the robber into ing which has been to-day read; seeming as it Paradise before the Apostles. Now if the does to many to afford a pretext for indolence; confidence which they who confess their own so that some may not, providing for themselves sins effect for themselves is so great, they who hence a certain frigid defence, neglect their out-strip righteousness combined with pride. precedes and what comes after it; but having not say "let him be proclaimed," but "he is proclaimed," and the difference between this and that is wide. For the saying "let him be proclaimed" belongs to a lawgiver; but the saying "he is proclaimed" to one announcing the event. For that Paul does not ordain a law that there should be heresies, but draws away all who attended to him, hear what he says, "If any one preaches to you a gospel besides what ye have received, let him be ana-

This must be the sense; though there is some little difficulty in the original.
² ἐπιτεύξονται, Lit. light upon: as on the treasure of the parable, "lid in a field."

3 lts race being ended; the goal won.

4 That is on whatever foundation, other than that which may have been laid.

⁵ Οἰκοδομήν τεθείσαν. ""Οἱ περὶ Δωδώνην δυσχειμερον: οἰκὶ ἔθεντο." Htad. B. 750.
ὁ Παρολαμβάνωμεν. Take her to dwell with us. Comp. Chrysostom's expression, συζήν άρετη.
γ Κατόρθωμα. The highest form of duty; Perfectum officium quad Græci, εατόρθωμα, ζές. De Off. i. 3.
ὁ ἀλήθεια here is that of Aristotle's Ethics; sincerity.

⁸ Philip. i. 18.
10 'Aπλως, without reference to circumstances,
11 'δντ ποιέν, i.e., to be in that state. Ποιέν is not seldom used where $\pi a\theta$ εν might be expected.

thema, were it even I, were it even an angel to extinguish what was preached, and to put Christ." See, he both set down singleness, in that, while bound in Rome and imprisoned, or another; or to all indiscriminately.3

to narrate to you the whole history from a ples; but he retained them all in his mind; point a little earlier; for it is needful to know and not so strongly were his hands bound with in what circumstances Paul was when he was the chains as his soul was bound together and writing these things by letter. In what circumstances therefore was he? In prison and chains and intolerable perils. Whence is this manifest? From the epistle itself. For earlier than this he says, "Now I wish you to know, brethren, that the circumstances in which I am have come rather to the furtherance of having ascended upon his throne at morningthe Gospel; so that my bonds have become manifest in Christ in the whole Court, and to mediately receives from all quarters innumeraall the others; and a good many of the breth-ble letters; so truly he also, just as in royal ren, trusting to my bonds, the more exceedingly dare fearlessly to speak the word."7 just as some robber having set foot in the dom everything about 12 what had taken place house, while all are sleeping, when stealing every thing,8 if he see any one having lit a lamp, both extinguishes the light and slays him tion to his having had a larger dominion enwho holds the lamp, in order that he may be trusted to him. For in truth God had brought allowed in security to steal and rob the property of others; so truly also the Cæsar Nero ited the country of the Romans only, but also then, just as any robber and burglar while all were sleeping a deep and unconscious slumber; robbing the property of all, breaking into marriage chambers,9 subverting houses, displaying every form of wickedness; when he saw Paul having lighted a lamp throughout the world; (the word of his teaching;) and reproving his wickedness, exerted himself both from the heavens." Now he would not have the teachers out of the way; in order that he anathematized both himself and an angel, if might be allowed with authority to do anything he had known the act to be without danger. he pleased; and after binding that holy man, And again-"I am jealous of you with a jeal- cast him into prison. It was at that time then ousy of God," he says; "for I have betrothed that the blessed Paul wrote these things. you to one husband a chaste virgin: and fear Who would not have been astounded? who lest at some time, as the serpent beguiled Eve would not have marvelled? or rather who by his wiliness, so your thoughts should be could adequately have been astounded at and corrupted from the singleness that is towards admired that noble and heaven-reaching soul; and granted no allowance. For if there were at so great a distance as that, he wrote a letter allowance, there was no danger; and if there to the Philippians? For you know how great was no danger Paul would not have feared; is the distance between Macedonia and Rome. and Christ would not also have commanded But neither did the length of the way, nor the that the tares should be burned up, if it were amount of time (required), nor the press of a thing indifferent to attend to this one or that business, nor the peril and the dangers coming one upon another, nor anything else, drive 4. What ever then is what is meant? I wish out his love for and remembrance of the discirivetted by his longing for the disciples: 10 which very thing itself indeed also declaring, in the preface of the Epistle he said, "On account of my having you in my heart, both in my bonds, and in the defence and confirmation of the Gospel." I And just as a King, tide and taken his seat in the royal courts, imcourts, seated in the dungeon, both received and sent his letters in far greater number; the Now Nero had then cast him into prison. For nations from all quarters referring to his wisamong themselves; and he administered more business than the reigning monarch in proporand put into his hands not those who inhaball the barbarians, both land and sea. And by way of showing this he said to the Romans, "Now I would not that ye should be ignorant, brethren, that ofttimes I have purposed to come to you, and have been hindered until the present; in order that I might have some fruit also among you, as among the rest of the Gentiles too. Both to Greeks and barbarians, both to wise and those without understanding I am a debtor." 13 Every day therefore he was in anxious thought at one moment for Corinthians, at another for Macedonians; how Philippians, how Cappadocians, how Galatians, how Athenians, how they who inhabited Pon-

¹ Gal. i. 8, ο.
² 2 Cor. xi. 2, 3. 'Από τῆς ἀπλότητος τῆς ἀς Χριστόν. That is, from the singleness of affection and fidelity which must be maintained towards Hun in that relation. Matt. vi. 22-24.
³ 'Απλώς. Without reference to the truth of their doctrine.
⁴ Δελώς αρμασία, I bring higher, ἀρωφθεν; ab στίχητε.

³ Aπλως, Without reference to the truth of their doctrine.
4 As from a fountain, lying higher, ανωθεν; αδ στείχεια.
5 Προκοπήν, removal, clearing away, of obstacles to its advance.
6 Τούς πλείσουας. In the Greek of that day — πλλείσνας: like Lat., /hwres, a modified and weakened comparative.
7 Philip. i. 1-2-14.
8 Υφαιρόνμενος, lit. secretly taking for himself. Lat. surripio, 50 steal study.

So, steal, stealth.
9 Comp. Cic. in Verr. 21, 2, 3, non adulterum, sed expugnatorem pudicitiæ.

¹⁰ Πόθω, desiderio: absence being a test of love.

¹¹ Philip i. 7.

12 'Ynėp. As Lat. super. Multa super Priamo ragitans, super Hectore multa, Virg. Æn. i. 750.

¹³ Rom. i. 13, 14.

he continually cared not for entire nations towards their teacher, that thou mayest know indeed he despatched a letter on behalf of conquerable—the being bound together with Onesimus, and now on behalf of him who one another. For if "Brother helped by among the Corinthians had committed fornica tion. For neither used he to regard thisthat it was the individual who had sinned and needed advocacy; but that it was a human the wicked demon. That indeed then Paul precious to God; and for whose sake the even any demonstration further nor argument a runaway slave, or a robber or thief, or laden was also dying for them, burning with his longwith countless faults, or that he is a mendi- ing. cant and abject, or of low value and worthy of ground for all solicitude. Consider what sort himself, the only-begotten Son of God himself, who have been thus valued may enjoy every at least is the very thing by way of declaring which Paul also said. "Do not by thy meat destroy him for whose sake Christ died." 1 For desiring to shame, and to bring to solicitude, and to persuade to care for their neighbours, those who despise their brethren, and of all 2 else he set down the Master's death.

to the Philippians from that so great distance. For such as this is the love that is according things, since it has its roots from above in the the whole world just as in one house, thus heavens and its recompense. And what says he? "Now I desire that ye should know, brethren" 5 Seest thou solicitude for his tus, how all together were. But all the same, scholars? seest thou a teacher's carefulness? having had the whole world put into his hands, Hear too of loving affection of scholars only, but also for each single man; and now that this was what made them strong and unbrother is as a strong city;"6 far more so many bound together by the bonds of love would have entirely repulsed the plotting of being; a human being, the living thing most was bound up with the disciples, requires not Father had not spared even the Only-begotten. for us, since in truth even when in bonds he 5. For do not tell me that this or that man is anxiously cared for them, and each day, he

6. And that the disciples too were bound up no account; but consider that for his sake the with Paul with all perfectness;7 and that not Christ died; and this sufficeth thee for a men only, but women also, hear what he says about Phœbe. "Now I commend to you of person he must be, whom Christ valued at Phoebe the sister, being a deaconess of the so high a price as not to have spared even his Church which is in Cenchreæ; that ye may own blood. For neither, if a king had chosen receive her in the Lord worthily of the saints, to sacrifice himself on any one's behalf, should and stand by her, in whatever matter she may we have sought out another demonstration of require you, since 9 she has proved a helper io his being some one great and of deep interest of many; and of me myself." But in this to the King-I fancy not-for his death would instance he bore witness to her of her zeal suffice to show the love of him who had died so far as help went (only;)12 but Priscilla and towards him. But as it is not man, not angel, Aquila went as far even as death for Paul's not archangel; but the Lord of the heavens sake; and about them he thus writes, saying, "Aquila and Priscilla salute you, who for my having clothed himself with flesh, freely gave life's sake laid down their own neck;" 13 for himself on our behalf. Shall we not do every-death clearly. And about another again writthing, and take every trouble, so that the men ing to these very persons he says, "Because he went as far as death; having counselled ill solicitude at our hands? And what kind of for his life, in order that he might supply your defence shall we have? what allowance? This deficiency in your service towards me." 14 Seest thou how they loved their teacher? how they regarded his rest 15 before their own life? On this account no one surpassed them then. Now this I say, not that we may hear only, but that we may also imitate; and not to the ruled only, but also to those who rule is what we say look down upon them as being weak, instead addressed; in order that both scholars may display much solicitude about their teachers, Sitting then in the prison he wrote the letter and the teachers may have the same loving affection as Paul about those placed under them; not those present only, but also those to God: 3 it is interrupted by no one of human who are far off. For also Paul, dwelling in

6 Prov. xviii, 19. In our version it stands, "A brother offended (harder to be won than) a strong city." Chrysostom quotes

¹ Rom, xiv. 15.
2 Aντί. It may mean, as an equivalent, in the balance; comprehending and out-weighing all other considerations.
3 Theata Θεόν άγάπη, "η γάρ κατά Θεόν Αυπη μετάνοιαν είς αντηρίαν Εγηγάγεται." 2 Cor. vii. 10.
4 Εκ των υύρων». Chrysostom seems to use ἐκ από not ἐν, in reference to Suwdev preceding. This is the Greek idiom; ἀντόν ἐκὶ Τροής, Λ. Β. 237, but ἀντόθεν ἐξ ἐδρης, Τ. γγ.
5 Philip. 1, 12.

O Prov. xviii. 19. In our version it stands, "A brother offended is (harder to be won than) a strong city." Chrysostom quotes exactly from the Lxx. On the other hand, Boŋθew, as governing a dative, has no passive voice, at least in classical Greek. Boŋθow, row may, as here, be used by the Alexandrians. 'Axpβideiac, As a chain accurately and closely linked; so as not to be severed assunder. Sxwirryput. Lit, establish, vouch for her. 9'Hrs, answering to Lat. quæ with subjunctive, expressing the cause.

¹⁰ Προστάτις, patroness: a relation well-known in Greece.

 ¹⁰ Προστατίς, patroness: a teaton was substantial to the man at the man at continually took thought for the salvation of earnest longing? The things mentioned have all; and having dismissed every thing of his no consistency." I too know it. For neither vitals, he met them through the disciples.

disciples brethren. For such a thing as this is consumed, nor even scattered. love; it casts out all inequality, and knows not rather to the furtherance of the gospel." will be able to procure for us those countless Tell me, how and in what way? Hast thou then been released from thy bonds? hast thou these things? How! It was because they had "So that several of the brethren in the Lord, all the more, when they saw him spending his in reliance on my bonds, more abundantly dare fearlessly to speak the word." 7 What sayest thou, O Paul? have thy bonds inspired not anxiety but confidence? not fear but

Ephes, vi. 22.
4 Philip. 1, 12.
5 Thiss, iii. 5.
1 Thess, iii. 5.
1 Philip. 1, 12.
5 This phereau again, plures, complures, a good many.
7 Philip. 1, 14.

STACONOBIAN. Comp, Xen. Exped. Cyri, in. iv. 19, 665 δυκ ἀκό-λουθε (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that the two things were incompatible.

Stack α (γ); that own; bonds and troubles and stripes and did these things take place according to the straits, watched over and inquired into each consistency of human affairs, he means, but day, in what state the affairs of the disciples what came about was above nature, and the were; and often for this very purpose alone successes were of divine grace. On this ac-sent, now Timothy, and now Tychicus; and count what used to cause anxiety to all others. about him he says, "That he may know your that to him afforded confidence. For also if circumstances, and encourage your hearts:" any one, having taken the leader of an army and about Timothy; "I have sent him, being and confined him, have made this publicly no longer able to contain myself; lest in some known, he throws the whole camp into flight; way the tempter have tempted you." And and if any one have carried a shepherd away Titus again elsewhere, and another to another from the flock, the security with which he place. For since he himself, by the compul-drives off the sheep is great. But not in Paul's sion of his bonds being often detained in one case was it thus, but the contrary entirely. place, was unable to meet those who were his For the leader of the army was bound, and the soldiers became more forward in spirit; and 7. And then therefore being in bonds he the confidence with which they sprung upon writes to the Philippians, saying, "Now I desire their adversaries was greater: the shepherd that ye should know, brethren," alling the was in confinement, and the sheep were not

8. Who ever saw, who ever heard of, the superiority and dignity; but even if one be scholars taking greater encouragement in the higher than all, he descends to the lowlier dangers of their teachers? How was it that they position of all; just what Paul also used to feared not? how was it that they were not terdo. But let us hear what it is that he desires rified? how was it that they did not say to they should know. "That the things which Paul, "Physician, heal thyself," be deliver thy-happened unto me," he says, "have fallen out self from thy manifold perils, and then thou then put off thy chain? and dost thou with been schooled, from the grace of the Spirit, free permission preach in the city? hast thou that these things took place not out of weakthen, having gone into an assembly, drawn out ness, but out of the permission of the Christ; many long discourses about the faith, and de- in order that the truth might shine abroad parted after gaining many disciples? hast thou more largely; through bonds and imprisonthen raised the dead and been made an object ments and tribulations and straits increasing of wonder? hast thou then cleansed lepers, and and rising, to a greater volume. Thus is the all were astounded? hast thou driven away power of Christ in weakness perfected." For demons, and been exalted? No one of these indeed if his bonds had crippled Paul 12 and things, he says. How then did the furtherance made him cowardly; either himself or those of the gospel take place? tell me. "So that belonging to him; one could not but feel difmy bonds," he says, "have become openly ficulty; but if rather they prepared him to feel known in the whole Court, and to all the confidence and brought him into greater rerest." 5 What sayest thou? this then, this was nown, one must be astounded and marvel, how the furtherance, this the advance, this the in-through a thing involving dishonour glory was crease of the proclamation—that all knew that procured for the disciple—through a thing inthou wast bound. Yes, he says: Hear at spiring cowardice confidence and encourageleast what comes next, that thou mayest learn ment resulted to them all. For who was not that the bonds not only proved no hindrance, astounded at him then, seeing him encircled but also a ground of greater freedom of speech. with a chain? Then demons took to flight time in a prison. For not so splendid does not soundly, but, "thinking that they are their adversaries a demonstration that on all sides they were impregnable and indomitable.

o. Then therefore, when matters were in this state, some of the enemies of Paul, desiring to itself was not sound. For the preaching does fan up the war to greater vehemence, and to not become sound when the doctrine is laden make the hatred of the tyrant, which was felt with deception; and the pretext does not betowards him greater, pretended that they themselves also preached; (and they did preach sound, but they who preach do not preach for the right and sound faith,) for the sake of the the sake of God, but either with a view of doctrine advancing more rapidly: and this they did, not with the desire to disseminate the faith; but in order that Nero, having learnt that the preaching was increasing and the doctrine advancing, might the sooner have Paul led away to execution.4 There were therefore two schools; that of Paul's scholars and that of Paul's enemies; the one preaching out of sincerity, and the others out of love of contention and the hatred they felt towards Paul. And by way of declaring this he said, "Some indeed through envy and strife are preaching Christ," (pointing out those his enemies) "but some also through good pleasure;" 5 saying this about his own scholars.6 Then next about those; "Some indeed out of contentiousness," (his enemies,) not purely, the diadem make a royal head, as the chain thereby bringing pressure upon my bonds; his hands; not owing to their proper nature, but the others out of love; "(this again about but owing to the grace that darted brightness his own brethren;) "knowing that I am set " on them. On this account it was that great 'for the defence of the gospel." For what? encouragement resulted to the disciples. For Nevertheless, in any way; whether in prealso they saw his body indeed bound, but his tence or in sincerity, Christ is being antongue not bound, his hands indeed tightly nounced." So that vainly and to no purpose manacled, but his voice unshackled, and tra-versing the whole world more swiftly than the solar ray. And this became to them an en-couragement; learning as they did from the right belief. For if they were preaching corfacts that no one of present things is to be rupt doctrine, and were teaching other things dreaded. For when the soul has been gen-contrary to Paul, what they desired was certain uinely imbued by divine longing and love, it not to succeed to them. Now what did they pays regard to no one of things present; but desire? That the faith having grown, and the just as those who are mad venture themselves disciples of Paul having become numerous, it against fire and sword and wild beasts and sea should rouse Nero to greater hostility. And and all else, so these too, maddened with a if they were preaching different doctrines, they most noble and most spiritual frenzy, a frenzy would not have made the disciples of Paul arising from sanity,3 used to laugh at all things numerous; and by not doing so, they would that are seen. On this account, seeing their not have exasperated the tyrant. He does teachers bound, they the more exulted, the not therefore say this-that they were bringing more prided themselves; by facts giving to in corrupt doctrines—but that the motive from which they were preaching, this was corrupt. For it is one thing to state the pretext " of their preaching, and another that their preaching come sound when the preaching indeed is enmity, or with a view to the favour of others.

> 10. He therefore does not say this—that they were bringing in heresies; but that it was not from a right motive, nor through piety 12 that they were preaching what they did preach. For it was not that they might increase the gospel that they were doing this; but that they might wage war against him, and throw him into greater danger-on this account he accuses them. And see how with exactitude he laid it.13 "Thinking," he says, "that they were putting pressure upon my bonds." 14 He did not say, putting, but "thinking they were putting upon," that is supposing, by way of pointing out that even if they so supposed,

This properly is, dropping its flowers as a 1 'Aπανθούσαν. This properly is, dropping its flowers as a plant, withering, defloresco. I strongly suspect that témavθούσαν should be read; which not only is just what is wanted, but gives a satisfactory government to avrase, which now it has not. 'Σ Εσφίγμενας. Comp. the chaining of Prometheus; '''Αράσσε μάλου, σόγιγο.' Lat. tringe, constrictius.
3 Σωφόρουνηκ. Not in itsethical, but in its etymological sense, σόνοι τήν φόγενα, sound in mind. The antithesis is doubtless independent of the property of the control of the c tentional.

4 Tô Βάραθρον. The Athenian place and mode of execution. It cannot be literally rendered. The Tarpeian rock may be meant. Depicere a saxe cirves. Hor. Serm. This sentence proves "ἀλήθεια" to be, not truth, but sincerity. They preached "ορθην καί "αξιαθήν καί" με το και το και το το και το το και εια '' το το, '' ὑγιῆ πίστιν.''
5 That is, heartily.

⁷ Philip, v. 17.
8 Keiμαι. Perhaps lit. "I am lying"—here in prison.
9 Philip, i. 16-18.
10 μη ποιούντες δε. Referring to ἐποίησαν, just used. But the Greeks (as Aristophanes) sometimes use ποιώ in these cases, whatever word precedes; as in English. They generally repeat the same word, ε. g., "μανθάνεις, 'Ού μανθάνω," Aristoph. Here, then, taken in, either way, it comes to the same. Μή, because hypothetical, "if they did not make."
11 Πρόφανι. But it was not their pretext, but their real motive: v. 17. Any one conversant with Greek authors cannot fail to notice that, with some mental process of their own, they at times use expressions naturally suggesting the very contrary to towhat they must mean.
12 Εὐλάβειαν, Lit. carefulness in handling anything holy—reverence.

¹³ Αὐτὸ, f. e., the change: ἔγκλημα, involved in ἐγκαλές.
²⁴ Philip. i. 17.

still he himself was not in such a position; but dangers, and him who is in prosperity—for him that he even rejoiced on account of the advance of the preaching. He added therefore, saying, "But in this I both rejoice and will re-joice:" whereas if he held their doctrines deception, and they were bringing in heresies, Paul could not possibly rejoice. But since the doctrine was sound and of genuine parentage, on this account he says, "I rejoice and will rejoice." For what if they are destroying themselves by doing this out of contentiousness? Still, even unwillingly, they are strengthening my cause. Seest thou how great is Paul's power? how he is caught by no one of the devil's machinations? And not only is he not caught; but also by these themselves he subdues him. devil's craftiness,3 and the wickedness of those who minister to him; for under pretence of being of the same mind, they desired to extinguish the proclamation 'But "he who seizes the cunning in their craftiness" 5 did not permit that this should take place then. By way of declaring this very thing at least Paul said, "But the continuing in the flesh is the more necessary for your sake; and this I confidently know, that I shall continue and remain in company with you all."6 For those men indeed set their mind on casting me out of the present life, and are ready to endure anything for this object; but God does not permit it on your account.

member with exactness in order that you may be able with all wisdom to correct those who use the Scriptures without reference to circumstances 7 and at hap-hazard, and for the destruction of their neighbours. And we shall be able both to remember what has been said, and to correct others, if we always betake ourselves to prayers as a refuge, and beseech the God who gives the word of wisdom to grant both intelligence in hearing, and a careful and unconquerable guardianship of this spiritual deposit in our hands. For things which often we have not strength to perform successfully from our own exertions, these we shall have power to accomplish easily through prayers. I mean prayers which are persevering. For always and without intermission it is a duty to pray, both for him who is in affliction, and him who is in relief from it, and him who is in

11. These things therefore, all of them, re-

who is in relief and much prosperity, that these may remain unmoved and without vicissitude, and may never change; and for him who is in affliction and his many dangers, that he may see some favourable change brought about to him, and be transported into a calm of consolation. Art thou in a calm? Then beseech God that this calm may continue settled to thee. Hast thou seen a storm risen up against thee? Beseech God earnestly 8 to cause the billow to pass, and to make a calm out of the storm. Hast thou been heard? Be heartily thankful for this; because thou hast been heard. Hast thou not been heard? Persevere, oin order that thou mayest be heard. For great indeed is both the For even if God at any time delay the giving, it is not in hatred and aversion; but from the desire by the deferring of the giving perpetually to retain thee with himself; just in the way also that affectionate fathers do: " for they also adroitly manage the perpetual and assiduous attendance of children who are rather indolent by the delay of the giving. There is to thee no need of mediators in audience with God; nor of that much canvassing; 12 nor of the fawning upon others; but even if thou be destitute, even if bereft of advocacy, alone, by thyself, having called on God for help, thou wilt in any case succeed.13 He is not so wont to assent when entreated by others on our behalf, as by ourselves who are in need; even if we be laden with ten thousand evil deeds. For if in the case of men, even if we have come into countless collisions with them, when both at dawn and at mid-day and in the evening we show ourselves to those who are aggrieved against us, by the unbroken continuance and the persistent meeting and interview we easily demolish their enmity-far more in the case of God would this be effected.

> 12. But thou art unworthy. Become worthy by thy assiduity. For that it both is possible that the unworthy should become worthy from his assiduity; and that God assents more when called on by ourselves than by others; and

Philip. v. 18.
 Έκεῖνοι, Lat. isti, "the men."
 Κακουργία, "παρά τάυτας γὰρ κακουργέι," of the sophist Arist.

Rhel, iii. 2, 7.

4 Κήρυγμα. In its proper sense, the thing preached, the Gospel. But it more commonly is = κηρυξις, which word is scarcely used at all.

5 1 Cor. fii. 19. Δρασσόμενος, lit. clutches. Hence δραχμή, a handful of copper, σοφούς, falsely wise. "Σοφία; άρετή τεχνής." Arist. Eth. Nich. l. vi. Comp. Luke xvi. 8, of the dishonest steward. 6 Philip, i. 24, 25.

^{7 &#}x27;Απλώς.

⁸ Έκτενῶς. Like a racer, with every muscle "stretched out," Antilochus exclaims to his horses in the chariot race, Εμβητον, κάι σδώ τιπαντον. Ν. χxiii, 40, Comp. Philip. Iii, 13; τοις ἐμπροσθεν ἐνεκτεινοίμενος διώκω: the same metaphor. 9 Παράμενον. Wait, as it were, at the door; πωρά, until answered. Matt. vii. 7, τῶ κρουοντε (to him who continues knocking) δυνοχώτεται.

swered. Matt. vii. γ, τω κρουοντι (to him who continues knocking) δνουγράτται.

O Αποστρεόωενος. The Pagans adopted the expression literally, Diras solo fixes earlies aversa tenebat, Virg. Aim. 1, 482.

If Here we have πούσου, as in English, after κατέγειν. See previous note. It might be κατέγουσι, repeated.

Il Repúdpouje, running about for votes and favour. Lat. ambitio. "Non ego... Grammaticas ambire tribus et publita dignor." Hor. Epist. 1, 10, 40.

I To understand this description we have to bear in mind that, at Rome at least, legal advocates could claim no fees. They were forbidden, at least before the Imperial age, by the Cincian law.

I To understand this bescription we have to be a mind that, a through the services of an emment lawyer required interests and entreaty. So the Sicilians begged Cierce to undertake the prosecution of Verres. Cic. in Verr. Div. c. 12.

that he often delays the giving, not from the granted the boon; by the issue making us bewish that we should be utterly perplexed, nor lieve that he had delayed the giving, not that to send us out with empty hands; but in he might repel her but that he might display order that he may become the author of to us all the woman's endurance. For if he greater good things to us—these three points I had delayed in order that he might repel her, will endeavour to make evident by the parable he would not have granted it even at the end; which has to-day been read to you. The but since he was waiting to display to all her woman of Chanaan had come to Christ praying on behalf of a daughter possessed by a demon, and crying out with much earnestness,2 (it says,3 "Have pity on me, Lord, my daughter is badly possessed by a demon." See, the woman of a strange nation, and a barbarian, and outside of the Jewish commonwealth. For indeed what else (was she) than a dog, and unworthy of the receiving her request? For "it is not," he says, "good to take the children's bread, and to give it to the dogs." But, all the same, from her assiduity, she be- publicity, and make it manifest to all. came worthy. For not only did he admit her into the nobility of children, dog as she was: but also he sent her off with that high encomium saying, "O woman, great is thy faith; be it done to thee as thou wilt." 5 Now when the Christ says, "great is thy faith," seek thou no other demonstration of the greatness of soul ing that it is a strong advocacy—the coming which was in the woman. Seest thou how, from her assiduity the woman, being unworthy, became worthy? Desirest thou also to learn that we accomplish (our wish) by calling on him by ourselves more than by others? She cried out, and the disciples having come to him say, "Let her go away, for she is crying after us: "6 and to them he says, "I am not sent, unless to the lost sheep of the house of Israel." But when she had come to him by herself and continued crying, and saying, "Yes, Lord, for even the dogs eat from the table of their masters," 8 then he granted the favour and says, "Be it done unto thee as thou wilt." Seest thou how, when they were entreating him, he repelled; but when she who needed the gift herself cried out, he assented? For to them he says, "I am not sent, unless to the lost sheep of the house of Israel;" but to her 9 he said, "Great is thy faith; be it done unto thee as thou wilt." Again, at the beginning and in the prelude of her request he answered nothing; but when both once and twice and thrice she had come to him, then he spiritual wisdom, on this account he was silent." For if he had granted it immediately and at the beginning, we should not have known the woman's virtue.12 "Let her go" 13 it says, "because she is clamouring behind us." But what (says) the Christ? "Ye hear a voice, but I see the mind: I know what she is going to say. I choose not to permit the treasure hidden in her mind to escape notice; but I am waiting and keeping silence; in order that having discovered it I may lay it down in

13. Having therefore learned all these things. even if we be in sins, and unworthy of receiving, let us not despair; knowing, that by assiduity of soul we shall be able to become worthy of the request. Even if we be unaided by advocate and destitute, let us not faint; knowto God one's self by one's self with much eagerness. Even if he delay and defer with respect to the giving, let us not be dispirited; having learned that the putting it off and delay is a sure proof of caring and love for mankind. If we have thus persuaded ourselves: and with a soul deeply pained and fervent, and thoroughly roused purpose; and such as that with which the woman of Chanaan approached, we too come to him, even if we be dogs; even if we have done anything whatever dreadful; we shall both rebut 14 our own crimes, and obtain so great liberty of speech 15 as also to be advocates for others; in the way in which also this woman of Chanaan not only herself enjoved liberty of speech and ten thousand encomiums, but had power to snatch her dear daughter 16 out of her intolerable sufferings.

Έκπεμψαι, i. e., from the hall, as it were, of audience.

Εκτεμφαι, τ.ε., τινικου 2 Εκτεμφαι, τ.ε., τινικου 3 Φησίν, the parable says. An instance, however, of its redundancy before noticed. Έλέησον depends not on it, but on βοώσα.
 Κυναρίοις. In Greek, as in Latin and German, the diminutive

⁴ Kυναρίεις. In Greek, as in Latín and German, the diminutive sometimes expresses contempt.
5 Matt. v. 22, 26, 28.
6 Matt. v. 27. That is, the bread thrown to them, when it had been used to cleanse the fingers. Gr. ἀπομαγδαλία, αδ ἀπομάσσμαι. Comp. the very apposite passage, in which Agaracritus, a low person, says that this had been his own fare; ἢ μάτην γὰ "Απομαγδαλίας αὐτόμενος ποσῶντος ἐκτραφέιγιν. Cleon rejoins, "Απομαγδαλίας αὐτόμενος ποσῶντος ἐκτραφέιγιν. Cleon rejoins, "Απομαγδαλίας αὐτόμενος ποσῶντος ἐκτραφέιγιν. Cleon rejoins," αποκώγενος μέχει σὰ, Απίτοιρη. Εσμ. 412. Κυνάρια. So "Canícula," of the dog star, invisum sidus.

¹⁰ Διακρουσηται, as with rude violence. Lit. knock to a distance from himself, as with a hard blow.

"Fayya, Not literally, for Christ had answered, "It is not meet to take the children's bread." But that was silence, as far as returning any favorable answer went.

as resulting any acotanic answer went.

12 Thy αλρογίαν τ'ρς γυναιώςς. Lit the woman's manliness; a courage above her sex. The antithesis is doubtless intentional.

"Εναντια παράλλημα μάλλον γυράμμα," Arist. Κλετ. Λυδρια.

— Lat. πίτλεν. Gibbon, using this in the general sense, has the expression." manly virtue," in reference to αρετής Λυδρια, Hom. Odys, xvii. 322.

Odys., xvii, 322.

13 Φηρίν αχαίη: with no nominative. Certainly not Christ—the disciples said it. We nught expect φάσν; but this, I believe, Chrysostom never uses in these cases. "It says," i.e., the history, or "he," the Evancelist. Sometimes πε is understood.

14 *Αποκρανισμένθα. Rebut the charges brought against us. "Koκά," comp. the double sense of the Lat. crimen.

15 Παρρησίαν. Here, liberty to address the Court. So King Agrippa says, "Paul, thou art permitted to speak for thyself." Acts xxvi. T. Chrysostom throughout maintains the metaphor of the judicial process—άπροστάτευγος, κ.τ.λ

16 Θυγατρίουν. Here a diminutive of endearment, "filiola." Ω' Σωκρατίδου φίλγατον, Arist. Nub. 736. As the Greeks said, υποκορυστώσεν

KOPLOTIKUS.

prayer when fervent and genuine. This both disperses present dangers, and rescues from the penalties which take place at that hour.' That therefore we may both complete our passage through the present life with ease,2 and depart thither 3 with confidence, with much zeal and eagerness let us perform this perpet-

For nothing—nothing is more powerful than ually. For thus shall we be able both to attain the good things which are laid up, and to enjoy those excellent hopes; which God grant that we may all attain; by the grace and loving kindness and compassion of our Lord Jesus Christ-with whom to the Father together with the Holy Spirit be glory, honour, dominion, to the ages of the ages.4 Amen.

phanes speaks of the kindliness and contentedness of Sophocles in both states of being, '0 δ' ἐὐκολος μέν ἐνθάδ ἐὐκαλος δ' ἐκέι. Ranæ, 82. See last note.

4 Perhaps this common phrase, "ages (consisting) of ages," is in contrast to ages of years. Comp. "magnus annus-mess. Magnus ab integro sactorum mascitur ordo." Vir. Eccl. 1V. 5.

¹ Καιρον, "μέρος χρονον," Aristotle, A critical moment.
² Εύκολιας. Effect for cause; contentedness for that which creates it; ease. Comp. O Melibare, Deus mobis hare o tha fecit," Virg. Ecl. 1, 6.
³ Εκεί. 1. 6.
³ Εκεί. The Greek euphemism for the other world. Aristo-

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

INSTRUCTIONS TO CATECHUMENS.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION, AND NOTES BY REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A., PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

ASSISTED BY

REV. T. P. BRANDRAM, M.A.,

RECTOR OF RUMBOLDSWHYKE, CHICHESTER.

INSTRUCTIONS TO CATECHUMENS.

FIRST INSTRUCTION.

To those about to be illuminated; and for what reason the laver is said to be of regeneration and not of remission of sins; and that it is a dangerous thing not only to forswear oneself, but also to take an oath, even though we swear truly.

of young brethren! For brethren I call you, even now before you have been brought forth, and before your birth I welcome this relationship with you: For I know, I know clearly, to how great an honour you are about to be led, and to how great a dignity; and those who are about to receive dignity, all are wont to honor, even before the dignity is conferred, laying up for themselves beforehand by their attention good will for the future. And this also I myself now do. For ye are not about to be led to an empty dignity, but to an actual kingdom: and not simply to a kingdom, but to the kingdom of the Heavens itself. Wherefore I beseech and entreat you that you remember me when you come into that kingdom, and as Joseph said to the chief butler "Remember me when it shall be well with thee," 2 this also I say now to you, do ye remember me when it is well with you. I do not ask this in return for interpreting your

1. How delightful and lovable is our band | dreams, as he; for I have not come to interpret dreams for you, but to discourse of matters celestial, and to convey to you glad tidings of such good things as "eye hath not seen, and ear hath not heard and which have entered not into the heart of man, such are the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." 3 Now Joseph indeed said to that chief butler, "yet three days and Pharaoh will restore thee to thy chief butlership." But I do not say, yet three days and ye shall be set to pour out the wine of a tyrant, but yet thirty days, and not Pharaoh but the king of Heaven shall restore you to the country which is on high, Jerusalem, which is free-to the city which is in the heavens; and he said indeed, "Thou shalt give the cup into the hands of Pharaoh." But I say not that you shall give the cup into the hands of the king, but that the king shall give the cup into your hand—that dread cup, full of much power, and more precious than any created thing. The initiated know the virtue of this cup, and you yourselves shall know it a little while hence. member me, therefore, when you come into that kingdom, when you receive the royal robe, when you are girt with the purple dipped in the master's blood, when you will be crowned with the diadem, which has lustre leaping forth from it on all sides, more brilliant than the rays of the sun. Such are the gifts of the Bridegroom, greater indeed than your worth, but worthy of his lovingkindness.

^{1/}x, to be baptized. A common name for Baptism was "illumination," partly with reference to the instructions which preceded it, as Justin Marryr says; "The laver is called illumination because the minds of those who learn these things are enlightened:" translation from the kingdom cause baptism was regarded as translation from the kingdom of the standard of the standard to the grace of the illuminating Spirit. Catechumens were divided to the grace of the illuminating Spirit. Catechumens were divided into four classes according to the stages of their preparation. It is to those who were in the final stage, the competentes or elect as they were called, that the following instructions are addressed. Gen. xl. 14.

Wherefore, I count you blessed already before those sacred nuptials, and I do not only count you blessed, but I praise your prudence in that you have not come to your illumination as the most slothful among men, at your last breath, but already, like prudent servants, prepared with much goodwill to obey your master, have brought the neck of your soul with much meekness and readiness beneath the bands of Christ, and have received His easy yoke, and have taken His light burden. For if the grace bestowed be the same both for you and for those who are initiated at their last hour, yet the matter of the intention is not the same, nor yet the matter of the preparation for the rite. For they indeed receive it on their bed, but you in the bosom of the Church, which is the common mother of us all; they indeed with lamentation and weeping, but you rejoicing, and exceeding glad: they sighing, you giving thanks; they indeed lethargic with much fever, you filled with much spiritual pleasure; wherefore in your case all things are in harmony with the gift, but in theirs all are adverse to it. For there is wailing and much lamentation on the part of the initiated, and children stand around crying, wife tearing her cheeks, and dejected friends and tearful servants; the whole aspect of the house resembles some wintry and gloomy day. And if thou shalt open the heart of him who is lying there, thou wilt find it more downcast than are these. For as winds meeting one another with many a contrary blast, break up the sea into many parts, so too the thought of the terrors preying upon him assail the soul of the sick man, and distract his mind with many anxieties. Whenever he sees his children, he thinks of their fatherless condition; whenever he looks from them to his wife, he considers her widowhood; when he sees the servants, he beholds the desolation of the whole house; when he comes back to himself, he calls to mind his own present life, and being about to be torn from it, experiences a great cloud of despondency. Of such a kind is the soul of him who is about to be initiated. Then in the midst of its tumult and confusion. the Priest enters, more formidable than the fever itself, and more distressing than death to the relatives of the sick man. For the entrance of the Presbyter is thought to be a greater reason for despair than the voice of the physician despairing of his life, and that which suggests eternal life seems to be a symbol of death. But I have not yet put the finishing stroke to these ills. For in the midst of relatives raising a tumult and making preparations, the soul has often taken its flight, leaving the body desolate; and in many cases, while it was present it was useless, for when it neither recognizes those who are present, nor hears their voice, nor is able to answer those words by which it will make that blessed covenant with the common master of us all, but is as a useless log, or a stone, and he who is about to be illuminated lies there differing nothing from a corpse, what is the profit of initiation in a case of such insensibility?

2. For he who is about to approach these holy and dread mysteries must be awake and alert, must be clean from all cares of this life, full of much self-restraint, much readiness; he must banish from his mind every thought foreign to the mysteries, and on all sides cleanse and prepare his home, as if about to receive the king himself. Such is the preparation of your mind: such are your thoughts; such the purpose of your soul. Await therefore a return worthy of this most excellent decision from God, who overpowers with His recompense those who show forth obedience to Him. But since it is necessary for his fellow servants to contribute of their own, then we will contribute of our own; yea rather not even are these things our own, but these too are our Master's. "For what hast thou," saith He, "that thou didst not receive? but if thou didst receive it, why dost thou glory, as if thou hadst not received it?" I wished to say this first of all, why in the world our fathers, passing by the whole year, settled that the children of the Church should be initiated at this season; and for what reason, after the instruction from us, removing your shoes and raiment, unclad and unshod, with but one garment on, they conduct you to hear the words of the exorcisers. For it is not thoughtlessly and rashly that they have planned this dress and this season for us. But both these things have a certain mystic and secret reason. And I wished to say this to you. But I see that our discourse now constrains us to something more necessary. For it is necessary to say what baptism is, and for what reason it enters into our life, and what good things it conveys

But, if you will, let us discourse about the name which this mystic cleansing bears: for its name is not one, but very many and various. For this purification is called the laver of regeneration, "He saved us," he saith, "through the laver of regeneration, and renewing of the

^{1 1} Cor. iv. 7.

Holy Ghost." It is called also illumination, and this St. Paul again has called it, "For call to remembrance the former days in which after ye were illuminated ye endured a great conflict of sufferings;" 2 and again, "For it is impossible for those who were once illuminated, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and then fell away, to renew them again unto repentance."3 It is called also, baptism: "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ." 4 It is called also burial: "For we were buried" saith he, "with him, through baptism, into death." 5 It is called circumcision: "In whom ye were also circumcised, with a circumcision not made with hands, in the putting off of the body of the sins of the flesh."6 It is called a cross: "Our old man was crucified with him that the body of sin might be done away." It is also possible to speak of other names besides these, but in order that we should not spend our whole time over the names of this free gift, come, return to the first name, and let us finish our discourse by declaring its meaning; but in the meantime, let us extend our teaching a little further. There is that laver by means of the baths, common to all men, which is wont to wipe off bodily uncleanness; and there is the Jewish laver, more honorable than the other, but far inferior to that of grace; and it too wipes off bodily uncleanness, but not simply uncleanness of body, since it even reaches to the weak conscience. For there are many matters, which by nature indeed are not unclean, but which become unclean from the weakness of the conscience. And as in the case of little children, masks, and other bugbears are not in themselves alarming, but seem to little children to be alarming, by reason of the weakness of their nature, so it is in the case of those things of which I was speaking; just as to touch dead bodies is not naturally unclean, but when this comes into contact with a weak conscience, it makes him who touches them unclean. For that the thing in question is not unclean naturally, Moses himself who ordained this law showed, when he bore off the entire corpse of Joseph, and yet remained clean. On this account Paul also, discoursing to us about this uncleanness which does not come naturally but by reason of the weakness of the conscience, speaks somewhat in this way, "Nothing is common of itself save to him who accounteth anything to be common."8 Dost thou not see that uncleanness does not arise from the nature of the thing, but from the weakness of the reasoning about it? And again: "All things indeed are clean, howbeit it is evil to that man who eateth with offense." Dost thou see that it is not to eat, but to eat with offense, that is the cause of uncleanness?

3. Such is the defilement from which the laver of the Jews cleansed. But the laver of grace, not such, but the real uncleanness which has introduced defilement into the soul as well as into the body. For it does not make those who have touched dead bodies clean, but those who have set their hand to dead works: and if any man be effeminate, or a fornicator, or an idolator, or a doer of whatever ill you please, or if he be full of all the wickedness there is among men: should he fall into this pool of waters, he comes up again from the divine fountain purer than the sun's rays. And in order that thou mayest not think that what is said is mere vain boasting, hear Paul speaking of the power of the laver, "Be not deceived: neither idolators, nor fornicators, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with men, nor covetous, not drunkards, not revilers, not extortioners shall inherit the kingdom of God." And what has this to do with what has been spoken? says one, "for prove the question whether the power of the laver thoroughly cleanses all these things." Hear therefore what follows: "And such were some of you, but ye were washed, but ye were sanctified, but ye were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the spirit of our God." We promise to show you that they who approach the laver become clean from all fornication: but the word has shown more, that they have become not only clean, but both holy and just, for it does not say only "ye were washed," but also "ye were sanctified and were justified." What could be more strange than this, when without toil, and exertion, and good works, righteousness is produced? For such is the lovingkindness of the Divine gift that it makes men just without this exertion. For if a letter of the Emperor, a few words being added, sets free those who are liable to countless accusations, and brings others to the highest honors; much rather will the Holy Spirit of God, who is able to do all things, free us from all evil and grant us much righteousness, and fill us with much assurance. and as a spark falling into the wide sea would straightway be quenched, or would become invisible, being overwhelmed by the multitude of the waters, so also all human wickedness, when it falls into the pool of the divine fountain, is more swiftly and easily overwhelmed, ² Titus iii, 5. ⁴ Gal. iii, 27. ⁷ Rom. vi. 6.

² Heb. x. 32. 5 Rom. vi. 4. 8 Rom. xiv. 14.

³ Heb. vi. 4-6, 6 Gal. ii. 11.

what reason, says one, if the laver take away all our sins, is it called, not a laver of remission of sins, nor a laver of cleansing, but a laver of regeneration? Because it does not simply take away our sins, nor simply cleanse us from our faults, but so as if we were born again. For it creates and fashions us anew, not forming us again out of earth, but creating us out of another element, namely, of the nature of water. For it does not simply wipe the vessel clean, but entirely remoulds it again. For that which is wiped clean, even if it be cleaned with care, has traces of its former condition, and bears the remains of its defilement, but that which falls into the new mould. and is renewed by means of the flames, laying aside all uncleanness, comes forth from the furnace, and sends forth the same brilliancy with things newly formed. As therefore any one who takes and recasts a golden statue which has been tarnished by time, smoke, dust, rust, restores it to us thoroughly cleansed and glistening: so too this nature of ours, rusted with the rust of sin, and having gathered much smoke from our faults, and having lost its beauty, which He had from the beginning bestowed upon it from himself, God has taken and cast anew, and throwing it into the waters as into a mould, and instead of fire sending forth the grace of the Spirit, then brings us forth with much brightness, renewed, and made afresh, to rival the beams of the sun, having crushed the old man, and having fashioned a new man, more brilliant than the former.

4. And speaking darkly of this crushing, and this mystic cleansing, the prophet of old said, "Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." For that the word is in reference to the faithful, what goes before sufficiently shows us, "For thou art my Son," he says, "to-day have I begotten thee, ask of me and I will give the heathen for thine inheritance, the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession." 2 Dost thou see how he has made mention of the church of the Gentiles, and has spoken of the kingdom of Christ extended on all sides? Then he says again, "Thou shalt rule them with a rod of iron;" not grievous, but strong: "thou shalt break them in pieces like a potter's vessel."3 Behold then, the laver is more mystically brought forward. For he does not say earthen vessels: but vessels of the potter. But, give heed: For earthen vessels when crushed would not admit of refashioning, on account of the hardness which was gained by them from the fire. But the fact is that the vessels of the potter and made invisible, than that spark. And for are not earthen, but of clay; wherefore, also, when they have been distorted, they can easily, by the skill of the artificer, be brought again to a second shape. When, therefore, God speaks of an irremediable calamity, he does not say vessels of the potter, but an earthen vessel; when, for instance, he wished to teach the prophet and the Jews that he delivered up the city to an irremediable calamity, he bade him take an earthen wine-vessel, and crush it before all the people, and say, "Thus shall this city be destroyed, be broken in pieces." 4 But when he wishes to hold out good hopes to them, he brings the prophet to a pottery, and does not show him an earthen vessel, but, shows him a vessel of clay, which was in the hands of the potter, falling to the ground: and brings him to it saying, "If this potter has taken up and remodelled his vessel which has fallen, shall I not much rather be able to restore you when you have fallen?"5 It is possible therefore for God not only to restore those who are made of clay, through the laver of regeneration, but to bring back again to their original state, on their careful repentance, those who have received the power of the Spirit, and have lapsed. But this is not the time for you to hear words about repentance, rather may the time never come for you to fall into the need of these remedies, but may you always remain in preservation of the beauty and the brightness which ye are now about to receive, unsullied. In order, then, that ye may ever remain thus, come and let us discourse to you a little about your manner of life. For in the wrestling schools falls of the athletes are devoid of danger. For the wrestling is with friends, and they practice all their exercises on the persons of their teachers. But when the time of the contest has come, when the lists are open, when the spectators are seated above, when the president has arrived, it necessarily follows that the combatants, if they become careless, fall and retire in great disgrace, or if they are in earnest, win the crowns and the prizes. So then, in your case these thirty days are like some wrestling school, both for exercise and practice: let us learn from thence already to get the better of that evil demon. For it is to contend with him that we have to strip ourselves, with him after baptism are we to box and fight. Let us learn from thence already his grip, on what side he is aggressive, on what side he can easily threaten us, in order that, when the contest comes on, we may not feel strange, nor become confused, as seeing new forms of wrestling; but having already practiced them amongst ourselves, and having learnt all his methods, may engage in these forms of wrestling against him with courage. In all ways, therefore, is he accustomed to threaten us, but especially by means of the tongue, and the mouth. For there is no organ so convenient for him for our deception and our destruction as an unchastened tongue and an unchecked utterance. Hence come many slips on our part: hence many serious accusations against us. And the ease of these falls through the tongue a certain one showed, when he said, "Many fell by the sword, but not so many as by the tongue." Now the gravity of the fall the same person shows us again when he says: "To slip upon a pavement is better than to slip with the tongue." 2 And what he speaks of is of this kind. Better it is, says he, that the body should fall and be crushed, than that such a word should go forth as destroys the soul; and he does not speak of falls merely; he also admonishes us that much forethought should be exercised, so that we should not be tripped up, thus saying "Make a door and bars for thy mouth," 3 not that we should prepare doors and bars, but that with much security, we should shut the tongue off from outrageous words; and again in another place, after showing that we need influence from above, both as accompanying and preceding our own effort so as to keep this wild beast within: stretching forth his hands to God, the prophet said, "Let the lifting up of my hands be an evening sacrifice, set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth, keep the door of my lips;" and he who before admonished, himself too 4 says again, "Who shall set a watch before my mouth, and a seal of wisdom upon my lips?"5 Dost thou not see, each one fearing these falls and bewailing them, both giving advice, and praying that the tongue may have the benefit of much watchfulness? and for what reason, says one, if this organ brings us such ruin, did God originally place it within us? Because indeed, it is of great use, and if we are careful, it is of use only, and brings no ruin. Hear, for example, what he says who spoke the former words, "Death and life are in the power of the tongue."6 And Christ points to the same thing when he says, "By thy words thou shalt be condemned, and by thy words thou shalt be justified."7 For the tongue stands in the midst ready for use on either hand. Thou art its master. Thus indeed a sword lies in the midst, and if thou use it against thine enemies, this organ becomes a means of safety for thee. But if thou thrust its stroke against thyself, not the nature of the iron, but thine own transgression becomes the cause of thy slaughter. Let us then take this view of the tongue. It is a sword, lying in the midst; sharpen it for the purpose of accusing thine own sins. Thrust not the stroke against thy brother. For this reason God surrounded it with a double fortification; with the fence of the teeth and the barrier of the lips, that it may not rashly and without circumspection utter words which are not convenient. Well, dost thou say it will not endure this? Bridle it therefore within. Restrain it by means of the teeth, as though giving over its body to these executioners and making them bite it. For it is better that when it sins now it should be bitten by the teeth, than one day when it seeks a drop of water and is parched with heat, to be unable to obtain this consolation. In many other ways indeed it is wont to sin, by raillery and blasphemy, by uttering foul words, by slander, swearing, and perjury.

5. But in order that we may not by saying everything at once to-day, confuse your minds, we put before you one custom, namely, about the avoidance of oaths, saying this much by way of preface, and speaking plainly-that if you do not avoid oaths, I say not perjury merely, but those too which happen in the cause of justice, we shall not further discourse upon any other subject. For it is monstrous that teachers of letters should not give a second lesson to their children until they see the former one fixed well in their memory, but that we, without being able to express our first lessons clearly, should inculcate others before the first are completed. For this is nothing else than to pour into a perforated jar. Give great care, then, that ye silence not our mouth. For this error is grave, and it is exceedingly grave because it does not seem to be grave. and on this account I fear it, because no one fears it. On this account the disease is incurable, because it does not seem to be a disease; but just as simple speech is not a crime, so neither does this seem to be a crime, but with much boldness this transgression is committed: and if any one call it in question, straightway laughter follows, and much ridicule, not of those who are called in question for their oaths, but of those who wish to rectify the disease. On this account I largely extend my discourse about these matters. For I wish to pull up a deep root, and to wipe out a long-standing evil: I speak not of perjury alone, but even of oaths in good faith. But so and so, says one, a forbearing man, consecrated to the priesthood, living in much self-control and piety, takes an oath. Do not speak to me of this forbearing person, this self-controlled, pious man who is consecrated to the priesthood; but if thou wilt, add that this man is Peter, or Paul, or even an angel descended out of heaven. For not even in such a case do I regard the dignity of their persons. For the law which I read upon oaths, is not that of the servant, but of the King: and when the edicts of a king are read, let every claim of the servants be silent. But if thou art able to say that Christ bade us use oaths, or that Christ did not punish the doing of this, show me, and I am persuaded. But if he forbids it with so much care, and takes so much thought about the matter as to class him who takes an oath with the evil one (for whatsoever is more than these, namely, than yea and nay, saith he, is of the devil), why dost thou bring this person and that person forward? For not because of the carelessness of thy fellow servants, but from the injunctions of his own laws, will God record his vote against thee. I have commanded, he says, thou oughtest to obey, not to shelter thyself behind such and such a person and concern thyself with other persons' evil. Since the great David sinned a grievous sin, is it then safe for us to sin? Tell me: on this account then we ought to make sure of this point, and only to emulate the good works of the saints; and if there is carelessness, and transgression of the law anywhere, we ought to flee from it with great care. For our reckoning is not with our fellow-servants, but with our Master, and to him we shall give account for all done in our life. Let us prepare ourselves therefore for this tribunal. For even if he who transgresses this law be beyond everything revered and great, he shall certainly pay the penalty attaching to the transgression. For God is no respecter of persons. How then and in what way is it possible to flee from this sin? For one ought to show not only that the crime is grievous, but to give counsel how we may escape from it. Hast thou a wife, hast thou a servant, children, friends, acquaintance, neighbors? To all these enjoin caution on these matters. Custom is a grievous thing, terrible to supplant, and hard to guard against, and it often attacks us unwilling and unknowing; therefore in so far as thou knowest the power of custom, to such an extent study to be freed from any evil custom, and transfer thyself to any other most useful one. For as that custom is often able to trip thee up, though thou art careful, and guardest thyself, and takest thought, and consideration, so if thou transferrest thyself to the good custom of abstaining from oaths, thou wilt not be able, either involuntarily or carelessly, to fall into the fault of oaths. For custom is really great and has the power of nature. In order then that we do not continually distress ourselves let us transfer ourselves to another custom, and ask thou each one of thy kindred and acquaintance this favor, that he advise thee and exhort thee to flee from oaths, and reprove thee, when detected in them. For the watch over thee which takes place on their part, is to them too counsel and a suggestion to what is right. For he who reproves another for oaths, will not himself easily fall into this pit. For much swearing is no ordinary pit, not only when it is about little matters but about the greatest. And we, whether buying vegetables, or quarrelling over two farthings, or in a rage with our servants and threatening them, always call upon God as our witness. But a freeman, possessed of some barren dignity, thou wouldest not dare to call upon as witness in the market to such things; but even if thou attemptedst it, thou wilt pay the penalty of thine insolence. But the King of Heaven, the Lord of Angels, when disputing both about purchases and money, and what not, thou draggest in for a testimony. And how can these things be borne? whence then should we escape from this evil custom? After setting those guards of which I spoke round us, let us fix on a specified time to ourselves for amendment, and adding thereto condemnation if, when the time has passed, we have not amended this. How long time will suffice for the purpose? I do not think that they who are very wary, and on the alert, and watchful about their own salvation, should need more than ten days, so as to be altogether free from the evil custom of oaths. But if after ten days we be detected swearing, let us add a penalty due to ourselves, and let us fix upon the greatest punishment and condemnation of the transgression; what then is this condemnation? This I do not fix upon, but will suffer you yourselves to determine the sentence. So we arrange matters in our own case, not only in respect of oaths but in respect of other defects, and fixing a time for ourselves, with most grievous punishments, if at any time we have fallen into them, shall come clean to our Master, and shall escape the fire of hell, and shall stand before the judgment seat of Christ with boldness, to which may we all attain, by the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, with whom be glory to the Father together with the Holy Spirit for ever and ever: Amen.

² Ecclus. xx. 18. 5 Ecclus. xxii. 27. ¹ Ecclus, xxviii, 22, ⁴ Ps. cxhi, 2, 3, ⁷ Mark xii, 27,

³ Ecclus. xx. 25.

¹ Matt. v. 35.

SECOND INSTRUCTION.

To those about to be illuminated; and concerning women who adorn themselves with plaiting of hair, and gold, and concerning those who have used omens, and amulets, and incantations, all which are foreign to Christianity.

of provocation." 2 And this, He says, exhorting and counselling us; that we should never despair, but so long as we are here, should have good hopes, and should lay hold on what is before us, and hasten towards the prize care against that day, and will restore it with of our high calling of God. This then let us do, and let us inquire into the names of this great gift. For as ignorance of the greatness of this dignity makes those who are honored with it more slothful, so when it is known it renders them thankful, and makes them more earnest; and anyhow it would be disgraceful and ridiculous that they who enjoy such glory and honors from God, should not even know what the names of it are intended to show

I. I HAVE come to ask first of all for some forth. And why do I speak about this gift, for fruit in return for the words lately said out of if thou wilt consider the common name of our brotherly love to you. For we do not speak race, thou wilt receive the greatest instruction in order that ye should hear simply, but in and incentive to virtue. For this name order that ye should remember what has been "Man," we do not define according as they said, and may afford us evidence of this, by who are without define it, but as the Divine your works. Yea, rather, not us, but, God, who Scripture has bidden us. For a man is not knows the secrets of the heart. On this ac- merely whosoever has hands and feet of a count indeed instruction is so called, in order man, nor whosoever is rational only, but whothat even when we are absent, our discourse soever practices piety and virtue with boldmay instruct your hearts.' And be not sur- ness. Hear, at least, what he says concerning prised if, after an interval of ten days only, we Job. For in saying that "there was a man have come asking for fruit from the seed sown. in the land of Ausis," he does not describe For in one day it is possible at once to let the him in those terms in which they who are seed fall, and to accomplish the harvest. For without describe him, nor does he say this bestrengthened not by our own power alone, but cause he had two feet and broad nails, but he by the influence which comes from God, we added the evidences of his piety and said, are summoned to the conflict. Let as many "just, true, fearing God, eschewing every evil therefore as have received what has been deed," 4 showing that this is a man; even as spoken, and have fulfilled it by their works, therefore another says, "Fear God, and keep remain reaching forth to the things which are his commandments, because this is the whole before. But let as many as have not yet ar- man." 5 But if the name man affords such a rived at this good achievement, arrive at it great incentive to virtue, much rather the straightway, that they may dispel the condem-term faithful. For thou art called faithful on nation which arises out of their sloth by their this account, because thou hast faith in God, diligence for the future. For it is possible, it and thyself art entrusted from Him with rightis indeed possible for him who has been very eousness, sanctification, cleansing of soul, slothful, by using diligence for the future to adoption, the kingdom of heaven. He enrecover the whole loss of the time that is past. trusted thee with these, and handed them over Wherefore, He says, "To-day if ye will hear to thee. Thou in turn hast entrusted, and his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the day handed over other things to him, almsgiving, prayers, self-control and every other virtue. And why do I say almsgiving? If thou givest him even a cup of cold water, thou shalt not indeed lose this, but even this he keeps with overflowing abundance. For this truly is wonderful, that he does not keep only that which has been entrusted to him, but in recompensing it increases it.

This too he has bidden thee do according to thy power, with what has been entrusted to thee, to extend the holiness which thou hast received, and to make the righteousness which comes from the laver brighter, and the gift of grace more radiant; even as therefore Paul did, increasing all the good things which he ¹ Catechism, or oral instruction, "Catechesis," in Greek, is called by that name. Chrysostom says, a word derived from $\eta_1 \eta_2$, a sound, in order that it may "resound" in your minds $\ell \eta_2 \eta_2$. It is impossible to preserve the play upon words in the translation consestently with an exact rendering.

2 Ps. xev. 8.

³ This is the Septuagint word for Uz, the situation of which is a matter of great uncertainty. A curious note at the end of the book of Job in the Septuagint states that it was on the borders of the Euphrates.

5 Eccles, xii, 12,

received by his subsequent labors, and his I live because of the Father, he also shall live zeal, and his diligence. And look at the carefulness of God; neither did he give the whole to thee then, nor withhold the whole, but gave part, and promised part. And for what reason did he not give the whole then? In order that thou mightest show thy faith about Him, believing, on his promise alone, in what was not yet given. And for what reason again did he not there dispense the whole, but did give the grace of the Spirit, and righteousness and sanctification? In order that he might lighten thy labors for thee, and by what has been already given may also put thee in good hope for that which is to come. On this account, too, thou art about to be called newlyenlightened, because thy light is ever new, if thou wilt, and is never quenched. For this light of day, whether we will or no, the night succeeds, but darkness knows not that light's "For the light shineth in the darkness, and the darkness apprehended it not." Not so bright at least is the world, when the sunbeams come forth, as the soul shines and becomes brighter when it has received grace from the Spirit and learns more exactly the nature of the case. For when night prevails, and there is darkness, often a man has seen a coil of rope and has thought it was a serpent, and has fled from an approaching friend as from an enemy, and being aware of some noise, has become very much alarmed; but when the day has come, nothing of this sort could happen, but all appears just as it really is; which thing also occurs in the case of our soul. For when grace has come, and driven away the darkness of the understanding, we learn the exact nature of things, and what was before dreadful to us becomes contemptible. For we no longer fear death, after learning exactly, from this sacred initiation, that death is not death, but a sleep and a seasonable slumber; nor poverty nor disease, nor any other such thing, knowing that we are on our way to a better life, undefiled and incorruptible, and free from all such vicissitudes.

2. Let us not therefore remain craving after the things of this life, neither after the luxury of the table, or costliness of raiment. For thou hast the most excellent of raiment, thou hast a spiritual table thou hast the glory from on high, and Christ is become to thee all things, thy table, thy raiment, thy home, thy head, thy stem. "For as many of you as were baptized into Christ, did put on Christ." 2 See how he has become raiment for thee. Dost thou wish to learn how he becomes a table for thee? "He who eateth me," says He, "as because of me;" 3 and that he becometh a home for thee, "he that eateth my flesh abideth in me, and I in him; 4 and that He is a stem He says again, "I am the vine, ye the branches," 5 and that he is brother, and friend, and bridegroom, "I no longer call you servants: for ye are my friends;" 6 and Paul again, "I espoused you to one husband, that I might present you as a pure virgin to Christ;"7 and again, "That he might be the first-born among many brethren;"8 and we become not his brethren only, but also his children, "For behold," he says, "I and the children which God has given me"9 and not this only, but His members, and His body. For as if what has been said were not enough to show forth the love and the good will which He has shown forth towards us. He has added another thing greater and nearer still, calling himself besides, our head. Knowing all these matters, beloved, requite thy benefactor by the best conversation, and considering the greatness of the sacrifice, adorn the members of thy body; consider what thou receivest in thine hand, and never suffer it to strike any one, nor shame what has been honored with so great a gift by the sin of a blow. Consider what thou receivest in thine hand, and keep it clean from all covetousness and extortion; think that thou dost not receive this in thy hand, but also puttest it to thy mouth, and guard thy tongue in purity from base and insolent words, blasphemy, perjury, and all other such things. For it is disastrous that what is ministered to by such most dread mysteries, and has been dyed red with such blood, and has become a golden sword, should be perverted to purposes of raillery, and insult, and buffoonery. Reverence the honor with which God has honoured it, and bring it not down to the vileness of sin, but having reflected again that after the hand and the tongue, the heart receives this dread mystery, do not ever weave a plot against thy neighbor, but keep thy thoughts pure from all evil. Thus thou shalt be able to keep thine eyes too, and thy hearing safe. For is it not monstrous, after this mystic voice is borne from heaven-I mean the voice of the Cherubim-to defile thy hearing with lewd songs,, and dissolute melodies? and does it not deserve the utmost punishment if, with the same eyes with which thou lookest upon the unspeakable and dread mysteries, thou lookest upon harlots, and dost commit adultery in thy heart. Thou art called to a marriage, beloved: enter not in clad in sordid raiment, but take a robe suitable to the

I John i. 5. οὐ κατέλαβεν, overcame it not. I Gal. iii. 27.

³ John vi. 57. The quotation is not exact.
4 John vi. 56.
7 2 Cor, xi. 2.
8 Rom. viii. 29.

⁶ John xv. 15. 9 ls. viii. 18.

habit of evil men? For this reason I said be- the future; and add damage and scars to the ing, if any has not rectified the defects in his Restrain therefore anger, extinguish passion. morals, nor furnished himself with easily acquired virtue, let him not be baptized. For exasperated, nor say, "I have been injured in the laver is able to remit former sins, but regard to my soul." No one is injured in regard there is no little fear, and no ordinary danger to the soul if we do not injure ourselves in lest we return to them, and our remedy be-regard to the soul; and how this is, I now say. come a wound. For by how much greater the Has any one taken away thy substance? He grace is, by so much is the punishment more has not injured thee in regard to thy soul, but for those who sin after these things.

our former vomit, let us henceforward disci- soul. For the money taken away has wrought pline ourselves. For that we must repent thee no damage, nay has even been profitable, beforehand, and desist from our former evil, but thou by not dismissing thine anger wilt and so come forward for grace, hear what John give account in the other world for this chersays, and what the leader of the apostles says ishing of ill-will. Has any one reviled thee to those who are about to be baptized. For and insulted thee. He has in no way injured thy the one says, "Bring forth fruit worthy of re- soul, and not even thy body. Hast thou repentance, and begin not to say within your-viled in return and insulted? Thou hast inselves, we have Abraham to our Father;" and jured thyself in regard to thy soul, for for the the other says again to those who question words which thou hast said thou art about to him, "Repent ye and be baptized every one of render account there; and this I wish you to you in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ." 2 know chiefly of all, that the Christian, and Now he who repents, no longer touches the faithful man, no one is able to injure in regard same matters of which he repented. On this to the soul, not even the devil himself; and account, also, we are bidden to say, "I renot only is this wonderful, that God hath made nounce thee, Satan," in order that we may us inaccessible to all his designs, but that never more return to him.3 As therefore hap- he has constituted us fit for the practice of pens in the case of painters from life, so let it virtue, and there is no hinderance, if we will, happen in your case. For they, arranging their even though we be poor, weak in body, outboards, and tracing white lines upon them, cast, nameless, bondservants. For neither marriage. For if when men are called to a and sketching the royal likeness in outline, material marriage, though they be poorer than before they apply the actual colors, rub out all others, they often possess themselves of or some lines, and change some for others, rectibuy clean raiment, and so go to meet those who fying mistakes, and altering what is amiss with called them. Do thou too who hast been all freedom. But when they put on the colorcalled to a spiritual marriage, and to a royal ing for good, it is no longer in their power to banquet, consider what kind of raiment it rub out again, and to change one thing for would be right for thee to buy, but rather there another, since they injure the beauty of the is not even need to purchase, yea he himself portrait, and the result becomes an eyesore. who calls thee gives it thee gratis, in order Consider that thy soul is the portrait; before that thou mayest not be able to plead poverty therefore the true coloring of the spirit comes, in excuse. Keep, therefore, the raiment which wipe out habits which have wrongly been imthou receivedst. For if thou losest it, thou planted in thee, whether swearing, or falsewilt not be able to use it henceforth, or to hood, or insolence, or base talking, or jesting, buy it. For this kind of raiment is nowhere or whatever else thou hast a habit of doing of sold. Hast thou heard how those who were things unlawful. Away with the habit, in order initiated, in old time, groaned, and beat their that thou mayest not return to it, after bapbreasts, their conscience thereupon exciting tism. The laver causes the sins to disappear. them? Beware then, beloved, that thou do not Correct thy habits, so that when the colors at any time suffer like this. But how wilt thou are applied, and the royal likeness is brought not suffer, if thou dost not cast off the wicked out, thou mayest no more wipe them out in fore, and speak now and will not cease speak-beauty which has been given thee by God.4 thy money. But if thou cherish ill-will against 3. In order, therefore, that we return not to him, thou hast injured thyself in regard to thy poverty, nor infirmity, nor deformity of body, nor servitude, nor any other of such things could ever become a hinderance to virtue; and why do I say, poor, and a bondservant,

I Luke iii. 8.

2 Acts ii. 38.

3 Alluding to the vow of renunciation made by converts at baptism. A specimen of this vow may be read in the so-called Apostolic Constitutions, vii. c. 42.

"I renounce Satin and his works, and his pomps, and his service, and his angels, and his inventions, and all things that belong or are subject to him." This vow of renunciation was uttered by the catechamens in the porch or ante-chamber of the baptistery with outstretched hands, and faces turned westwards. See below in Chapter V.

⁴ The illustration is that of a portrait-painter making a likeness of the emperor, and there seems to be an allusion also to the divine image in which man was originally made.

nothing shall be a bar even in that case. Show with the devil and accuse him of extreme and all meekness, forbearance, self-restraint, gravity. For these things need no external helps. hor him, but removing him from his accusers, ing more. And behold, also, the same thing case of the combatants, but stands still in the happening in respect of grace. For if any midst. But here, the President of the contests one be lame, if he has had his eyes put out, for holiness becomes a fellow-combatant, and if he be maimed in body, if he has fallen into helper, sharing with them the conflict against the last extremity of weakness, grace is not the devil. hindered from coming by any of these things. 4. And not only is this the wonderful thing For it only seeks a soul receiving it with readi- that he remits our sins, but that he not ness, and all these external things it passes even reveals them nor makes them manifest over. For in the case of worldly soldiers, and patent, nor compels us to come forward those who are about to enlist them for the into the midst, and to tell out our errors, but army seek for stature of body and healthy bids us make our defense to him alone, and condition, and it is not only necessary that he to confess ourselves to him. And yet among who is about to become a soldier should have secular judges, if any tell any of the robbers these alone, but he must also be free. For if or grave-riflers, when they are arrested, to tell anybody be a slave, he is rejected. But the their errors and be quit of their punishment, King of Heaven seeks for nothing of this kind, they would accede to this with all readiness, but receives slaves into his army, and aged despising the shame through desire of safety. people, and the languid in limb, and is not But in this case there is nothing of this kind, ashamed. What is more merciful than this? but he both remits the sins, nor compels us to What could be more kind? For he seeks for marshal them in array before any spectators. what is in our own power, but they seek for But one thing alone he seeks, that he who enwhat is not in our power. For to be a slave joys this remission should learn the greatness or free is not our doing. To be tall, again, of the gift. How is it not, therefore, absurd or short is not in our own power, or to be aged, or well grown, and such like. But to should be content with our testimony only, cause of doing us kindness; but kings, because of services required by them; and they carry men off to an outward and material warfare, but He to a spiritual combat; and it is not only thou hast anything useful to say, open thy lips.

and nameless? Even if thou art a prisoner, not shouting out and saying, "Has any one a even this would be ever any hinderance to thee charge against this person?" although in that as regards virtue. And how this is I proceed to case the struggle is not concerned with the soul, say. Has any of thy household grieved thee but with the body. Wherefore then dost thou and provoked thee? dismiss thy wrath against demand proofs of nobleness? But in this case him. Have bonds, and poverty, and obscur-ity been any hinderance to thee in this respect? and why do I say hinderance? They have both in hand, but in philosophy of soul, and excelhelped and contributed to restrain pride lence of mind. The president of our conflicts Hast thou seen another prospering? do not does the opposite. For he does not take us, envy him. For not even in this case is poverty and lead us round and say, "Has any one a a bar. Again, whenever thou needest to pray, charge against this man?" but cries out, do so with a sober and watchful mind, and "Though all men, though demons, stand up And this especially is the chief point about and freeing him from his wickedness, thus I virtue, that it has no necessity for wealth, bring him to the contest. And this is very power, glory, nor anything of that kind, but of reasonable. For there indeed the president a sanctified soul alone, and it seeks for noth- contributes nothing towards the victory, in the be forbearing and kind, and so forth, are mat- but in those where we serve him we seek for ters of our own choice; and God demands of others as witnesses, and do a thing for ostenus only those things of which we have control. tation's sake? While we wonder then at his And quite reasonably. For He does not call kindliness, let us show forth our doings, and beus to grace because of his own need, but be- fore all others let us curb the vehemence of in the case of heathen wars, but in the case of But if there be nothing necessary for thee to the games also that one may see the same an- say, be silent, for it is better. Art thou a handialogy. For they who are about to be brought craftsman? as thou sittest at work, sing psalms.

cuse wilt thou hit upon? what pardon?

not with pearls, but with modesty, and diginto a suspicion of jealousy, and into enmity, or costly raiment." For therein would be a

In this case thou shalt undergo beholds it, and nothing is so wont to produce nothing serious, but shalt be able to sit in thy that disposition as modesty and dignity; so workshop as in a monastery. For not suita- that if any woman be comely, and her husband bleness of place, but strictness of morals will be ill affected towards her, she appears to him afford us quiet. Paul, at least, pursuing his the most worthless of all women; and if she trade in a workshop suffered no injury to his do not happen to be fair of face, but her own virtue.' Do not thou therefore say, How husband be well affected towards her, she apcan I, being a handicraftsman and a poor pears more comely than all. For sentence is man, be a philosopher? This is indeed the given not according to the nature of what is very reason why thou mayest be a philoso-beheld, but according to the disposition of the pher. For poverty is far more conducive to beholders. Adorn thy face then with modpiety for us than wealth, and work than idle- esty, dignity, pity, lovingkindness, charity, ness; since wealth is even a hinderance to affection for thy husband, forbearance, meekthose who do not take heed. For when it is ness, endurance of ill. These are the tints of needful to dismiss anger, to extinguish envy, to virtue. By means of these thou wilt attract curb passion, to offer prayer, to exhibit forbear- angels not human beings to be thy lovers. By ance and meekness, kindliness and charity, means of these thou hast God to commend when would poverty be a bar? For it is not thee, and when God receives thee, he will cerpossible by spending money to accomplish tainly win over thy husband for thee. For if these things, but by exhibiting a right dis- the wisdom of a man illuminates his counteposition; almsgiving especially needs money, nance,4 much more does the virtue of a woman but even it shines forth in greater degree illuminate her face; and if thou considerest through poverty. For she who spent the two this to be a great ornament, tell me what will mites was poorer than all men, and yet sur- be the advantage of the pearls in that day? passed all. Let us not then consider wealth But why is it necessary to speak of that day, to be anything great, nor gold to be better since it is possible to show all this from what than clay. For the value of material things is happens now. When, then, they who thought not owing to their nature, but to our estimate fit to revile the emperor were dragged to the of them. For if any one would inquire care-judgment hall, and were in danger of extreme fully, iron is much more necessary than gold. measures being taken, then the mothers, and For the one contributes to no need of our life, the wives, laying aside their necklaces, and but the other has furnished us with the greater their golden ornaments, and pearls, and all part of our needs, ministering to countless arts; adornment, and golden raiment, wearing a simand why do I speak of a comparison between ple and mean dress, and besprinkled with gold and iron? For these stones are more ashes, prostrated themselves before the doors necessary than precious stones. For of those of the judgment hall and thus won over the nothing serviceable could be made, but out judges; and if in the case of these earthly of these, houses and walls and cities are courts of justice, the golden ornaments, and erected. But do thou show me what gain could the pearls, and the variegated dress would be derived from these pearls, rather what harm have been a snare and a betrayal, but forwould not happen? For in order that thou bearance, and meekness, and ashes, and tears, mayest wear one pearl drop, countless poor and mean garments persuaded the judge, much people are pinched with hunger. What ex- more would this take place in the case of that impartial and dread tribunal. For what reason Dost thou wish to adorn thy face? Do so wilt thou be able to state, what defense, when the Master lays these pearls to thy charge, and nity. So thy countenance will be more full of brings the poor who have perished with hungrace in the eyes of thy husband. For the ger into the midst? On this account Paul other kind of adorning is wont to plunge him said, "not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, quarrelsomeness and strife, for nothing is more snare. And if we were to enjoy them continannoying than a face which is suspected. But ually, yet we shall lay them aside with death. the ornament of compassion and modesty casts But arising out of virtue there is all security, out all evil suspicion, and will draw thy part- and no vicissitude and changeableness, but ner to thee more strongly than any bond. For here it makes us more secure, and also acnatural beauty does not impart such comeliness companies us there. Dost thou wish to posto the face as does the disposition of him who sess pearls, and never to lay aside this wealth? Take off all ornament and place it in the hands of Christ through the poor. He will keep all all these, his own blood, thus He bought us. and for whose sake thou puttest on this ornaworthy of accosting.

² Luke xxi. 2-4 * Acts xviii. 3. 2 Luke xxi. 2-4. 3 Alluding probably to the stones of the building in which he was speaking.

How then wilt thou laugh this fancy to scorn? sentest forth when thou wert initiated, I renounce thee, Satan, and thy pomp, and thy service. For the frenzy about pearls is a pomp of Satan. For thou didst receive gold not in order that thou mightest bind it on to thy body, but in order that thou mightest release and nourish the poor. Say therefore constantly, I renounce thee, Satan. Nothing is more safe than this word if we shall prove it by our deeds.

5. This I think it right that you who are about to be initiated should learn. For this word is a covenant with the Master. And just brother on no just pretext; but God has bidas we, when we buy slaves, first ask those who den us love our enemies; but thou art turned are being sold if they are willing to be our servants: So also does Christ. When He is about to receive thee into service, He first asks if thou wishest to leave that cruel and relentless tyrant, and He receives covenants from thee. For his service is not forced upon thee. And see the lovingkindness of God. salvation's sake, I am, I am compelled to speak For we, before we put down the price, ask of it. If a virgin meet him he says the day those who are being sold, and when we have even put down the price for us all; his prec- you smite your foreheads, and bend to the ious blood. For, He says, ye were bought with ground? But do not this on account of the a price.' Notwithstanding, not even then does words which I have spoken, but of the deeds He compel those who are unwilling, to serve which have been done. See then, in this case, him; but except thou hast grace, He says, and how the devil hid his snare, in order that we of thine own accord and will determinest to might turn away from the modest, but salute enroll thyself under my rule, I do not compel, and be friendly to the unchaste. For since he nor force thee. And we should not have has heard Christ saying that "He who looketh chosen to buy wicked slaves. But if we should on a woman to desire her, has already coma perverted choice, and put down a corremuch more, and so much greater that neither women. speech nor thought can set forth its greatness.

thy wealth for thee, when He shall raise up thy And after all these things, he does not require body with much radiancy. Then He shall in- of us witnesses, or registration, but is content vest thee with better wealth and greater or- with the single word, if thou sayest it from thy nament, since this present is mean and absurd. heart. "I renounce thee, Satan, and thy Consider then whom thou wishest to please, pomp," has included all. Let us then say this, "I renounce thee, Satan," as men who are about ment, not in order that the ropemaker and the in that world at that day to have that world coppersmith and the huckster may admire, demanded of them, and let us keep it in order Then art thou not ashamed, nor blushest thou that we may then return this deposit safe. when thou showest thyself to them? doing all But Satan's pomps are theatres, and the circus, on their account whom thou dost not consider and all sin, and observance of days, and incantations and omens.

"And what are omens?" says one. Often If thou wilt remember that word, which thou when going forth from his own house he has seen a one-eyed or lame man, and has shunned him as an omen. This is a pomp of Satan. For meeting the man does not make the day turn out ill, but to live in sin. When thou goest forth, then, beware of one thing—that sin does not meet thee. For this it is which trips us up. And without this the devil will be able to do us no harm. What sayest thou? Thou seest a man, and shunnest him as an omen, and dost not see the snare of the devil, how he sets thee at war with him who has done thee no wrong, how he makes thee the enemy of thy away from him who did thee no wrong, having nothing to charge him with, and dost thou not consider how great is the absurdity, how great the shame, rather how great is the danger? Can I speak of anything more absurd? I am ashamed, indeed, and I blush: But for your becomes unsuccessful; but if a harlot meet learned that they are willing, then we put him, it is propitious, and profitable, and full down the price. But Christ not so, but He of much business; are you ashamed? and do at any time have so chosen, we buy them with mitted adultery with her," and has seen many get the better of unchastity, wishing by sponding price for them. But Christ, buying another wrong to cast them again into sin, by ungrateful and lawless slaves, put down the this superstitious observance he gladly perprice of a servant of first quality, nay rather suades them to pay attention to whorish

And what is one to say about them who For neither giving heaven, nor earth, nor sea, use charms and amulets, and encircle their but giving up that which is more valuable than heads and feet with golden coins of Alexander of Macedon. Are these our hopes, tell me, that after the cross and death of our Master, we should place our hopes of salvation on an image of a Greek king? Dost thou not know what great result the cross has achieved? It has abolished death, has extinguished sin, has made Hades useless, has undone the power of the devil, and is it not worth trusting for the health of the body? It has raised up the whole world, and dost thou not take courage in it? And what wouldest thou be worthy to suffer, tell me? Thou dost not only have amulets always with thee, but incantations bringing drunken and half-witted old women into thine house, and art thou not ashamed, and dost thou not blush, after so great philosophy, to be terrified at such things? and there is a graver thing than this error. For when we deliver these exhortations, and lead them away, thinking that they defend themselves, they say, that the woman is a Christian who makes these incantations, and utters nothing else than the name of God. On this account I especially hate and turn away from her, because she makes use of the name of God, with a view to ribaldry. For even the demons uttered the name of God, but still they were demons, and thus they used to say to Christ, "We know thee who thou art, the Holy One of God," and notwithstanding, he rebuked them, and drave them away. On this account, then, I beseech you to cleanse yourselves from this error, and to keep hold of this word as a staff; and just as without sandals, and cloak, no one of you would choose to go down to the market-place, so without this word never enter the market-place, but when thou art about to pass over the threshold of the gateway, say this word first: I leave thy ranks, Satan, and thy pomp, and thy service, and I join the ranks of Christ. And never go forth without this word. This shall be a staff to thee, this thine armor, this an impregnable fortress, and accompany this word with the sign of the cross on thy forehead. For thus not only a man who meets you, but even the devil himself, will be unable to hurt you at all, when he sees thee everywhere appearing with these weapons; and discipline thyself by these means henceforth, in order that when thou receivest the seal 2 thou mayest be a well-equipped soldier, and planting thy trophy against the devil, may receive the crown of righteousness, which may it be the lot of us all to obtain, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, with whom be glory to the Father and to the Holy Spirit for ever and ever-Amen.

² I. e., baptism. So called because of the covenant then made with God. So Tertullian calls it the signaculum fidei, the signature of the Christian faith as circumcision was of the Jewish faith.

¹ Mark i. 24.

¹²

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY I.

AGAINST THOSE WHO SAY THAT DEMONS GOVERN HUMAN AFFAIRS.

HOMILIES II AND III.

ON THE POWER OF MAN TO RESIST THE DEVIL.

TRANSLATED BY

T. P. BRANDRAM, M.A., RECTOR OF RUMBOLDSWHYKE, CHICHESTER.

CONTENTS.

HOMILY I.

T	ntroduction				PAGE
,	The inequiphle real of St. Chryspatoni's auditors	•	•		177
	The insatiable zeal of St. Chrysostom's audience	•			. 178
	. The loving-kindness of God in spite of man's ingratitude.
	. This loving-kindness shown, not only in what He gives, but also in what He takes away .
	. An instance of this in His "confusion of tongues," after the building of the tower of Babel
5	The various senses in which the word "evil" is used				182
6.	. Instances of God's providential care, and of the malignity of Demons				183
7.	. The prosperity of some bad men and the misfortunes of some good men no proof of disorder	r oi	in	justice in the Divine government				184
8.	The advantages of chastisement. An exhortation to reverence				185
	HOMILY II.
1.	Praise of Bishop Flavian. Recapitulation of former discourse				186
	Man is not injured by the Devil, but by his own moral indolence Things good in themselves become harmful through man's misuse of them.
-	The blessings of Christ's gospel a cause of condemnation to those who will not receive them.
	Exhortation to perseverance, and warning against despair
	Five ways of repentance
0.	Tire mays of rependance 1	٠			.90
	HOMILY III.
I.	Reproof of those who attended the theatre. Reasons why the bad and the good are permitted	d b	y (God to be together in the world
2.	Why the Devil is permitted to exist				192
	The Devil cannot compel any one to sin
	The fall of Eve, and the victory of Job
	The fortitude of Job an encouragement and consolation to the tempted
	The same argument continued
					106

THREE HOMILIES CONCERNING THE POWER OF DEMONS.

INTRODUCTION BY REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS.

The three following Homilies are closely connected in subject, and the opening sentence of the third clearly proves that it was delivered two days after the second; but it is impossible to say whether that which is placed first was really delivered before the other two. It must however have been spoken at Antioch, since Chrysostom refers at the beginning of it to his sermons "on the obscurity of prophecies" in which passages occur which clearly imply that he was not then a Bishop. The second of the three homilies here translated was delivered in the presence of a Bishop, as is clearly indicated by the commencement, and as the third was as already mentioned delivered two days after the second we may safely affirm that they were all spoken at Antioch when Chrysostom was a presbyter there under the Episcopate of Flavian.

They deal with errors against which Chrysostom throughout his life most strenuously In an age of great depravity there seem to have been many who tried to excuse the weak resistance which they made to evil, both in themselves, and in others, by maintaining that the world was abandoned to the dominion of devils, or to the irresistible course of fate. To counteract the disastrous effects of such philosophy, which surrendered man to the current of his passions, it was necessary to insist very boldly and resolutely on the essential freedom of the will, on moral responsibility, and the duty of vigorous exertion in resisting temptation. And Chrysostom did this to an extent which some thought carried him perilously near the errors of the Pelagian heresy. No one however has described in more forcible language the powerful hold of sin upon human nature, and the insufficiency of man to shake it off without the assistance of divine grace. What he does most earnestly combat, both in the following homilies and very many others, is the doctrine that evil was an original integral part of our nature: he maintains that it is not a substantial inherent force (δύναμις ἐνοπόστατος). If evil was a part of our nature in this sense it would be no more reprehensible than natural appetites and affections. We do not try to alter that which is by nature (φύσει): sin therefore is not by nature, because by means of education, laws, and punishments we do seek to alter that. Sin comes through defect in the moral purpose (προαίρεσις). Our first parents fell through indolence of moral purpose (ραθυμία) and this is the principal cause of sin now. They marked out a path which has been trodden ever since: the force of will has been weakened in all their posterity: so that though evil is not an inherent part of man's nature yet he is readily inclined to it (εξυρρεπής προς κακιάν); and this tendency must be perpetually counteracted by vigorous exertion, and a bracing up of the moral purpose, with the aid of divine grace. Profoundly convinced therefore on the one hand of a strong and universal tendency to sin, but on the other of an essential freedom of the will, Chrysostom sounds alternately the note of warning and encouragement, -warning against that weakness, indolence, languor of moral purpose which occasions a fall,—encouragement to use to the full all the powers with which man is gifted, in reliance on God's forbearance and love, and on His willingness to help those who do not despair of themselves. Despair is the devil's most potent instrument for effecting the ruin of man; for it is that which prevents him from rising again after he has fallen. St. Paul repented, and, not despairing, became equal to angels: Judas repenting, but despairing, rushed into perdition.

HOMILY I.

AGAINST THOSE WHO SAY THAT DEMONS GOVERN HUMAN AFFAIRS, AND WHO ARE DISPLEASED AT THE CHASTISEMENT OF GOD, AND ARE OFFENDED AT THE PROSPERITY OF THE WICKED AND THE HARDSHIPS OF THE JUST.

I INDEED was hoping, that from the contin-|" My iniquities have gone over my head, and uance of my discourse, you would have had a as a heavy burden have been burdensome to surfeit of my words: but I see that the con- me:"5 and Isaiah lamenting and bewailing "I trary is happening: that no surfeit is taking am unclean, and have unclean lips: "6 The place from this continuance, but that your desire is increased, that an addition is made not and saying that they have sinned and transto your satiety but to your pleasure, that the gressed, and have not kept the commandments same thing is happening which the winebib- of God. Daniel again makes the same bers at heathen drinking-bouts experience; lamentation. When after the enumeration of for they, the more they pour down unmixed these Saints, I called their accusers flies, and wine, so much the rather they kindle their introduced the right reason for the comparithirst, and in your case the more teaching we son, saying, that just as they fasten themselves inculcate, so much the rather do we kindle upon the wounds of others, so also the acyour desire, we make your longing greater, cusers bite at other people's sins, collecting your love for it the stronger. On this account, disease therefrom for their acquaintance, and although I am conscious of extreme poverty, those who do the opposite, I designated bees, I do not cease to imitate the ostentatious not gathering together diseases, but building among entertainers, both setting before you honeycombs with the greatest devotion, and so my table continuously, and placing on it the cup of my teaching, filled full: for I see that after having drunk it all, you retire again thirsting. And this indeed has become evience extended to some length, yea to an interminadent during the whole time, but especially ble length, such as never was, many indeed since the last Lord's Day: For that ye par-expected that your eagerness would be take of the divine oracles insatiably, that day quenched by the abundance of what was said. particularly shewed: whereon I discoursed But the contrary happened. For your heart about the unlawfulness of speaking ill one of another, when I furnished you with a sure subject for self accusation, suggesting that you The acclamations at least which took place at should speak ill of your own sins, but should the end were greater, and the shouts more not busy yourselves about those of other peo- clear, and the same thing took place as at the ple: when I brought forward the Saints as ac- forge. For as there at the beginning indeed cusing themselves indeed, but sparing others: the light of the fire is not very clear, but when Paul saying I am the chief of sinners, and that the flame has caught the whole of the wood God had compassion on him who was a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious, and height; so also accordingly this happened on calling himself one born out of due time, and the occasion of that day. At the beginning not even thinking himself worthy of the title indeed, this assembly was not vehemently of Apostle: Peter saying "Depart from me be-stirred by me. But when the discourse was cause I am a sinful man:" 3 Matthew styling extended to some length, and gradually took himself a publican even in the days of his hold of all the subjects and the teaching spread Apostleship: David crying out and saying more widely, then accordingly, then the desire of listening was kindled in you, and the applause we should waste the gift nevertheless gave it:

^{1 1} Tim. i. 13, 15.

he can take in.

2. This also happens at secular feasts. desire and divine longing.

lessness of the servants through their distinction of speech. For he indeed foreseeing that Eph. ii. 6, 7.

broke forth, more vehemently. On this ac- and they to whom it was entrusted, waxed evil count, although I had been prepared to say over their charge This is then one way of exless than was spoken, I then exceeded the planation, not that God wrested the gift from measure, nay rather I never exceeded the us but that we wasted what had been given. measure. For I am wont to measure the Then next after that, that we received after-amount of the teaching not by the multitude wards gifts greater than those lost. In place of the words spoken, but by the disposition of of temporal toil he honoured us with eternal the audience. For he who meets with a dis-life. In place of thorns and thistles he pregusted audience, even if he abridge his teach- pared the fruit of the Spirit to grow in our ing, seems to be vexatious, but he who meets souls. Nothing was more insignificant than with eager, and wide-awake, and attentive man, and nothing became more honoured than hearers, though he extend his discourse to man. He was the last item of the reasonable some length, not even thus fulfils their desire. creation. But the feet became the head, and But since it happens that there are in so by means of the first-fruits, were raised to the great a congregation, certain weak ones, una-royal throne. For just as some generous and ble to follow the length of the discourse, I opulent man who has seen some one escape wish to suggest this to them, that they should from shipwreck and only able to save his bare hear and receive, as much as they can, and body from the waves, cradles him in his hands, having received enough should retire: There is and casts about him a bright garment, and conno one who forbids, or compels them to reducts him to the highest honours; so also main beyond their natural strength. Let them God has done in the case of our nature. Man not however necessitate the abridgement of cast aside all that he had, his right to speak the discourse before the time and the proper freely, his communion with God, his sojourn hours. Thou art replete, but thy brother still in Paradise, his unclouded life, and as from a hungers. Thou art drunk with the multitude shipwreck, went forth bare. But God received of the things spoken, but thy brother is still him and straightway clothed him, and taking thirsty. Let him then not distress thy weak- him by the hand gradually conducted him to ness, compelling thee to receive more than heaven. And yet the shipwreck was quite unthine own power allows: nor do thou vex his pardonable. For this tempest was due entirely zeal by preventing him from receiving all that not to the force of the winds, but to the carelessness of the sailor.

And yet God did not look at this, but had Some indeed are more quickly satisfied, some compassion for the magnitude of the calamity, more tardily, and neither do these blame those, and him who had suffered shipwreck in harnor do they condemn these. But there indeed bour, he received as lovingly as if he had unto withdraw more quickly is praiseworthy, but dergone this in the midst of the open sea. here to withdraw more quickly is not praise- For to fall in Paradise is to undergo shipwreck worthy, but excusable. There to leave off in harbour. Why so? Because when no sadmore slowly, is culpable and faulty, here to ness, or care, or labours, or toil, or countless withdraw more tardily, brings the greatest waves of desire assaulted our nature, it was commendation, and good report. Pray why is upset and it fell. And as the miscreants this? Because there indeed the tardiness who sail the sea, often bore through the ship arises from greediness, but here the endur- with a small iron tool, and let in the whole ance, and patience are made up of spiritual sea to the ship from below; so accordingly then, when the Devil saw the ship of Adam, But enough of preamble. And we will pro- that is his soul, full of many good things, he ceed hereupon to that business which re- came and bored it through with his mere mained over to us from that day. What voice, as with some small iron tool, and then was that which was then spoken? that emptied him of all his wealth and sank the all men had one speech, just as also they ship itself. But God made the gain greater had one nature, and no one was different than the loss, and brought our nature to the in speech, or in tongue. Whence then comes royal throne. Wherefore Paul cries out and so great a distinction in speech? From the says, "He raised us up with him, and made us carelessness of those who received the gift— to sit with him, on his right hand in the of both of which matters we then spoke, heavenly places, that in the ages to come he shewing both the lovingkindness of the Master might shew the exceeding riches of his grace through this unity of speech, and the sense- in kindness towards us." What dost thou say?

the thing has already happened and has an lost, but had only taken away what had been to us. For we believe even now; but hearing and sight do not put a wonder before us in the same way, but just as in the case of kings from those who became unworthy of it. This diadem, and the golden raiment, and the royal goodness is it, says one, to take away the throne, we wonder indeed, but experience this gift? Wait, and thou shalt fully hear. For in greater degree when the curtains are drawn think, what Cain would have been, dwelling in aside and we see him seated on the lofty judg-ment seat. So also in the case of the Only-when he was expelled from that abode, if Begotten, when we see the curtains of heaven drawn aside, and the King of angels descend-holding the threat of death hanging over his ing thence, and with his body-guard of the head, if seeing the calamity of his father beheavenly hosts, then we perceive the wonder fore his eyes, and holding the traces of the to be greater from our sight of it. For con- wrath of God still in his hands, and encomsider with me what it is to see our nature passed with so great horrors, he lashed out borne upon the Cherubim, and the whole into such great wickedness, as to ignore nature, angelic force surrounding it.

to get hold of the lovingkindness of God in would he not have precipitated himself? whatever expressions we may try to grasp it, Wouldest thou learn too from the mother end, and dost thou say "in order that he might given to us, as we furnished the reason why, shew to the ages to come?" Has he not shewn? (for let this be added); even this is enough of He has already shewn, but not to all men, but itself to shew his tender care towards us. For to me who am faithful, but the unbelieving has not only to give, but also to take away what not yet seen the wonder. But then, in that was given, is a mark of the greatest lovingday the whole nature of man will come for-kindness, and, if you will, let us lay bare the ward, and will wonder at that which has been matter, in the case of Paradise. He gave done, but especially will it be more manifest Paradise. This of his own tender care. We when we hear of the purple robe, and the came of his own goodness. And what kind of and to forget one born from the same birth 3. But look, with me, too, at the wisdom of pangs, and to slay him who had done him no Paul, how many expressions he seeks for, so wrong, to lay hold on his brother's person, and as to present to us the lovingkindness of God. to dye his right hand with blood, and when For he did not speak merely the word grace, God wanted him to be still, to refuse submisnor riches, but what did he say? "The ex- sion and to affront his maker, to dishonour his ceeding riches of his grace in kindness." But parents; if this man had continued to dwell in notwithstanding even so, he is below the Paradise—look, into how great evil he would mark; and even as the slippery bodies when have rushed. For if when so many restraints grasped by countless hands, escape our hold, were laid upon him, he leapt with fatal leaps; and slip through easily; so also are we unable and if these walls were set at nought, whither

but the exceeding magnitude of it baffles the of this man, what a good result the expulsion feebleness of our utterances. And Paul therefore experiencing this, and seeing the force of Eve was before this, and what she became words defeated by its magnitude, desists after afterwards. Before this indeed, she considsaying one word: and what is this? "Thanks ered that deceiving Devil, that wicked Demon be to God for his unspeakable gift." 2 For to be more worth believing than the comneither speech, nor any mind is able to set mandments of God, and at the mere sight of forth the tender care of God. On this account the tree, she trampled under foot the law he then says that it is past finding out, and which had been laid down by Him. But when elsewhere "The peace of God which passeth the expulsion from Paradise came, consider all understanding shall keep your hearts." how much better and wiser she grew. For But, as I was saying, these two ways of ex-planation are found in the meantime: one in-a man through the Lord." She straightway deed that God has not wrested the gift that flew to the master, who before this had despised we have lost; and next, that the good things the master, and she neither ascribes the matter which have been given to us are even greater to nature, nor puts the birth down to the laws than those which we have lost. And I wish also of marriage, but she recognizes the Lord of to mention a third too. What then is the third? Nature, and acknowledges thanks to Him for That even if he had not given the things after the birth of the little child. And she who bethese, which were greater than those we had fore this deceived her husband, afterwards even trained the little child, and gave him a slew.": The woman remembers her calamity, rightly, but they lapsed to utter folly. had acknowledged their master, and had known do."3 how to be self-restrained, and to keep within

4. This argument therefore let us maintain name which of itself was able to bring the gift throughout, and let us apply it to the case of of God to her remembrance: and again when the subject lying before us. God gave a she bare another, she says "God hath raised speech common to all. This is part of his lovup seed to me in place of Abel whom Cain ing kindness to men. They did not use the gift and does not become impatient but she gives took away again that which had been given. thanks to God, and calls the little child after For if when they had one speech, they fell his gift, furnishing it with constant material for into so great folly, as to wish to build a tower instruction. Thus even in his very deprivation to heaven: had they not immediately been God conferred greater benefit. The woman chastised would they not have desired to lay suffered expulsion from Paradise, but by hold on the height of heaven itself? For means of her ejection she was led to a knowl- why? If indeed that were impossible for them, edge of God, so that she found a greater yet notwithstanding their impious thoughts are thing than she lost. And if it were profitable, made out from their plan. All which things God says one, to suffer expulsion from Paradise, for foresaw, and since they did not use their onewhat cause did God give Paradise at the be-ness of speech rightly, he rightly divided them ginning? This turned out profitably to man, by difference of speech. And see with me, his on account of our carelessness, since, if at lovingkindness. "Behold," saith he "they all least, they had taken heed to themselves, and have one speech, and this they have begun to

For what reason did he not at once proceed bounds, they would have remained in honour. to the division of tongues, but first of all de-But when they treated the gifts which had fend himself, as if about to be judged in a lawbeen given them with insolence, then it be-cane profitable, that they should be ejected. why hast thou thus done? yea he is at liberty For what cause then did God give at first? to do all things as he wills. But still as one In order that he might shew forth his own about to give account, he thus sets up a delovingkindness, and because He himself was fence, teaching us to be gentle and loving. prepared to bring us even to greater honour. For if the master defends himself to his serv-But we were the cause of chastisement and ants, even when they have done him this punishment on all sides, ejecting ourselves wrong; much more ought we to defend ourthrough our indifference to goods which were selves to one another, even if we are wronged given to us. Just as therefore an affectionate to the highest degree. See at least how he father, at first indeed, suffers his own son to defends himself. "Behold they have all one dwell in his home, and to enjoy all his father's mouth and one speech" saith he, "and this goods, but when he sees that he has become they have begun to do," as if he said let no worthless of the honour, he leads him away one accuse me of this when he sees the from his table, and puts him far from his own division of tongues. Let no one consider that sight, and often casts him forth from his this difference of speech was made over to paternal home, in order that he, suffering ex- men from the beginning. "Behold they all pulsion, and becoming better by this slight and have one mouth, and one speech." But they this dishonour, may again shew himself worthy did not use the gift aright. And in order that of restoration, and may succeed to his father's thou mayest understand that he does not chasinheritance: So has God done. He gave tise for what has taken place so much as he Paradise to man. He cast him out when he provides for improvement in the future, hear appeared unworthy, in order that by his dwell-the sequel "and now none of all the things will ing outside, and through his dishonour, he fail them, which they set on foot to do."4 might become better, and more self-restrained, Now what he says, is of such a kind as this. and might appear worthy again of restoration. If they do not pay the penalty now, and be Since after those things he did become bet-restrained from the very root of their sins, ter, he brings him back again and says "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." they will never cease from wickedness. For this is what "none of the things will fail them Dost thou see that not the gift of Paradise but which they set on foot to do" means, as if he even the ejection from Paradise was a token said, and they will add other deeds yet more of the greatest tender care? For had he not monstrous. For such a thing is wickedness; if suffered expulsion from Paradise, he would not when it has taken a start it be not hindered, again have appeared worthy of Paradise, as fire catching wood, so it rises to an unspeakable height. Dost thou see that the de- work of God, but an invention of our own will, privation of oneness of speech was a work of but this is for the destruction of the other. He much lovingkindness? He inflicted differ-calls then by the name of evil the affliction, ence of speech upon them, in order that they which arises from our punishment; thus nammight not fall into greater wickedness. Hold ing it not in regard to its own nature, but acfast this argument then with me, and let it cording to that view which men take of it. ever be fixed and immoveable in your minds, For since we are accustomed to call by the that not only when he confers benefits but name of evil, not only thefts and adulteries, even when he chastises God is good and lov- but also calamities; so he has called the mating. For even his chastisements and his punishments are the greatest part of his beneficence, the greatest form of his providence. "There is no evil in the city which the Lord Whenever therefore thou seest that famines hath not done." This too by means of Isaiah have taken place, and pestilences, and drought God has made clear saying "I am God who and immoderate rains, and irregularities in the maketh peace and createth evil," again namatmosphere, or any other of the things which ing calamities evils. This evil also Christ chasten human nature, be not distressed, nor hints at, thus saying to the disciples, "suffibe despondent, but worship Him who caused cient for the day is the evil thereof," that is them, marvel at Him for His tender care. For to say the affliction, the misery. It is manifest He who does these things is such that He even then on all sides, that he here calls punishchastens the body that the soul may become ment evil; and himself brings these upon us, sound. Then does God these things saith affording us the greatest view of his providence. one? God does these things, and even if For the physician is not only to be commended the whole city, nay even if the whole universe when he leads forth the patient into gardens Would that my voice were clearer than a trum- of water, nor yet when he sets before him a pet, and that it were possible to stand in a well furnished table, but when he orders him to testify that God does these things. I do him with hunger and lays him low with thirst, not say these things in arrogance but I have confines him to his bed, both making his house the prophet standing at my side, crying and a prison, and depriving him of the very light, Lord hath not done "--now evil is an ambig-tains, and when he cuts, and when he cauter-uous term; and I wish that you shall learn izes, and when he brings his bitter medicines, the exact meaning of each expression, in order he is equally a physician. How is it not then that on account of ambiguity you may not preposterous to call him a physician who does blasphemy.

they would not have become the sources of one. But He does not chasten with hunger good to us, chastening our pride, goading our alone, but with countless other things. Him makes them purer, which renders them more manifold. zealous, which leads them on to love of wisdom; not that which comes under suspicion honour, or crown those only who dwell in cities, were here I will not shrink from saying this. and meadows, nor even into baths and pools lofty place, and to cry aloud to all men, and to remain without food, when he oppresses "There is no evil in the city which the and shadowing his room on all sides with curconfound the nature of the things, and fall into so many evil things, but to blaspheme God, if at any time He doeth one of these things, if He 5. There is then evil, which is really evil; bring on either famine or death, and to reject fornication, adultery, covetousness, and the his providence over all? And yet He is the only countless dreadful things, which are worthy of true physician both of souls and bodies. On the utmost reproach and punishment. Again this account He often seizes this nature of ours there is evil, which rather is not evil, but is wantoning in prosperity, and travailing with a called so, famine, pestilence, death, disease, and fever of sins, and by want, and hunger, and others of a like kind. For these would not be death and other calamities and the rest of the evils. On this account I said they are called medicines of which He knows, frees us from so only. Why then? Because, were they evils, diseases. But the poor alone feel hunger, says sloth, and leading us on to zeal, making us who is in poverty He has often corrected with more attentive. "For when," saith one, "he hunger, but the rich and him who enjoys prosslew them, then they sought him, and they re-perity, with dangers, diseases, untimely deaths. turned, and came early to God."2 He calls For He is full of resources, and the medithis evil therefore which chastens them, which cines which He has for our salvation are and is worthy of reproach; for that is not a nor do they provide gifts alone, but they also often correct. On this account both the sword even separately, and deprivation is not the is sharpened by them, and tortures are pre- less serviceable than bestowal; what excusa-How is it not then preposterous, that madness. we should thus approve of a father indeed and a any time raise us up, when we are as it were, thou wouldest know their wickedness well by our fellow servants a share?

But if it is right to give thanks for both these the Master. Learn the wickedness of the pared; both the wheel and the stocks, and the bleness should we have, tell me, in recompensexecutioners, and countless other forms of ing in a contrary spirit, and being impatient chastisement. That which the executioner is to with Him when we ought to worship, who is so the judges, famine is to God—as an executioner gentle, and loving and careful, who is wiser correcting us and leading us away from vice. than every Physician, and more full of affec-This too, it is possible to see in the case of tion than any father, juster than any judge, the husbandmen: They do not then, only and more anxious than any husbandman, in protect the root of the vine, nor hedge it round healing these souls of ours? What then could but prune it, and lop off many of the branches; be more insane and senseless than they who in on this account not only have they a hoe, but the midst of so great good order, say that we a sickle too, suitable for cutting: yet notwith- are deprived of the providence of God? For standing we do not find fault with them, but just as if some one were to contend that the then above all we admire them, when we see soul was murky and cold, he would produce an them cutting off much that is unserviceable, example of extreme insanity, by his opinion; so as through the rejection of what is superflu- so if any one doubts about the providence of ous to afford great security to that which re- God, much rather is he liable to charges of

Not so manifest is the Sun, as the proviphysician and a judge, and a husbandman, and dence of God is clear. But nevertheless some should neither blame nor censure him who dare to say that Demons administer our casts his son out of his house nor the physi- affairs. What can I do? Thou hast a loving cian who puts his patient to torture nor the Master. He chooses rather to be blasphemed by judge who corrects, nor the husbandman who thee through these words, than to commit thine prunes: but that we should blame and smite affairs to the Demons and persuade thee by with countless accusations God, if he would at the reality how Demons administer. For then besotted through the great drunkenness which the experience of it. But rather indeed now it comes of wickedness? How great madness is possible to set it before you as it were by a would it not be, not even to allow God a share certain small example. Certain men possessed of the same self-justification, of which we allow of Demons coming forth out of the tombs met Christ, and the Demons kept beseeching him 6. Fearing these things for them who re- to suffer them to enter the herd of swine. proach God, I speak now, in order that they may not kick against the pricks, and cover their own feet with blood, that they may not Thus do Demons govern; and yet to them throw stones to heaven, and receive wounds the swine were of no particular account, but on their own head. But I have somewhat else with thee there is ever a warfare without a' far beyond this to say. For omitting to ask truce, and an implacable fight, and undying (I say this by way of concession) if God took hatred. And if in the case of those with whom from us to our profit, I only say this; that if they had nothing in common they did not even He took what had been given, not even thus, endure that they should be allowed a brief could anyone be able to reproach Him. For breathing space of time: if they had gotten He was Lord of his own. Among men indeed, unto their power us their enemies who are when they entrust us with money, and lend us perpetually stinging them what would they not silver, we give them our thanks for the time have done? and what incurable mischief would during which they lent it, we are not indignant they not have accomplished? For for this at the time at which they take back their own. reason God let them fall upon the herd of And shall we reproach God who wishes to take swine, in order that in the case of the bodies back his own? Indeed now is this not the of irrational animals thou mayest learn their extreme of folly? yea the great and noble wickedness, and that they would have done Job did not act thus. For not only when he to the possessed the things which they did to received, but even when he was deprived, he the swine, had not the demoniacs in their very gives the greatest thanks to God saying "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; may the name of the Lord be blessed for ever." thou seest a man excited by a Demon, worship things than these which they now suffer. And He does not chasten all. in order that he may I would ask this of those who say these things, what kind of disorder they behold in the But he chastens some in order that he may them ordained from the beginning.

and the band of stars, and all the rest keep chastened, and those who are not chastened much good order, but our affairs are full of For he separates their wickedness from those, confusion and disorder. What kind of con- and he makes the others by their punishment, fusion, O man, and disorder? A certain one, more self-restrained. And this is manifest says he, is rich, and overbearing, He is from what Christ himself said. For when they rapacious and covetous, he drains the sub-announced to him that a tower had been stance of the poor day by day, and suffers brought to the ground, and had buried certain no terrible affliction. Another lives in for-men, he saith to them "What think ye? that

Demons. For it is possible to see both things bearance, self-restraint, and uprightness, and in the case of these Demons, the lovingkind- is adorned with all other good qualities, and ness of God, and the evil of the Demons. The is chastened with poverty and disease, and exevil of the Demons when they harass and distremely terrible afflictions. Are these then the turb the soul of the demented: and the loving-matters which offend thee? Yes, these, says kindness of God whenever he restrains and hin- he. If then thou seest both of the rapacious, ders so savage a Demon, who has taken up his many chastened, and of those living virtuabode within, and desires to hurl the man ously, yea some even enjoying countless goods, headlong, and does not allow him to use his why dost thou not abandon thine opinion, and own power to the full, but suffers him to ex- be content with the Almighty? Because it is hibit just so much strength, as both to bring this very thing which offends me more. For the man to his senses, and make his own why when there are two evil men, is one wickedness apparent. Dost thou wish to chastened, and another gets off, and escapes; form another example to see once more how and when there are two good men, one is a Demon arranges matters when God allows honoured, and the other continues under punhim to use his own power? Consider the ishment? And this very thing is a very great herds, the flocks of Job, how in one instant of work of God's providence. For if he were to time he annihilated all, consider the pitiable chasten all the evil men, here; and were to death of the children, the blow that was dealt honour here all the good men, a day of judgto his body: and thou shalt see the savage ment were superfluous. Again if he were to and inhuman and unsparing character of the chasten no wicked man, nor were to honour wickedness of the Demons, and from these any of the good, then the base would become things thou shalt know clearly that if God had baser and worse, as being more careless than entrusted the whole of this world to their the excellent, and they who were minded to authority, they would have confused and dis- blaspheme would accuse God all the more, turbed everything, and would have assigned and say that our affairs were altogether deto us their treatment of the swine, and of prived of his providence. For if when certain those herds, since not even for a little breathing evil men are chastened, and certain good men space of time could they have endured to punished, they likewise say that human affairs spare us our salvation. If Demons were to are subject to no providence; if even this did arrange affairs, we should be in no better con- not happen what would they not say? and dition than possessed men, yea rather we what words would they not send forth? On this should be worse than they. For God did not account some of the wicked he chastens, and give them over entirely to the tyranny of the some he does not chasten and some of the Demons, otherwise they would suffer far worse good he honours and some he does not honour. present, that they set down all our affairs to make the more careless, through fear by means the arrangement of Demons? And yet we be- of the punishment of the others, more in earhold the sun for so many years proceeding nest. Again he honours certain of the good, in day by day in regular order, a manifold band order that he may lead on others by his of stars keeping their own order, the courses honours to emulate their virtue. But he does of the moon unimpeded, an invariable succes- not honour all, in order that thou mayest learn sion of night and day, all things, both above that there is another season for rendering to and below, as it were in a certain fitting har-mony, yea rather even far more, and more ac-to receive their deserts here, they would discurately each keeping his own place, and not believe the account of the Resurrection. But if departing from the order which God who made no one were to receive his desert here, the majority would become more careless. On this 7. And what is the use of all this, says one, account some he chastens, and others he does when the heaven indeed, and sun, and moon, not chasten, profiting both those who are these men were sinners only? I say to you ago have perished. He who has called his nay, but if ye do not repent ye also shall suffer brother fool, "is liable to the hell of fire" saith the same thing." 1 us bring forward those sins which all, without righteousness, or in sins, chastening is a usecontradiction, commit: and from these it will ful thing for us, sometimes making us more be plain and manifest to us, that if we were distinguished, sometimes rendering us more

He.3 Is there then any one of us who has Dost thou see how those perished on ac- never sinned this sin? What then? ought he to count of their sin, and the rest did not escape be straightway carried off? Therefore we on account of their righteousness, but in order should have been all carried off and would that they might become better by the punish- have disappeared, long ago, indeed very long ment of the others? Were not then the chas ago. Again he who swears, saith he, even if tened unjustly dealt with says one? For they he fulfil his oath, doeth the works of the could without being chastened themselves be-come better by the punishment of others. sworn? Yea rather who is there who has never But if He had known that they would become sworn falsely? He who looketh on a woman, better from penitence God would not have saith he, with unchaste eyes,5 is wholly an chastened them. For if when he foresaw that adulterer, and of this sin any one would find many would profit nothing from his longsuf- many guilty. When then these acknowledged fering, he nevertheless bears with them, with sins are such and so insufferable, and each of much tolerance, fulfilling his own part, and these of itself brings upon us inevitable chasaffording them an opportunity of coming out tisement, if we were to reckon up the secret of their own senselessness to their sober senses sins committed by us, then we shall see esone day; how could he deprive those who were pecially that the providence of God does not about to become better from the punishment bring upon us punishment for each sin. So of others, of the benefit of repentance? So that when thou seest anyone rapacious, covetthat they are in no way unjustly treated, both ous, and not chastened, then do thou unfold their evil being cut off by their punishment, thine own conscience; reckon up thine own and their chastening is to be lighter there, be- life, go over the sins which have been comcause they suffered here beforehand. Again, mitted and thou shalt learn rightly that in thine they who were not chastened are in no way own case first, it is not expedient to be chasunjustly treated; for it was possible for tened for each of thy sins: for on this account them, had they wished, to have used the long- the majority make reckless utterances, since suffering of God, to accomplish a most excel- they do not look on their own case before that lent change, and wondering at his tolerance, to of others, but we all leaving our own alone, have become ashamed at his exceeding for- examine that of the rest. But let us no longer bearance, and one day to have gone over to do this, but the reverse, and if thou seest any virtue, and to have gained their own salvation righteous man chastened, remember Job: for by the punishment of others. But if they if any one be righteous, he will not be more remain in wickedness, God is not to blame, righteous than that man, nor within a small who on this account was longsuffering, that he distance of approaching him. And if he sufmight recover them, but they are unworthy of fer countless ills, he has not yet suffered so pardon, who did not rightly use the longsuffer- much, as that man. ing of God: and it is not only possible to use 8. Taking this then into thy mind, cease this argument as a reason why all the wicked charging the master; learning that it is not are not chastened here, but another also not by way of deserting him does God let such an less than this. Of what kind then is this? one suffer ill, but through desire to crown him, That if God brought upon all, the chastenings and make him more distinguished. And if which their sins deserved, our race would have thou seest a sinner punished, remember the been carried off, and would have failed to paralytic who passed thirty eight years on his come down to posterity. And in order that bed. For that that man was delivered over thou mayest learn that this is true, hear the then to that disease through sin, hear Christ prophet saying "If Thou observedst iniquity saying "Behold thou art made whole; sin no O Lord, who shall stand?" And if it seems more lest a worse thing happen to thee."6 good to thee to investigate this saying, leaving. For either when we are chastened, we pay the the accurate enquiry into the life of each, penalty of our sins, or else we receive the alone: (For it is not possible even to know all occasion of crowning if, when we live in rectithat has been accomplished by each man) let tude, we suffer ill. So that whether we live in chastened for each of our sins, we should long self-controlled, and lightening our punishment to come for us. For that it is possible that one there is no God. For if a ship having few chastened here, and bearing it thankfully sailors, and passengers, would not be conducshould experience milder punishment there ted safely for one mile even, without the hand hear St. Paul saying "For this reason many are weak and sickly, and some sleep. For if we judged ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged we are corrected by the Lord, that we should not be condemned dence presiding over it, both governing, and with the world." Knowing all these things continually maintaining this whole fabric, and therefore, Let us both moralize in this way on if in shame, through the common opinion of the providence of God, and stop the mouths of all men, and the experience of affairs, they the gainsayers. And if any of the events which confess that there is a God, let us say this to happen pass our understanding, let us not them. If there is a God, as indeed there is, from this consider that our affairs are not gov- it follows that He is just, for if He is not just erned by providence, but perceiving His prov- neither is He God, and if He is just He recomidence in part, in things incomprehensible let penses to each according to their desert. But us yield to the unsearchableness of His wis- we do not see all here receiving according to dom. For if it is not possible for one not their desert. Therefore it is necessary to hope conversant with it to understand a man's art, for some other requital awaiting us, in order much rather is it impossible for the human that by each one receiving according to his understanding to comprehend the infinity of desert, the justice of God may be made manithe providence of God. "For his judgments fest. For this consideration does not only are unsearchable and his ways past finding contribute to our wisdom about providence out"2 But nevertheless from small portions alone, but about the Resurrection; and let us we gain a clear and manifest faith about the teach others, and let us do all diligence to whole, we give thanks to him for all that hap- shut the mouths of them who rave against the pens. For there is even another consideration master, and let us ourselves glorify him in all that cannot be contradicted, for those who wish things. For thus shall we win more of his care, to moralize about the providence of God For and enjoy much of his influence, and thus shall we would ask the gainsayers, is there then a we be able to escape from real evil, and obtain God? and if they should say there is not, let future good, through the grace and lovingkindus not answer them. For just as it is worthless to answer madmen, so too those who say ness of our Lord Jesus Christ, By whom and with whom be glory to the Father, with the Holy Spirit, now and always, for ever and lever. Amen.

1 1 Cor. xi. 30-32.

2 Rom. xi. 33.

HOMILY II.

AGAINST THOSE WHO OBJECT BECAUSE THE DEVIL HAS NOT BEEN PUT OUT OF THE WORLD: AND TO PROVE THAT HIS WICKEDNESS DOES NO HARM TO US-IF WE TAKE HEED: AND CONCERNING REPENTANCE.

of our feet over the morning discourse, when ing, which we all also pray ever to receive, and

I. WHEN Isaac, in old time, was desirous to we saw his fatherly face, forgot our weakness, eat a meal at the hands of his son, he sent his lay aside our fatigue, were uplifted with pleasson forth from the house to the chace. But ure; we saw his illustrious hoary head, and our when this Isaac was desirous to accept a meal soul was filled with light. On this account at my hands he did not send me forth from too, we set out our table with readiness, in the house, but himself ran to our table. What order that he should eat and bless us. There could be more tenderly affectionate than he? is no fraud and guile, here, as there was then, What more humble? who thought fit to shew there. One indeed was commanded to bring his warm love thus, and deigned to descend so the meal—but another brought it. But I was far. On this account surely, we also having commanded to bring it, and brought it too. spent the tones of our voice, and the strength Bless me then, O my father, with spiritual blesswhich is profitable not only to thee, but also the will of God than ten thousand transgresearth.

what was lately said with a view to our love of their own power, nor win crowns. you. For still—still—we renew our discourse power from above. We learned therefore this own slothfulness. one thing first, that he does not overcome us world, these ten thousand would not have to me, and to all these. Entreat the common sors." And next, that if the antagonist were master of us all, to prolong thy life to the old taken away he who overcomes is thereby inage of Isaac. For this is both for me, and jured. For if thou lettest the adversary refor these, more valuable, and more needful main, the more slothful are injured, not on than the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the account of the more diligent, but by their own slothfulness; whereas if thou takest away the But it is time to proceed to set out our antagonist, the more diligent are betrayed on table; what then is this? The remains of account of the slothful, and neither exhibit

2. Perhaps ye have not yet understood what concerning the Devil, which we started two has been said. Therefore it is necessary that days ago, which we also addressed to the ini- I should say it again more clearly. Let there tiated, this morning when we discoursed be one antagonist. But let there be also two to them about renunciation, and covenant. athletes about to wrestle gainst him, and of And we do this, not because our discourse these two athletes let one be consumed with about the Devil is sweet to us, but because the gluttony, unprepared, void of strength, nervedoctrine about him is full of security for you. less; but the other diligent, of good habit, For he is an enemy and a foe, and it is a passing his time in the wrestling school, in great security to know clearly, the tactics of many gymnastic exercises, and exhibiting all your enemies. We have said lately, that he the practice which bears upon the contest. If does not overcome by force, nor by tyranny, then thou takest away the antagonist, which of nor through compulsion, nor through violence, these two hast thou injured? The slothful, Since were this so, he would have destroyed all men. And in testimony of this we brought has toiled so much? It is quite clear that it is forward the swine, against which the Demons the earnest one: For the one indeed is were unable to venture anything, before the wronged by the slothful, after the antagonist permission of the Master. The herds and has been taken away. But the slothful, while flocks of Job. For not even did the Devil he remains, is no longer injured on account of venture to destroy these, until he received the earnest. For he has fallen, owing to his

I will state another solution of this question, by force, or by compulsion; next after that, in order that thou mayest learn, that the Devil we added that even when he overcomes by does not injure, but their own slothfulness deceitfulness, not thus does he get the better everywhere overthrows those who do not take of all men, Then again we brought that heed. Let the Devil be allowed to be exceedathlete Job. himself into the midst, against ing wicked, not by nature, but by choice and whom he set countless schemes going, and not conviction. For that the Devil is not by even thus got the better of him, but withdrew nature wicked, learn from his very names. defeated. One question still remains. What For the Devil, the slanderer that is, is called so then is this matter? That if he does not over- from slandering; for he slandered man to come says one, by force, yet by deceitfulness. God saying "Doth Job reverence thee for And on this account it were better that he nought? but put out thine hand, and touch should be destroyed. For if Job got the bet- what he hath, see if he will not blaspheme ter of him, yet Adam was deceived and over-thee to thy face." He slandered God again thrown. Now if once for all he had been to man saying "Fire fell from heaven and removed from the world, Adam would never burnt up the sheep." For he was anxious to have been overthrown. But now he remains, persuade him, that this warfare was stirred and is defeated indeed by one, but gets the up from above, out of the heavens, and he set better of many. Ten overcame him, but he the servant at variance with the master, and himself overcomes and wrestles down ten the master with his servant; rather he did not thousand and if God took him away from the set them at variance, but attempted to indeed, but was not able, in order that whenever thou perished. What then shall we say to this? mayest set another servant at variance with That first of all they who overcame are more his master, Adam with God, and believing the valuable far than they who are defeated, Devil's slander, thou mayest learn that he even if the latter be more, and the former less. gained strength, not owing to his own power "For better is one," saith he "that doeth but from that man's slothfulness and carelessness. He is called the Devil therefore on that is called wicked. But his wickedness is not see this beautiful and wondrous creation itself from his nature, but from his choice. For becoming a cause of impiety to many, shall we even this at one time is present, at another blame it? In no wise, but them who were not indeed with him at the beginning, but of God, a cause of impiety? "The wise called apostate. Although many men are ings, and worshipped and served the creature. wicked, he alone is called wicked by pre-emi-nence. Why then is he thus called? Be-cause though in no way wronged by us, having no grudge whether small or great, when he saw of the knowledge of God. How then has it mankind had in honour, he straightway envied become the cause of impiety? Not owing to its him his good. What therefore could be worse own nature, but owing to the carelessness of than this wickedness, except when hatred and those who do not take heed. What then? war exist, without having any reasonable Shall we take away even the creation? tell cause. Let the Devil then be let alone, and me. let us bring forward the creation, in order that And why do I speak about the creation? thou mayest learn that the Devil is not the Let us come to our own members. For even cause of ills to us, if we would only, take heed: these we shall find to be a cause of destruction in order that thou mayest learn that the weak if we do not take heed, not because of their in choice, and the unprepared, and slothful, own nature, but because of our sloth. And even were there no Devil, falls, and casts him- look; an eye was given, in order that thou self into many a depth of evil. The Devil is mayest behold the creation and glorify the evil. I know it myself and it is acknowedged Master. But if thou dost not use the eye well, by all, yet give heed strictly to the things it becomes to thee the minister of adultery. which are now about to be said. For they are A tongue has been given, in order that thou not ordinary matters, but those about which mayest speak well, in order that thou mayest many words, many times, and in many places praise the Creator. But if thou givest not arise, about which there is many a fight and excellent heed, it becomes a cause of blasbattle not only on the part of the faithful phemy to thee. And hands were given thee against unbelievers but also on the part of the that thou mayest stretch them forth unto faithful against the faithful. For this is that prayer. But if thou are not wary, thou stretchwhich is full of pain.

said, to be evil by all. What shall we say about works, but if thou art careless thou wilt cause this beautiful and wondrous creation? Pray wicked works by means of them: Dost thou is the creation too, wicked? and who is so see that all things hurt the weak man? Dost corrupt, who so dull, and demented as to actual thou see that even the medicines of salvation cuse the creation? what then shall we say inflict death upon the weak, not because of about this? For it is not wicked, but is both their own nature but because of his weakness? beautiful and a token of the wisdom and power God made the heaven in order that thou mayand lovingkindness of God. Hear at least est wonder at the work, and worship the mashow the prophet marvels at it, saying, "How ter. But others leaving the creator alone, are thy works magnified O Lord! in wisdom have worshipped the heaven; and this from account. But to slander, and to refrain from through them one by one, but withdrew before slander is not natural, but an action which the incomprehensible wisdom of God. And takes place and which ceases to take place, that he has made it thus beautiful and vast hear occurring and ceasing to occur. Now such a certain one saying, "From the vastness and things do not reach the rank of the nature or beauty of the creatures, the originator of them of the essence of a thing. I know that this is proportionably seen." Hear too Paul sayconsideration about essence and accident is ing, "For the invisible things of Him, since hard to be grasped by many. But there are the creation of the world, are clearly seen, they who are able to lend a finer ear, where-fore also we have spoken these things. Do made." For each of these by which he you wish that I should come to another name? spake declared that the creation leads us to You shall see that that also is not a name the knowledge of God, because it causes us to which belongs to his essence or nature. He know the Master fully. What then? If we time is absent. Do not thou then say this to unable to use the medicine rightly. Whence me that it always remains with him. For it was then is this which leads us to the knowledge afterwards came upon him; wherefore he is saith he "were darkened in their understand-est them out unto covetousness. Feet were 3. The Devil then is acknowledged, as I given in order that thou mayest run unto good Thou hast made them all." He did go their own carelessness and senselessness. But strong is injured not even by the Devil?

on all sides, but the strong is benefited on all body.

why do I speak of the creation? assuredly should be swallowed up by over much sorrow." what could be more conducive to salvation And, "we be taken advantage of by Satan."6 than the Cross? But this Cross has become an We have snatched beforehand the man from offence to the weak. "For the word of the the gullet of the wild beast, he saith. For the Cross is to them that are perishing, foolishness: Apostle often used the Devil as an execubut to those which are being saved, it is the tioner. For the executioners punish those power of God." And again, "we preach who have done wrong, not as they choose, but Christ crucified, unto Jews a stumbling-block as the judges allow. For this is the rule for and unto Gentiles foolishness." What could the executioner, to take vengeance, giving be more fit for teaching than Paul, and the heed to the command of the judge. Dost apostles? But the Apostles became a savour thou see to what a dignity the Apostle of death to many. He says at least "to one a mounted? He who was invested with a body, savour from death unto death: to the other a used the bodiless as an executioner; and that savour from life unto life."3 Dost thou see which their common master saith to the Devil, that the weak is hurt even by Paul, but the concerning Job: charging him thus, "Touch his flesh, but thou shalt not touch his life;"7 4. Dost thou wish that we should exercise giving him a limit, and measure of vengeance, the argument in the case of Jesus Christ? in order that the wild beast might not be im-What is equal to that salvation? what more petuous and leap upon him too shamelessly; profitable than that presence? But this very this too the Apostle does. For delivering the saving presence, so profitable, became an adformicator over to him he says "For the deditional means of chastening to many. "For struction of the flesh," that is "thou shalt not for judgment" saith he "came I into this touch his life." Dost thou see the authority world, that they which see not may see, and of the servant? Fear not therefore the Devil, that they which see may become blind." 4 even if he be bodiless: for he has come in What dost thou say? The light became a cause contact with him. And nothing is weaker than of blindness? The light did not become a he who has come into such contact even cause of blindness, but the weakness of the eyes of the soul was not able to entertain the then nothing is stronger than he who has boldlight. Thou hast seen that a weak man is hurt ness even though he bear about a mortal sides For in every case, the purpose is the 5. All these things have been now said by cause, in every case the disposition is master. me, not in order that I may discharge the Since the Devil, if thou wouldest understand Devil from blame, but that I may free you it, is even profitable to us, if we use him from slothfulness. For he wishes extremely aright, and benefits us greatly, and we gain no to attribute the cause of our sins to himself, in ordinary advantages; and this, we shewed in a order that we being nourished by these hopes, small degree from the case of Job. And it is and entering on all kinds of evil, may increase possible also to learn this from Paul: for writ- the chastening in our own case, and may meet ing about the fornicator he thus speaks "Deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved." 5 Behold even the Devil has become selves. Let us know our wounds. For thus a cause of salvation, but not because of his shall we be able to apply the medicines. For own disposition, but because of the skill of the he who does not know his disease, will give no Apostle. For as the physicians taking serpents care to his weakness. We have sinned much: and cutting off their destructive members, pre- I know this well. For we are all liable for pare medicines for antidotes; so also did penalties. But we are not deprived of pardon; Paul. He took whatever was profitable of the nor shall we fall away from repentance for we chastening that proceeds from the Devil, and still stand in the arena, and are in the strugleft the rest alone; in order that thou mayest gles of repentance. Art thou old, and hast thou learn that the Devil is not the cause of salva- come to the last outlet of life? Do not consider tion, but that he hasted to destroy and devour even thus that thou hast fallen from repentmankind. But that the Apostle through his ance, nor despair of thine own salvation, but own wisdom cut his throat: hear in the second consider the robber who was freed on the cross. epistle to the Corinthians, what he saith about for what was briefer than that hour in which this very fornicator, "confirm your love he was crowned? Yet notwithstanding even towards him," "lest by any means such an one this was enough for him, for salvation. Art

¹ 1 Cor. i. 18. 4 John ix. 39.

² 1 Cor. i. 23. 5 1 Cor. v. 5.

^{3 2} Cor. ii, 16,

^{6 2} Cor. ii. 8, 7, 11.

thou young? Do not be confident in thy tender, and kind. She asked, against her adters of virtue. Our Master Christ is loving.

and different, and all lead to heaven. The next the forgiveness of our neighbours' sins, sins. "Declare thou first thy sins that thou which comes of almsgiving, fifth that which condemns his sins, is slower to fall into them and thy poverty is in no way a hindrance. And again. Awake thy conscience, that inward why do I speak thus, when not even in that a grudge against thine enemies to overcome anger, to forgive the sins of our fellow-servants. For so will those which have been done stantly apply these medicines, in order that we judge? But thou hast a gentle Master, both and always and for ever and ever. Amen.

youth, nor think that thou hast a very fixed versaries, but thou dost not ask against thine term of life, "For the day of the Lord so adversaries, but on behalf of thine own salva-cometh as a thief in the night." On this ac-count he has made our end invisible, in order I will say almsgiving. For this has a great that we might make our diligence and our power and unspeakable. For Daniel saith to forethought plain. Dost thou not see men Nebuchadnezzar when he had come to all taken away prematurely day after day? On kinds of evil, and had entered upon all impiety, this account a certain one admonishes "make "O King let my counsel be acceptable unto no tarrying to turn to the Lord and put not off thee, redeem thy sins by almsgiving and thine from day to day," 2 lest at any time, as thou iniquities by compassion on the poor." 8 What delayest, thou art destroyed. Let the old man could be compared with this lovingkindness? keep this admonition, let the young man take After countless sins, after so many transgresthis advice. Yea, art thou in security, and art sions, he is promised that he will be reconciled thou rich, and dost thou abound in wealth, and with him he has come into conflict with if he does no affliction happen to thee? Still hear will show kindness to his own fellow-servants. what Paul says "when they say peace and And modesty, and humility, not less than all safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon words spoken, exhaust the nature of sins. And them." 3 Affairs are full of much change. We the publican is proof, being unable to declare are not masters of our end. Let us be mas- his good deeds, in sight of all, bringing forward his humility, and laying aside the heavy burden 6. Do you wish that I shall speak of the ways of his sins. See we have shewn five ways of of repentance? They are many, and various, repentance: first the condemnation of sins, first way of repentance is condemnation of thirdly that which comes of prayer, fourth that mayest be justified." 4 Wherefore also the pro- comes of humility. Do not thou then be lazy; phet said "I said, I will speak out, my trans- but walk in all these day by day. For the ways gression to the Lord, and thou remittedst the are easy, nor canst thou plead poverty. And iniquity of my heart." 5 Condemn thyself even if thou livest poorer than all, thou therefore for thy sins. This is enough for the art able to leave thine anger, and be humble, Master by way of self-defence. For he who and to pray fervently, and to condemn sins, accuser, in order that thou mayest have no way of repentance in which it is possible to accuser at the judgment seat of the Lord. spend money (I speak of almsgiving), not This is one way of repentance, the best; and even there is poverty any hindrance to us from there is another not less than this, not to bear obeying the command? The widow who spent against the master be forgiven us. See the may return to health and enjoy the sacred second expiation of sins: "For if ye forgive" table with assurance; and with much glory, saith he, "your debtors, your Heavenly Father reach Christ the king of glory, and attain to will also forgive you." 6 Dost thou wish to everlasting good by the grace, and compassion, learn a third way of repentance? Fervent and and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, diligent prayer, and to do this from the bottom of the heart. Hast thou not seen that widow, how she persuaded the shameless holy, and good and quickening Spirit, now

¹ ¹ Thess. v. 2. ⁴ Isa. xliii, 26. ⁷ Luke xviii, 3.

² Ecclus. v. 8, 5 Ps. xxxii, 5.

^{3 1} Thess. v. 3. 6 Matt. vi. 14.

⁸ Dan. iv. 27.

⁹ Luke xviii, 13.

HOMILY III.

THAT EVIL COMES OF SLOTH, AND VIRTUE FROM DILIGENCE, AND THAT NEITHER WICKED MEN, NOR THE DEVIL HIMSELF, ARE ABLE TO DO THE WARY MAN ANY HARM. PROOF OF THIS FROM MANY PASSAGES, AND AMONGST OTHERS FROM THOSE WHICH RELATE TO ADAM AND TO JOB.

our sermon concerning the Devil, out of our speech not by word, but by deed, shewing him love for you. But others, the day before yes- another fellow servant living in virtue and forterday while these matters were being set on bearance. There is no need of long speeches, foot here, took their places in the theatre, and no need of a complex plan, nor even of syllowere looking on at the Devil's show. They gisms. By means of deeds the proof is brought were taking part in lascivious songs; ye were about. He said to him: thou art a servant, having a share in spiritual music. They were and he is a servant; thou art a man and he is eating of the Devil's garbage: ye were feeding on spiritual unguents. Who pray decoyed art nourished with the same nourishment under them? Who pray separated them from the the same heaven: How is it that thou art livsacred flock? them? How did he not deceive you? you count God allowed the wicked to be mingled and they are men alike; I mean as regards with the good; and did not give one law to your nature. You and they have the same soul, you have the same desires, so far as world as a colony for the good, but mixed nature is concerned. How is it then that you and they were not in the same place? Because you and they have not the same purpose. On this account they indeed are under deception, but you beyond deception. I do not say these things again as discharging the Devil from accusation, but as desiring earnestly to free you from sins. The Devil is wicked; I grant this indeed, but he is wicked for himself not wickedness is of this kind. It is destructive to those alone who hold to it. Virtue is the contrary. It is not only able to profit those who hold to it, but those nearest at hand too. And in order that thou mayest learn that evil is evil in itself, but good is also good to others, I provide thee with proverbial evidence: "My son" saith he "if thou art become evil, thou shalt bear thine evils alone, but if wise, for thyself and thy neighbour." 1 were not deceived. This is the greatest proof of things, a clear testimony, and unquestionable reasoning, that in every case, the purpose is master. Do thou accordingly use this method of proof, and if thou seest a man living in wickedness, and exhibiting all kinds of evil; then blaming the providence of God, and saying that by the necessity of fortune and fate and through tyranny of Demons He gave us our nature, and on all sides shifting the cause from himself indeed, and transferring it to the

I. The day before yesterday we set on foot creator who provides for all; silence his Did the Devil pray deceive ing in wickedness, he in virtue? on this acthe wicked indeed, and appointed another these and those; conferring great benefit. For the good appear more thoroughly approved when they are in the midst of those who try to hinder them from living rightly, and who entice them to evil, and yet keep hold of virtue. "For there must" he saith "be also heresies among you that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." 2

Therefore also on this account he has left towards us if we are wary. For the nature of the wicked to be in the world, in order that the good may shine the brighter. Dost thou see how great is the gain? But the gain is not owing to the wicked, but owing to the courage of the good. On this account also we admire Noe, not because he was righteous nor yet because he was perfect alone, but because in that perverse and wicked generation he preserved his virtue, when he had no pattern of virtue, when all men invited him to wickedness; and he went his whole way contrary to They were deceived in the theatre, but ye them, like some traveller, pursuing his way while the great multitude is being borne along vehemently. On this account he did not simply say "Noe was just, perfect," but added "in his generation" in that perverse, that desperate generation, when there was no acquisition of virtue. To the good indeed then this was the gain from the wicked. Thus at all events, also trees tossed about by contrary winds, become stronger. And there is a gain to the wicked from their mixing with the good. They feel confusion, they are ashamed, they blush in their presence; and even if they do not may transfer the wicked to their own manner abstain from evil, yet nevertheless they dare of conduct. But the righteous are few, for the what they dare with secrecy. And this is no leaven is small. But the smallness in no way small thing not to have transgression publicly committed. For the life of the others becomes the accuser of the wickedness of these. of the power inherent in it. So accordeous man. "He is grievous to us, even when force not in the magnitude of their number, beheld," and it is no small beginning of but in the grace of the Spirit. There were amendment to be tormented at his presence, twelve Apostles. Dost thou see how little is For if the sight of the righteous man did not the leaven? The whole world was in unbetorment them, this word would not have been lief. Dost thou see how great is the lump? uttered. But to be stung, and pinched in conscience at his presence, would be no little hinter themselves. The leaven and the lump had the drance to indulging in wickedness with pleas- same nature but not the same manner of conure, Dost thou see how great is the gain both duct. On this account he left the wicked in to the good from the wicked, and to the wicked the midst of the good, that since they are of from the good? On this account God has the same nature as the righteous they may not set them apart, but allowed them to be also become of the same purpose. mingled together.

192

have the power of leaven, in order that they sation. "Thou art an austere man." For he

Hear at least what they say about the right-ingly the power also of the righteous has its

Remember these things. With these stop the 2. Let our argument also about the Devil mouths of the indolent, the dissolute, the be the same. For on this account He hath slothful, the indisposed towards the labours of left him also to be here, in order that he virtue, those who accuse their common Masmight render thee the stronger, in order that ter. "Thou hast sinned" he saith "be still."3 he may make the athlete more illustrious, in "Do not add a second more grievous sin.4 It order that the contests may be greater. When is not so grievous to sin, as after the sin to therefore any one says, why has God left accuse the Master. Take knowledge of the the Devil here? say these words to him, be cause of the sin, and thou wilt find that it is cause he not only does no harm to the wary none other than thyself who hast sinned. and the heedful, but even profits them, not Everywhere there is a need of a good intenowing to his own purpose (for that is wicked), tion. I have shewn you this not from simple but owing to their courage who have used that reasoning only, but from the case of fellowwickedness aright. Since he even fixed upon servants living in the world itself. Do thou Job not on this account that he might make also use this proof. Thus too our common him more illustrious, but in order that he might master will judge us. Learn this method of upset him. On this account he is wicked both proof, and no one will be able to reason with because of such an opinion and such a pur-you. Is any a fornicator? Shew him another pose. But notwithstanding he did no harm to who is self-restrained. Is any covetous and the righteous man, but he rather rejoiced in rapacious? Shew him one who gives alms. the conflict as we accordingly shewed. Both Does he live in jealousy and envy? Shew him the Demon shewed his wickedness and the righteous man his courage. But he does upset anger? Bring into the midst one who is living many says one: owing to their weakness, not in wisdom, for we must not only have reowing to his own strength: for this too has course to ancient example, but take our been already proved by many examples, models from present times. For even to-day Direct thine own intention aright then, and by the grace of God, good deeds are done not thou shalt never receive harm from any, but less than of old. Is a man incredulous? and shall get the greatest gain, not only from the does he think that the scriptures are false? good but even from the wicked. For on this Does he not believe that Job was such as he account, as I have before said, God has suffered men to be with one another, and espelife of that righteous person. Thus will the cially the wicked with the good, in order that Master also judge us: He places fellow servthey may bring them over to their own virtue. ants with fellow-servants, nor does he give sen-Hear at least what Christ saith to his disciples, tence according to his own judgment, in order "The Kingdom of heaven is like unto a that no one may begin to say again, as that woman who took leaven and hid it in three servant said, who was entrusted with the talent, measures of meal."2 So that the righteous and who instead of a talent brought the accuthose and to these.

ought to mourn, because he did not double to the Kingdom. But if the Devil were the the talent, but rendered his sin the more cause to them of their sins, these would not be grievous, by adding to his own idleness, his destined to be chastened, when another sinned accusation against the Muster. For what saith and drove them on. Dost thou see here both he? "I knew thee that thou art an austere those who sin, and those who do good works? man." O miserable, and wretched, ungrateful Dost thou see how on seeing their fellow-servand lazy man! Thou oughtest to have accused thine own idleness, and to have taken away somewhat from thy former sin. But thou in bringing an account against the master hast Here again there are purposes which are updoubled thy sin instead of doubling thy talent. right, and purposes which are sinful, in order 3. On this account God places together thou mayest see side by side, both the sins of servants and servants in order that the one set the one and the good works of the others. may judge the other, and that some being For the comparison makes these things the judged by the others may not be able for the future to accuse the master. On this account, and these were five, and also those. All he saith "The Son of Man cometh in the glory awaited the bridegroom. How then did some of his Father." See the equality of the glory: enter in, and others did not enter in? Behe does not say in glory like to the glory of cause some indeed were churlish, and others the Father, but in the glory of the Father, were gentle and loving. Dost thou see again and will gather together all the nations. Ter- that the purpose determined the nature of the rible is the tribunal: terrible to the sinful, and the accountable. Since to those who are ments were parallel, and that the verdict given conscious to themselves of good works, it is proceeds from those who are like each other? desirable and mild. "And he will place the Fellow-servants will judge fellow-servants. sheep on his right hand, and the kids on his Dost thou wish that I should shew thee a comleft." Both these and those are men. For parison arising from contrasts? for there is one what reason then are those indeed sheep but also from contrasts so that the condemnation these kids? Not that thou mayest learn a dif-may become the greater. "The men of Nin-ference in their nature, but the difference in eveh" he saith "shall rise up, and shall contheir purpose. But for what reason are they demn this generation." The judged are no who did not show compassion kids? Because longer alike, for the one are barbarians, the that animal is unfruitful and is not able to others are Jews. The one enjoyed prophetic contribute services, either by its milk, or by teaching, the others were never partakers of a progeny, or by its hair, to those who possess divine instruction. And this is not the only it, being on all sides destitute of such a con- difference, but the fact that in that case a tribution as this, on account of the immaturity servant went to them, in this the master; and of its age. On this account he has called those that man came and proclaimed an overthrow: who bear no fruit, by comparison, kids, but but this man declared the glad tidings of a those on the right hand sheep. For from these kingdom of heaven. Which of these was it the the offering is great, both of their natural wool, more likely, would believe? The barbarians, their progeny, and their milk. What then and ignorant, and they who had never partaken does he say to them? "Ye saw me hungering of divine teaching, or they who had from their and ye fed me, naked and ye clothed me, a earliest age been trained in prophetic books? stranger and ye took me in." Again to those To every one, it is plain, that the Jews would he says the contrary. And yet both these and be more likely to believe. But the contrary those were alike men, both these and those took place. And these disbelieved the Master received the same promises, the same rewards when he preached a kingdom of heaven, but were assigned to both on doing right. The those believed their fellow-servant when he same person came both to these and to those, threatened an overthrow: in order that their with the same nakedness: and to these and to goodness, and these men's folly might be those with the same hunger, and in the same manifested to a greater degree. Is there a way and a stranger. All things were alike to Demon? a Devil? chance? or Fate? has not each become the cause to himself both of evil, How then was the end not the same? Be- and of virtue? For if they themselves were cause the purpose did not permit it. For this not to be liable to account, he would not have alone made the difference. On this account said that they shall judge this generation. Nor the one set went to Gehenna, but the other would he have said that the Queen of the every way to have the advantage, turn out to returned to God? She ought then immedibe worsted. On this account, we made men- ately to have fled from the bait, she ought to tion of Adam and of Job, for there is neces- have started back from the snare. "Ye shall sity to revert to that subject, so as to put the not die the death," saith he "for God knowfinish to our discourse. He attacked Adam indeed by means of mere words, but Job by means of deeds. For the one he denuded of all his wealth, and deprived of his children. But from this man he took not away anything, of the plot. "The serpent came" saith he "and said to the woman, What is it that God hath said, ye shall not eat of every tree which is in the garden?" Here it is a serpent; there a woman, in the case of Job: counsellors. The one 2 is a servant, the other 3 a partner of the man's life. She is a helpmate, but the other is under subjection. Dost thou see how unpardonable this is? Eve indeed, the servant in subjection deceived: but him 4 not even his partner, and helpmate could overthrow. But let us see what he saith. "What had not existed before; and breathed a soul is this that God hath said, thou shalt not eat into him, and made him according to his image, of every tree?" Assuredly indeed God did not say this but the opposite. See the villany of the Devil. He said that which was not spoken, in order that he might learn what was spoken. What then did the woman? She ought to have silenced him, she ought not to have exchanged a word with him. In foolishness she declared the judgment of the Master. Thereby she afforded the Devil a powerful handle.

4. See what an evil it is to commit ourselves rashly to our enemies, and to conspirators against us. On this account Christ used to say, "Give not holy things to the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before the swine, lest they turn and rend you." 5 And this happened in the case of Eve. She gave the holy things to the dog, to the swine. He trod under foot the words: and turned and rent the woman. And see how he works evil. "Ye shall not die the death" saith he.6

Give me your attention on this point, that the woman was able to understand the deceit. For he immediately announced his enmity, and his warfare against God, he immediately contradicted Him. Let it be so. Before this thou declaredst the judgment to one who wished to learn it. After this why didst thou follow

South would condemn the Jews. For then one who said the opposite? God said ye indeed not only will one people condemn shall die the death." The Devil made answer another people, but one man will often judge to this and said "ye shall not die the death." a whole people, when they who, it is allowed. What could be clearer than this warfare? might readily have been deceived, are found From what other quarter ought one to learn to remain undeceived, and they who ought in the enemy and the foe, than from his answer eth, that on the day on which ye eat, your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as Gods. In hope of a greater promise she cast away the goods in her hand. He promised that he would make them Gods, and cast them down into great or little of his possessions. But let us the tyranny of death. Whence then O woman rather examine the very words and the method didst thou believe the Devil? What good didst thou discern? Was not the trustworthiness of the lawgiver sufficient to prove that the one was God, both creator and framer of the world, and the other the Devil and an enemy? And I do not say the Devil. Thou thoughtest that mean while great is the difference between the he was a mere serpent. Ought a serpent to claim such equality that thou shouldest tell him the Master's judgment? Thou seest that it was possible to perceive the deceit, but she would not, and yet God gave many proofs of his own beneficence and shewed forth his care of his works. For he formed man, who making him ruler of all things upon the earth, and granted him a helpmate, planted Paradise, and having committed to him the use of the rest of the trees, refused him the taste of one only: and this very prohibition he made for man's advantage. But the Devil manifested no good things by his deed, whether little, or great: but exciting the woman with mere words and puffing her up with vain hopes, thus he deceived her. But nevertheless she considered the Devil to be more worthy of credit than God, although God shewed forth his good will by his works. The woman believed in one who professed mere words, and nothing else. Dost thou see how, from folly alone and sloth, and not from force, the deceit happened? and in order that thou mayest learn it more clearly hear how the scripture accuses the woman: For it does not say, being deceived, but "seeing the tree that it was fair, she ate." So that the blame belongs to her uncontrolled vision, not to the deceit alone which comes from the Devil. For she was defeated by yielding to her own desire, not by the wickedness of the Demon. On this account she did not have the benefit of pardon, but though she said, "the serpent deceived me," she paid the uttermost penalty. For it was in her power not to have fallen. And in order that thou mayest understand this more then than Job, who was poorer than the out-where all men bewail this. What was poorer the evil smell which surrounded him was clearly, come, let us conduct our discourse to casts at the baths, and those who sleep in the the case of Job; from the defeated to the ashes of the furnace, poorer in fact than all vanquisher, from the conquered to the con-men? For these indeed have one ragged garqueror. For this man will give us greater zeal, so that we may raise our hands against the Devil. There he who deceived and conquered the flesh, and this the Devil destroyed on all was a serpent; here the tempter was a woman, sides, with a distressing kind of decay. Again and she did not prevail: and yet at least she these poor folk are at least under the roof of was far more persuasive than he. For to Job the porches at the baths, and are covered with after the destruction of his wealth, after the a shelter. But he continued always to pass his loss of his children, after being stripped bare of all his goods, her wiles were added. But in the other case there was nothing of this kind. greater, the fact that these are conscious of Adam did not suffer the destruction of his many terrible evils within themselves, but he children, nor did he lose his wealth: he did was conscious of nothing against himself. For not sit upon a dunghill, but inhabited a Para- this is to be noticed in each of the things dise of luxury and enjoyed all manner of fruits, which happened to him, a thing which caused and fountains and rivers, and every other kind him greater pain, and produced more perplexof security. Nowhere was there labour or pain, or despair and cares, or reproaches, and place. These persons then, as I said, would insults, or the countless ills which assailed have many things with which to reproach Job: but nevertheless, when nothing of this themselves. And this contributes no little to kind existed, he fell and was overthrown. Is consolation in calamity; to be conscious in it not evident that it was on account of sloth? oneself of being punished justly. But he was Even so therefore as the other, when all these deprived of this consolation, and while exhibthings beset him, and weighed upon him, stood iting a conversation full of virtue, endured the nobly and did not fall, is it not evident that his fate of those who had dared to do extreme steadfastness was owing to his vigilance of soul? wickedness. And these folk who are with us, 5. On both sides, beloved, reap the utmost are poor from the outset, and from the begingain, and avoid the imitation of Adam know- ning are versed in calamity. But he endured ing how many ills are begotten of indolence: calamity in which he was unversed, experiencand imitate the piety of Job, learning how ing the immense change from wealth. As then many glorious things spring from earnestness. Consider him, the conqueror throughout, and place, is the greatest consolation; so it is not thou shalt have much consolation in all pain less than this, to have been versed in poverty and peril. For as it were in the common from the beginning, and so to continue in it. theatre of the world that blessed and noble Of both these consolations that man was deman stands forth, and by means of the suffer-ings which happened to him discourses to all Dost thou see him indeed come to extreme to bear all things which befal them nobly, and poverty, even in comparison with which it is never give in to the troubles which come upon impossible to find a fellow? For what could them. For verily, there is no human suffering be poorer than the naked who has not even which cannot receive consolation from thence. a roof over him? Yea rather not even was it For the sufferings which are scattered over the in his power to enjoy the bare ground, but he sat whole world, these came together, and bore upon the dunghill. Therefore whenever thou down upon one body, even his. What pardon seest thyself come to poverty, consider the sufthen shall there be for him who is unable to fering of the just one, and straightway thou bear with thankfulness his share of the troubles shalt rise up, and shake off every thought of which are brought upon him? Since he ap- despondency. This one calamity therefore pears not bearing a part only, but the entire seems to men to be the groundwork of all ills of all men, and in order that thou mayest sufferings together. And the second after it, not condemn the extravagance of my words, yea rather before it, is the affliction of the come, and let us take in hand severally the ills body. Who then was even so disabled? Who that came upon him, and bring forward this endured such disease? Who received or saw fulfilment of them. And if thou wishest, let any one else receive so great an affliction? us first bring forward that which seems to be No one. Little by little his body was wasted, the most unendurable of all, I mean poverty, and a stream of worms on every side issued and the pain which arises from it. For every- from his limbs, the running was constant, and strong, and the body being destroyed little by very bloom of youth, ten who displayed much little, and decaying with such putrefaction, used virtue, and that not by the common law of to make food distasteful and hunger was to nature, but by a violent and pitiable death. him strange and unusual. For not even was Who could be able to recount so great a he able to enjoy the nourishment which was calamity? No one. Whenever therefore thou given to him. For saith he "I see my food to losest son and daughter together, have recourse into weakness, O man, remember that body much comfort for thyself. Were these then and that saintly flesh. For it was saintly and the only misfortunes which happened to him? pure, even when it had so many wounds. And The desertion and treachery of his friends, justly and without any reasonable pretext, be and derision, and the tearing in pieces by all, hanged upon the pillory, and has his sides was something intolerable. For the character rasped to pieces, let him not think the matter of calamities is not of such a kind, that they to be a reproach, nor let him give way to the who reproach us about our calamities are pain when he thinks upon this saint. But this wont to vex our soul. Not only was there no man, says one, has much comfort and consola-tion in knowing that God was bringing these sides beset him with taunts. And thou seest sufferings upon him. This indeed especially him lamenting this bitterly, and saying "but troubled and disturbed him, to think that the even you too fell upon me." 5 And he calls just God who had in every way been served them pitiless, and says "My neighbours have by him, was at war with him. And he was not rejected me, and my servants spake against able to find any reasonable pretext for what me, and I called the sons of my concubines, took place, since, when at least he afterwards and they turned away from me."6 "And learned the cause, see what piety he shewed, for others" saith he "sport upon me, and I bewhen God said to him "Dost thou think that came the common talk of all." And my very thou mightest appear righteous?" 2 conscious- things at least are unbearable to hear, still stricken he says "I will lay my hand upon my more to endure in their reality, extreme povmouth, once have I spoken but to a second erty, and intolerable disease new and strange, word I will not proceed," and again "as far the loss of children so many and so good, as the hearing of the ear I have heard thee and in such a manner, reproaches and gibes, before, but now mine eye hath seen thee, and insults from men. Some indeed mocked wherefore I have held myself to be vile, and and some reproached and others despised; not am wasted away, and I consider myself to be only enemies, but even friends; not only earth and ashes." 4 dost not suffer any of these misfortunes at the happened in that man's case alone) not even hands of God are crowned, so also thou shalt terrify me in visions?" What man of iron, obtain the same reward, because thou hast what heart of steel could have endured so upon thee from men, and didst give thanks to unbearable in itself, consider what a tumult him who was able indeed to hinder them, but their simultaneous approach excited. But not willing.

disease, and both in the extremest degree guile in his lips. brought upon this just man. Dost thou wish that I should shew thee the warfare at nature's the medicines for our ills, and his grievous hands, in such excessive degree waged then surging sea the harbour of our sufferings, and against this noble man? He lost ten children, in each of the accidents which befal us, let us be loathsome." Whenever then thou fallest to this just man, and thou shalt find altogether if any one belong to the army, and then un- and the gibes, and raillery, and the mockery I have had dealings with thee in order that raiment" saith he "abhorred me" These friends, but even servants, and they not only 6. But if thou thinkest that this is sufficient mock and reproach, but even abhorred him, for consolation, thou wilt thyself also be able to and this not for two or three, or ten days, but experience this comfort. And even if thou for many months; and (a circumstance which hands of God but owing to the insolence of had he comfort by night, but the delusions of men; and yet givest thanks and dost not blas- terrors by night were a greater aggravation of pheme him who is able to prevent them in his misfortunes by day. For that he endured deed, but who permits them for the sake of more grievous things in his sleep, hear what he testing thee: just as they who suffer at the says "why dost thou frighten me in sleep, and borne nobly the calamities which were brought many misfortunes? For if each of these was nevertheless he bore all these, and in all that Behold then! thou hast seen poverty and happened to him he sinned not, nor was there

7. Let the sufferings of that man then be the ten at one fell swoop, the ten in the consider this saint, and seeing one person exhausting the misfortunes of the universe, we against, when the curse prevailed and when was not so great, when sin was hard to fight and ever. Amen.

shall conduct ourselves bravely in those which death was terrible. But now our wrestlings fall to our share, and as to some affectionate have become easier, all these things being remother, stretching forth her hands on all sides, moved after the coming of Christ; so that we and receiving and reviving her terrified chil- have no excuse, when we are unable to reach dren, so let us always flee to this book, and even if the pitiable troubles of all men assail and such advantage, and so many gifts given us, let us take sufficient comfort for all and so to us by God. Considering therefore all these depart. And if thou sayest, he was Job, and things, that misfortunes were greater for him, for this reason bore all this, but I am not and that when the conflict was more grievous, like him; thou suppliest me with a greater action he stripped for the contest; let us bear all cusation against thyself and fresh praise of that comes upon us nobly, and with much him. For it is more likely that thou shouldest be able to be able to bear all this than he. Why pray? obtain the same crown as he, by the grace and Because he indeed was before the day of grace lovingkindness of Jesus Christ our Lord, with and of the law, when there was not much whom be glory to the Father together with strictness of life, when the grace of the Spirit the Holy Spirit, now and always and for ever

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY

ON THE PASSAGE (MATT. XXVI. 29), "FATHER IF IT BE POSSIBLE LET THIS CUP PASS FROM ME," ETC., AND AGAINST MARCIONISTS AND MANICHÆANS.

TRANSLATED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

CONTENTS.

ī.	The cross of Christ foretold and prefigured in the Old Testament			PAGE 201
2.	Christ voluntarily submitted to be crucified: the wonderful effects of the $\cos s$			202
3.	God the Father and the Son one in purpose and will. The mystery of the Incarnation			20.
4.	Christ prayed in order to prove the reality of His human nature, and to leave us an example			205

AGAINST MARCIONISTS AND MANICHÆANS.

ON THE PASSAGE "FATHER IF IT BE POSSIBLE LET THIS CUP PASS FROM ME, NEVERTHELESS NOT AS I WILL BUT AS THOU WILT: " AND AGAINST MARCIONISTS AND MANICHÆANS: ALSO, THAT WE OUGHT NOT TO RUSH INTO DANGER, BUT TO PREFER THE WILL OF GOD BEFORE EVERY OTHER WILL.

the pain. Following their example let me to- seeking. day, devising means for them to derive benefit What then is the meaning of the passage probable also that any heretics who are presbrethren.

attack and to relieve those who are in perplextake in hand the words which have been cited, suffice unless knowledge also be added to it.

1. I LATELY inflicted a severe stroke upon until one came who instructed him in the those who are grasping and wish to overreach meaning of what he was reading he derived no others; I did this not in order to wound them great benefit from it. In order therefore that but in order to correct them; not because I you may not be in the same condition attend hate the men, but because I detest their wick- to what is said, exert your understanding, let edness. For so the physician also lances the me have your mind disengaged from other abscess, not as making an attack upon the suf-thoughts, let your eye be quick-sighted, your fering body, but as a means of contending intention earnest: let your soul be set free with the disorder and the wound. Well to-day from worldly cares, that we may not sow our let us grant them a little respite, that they may words upon the thorns, or upon the rock, or recover from their distress, and not recoil from by the way side, but that we may till a deep the remedy by being perpetually afflicted, and rich field, and so reap an abundant Physicians also act thus; after the use of the harvest. For if you thus attend to what is knife they apply plasters and drugs, and let a said you will render my labour lighter and few days pass whilst they devise things to allay facilitate the discovery of that which you are from my discourse, start a question concerning which has been read "Father if it be possible doctrine, directing my speech to the words let this cup pass from me?" What does the which have been read. For I imagine that saying mean? For we ought to unlock the many feel perplexed as to the reason why passage by first giving a clear interpretation of these words were uttered by Christ: and it is the words. What then does the saying mean? "Father if it be possible take away the cross." ent may pounce upon the words, and there- How sayest thou? is he ignorant whether this by upset many of the more simple-minded be possible or impossible? Who would venture to say this? Yet the words are those of In order then to build a wall against their one who is ignorant: for the addition of the word "if," is indicative of doubt: but as I ity from bewilderment and confusion, let us said we must not attend to the words merely, but turn our attention to the sense, and learn and dwell upon the passage, and dive into the the aim of the speaker, and the cause and the depths of its meanings. For reading does not occasion, and by putting all these things together turn out the hidden meaning. The un-Even as the eunuch of Candace read, but speakable Wisdom then, who knoweth the Father even as the Father knoweth the Son, This was such a very common topic with Chrysostom that it affords no clue to the date of the Homily.

For this knowledge concerning His passion pened, so is it impossible that this should not me" He says "even so know I the Father." of God? For even the prophets appear not hand with much assurance that so it must come to pass, and would certainly be.

have power to take it again," 4 and again "De- taken away." 13 stroy this temple and in three days I will raise diet things to come as if they were already thy footstool." But Esaias also declares the past. For just as it is impossible that things cause; saying, "for the transgressions of my past. For just as it is impossible that things which have happened should not have hap-

was not greater than the knowledge concern- happen, although it be future. On this acing His essential nature, which He alone ac count they predict things to come under the curately knew. "For as the Father knoweth semblance of past time, indicating by this means the impossibility of their failure, the And why do I speak of the only begotten Son certainty of their coming to pass. So also spake David, signifying the cross; "They to have been ignorant of this fact, but to have pierced my hands and my feet." He did not known it clearly, and to have declared before-say they "shall pierce" but "they pierced" "they counted all my bones." And not only does he say this, but he also describes the Hear at least how variously all announce things which were done by the soldiers. the cross. First of all the patriarch Jacob: "They parted my garments among themselves, for directing his discourse to Him he says and upon my vesture did they cast lots." 10 "Out of a tender shoot didst thou spring up:"2 And not only this but he also relates they gave by the word shoot signifying the Virgin and Him gall to eat, and vinegar to drink. For the undefiled nature of Mary. Then indicat- he says "they gave me gall for my food, and ing the cross he said "Thou didst lie down for my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." " and slumber as a lion, and as a lion's whelp; And again another one says that they smote who shall raise him up?"3 Here he called him with a spear, for "they shall look on Him death a slumbering and a sleep, and with death whom they pierced." 12 Esaias again in another he combined the resurrection when he said fashion predicting the cross said He was led "who shall raise him up?" No one indeed as a sheep to the slaughter, and as a lamb besave he himself—wherefore also Christ said fore his shearer is dumb, so openeth he not his "I have power to lay down my life, and I mouth." In his humiliation his judgment was

2. Now observe I pray how each one of these it up."5 And what is meant by the words writers speaks as if concerning things already "thou didst lie down and slumber as a lion?" past, signifying by the use of this tense the For as the lion is terrible not only when he is absolute inevitable certainty of the event. So awake but even when he is sleeping, so Christ also David, describing this tribunal, said, also not only before the cross but also on the "Why did the heathen rage and the people cross itself and in the very moment of death imagine vain things? The Kings of the earth was terrible, and wrought at that time great stood up, and the rulers were gathered tomiracles, turning back the light of the sun, gether against the Lord and against his cleaving the rocks, shaking the earth, rending Christ." And not only does he mention the the veil, alarming the wife of Pilate, convict- trial, and the cross, and the incidents on the ing Judas of sin, for then he said "I have cross, but also him who betrayed him, declarsinned in that I have betrayed the innocent ing that he was his familiar companion and blood;" and the wife of Pilate declared "Have guest. "For," he saith, "he that eateth bread nothing to do with that just man, for I have with me did magnify his heel against me." 15 suffered many things in a dream because of Thus also does he foretell the voice which Him."7 The darkness took possession of the Christ was to utter on the cross saying "My earth, and night appeared at midday, then God, My God why hast thou forsaken me?" 16 death was brought to nought, and his tyranny and the burial also does he describe: "They was destroyed: many bodies at least of the laid me in the lowest pit, in dark places, and saints which slept arose. These things the in the shadow of death." And the resurrec-patriarch declaring beforehand, and demonstrating that, even when crucified, Christ would neither shalt thou suffer thy Holy One to see be terrible, said "thou didst lie down and corruption;" 18 and the ascension: "God has slumber as a lion." He did not say thou shalt gone up with a merry noise, the Lord with the slumber but thou didst slumbe, rbecause it sound of the trump." 19 And the session on the would certainly come to pass. For it is the right hand: "The Lord said to my Lord sit custom of the prophets in many places to pre- thou on my right hand until I make thy foes

20 Ps. cx. I.

¹ John x. 15. 2 Gen. xlix. q. Septuagint rendering. 4 John x. 18. 7 Matt. xxvii. 10. 5 John ii. 19. 6 Matt. xxvii. 4.

⁸ Ps. xxii. 17. 11 Ps. lxix. 22. 14 Ps. ii. 1, 2. 17 Ps. lxxxviii. 5. 9 Ps. xxii. 18. 12 Zach. xii. 10. 15 Ps. xli. 9. 18 Ps. xvi. 11.

¹⁰ Ps. xxii. 19. 13 Isa. liii. 7, 8. 16 Ps. xxii. 1. 19 Ps. xlvii. 5.

people is He brought to death," and because dergo this, how can He who calls Himself the all have strayed like sheep, therefore is he good shepherd beseech that he may not be sacrificed." Then also he adds mention of sacrificed? And how could He say "I lay the result, saying "by his stripes we have all down my life of myself"? For if thou layest been healed: "3 and "he hath borne the sins of down thy life of thyself, how canst thou bemany." 4 The prophets then knew the cross, and the cause of the cross and that which was down? And how is it that Paul marvels at effected by it, and the burial and the resurrection, and the ascension, and the betrayal, and the trial, and described them all with accuracy: and is He who sent them and commanded but emptied Himself taking the form of a them to speak these things ignorant of them servant, being made in the likeness of men, Himself? What reasonable man would say that? Seest thou that we must not attend merely to the words? For this is not the only perplexing passage, but what follows is more perplexing. For what does He say? "Father if it be possible let this cup pass from me." Here he will be found to speak not only as if if He does not desire to lay it down, but depignorant, but as if deprecating the cross: For this is what He says. "If it be permissible let me not be subjected to crucifixion and death." And yet when Peter, the leader of the apostles, said this to Him, "Be it far from thee Lord, this shall not happen unto Thee,' He rebuked him so severely as to say; "get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offence unto me, for thou savourest not the things which be of God, but those which be of men:"5 although a short time before he had pronounced him blessed. But to escape crucifixion seemed to Him so monstrous a thing, that him who had received the revelation from the Father, him whom He had pronounced blessed, him who had received the keys of Heaven, He called Satan, and an offence, and accused him of not savouring the things which be of God because he said to Him, "Be it far from thee Lord, this shall never be unto Thee"-namely crucifixion. He then who thus vituperated the disciple, and poured such an invective upon him as actually to call him Satan (after having bestowed such great praise on him), because he said "avoid crucifixion," how could He desire not to be crucified? and how after these things when drawing the picture of the good shepherd could He declare this to be the special proof of his virtue, that he should be sacrificed for the sake of the sheep, thus saying, "I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep?"6 Nor did He even stop there, but also added, "but he that is an hireling and not the shepherd seeth the wolf coming and leaveth the sheep, and fleeth."7 If then it is the sign of the good shepherd to sacrifice himself, and of the hireling to be unwilling to un-seech another that thou mayest not lay it Him on account of this declaration, saying "Who being in the form of God counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, and being found in fashion as a man he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea, the death of the cross."8 And He Himself again speaks in this wise, "For this cause doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life that I may take it again." 9 For recates the act, and beseeches the Father, how is it that He is loved on this account? For love is of those who are like minded. And how does Paul say again "Love one another even as Christ also loved us and gave Himself for us?" 10 And Christ Himself when He was about to be crucified said "Father, the hour has come: glorify thy Son," " speaking of the cross as glory: and how then does He deprecate it here when He urges it there? For that the cross is glory listen to what the evangelist says "the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified." 12 Now the hearing of this expression is "grace was not yet given because the enmity towards men was not yet destroyed by reason that the cross had not yet done its work." For the cross destroyed the enmity of God towards man, brought about the reconciliation, made the earth Heaven, associated men with angels, pulled down the citadel of death, unstrung the force of the devil, extinguished the power of sin, delivered the world from error, brought back the truth, expelled the Demons, destroyed temples, overturned altars, suppressed the sacrificial offering, implanted virtue, founded the Churches. The cross is the will of the Father. the glory of the Son, the rejoicing of the Spirit, the boast of Paul, "for," he says, "God forbid that I should boast save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." 13 The cross is that which is brighter than the sun, more brilliant than the sunbeam: for when the sun is darkened then the cross shines brightly: and the sun is darkened not because it is extinguished, but because it is overpowered by the brilliancy of the cross. The cross has broken our bond, it has made the prison of death ineffectual, it is the demonstration of the love of God. "For

¹ Isa. liii. 8. 4 Isa. liii. 12. 7 John x. 12.

² Isa. liii. 6, 7.

³ Isa, liii. 5. 6 John x. 11.

⁸ Phil. ii. 6-8. 11 John xvii. 1.

⁹ John x. 17. 12 John vii. 39. 10 Ephes. v. 2.

cup, if He did not desire to be crucified? For that is the word of one who signifies the evening the cross was awaiting Him.

rebukes the disciple because he was trying to hinder Him, and proves that what constitutes the good shepherd is his sacrificing himself on behalf of the sheep, and declares that he earnestly longs for this thing, and willingly goes to meet it, how is it that He beseeches it may not come to pass? And if He did not wish it what difficulty was there in hindering those who came for that purpose? But in fact you behold Him hastening towards the deed. At not as I will but as Thou wilt"? Perhaps I least when they came upon Him He said "Whom seek ye?" and they replied "Jesus." Then He saith to them "Lo! I am He: and been uttered I know well that your zeal is still they went backward and fell to the ground." 6 then surrendered Himself, that thou mightest learn that not by compulsion or force, or the tyrannical power of those who attacked Him,

God so loved the world that He gave His did He unwillingly submit to this, but willingly only-begotten Son, that every one who believes with purpose and desire, preparing for it a in Him should not perish." And again Paul long time before. Therefore also were prosays "If being enemies we were reconciled to phets sent beforehand, and patriarchs foretold God by the death of His Son." The cross is the events, and by means of words and deeds the impregnable wall, the invulnerable shield, the cross was prefigured. For the sacrifice of the safeguard of the rich, the resource of the Isaac also signified the cross to us: wherefore poor, the defence of those who are exposed to also Christ said "Abraham your father rejoiced snares, the armour of those who are attacked, to see my glory and he saw it and was glad." the means of suppressing passion, and of acquiring virtue, the wonderful and marvellous sign. "For this generation seeketh after a deprecate it? Thus Moses also prevailed sign: and no sign shall be given it save the over Amalek when he displayed the figure of sign of Jonas"; and again Paul says, "for the the cross: and one may observe countless Jews ask for a sign and the Greeks seek wis- things happening in the Old Testament dedom, but we preach Christ crucified." 4 The scriptive by anticipation of the cross. For what cross opened Paradise, it brought in the rob- reason then was this the case if He who was ber, it conducted into the kingdom of Heaven to be crucified did not wish it to come to pass? the race of man which was about to perish, and And the sentence which follows this is yet was not worthy even of earth. So great are more perplexing. For having said "Let this the benefits which have sprung and do spring cup pass from me He added "nevertheless not from the cross, and yet doth He not desire to as I will but as Thou wilt."8 For herein as be crucified I ask? Who would venture to far as the actual expression is concerned we say this? And if He did not desire it who find two wills opposed to one another: if at compelled Him, who forced Him to it? and least the Father desires Him to be crucified, why did He send prophets beforehand an-nouncing that He would be crucified, if He we everywhere behold Him desiring and purposwas not to be, and did not wish to undergo it? ing the same things as the Father. For when And for what reason does He call the cross a He says "grant to them, as I and Thou are one that they also may be one in us," 9 it is equivalent to saying that the purpose of the desire which he has concerning the act. For Father and of the Son is one. And when He as the cup is sweet to those who are thirsty so says "The words which I speak I speak not also was crucifixion to Him: wherefore also myself, but the Father which dwelleth in me, He said "With desire have I desired to eat He doeth these works," 10 He indicates the myself, but the Father which dwelleth in me, this Passover with you," 5 and this He meant same thing. And when He says "I have not not absolutely, but relatively, because after that come of myself" and "I can of my own self do nothing" 12 he does not say this as signifying 3. He then who calls the thing glory, and that He has been deprived of authority, either to speak or to act (away with the thought!), but as desiring to prove the concord of his purpose, both in words and deeds, and in every kind of transaction, to be one and the same with the Father, as I have already frequently demonstrated. For the expression "I speak not of myself" is not an abrogation of authority but a demonstration of agreement. How then does He say here "Nevertheless have excited a great conflict in your mind, but be on the alert: for although many words have fresh: for the discourse is now hastening on to Thus having first crippled them and proved the solution. Why then has this form of that He was able to escape their hands, He speech been employed? Attend carefully. The doctrine of the incarnation was very hard to receive. For the exceeding measure of His lovingkindness and the magnitude of His con-

I John iii. 16. 4 I Cor. i. 22.

² Rom. v. 10, 5 Luke xxii, 15.

³ Matt. xii. 39. 6 John xviii, 6,

⁷ John viii. 56. 10 John xiv. 10. 8 Matt. xxvi. 39. 11 John vii. 28.

⁹ John xvii. 11. 12 John v. 30.

descension were full of awe, and needed much birth and suckling and growth, and by the tered into the Virgin's womb.

4. But these proofs alone did not suffice, but even when He had come, lest what had other no less important. And what is this? taken place should be deemed an illusion, He Christ having come to earth wished to instruct warranted the fact not only by the sight but men in all virtue: now the instructor teaches by duration of time and by passing through all not only by word, but also by deed: for this is the phases incident to man. For He did not the teacher's best method of teaching. A pilot enter once for all into a man matured and for instance when he makes the apprentice sit preparation to be accepted. For consider length of the time and the variety of the stages what a great thing it was to hear and to learn of growth to give assurance of what had come that God the ineffable, the incorruptible, the to pass. And not even here were the proofs unintelligible, the invisible, the incomprehen- concluded, but even when bearing about the sible, in whose hand are the ends of the earth, body of flesh He suffered it to experience the who looketh upon the earth, and causeth it to infirmities of human nature and to be hungry, tremble, who toucheth the mountains, and and thirsty, and to sleep and feel fatigue; maketh them smoke,2 the weight of whose finally also when He came to the cross He condescension not even the Cherubim were suffered it to undergo the pains of the flesh. able to bear but veiled their faces by the For this reason also streams of sweat flowed shelter of their wings, that this God who sur- down from it and an angel was discovered passes all understanding, and baffles all calcu-strengthening it, and He was sad and downlation, having passed by angels, archangels, and cast: for before He uttered these words He all the spiritual powers above, deigned to besaid "my soul is troubled, and exceeding sorcome man, and to take flesh formed of earth rowful even unto death." 10 If then after all and clay, and enter the womb of a virgin, and these things have taken place the wicked be borne there the space of nine months, and mouth of the devil speaking through Marcion be nourished with milk, and suffer all things to of Pontus, and Valentinus, and Manichæus of which man is liable. Inasmuch then as that Persia and many more heretics, has attempted which was to happen was so strange as to be do overthrow the doctrine of the Incarnation disbelieved by many even when it had taken and has vented a diabolical utterance declarplace, He first of all sends prophets before- ing that He did not become flesh, nor was hand, announcing this very fact. For instance clothed with it, but that this was mere fancy, the patriarch predicted it saying "Thou didst and illusion, a piece of acting and pretence. spring from a tender shoot my son: thou didst although the sufferings, the death, the burial, lie down and slumber as a lion;" and Esaias the thirst, cry aloud against this teaching; supsaying "Behold the Virgin shall conceive and posing that none of these things had happened bear a son and they shall call His name would not the devil have sown these wicke! Emmanuel;" 4 and elsewhere again "We be-doctrines of impiousness much more widely? held Him as a young child, as a root in a dry For this reason, just as He hungered, as He ground; "5 and by the dry ground he means the slept, as He felt fatigue, as He ate and drank, virgin's womb. And again "unto us a child is so also did He deprecate death, thereby maniborn, unto us a son is given 1"6 and again festing his humanity, and that infirmity of "there shall come forth a rod out of the root human nature which does not submit without of Jesse, and a flower shall spring out of his pain to be torn from this present life. For root." And Baruch in the book of Jeremiah had He not uttered any of these things, it says "this is our God: no other shall be reck-might have been said that if He were a man oned by the side of Him: He found out every He ought to have experienced human feelings. path of knowledge and gave it to Jacob His And what are these? in the case of one about servant, and Israel his beloved. After these to be crucified, fear and agony, and pain in things also He appeared upon the earth, and held converse with men." And David signical held converse with men." And David signical held converse with men." And David signical held converse with men." fying His incarnate presence said "He shall planted in human nature: on this account come down like the rain into a fleece of wool, wishing to prove the reality of the fleshly and like the drop which distills upon the clothing, and to give assurance of the incarnaearth" because He noiselessly and gently entition He manifests the actual feelings of man with full demonstration.

completely developed, but into a virgin's womb, so as to undergo the process of gestation and rudder, but he also joins speech to action, and does not depend upon words alone or example

³ Gen. xlix. 9. 6 Isa. ix. 6. 9 Ps. Ixxii. 6.

¹⁰ Matt. xxvi. 38.

alone: in like manner also an architect when pray. They said to Him "Teach us to pray." came to instruct us in all virtue, He both tells us what ought to be done, and does it. "For," he says, "he who does and teaches the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." I Now observe; He commanded men to be lowly-minded, and meek, and He taught this by His words: but see how He also teaches it by His deeds. For having said "Blessed are the poor in spirit, blessed are the meek,"2 He shows how these virtues ought to be practised. How then did He teach them? He took a towel and girded Himself and washed the disciples' feet.3 What can match this lowliness of mind? for He teaches this virtue no longer by His words only but also by His deeds. Again He teaches meekness and forbearance by His acts. How so? He was struck on the face by the servant of the high priest, and said "If I have spoken evil bear witness of the evil: but if well why smitest thou me?" 4 He commanded men to pray for their enemies: this also again He teaches by means of His acts: for when He had ascended the cross He said "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." 5 As therefore He commanded men to pray so does He Himself pray, instructing thee to do so by his own unflagging utterances of prayer. Again He commanded us to do good to those who hate the prayer which He wished to teach them, us, and to deal fairly with those who treat us He Himself also offered, speaking after the despitefully: 6 and this He did by his own acts: manner of men, not according to His Godhead for he cast devils out of the lews, who said (for the divine nature is impassable) but acthat He Himself was possessed by a devil, He cording to His manhood. And He prayed as bestowed benefits on His persecutors, He fed instructing us to pray, and even to seek dethose who were forming designs against Him, liverance from distress; but, if this be not per-He conducted into His kingdom those who mitted, then to acquiesce in what seems good were desiring to crucify Him. Again He said to God. Therefore He said "Nevertheless to His disciples "Get you no gold nor silver not as I will but as Thou wilt:" not because neither brass in your purses," thus training He had one will and the Father another; but them for poverty: and this also He taught by in order that He might instruct men even if His example, thus saying, "Foxes have holes, they were in distress and trembling, even if and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son danger came upon them, and they were unwillof man hath not where to lay His head." 8 ing to be torn from present life, nevertheless And He had neither table nor dwelling nor to postpone their own will to the will of God: anything else of that kind: not because He even as Paul also when he had been instructed was at a loss to obtain them, but because He practically exhibited both these principles; for was instructing men to go in that path. After the same manner then he taught them also to

I be besought that temptations might be removed from him, thus saying "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice:" 3 and yet since it he has placed by his side the man who is in- Therefore also He prays, in order that they tended to learn from him how a wall is con- may learn to pray. But it was necessary for tructed, shows him the way by means of action them not merely to learn to pray but also how as well as by means of oral teaching; so also they ought to pray: for this reason He delivwith the weaver, and embroiderer, and gold ered to them a prayer in this form: "Our refiner, and coppersmith; and every kind of Father which art in Heaven hallowed be thy art has teachers who instruct both orally and name, Thy kingdom come: Thy will be done, practically. Inasmuch then as Christ Himself as in Heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread: and forgive us our debts as we also forgive our debtors: and lead us not into temptation:" 10 that is into danger, into snares. Since then He commanded them to pray "lead us not into temptation," He instructs them in this very precept by putting it in practice Himself, saying "Father if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me, thus teaching all the saints not to plunge into dangers, not to fling themselves into them but to wait for their approach, and to exhibit all possible courage, only not to rush forwards themselves, or to be the first to advance against terrors. Why so, pray? both to teach us lowliness of mind, and also to deliver us from the charge of vainglory. On this account it is said also in this passage that when He had spoken these words "He went away and prayed:" and after He had prayed He speaks thus to His disciples "Could ye not watch with me one hour? Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation." I Seest thou He not only prays but also admonishes? "For the Spirit indeed is willing," He said, "but the flesh is weak." 12 Now this He said by way of emptying their soul of vanity, and delivering them from pride, teaching them self-restraint, training them to practice moderation. Therefore

¹ Matt. v. 19. 4 John xviii. 23. 7 Matt. x. 9.

² Matt. v. 3, 4. ⁵ Luke xxiii. 34. ⁸ Matt. viii. 20.

³ John xiii. 4, 5. 6 Matt. v. 44.

⁹ Luke xi. 1. 12 Matt. xxvi. 41. 10 Luke xi. 2-4.

¹¹ Matt. xxvi. 39-41. 13 2 Cor. xii. 8.

2 2 Cor. xii. 9. Amen. 1 2 Cor. xii. 10.

did not please God to remove it, he says but if they come upon us we should bear them "Wherefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in bravely, and postpone our own will to the will insults, in persecutions." But perhaps what of God. Knowing these things then let us I have said is not quite clear: therefore I will pray that we may never enter into temptation: make it clearer. Paul incurred many dangers but if we do enter it let us beseech God to and prayed that he might not be exposed to give us patience and courage, and let us them. Then he heard Christ saying "my grace honour His will in preference to every will of is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made our own. For then we shall pass through this perfect in weakness." 2 As soon then as he present life with safety, and shall obtain the saw what the will of God was, he in future blessings to come: which may we all receive submitted his will to God's will. By means of this prayer then Christ taught both these Jesus Christ, with Whom be to the Father, to truths, that we should not plunge into dangers, gether with the Holy Ghost, glory, might, but rather pray that we may not fall into them; honour, now and for ever world without end.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY

ON THE PARALYTIC LET DOWN THROUGH THE ROOF:

AND CONCERNING THE EQUALITY OF THE DIVINE FATHER AND THE SON.

TRANSLATED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.,

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

CONTENTS.

Ι.	A reference to the cure of the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda	21
2.	God deals with man as a physician with his patients, as a father with his children	21:
3.	Instances of Christ's tenderness in dealing with sinners. The accounts of the two paralytics cured by
	Christ recorded in St. Matt. ix. and St. John v. not to be confused	21
4.	Difference between the two cases, and our Lord's method of treating them	21.
5.	The faith of the paralytic let down through the roof	216
6.	Why Christ forgave his sins before he healed his infirmity: the equality of God the Father and the Son.	217
7.	Christ's power to heal the body a proof of His power to heal the soul	210
8.	An exhortation to endure affliction with patience and fortitude	210

HOMILY ON THE PARALYTIC LET DOWN THROUGH THE ROOF.

especially secured to the owners, and they accompany them on their journey to the other render the judge propitious to them.

This wealth we found in great abundance stored in the soul of the paralytic. And you are witnesses who with great zeal drew up draughts of this treasure yet without exhausting it. For such is the nature of spiritual wealth; it resembles fountains of water, or

1. HAVING lately come across the incident rather exceeds their plenteousness, being most of the paralytic' who lay upon his bed beside abundant when it has many to draw upon it. the pool, we discovered a rich and large treas. For when it enters into any man's soul it is not ure, not by delving in the ground, but by div- divided, not diminished, but coming in its ening into his heart: we found a treasure not tireness to each remains continually unconcontaining silver and gold and precious stones, but endurance, and philosophy, and patience was just what took place at that time. For and much hope towards God, which is more although so many have applied to the treasure. valuable than any kind of jewel or source of and all are drawing upon it as much as they wealth. For material riches are liable to the can—but why do I speak of you, seeing that it designs of robbers, and the tales of false ac- has made countless persons rich from that cusers, and the violence of housebreakers, and time to the present day, and yet abides in its the villany of servants, and when they have original perfection? Let us not then grow escaped all these things, they often bring the weary in having recourse to this source of greatest ruin upon those who possess them by spiritual wealth: but as far as possible let us exciting the eyes of the envious, and conse- now also draw forth draughts from it, and let quently breeding countless storms of trouble. us gaze upon our merciful Lord, gaze upon But the spiritual riches escape all these occa- His patient servant. He had been thirty and sions of mischief and are superior to all abuse eight years struggling with an incurable infirmof this kind, laughing to scorn both robbers, ity and was perpetually plagued by it, yet he and housebreakers, and slanderers, and false did not repine, he did not utter a blasphemous accusers and death itself. For they are not word, he did not accuse his Maker, but enparted from the possessor by death, but on the dured his calamity bravely and with much contrary the possession becomes then more meekness. And whence is this manifest? you say: for Scripture has not told us anything clearly concerning his former life, but only that world, and are transplanted with them to the he had been thirty-eight years in his infirmity; future life, and become marvellous advocates it has not added a word to prove that he did of those with whom they depart hence, and not show discontent, or anger or petulance. And yet it has made this plain also, if any one will pay careful attention to it, not looking at it curiously and carelessly. For when you hear that on the approach of Christ who was a stranger to him, and regarded merely as a man, he spoke to him with such great meekness, you may be able to perceive his former wisdom. For when Jesus said to him "Wilt thou be made whole?" he did not make the natural reply "thou seest me who have been this long time lying sick of the palsy, and dost thou ask me if I wish to be made whole? hast thou not be repining, or faint-hearted, when some come to insult my distress, to reproach me and unexpected thing befalls us; but let us suffer laugh me to scorn and make a mock of my calamity? He did not say or conceive anything of this kind but meekly replied "Yea Lord." Now if after thirty-eight years he was thus a view to the profit of those who are tried. meek and gentle, when all the vigour and down, consider what he is likely to have been at the outset of his trouble. For be assured that invalids are not so hard to please at the beginning of their disorder, as they are after a long lapse of time: they become most intract able, most intolerable to all, when the malady is prolonged. But as he, after so many years, was so wise, and replied with so much forbearance, it is quite clear that during the previous time also he had been bearing that calamity with much thankfulness.

The allusion is most probably to Homily XII. against the Anomeans, in which Chrysostom proves the equality of the Divine Son with God the Father by a reference to the cure of the paralytic by the pool of Bethesda. This Homily against the Anomeans was delivered at Constantinople, a. D. 395.

the patience of our fellow-servant: for his paralysis is sufficient to brace up our souls: for no one can be so supine and indolent after having observed the magnitude of that calamity as not to endure bravely all evils which may befall him, even if they are more intolerable than all that were ever known. For not only his soundness but also his sickness has become a cause of the greatest benefit to us: for his speak the praise of the Lord, and his sickness and infirmity has encouraged you to patience, refiner sees how long he ought to leave the present with him in the midst of the trials, and piece of gold in the furnace, and when he afforded him great consolation. He it was ought to draw it out, and does not allow it to who strengthened him, and upheld him, and

On this account a certain wise man admonstrength of his reasoning faculties was broken ishes us saying "My Son, if thou come to serve the Lord prepare thy soul for temptation, set thy heart aright and constantly endure and make not haste in time of trouble"; " yield to Him" he says, "in all things," for He knoweth exactly when it is right to pluck us out of the furnace of evil. We ought therefore everywhere to yield to Him and always to give thanks, and to bear all things contentedly, whether He bestows benefits or chastisement upon us, for this also is a species of benefit. For the physician, not only when he bathes and Considering these things then let us imitate nourishes the patient and conducts him into pleasant gardens, but also when he uses cautery and the knife, is a physician all the same: and a father not only when he caresses his son, but also when he expels him from his house, and when he chides and scourges him, is a father all the same, no less than when he praises him. Knowing therefore that God is more tenderly loving than all physicians, do not enquire too curiously concerning His treatment nor demand cure has stimulated the souls of the hearers to an account of it from Him, but whether He is pleased to let us go free or whether He punishes, let us offer ourselves for either alike; for and urged you to match his zeal; or rather it He seeks by means of each to lead us back to has exhibited to you the lovingkindness of health, and to communion with Himself, and God. For the actual deliverance of the man He knows our several needs, and what is exto such a malady, and the protracted duration pedient for each one, and how and in what of his infirmity is a sign of the greatest care for manner we ought to be saved, and along that his welfare. For as a gold refiner having cast path He leads us. Let us then follow whithera piece of gold into the furnace suffers it to be soever He bids us, and let us not too carefully proved by the fire until such time as he sees it consider whether He commands us to go by a has become purer: even so God permits the smooth and easy path, or by a difficult and souls of men to be tested by troubles until rugged one: as in the case of this paralytic. they become pure and transparent and have It was one species of benefit indeed that his reaped much profit from this process of sifting: soul should be purged by the long duration of wherefore this is the greatest species of benefit. his suffering, being delivered to the fiery trial 2. Let us not then be disturbed, neither dis- of affliction as to a kind of furnace; but it was mayed, when trials befall us. For if the gold another benefit no less than this that God was remain in the fire until it is destroyed and stretched forth a hand to him, and suffered burnt up: much more does God understand him not to fall. But when you hear that it this, and when He sees that we have become was God Himself do not deprive the paralytic more pure, He releases us from our trials so of his meed of praise, neither him nor any that we may not be overthrown and cast down other man who is tried and yet steadfastly enby the multiplication of our evils. Let us then dures. For even if we be infinitely wise, even if we are mightier and stronger than all men, yet in the absence of His grace we shall not

Him who knows these things accurately, to prove our hearts by fire as long as He pleases: for He does this for a useful purpose and with

^{*} We must suppose that Chrysostom considered such words to be implied in the answer actually given. They are not in the text of John v. 7, but it seems scarcely possible that Chrysostom should have forgotten the passage, or that the quotation should not have been aubsequently corrected if he thought it misleading.

² Ecclus. i. 1, 2.

rank in the Apostolic band, and was pro-thee." nounced blessed by his Master, and called and inflexible hold of the faith, would have this, but also from that which seems to be a been carried away and fallen from profession rebuke. For He did not make a public exif Christ had permitted the devil to try him as posure of his sins, but yet He told him that he much as he desired, what other man will be suffered what he did suffer on account of his able to stand, apart from His help? There- sins, but what those sins were He did not disye are able, but will with the temptation also fact by one simple utterance "sin no more;" only we ourselves first of all contribute the having displayed his own earnestness on the means which are at our disposal, such as man's behalf, "for while I am coming, zeal, hope in Him, thanksgiving, endurance, says, "another steppeth down before me: are comforted of God." 3 So then he who com- me not: and thirsty and gave me no drink,"6 observe after the cure what tenderness He come. He threatens, He exposes us in this displays. For He did not leave him and de- world, that He may not have to expose us in

be able to withstand even the most ordinary part, but having found him in the temple he temptation. And why do I speak of such in- saith "behold! thou art made whole; sin no significant and abject beings as we are? For more lest some worse thing happen unto even if one were a Paul, or a Peter, or a thee." 4 For had He permitted the punish-James, or a John, yet if he should be deprived ment because He hated him He would not of the divine help he would easily be put to have released him, He would not have proshame, overthrown, and laid prostrate. And vided for his future safety: but the expression on behalf of these I will read you the words of "lest some worse thing happen unto thee" is Christ Himself: for He saith to Peter "Behold the utterance of one who would check coming Satan hath asked to have you that he may sift evils beforehand. He put an end to the disyou as wheat, but I have prayed for thee that ease, but did not put an end to the struggle: thy faith fail not." What is the meaning of He expelled the infirmity but did not expel "sift"? to turn and twist, and shake and stir the dread of it, so that the benefit which had and shatter, and worry, which is what takes been wrought might remain unmoved. This place in the case of things which are win- is the part of a tender-hearted physician, not nowed: but I he says have restrained him, only to put an end to present pains, but to proknowing that you are not able to endure the vide for future security, which also Christ did, trial, for the expression "that thy faith fail bracing up his soul by the recollection of past not" is the utterance of one who signifies that events. For seeing that when the things if he had permitted it his faith would have which distress us have departed, the recollecfailed. Now if Peter who was such a fervent tion of them oftentimes departs with them, lover of Christ and exposed his life for Him He wishing it to abide continually, saith "sin countless times and sprang into the foremost no more lest some worse thing happen unto

3. Moreover it is possible to discern His Peter on this account because he kept a firm forethought and consideration not only from fore also Paul saith "But God is faithful, who close; nor did He say "thou hast sinned" or will not suffer you to be tempted above that "thou hast trangressed," but He indicated the make the way of escape that ye may be able and having said so much as just to remind him to bear it." 2 For not only does He say that of it He put him more on the alert against He does not suffer a trial to be inflicted be- future events, and at the same time He made yond our strength, but even in that which is manifest to us all his patience and courage proportioned to our strength He is present and wisdom, having reduced him to the necescarrying us through it, and bracing us up, if sity of publicly lamenting his calamity, and patience. For not only in the dangers which he did not publicly expose his sins. For just are beyond our strength, but in those which as we ourselves desire to draw a veil over our are proportioned to it, we need the divine as- sins even so does God much more than we: sistance, if we are to make a brave stand; for on this account He wrought the cure in the elsewhere also it is said "even as the suffer- presence of all, but He gives the exhortation ings of Christ abound to us, even so our com- or the advice privately. For He never makes fort also aboundeth through Christ, that we a public display of our sins, except at any may be able to comfort those who are in any time He sees men insensible to them. For trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves when He says "ye saw me hungry, and fed forted this man is the same who permitted the He speaks thus at the present time in order trial to be inflicted upon him. And now that we may not hear these words in time to the other: even as He threatened to overthrow Luke xxii. 31, 32.

3 Cor. i. 5, 4. Chrysostom transposes the clauses, and does not quote the exact words of the passage.

the city of the Ninevites for the very reason healed. And what of this? some one will say: that He might not overthrow it. For if He for have not many of the evangelists given wished to publish our sins He would not an- diverse accounts of other signs? Yes, but it is nounce beforehand that He would publish one thing to make statements which are them: but as it is He does make this an- diverse, and another, statements which are nouncement in order that being sobered by contradictory; for the former causes no distinct the fear of exposure, if not also by the fear of cord or strife: but that which is now presented punishment we may purge ourselves from to us is a strong case of contradiction unless it them all. This also is what takes place in the be proved that the paralytic at the pool was a case of baptism: for He conducts the man to different man from him who is described by the pool of water without disclosing his sins the other three evangelists. Now that you to any one; yet He publicly presents the boon may understand what is the difference between and makes it manifest to all, while the sins of statements which are diverse and contradicself and him who receives the forgiveness of Christ carried the cross,2 another that Simon them. This also was what took place in the the Cyrenian carried it: 3 but this causes no case of this paralytic, He makes the reproof contradiction or strife. "And how," you say, the utterance is not merely a reproof but also ments that he carried and did not carry?" a justification; He justifies Himself as it were for evil-entreating him so long, telling him and out of the Prætorium Christ was carrying it: sins, and declared the cause of his infirmity. some worse thing happen unto thee."

of mines where any one happens to find a piece of gold he makes a further excavation again in the same place: and I know that many of those who read without care imagine that one and the same paralytic is presented by the four evangelists: but it is not so. careful attention to the matter. For the question is not concerned with ordinary matters, proper solution will be serviceable against cian and the loneliness of the man who was the man are known to no one save God Him- tory, one of the evangelists has stated that without the presence of witnesses, or rather "is there no contradiction between the stateproving to him that it was not without cause but as they proceeded Simon took it from Him and purpose that He had suffered him to be and bore it. Again in the case of the robbers, so long afflicted, for He reminded him of his one says that the two blasphemed: 4 another that one of them checked him who was reviling "For having found him," we read, "in the the Lord." Yet in this again there is no contemple, He said unto him, sin no more lest tradiction: because here also both things took place, and at the beginning both the men be-And now since we have derived so much haved ill: but afterwards when signs occurred, profit from the account of the former paralytic when the earth shook and the rocks were rent, let us turn to the other who is presented to and the sun was darkened, one of them was us in St. Matthew's Gospel. For in the case converted, and became more chastened, and recognized the crucified one and acknowledged his kingdom. For to prevent your supposing that this took place by some constraining force of one impelling him from within, and to remove your perplexity, he exhibits the man to you on the cross while he is still retaining his Therefore you must be on the alert, and pay former wickedness in order that you may perceive that his conversion was effected from within and out of his own heart assisted by the and this discourse when it has received its grace of God and so he became a better man.

4. And it is possible to collect many other both Greeks and Jews and many of the here-instances of this kind from the Gospels, which tics. For thus all find fault with the evangel- seem to have a suspicion of contradiction, ists as being at strife and variance: yet this is where there is no real contradiction, the truth not the fact. Heaven forbid! but although the being that some incidents have been related outward appearance is different, the grace of by this writer, others by that; or if not occurthe Spirit which works upon the soul of each ring at the same hour one author has related is one, and where the grace of the Spirit is, the earlier event another the later; but in the there is love, joy, and peace; and there war present case there is nothing of this kind, but and disputation, strife and contention are not. the multitude of the evidences which I have How then shall we make it clear that this par- mentioned proves to those who pay any attenalytic is not the same as the other, but a differ- tion whatever to the matter, that the paralytic ent man? By many tokens, both of place and was not the same man in both instances. And time, and season, and day, and from the man-this would be no slight proof to demonstrate ner of the cure, and the coming of the physi- that the evangelists were in harmony with each

I Jonah i. 2.

John xix, 17.
 Matt. xxvii, 32; Mark xxv. 31; Luke xiii, 26, Matt. xxvii. 44; Mark xv. 32.
 Luke xxiii, 40.

material for dispute has been destroyed.

sons why I affirm that this man is not the same tacle, and great pain and sorrow not merely in Jerusalem, the other in Capernaum; the one the suffering undergone by those who are subman was brought to Christ: to the other Christ are being healed. Himself came, and there was no man to assist Seeing then that the marvel is greater and him. "Lord," said he, "I have no man: "where- the cure more important, and the pleasure as this man had many who came to his aid, afforded to the spectators unalloyed by any who also let him down through the roof. And kind of sorrow, let us now carefully contem-He healed the body of the other man before plate Christ in the act of healing. "And He his soul: for after he had cured the paralysis entered into a boat and crossed over and came He then said "Behold thou art made whole, into His own city: and behold they brought to sin no more:" but not so in this case, but him a man sick of the palsy lying on a bed: after He had healed his soul, for He said to and Jesus seeing their faith said unto the sick him "Son be of good cheer thy sins be for-given thee," He then cured his paralysis. That this man then is not the same as the other has been clearly demonstrated by these to the impotent man by the pool. For the differently in each case: why the one on the Sabbath and the other not on the Sabbath, Now these men did not invite the physician to why He came Himself to the one but waited the house, and so far they are on an equality He is wise and prudent. Let us then give our lying by the pool. For he said "Lord I have attention and observe Him as He performs the no man when the water is troubled to put me these things, much more ought we to act thus and did not say: "because thou hast proffered in this case, in proportion as the physician is greater and the malady more severe, being one other and not at variance. For if it were the which cannot be corrected by human art, but same man the discord is great between the only by divine grace. And in the former case two accounts: but if it be a different one all we have to see the skin being cut, and matter discharging, and gore set in motion, and to en-Well then let me now state the actual rea- dure much discomfort produced by the specas that. What are they? The one is cured from the sight of the wounds, but also from by the pool of water, the other in some house; jected to this burning or cutting: for no one there is the evidence from place: the former is so stony-hearted as to stand by those who during the festival: there is the evidence from are suffering these things, and hear them the special season: the former had been thirty shrieking, without being himself overcome and and eight years suffering from infirmity: con- agitated, and experiencing much depression of cerning the other the evangelist relates nothing spirit; but yet we undergo all this owing to of that kind: there is the evidence from time: our desire to witness the operation. But in the former was cured on the Sabbath: there is this case nothing of that kind has to be seen, the evidence from the day: for had this man no application of fire, no plunging in of an in-also been cured on the Sabbath Matthew strument, no flowing of blood, no pain or would not have passed by the fact in silence shrieking of the patient; and the reason of nor would the Jews who were present have this is, the wisdom of the healer, which needs held their peace: for they who found fault for none of these external aids, but is absolutely some other reason even when a man was not self-sufficient. For it is enough that He cured on the Sabbath would have been yet merely utters a command and all distress more violent in their accusation against Christ ceases. And the wonder is not only that He if they had got an additional handle from the effects the cure with so much ease, but also argument of the special day. Moreover this without pain, causing no trouble to those who proofs, but it now remains for us to turn to former neither invited the physician nor the beginning of the narrative and see how brought the sick man to the physician; but Christ cured the one and the other, and why approached Him as God and said "Speak the for the other to be brought to Him, why He with the centurion: but they brought the sick healed the body of the one and the soul of the man to the physician and so far they are infeother first. For He does not these things rior, because they did not say "speak the word without consideration and purpose seeing that only." Yet they are far better than the man cure. For if in the case of physicians when into the pool:" but these men knew that they use the knife or cautery or operate in any Christ had no need either of water, or pool, or other way upon a maimed and crippled patient, anything else of that kind: nevertheless Christ and cut off a limb, many persons crowd round not only released the servant of the centurion the invalid and the physician who is doing but the other two men also from their maladies, missed the man who displayed the greater faith with eulogy and honour, saying "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." On the man who exhibited less faith than this one he bestowed no praise yet He did not deprive him of a cure, no! not even him who displayed no faith at all. But just as physicians when curing the same disorder receive from some person a hundred gold pieces, from others half, from others less and from some nothing at all: even so Christ received from the centurion a large and unspeakable degree of faith, but from this man less and from the other not even an ordinary amount, and yet He healed them all. For what reason then did He deem the man who made no deposit of faith worthy of the benefit? Because his failure to exhibit faith was not owing to indolence, or to insensibility of soul, but to ignorance of Christ and die under their disorder rather than disclose having never heard any miracle in which He was concerned either small or great. On this account therefore the man obtained indulgence: which in fact the evangelist obscurely intimates when he says, "for he wist not who it was," 2 but he only recognized Him by sight when he lighted upon Him the second time.

5. There are indeed some who say that this man was healed merely because they who brought him believed; but this is not the fact. For "when He saw their faith" refers not merely to those who brought the man but also to the man who was brought. Why so? "Is not one man healed," you say, "because anto approach him privately and confer about other has believed?" For my part I do not these matters. Why should you expose my think so unless owing to immaturity of age or misfortunes in the midst of all the spectators, excessive infirmity he is in some way incapable and let me down from the roof-top, and behave of believing. How then was it you say that in an unseemly manner?" That man said in the case of the woman of Canaan the none of these things either to himself or to his mother believed but the daughter was cured? bearers, but regarded it as an honour to have and how was it that the servant of the centurion who believed rose from the bed of sick-And not from this circumstance only was it ness and was preserved. Because the sick possible to discern his faith but also from the persons themselves were not able to believe. actual words of Christ. For after he had been Hear then what the woman of Canaan says: let down and presented Christ said to him, "My daughter is grievously vexed with a devil 3" "Son! be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven and sometimes she falleth into the water and thee." And when he heard these words he sometimes into the fire:" 4 now how could she was not indignant, he did not complain, he did believe whose mind was darkened and pos- not say to the physician "What mean you by sessed by a devil, and was never able to con-this? I came to be healed of one thing and trol herself, not in her sound senses? then in the case of the woman of Canaan so pretence and a screen of incompetence. also in the case of the centurion; his servant you forgive sins which are invisible?" lay ill in the house, not knowing Christ, him-neither spoke nor thought any of these things, self, nor who He was. How then was he to but waited, allowing the physician to adopt the a smaller degree of faith the cure which thou believe in one who was unknown to him, and receivest shall be in proportion;" but He dis- of whom he had never yet obtained any experience? But in the case before us we cannot say this: for the paralytic believed. Whence is this manifest? From the very manner of his approach to Christ. For do not attend simply to the statement that they let the man down through the roof: but consider how great a matter it is for a sick man to have the fortitude to undergo this. For you are surely aware that invalids are so faint-hearted and difficult to please as often to decline the treatment administered to them on their sick bed, and to prefer bearing the pain which arises from their maladies to undergoing the annoyance caused by the remedies. But this man had the fortitude to go outside the house, and to be carried into the midst of the market place, and to exhibit himself in the presence of a crowd. And it is the habit of sick folk to their personal calamities. This sick man however did not act thus, but when he saw that the place of assembly was filled, the approaches blocked, the haven of refuge obstructed, he submitted to be let down through the roof. So ready in contrivance is desire, so rich in resource is love. "For he also that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." 5 The man did not say to his friends "What is the meaning of this? why make this ado? why push on? Let us wait until the house is cleared and the assembly is dissolved: the crowds will withdraw, we shall then be able As you heal another. This is an excuse and a method of healing which He desired. For this reason also Christ did not go to him, but Luke vii. 9.

 Pohn v. 13.
 Matt, xv. 22.
 A These words occur in the description of the lunatic lad in Matt. xvii. 15.
 Chrysostom, speaking from memory, confuses the two narratives.

⁵ Luke xi. 10.

his faith to all. For could He not have made This it is which enervates our bodies: this it the entrance easy? But He did none of these is which brings on disease: therefore also on things; in order that He might exhibit the this occasion He said, "Son! be of good cheer, man's zeal and fervent faith to all. For as He thy sins are forgiven thee." And on the other went to the man who had been suffering thirty He said, "Behold! thou art made whole, sin no and eight years because he had no one to aid more lest some worse thing happen unto him, so did He wait for this man to come to thee," intimating to both that these maladies him because he had many friends that He were the offspring of sin. And in the beginmight make his faith manifest by the man ning and outset of the world disease as the being brought to Him, and inform us of the consequence of sin attacked the body of Cain. other man's loneliness by going to him, and disclose the earnestness of the one and the patience of the other to all and especially to those who were present. For some envious palsy. For when the strength which regulates and misanthropical Jews were accustomed to a living creature becomes weakened, being no grudge the benefits done to their neighbours longer able to support all the limbs, it deprives and to find fault with His miracles, sometimes them of their natural power of direction, and on account of the special season, saying that then having become unstrung they tremble He healed on the sabbath day; sometimes on and turn giddy. account of the life of those to whom the bene- 6. Paul also demonstrated this: for when he vision, turns his attention to the head, where forgiveness of sins; and this we might prove the root and origin of the infirmity is: even so did Christ act: He represses first of all the source of the evil. For the source and root waited for him to come, that He might exhibit and mother of all evil is the nature of sin.

fit was done, saying "if this man were a pro- was reproaching the Corinthians with a certain phet He would have known who the woman sin he said, "For this cause many are weak was who touched Him:" ont knowing that it and sickly among you." Therefore also is the special mark of a physician to associate Christ first removes the cause of the evil, and with the infirm and to be constantly seen by having said "Son! be of good cheer, thy sins the side of the sick, not to avoid them, or are forgiven thee," He uplifts the spirit and hurry from their presence—which in fact was rouses the downcast soul: for the speech bewhat He expressly said to those murmurers; came an efficient cause and having entered "They that are whole have no need of a phy- into the conscience it laid hold of the soul sician but they that are sick." Therefore in itself and cast out of it all distress. For nothorder to prevent their making the same acculing creates pleasure and affords confidence so sations again He proves first of all that they much as freedom from self-reproach. For who come to Him are deserving of a cure on where remission of sins is there is sonship. account of the faith which they exhibit. For Even so at least we are not able to call God this reason He exhibited the loneliness of one Father until we have washed away our sins in man, and the fervent faith and zeal of the pool of the sacred water. It is when we other: for this reason He healed the one on have come up from thence, having put off that the Sabbath, the other not on the Sabbath: in evil load, that we say "Our Father which art order that when you see them accusing and in Heaven." But in the case of the man who rebuking Christ on another day you may un- was infirm thirty and eight years why did He derstand that they accused him on the former not act thus, but cured his body first of all? occasion also not because of their respect for Because by that long period of time his sins the law, but because they could not contain had been exhausted; for the magnitude of a their own malice. But why did He not first trial can lighten the load of sins; as indeed we address Himself to the cure of the paralytic, read was the case with Lazarus, that he rebut said, "Son! be of good cheer, thy sins are ceived his evil things in full, and thereupon forgiven thee?" He did this very wisely. For it is a habit with physicians to destroy the originating cause of the malady before they heart of Jerusalem, that she hath received of remove the malady itself. Often for example the Lord's hand double for her sins." 4 And when the eyes are distressed by some evil again the prophet says "O Lord give us peace, humour and corrupt discharge, the physician, for thou hast requited all things to us," indiabandoning any treatment of the disordered cating that penalties and punishments work

³ The allusion is to Gen. iv. 12, where the words rendered in the English translation "a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be" are in the LXX. rendered στένων καί τρέμων έρη, "groaning and trembling shalt thou be:" but our English version is the more correct. 4 Isa, xl. 1, 2. 5 Isa. xxvi. 12.

shape of a defence. For the nature of the for if the Father alone knows the heart, how former demonstration was a stumbling block does the Son know the secrets of the mind? This at any rate is what the Evangelist implied heart," shewing that this expression is equivalso because He said that God was His Father, fy none other than God by mentioning the deed, making Himself equal with God, which is a since it is one which belongs to Him alone: far greater thing, for He effected this by the and when I say "He who maketh the sun to demonstration of His deeds. How then do rise," without adding the word God, I yet sig-the envious and wicked act, and those who nify Him by mentioning the deed: even so repine at the good things of other people, and when Paul said "He who searcheth the seek to find a handle in every direction? hearts," he proved that to search the heart is "Why does this man blaspheme?" they say an attribute of God alone. For if this expres for "no man can forgive sins save God sion had not been of equal force with the name alone." 2 As they persecuted Him there be- "God" for pointing out Him who was signicause He broke the Sabbath, and took occa- fied, he would not have used it absolutely and sion from their reproaches to declare His by itself. For if the power were shared by equality with the Father in the form of a de-Him in common with some created being, we fence, saying "my Father worketh hitherto and should not have known who was signified, the I work." 3 so here also starting from the accu- community of power causing confusion in the sations which they make He proves from these mind of the hearers. Inasmuch then as this His exact likeness to the Father. For what appears to be a special attribute of the Father, was it they said? "No man can forgive sins save and yet is manifested of the Son whose equal-from many passages. It seems to me then God alone." Inasmuch then as they themselves that the reason why He said nothing to that laid down this definition, they themselves introman about remission of sins, but only secured duced the rule, they themselves declared the him against the future, was because the penalty law, He proceeds to entangle them by means for his sins had been already worked out by of their own words. "You have confessed," the long duration of his sickness: or if this was He says, "thatf orgiveness of sins is an attrinot the reason, it was because he had not yet bute of God alone: my equality therefore is attained any high degree of belief concerning unquestionable." And it is not these men only Christ that the Lord first addressed Himself who declare this but also the prophet thus sayto the lesser need, and one which was manifest ing: "who is God as thou?" and then, indicatand obvious, the health of the body; but in ing His special attribute he adds "taking away the case of the other man He did not act thus, iniquity and passing over unrighteousness."4 but inasmuch as this man had more faith, and If then any one else appears thus doing the a loftier soul, He spoke to him first of all con- same thing He also is God, God even as that cerning the more dangerous disease: with the one is God. But let us observe how Christ additional object of exhibiting his equality of argues with them, how meekly and gently, and rank with the Father. For just as in the with all tenderness. "And behold some of the former case He healed on the Sabbath day scribes said within themselves: this man blasbecause He wished to lead men away from the phemeth." They did not utter the word, they Iewish mode of observing it, and to take occa- did not proclaim it through the tongue, but sion from their reproaches to prove Himself reasoned in the secret recesses of their heart. equal with the Father: even so in this instance How then did Christ act? He made public also, knowing beforehand what they were going their secret thoughts before the demonstration to say. He uttered these words that He might which was concerned with the cure of the paruse them as a starting-point and a pretext for alytic's body, wishing to prove to them the proving His equality of rank with the Father. power of His Godhead. For that it is an at-For it is one thing when no one brings an actiribute of God alone, a sign of His deity to shew cusation or charge to enter spontaneously the secrets of His mind, the Scripture saith upon a discourse about these things, and quite "Thou alone knowest men's hearts." 5 Seest another when other persons give occasion for thou that this word "alone," is not used with a it, to set about the same work in the order and view of contrasting the Son with the Father. to the hearers: but the other was less offen- "For He Himself," it is said, "knew what was sive, and more acceptable, and everywhere we in man"; o and Paul when proving that the see Him doing this, and manifesting His knowledge of secret things is a special attribute equality not so much by words as by deeds. of God says, "and He that searchest the when he said that the Jews persecuted Jesus alent to the appellation "God." For just as not only because He broke the Sabbath but when I say "He who causeth rain said," I signigiven thee or to say arise and walk?"

⁴ Micah vii. 18. 6 John ii. 25.

ity as the Father.

things, both those which were spoken yesterday and the day before that, and let us beseech ity becomes thence unquestionable, therefore God that they may abide immoveably in our we read "why think ye evil in your hearts? for heart, and let us contribute zeal on our side, whether is easier: to say: Thy sins are for- and constantly meet in this place. For in this way we shall preserve the truths which have 7. See moreover He makes a second proof been formerly spoken, and we shall add others of His power of forgiving sins. For to forgive to our store; and if any of them slip from our sins is a very much greater act than to heal memory through the lapse of time we shall the body, greater in proportion as the soul is easily be able to recover them by the aid of greater than the body. For as paralysis is a continual teaching. And not only will the disease of the body, even so sin is a disease of doctrines abide sound and uncorrupt but our the soul: but although this is the greater it is course of life will have the benefit of much not palpable: whereas the other although it be diligent care and we shall be able to pass less is manifest. Since then He is about to through this present state of existence with use the less for a demonstration of the greater pleasure and cheerfulness. For whatever kind proving that He acted thus on account of their of suffering is oppressing our soul when we weakness, and by way of condescension to come here will easily be got rid of: seeing their feeble condition He says "whether is that now also Christ is present, and he who easier? to say thy sins are forgiven thee or to approaches Him with faith will readily receive say arise and walk?" For what reason then healing from Him. Suppose some one is should He address Himself to the lesser act struggling with perpetual poverty, and at a loss on their account? Because that which is for necessary food, and often goes to bed manifest presents the proof in a more distinct hungry, if he has come in here, and heard form. Therefore He did not enable the man Paul saying that he passed his time in hunger to rise until He had said to them "But that and thirst and nakedness, and that he experiye may know that the Son of man hath power enced this not on one or two or three days, but on earth to forgive sins, (then saith He to the constantly (this at least is what he indicates sick of the palsy) arise and walk:" as if He when he says "up to the present hour we both had said: forgiveness of sins is indeed a hunger and thirst and are naked)," he will greater sign: but for your sakes I add the less receive ample consolation, learning by means also since this seems to you to be a proof of these words that God has not permitted him the other. For as in another case when He to be in poverty because He hated him or praised the centurion for saying "speak the abandoned him: for if this were the effect of word only and my servant shall be healed: for hatred, He would not have permitted it in the I also say to this man go and he goeth and to case of Paul who was of all men especially the other come and he cometh," He confirmed dear to Him: but He permitted it out of His his opinion by the eulogy which He pro-tender love and providential care, and by way nounced: and again when He reproved the of conducting him to a higher degree of spirit-Jews for finding fault with Him on the Sabbath ual wisdom. Has some other man a body day saying that He transgressed the law, He which is beset with disease and countless sufproved that He had authority to alter laws: ferings? The condition of these paralytics even so in this instance also when some said may be an ample source of consolation and "He maketh Himself equal with God by besides these the blessed and brave disciple of promising that which belongs only to the Paul who was continually suffering from dis-Father," He having upbraided and accused orders, and never had any respite from prothem and proved by His deeds that He did longed infirmity, even as Paul also said "Use not blaspheme supplied us with indisputable a little wine for thy stomach's sake and thine evidence that He could do the same things as often infirmities," where he does not speak the Father who begat Him Observe at least merely of infirmities as such. Or another hav-the manner in which He pleases to establish ing been subjected to false accusation has acthe fact that what belongs to the Father only, quired a bad reputation with the public, and belongs also to Himself: for He did not sim- this is continually vexing and gnawing his ply enable the paralytic to get up, but also said soul: he enters this place and hears "Blessed "but that ye may know that the Son of man are ye when men shall reproach you and say hath power on earth to forgive sins:" thus it all manner of evil against you talsely: rejoice was his endeavour and earnest desire to prove above all things that He had the same author-reward in Heaven: all despondency and receive every kind of 8. Let us then carefully hold fast all these pleasure: for it is written "leap for joy, and be exceeding glad when men cast out your upon the bed, and hast heard him uttering his name as evil." In this manner then God last words, and stood beside him whilst he was thereof whether it be good or evil." a or a son, or one of his kinsfolk, and he also blood were poured forth, and pieces of wood having come here listens to Paul groaning over and tiles, and dust, and fragments of flesh, and this present life and longing to see that which all these things were mingled together in like is to come, and oppressed by his sojourn in manner. Nevertheless after such great calamthis world, and he will go away with a sufficient lities of this kind he was not petulant, but what remedy for his grief when he has heard him does he say-"The Lord gave, the Lord hath say "Now concerning them that are asleep I taken away, as it seemed good unto the Lord would not have you ignorant brethren that ye sorrow not even as others who have no hope."

He did not say concerning the dying," but "concerning them that are asleep" proving that death is a sleep. As then if we see any infirmity of body, or insult, or false accusation one sleeping we are not disturbed or distressed, or any other form of evil incident to mankind, expecting that he will certainly get up: even let us say these words "The Lord gave, the so when we see any one dead, let us not be Lord hath taken away; as it seemed good to disturbed or dejected for this also is a sleep, the Lord so has it come to pass; blessed be a longer one indeed, but still a sleep. By giv-the name of the Lord for ever." If we practise ing it the name of slumber He comforted the mourners and overthrew the accusation of the unbelievers. If you mourn immoderately over ings, but the gain will be greater than the loss. him who has departed you will be like that the good will exceed the evil: by these words unbeliever who has no hope of a resurrection. thou wilt cause God to be merciful unto thee, cannot exercise any spiritual wisdom concerning things to come: but thou who hast rethese words forthwith the Devil hastens from ceived such strong proofs concerning the future thee: and when he has hastened away, the life, why dost thou sink into the same weak- cloud of dejection also is dispelled and the ness with him? Therefore it is written "now thoughts which afflict us take to flight, hurryconcerning them that are asleep we would not ing off in company with him, and in addition have you ignorant that ye sorrow not even as to all this thou wilt win all manner of blessings others who have no hope."

from the Old also it is possible to receive the Apostle, who having for God's sake deabundant consolation. For when you hear of spised the troubles of this world, obtained the Job after the loss of his property, after the everlasting blessings. Let us then be trustful destruction of his herds, after the loss not of and in all things which befall us let us rejoice one, or two, or three, but of a whole troop of and give thanks to the merciful God, that we sons in the very flower of their age, after the may pass through this present life with serengreat excellence of soul which he displayed, ity, and obtain the blessings to come, by the even if thou art the weakest of men, thou wilt grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus easily be able to repent and regain thy cour-Christ to whom be glory, honour and might age. For thou, O man, hast constantly at-always, now and ever, world without end. tended thy sick son, and hast seen him laid Amen.

comforts those that are evil spoken of, and drawing his last breath and hast closed his them that speak evil He puts in fear after eyes, and shut his mouth: but he was not another manner saying "every evil word which present at the death struggle of his sons, he men shall speak they shall give an account did not see them breathing their last gasp, but the house became the common grave of Another perhaps has lost a little daughter them all, and on the same table brains and He indeed does well to mourn, inasmuch as he and wilt defend thyself against the tyranny of both here and in Heaven. And you have a And not only from the New Testament but convincing example in the case of Job, and of

¹ Luke vi. 22, 23. 2 Matt. xii. 36. 3 1 Thess. iv. 13.

⁴ Job i, 21, LXX, version.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY

TO THOSE WHO HAD NOT ATTENDED THE ASSEMBLY:

AND ON THE APOSTOLIC SAYING, "IF THINE ENEMY HUNGER, FEED HIM," ETC. (ROM. XII. 20), AND CONCERNING RESENTMENT OF INJURIES.

TRANSLATED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

CONTENTS.

I.	Chrysostom reproves the apathy of the congregation: he deprecates applause	PAGE 223
2.	He combats various excuses for indolence	224
3.	The indifference of Christians contrasted with the strictness of Jews in the observance of Holy Days	225
4.	The duty of Christians to bring others to Christ	220
5.	Explanation of St. Paul's words "by so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head"	222
6.	How enemies are to be conquered by kindness. Examples of this	229
-	Personalization with anomies in this world will save us from judgment in the world to some

TO THOSE WHO HAD NOT ATTENDED THE ASSEMBLY.

TO THOSE WHO HAD NOT ATTENDED THE ASSEMBLY; ON THE APOSTOLIC SAYING, "IF THY ENEMY HUNGER, FEED HIM," AND CONCERNING RESENTMENT OF INJURIES.

longed discourse which I lately addressed to moral improvement of the hearers brings an you with a view to kindling your zeal for the imperishable and immortal reward both to him assemblies here: for again our Church is who speaks and to them who obey. The destitute of her children. Wherefore also I praise of your cheers makes the speaker illusam again compelled to seem vexatious and trious here, but the piety of your soul affords burdensome, reproving those who are present, the teacher much confidence before the judgand finding fault with those who have been ment-seat of Christ. Wherefore if any one put away their sloth, and with you because you plause but the profit of the hearers. not consist in applause, but in the zeal of the hearers for godliness: not in noise made just at the time of hearing, but in lasting earnestness. As soon as applause has issued from the

1. I DID no good as it seems by the pro- lips it is dispersed in air and perishes; but the left behind: with them because they have not loves the speaker, let him not desire the aphave not given a helping hand to the salvation neglect our brethren is no ordinary wrong, but of your brethren. I am compelled to seem one which brings extreme punishment, and an burdensome and vexatious, not on behalf of inexorable penalty. And the case of the man myself, or my own possessions, but on your who buried the talent proves this: he was not behalf and for your salvation, which is more reproached at least on account of his own life: precious to me than anything else. Let him for as regarded the deposit itself he did not who pleases take it in bad part, and call me turn out a bad man, since he restored it ininsolent and impudent, yet will I not cease tact: nevertheless he did turn out a bad man continually annoying him for the same pur- as regarded his management of the deposit. pose; for nothing is better for me than this For he did not double that which was enkind of impudence. For it may be, it may be, trusted to him; and so was punished. Whence that this at least if nothing else, will put you it is manifest that even if we are earnest and to shame, and that to avoid being perpetually well trained, and have much zeal about hearimportuned concerning the same things, ye ing the holy scriptures this does not suffice for will take part in the tender care of your breth- our salvation. For the deposit must be ren. For what profit is there to me in praise doubled, and it becomes doubled when towhen I do not see you making advances in gether with our own salvation we undertake to virtue? and what harm is there from the silence make some provision for the good of others. of the hearers when I behold your piety in- For the man in the parable said "Lo! there creasing? For the praise of the speaker does thou hast that is thine:" but this did not serve him for a defence: for it was said to him "thou oughtest to have put the money to the exchangers "2

And observe I pray how easy the commands of the Master are: for men indeed make those who lend out capital sums at interest answera-

¹ The date of this Homily cannot be determined, but the allusions which it contains to the Imperial palace and guard, and some other points of internal evidence prove that it was delivered at Constantinople.

³ Matt. xxv. 27.

deposit," one says, "you must call it in: I have no concern with the man who has received it." But God does not act thus; He only commands us to make the deposit, and does not render us liable for the recall. For the speaker has the power of advising, not of persuading. Therefore he says: "I make thee answerable for depositing only, and not for the recall." What can be easier than this? And yet the servant called the master hard, who was thus gentle and merciful. For such is the wont of the ungrateful and indolent; they always try to shift the blame of their offences from themselves to their masters. And therefore the man was thrust out with torture and bonds into the outer darkness. And lest we should suffer this penalty let us deposit our teaching with the brethren, whether they be persuaded by it, or not. For if they be persuaded they will profit both themselves and us: and if they are not, they involve themselves indeed in inevitable punishment, but will not be able to do us the slightest injury. For we have done our part, by giving them advice: but if they do not listen to it no harm will result to us from that. For blame would attach to us not for failing to persuade, but for failing to advise: and after prolonged and continual exhortation and counsel they and not we, have to reckon henceforth with God.

I have been anxious at any rate to know clearly, whether you continue to exhort your brethren, and if they remain all the time in the same condition of indolence: otherwise I would never have given you any trouble: as it is. I have fears that they may remain uncorrected in consequence of your neglect and indifference. For it is impossible that a man who continually has the benefit of exhortation and instruction should not become better and few in number, yet be ye many and powerful more diligent. The proverb which I am about in faith, and in zeal towards God. As then to cite is certainly a common one, nevertheless the leaven is not weak on account of its littleit confirms this very truth. For "a perpetual ness, but prevails owing to its inherent heat, dropping of water," it says, "wears a rock," yet and the force of its natural quality, so ye also what is softer than water? and what is harder than a rock? Nevertheless perpetual action conquers nature: and if it conquers nature, much more will it be able to prevail over the human will. Christianity is no child's play, my beloved: no matter of secondary importance. I am continually saying these things, intolerable, we cannot bear being trampled and and yet I effect nothing.

2. How am I distressed, think you, when I call to mind that on the festival days the multitudes assembled resemble the broad expanse of the sea, but now not even the smallest part of that multitude is gathered together here? Where are they now who oppress us with their presence on the feast days? I look for them,

ble for recalling them; "you have made the and am grieved on their account when I mark what a multitude are perishing of those who are in the way of salvation, how large a loss of brethren I sustain, how few are reached by the things which concern salvation, and how the greater part of the body of the Church is like a dead and motionless carcase. "And what concern is that to us?" you say. The greatest possible concern if you pay no attention to your brethren, if you do not exhort and advise, if you put no constraint on them, and do not forcibly drag them hither, and lead them away out of their deep indolence. For that one ought not to be useful to himself alone, but also to many others, Christ declared plainly, when He called us salt,2 and leaven,3 and light:4 for these things are useful and profitable to others. For a lamp does not shine for itself, but for those who are sitting in darkness: and thou art a lamp not that thou mayest enjoy the light by thyself, but that thou mayest bring back yonder man who has gone astray. For what profit is a lamp if it does not give light to him who sits in darkness? and what profit is a Christian when he benefits no one, neither leads any one back to virtue? Again salt is not an astringent to itself but braces up those parts of the body which have decayed, and prevents them from falling to pieces and perishing. Even so do thou, since God has appointed thee to be spiritual salt, bind and brace up the decayed members, that is the indolent and sordid brethren, and having rescued them from their indolence as from some form of corruption, unite them to the rest of the body of the Church. And this is the reason why He called you leaven: for leaven also does not leaven itself, but, little though it is, it affects the whole lump however big it may be. So also do ye: although ye are will be able to bring back a far larger number than yourselves, if you will, to the same degree of zeal as your own. Now if they make the summer season their excuse: for I hear of their saying things of this kind, "the present stifling heat is excessive, the scorching sun is crushed in the crowd, and to be steaming all over with perspiration and oppressed by the heat and confined space:" I am ashamed of them, believe me: for such excuses are womanish: indeed even in their case who have art thou afraid of material heat? Now in the softer bodies, and a weaker nature, such pre-market place where there is so much turmoil reply to a defence of this kind, yet is it necessary. For if they put forward such excuses as possible for you to say that there you can these and do not blush, much more does it beadvance these pretexts? I would remind them the pavement floor, and to the construction of of the three children in the furnace and the building in other respects (for it is carried them on all sides, enveloping their mouth and their eyes and even their breath, did not cease every direction, and there is much crowding, singing that sacred and mystical hymn to God, in company with the universe, but standing in cheerfulness than they who abide in some disposition, destitute of the fire of the Holy flowery field: and together with these three children I should think it proper to remind them also of the lions which were in Babylon, and of Daniel and the den: 2 and not of this one only but also of another den, and the prophet Jeremiah, and the mire in which he was smothered up to the neck.3 And emerging from these dens, I would conduct these persons who put forward heat as an excuse into the prison and exhibit Paul to them there, and Silas bound fast in the stocks, covered with bruises and wounds, lacerated all over their body with a mass of stripes, yet singing praises to God at midnight and celebrating their holy vigil. For is it not a monstrous thing that tainly will desire it. Nay these things are a those holy men, both in the furnace and the mere excuse and pretence. How many fire, and the den, and amongst wild beasts, and mire, and in a prison and the stocks, and not their sons standing with them? Was it so amidst stripes and gaolers, and intolerable sufferings, never complained of any of these things, but were continually uttering prayers and sacred songs with much energy and fervent zeal, whilst we who have not undergone any of their innumerable sufferings, small or great, neglect our own salvation on account of a the Church accompanied by a member of his scorching sun and a little short lived heat and family: let them incite and urge one another toil, and forsaking the assembly wander away, depraving ourselves by going to meetings son his father, the husbands their wives, and which are thoroughly unwholesome? When the dew of the divine oracles is so abundant dost thou make heat thy excuse? "The water let us not summon friends only but also ene-which I will give him," saith Christ, "shall be mies to this common treasury of good things. in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life;" and again; "He that believeth on me as the Scripture hath said, out of his "art thou not ashamed and".

¹ τῶν σωζομένων, this signifies "members of the Church," merely, who, as such are heirs of salvation, or as the English cate-chism expresses it, are in a "state of salvation," although they may forfeit their inheritance. Comp. Acts ii. 47.

² Matt. v. 13. 3 Implied in Matt. xiii. 33.

⁴ Matt. v. 13.

Say to him: "art thou not ashamed and". belly shall flow rivers of living water." 5 Tell dost thou not blush before the Jews who keep me; when thou hast spiritual wells and rivers, texts do not suffice for justification. Never- and crowding, and scorching wind, how is it theless, even if it seems a disgrace to make a that you do not make suffocation and heat an excuse for absenting yourself? For it is imenjoy a cooler temperature, and that all the hove us not to be ashamed of replying to these heat is concentrated here with us:-the truth things. What then am I to say to those who is exactly the reverse; here indeed owing to flame, who when they saw the fire encircling up to a vast height), the air is lighter and cooler: whereas there the sun is strong in and vapour and dust, and other things which add to discomfort far more than these. the midst of the pyre sent up their song of Whence it is plain that these senseless excuses praise to the common Lord of all with greater are the offspring of indolence and of a supine Spirit.

3. Now these remarks of mine are not so much directed to them, as to you who do not bring them forward, do not rouse them from their indolence, and draw them to this table of salvation. Household slaves indeed when they have to discharge some service in common, summon their fellow slaves, but you when you are going to meet for this spiritual ministry suffer your fellow servants to be deprived of the advantage by your neglect. "But what if they do not desire it?" you say. Make them desire it by your continual importunity: for if they see you insisting upon it they cerfathers at any rate are there here who have difficult for thee to bring hither some of thy children? Whence it is clear that the absence of all the others who remain outside is due not only to their own indolence, but also to your neglect. But now at least, if never before, rouse yourselves up, and let each person enter to the assembly here, the father his son, the the wives their husbands, the master his slave, brother his brother, friend his friend: or rather their sabbath with such great strictness, and from the evening of it abstain from all work? And if they see the sun verging towards setting on the day of the Preparation they break off business, and cut short their traffic: and if ¹ Song of the Three Children in the Apocryphal addition to Daniel iii.

² Dan. vi. 24.
⁴ John vi. 44.
⁵ John vii. 38.

¹⁵

them, before the evening, comes in the even-day and festival is at hand there is a concourse ing bringing the price, they do not suffer of all the inhabitants of the city, although themselves to take it, or to accept the money." there is no one to summon them; but when And why do I speak of the price of market the holy day and festival are past, even if we wares and transaction of business? Even if should crack our voice by continuing to call it were possible to receive a treasure they you all day long there is no one who pays any would rather lose the gain than trample on heed? For often when turning these things their law. Are the Jews then so strict, and this over in my mind I have groaned heavily, and when they keep the law out of due season, and said to myself: What is the use of exhortacling to an observance of it which does not tion or advice, when you do everything merely profit them, but rather does them harm: and by the force of habit, and do not become a wilt thou, who art superior to the shadow, to whit more zealous in consequence of my whom it has been vouchsafed to see the Sun of teaching? For whereas in the festivals you Righteousness, who art ranked as a citizen of need no exhortation from me, but, when they the Heavenly commonwealth, wilt thou not are past you profit nothing by my teaching, do display the same zeal as those who unseason- you not show that my discourse, so far as you ably cleave to what is wrong, thou who hast are concerned, is superfluous? been entrusted with the truth, but although thou art summoned here for only a short part things are grieved. But such is not the sentiof the day, canst thou not endure to spend ment of the indolent: else they would put even this upon the hearing of the divine oracles? and what kind of indulgence, pray, could daily anxious about your affairs. you obtain? and what answer will you have to make which is reasonable and just? It is in proportion to the damage you sustain? utterly impossible that one who is so indifferent and indolent should ever obtain indulgence, even if he should allege the necessities of wordly affairs ten thousand times over as an excuse. Do you not know that if you come ber, or even the palace itself. For we do not and worship God and take part in the work which goes on here, the business you have on hand is made much easier for you? Have you here, but another kind of government more worldly anxieties? Come here on that account dignified than that of the empire itself; or that by the time you spend here you may win rather we do not ourselves commit it, but the for yourself the favour of God, and so depart grace of the spirit. with a sense of security; that you may have Him for your ally, that you may become in- than that of the empire, which they who enter vincible to the dæmons because you are as- here receive? They are trained to master unsisted by the heavenly hand. If you have the toward passions, to rule wicked lusts, to combenefit of prayers uttered by the fathers, if you mand anger, to regulate ill-will, to subdue take part in common prayer, if you listen to vainglory. The emperor, seated on the imthe divine oracles, if you win for yourself the perial throne, and wearing his diadem, is not aid of God, if, armed with these weapons, you so dignified as the man who has elevated his then go forth, not even the devil himself will own inward right reason to the throne of govbe able henceforth to look you in the face, ernment over base passions, and by his dominmuch less wicked men who are eager to insult ion over them has bound as it were a glorious and malign you. But if you go from your diadem upon his brow. For what profit is house to the market place, and are found des- there, pray, in purple, and raiment wrought titute of these weapons, you will be easily mas- with gold, and a jewelled crown, when the soul tered by all who insult you. This is the rea- is in captivity to the passions? What gain is son why both in public and private affairs, there in outward freedom when the ruling elemany things occur contrary to our expectation, ment within us is reduced to a state of disbecause we have not been diligent about spirit- graceful and pitiable servitude. For just as ual things in the first place, and secondarily when a fever penetrates deep, and inflames all about the secular, but have inverted the order. the inward parts, there is no benefit to be got For this reason also the proper sequence and from the outward surface of the body, although right arrangement of things has been upset, it is not affected in the same way: even so and all our affairs are full of much confusion. when our soul is violently carried away by the Can you imagine what distress and grief I passion within, no outward government, not any one who has been making a purchase from suffer when I observe, that if a public holy

4. Perhaps many of those who hear these away their carelessness, like ourselves, who are gain do you make by your secular transactions is impossible to depart from any other assembly, or gathering, in the possession of so much gain as you receive from the time spent here, whether it be the law court, or council-chamcommit the administration of nations or cities nor the command of armies to those who enter

What then is the government, more dignified

even the imperial throne, is of any profit, since lour is in close correspondence with his docreason is deposed from the throne of empire trine, and his manner of life is in harmony by the violent usurpation of the passions, and with his speech, hear how the Apostle and the bows and trembles beneath their insurrection-prophet address themselves to him: for the place prophets and apostles concur on all sides dost thou preach my laws and takest my covein helping us, repressing our passions, and expelling all the ferocity of the irrational element within us, and committing a mode of himself to these same again who thought great empire. This is why I said that they who "Thou art confident that thou thyself art a deprive themselves of this care receive a blow leader of the blind, a light of those who are in in the vital parts, sustaining greater damage darkness, an instructor of the foolish, a teacher than can be inflicted from any other quarter; of babes: thou therefore that teachest another inasmuch as they who come here get greater teachest thou not thyself?" 6 Inasmuch then gain than they could derive from any other as it could neither profit me the speaker to law said "Thou shalt not appear before the comply with the things which are spoken, but Lord empty;" that is, enter not into the rather would increase our condemnation, let rifices, much more ought we to enter the deeds. For it is indeed a good thing to spend Church. Do you not see doves which have with it. been trained, how they hunt for others when what kind of excuse shall we have, if irrational creatures are able to hunt for an anibeen honoured with reason and so much wisnot effected anything by this exhortation. the chastisement will be heavier, hear the statement of Christ. "If I had not come and spoken to them they had not had sin: but now they have no cloke for their sin." 3 And the Apostle says "for not the hearers of the law shall be justified." These things He says to the hearers; but when He wishes to instruct the speaker also, that even he will not gain anything from his teaching unless his behav-

ary movements. Now to prevent this taking latter says "but to the sinner said God, why government to us far more dignified than the things of their teaching, speaks on this wise: source: even as Scripture has declared. The speak, nor you the hearers to hear, unless we temple without sacrifices. Now if it is not us not limit the display of our zeal to hearing right to go into the house of God without sac-only, but let us observe what is said, in our assembly accompanied by our brethren: for time continually in hearing the divine oracles: this sacrifice and offering is better than that, but this good thing becomes useless when the when thou bringest a soul with thee into the benefit to be derived from hearing is not linked

Therefore that you may not assemble here they are let out? Let us also do this. For in vain I shall not cease beseeching you with all earnestness, as I have often besought you before, "conduct your brethren to us, exhort mal of their own species, while we who have the wanderers, counsel them not by word only but also by deed." This is the more powerful, dom neglect this kind of pursuit? I exhorted teaching,—that which comes through our manyou in my former discourse with these words: ners and behaviour-Even if you do not utter "Go, each of you to the houses of your a word, but yet, after you have gone out of neighbours, wait for them to come out, lay this assembly, by your mien, and your look, hold of them, and conduct them to their and your voice and all the rest of your decommon mother: and imitate those who are meanour you exhibit to the men who have mad upon theatre going, who diligently arrange been left behind the gain which you have to meet each other and so wait at early dawn brought away with you, this is sufficient for to see that iniquitous spectacle." Yet I have exhortation and advice. For we ought to go out from this place as it were from some sacred Therefore I speak again and shall not cease shrine, as men who have descended from speaking, until I have persuaded you. Hear-heaven itself, who have become sedate, and ing profits nothing unless it is accompanied by philosophical, who do and say everything in practice. It makes our punishment heavier, if proper measure: and when a wife sees her we continually hear the same things and do husband returning from the assembly, and a none of the things which are spoken. That father his son, and a friend his friend, and an enemy his enemy, let them all receive an impression of the benefit which you have derived from coming here: and they will receive it, if they perceive that you have become milder, more philosophical, more devout. Consider what privileges you enjoy who hast been initiated into the mysteries,7 with what company thou offerest up that mystic hymn, with what company thou criest aloud the "Ter sanctus."

¹ i e., the care of their brethren. That this is the meaning appears from what follows.

2 Exod. xxiii 15. 3 John xv. 22. 4 Rom. ii. 13.

⁶ Rom. ii. 19-21. 5 Ps. iv. 16, 17.

7 i. e., admitted to Holy Communion, which catechumens were not permitted to witness.

Teach "them that are without" that thou hast sentiment of him who uttered the former joined the chorus of the Seraphim, that thou words. And what is the nature of this? the art ranked as a citizen of the commonwealth saying that "by so doing thou shalt heap coals above, that thou hast been enrolled in the of fire on his head." For by these words he choir of Angels, that thou hast conversed with does a wrong both to the doer and the rethe Lord, that thou hast been in the company ceiver: to the latter by setting his head on fire, of Christ. If we regulate ourselves in this way and placing coals upon it; for what good will we shall not need to say anything, when we go he get from receiving food and drink in proout to those who are left behind: but from our advantage they will perceive their own loss and will hasten hither, so as to enjoy the same benefits themselves. For when, merely by the use of their senses, they see the beauty of your benefactor also is injured in another way. soul shining forth, even if they are the most For what can he gain from doing good to his stupid of men, they will become enamoured of enemies when he acts in the hope of revenge? your goodly appearance. For if corporeal For he who gives meat and drink to his enemy beauty excites those who behold it, much more for the purpose of heaping coals of fire on his will symmetry of soul be able to move the head would not become merciful and kind, but spectator, and stimulate him to equal zeal. Let us then adorn our inward man, and let us punishment by means of a small benefit. For be mindful of the things which are said here, when we go out: for there especially is it a proper time to remember them; and just as an athlete displays in the lists the things which he has learned in the training school: even so ought we to display in our transactions in the world without the things which we have heard you may clearly see all the wisdom of the lawhere.

5. Bear in mind then the things which are said here, that when you have gone out and the devil lays hold of you either by means of anger or vainglory, or any other passion, you may call to remembrance the teaching which you have received here and may be able easily to shake off the grasp of the evil one. Do you not see the wrestling-masters in the practising grounds, who, after countless contests having obtained exemption from wrestling on account of their age, sit outside the lines by the side of the dust and shout to those who are wrestling inside, telling one to grasp a hand, or drag a leg, or seize upon the back, and by many other directions of that kind, saying, "if you do so and so you will easily throw your antagonist," they are of the greatest service to their pupils? Even so do thou look to thy training master, the blessed Paul, who after countless victories is now sitting outside the boundary, I mean this present life, and cries aloud to us who are wrestling, shouting out by means of his Epistles, when he sees us overcome by wrath and resentment of injuries, and choked by passion; "if thy enemy hunger feed him, if he thirst give him drink;" -a beautiful precept portion to the evil he will suffer from the heaping of coals on his head? Thus then the recipient of the benefit is wronged, having a greater vengeance inflicted on him, but the cruel and harsh, having inflicted an enormous what could be more unkind than to feed a person for the purpose of heaping coals of fire on his head? This then is the contradiction: and now it remains that the solution should be added, in order that by those very things which seem to do violence to the letter of the law giver. What then is the solution?

That great and noble-minded man was well aware of the fact that to be reconciled quickly with an enemy is a grievous and difficult thing; grievous and difficult, not on account of its own nature, but of our moral indolence. But he commanded us not only to be reconciled with our enemy, but also to feed him; which was far more grievous than the former. For if some are infuriated by the mere sight of those who have annoyed them, how would they be willing to feed them when they were hungry? And why do I speak of the sight infuriating them? If any one makes mention of the persons, and merely introduces their name in society, it revives the wound in our imagination, and increases the heat of passion. Paul then being aware of all these things and wishing to make what was hard and difficult of correction smooth and easy, and to persuade one who could not endure to see his enemy, to be ready to confer that benefit already mentioned upon him, added the words about coals of fire, in order that a man prompted by the hope of vengeance might hasten to do this service to one who had annoyed him. And just as the fisherman surrounding the hook on full of spiritual wisdom, and serviceable both all sides with the bait presents it to the fishes to the doer and the receiver. But the re- in order that one of them hastening to its acmainder of the passage causes much perplex- customed food may be captured by means of ity, and does not seem to correspond to the it and easily held fast: even so Paul also wishing to lead on the man who has been wronged to bestow a benefit on the man who has wronged him does not present to him the bare stantly retains his animosity, may suppress his to confer this benefit on the man who has anwronged thee for piety's sake: feed him at least from the hope of punishing him." For he knows that if the man once sets his hand to the work of conferring this benefit, a startingture who comes up to it: so also Paul if he had not advanced the expectation of inflicting punishment would never have persuaded those who were wronged to undertake to benefit those who had annoyed them. Wishing then to persuade those who recoiled in disgust, and were paralysed by the very sight of their enethem, he made mention of the coals of fire, not with a view of thrusting the persons in question into inexorable punishment, but in order that when he had persuaded those who were wronged to benefit their enemies in the expectation of punishing them, he might afteranger altogether.

has been wronged; but observe also how he that if you wish to conquer, be reconciled, and unites again the man who has done the wrong to him who has been provoked. First of all for a brilliant victory is that in which by means by the very manner of the benefit: (for there of good, that is to say by forbearance, you is no one so degraded and unfeeling as to be overcome evil, expelling wrath and resentment. unwilling, when he receives meat and drink, to But the injured man, when inflamed with pasbecome the servant and friend of him who sion would not have borne these words. does this for him): and in the second place Therefore when he had satisfied his wrath he through the dread of vengeance. For the proceeded to conduct him to the best reason passage, "by so doing thou shalt heap coals of for reconciliation, and did not permit him to fire on his head" seems indeed to be addressed remain permanently animated by the wicked to the person who gives the food; but it more hope of vengeance. Dost thou perceive the especially touches him who has caused the wisdom of the lawgiver? And that you may annoyance, in order that through fear of this learn that he introduced this law only on acpunishment he may be deterred from remaining count of the weakness of those who would not continually in a state of enmity, and being otherwise be content to make terms amongst aware that the reception of food and drink themselves, hear how Christ, when He ormight do him the greatest mischief if he con-dained a law on this same subject did not pro-

hook of spiritual wisdom, but having covered anger. For thus he will be able to quench the it as it were with a kind of bait, I mean the coals of fire. Wherefore the proposed punish-"coals of fire," invites the man who has been ment and vengeance both induces the one who insulted, in the hope of inflicting punishment, has been wronged to benefit him who has annoyed him, and it deters and checks him who noyed him; but when he has come he holds has given the provocation, and impels him to him fast in future, and does not let him make off, the very nature of the deed attaching him meat and drink. Paul therefore linked the to his enemy; and he all but says to him: "if two persons by a twofold bond, the one dethou art not willing to feed the man who has pending on a benefit, the other on an act of vengeance. For the difficulty is to make a beginning and to find an opening for the reconciliation: but when that has once been cleared in whatever way it may be, all which point is made and a way of reconciliation is follows will be smooth and easy. For even if opened for him. For certainly no one would at first the man who has been annoyed feeds have the heart to regard a man continually as his enemy in the hope of punishing him, yet his enemy to whom he has given meat and becoming his friend by the act of giving him drink, even if he originally does this in the food he will be able to expel the desire of hope of vengeance. For time as it goes on vengeance. For when he has become a friend relaxes the tension of his anger. As then the he will no longer feed the man who has been fisherman, if he presented the bare hook would reconciled to him, with an expectation of this never allure the fish, but when he has covered kind. Again he who has given the provocait gets it unawares into the mouth of the creation, when he sees the man who has been wronged electing to give him meat and drink, casts out all his animosity, both on account of this deed, and also of his fear of the punishment which is in store for him, even if he be excessively hard and harsh and stony hearted, being put to shame by the benevolence of him who gives him food, and dreading the punishmies, to confer the greatest benefits upon ment reserved for him, if he continues to be an enemy after accepting the food.

For this reason Paul did not stop even here in his exhortation, but when he has emptied each side of wrath he proceeds to correct their disposition, saying, "be not overcome of evil."
"For if," he says, "you continue to bear rewards in time persuade them to abandon their sentment and to seek revenge you seem indeed to conquer your enemy, but in reality you are 6. Thus then did he encourage the man who being conquered by evil, that is, by wrath: so do not make an attack upon your adversary;"

pose the same reward, as the Apostle; but, against the father this could in no wise injure having said "Love your enemies, do good to David. For each man is answerable for his them that hate you," which means give them own deeds, and by these he can be praised and food and drink, He did not add "for in so accused. But, as it was, not having any evil doing ye shall heap coals of fire on their deed to mention, he brought forward his low heads: "but what did He say? "that ye may birth, expecting by this means to throw his become like your Father who is in Heaven." Both the shade, which in fact was the Naturally so, for He was discoursing to Peter, height of folly. For what kind of offence is it James, and John and the rest of the apostolic to be the child of insignificant and humble band: therefore He proposed that reward. parents? Saul however did not understand But if you say that even on this understanding true wisdom in these things. He called David the precept is onerous you improve once more then, "the son of Jesse," but when David the defence which I am making for Paul, but found him sleeping inside the cave, he did not you deprive yourself of every plea of indulg-ence. For I can prove to you that this which seems to you onerous was accomplished under said, "against the Lord's anointed." So the Old Dispensation when the manifestation purely free was he from wrath and resentment of spiritual wisdom was not so great as it is now. of injuries: he calls him the Lord's anointed For this reason also Paul did not introduce the who had done him such great wrongs, who law in his own words, but used the very ex- was thirsting for his blood, who after his pressions which were employed by him who countless good services had many times atoriginally brought it in, that he might leave no room for excuse to those who do not observe sider how Saul deserved to be treated, but he it: for the precept "if thine enemy hunger considered what was becoming for himself feed him, if he thirst give him drink" is not both to do and to say, which is the greatest the utterance of Paul in the first instance, but stretch of moral wisdom. How so? When of Solomon.² For this reason he quoted the thou hast got thy enemy in a prison, made fast words that he might persuade the hearer that by a twofold, or rather by a triple chain, confor one who has been advanced to such a high finement of space, dearth of assistance, and standard of wisdom to regard an old law as onerous and grievous which was often fulfilled penalty and punishment of him? "No," he by the men of old time, is one of the basest says; "for I am not now regarding what he things possible. Which of the ancients, you deserves to suffer, but what it behoves me to ask, fulfilled it? There were many, but do." He did not look to the facility for slayamongst others David especially did so more ing, but to the accurate observance of the abundantly? He did not indeed merely give food or drink to his enemy, but also rescued him several times from death, when he was in was not sufficient to prompt him to the act of jeopardy; and when he had it in his power to slaughter? Was not the fact that his enemy slay him he spared him once, twice, yea many times. As for Saul he hated and abhorred him inducement? For you are aware I suppose so much after the countless good services that we hasten more eagerly to deeds for which he had done, after his brilliant triumphs, and the salvation which he had wrought in the matter of Goliath, that he could not bear to mention him by his own name, but called him after his father. For once when a festival was at hand, and Saul, having devised some treachery against him, and contrived a cruel plot, did not see him arrive—"where," said he, "is the son of Jesse?" He called him by his father's name, both because on account of his hatred he could not endure the recollection of his proper name, and also because he thought moral wisdom. You then perhaps admire him, to damage the distinguished position of that because he did not cherish the memory of any righteous man by a reference to his low birth; of his past evils: but I am much more aston--a miserable and despicable thought: for cer- ished at him for another reason. And what is tainly, even if he had some accusation to bring this? that the fear of future events did not moral wisdom which was becoming to him. And yet which of the existing circumstances was delivered bound into his hands a sufficient which facilities abound, and the hope of success increases our desire to act, which was just what happened then in his case.

Well! did the captain who then counselled and urged him to the deed,5 did the memory of past events induce him to slay? no one of these things moved him: in fact the very facility for slaughter averted him from it: for he bethought him that God had put Saul in his hands for the purpose of furnishing ample ground and opportunity for the exercise of impel him to lay violent hands on his enemy. death the man who would cause him endless For he knew clearly that if Saul escaped his troubles? hands, he would again be his adversary; yet the rewards of moderation.

to prefer incurring danger himself and to live in fear and trembling, rather than put to a just

His moral wisdom then we may perceive, he preferred exposing himself to danger by not only from the fact that he did not slav letting go the man who had wronged him, to Saul, when there was so strong a compulsion, providing for his own security by laying violent but also that he did not utter an irreverent hands upon his foe. What could equal then word against him, although he who was inthe great and generous spirit of this man, who, sulted would not have heard him. Yet we when the law commanded eye to be plucked often speak evil of friends when they are absent, out for eye, and tooth for tooth, and retaliation he on the contrary not even of the enemy who on equal terms, not only abstained from doing had done him such great wrong. His moral this, but exhibited a far greater measure of wisdom then we may perceive from these moral wisdom? At least if he had slain Saul at things: but his lovingkindness and tender care that time he would have retained credit for from what he did after these things. For when moral wisdom unimpaired, not merely because he had cut off the fringe of Saul's garment, he had acted on the defensive, not being him- and had taken away the bottle of water he self the originator of violence, but also because withdrew afar off and stood and shouted, and by his great moderation he was superior to the exhibited these things to him whose life he had precept "an eye for an eye." For he would preserved, doing so not with a view to display not have inflicted one slaughter in return for and ostentation, but desiring to convince him one; but, in return for many deaths, which by his deeds that he suspected him without a Saul endeavoured to bring on him, having at- cause as his enemy, and aiming therefore at tempted to slay him not once or twice but many winning him into friendship. Nevertheless times, he would have brought only one death when he had even thus failed to persuade him, on Saul; and not only this, but if he had pro- and could have laid hands on him, he again ceeded to avenge himself out of fear of the chose rather to be an exile from his country future, even this, combined with the things and to sojourn in a strange land, and suffer already mentioned, would procure him the distress every day, in procuring necessary food reward of forbearance without any deduction. than to remain at home and vex his adversary. For he who is angry on account of the things What spirit could be kinder than his? He which have been done to him, and demands was indeed justified in saying "Lord remember satisfaction, would not be able to obtain the David and all his meekness." 2 Let us also praise of forbearance: but when a man dis- imitate him, and let us neither say nor do evil misses the consideration of all past evils, to our enemies, but benefit them according to although they are many and painful, but is our power: for we shall do more good to ourcompelled to take steps for self-defence from selves than to them. "For if ye forgive your fear of the future, and by way of providing for enemies," we are told, "ye shall be forgiven."3 his own security, no one would deprive him of Forgive base offences that thou mayest receive a royal pardon for thy offences; but if any one 7. Nevertheless David did not act even has done thee great wrongs, the greater the thus, but found a novel and strange form of wrongs you forgive, the greater will be the moral wisdom: and neither the remembrance pardon which you will receive. Therefore we of things past, nor the fear of things to come, have been instructed to say "Forgive us, as we nor the instigation of the captain, nor the soli- forgive," that we may learn that the measure tude of the place, nor the facility for slaying, of our forgiveness takes its beginning in the nor anything else incited him to kill; but he first place from ourselves. Wherefore in prospared the man who was his enemy, and had portion to the severity of the evil which the given him pain just as if he was some benefac-enemy does to us is the greatness of the benetor, and had done him much good. What kind fit which he bestows. Let us then be earnest of indulgence then shall we have, if we are and eager to be reconciled with those who have mindful of past transgressions, and avenge vexed us, whether their wrath be just or unourselves on those who have given us pain, just. For if thou art reconciled here, thou art whereas that innocent man who had undergone delivered from judgment in the other world; such great sufferings and expected more and but if in the interval while the hatred is still worse evils to befall him in consequence of going on, death interrupting steps in and carsaving his enemy, is seen to spare him, so as ries the enmity away with it, it follows of necessity that the trial of the case should be brought forward in the other world. As then reconciled and then offer it." Let it lie there, many men when they have a dispute with one he says, in order that the necessity of making another, if they come to a friendly understand- the offering may constrain him who is justly selves loss, and alarm, and many risks, the issue of the case turning out in accordance who has provoked us when he says "Forgive with the sentiment of each party; but if they your debtors in order that your Father may severally entrust the affair to the judge the also forgive your trespasses." For He did not only result to them will be loss of money, and propose a small reward, but one which far exin many cases a penalty, and the permanent ceeds the magnitude of the achievement. endurance of their hatred; even so here if we Considering all these things then, and count-come to terms during our present life we shall ing the recompense which is given in this case relieve ourselves from all punishment; but if and remembering that to wipe away sins does while remaining enemies we depart to that ter- not entail much labour and zeal, let us pardon rible tribunal in the other world we shall cer- those who have wronged us. For that which tainly pay the utmost penalty at the sentence others scarcely accomplish, I mean the blotting of the judge there, and shall both of us un- out of their own sins by means of fasting and dergo inexorable punishment: he who is un-lamentations, and prayers, and sackcloth, and justly wroth because he is thus unjustly dis- ashes, this it is possible for us easily to effect posed, and he wno is justly wroth, because he has, however justly, cherished resentment. we blot out anger from our heart, and with For even if we have been unjustly ill-treated, sincerity forgive those who have wronged us. we ought to grant pardon to those who have May the God of peace and love, having banwronged us. And observe how he urges and ished from our soul all wrath and bitterness, incites those who have unjustly given pain to and anger, deign to grant that we being closely reconciliation with those whom they have knit one to another according to the proper wronged. "If thou offerest thy gift before the adjustment of the parts," may with one accord, altar, and there rememberest that thy brother one mouth and one soul continually offer up hath ought against thee, go thy way; first be our hymns of thanksgiving due to Him: for to reconciled to thy brother." He did not say, Him be glory and power for ever and ever. "assemble, and offer thy sacrifice," but "be without sackcloth and ashes and fasting if only Amen.

² Psalm cxxxii, 1, the Lxx. translation has not very accurately rendered the original. "Trouble," or "anxiety," as in our English version, is the meaning of the word here rendered "meekness."

3 Matt. vi. 14.

¹ Matt. v. 23, 24.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

HOMILY

AGAINST PUBLISHING THE ERRORS OF THE BRETHREN, AND UTTERING IMPRECATIONS UPON ENEMIES.

TRANSLATED BY

R. BLACKBURN, M.A.,

RECTOR OF SELHAM, SUSSEX, AND LATE FELLOW OF BRASENOSE COLLEGE, OXFORD.

CONTENTS.

1.	The Church an unfailing source or medicine for the soul
2.	Some things are good or evil according to the use made of them	23
3.	The spiritual medicines of the Church are administered without publicity	23
4.	The advantage of not publicly exposing the sinner	23
5.	The devil assails men most of all when they pray	23
6.	Childlessness no retribution for sin	23
7.	Why Christ was born of a virgin	23
8.	The wisdom of God manifested in the nature of Christ's birth	23
9.	The birth of Esau and Jacob an answer to persevering prayer.	24
О.	The devil persuades some men to be negligent of prayer, others to invoke curses on their enemies	21
ı.	The wickedness of imprecating vengeance on enemies	24
2.	We must forgive if we would be forgiven	24

AGAINST PUBLISHING THE ERRORS OF THE BRETHREN.

HOMILY

UPON THE NOT PUBLISHING THE ERRORS OF THE BRETHREN, NOR UTTERING IMPRECATIONS UPON ENEMIES.

loved, with which you flock into the Father's has any disease ever yet overcome it. This house. For from this zeal I have ground for medicine it is not possible to get by payment feeling confidence about your health also with of silver; but he who has displayed sincerity respect to the soul; for indeed the school of the of purpose and disposition goes his way having Church is an admirable surgery—a surgery, it all. On account of this both rich and poor not for bodies, but for souls. For it is spiritual, alike obtain the benefit of this healing proand sets right, not fleshly wounds, but errors cess. For where there is a necessity to pay of the mind, and of these errors and wounds down money the man of large means indeed the medicine is the word. This medicine is shares the benefit; but the poor man often has compounded, not from the herbs growing on to go away deprived of the gain, since his inthe earth, but from the words proceeding from come does not suffice him for the making up heaven—this no hands of physicians, but of the medicine. But in this case, since it is tongues of preachers have dispensed. On not possible to pay down silver coin, but it is this account it lasts right through; and neither needful to display faith and a good purpose, he is its virtue impaired by length of time, nor who has paid down these with forwardness of defeated by any strength of diseases. For certainly the medicines of physicians have both since indeed these are the price paid for the these defects; for while they are fresh they medicinal treatment. And the rich and the display their proper strength, but when much poor man share the benefit alike; or rather it time has passed; just as those bodies which is not alike that they share the benefit, but have grown old; they become weaker; and often the poor man goes away in the enjoyoften too the difficult character of maladies is ment of more. What ever can be the reason? wont to baffle them; since they are but human. It is because the rich man, possessed before-Whereas the divine medicine is not such as hand by many thoughts, having the pride and this; but after much time has intervened, it puffed-up temper belonging to wealthiness; still retains all its inherent virtue. Ever since living with carelessness and lazy ease as comat least Moses was born (for from thence panions, receives the medicine of the hearing dates the beginning of the Scripture) it has of the Scriptures not with much attention, nor

1. I ACCOUNT you happy for the zeal, be- has it not lost its proper power, but neither healed so many human beings; and not only with much earnestness; but the poor man, far removed from delicate living and gluttony and indolence; spending all his time in handicraft and honest labours; and gathering hence much t διανοίας. In Chrysostom equivalent to the νους of St. Paul (Rom, xii, 2); the moral and spiritual mind, 'Αμαρτήματα, Lit, missings of the mark: errors of the moral will. Διανούα is so used.

love of wisdom for the soul; becomes thereby lutely, but only in the mouth of the impious, more attentive and free from slackness, and is because he is discontented, because he blaswont to give his mind with more accurate care to all that is said: whence also, inasmuch as the price he has paid is higher, the benefit which he departs having reaped is greater.

2. It is not as absolutely bringing an accusation against those who are wealthy that I say all this; nor as praising the poor without reference to circumstances: for neither is wealth an evil, but the having made a bad use of wealth; nor is poverty a virtue, but the having made a virtuous use of poverty. That rich man who was in the time of Lazarus was punished,' not because he was rich, but because he was cruel and inhuman. And that poor man who rested in the bosom of Abraham was praised, not because he was poor, but because he had borne his poverty with thankfulness.

For of things—(now attend carefully to this saying; for it will avail to put into you sufficient religious knowledge, and to cast out all unsound reasoning, and to bring about your having your judgment right concerning the truth of things)—well, of things some are by nature morally good, and others the contrary; and others neither good nor evil, but they occupy the intermediate position. A good thing piety is by nature, impiety an evil thing; a good thing virtue, an evil thing wickedness; but wealth and poverty in themselves are neither the one nor the other; but from the will of those who use them they become either the one or the other. For if thou hast used thy wealth for purposes of philanthropy, the thing becomes to thee a foundation of good; but if for rapine and grasping and insolence, thou hast turned the use of it to the direct opposite; but for this wealth is not chargeable, but he who has used his wealth for insolence. So also we may say of poverty: if thou have borne it nobly by giving thanks to the Master, what has been done becomes to thee a cause and ground for receiving crowns; but if on account of this thou blaspheme thy Creator, and accuse Him for His providence, thou hast again used the thing to an evil purpose. But just as in that case it is not wealth that is responsible for the avarice, but the person who has made a bad use of wealth, so also here we are not to lay the blame of the blasphemy on poverty, but on him who did not choose to bear the thing in a sober spirit. For in every case both the praise and the blame belong to our own will and choice. Good is wealth, yet not absolutely, but to him only to whom it is not sin; and again poverty is wicked, but not absophemes, because he is indignant, because he accuses Him who has made him.

3 Let us not therefore accuse riches, nor revile poverty absolutely, but those who do not will 2 to use these virtuously; for the things themselves lie in the middle. But as I was saying (for it is good to return to the former subject), both rich and poor enjoy the benefit of the medicines administered here with the same boldness and freedom; and often the poor with more earnestness. For the special excellence of the medicines is not this only, that they heal souls, that their virtue is not destroyed by length of time, that they are not worsted by any disease, that the benefit is publicly offered gratuitously, that the healing treatment is on a footing of equality both for rich and poor-but they have another quality also not inferior to these good points. Pray of what character is this? It is that we do not publicly expose those who come to this surgery. For they who go off to the surgeries of the outside world, have many who examine their wounds, and unless the physician have first uncovered the sore, he does not apply the dressing; but here not so, but seeing as we do innumerable patients, we go through the medical treatment of them in a latent manner. For not by dragging into publicity those who have sinned do we thus noise abroad the sins committed by them; but after putting forth our teaching, as common to all, we leave it entirely to the conscience of the hearers; so that each may draw to himself from what is said the suitable medicine for his own wound. For there proceeds the word of doctrine from the tongue of the speaker, containing accusation of wickedness, praise of virtue, blame of lewdness, commendation of chasteness, censure of pride, praise of gentleness, just as a medicine of varied and manifold ingredients, compounded from every kind; and to take what is applicable to himself and salutary is the part of each of the hearers. The word then issues openly, and settling into the conscience of each, secretly both affords the healing treatment which comes from it, and before the malady has been divulged, has often restored health.

4. You at all events heard yesterday how I extolled the power of prayer, how I reproached those who pray with listlessness; without having publicly exposed one of them. Those then who were conscious to themselves of earnestness, accepted that commendation of prayer, and became still more earnest by the praises, how. "On this account," he says, "brethren, I while those who were conscious to themselves of listlessness, accepted on the other hand the rebuking, and put off their carelessness. But Apollos were they who had rent the people in neither these nor those do we know; and this schism and divided the Church; but all the ignorance is serviceable to both-how, I now same he concealed the accusation, and just as tions of prayer and is conscious to himself of earnestness, were he to have many witnesses he afforded them power to amend of that of the commendations, would have lapsed wickedness. And again, "Lest in some way towards pride; but, as it is, by having secretly after I have come God humble me, and I may accepted the praise, he is removed from all have to mourn many of those who have before arrogance. On the other hand he who is con- sinned, and have not repented over the unscious to himself of listlessness, having heard cleanness and lasciviousness which they had the accusation, has become better from the committed." 4 See how here also he indefiaccusation, as having no one of men a witness nitely mentions those who had sinned, in order of the rebuking; and this was of no ordinary that he might not, by openly bringing the acprofit to him. For on account of the being cusation, render the soul of those who had flurried at the opinion of the vulgar, so long sinned more shameless. Therefore, just as we as we may think that we escape notice in our administer our reproofs with so much sparing wickedness, we exert ourselves to become bet- of your feelings, so do ye also with all seriouster; but when we have become notorious to ness receive the correction; and attend with all, and have lost the consolation derived from carefulness to what is said. the escaping notice, we grow more shameless more painful by being unbandaged and freafter having sinned, if in the presence of many administered its medicine to you covertly. exact knowledge of the faults committed. Add not therefore wound to wound by exposing him who has done wrong; but administer for thyself the counsel unwitnessed. This therefore we are doing now—the very thing that Paul also did, framing the indictment against him who among the Corinthians had sinned without citing of witnesses. And hear

¹ ἐκολάζετο. The imperfect denotes the continuous character of the punishment. So ἐπηνειτο "had lasting praise." "ἡ ἀρετὴ ἔξις ἐπαινετή." Aristotle Eth.

 $^{^2}$ Έθέλοντας. In its theological sense. "Θέλημα σαρκός." Not a classical, but an ecclesiastical word (John i. 13). So our Lord, είτις θέλει, has the will.

5. We discoursed to you yesterday about the and remiss rather. And just as sores become power which is in prayer. I pointed out 5 how the devil then lies in wait, deceiver that he is. quently exposed to cold air, so also the soul For since he sees very great gain accruing to us from prayer, then most he assails us, in it be rebuked for what it has done amiss, order that he may disable us from our degrows thereby more shameless. In order there- fence; 6 that he may send us off home emptyfore that this might not take place, the word handed. And just as before magistrates, when the officers of the court who are about the per-And that you may understand that the gain son of the magistrate have a hostile feeling which this covert treatment has is great, hear toward those who come before him, they by what the Christ says. "If thy brother have their staves drive them away to a distance, precommitted a fault against thee convince him venting their coming near and resorting to of it," and he did not say "between him and lamentation and so obtaining compassion; so the whole town," nor, "between thee and the also the devil, when he has seen us coming to whole people," 3 but "only between thee and the judge, drives us away to a distance, not by him." Let the accusation, he says, be unwit- any staff, but through our own slackness. For nessed to, in order that the change to amend- he knows, he knows clearly, that if they have ment may be made easy of digestion. A great come to him in a sober spirit, and have told good surely, the making the advice unpub- the sins committed, and have mourned with lished. Sufficient is the conscience, sufficient their soul fervent, they will depart having rethat incorruptible judge. It is not so much ceived full forgiveness; for God loves manthou who rebukest him who has done wrong as kind; and on this account he is beforehand his own conscience (that accuser is the with them, and debars them from access, in sharper), nor dost thou do it with the more order that they may obtain no one of the things which they need. But the soldiers of magistrates with violence scare away those who are coming to them; but he with no compulsion, but by deceiving us, and throwing us into security. On this account we are not deserving even of allowance, since we voluntarily deprive ourselves of the good things. Prayer with ι οἱ πολλόι, as opposed to οἱ χαριέντες, those of culture and refinement. Arist. Εὐλ.

2 Α common sense οἱ μανθανω. '' Μανθάνεις; οὑ μανθάνω.''
Α ristophanes; who was a favorite author with Chrysostom.
3 The article here has this universal force. Matt. xviii, 15.

⁴ t Cor. iv. 6; 2 Cor. xii. 2t.
5 Έδειξα. Έμθειξες. Lat. index (digitus), the fore-finger.
6 The idea seems to be that of making the accused entirely forget the defence, such as used to be written for him by some Torget the distinct plants of the Attic orator.

7 έντευξις, an Aristotelic term. "τῆς πρὸς τους πολλούς ἐντευξεως" Rhet., the way of addressing a large Lody.

earnestness is a light of the understanding and been read to-day harmonises with what was soul—a light unquenchable and perpetual. On said yesterday. "Isaac," it says, "prayed this account he throws into our minds count- concerning Rebecca his wife, because she was pours down upon our souls. And just as winds often rushing from an opposite quarter by a being lighted, so also the devil, when he has seen the flame of our prayer being kindled, blowing it on every side with the blasts of countless thoughts, does not desist before and until he has quenched the light. But the very Rachel. What is the meaning of this band of thing which they who are kindling those lamps barren ones? All were righteous, all living in do, this let us also do. And what do they do? When they see a violent wind coming, by laying their finger upon the opening of the lamp they bar the entrance against the wind. For so long as he assails from without we shall be able to stand against him; but when we have opened to him the doors of the mind, and have received the enemy inside; after that we are no longer able to withstand even a little; but, having on all sides completely extinguished the memory, just as a smoking lamp, he allows our mouth to utter empty words. But just as they put their finger upon the opening of the lamp, so let us lay consideration upon our mind: let us close off from the wicked spirit the entrance, in order that he may not quench our light of prayer. Remember both those illustrations, both that of the soldiers and the magistrate, and that respecting the lamp. For with this purpose we adduce to you these illustrations; with which we are conversant, in which we live, in order that, after we have departed hence and have returned home, we may the cause of events. On this account in every from things of familiar occurrence receive a case it is our duty to admire His wisdom, and reminder of what has been said.

6. Prayer is a strong piece of armour and a three children, fettered as they were, destroyed the power of the fire; how they trampled down the blaze; how they overcame the furnace, and conquered the operation of the element. Hear to-day again how the noble and great Isaac overcame the nature itself of bodies through prayer. They destroyed 2 the power of fire, this man today loosed the bonds of incapacitated nature. And learn how he effected this. "Isaac," it says, "prayed 3 concerning his wife, because she was barren." This has to-day been read to you; yesterday the sermon was about prayer; and to-day again there is a demonstration of the power of prayer. See how the grace of the Spirit has ordered that what has less rubbish-heaps of imaginations; and things barren." This first is worth inquiring into, which we never had imagined, these collecting for what cause she was barren. She was of together at the very moment of prayer he a life admirable and replete with much chastity—both herself and her husband. We can not lay hold 4 of the life of those just ones, and violent gust extinguish a lamp's flame as it is say that the barrenness was the work of sin. And not only was she herself barren, but also his mother Sarah, who had borne him; not only was his mother barren and his wife, but also his daughter-in-law, the wife of Jacob, virtue, all were witnessed to by God. For it was of them that He said, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Of the same persons Paul also thus speaks. "For which cause God is not ashamed to call himself their God." 5 Many are the commendations of them in the New, many the praises of them in the Old Testament. On all sides they were bright and illustrious, and yet they all had barren wives, and continued in childlessness until an advanced period. When therefore thou seest man and wife living with virtue; when thou seest them beloved of God, caring for piety, and yet suffering the malady of childlessness: do not suppose that the childlessness is at all a retribution for sins. For many are God's reasons for the dispensation, and to us inexplicable; and for all we must be heartily thankful, and think those only wretched who live in wickedness; not those who do not possess children. Often God does it expediently, though we know not to glorify His unspeakable love of man.

7. Well,6 this consideration indeed is able great security. You heard yesterday how the to school us in moral character, but it is necessary also to state the cause for which those women were barren. What then was the cause? It was in order that when thou hast seen the Virgin bringing forth our common Master, thou mightest not disbelieve. Wherefore exercise thy mind in the womb of the barren; in order that when thou hast seen the womb, disabled and bound as it is, being opened to the bearing of children from the grace of God, thou mightest not marvel at hearing that a virgin has brought forth. Or rather even marvel and be astounded; but do not disbelieve the marvel. When the Jew says to thee, "how did the virgin bear?" say to him "how did she bear who was barren and

¹ Still continuing the simile of a wind.
2 κατέλυσαν, de-struo, to take to pieces, pull down, a building.
3 έδεετο. Denotes continuance in prayer. Comp. Matt. vii. 7, 8.

⁴ ἐπιλαβεσθαι, as in wrestling.
6 ᾿Αλλά. This adverb is not always adversative. It is sometimes, as here, connective; denoting a transition in treating the subject. Comp. Aristophanes Acharn. 377-383.

the virgin. And that thou mayest learn that it was on this account that the barren ones had anticipated it, in order that the Virgin's childbirth might be believed, hear the words of Gabriel which were addressed to her-For when he had come and said to her, "thou shalt conceive in the womb and bear a son, and was astonished and marvelled, and said, "how shall come upon thee." Seek not the sequence this be, since thou knowest no husband. For didst thou know a husband, thou wouldest not have been deemed worthy to serve this ministry. So that, for the reason why thou disbeenters through one more august. It was necessary that He should both share as to birth, and be diverse from ours. Wherefore both these things are managed.

learn both the pre-eminence and the fellowship with thee of Him who was born.

8. And pray consider the wisdom of all that was done. Neither did the pre-eminence inkinship to us dim the pre-eminence; but both the one had our condition in its entirety, and the other what was diverse compared with us. But just as I was saying, on this account the barren ones went before, in order that the Virgin's child-birth might be believed, that she'

enfeebled by old age?" There were then two might be led by the hand to faith in that hindrances, both the unseasonableness of her promise and undertaking which she heard age and the unserviceableness of nature; but from the angel, saying, "The Holy Ghost shall in the case of the Virgin there was one hin-come upon thee, and the miraculous power? of drance only, the not having shared in marriage. the Most High shall overshadow thee "-thus, The barren one therefore prepares the way for he says, thou art able to bear. Look not to the earth; it is from the heavens that the operation will come. That which takes place is a grace of the Spirit; pray inquire not about nature and laws of marriage. But since those words were too high for her, he wills to afford also another demonstration. But do thou, pray, observe how the barren one leads her on thou shalt call his name Jesus;" the Virgin the way to the belief in this. For since that demonstration was too high for the Virgin's will this be to me, since I know not a man." intelligence, hear how he brought down what What then said the Angel? "The Holy Ghost he said to lower things also, leading her by the hand by sensible facts. For "behold," he of nature, he says, when that which takes place says, "Elizabeth thy kinswoman—she also has the birth is too grand for marriage. "And how will this be," she says, "since I know not a husband." And verily on this of her kinswoman? with what object did he say, "in her old age?" with what object did he add, "who was called barren?" It was by way of inducing her by all these things, manilievest, for this believe. And thou wouldest festly, to the believing the glad annunciation. not have been deemed worthy to serve this For this cause he spoke of both the age and ministry, not because marriage is an evil; but the disabling effect of nature; for this cause because virginity is superior; and right it was he awaited the time also which had elapsed that the entry of the Master should be more from the conception; for he did not tell to her august than ours; for it was royal, and the king the glad tidings immediately from the beginning,3 but awaited for a six-months period to have passed to the barren one, in order that the puerperal swelling might, for the rest, be a pledge of the pregnancy, and an indisputable For the being born from the womb is com-demonstration might arise of the conception. mon in respect to us, but the being born with-out marriage is a thing greater than on a level Gabriel. For he neither reminded her of with us. And the gestation and conception in Sarah, nor of Rebecca, nor of Rachel; and the belly belongs to human nature; but that yet they also were barren, and they had grown the pregnancy should take place without old, and that which took place was a marvel; sexual intercourse is too august for human but the stories were ancient. Now things new nature. And for this purpose both these and recent and occurring in our generation are things took place, in order that thou mayest wont to induce us into the belief of marvels more than those which are old. On this account having let those women alone, that she should understand from her kinswoman Elizabeth herself what was coming upon her, he jure the likeness and kinship to us, nor did the brought it forward; so as from her to lead her to her own-that most awful and august childwere displayed by all the circumstances; and birth. For the child-birth of the barren one lay between ours and that of the Master less indeed than that of the Virgin, but greater not i/se, seems to have been introduced in the Alexandrian period of Greek literature. "'Αυτός γάρ δυκ ἐκει θεοί," Lxx.

"The constant signification of δύναμε, in the Gospels.
3 Προοιμίων, lit. the prelude, overture. Οίμας Μοῦσ ἐδίδαξε φίλησε δὲ φύλον ἀσιδών, Hom. Od. 481.
4 Αυτής, έχες δὲ αὐτήν.

[&]quot; 'Αυτή. The use of ἀυτὸς in the nominative in this sense ; ille, the travail which is according to nature, to that which is above nature.

9. I did desire to say more, and to teach you other reasons for which Rebecca, and Rachel, were barren; but the time does not permit; urging on the discourse to the power of prayer. For on this account indeed I have mooted all these points, that ye might understand how the prayer of Isaac unbound the barrenness of his wife; and that prayer for so "Isaac," it says, "continually long a time. prayed about Rebecca his wife, and God listened to him." For do not suppose that he invoked God and had immediately been listened to; for he had spent much time in praying to God. And if you desire to learn how much, I will tell you this too with exactness. praying to God. Whence is this manifest? from the sequence itself. For the Scripture, desiring to point out the faith and the endurance and the love of wisdom of that righteous man, did not break off and leave untold even the time, but made it also clear to us, covertly indeed, so as to rouse up our indolence; but nevertheless did not allow it to be uncertain. Hear then how it covertly indicated to us the time. "Now Isaac was forty years old when many years old he was when he married his wife, let us learn also when he after all became a father, and how many years old he was then, when he begat Jacob; and we shall be able to see how long a time his wife had remained barren; and that during all that time he continued to pray to God. How many years old then was he when he begat Jacob? "Jacob," it says, "came forth laying hold with his right hand of his brother's heel: on this account he called him Jacob, and him Esau. Now Isaac was sixty years old when he begat them." If therefore when he brought Rebecca home he was forty years old, and when he begat the sons sixty, it is very plain that his wife had remained barren for twenty years between, and during all this time Isaac continued to pray to God.

10. After this do we not feel shame, and hide our faces, at seeing that righteous man for twenty years persevering and not desisting; we ourselves after a first or second peti-

than ours. On this account it was by Eliza- tion often fainting and indignant? And yet beth lying between, just as by some bridge, he indeed had in large measure liberty of that he lifted up the mind of the Virgin from speech towards God, and all the same he felt no discontent at the delay of the giving, but remained patient, whereas we, laden with countless sins, living with an evil conscience, displaying no good will towards the Master; if we are not heard before having spoken, are bewildered, impatiently recoil, desist from asking-on this account we always retire with empty hands. Who has for twenty years besought God for one thing, as this righteous man did? or rather who for twenty months only? Yesterday I was saying that they are many who pray with slackness, and yawning, and stretching themselves, and continually shifting their attitude, and indulging in every carelessness in their prayers-but to-day I have found also another damage attaching itself to their prayers more destructive than He had spent the number of twenty years in that one. For many, throwing themselves prostrate, and striking the ground with their forehead, and pouring forth hot tears, and groaning bitterly from the heart 3 and stretching out their hands, and displaying much earnestness, employ this warmth and forwardness against their own salvation. For it is not on behalf of their own sins that they beseech God; nor are they asking forgiveness of the offences committed by them; but they are exerting this earnestness against their enemies entirely, doing he took Rebecca, a daughter of Bethuel the just the same thing as if one, after whetting Syrian." You hear how many years old he his sword, were not to use the weapon against was when he brought home his wife: "Forty his enemies, but to thrust it through his own years old," it says, "he was when he took throat. So these also use their prayers not Rebecca." But since we have learnt how for the remission of their own sins, but about revenge on their enemies; which is to thrust the sword against themselves. This too the wicked one has devised, in order that on all sides we may destroy ourselves, both through slackness and through earnestness. For the one class by their carelessness in their prayers exasperate God, by displaying contempt through their slackness; and the others, when they display earnestness, display the earnestness on the other hand against their own salvation. "A certain person," he (the devil) says, "is slack: that is sufficient for me with a view to his obtaining nothing; this man is earnest and thoroughly aroused; what then must be done to accomplish the same result? I cannot slacken his earnestness, nor throw him into carelessness; I will contrive his de-trahens de pectore vocem.

^{*}πάρρησίαν, a phrase of courtly ceremonial; sometimes coupled with προσαγωγη, the antecedent ceremony of introduction to a king's presence. Xenphon Cyropi, via, 5,45. Both occur in Virg. Fm. i, 590. "Postquam introgressi, et coram data copia fandi:" The literal translation of παρρησία: coram = παρά "in the presence." Comp. Chrysost, Hom. II. in a Cor. of the catechumens standing outside the holy rails, and not allowed to take part in the Lord's Prayer, "ουδείπω γώρ παρβρησία κεκτηγτια."

3 Literally "from below." Comp. Virgil Æn. i. 37; imogæ trahens de pectore vecent.

I тараце́уоута, waiting; as it were, like a beggar at the door, it is shown not according to God's laws.

puerile mind; of how infantile a soul. I am and remitted the ten thousand talents. and subdued, and practise all love of wisdom. fellow-servant So also God said, "Let your light shine before struction in the other way. How so? I will doing this in God's presence, tell me, dost manage that he use his earnestness for trans- thou not shudder, nor fear when in the time of gressing the law:" (for the praying against entreaty and prayer being so savage and turnone's personal enemies is a transgression of ing thyself into a wild beast; and displaying "He shall depart therefore not only greater want of feeling than he who demanded having gained nothing by his earnestness, but payment of the hundred pence?³ For that also having endured the hurt which is greater thou art more insolent than he, listen to the than that caused through slackness." Such as story itself. A certain man owed ten thousand these are the injuries of the devil: the one talents to his master; then, not having (wheresort he destroys through their remissness; and with) to pay, he entreated him to be longthe other through their earnestness itself, when suffering, in order that, his wife having been sold and his house and his children, he might 11. But it is also worth hearing the very words settle his master's claim. And the master of their prayer, and how the words are of a seeing him lamenting had compassion on him, ashamed in truth when about to repeat them; having gone out and found another servant but it is absolutely necessary to repeat them, owing him a hundred pence, seizing his throat and to imitate that coarse tongue. What then demanded them with great cruelty and inare the words? "Avenge me of my enemies, humanity. The Master having heard this show them that I too have God (on my side)." threw him into the prison, and laid on him They do not then learn, man, that we have again the debt of the ten thousand talents God, when we are indignant and angry and which he had before remitted; and he paid impatient; but when we are gentle and meek the penalty of the cruelty shown towards his

12. Now do thou consider in how much more men, that they may see your good works, and unfeeling and insensible in a way thou hast glorify your Father who is in the heavens." acted even than he, praying against thine Perceivest thou not that it is an insult to God, enemies. He did not beg his master to dethe making a request to God against thine mand, but he himself demanded, the hundred enemies? And how is it an insult? one will pence; whereas thou even callest on the Massay. Because He Himself said, "pray for ter for this shameless and forbidden demand. your enemies;" and brought in this divine law. And he seized his fellow-servant's throat not When therefore thou claimest that the legisla- before his lord's eyes, but outside; while thou tor should relax his own laws; and callest in the very moment of prayer, standing in the upon him to legislate in opposition to himself; King's presence, doest this. And if he, for and supplicatest him who had forbidden thee doing this without either having urged his to pray against thine enemies to hear thee master to the demand, and after going forth, praying against thine enemies; thou art not met with no forgiveness; thou, both stirring praying in doing this, nor calling upon him; up the Master to (exacting) this forbidden paybut thou art insulting the lawgiver, and acting ment, and doing this before his eyes, what sort with drunken violence towards him, who is of penalty will thou have to pay? tell me. sure to give to thee the good things which re- But thy mind is inflamed by the memory of the sult from prayer. And how is it possible to be enmity, and swells, and thy heart rises,4 and heard when praying, tell me, when thou exas- when recurring in memory to him who has peratest him who is sure to hear? For by caused pain, thou art unable to reduce the doing these things thou art pushing thine own swelling of thy thought. But set against this salvation into a pit, and art rushing down a inflammation the memory resulting from thine precipice, by striking thine enemy before the own sins committed the fear resulting from the king's eyes.2 For even if thou doest not this punishment to come. Recall to memory for with the hands, with thy words thou strikest how many things thou art accountable to thy him, the thing which thou darest not do even master, and that for all those things thou owest in the case of thy fellow-slaves. At least dare Him satisfaction; and this fear will surely to do this in a ruler's presence, and though overcome that anger; since indeed this is far thou hast done countless public services, thou more powerful than that passion. Recall the wilt straightway surely be led away to execution. memory of hell and punishment and vengeance Then (I ask) in the presence of a ruler dost during the time of thy prayer; and thou wilt thou not dare to insult thine equal, but when not be able even to receive thine enemy into

² To strike any one within "the precincts of the court" even has been made a capital offence.

³ Matt. xviii. 28, 4 Possibly "stomach." Comp. Thuc. ii. 49, ὁπότε ἐς τὴν καρ-δίαν στηριξαι. Lat. stomacher. A medical sense, and the meta-phor here is medical throughout. So "cardiacus." Juvenal.

thought of those of others. If we do this we shall both have God propitious, and shall cease cherishing immortal anger against our neighenemy; and even if we should have at any time we shall both quickly put an end to his thy mind.' Make thy mind contrite, humble our own sins. For just as he who treasures up thy soul by the memory of the offences com the memory of wrong against his neighbour mitted by thee, and wrath will not be able even does not permit the punishment upon his own to trouble thee. But the cause of all these sins to be done away; so he who is clear of evils is this, that we scrutinise the sins of all anger will speedily be clear of sins also. For others with great exactitude; while we let our if we, wicked as we are and enslaved to pasown pass with great remissness. Whereas we sion, on account of the commandment of God ought to do the contrary—to keep our own overlook all the faults committed against us, faults unforgotten; but never even to admit a much more will He who is a lover of mankind, and good, and free from any passion, overlook our delinquencies, rendering to us the recompense of our kindly spirit towards our neighbours, and we shall never have any one as an bour in the forgiveness of our own sins: which God grant that we may attain, by the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, enmity, and should obtain speedy pardon for to whom is the glory and the dominion, to the ages of the ages. Amen.

Because it is filled with better thoughts. No room for him.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

TWO HOMILIES ON EUTROPIUS.

- I. WHEN HE HAD TAKEN REFUGE IN THE CHURCH.
- H. WHEN HE HAD QUITTED THE ASYLUM OF THE CHURCH, AND HAD BEEN TAKEN CAPTIVE.

TRANSLATED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

CONTENTS.

HOMILY I.

							PAGE
Introduction			٠				245
Ι.	Contrast between the late prosperity and present misery of Eutropius	٠			٠		249
2.	The same						250
3.	The church has returned good for evil			٠			250
4.	Lessons to be learned from the spectacle of fallen greatness exhibited by Eutropiu	15					251
5•	An exhortation to mercy and forgiveness	٠	•				252
	HOMILY II.
ī.	The church an impregnable refuge						252
2,	St. Chrysostom forcibly conducted to the Emperor's palace						253
3.	The uselessness of riches in the time of danger \ldots						254
4.	The virtuous man is invulnerable	٠					254
5.	The shortness and insignificance of this present life						255
6.	Lessons to be learned from seeing the calamities of others						255
7.	Explanation of anthropomorphic expressions as applied to God in Holy Scripture						256
8.	Explanation of symbolical names of God in Holy Scripture						257
9.	Reasons why the acts and attributes of God are described in figurative language						257
10.	The glory of the Transfiguration transcended the description of the Evangelists.						258
II.	The Incarnation set forth under the image of a marriage						258
12	The sp ritual dowry bestowed on human nature by the Incarnation						260
13.	This dowry partly present, partly future						260
14.	What the possession of spiritual gifts enabled St. Paul to do						261
15.	The spiritual marriage and dowry illustrated by a reference to Psalm xlv						262
16.	The same						263
17	Corporeal and spiritual beauty contrasted						26.1

INTRODUCTION TO THE TWO HOMILIES ON EUTROPIUS.

THE interest of the two following discourses depends not only on their intrinsic value as specimens of Chrysostom's eloquence, but also on the singular and dramatic character of the incidents which gave occasion to them.

Arcadius the Emperor of the East like his brother Honorius the Emperor of the West was a man of feeble intellect. The history of the Empire under their reign is a melancholy record of imbecility on the part of the nominal rulers: of faithlessness and unscrupulous ambition on the part of their ministers. The chief administrator of affairs in the beginning of the reign of Arcadius was Rufinus, an Aquitanian Gaul; the very model of an accomplished adventurer. His intrigues, his arrogance, his rapacious avarice excited the indignation of the people, and he was at last assassinated by the troops to whom he was making an oration in the presence of the Emperor. His place in the favour and confidence of Arcadius was soon occupied by the eunuch Eutropius. The career of this person was a strange one. Born a slave, in the region of Mesopotamia, he had passed in boyhood and youth through the hands of many owners, performing the most menial offices incident to his position. At length Arnithus, an old military officer who had become his master, presented him to his daughter on her marriage; and in the words of the poet Claudian "the future consul of the East was made over as part of a marriage dowry." But the young lady after a time grew tired of the slave who was becoming elderly and wrinkled, and without trying to sell him turned him out of her household. He picked up a precarious living in Constantinople and was often in great want until an officer about court took pity on him, and procured him a situation in the lower ranks of the imperial chamberlains. This was the beginning of his rise. By the diligence with which he discharged his humble duties, by occasional witty sayings, and the semblance of a fervent piety he attracted the notice of the great Emperor Theodosius (the father of Arcadius), and gradually won his confidence so as to be employed on difficult and delicate missions. On the death of Theodosius he became in the capacity of grand chamberlain the intimate adviser and constant attendant of Arcadius and the most subtle and determined rival of Rufinus. It was by his contrivance that the scheme of Rufinus for marrying his own daughter to the Emperor was defeated: and that Eudoxia the daughter of a Frankish general was substituted for her. After the murder of Rufinus the government was practically in his hands; but he exercised his power more craftily than the vain and boastful Gaul. He contrived at first to discharge all the duties which fell to his lot as chamberlain with humble assiduity, and sought no other title than he already possessed. Slowly but surely however he climbed to the summit of power by the simple process of putting out of the way on various pretexts all dangerous competitors. He deprived his victims of their last hope of escape by abolishing the right of the Church to afford shelter to fugitives. He sold the chief offices of the State, and the command of the provinces to the highest bidders. By surrounding the Emperor with a crowd of frivolous companions, by dissipating his mind with a perpetual round of amusements, by taking him every spring to Ancyra in Phrygia where he was subjected to the enervating influence of a soft climate and luxurious style of living he made the naturally feeble intellect of Arcadius more feeble still and withdrew it from the power of every superior mind but his own. From the pettiest detail of domestic life to the most important affairs of state, the wily minister at length ruled supreme. Arcadius was little more than a magnificently dressed puppet, and the eunuch slave was the real master of half the Roman world. It was by his advice that on the death of Nectarius in 397 Chrysostom had been appointed, very much against his own will, to the vacant See of Constantinople. If Eutropius expected to find a complaisant courtier in the new Archbishop he certainly sustained a severe disappointment. Some little pretences which he made of assisting the work of the Church by patronising Chrysostom's missionary projects could not blind the Archbishop to the gross venality of his administration, or exempt him from the censure and warnings of one who was too honest and bold to be any respecter of persons. In fact when the Archbishop declaimed against the cupidity and oppressions of the rich it was obvious to all that Eutropius was the most signal example of those vices. At last the minister, not content to remain as he was-enjoying the reality of power without the name-prepared the way for his own ruin by inducing the Emperor to bestow on him the titles of Patrician and Consul. The acquisition of these venerable names by the eunuch slave caused a profound sensation of shame and indignation throughout the Empire, but especially in the Western capital, where they were bound up with all the noblest and most glorious memories in the history of the Roman people. The name of Eutropius was omitted from the Fasti or catalogue of consuls inscribed in the Capitol at Rome. Amidst the general decadence and degeneracy of public spirit in the Empire the West did not descend, could not have descended, to those depths of servile adulation to which the Byzantines stooped at the inauguration of Eutropius as Consul. The senate, and all the great officials military and civil, poured into the palace of the Cæsars to offer their homage, and emulated each other in the honor of kissing the hand and even the wrinkled visage of the eunuch. They saluted him as the bulwark of the laws, and the second father of the Emperor. Statues of bronze or marble were placed in various parts of the city representing him in the costume of warrior or judge, and the inscriptions on them styled him third founder of the city after Byzas, and Constantine. No wonder that Claudian declaimed with bitter sarcasm against "a Byzantine nobility and Greek divinities" and invokes Neptune by a stroke of his trident to unseat and submerge the degenerate city which had inflicted such a deep disgrace upon the Empire. A blow indeed was about to fall upon the eastern capital, directed not by the hand of a mythic deity, but of a stout barbarian soldier. The consequences of it were averted from the city only by the sacrifice of the new consul upon whom it fell with crushing effect. He sank never to rise again. Tribigild, a distinguished gothic soldier who had been raised to the rank of Tribune in the Roman army, had demanded higher promotion for himself and higher pay for a body of military colonists in Phrygia of which he had the command. His petition had been coldly dismissed by Eutropius; Tribigild resented the affront and with the troops which he commanded broke into revolt. Eutropius entrusted the conduct of an expedition against him to one of his favorites, who suffered a most ignominious defeat in which he perished, and the greater part of his army was cut to pieces. Constantinople was convulsed with terror and indignation. Gäinas another Goth in command of the city troops declared that he could do nothing to check the progress of the revolt unless Eutropius was banished, the principal author of all the evils of the State. His demand was backed by the Empress Eudoxia, who had experienced much insolence from the minister. Eutropius was deprived of his official dignity, his property was declared confiscated, and he was commanded to quit the palace instantly under pain of death. Whither could the poor wretch fly who was thus in a moment hurled from the pinnacle of power into the lowest depths of degradation and destitution. There was but one place to which he could naturally turn in his distress-the sanctuary of the Church; but by the cruel irony of his fate, a law of his own devising here barred his entrance. Yet he knew that the law prohibiting asylum had been resented and resisted by the Church and it might be that the Archbishop would connive at the violation of the obnoxious measure by the very person who had passed it. He resolved to make the experiment. In the humblest guise of a suppliant, tears streaming down his puckered cheeks, his scant grey hairs smeared with dust, he crept into the Cathedral, drew aside the curtain in front of the altar and clung to one of the columns which supported it. Here he was found by Chrysostom in a state of pitiable and abject terror, for soldiers in search of him had entered the Church, and the clattering of their arms could be heard on the other side of the thin partition which concealed the fugitive. With quivering lips he craved the asylum of the church, and he was not repulsed as the destroyer of the refuge which he now sought.' Chrysostom rejoiced in the opportunity afforded to the church of taking a noble revenge on her adversary.2 He concealed Eutropius in the sacristy, confronted his pursuers, and refused to surrender him. "None shall violate the sanctuary save over my body: the church is the bride of Christ who has entrusted her honor to me and I will never betray it." He desired to be conducted to the Emperor and taken like a prisoner between two rows of spearmen from the Cathedral to the palace 3 where he boldly vindicated the church's right of asylum in the presence of the Emperor. Arcadius promised to respect the retreat of the fallen minister, and with difficulty persuaded the angry troops to accept his decision. The next day was Sunday, and the Cathedral was thronged with a vast multitude eager to hear what the golden mouth of the Archbishop would utter who had dared in defence of the Church's right to defy the law, and confront the tide of popular feeling. But few probably were prepared to witness such a dramatic scene as was actually presented. The Archbishop had just taken his seat in the "Ambon" or high reading desk a little westward of the chancel from which he was wont to preach on account of his diminutive stature, and a sea of faces was upturned to him waiting for the stream of golden eloquence when the curtain of the sanctuary was drawn aside and disclosed the cowering form of the miserable Eutropius clinging to one of the columns of the Holy Table. Many a time had the Archbishop preached to unheeding ears on the vain and fleeting character of worldly honor, prosperity, luxury and wealth: now he would force attention, and drive home his lesson to the hearts of his vast congregation by pointing to a visible example of fallen grandeur in the poor wretch who lay grovelling behind him.

Eutropius remained for some days within the precincts of the Church and then suddenly departed. Whether he mistrusted the security of his shelter and hoped to make his escape in disguise, or whether he surrendered himself on the understanding that exile would be substituted for capital punishment cannot be certainly known. Chrysostom declared that if he had not abandoned the Church, the Church would never have given him up.4 Anyhow he was captured and conveyed to Cyprus, but soon afterwards he was tried at Constantinople on various charges of high crimes and misdemeanors against the State, and condemned to suffer capital punishment. He was taken to Chalcedon and there beheaded.5 The second of the two following discourses was delivered a few days after Eutropius had quitted the sanctuary of the Church.

¹ Hom. i. 2. ² Hom. i. 3. ³ Hom. ii, 1. ⁴ Hom. ii, 1. ⁵ For a fuller account of all these events, see Life of St. John Chrysostom by W. R. W. Stephens (pp. 298-256, 3d edition).

EUTROPIUS, PATRICIAN AND CONSUL.

HOMILY I.

ON EUTROPIUS, THE EUNUCH, PATRICIAN AND CONSUL-

always seasonable to utter this but more es- And inasmuch as deceitful things, and maskpecially at the present time. Where are now ings and pretence seem to many to be realities the brilliant surroundings of thy consulship? it behoves each one every day both at supper where are the gleaming torches? Where is and at breakfast, and in social assemblies to the dancing, and the noise of dancers' feet, and the banquets and the festivals? where are the say in return "vanity of vanities, all is vanity." garlands and the curtains of the theatre? where Was I not continually telling thee that wealth is the applause which greeted thee in the city, was a runaway? But you would not heed me. where the acclamation in the hippodrome and Did I not tell thee that it was an unthankful the flatteries of spectators? They are gone— servant? But you would not be persuaded. all gone: a wind has blown upon the tree shat- Behold actual experience has now proved that tering down all its leaves, and showing it to us it is not only a runaway, and ungrateful servquite bare, and shaken from its very root; for ant, but also a murderous one, for it is this so great has been the violence of the blast, which has caused thee now to fear and tremthat it has given a shock to all these fibres of ble. Did I not say to thee when you continthe tree and threatens to tear it up from the ually rebuked me for speaking the truth, "I roots. Where now are your feigned friends? love thee better than they do who flatter where are your drinking parties, and your suppers? where is the swarm of parasites, and the than they who pay thee court?" Did I wine which used to be poured forth all day not add to these words by saying that the long, and the manifold dainties invented by wounds of friends were more to be relied upon your cooks? where are they who courted your than the voluntary kisses of enemies.' If you power and did and said everything to win your had submitted to my wounds their kisses would the dawn of day: they were spring flowers, produced an incurable disease. Where are tinually this spiritual song—"Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." For this saying ought to be continually written on our walls, and garments, in the market place, and in the house, on the streets, and on the doors and entrances, and above all on the conscience of each one, Prov. xxvii. 6.

1. "VANITY of vanities, all is vanity"—it is and to be a perpetual theme for meditation. favour? They were all mere visions of the not have wrought thee this destruction: for night, and dreams which have vanished with my wounds work health, but their kisses have and when the spring was over they all with- now thy cup-bearers, where are they who ered: they were a shadow which has passed cleared the way for thee in the market place, away—they were a smoke which has dispersed, and sounded thy praises endlessly in the ears bubbles which have burst, cobwebs which have of all? They have fled, they have disowned been rent in pieces. Therefore we chant con- thy friendship, they are providing for their own you treated as an enemy has opened her bosom, the hourly expectation of death. But indeed is hurrying in every direction, in her desire to suggestive of one whose soul was petrified. pluck thee out of the net.

those who are sailing with a favourable breeze, I parade his sufferings from a desire to soften so that they may not become overwhelmed. their hardheartedness by my narrative. not be able to present to you in language the clean sin: yet her deed was no reproach to suffering which he must naturally undergo, in and received thee into it; whereas the theatres what need is there of any words from me, which you courted, and about which you were when he himself has clearly depicted this for oftentimes indignant with me have betrayed us as in a visible image? For yesterday when and ruined thee. And yet I never ceased say- they came to him from the royal court intending to thee "why doest thou these things?" ing to drag him away by force, and he ran for "thou art exasperating the Church, and casting refuge to the holy furniture," his face was then, thyself down headlong," yet thou didst hurry as it is now, no better than the countenance of away from all my warnings. And now the one dead: and the chattering of his teeth, and hippodromes, having exhausted thy wealth, the quaking and quivering of his whole body, have whetted the sword against thee, but the and his faltering voice, and stammering tongue, Church which experienced thy untimely wrath and in fact his whole general appearance were

3. Now I say these things not by way of 2. And I say these things now not as tramp- reproaching him, or insulting his misfortune, ling upon one who is prostrate, but from a de- but from a desire to soften your minds towards sire to make those who are still standing more him, and to induce you to compassion, and to secure: not by way of irritating the sores of persuade you to be contented with the punishone who has been wounded, but rather to pre- ment which has already been inflicted. For serve those who have not yet been wounded since there are many inhuman persons amongst in sound health; not by way of sinking one us who are inclined, perhaps, to find fault with who is tossed by the waves, but as instructing me for having admitted him to the sanctuary,

And how may this be effected? by observing For tell me, beloved brother, wherefore art the vicissitudes of human affairs. For even thou indignant with me? You say it is bethis man had he stood in fear of vicissitude cause he who continually made war upon the would not have experienced it; but whereas Church has taken refuge within it. Yet surely neither his own conscience, nor the counsels we ought in the highest degree to glorify God, of others wrought any improvement in him, do for permitting him to be placed in such a great ye at least who plume yourselves on your riches strait as to experience both the power and the profit by his calamity: for nothing is weaker lovingkindness of the Church:—her power in than human affairs. Whatever term therefore that he has suffered this great vicissitude in one may employ to express their insignificance consequence of the attacks which he made it will fall short of the reality; whether he calls upon her: her lovingkindness in that she whom them smoke, or grass, or a dream or spring he attacked now casts her shield in front of flowers, or by any other name; so perishable him and has received him under her wings, are they, and more naught than nonentities; and placed him in all security not resenting but that together with their nothingness they any of her former injuries, but most lovingly have also a very perilous element we have a opening her bosom to him. For this is more proof before us. For who was more exalted glorious than any kind of trophy, this is a brilthan this man? Did he not surpass the whole liant victory, this puts both Gentiles and Jews world in wealth? had he not climbed to the to shame, this displays the bright aspect of the very pinnacle of distinction? did not all trem- Church: in that having received her enemy as ble and fear before him? Yet lo! he has be- a captive, she spares him, and when all have come more wretched than the prisoner, more despised him in his desolation, she alone like pitiable than the menial slave, more indigent an affectionate mother has concealed him than the beggar wasting away with hunger, under her cloak,3 opposing both the wrath of having every day a vision of sharpened swords the king, and the rage of the people, and their and of the criminal's grave, and the public overwhelming hatred. This is an ornament executioner leading him out to his death; and for the altar. A strange kind of ornament, he does not even know if he once enjoyed you say, when the accused sinner, the extorpast pleasure, nor is he sensible even of the tioner, the robber is permitted to lay hold of sun's ray, but at mid day his sight is dimmed the altar. Nay! say not so: for even the as if he were encompassed by the densest harlot took hold of the feet of Jesus, she who gloom. But even let me try my best I shall was stained with the most accursed and un-

² Holy vessels would be the literal rendering of the word (σκευ-εσι), but it is clear from what follows that the altar is intended.
3 Possibly an allusion to the curtain which, in Eastern Churches, was drawn in front of the altar.

Ι τών ούδεν όντων ούδαμινώτερα.

Jesus, but rather redounded to His admiration bling, he abates his haughtiness, he puts down cut off the right of refuge here by his ordithat it holds the lion in bondage; for any figmay see denuded of its enamel and pigments by the action of adversity as by a sponge terrified than a hare or a frog, nailed fast to shouting, leaping, and brandishing their spears, yonder pillar, without bonds, his fear serving he shed streams of tears from his gentle eyes, and praise: for the impure woman did no in- his pride, and having acquired the kind of wisjury to Him who was pure, but rather was the dom concerning human affairs which it convile harlot rendered pure by the touch of Him cerns him to have he departs instructed by who was the pure and spotless one. Grudge example in the lesson which Holy Scripture not then, O man. We are the servants of the teaches by precept:—"All flesh is grass and all crucified one who said "Forgive them for they the glory of man as the flower of grass: the know not what they do." But, you say, he grass withereth and the flower faileth "or "They shall wither away quickly as the grass, nances and divers kinds of laws. Yes! yet and as the green herb shall they quickly fail"3 now he has learned by experience what it was or "like smoke are his days," and all pashe did, and he himself by his own deeds has sages of that kind. Again the poor man been the first to break the law, and has become when he has entered and gazed at this spectaa spectacle to the whole world, and silent cle does not think meanly of himself, nor bethough he is, he utters from thence a warning wail himself on account of his poverty, but voice to all, saying "do not such things as I feels grateful to his poverty, because it is a have done, that ye suffer not such things as I place of refuge to him, and a calm haven, and suffer." He appears as a teacher by means secure bulwark; and when he sees these things of his calamity, and the altar emits great lustre. he would many times rather remain where he inspiring now the greatest awe from the fact is, than enjoy the possession of all men for a little time and afterwards be in jeopardy of his ure of royalty might be very much set off if own life. Seest thou how the rich and poor, the king were not only to be seen seated on high and low, bond and free have derived 'no his throne arrayed in purple and wearing his small profit from this man's taking refuge crown, but if also prostrate at the feet of the here? Seest thou how each man will depart king barbarians with their hands bound behind hence with a remedy, being cured merely by their backs were bending low their heads. this sight? Well! have I softened your pas-And that no persuasive arguments have been sion, and expelled your wrath? have I extinused, ye yourselves are witnesses of the enthuguished your cruelty? have I induced you to siasm, and the concourse of the people. For be pitiful? Indeed I think I have; and your brilliant indeed is the scene before us to day, countenances and the streams of tears you and magnificent the assembly, and I see as shed are proofs of it. Since then your hard large a gathering here to-day as at the Holy rock has turned into deep and fertile soil let Paschal Feast. Thus the man has summoned us hasten to produce some fruit of mercy, and you here without speaking and yet uttering a to display a luxuriant crop of pity by falling voice through his actions clearer than the down before the Emperor or rather by implorsound of a trumpet: and ye have all thronged ing the merciful God so to soften the rage of hither to-day, maidens deserting their boudoirs, the Emperor, and make his heart tender that and matrons the women's chambers, and men he may grant the whole of the favour which the market place that ye may see human we ask. For indeed already since that day nature convicted, and the instability of worldly when this man fled here for refuge no slight affairs exposed, and the harlot-face which a change has taken place; for as soon as the few days ago was radiant (such is the prosper- Emperor knew that he had hurried to this ity derived from extortion) looking uglier than asylum, although the army was present, and any wrinkled old woman, this face I say you incensed on account of his misdeeds, and demanded him to be given up for execution, the Emperor made a long speech endeavouring to 4. Such is the force of this calamity: it has allay the rage of the soldiers, maintaining that made one who was illustrious and conspicuous not only his offences, but any good deed which appear the most insignificant of men. And if he might have done ought to be taken into a rich man should enter the assembly he de- account, declaring that he felt gratitude for rives much profit from the sight: for when he the latter, and was prepared to forgive him as beholds the man who was shaking the whole a fellow creature for deeds which were otherworld, now dragged down from so high a pin- wise. And when they again urged him to nacle of power, cowering with fright, more avenge the insult done to the imperial majesty, instead of a chain, panic-stricken and trem- and having reminded them of the Holy Table to which the man had fled for refuge he suc- before his praise we shall have the approval ceeded at last in appeasing their wrath.

which concern ourselves. For what pardon hates the cruel and inhuman, so does He welcould you deserve, if the Emperor bears no come and love the merciful and humane man; resentment when he has been insulted, but ye and if such a man be righteous, all the more who have experienced nothing of this kind display so much wrath? and how after this assembly has been dissolved will ye handle the holy mysteries, and repeat that prayer by which we are commanded to say "forgive us as we also forgive our debtors" when ye are throughout the Scriptures you find Him always demanding vengeance upon your debtor? Has he inflicted great wrongs and insults on you? I will not deny it. Yet this is the season not for judgment but for mercy; not for requiring an account, but for showing loving kindness: not for investigating claims but for conceding them; not for verdicts and ven-commend us, and all the people will applaud geance, but for mercy and favour. Let no us, and the ends of the earth will admire the one then be irritated or vexed, but let us humanity and gentleness of our city, and all rather beseech the merciful God to grant him who hear of these deeds throughout the world a respite from death, and to rescue him from will extol us. That we then may enjoy these this impending destruction, so that he may put off his transgression, and let us unite to supplication, let us rescue the captive, the approach the merciful Emperor beseeching fugitive, the suppliant from danger that we him for the sake of the Church, for the sake ourselves may obtain the future blessings by of the altar, to concede the life of one man as the favour and mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, an offering to the Holy Table. If we do this to whom be glory and power, now and for ever, the Emperor himself will accept us, and even world without end.

of God, who will bestow a large recompense 5. Moreover let me add some arguments upon us for our mercy. For as he rejects and glorious is the crown which is wreathed for him: and if he be a sinner, He passes over his sins granting this as the reward of compassion shown to his fellow-servant. "For" He saith "I will have mercy and not sacrifice," 2 and enquiring after this, and declaring it to be the means of release from sin. Thus then we shall dispose Him to be propitious to us, thus we shall release ourselves from our sins, thus we shall adorn the Church, thus also our merciful Emperor, as I have already said, will good things, let us fall down in prayer and Amen.

HOMILY II.

AFTER EUTROPIUS HAVING BEEN FOUND OUTSIDE THE CHURCH HAD BEEN TAKEN CAPTIVE.

the garden, but far more delectable the study thou doest this the Scripture will expel thy of the divine writings. For there indeed are despondency, and engender pleasure, extirpate flowers which fade, but here are thoughts vice, and make virtue take root, and in the which abide in full bloom; there is the breeze tumult of life it will save thee from suffering of the zephyr, but here the breath of the like those who are tossed by troubled waves. Spirit: there is the hedge of thorns, but here is the guarding providence of God; there is weather; for thou hast the study of the Scripthe song of cicadæ, but here the melody of the tures for thy pilot; for this is the cable which prophets: there is the pleasure which comes the trials of life do not break asunder. from sight, but here the profit which comes that I lie not events themselves bear witness. from study. The garden is confined to one A few days ago the Church was besieged: place, but the Scriptures are in all parts of the an army came, and fire issued from their eyes, world; the garden is subject to the necessities yet it did not scorch the olive tree; swords of the seasons, but the Scriptures are rich in were unsheathed, yet no one received a wound; foliage, and laden with fruit alike in winter the imperial gates were in distress, but the

I. DELECTABLE indeed are the meadow, and | heed to the study of the Scriptures: for if and in summer. Let us then give diligent Church was in security. And yet the tide of war flowed hither; for here the refugee was dour of her triumph. Ye were present on that against it." And when I say the Church I those things dismayed me. mean not only a place but also a plan of life:2

¹ Matt, vi. 12.

² Hosea vi. 6.

he fled here for refuge and then was given up: be exceeding glad, when men shall say all the Church did not abandon him but he aban-manner of evil against you falsely, for great is doned the Church. He was not surrendered your reward in Heaven."? I saw the swords thou desire to save thyself? Thou shouldst held the sufferings of this lower world, and I have held fast to the altar. There were no took account of the heavenly prizes; I obdence of God. Wast thou a sinner? God tated on the heavenly crown: for the occasion does not reject thee: for "He came not to of the contest was sufficient for encourage-The harlot was saved when she clung to His forcibly dragged away, but I suffered no in-Wherefore then did she suffer this war to be? utter, yet again I will speak. What profit will That she might make more manifest the splenthere be? Certainly there will be profit. For sought, and we withstood them, not fearing day, and ye saw what weapons were set in their rage. And wherefore prithee? because we held as a sure pledge the saying "Thou art soldiers burned more fiercely than fire, and I Peter, and upon this rock I will build my was hurried away to the imperial palace.4 But Church: and the gates of hell shall not prevail what of that? By the grace of God none of

2. Now I say these things in order that ve I mean not the walls of the Church but the too may follow my example. But wherefore laws of the Church. When thou takest refuge was I not dismayed? Because I do not fear in a Church, do not seek shelter merely in the any present terrors. For what is terrible? place but in the spirit of the place. For the Death? nay this is not terrible: for we speed-Church is not wall and roof but faith and life. ily reach the unruffled haven. Or spoliation Do not tell me that the man having been of goods? "Naked came I out of my mother's surrendered was surrendered by the Church; womb, and naked shall I depart;"5 or exile? if he had not abandoned the Church he would "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness not have been surrendered. Do not say that thereof;" or false accusation? "Rejoice and from within the Church but outside its walls, and I meditated on Heaven; I expected death, Wherefore did he forsake the Church? Didst and I bethought me of the resurrection; I bewalls here, but there was the guarding provi- served the devices of the enemy, and I medicall the righteous but sinners to repentance." ment and consolation. True! I was being feet. Have ye heard the passage read to-day? sult from the act; for there is only one real Now I say these things that thou mayest not insult, namely sin: and should the whole world hesitate to take refuge in the Church. Abide insult thee, yet if thou dost not insult thyself with the Church, and the Church does not thou art not insulted. The only real betrayal hand thee over to the enemy: but if thou fliest is the betrayal of the conscience: betray not from the Church, the Church is not the cause thy own conscience, and no one can betray of thy capture. For if thou art inside the fold thee. I was being dragged away and I saw the wolf does not enter: but if thou goest out- the events-or rather I saw my words turned side, thou art liable to be the wild beast's prey: into events, I saw my discourse which I had yet this is not the fault of the fold, but of thy luttered in words being preached in the marketown pusillanimity. The Church hath no feet. place through the medium of actual events. Talk not to me of walls and arms: for walls What kind of discourse? the same which I wax old with time, but the Church has no old was always repeating. The wind has blown age. Walls are shattered by barbarians, but and the leaves have fallen "The grass has over the Church even demons do not prevail. withered and the flower has faded." 8 The And that my words are no mere vaunt there is night has departed and the day has dawned; the evidence of facts. How many have as the shadow has been proved vain and the truth sailed the Church, and yet the assailants have has appeared. They mounted up to the sky. perished while the Church herself has soared and they came down to the level of earth: beyond the sky? Such might hath the Church: for the waves which were swelling high have when she is assailed she conquers: when snares been laid low by means of merely human are laid for her she prevails: when she is in-sulted her prosperity increases: she is wounded ing place were a lesson. And I said to myself yet sinks not under her wounds; tossed by will posterity learn self-control? or before two waves yet not submerged; vexed by storms days have passed by will these events have yet suffers no shipwreck; she wrestles and is been abandoned to oblivion? The warnings not worsted, fights but is not vanquished. were sounding in their ears. Again let me and if not the half, the third part: and if not the third the fourth: and if not the fourth, perhaps ten: and if not ten, perhaps five: and if not five perhaps one: and if not one, I myself have the reward prepared for me. "The grass withereth and the flower fadeth; but the word of God abideth for ever." 1

¹ Matt. xvi. 18. 3 Matt. ix. 13.

3. Have ye seen the insignificance of human affairs? have ye seen the frailty of power? Have ye seen the wealth which I always called a runaway and not a runaway only, but also a murderer. For it not only deserts those who wealth which to-day is for thee, and to-morrow desire to court it? dost thou desire to hold it loose it remains where it is; "For," it is said, "he hath dispersed abroad and given to the poor; his righteousness remaineth forever." 2 Disperse it then that it may remain with thee; bury it not lest it run away. Where is wealth? I would gladly enquire of those who have dereproach, God forbid, nor by way of irritating old sores, but as endeavouring to secure a silver plate? where were your silver couches? where your household slaves? they had all ber of my wounds. betaken themselves to flight; where were the was your money? the owner of it fled: and the The occasion has now come which proves the sin, ten thousand swords may threaten thee, thee nothing? If it has power when thou fall- thou be in paradise thou wilt be cast out. it then runs away what need hast thou of it? a dung hill, yet he was crowned victorious.

if all do not hearken, the half will hearken; was apprehension of imminent peril; and yet wealth was nowhere to be seen. Where did the runaway flee? It was itself the cause which brought about all these evils, and yet in the hours of necessity it runs away. Nevertheless many reproach me saying continually thou fasteneth upon the rich: while they on the other hand fasten upon the poor. Well I do fasten upon the rich: or rather not the rich, but those who make a bad use of their riches. For I am continually saying that I do not attack the character of the rich man, but of the rapacious. A rich man is one thing, a possess it, but also slaughters them; for when rapacious man is another: an affluent man is any one pays court to it then most of all does one thing, a covetous man is another. Make it betray him. Why dost thou pay court to clear distinctions, and do not confuse things which are diverse. Art thou a rich man? I for another? Why dost thou court wealth forbid thee not. Art thou a rapacious man? which can never be held fast? Dost thou I denounce thee. Hast thou property of thy own? enjoy it. Dost thou take the property fast? Do not bury it but give it into the of others? I will not hold my peace. Wouldhands of the poor. For wealth is a wild beast: est thou stone me for this? I am ready to if it be tightly held it runs away: if it be let shed my blood: only I forbid thy sin. I heed not hatred, I heed not war: one thing only do I heed, the advancement of my hearers. rich are my children, and the poor also are my children: the same womb has travailed with both, both are the offspring of the same travail-pangs. If then thou fastenest reproaches parted. Now I say these things not by way of on the poor man, I denounce thee: for the poor man does not suffer so much loss as the rich. For no great wrong is inflicted on the haven for you out of the shipwreck of others. poor man, seeing that in his case the injury When soldiers and swords were threatening, is confined to money; but in thy case the inwhen the city was in a blaze of fury, when the jury touches the soul. Let him who wills cast imperial majesty was powerless, and the pur- me off, let him who wills stone me, let him ple was insulted, when all places were full of who wills hate me: for the plots of enemies frenzy, where was wealth then? where was your are the pledges to me of crowns of victory, and the number of my rewards will be as the num-

4. So then I fear not an enemy's plots: one eunuchs? they all ran away; where were your thing only do I fear, which is sin. If no one friends? they changed their masks. Where convicts me of sin, then let the whole world were your houses? they were shut up. Where make war upon me. For this kind of war only renders me more prosperous. Thus also money itself, where was that? it was buried. do I wish to teach you a lesson. Fear not the Where was it all hidden? Am I oppressive devices of a potentate, but fear the power of and irksome to you in constantly declaring sin. No man will do thee harm, if thou dost that wealth betrays those who use it badly? not deal a blow to thyself. If thou hast not truth of my words. Why dost thou hold it so but God will snatch thee away out of their tightly, when in the time of trial it profiteth reach: but if thou hast sin, even shouldest est into a strait, let it come to thy aid, but if Adam was in paradise yet he fell; Job was on events themselves bear witness. What profit What profit was paradise to the one? or what was there in it? The sword was whetted, injury was the dung hill to the other? No death was impending, an army raging: there man laid snares for the one, yet was he overthrown: the devil laid snares for the other, and yet he was crowned. Did not the devil take his property? Yes, but he did not rob him of Did he not lay violent hands his godliness. upon his sons? yes: but he did not shake his faith. Did he not tear his body to pieces? ves but he did not find his treasure. Did he not arm his wife against him? yes but he did not overthrow the soldier. Did he not hurl arrows and darts at him? yes but he received no wounds. He advanced his engines but could not shake the tower; he conducted his billows against him, but did not sink the ship. your knees, if not with the bodily hand, yet in spirit, and pour forth tears of supplication. Observe this law I pray you, and no one can do you harm. Never call the rich man happy; never call any man miserable save him who is living in sin: and call him happy who lives in righteousness. For it is not the nature of their circumstances, but the disposition of the men which makes both the one and the other. Never be afraid of the sword if thy conscience does not accuse thee: never be afraid in war if thy conscience is clear. Where are they who have departed? tell me. Did not all men once bow down to them? did not those who were in authority tremble greatly before them? did they not pay court to them? But sin has come, and all things are manifested in their true lights; they who were attendants have become judges, the flatterers are turned into executioners; they who once kissed his hands, dragged him themselves from the church, and he who yesterday kissed his hand is to-day his enemy. Wherefore? Because neither did he yesterday love him with sincerity. For the opportunity came and the actors were unmasked. Didst thou not yesterday kiss his hands, and call him saviour, and guardian, and benefactor? Didst thou not compose panegyrics without end? wherefore to-day dost thou accuse him? Why yesterday a praiser, and to-day an accuser? why yesterday utter panegyrics, and to-day reproaches? What means this change? what means this revolution?

5. But I am not like this: I was the subject of his plots, yet I became his protector. I suffered countless troubles at his hands, yet I did not retaliate. For I copy the example of my Master, who said on the cross, "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." Now I say these things that you may not be perverted by the suspicion of wicked men. Now many changes have taken place, since I had the oversight of the city, and yet no one learns self-control? But when I say no one, I do not condemn all, God forbid. For it is impossible that this rich soil when it has received possible that this rich soil when it has received seed, should not produce one ear of corn: but I am insatiable, I do not wish many to be lauses and substitutes λαμβάνουσι "they are taking," for άπαιτούσσιν άπο σόν, "they are demanding from thee."

saved but all. And if but one be left in a perishing condition, I perish also, and deem that the Shepherd should be imitated who had ninety-nine sheep, and yet hastened after the one which had gone astray.' How long will money last? how long this silver and gold? how long these draughts of wine? how long the flatteries of slaves? how long these goblets wreathed with garlands? how long these satanic drinking feasts, full of diabolical activity?

Dost thou not know that the present life is Observe this law I beseech you, yea I clasp a sojourn in a far country? for art thou a citizen? Nay thou art a wayfarer. Understandest thou what I say? Thou art not a citizen, but thou art a wayfarer, and a traveller. Say not: I have this city and that. No one has a The city is above. Present life is but a city. journey. We are journeying on every day, while nature is running its course. Some there are who store up goods on the way: some who bury jewellery on the road. Now when you enter an inn do you beautify the inn? not so, but you eat and drink and hasten to depart. The present life is an inn: we have entered it, and we bring present life to a close: let us be eager to depart with a good hope, let us leave nothing here, that we may not lose it there. When you enter the inn, what do you say to the servant? Take care where you put away our things, that you do not leave anything behind here, that nothing may be lost, not even what is small and trifling, in order that we may carry everything back to our home. Thou art a wayfarer and traveller, and indeed more insignificant than the wayfarer. How so? I will tell you. The wayfarer knows when he is going into the inn, and when he is going out; for the egress as well as the ingress is in his own power: but when I enter the inn, that is to say this present life, I know not when I shall go out: and it may be that I am providing myself with sustenance for a long time when the Master suddenly summons me saying "Thou fool, for whom shall those things be which thou hast prepared? for on this very night thy soul is being taken from thee."2 The time of thy departure is uncertain, the tenure of thy possessions insecure, there are innumerable precipices, and billows on every side of thee. Why dost thou rave about shadows? why desert the reality and run after shadows?

> 6. I say these things, and shall not cease saying them, causing continual pain, and dressing the wounds; and this not for the sake of the fallen, but of those who are still standing. For they have departed, and their career is thee? Lay hold of Christ who praises thee virgin.

for it. Dost thou see thy senselessness and 7. Let the heretic who inquires curiously madness? Dost thou lay hold of the poor into the nature of heavenly generation saying man who has little? Christ says "lay hold "how did the Father beget the Son?" interof me: I thank thee for it, lay hold of my pret this single fact, ask him how did the kingdom and take it by violence." If thou art Church, being an harlot, become a virgin? minded to lay hold of an earthly kingdom, or and how did she having brought forth children rather if thou art minded to have designs remain a virgin? "For I am jealous over upon it thou art punished; but in the case of you," saith Paul, "with a godly jealousy, for I the heavenly kingdom thou art punished if espoused you to one husband that I might thou dost not lay hold of it. Where worldly present you as a pure virgin to Christ." things are concerned there is ill-will, but where What wisdom and understanding! "I am spiritual there is love. Meditate daily on jealous over you with a godly jealous," these things, and if two days hence thou seest What means this? "I am jealous," he says: another riding in a chariot, arrayed in raiment art thou jealous seeing thou art a spiritual of silk, and elated with pride, be not again dis-man? I am jealous he says as God is. And mayed and troubled. Praise not a rich man, hath God jealousy? yea the jealousy not of but only him who lives in righteousness. passion, but of love, and earnest zeal. I am Revile not a poor man, but learn to have an jealous over you with the jealousy of God. upright and accurate judgment in all things.

nothing is stronger than the Church. The and He delivered His own Son to save it. Church is thy hope, thy salvation, thy refuge. It is higher than the heaven, it is wider than the earth. It never waxes old, but is always in full vigour. Wherefore as significant of its solidity and stability Holy Scripture calls it a mountain: or of its purity a virgin, or of its magnificence a queen; or of its relationship to God a daughter; and to express its productiveness it calls her barren who has borne seven: in fact it employs countless names to represent its nobleness. For as the master of the Church has many names: being called the Father, and the way,2 and the life,3 and the light, and the arm, and the propitiation, and the foundation, and the door, and the sinless ended, but those who are yet standing have one, and the treasure, and Lord, and God, gained a more secure position through their and Son, and the only begotten, and the form calamities. "What then," you say, "shall we of God," and the image12 of God so is it with do?" Do one thing only, hate riches, and the Church itself: does one name suffice to love thy life—cast away thy goods; I do not say all of them, but cut off the superfluities. Be not covetous of other men's goods, strip not that we may learn something concerning God, the widow, plunder not the orphan, seize not though it be but a small part. Even so the his house: I do not address myself to persons Church also is called by many names. She is but to facts. But if any one's conscience at-called a virgin, albeit formerly she was an hartacks him, he himself is responsible for it, not lot: for this is the miracle wrought by the my words. Why art thou grasping where thou Bridegroom, that He took her who was an bringest ill-will upon thyself? Grasp where harlot and hath made her a virgin. Oh! what there is a crown to be gained. Strive to lay hold not of earth but of heaven. "The king-destroys virginity, but with God marriage hath dom of Heaven belongs to violent men and restored it. With us she who is a virgin, when men of violence take it by force." Why dost married, is a virgin no longer: with Christ she thou lay hold of the poor man who reproaches who is an harlot, when married, becomes a Shall I tell thee how He manifests His jeal-Do not hold aloof from the Church; for ousy? He saw the world corrupted by devils, For words spoken in reference to God have not the same force as when spoken in reference to ourselves: for instance we say God is jealous, God is wroth, God repents, God hates. These words are human, but they have a meaning which becomes the nature of God. How is God jealous? "I am jealous over you with the jealousy of God." 14 Is God wroth? "O Lord reproach me not in thine indignation." Doth God slumber? "Awake, wherefore sleepest thou, O Lord?" Doth God repent? "I repent that I have made man." " Doth God hate? "My soul hateth your feasts and your new moons." 18 Well do not consider the poverty of the expressions: but grasp their divine meaning. God is jealous,

¹ Matt. xi. 12, slightly altered by Chrysostom from the original ή βασιλεία των ουρανών βιάζεται, the kingdom of Heaven suffereth

² John xiv. 6. 3 Ibid. 4 John i. 8, 9; viii. 12. 5 Perhaps Ps. xeviii. 1; Is. xxxiii. 2; Ii. 9, and other passages of the same kind.
6 1 John ii. 2. 7 1 Cor. iii

^{9 1} John iii. 5; 1 Peter ii. 22.

10 Perhaps Matt. vi. 21; viii. 44.

12 Col. i. 15.

15 Ps. vi. 2.

16 Ps. xliv. 23.

18 Is. i. 14.

¹¹ Phil. ii. 6. 14 2 Cor. xi. 2. 17 Gen. vi. 7.

for He loves, God is wroth, not as yielding to cause He was begotten of the Father.

receive honour thereby.

8. Dost thou understand what I have said? Attend carefully my beloved. There are have no need of thine, but thou hast of mine: inasmuch as my nature is unmixed, but thou art a human being, encompassed with a body, seeking also corporeal terms in order that, by which transcend thy understanding. What kind God, and He hath called me God; with Him is the essential nature as an actual fact, with in the other case there is the actual reality. He hath called me god, for by that name I man, he was called Son of man, he was called the Way, the Door, the Rock. These words they have a wide field of operation. He borrowed from me; the others He gave from Himself to me. Wherefore was He called the Way? That thou mightest understand that by Him we have access to the Father. Wherefore was He called the Rock? that thou mightest understand the secure and unshaken character of the faith. Wherefore was He called the Foundation? That thou mightest understand that He upholdeth all things. Wherefore was He called the Root? That thou mightest understand that in Him we have our power of growth. Wherefore was He called the Shepherd? Because He feeds us. Wherefore was He called a sheep? Because He was sacrificed for us and became a propitiatory offering. Wherefore was He called the Life? Because He raised us up when we were dead. Wherefore was He called the Light? Because He delivered us from darkness. Why was He called an Arm?

passion, but for the purpose of chastising, and as my word is the offspring of my spirit, even punishing. God sleeps, not as really slumber- so was the Son begotten of the Father. ing, but as being long-suffering. Choose out the expressions. Thus when thou hearest I was clothed with Him when I was baptized. that God begets the Son, think not of division Why is He called a table? Because I feed but of the unity of substance. For God has upon Him when I partake of the mysteries. taken many of these words from us as we also Why is He called a house? Because I dwell have borrowed others from Him, that we may in Him. Why is He called an inmate of the house? Because we become His Temple. Wherefore is He called the Head? Because I have been made a member of His. Why divine names, and there are human names. is He called a Bridegroom? Because He hath God has received from me, and He Himself taken me as His bride. Wherefore is He hath given to me. Give me thine, and take called undefiled? Because He took me as a mine He says. Thou hast need of mine: I virgin. Wherefore is He called Master? Because I am His bondmaid.

9. For observe the Church, how, as I was saying, she is sometimes a bride, sometimes a daughter, sometimes a virgin, sometimes a borrowing expressions which are familiar to bondmaid, sometimes a queen, sometimes a thee, thou who art thus encompassed with a barren woman, sometimes a mountain, somebody, mayest be able to think on thoughts times a garden, sometimes fruitful in children, sometimes a lily, sometimes a fountain: She of names hath He received from me, and what is all things. Therefore having heard these kind hath He given to me? He Himself is things, think not I pray you that they are corporeal; but stretch thy thought further: for such things cannot be corporeal. For examme only the honour of the name: "I have ple: the mountain is not the maid: the maid said ye are gods, and ye are all children is not the bride: the queen is not the bond-of the most highest." Here are words, but maid: yet the Church is all these things. maid: yet the Church is all these things. Wherefore? because the element in which they exist is not corporeal but spiritual. For in a have received honour. He Himself was called corporeal sphere these things are confined within narrow limits: but in a spiritual sphere queen stood on thy right hand." 2 The queen? How did she who was down-trodden and poor become a queen? and where did she ascend? the queen herself stood on high by the side of the king. How? because the king became a servant; He was not that by nature, but He became so. Understand therefore the things which belong to the Godhead, and discern those which belong to the Dispensation. Understand what He was, and what He became for thy sake, and do not confuse things which are distinct, nor make the argument of his lovingkindness an occasion for blasphemy. He was lofty, and she was lowly: lofty not by position, but by nature. His essence was pure, and imperishable: His nature was incorruptble, unintelligible, invisible, incomprehensible, eternal, unchangeable, transcending the nature of angels, higher than the powers above, overpowering reason, surpassing thought, appre-Because He is of one substance with the hended not by sight but by faith alone. Father. Why was He called the Word? Be- Angels beheld Him and trembled, the Cheru-

Ps. lxxxii. 6; comp. John x. 34.

bim veiled themselves with their wings, in awe. into the mountain and He was transfigured weighed the mountains in scales, and the valleys in a balance.² How shall I express dwelling amongst them "and He was transgreatness and His power, if indeed it is safe When I said "such is His greatness and even to use such expressions. But what am I power" and added "be merciful to me O resources arising from my feebleness and the scribe His splendour and he says "He shone." nature of our human tongue. Be merciful to me, O Lord, for I utter these words not in And how do you express this? He shone "as human illustration, which are indeed insuffi- bear the splendour, fell to the earth. cient to represent the thing spoken of, and cannot exhibit the full proportions of the matter, yet suffice for the infirmity of the hearers.

10. Make an effort, and do not grow weary of my prolonged discourse. For as when He He really is, nor is His bare essence manifest Himself as He really is, but only as the He appear sometimes in the form of old age, sometimes of youth, sometimes in fire, somearmour, not altering his essential nature, but familiar to us and surpasses all the rest. fashioning His appearance to suit the various condition of those who are affected by it. In and powerful desired an harlot. I speak of like manner also when any one wishes to say illustrations. For instance I say: He went up

He looked upon the earth, and caused it to before them, and His countenance shone as tremble: He threatened the sea and dried it the sun, and His raiment became white as up: he brought rivers out of the desert: He snow." He disclosed, it is said, a little of myself? how shall I present the truth? His figured before them." Attend carefully to the greatness hath no bounds, His wisdom is be-statement. The writer says and He was transyond reckoning, His judgments are untracea- figured before them, and His raiment shone as ble, His ways unsearchable.3 Such is His the light, and His countenance was as the sun. to do? I am a human being and I speak in Lord," (for I do not rest satisfied with the exhuman language: my tongue is of earth and I pression but am perplexed, having no other crave forgiveness from my Lord. For I do framed for the purpose) I wish you to undernot use these expressions in a spirit of pre-stand, that I learned this lesson from Holy sumption, but on account of the poverty of my Scripture. The evangelist then wished to depresumption but because I have no others: the sun." As the sun sayest thou? Yea. nevertheless I do not rest content with the Wherefore? Because I know not any other meanness of my speech, but soar upwards on luminary more brilliant. And He was white the wings of my understanding. Such is His sayest thou as snow? wherefore as snow? greatness and power. I say this, that without Because I know not any other substance which dwelling on the words, or on the poverty of the is whiter. For that He did not really shine expressions, thou mayest also thyself learn to thus is proved by what follows: the disciples act in the same way. Why dost thou marvel if fell to the ground. If he had shone as the I do this, inasmuch as He also does the same, sun the disciples would not have fallen; for when He wishes to present something to our they saw the sun every day, and did not fall: minds which transcends human powers? Since but inasmuch as he shone more brilliantly He addresses human beings He uses also than the sun or snow, they, being unable to

11. Tell me then, O evangelist, did He shine more brightly than the sun, and yet dost thou say, "as the sun?" Yea: wishing to make that light known to thee. I know not any other greater luminary, I have no other comparison manifests Himself, He is not manifested as which holds a royal place amongst luminaries. I have said these things that thou mayest not fested (for no man hath seen God in His real rest contentedly in the poverty of the language nature: for when He is but partially revealed used: I have pointed out to thee the fall of the Cherubim tremble—the mountains smoke, the disciples: they fell to the earth, and were the sea is dried up, the heaven is shaken, and stupified and overwhelmed with slumber. if the revelation were not partial who could "Arise," He said, and lifted them up, and yet endure it?) as then, I say, He does not mani- they were oppressed. For they could not endure the excessive brightness of that shinbeholder is able to see Him, therefore doth ing, but heavy sleep took possession of their eyes: so far did the light which was manifested exceed the light of the sun. Yet the evangeltimes in air, sometimes in water, sometimes in ist said "as the sun," because that luminary is

But as I was saying, He who was thus great our human nature under that name. If a man anything concerning Him he employs human indeed desire an harlot he is condemned, and doth God desire one? Yea verily. Again a

¹ Is. li, 10, ³ Rom. xi, ₃₃. Chrysostom has transposed the order of the

⁴ Matt. xvii. 2: Mark ix. 2. Chrysostom mixes up the accounts of the two Evangelists, and does not quote the exact words of man desireth an harlot that he may become a lovingkindness. This is the mark of one who servants, He sendeth not angel, archangel, in the womb, he increases little by little and and I submit it to the action of fire. comes and is turned into a maiden: the and recasts them. I descend into the water Canaanitish woman comes and partakes of his fornicator: but God that He may convert the loves, to forbear demanding an account of sins, harlot into a virgin: so that the desire of the and to forgive transgressions and offences. man is the destruction of her who is desired: And how does He act? He takes the sinner but the desire of God is salvation to her who and espouses her to himself. And what doth is desired. And why did He who is so great He give her? a signet ring. Of what nature? and powerful desire an harlot? that He might the Holy Spirit. Paul saith "now He who become the husband thereof. How doth He establisheth us with you is God who hath also act? He doth not send to her any of His sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit." The Spirit then He giveth her. Next He Cherubim, or Seraphim; but He himself draws saith "Did not I plant thee in a garden?" She nigh Who loves her. Again when thou hearest saith "yea?" And how didst thou fall from of love, deem it not sensuous. Cull out the thence? "The devil came and cast me out of thoughts which are contained in the words, the garden." Thou wast planted in the gareven as an excellent bee settles on the flowers, den and he cast thee out: behold I plant thee and takes the honey comb, but leaves the in myself, I uphold thee. How? The devil herbs. God desired an harlot, and how doth dares not approach me. Neither do I take He act? He does not conduct her on high; thee up into Heaven; but something greater for He would not bring an harlot into Heaven, than Heaven is here: I carry thee in myself but He Himself comes down. Since she could who am the Lord of Heaven. The shepherd not ascend on high, He descends to earth, carries thee and the wolf no longer comes: or He cometh to the harlot, and is not ashamed: rather I permit him to approach. And so the He cometh to her secret dwelling place. He Lord carrieth our nature: and the devil apbeholds her in her drunkenness. And how proaches and is worsted. "I have planted doth He come? not in the bare essence of thee in myself:" therefore He saith "I am His original nature, but He becomes that the root, ye are the branches: "3 so He planted which the harlot was, not in intention but in reality does He become this, in order that she sinner and unclean." "Let not this trouble may not be scared when she sees Him, that thee, I am a physician. I know my vessel, I she may not rush away, and escape. He know how it was perverted. It was formerly cometh to the harlot, and becomes man. And a vessel of clay, and it was perverted. I rehow does He become this? He is conceived model it by means of the laver of regeneration follows like me the course of human growth. serve: He took dust from the earth and made Who is it who does this? the Deity as mani- the man; He formed him. The devil came, fested, not the Godhead; the form of the serv- and perverted him. Then the Lord came, ant not that of the Master; the flesh which took him again, and remoulded, and recast belongs to me, not the essential nature which him in baptism, and He suffered not his body belongs to Him: He increases little by little, and has intercourse with mankind. Although He subjected the soft clay to the fire of the He finds the harlot, human nature, full of sores, Holy Spirit. "He shall baptize you with the brutalised, and oppressed by devils, how does Holy Ghost and with fire:" 4 He was bap-He act? He draws nigh to her. She sees tized with water that he might be remodelled, Him and flees away. He calleth the wise men with fire that he might be hardened. Theresaying "Why are ye afraid? I am not a judge, fore the Prophet speaking beforehand under but a physician. "I came not to judge the divine guidance declared "Thou shalt dash world, but to save the world." Straightway them in pieces like vessels of the potter." He calleth the wise men. Oh! new and He did not say like vessels of earthenware strange event. The immediate first-fruits of which every one possesses: for by a potter's His coming are wise men. He who upholds vessels are meant those which the potter is the world lieth in a manger, and He who fashioning on the wheel: now the potter's vescareth for all things is a nursling in swaddling sels are of clay, but ours are of harder ware. bands. The temple is founded and the God Speaking beforehand therefore of the remoulddwelleth therein. And wise men come and ing which is wrought by means of baptism he straightway worship Him: the publican comes saith, "thou shalt dash them in pieces like vesand is turned into an evangelist: the harlot sels of a potter"—He means that He remodels

I John xii. 47.

Cor. i. 21, 22.
 John xv. 5. In the original, "I am the vine," etc.
 Matt. iii. 11.
 Ps. ii. 9.

of baptism, and the fashion of my nature is Christ is God who also hath given the earnest go out of him.6 than royal treasures? For what can the pearl of the bridegroom. He came; He took me: of a king do like that which the words of an Apostle effected? Set crowns innumerable upon dead men, and they will not be raised: He saith, "paradise?" take it back. Hast but one word went forth from an Apostle, and thou lost thy beauty? take it back; take all it brought back revolted nature, and restored these things. But yet the dowry was not it to its ancient condition. "But we have this given to me here. treasure." O treasure which not only is preserved, but also preserves the house where it is stored up. Dost thou understand what I earthen one. If the treasure is great where-fore is the vessel weak? But the reason why is great; for this is not preserved by the ves- shall we ever be with the Lord," 10 the release sel, but itself preserves the vessel. I deposit from death, the freedom from sin, the comthe treasure: who is able henceforth to steal plete overthrow of destruction. Of what kind it? The devil has come, the world has come, is that? "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard multitudes have come, and yet they have not stolen the treasure: the vessel has been scourged, yet the treasure was not betrayed: love Him." Dost thou give me good things it has been drowned in the sea, yet the treas- which I know not? He saith "yea; only be ure was not shipwrecked: it has died yet the espoused to me here, love me in this world." treasure survives. He gave therefore the "Wherefore dost thou not give me the dowry earnest of the Spirit. Where are they who here?" "It will be given when thou hast remoulded, and the fire of the Spirit recasts of the Spirit."7 You all know that the earit, and it is turned into a harder ware. And nest is a small part of the whole; let me tell that my words are no empty vaunt hear what you how. Some one goes to buy a house at Job says, "He hath made us as clay," and a great price; and he says "give me an ear-Paul, "but we have this treasure in earthen nest that I may have confidence: or one goes vessels." But consider the strength of the to take a wife for himself, he arranges about earthen vessel: for it has been hardened not dowry and property, and he says "give me an by fire, but by the Spirit. How was it proved earnest." Observe: in the purchase of a slave to be an earthen vessel? "Five times re- and in all covenants there is an earnest. Since ceived I forty stripes save one, thrice was I then Christ made a covenant with us (for He beaten with rods, once was I stoned," and yet was about to take me as a bride) he also asthe earthen vessel was not shattered. "A day signed a dowry to me not of money, but of and a night have I been in the deep." He blood. But this dowry which He assigns is hath been in the deep, and the earthen vessel the bestowal of good things "such as eye hath was not dissolved: he suffered shipwreck and not seen, and ear hath not heard, neither hath the treasure was not lost; the ship was sub- entered into the heart of man."8 He assigned merged and yet the freight floated. "But we them for the dowry:-immortality, praise with have this treasure" he says. What kind of the angels, release from death, freedom from treasure? a supply of the Spirit, righteousness, sin, the inheritance of a kingdom (so great are sanctification, redemption. Of what nature, his riches), righteousness, sanctification, delivtell me? "in the name of Jesus Christ rise up erance from present evils, discovery of future and walk." 4 "Aneas, Jesus Christ maketh blessings. Great was my dowry. Now attend thee whole." 5 I say unto thee thou evil spirit, carefully: mark what He does. He came to take the harlot, for so I call her, unclean as 12. Hast thou seen a treasure more brilliant she was, that thou mightest understand the love have said? The kings of the earth, and rulers resurrection of the body,—immortality. For when they have treasures, prepare large houses, immortality does not always follow resurrechaving strong walls, bars, doors, guards, and tion, but the two are distinct. For many have bolts in order that the treasure may be pre- risen, and been again laid low, like Lazarus served: but Christ did the contrary: He placed and the bodies of the saints.9 But in this case the treasure not in a stone vessel but in an it is not so, but the promise is of resurrection, the vessel is weak is not because the treasure clouds, and the fulfilment of the saying "so blaspheme the Spirit's majesty? Give ye come to my Father, when thou hast entered heed. "He that establisheth us with you in the royal palace. Didst thou come to me!

^{7 2} Cor. i. 21, 22. 9 John xi.; Matt. xxvii. 52.

^{8 1} Cor. ii. 9. 10 1 Thess. iv. 17.

leased sinners from their sins, he restored the wreaths of honour; and Paul stood alone. of men.

stronger than demons, the uneloquent man was wiser than the wise. Whence was this? He received the earnest, he bore the signet ring and carried it about. All men saw that the King had espoused our nature: the demon nay I came to thee. I came not that thou saw it and retreated, he saw the earnest, and shouldst abide here but that I might take thee trembled and withdrew: he saw but the Aposand return. Seek not the dowry here: all tle's garments and fled. O the power of the depends on hope, and faith. "And dost thou Holy Spirit. He bestowed authority not on give me nothing in this world?" He answers. the soul, nor on the body, but even on raiment; "Receive an earnest that thou mayest trust mor on raiment only but even on a shadow, me concerning that which is to come: receive Peter went about and his shadow put diseases pledges and betrothal gifts." Therefore Paul to flight,3 and expelled demons, and raised the saith "I have espoused you." As gifts of dead to life. Paul went about the world, cutbetrothal God has given us present blessings: ting away the thorns of ungodliness, sowing they are an earnest of the future; but the full broadcast the seeds of godliness, like an exdowry abides in the other world. How so? I cellent ploughman handling the ploughshare of will tell you. Here I grow old, there I grow doctrine. And to whom did he go? To not old; here I die, there I die not, here I Thracians, to Scythians, to Indians, to Mausorrow, there I sorrow not; here is poverty, and rians, to Sardinians, to Goths, to wild savages, disease, and intrigue, there nothing of that kind and he changed them all. By what means? exists: here is darkness and light, there is By means of "the earnest." How was he suflight alone: here is intrigue, there is liberty: ficient for these things? By the grace of the which has an end, there is life which hath no end; here is sin, there is righteousness, and sin is banished; here is envy, there nothing of "and who is sufficient for these things?" But the kind exists. "Give me these things" one our sufficiency is of God, who hath made us says; "Nay! wait in order that thy fellow-serv- sufficient as ministers of the new Testament, ants also may be saved; wait I say. He not of the letter but of the Spirit." 5 Behold who establisheth us and hath given us the earnest?—what kind of earnest? the Holy Spirit, the supply of the Spirit. Let me speak heaven. For meditate not on present things concerning the Spirit. He gave the signet but review the past in your thought. Forring to the Apostles, saying "take this and merly there was lamentation, there were altars give it to all." Is the ring then portioned out, everywhere, everywhere the smoke and fumes and yet not divided? It is so. Let me teach of sacrifice, everywhere unclean rites and mysyou the meaning of the supply of the Spirit: teries, and sacrifices, everywhere demons hold-Peter received, and Paul also received the ing their orgies, everywhere a citadel of the Holy Spirit. He went about the world, he re-devil, everywhere fornication decked with lame, he clothed the naked, he raised the How did he escape being overwhelmed, or dead, he cleansed the lepers, he bridled the torn in pieces? How could he open his devil, he strangled the demons, he held con- mouth? He entered the Thebaid,6 and made verse with God, he planted a Church, levelled captives of men, He entered the royal palace, temples to the earth, overturned altars, de- and made a disciple of the king.7 He entered stroyed vice, established virtue, made angels the hall of judgment, and the judge saith to him "almost thou persuadest me to become a 14. All these things we were. But "the Christian," and the judge became a disciple. earnest" filled the whole world. And when I He entered the prison, and took the jailor say the whole I mean all which the sun shines captive. He visited an island of barbarians, upon, sea, islands, mountains, valleys, and hills. and made a viper the instrument of his teach. Paul went hither and thither, like some winged ing. 10 He visited the Romans, and attracted creature, with one mouth only contending the senate to his doctrine. He visited rivers, against the enemy, he the tentmaker, who and desert places in all parts of the world. handled the workman's knife and sewed skins There is no land or sea which has not shared together: and yet this his craft was no hin- in the benefits of his labours; for God has drance to his virtue, but the tentmaker was given human nature the earnest of His signet, Active 15. Active 15.

⁷ He probably means Sergius Paulus. Acts xiii, 12.

8 Acts xxvi. 28. It is doubtful, however, whether this is the right interpretation of the words. See the revised translation. 9 Acts xvi. 30, etc. 10 Acts xxviii. 3, etc.

and when He gives it He saith: some things the moon, and another glory of the stars."3 I give thee now, and others I promise. There- Thou canst not be a sun? then be a moon. fore the prophet saith concerning her "The queen did stand upon thy right hand in a vesture woven with gold." He does not mean a real vesture, but virtue. Therefore the Thou canst not be a star? be content to be a little one if only thou art in the Heaven. Thou canst not be a virgin? then live contifornication, and foul and unclean living. As then foul raiment signifies sin, so does golden raiment signifies sin, so does golden raiment signify virtue. But this raiment belonged to the king. He Himself bestowed the raiment upon her: for she was naked, naked dance of virtues has rendered the dispensation ity of meaning. He does not say "in a vesture of gold" but "in a vesture woven with gold." and fix your eyes upon this garment woven with gold. For here indeed some live celi-Sitution of the Church in its varied manifestations. For since we do not all belong to one are many ways of living, but only one paradise; tion of the Church.

Thou canst not enter by the way of continence: enter then by the way of almsgiving: Then follows "Hearken! O daughter." The or thou canst not enter by the way of almsgiv-conductor of the bride says that thou art about spoke not of a garment of gold, but of one "Hearken O daughter." Did she immedi-woven with gold. It is of silk, or purple, or gold. Thou canst not be a golden part? then is nothing corporeal. For He espoused her then be the silver, if only thou art resting upon groom He weds her, as a propitiation He parthe foundation. And again elsewhere, "there dons her, as a sheep He is sacrificed, as a is one glory of the sun, and another glory of bridegroom He preserves her in beauty, as a

Scripture elsewhere saith "How camest thou nently in the married state, only abiding in the in hither not having a wedding garment?" so Church. Thou canst not be without possesthat here he does not mean a garment, but sions? then give alms, only abiding in the and disfigured. "The queen stood on thy right hand in a vesture woven with gold." vesture woven with gold, manifold in texture." He is speaking not of raiment but of virtue. Her vesture is manifold: unfold, if you please, Observe: the expression itself has great nobil- the deep meaning of the expression here used, Listen intelligently. A vesture of gold is one bate, others live in an honourable estate of which is gold throughout: but a vesture woven matrimony, being not much inferior to them: with gold is one which is partly of gold, partly some have married once, others are widows in of silk. Why then did he say that the bride the flower of their age. For what purpose is wore not a vesture of gold, but one woven with a paradise? and wherefore its variety? having gold? Attend carefully. He means the con-divers flowers, and trees, and many pearls. condition of life, but one is a virgin, another there are many temples, but only one mother a widow, a third lives a life of devotion—so of them all. There is the body, the eye, the the robe of the Church signifies the constitu- finger, but all these make up but one man. There is the same distinction between the 15. Inasmuch then as our Master knew that if He carved out only one road for us, many must shrink from it, He carved out divers also is the product of marriage, that marriage roads. Thou canst not enter the kingdom it may not be despised by her. The virgin is may be by the way of virginity. Enter it then the root of marriage: thus all things have been by the way of single marriage. Canst thou linked together, the small with the great, and not enter it by one marriage? Perchance the great with the small. "The queen did thou mayest by means of a second marriage. stand on thy right hand clothed in a vesture ing? then try the way of fasting. If thou to go forth from thy home to the home of the canst not use this way, take that-or if not bridegroom who in his essential nature far surthat, then take this. Therefore the prophet passes thee. I am the conductor of the bride. be a silken one. I accept thee, if only thou as a wife, He loves her as a daughter, He proart clothed in my raiment. Therefore also vides for her as a handmaid, He guards her as Paul saith "If any man builds upon this a virgin, He fences her round like a garden, foundation, gold, silver, precious stones." and cherishes her like a member: as a head Thou canst not be the precious stone? then He provides for her, as a root he causes her to be the gold. Thou canst not be the gold? grow, as a shepherd He feeds her, as a bride-economy of grace. "Hearken O daughter" and now she has become a daughter of the king. And this He wished who loved her. For he who loves does not investigate character: love does not regard uncomeliness: on this account indeed is it called love because it oftentimes hath affection for an uncomely person.1 Thus also did Christ. He saw one who one on thy eyes, the other on thy hearing. Now since her dowry depended on hearingenough to perceive this already, let them tarry gave some portion to the bride for an earnest, He bestow? Baptism and the Sacrifice. Of pledges, things which are better than they are.' Him."

16. Understand what is said, lest ye lose it: I am labouring to enable you to perceive it. The dowry of the bride then was divided into what wilt thou have me do? "Forget thy own husband He provides for her support. Many two portions consisting of things present and are the meanings in order that we may enjoy things to come; things seen and things heard, a part if it be but a small part of the divine things given and things taken on trust, things experienced, and things to be enjoyed hereand behold, and look upon things which are after; things belonging to present life, and bridal and yet spiritual. Hearken O daughter, things to come after the resurrection. The She was at first a daughter of demons, a former things you see, the latter you hear. daughter of the earth, unworthy of the earth Observe then what He says to her that you may not suppose that she received the former things only, though they be great and ineffable, and surpassing all understanding. "Hearken O daughter and behold;" hear the latter things and behold the former that thou mayest not say "am I again to depend on hope, again on faith, again on the future?" See now: I give was uncomely (for comely I could not call her) some things, and I promise others: the latter and He loved her, and He makes her young, indeed depend on hope, but do thou receive not having spot or wrinkle. Oh what a bride- the others as pledges, as an earnest, as a proof groom! adorning with grace the ungracefulness of the remainder. I promise thee a kingdom: of his bride! Hearken O daughter! hearken and let present things be the ground of thy and behold! Two things He saith "Hearken" trust, thy trust in me. Dost thou promise me and "Behold," two which depend on thyself, a kingdom? Yea. I have given thee the greater part, even the Lord of the kingdom, for "he who spared not his own son, but gave (and although some of you have been acute him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?"2 Dost thou for those who are feebler: I commend those give me the resurrection of the body? Yea; who have anticipated the truth, and make I have given thee the greater part. What is allowances for those who only follow in their the nature of it? Release from sins. How is track) since the dowry then depended on hear-that the greater part? Because sin brought ing-(and what is meant by hearing? faith: forth death. I have destroyed the parent, and for "faith cometh by hearing" faith as opposed shall I not destroy the offspring? I have dried to fruition, and actual experience) I said be- up the root, and shall I not destroy the profore that He divided the dowry into two, and duce. Hearken O daughter and behold." What am I to behold? Dead men raised to whilst He promised others in the future. life, lepers cleansed, the sea restrained, the What did He give her? He gave her forgive- paralytic braced up into vigour, paradise ness of sins, remission of punishment, right-opened, loaves poured forth in abundance, sins eousness, sanctification, redemption, the body remitted, the lame man leaping, the robber of the Lord, the divine, spiritual Table, the made a citizen of paradise, the publican turned resurrection of the dead. For all these things into an evangelist, the harlot become more the Apostles had. Therefore He gave some modest than the maid. Hear and behold. parts and promised others. Of some there Hear of the former things and behold these. was experience and fruition, others depended Accept from present things a proof of the upon hope and faith. Now listen. What did others; concerning those I have given thee these there is experience. What did He "What is the meaning of this thy saying?" promise? Resurrection, immortality of the These things are mine. "Hearken O daughter body, union with angels, a place in the joyful and behold." These things are my dower to company of archangels, and as a citizen in His thee. And what doth the bride contribute? kingdom, immaculate life, the good things Let us see. What I pray thee dost thou bring "which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard nor that thou mayest not be portionless? What have entered into the heart of man, things can I, she answers, bring to thee from heathen which God hath prepared for them that love altars, and the steam of sacrifices and from devils? What have I to contribute? what? sayest thou? Thy will and thy faith. "Hearken O daughter and behold." And people." What kind of people? the devils, thou canst not see it since it is invisible and of the bride, that thou shouldest abandon as in the case of the body I was saying that one another. "Hearken O daughter and be- ful; so in the case of the soul I say the confather's house." the mouth of the Jews.

¹ The statement is grounded on a mistaken etymology. There is also an allusion to the proverbial blindness of love.

² Rom. viii. 32.

one hears, or forbears to hear I shall dig and till the soil. "Hearken O daughter, and behold, forget also thy own people, and thy grace when he declared his resolution.3 Seest father's house, and the king shall desire thy thou that thou canst not alter grace of body, corporeal.

and what spiritual beauty are. There is soul that the beauty of the soul proceeds from and body: they are two substances: there is a obedience to God. For if the graceless soul beauty of body, and there is a beauty of soul. obeys God it puts off its ungracefulness, and What is beauty of body? an extended eye- becomes full of grace. "Saul! Saul!" it was brow, a merry glance, a blushing cheek, ruddy said, "why persecutest thou me?" and he relips, a straight neck, long wavy hair, tapering fingers, upright stature, a fair blooming comJesus." And he obeyed, and his obedience plexion. Does this bodily beauty come from made the graceless soul full of grace. Again, nature, or from choice? Confessedly it comes He saith to the publican "come follow me" 5 from nature. Attend that thou mayest learn and the publican rose up and became an the conception of philosophers. This beauty whether of the countenance, of the eye, of the hair, of the brow, does it come from nature, or from choice? It is obvious that it comes from nature. For the ungraceful woman, even if she cultivate beauty in countless ways, cannot become graceful in body: for natural conditions are fixed, and confined by limits which they cannot pass over. Therefore the beautiful woman is always beautiful, even if she has no taste for beauty: and the ungraceful cannot make herself graceful, nor the graceful ungraceful. Wherefore? because these things come from nature. Well! thou hast seen corporeal beauty. Now let us turn inwards to hears and her ungracefulness being that of the the soul: let the handmaid approach the mistress! let us turn I say to the soul. Look upon that beauty, or rather listen to it: for the idols, the sacrificial smoke, and steam, Listen to that beauty. What then is beauty and blood. "Forget thy own people, and thy of soul? Temperance, mildness, almsgiving, father's house." Leave thy father and come love, brotherly kindness, tender affection, obeafter me. I left my Father, and came to thee, dience to God, the fulfilment of the law, rightand wilt thou not leave thy father? But when eousness, contrition of heart. These things the word leave is used in reference to the Son are the beauty of the soul. These things then do not understand by it an actual leaving. are not the results of nature, but of moral dis-What He means is "I condescended, I accom- position. And he who does not possess these modated myself to thee, I assumed human things is able to receive them, and he who has flesh." This is the duty of the bridegroom, them, if he becomes careless, loses them. For thy parents, and that we should be wedded to she who is ungraceful cannot become gracehold, and forget thy own people, and thy trary that the graceless soul can become full of And what dost thou give me grace. For what was more graceless than the if I do forget them? "and the king shall desire soul of Paul when he was a blasphemer and thy beauty." Thou hast the Lord for thy insulter: what more full of grace when he said lover. If thou hast Him for thy lover, thou "I have fought the good fight, I have finished hast also the things which are his. I trust ye the course, I have kept the faith." What may be able to understand what is said: for was more graceless than the soul of the robthe thought is a subtle one, and I wish to stop ber? what more full of grace when he heard the words "Verily I say unto thee to-day shalt Now exert your minds I pray: for whether thou be with me in paradise?"2 What was more graceless than the publican when he practised extortion? but what more full of beauty." By beauty in this passage the Jew don't is the result not of moral disposition, but understands sensible beauty; not spiritual but of nature. But grace of soul is supplied out of our own moral choice. Thou hast now re-17. Attend, and let us learn what corporeal, ceived the definition. Of what kind are they? apostle: and the graceless soul became full of grace. Whence? by obedience. Again He saith to the fishermen "Come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men: "6 and by their obedience their minds became full of grace. Let us see then what kind of beauty He is speaking of here. "Hearken O daughter and behold, and forget thy own people and thy father's house, and the king shall desire thy beauty." What kind of beauty will he desire? the spiritual kind. How so? because she is to "forget" He saith "hearken and forget." These are acts of moral choice.

"Hearken!" he said: "an ungraceful one

¹ ² Tim. iv. 7. ³ Luke xix. 8. ⁵ Matt. ix. 9.

Luke xxiii. 43.4 Acts ix. 4, 5.6 Matt. iv. 19.

body is not removed. To the sinful woman thy father's house, and the king shall desire and behold and forget thy own people, and and ever. Amen.

He has said "Hearken," and if she will obey thy beauty." Then that thou mayest learn she sees what manner of beauty is bestowed that he does not mean anything visible to sense, upon her. Since then the ungracefulness of when thou hearest the word beauty, think not the bride was not physical, but moral (for she did not obey God but transgressed) therefore piety, faith, love, things which are within—he leads her to another remedy. Thou didst "for all the glory of the king's daughter is become ungraceful then, not by nature, but by from within." Now for all these things let us moral choice: and thou didst become full of offer thanks to God, the giver, for to Him grace by obedience. "Hearken O daughter alone belongeth glory, honour, might, for ever

ST. CHRYSOSTOM:

A TREATISE

TO PROVE THAT NO ONE CAN HARM THE MAN WHO DOES NOT INJURE HIMSELF.

TRANSLATED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.,

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

CONTENTS.

		PAGE
Int	roduction	269
Ι.	The theme seems paradoxical to ordinary men of the world	271
2.	What kind of evil really injures human virtue	272
3.	What constitutes virtue in man	272
4.	The devil cannot really injure man	273
5.	The assaults of the devil upon Job and St. Paul redounded to their glory	274
6.	Deprivation of wealth no evil	275
7.	Riches a source of manifold evils	276
8.	The poor enjoy better health than the rich	277
9.	Riches introduce evil passions into the soul,	277
10.	The blessedness of Lazarus	278
11.	Adversities will not injure the good man, and advantages will not benefit the bad man	279
12.	The houses built on the rock and the sand an illustration of this	279
13.	Additional examples—the Israelites in the wilderness	280
14.	The Ninevites	281
15.	The "Three Children"	281
16.	The same continued	282
17.	Summary and conclusion	283

INTRODUCTION TO THE TREATISE THAT NO ONE CAN HARM THE MAN WHO DOES NOT INJURE HIMSELF.

This very beautiful treatise was composed when St. Chrysostom was in exile, probably not long before his death, and was sent with a letter to his great friend the deaconess Olympias in Constantinople.

Plato in the 10th book of his Dialogue called the "Republic" employs an argument to prove the immortality of the soul, so nearly resembling a portion of this treatise that I can scarcely doubt St. Chrysostom had it in his mind. The following is the passage in the Platonic dialogue as rendered in the excellent translation of Messrs. Davies & Vaughan. I omit a few sentences here and there.

"Have you not learned, I asked, that our soul is immortal and never dies?

He looked at me and said in amazement. No really I have not: but can you maintain this doctrine?

Yes as I am an honest man, I replied, and I think you could also. It is quite easy to do it.

Proceed by all means.

So you call one thing good and another evil?

I do

And do we hold the same opinion as to the meaning of the two terms?

What opinion do you hold?

I hold that the term evil comprises everything that destroys and corrupts, and the term good everything that preserves and benefits.

So do I.

Again; do you maintain that everything has its evil and its good? Do you say for example that the eyes are liable to the evil of ophthalmia, the entire body to disease, corn to mildew, timber to rot, copper and iron to rust or in other words that almost everything is liable to some connatural evil and malady?

I do.

And is it not the case that, whenever an object is attacked by one of these maladies it is impaired; and in the end completely broken up and destroyed by it?

Doubtless it is so?

Hence everything is destroyed by its own connatural evil and vice: otherwise if it be not destroyed by this, there is nothing else that can corrupt it. For that which is good will never destroy anything, nor yet that which is neither good nor evil.

Of course not.

If then we can find among existing things one which is liable to a particular evil which can indeed mar it, but cannot break it up or destroy it, shall we not be at once certain that a thing so constituted can never perish?

That would be a reasonable conclusion.

Well then is not the soul liable to a malady which renders it evil?

Certainly it is: all those things which we were lately discussing—injustice, intemperance, cowardice, and ignorance—produce that result."

Then having proved that although these things injure the soul they do not actually destroy it he proceeds.

"Well, it is irrational to suppose that a thing can be destroyed by the depravity of another thing, though it cannot be destroyed by its own.

True it is irrational.

Yes it is: for you must remember that we do not imagine that a body is to be destroyed by the proper depravity of its food whatever that may be, whether mouldiness or rottenness or anything else. But if the depravity of the food itself produces in the body a disorder proper to the body, we shall assert that the body has been destroyed by its food remotely, but by its own proper vice or disease, immediately: and we shall always disclaim the notion that the body can be corrupted by the depravity of its food which is a different thing from the body—that is to say, the notion that the body can be corrupted by an alien evil without the introduction of its own native evil.

You are perfectly correct.

Then according to the same reasoning I continued, unless depravity of body introduces into the soul depravity of soul let us never suppose that the soul can be destroyed by an alien evil without the presence of its own peculiar disease: for that would be to suppose that one thing can be destroyed by the evil of another thing.

That is a reasonable statement.

Well then let us either refute this doctrine and point out our mistake or else, so long as it remains unrefuted, let us never assert that a fever or any other disease, or fatal violence, or even the act of cutting up the entire body into the smallest possible pieces can have any tendency to destroy the soul, until it has been demonstrated that in consequence of this treatment of the body the soul itself becomes more unjust and more unholy. For so long as a thing is exempt from its own proper evil, while an evil foreign to it appears in another subject, let us not allow it to be said that this thing whether it be a soul or anything else is in danger of being destroyed.

Well, certainly no one will ever prove that the souls of the dying become more unjust in consequence of death." Here follows a passage to prove that even injustice does not destroy the soul, after which he proceeds,

"Surely then when the soul cannot be killed and destroyed by its own depravity and its own evil, hardly will the evil which is charged with the destruction of another thing destroy a soul or anything else beyond its own appropriate object.

Hardly: at least that is the natural inference.

Hence, as it is destroyed by no evil at all, whether foreign to it or its own, it is clear that the soul must be always existing, and therefore immortal.

It must."

If any one will compare this extract with chapters 2 to 6 in the following treatise he cannot fail to be struck by the similarity of thought and language, although in the latter case it is more apparent in the original than it can be in a translation. The aim of the two writers is not indeed identical: Chrysostom's object is to prove that nothing can really injure a man except sin—depravity of soul—Plato begins by proving this, and proceeds to maintain that if even that which corrupts the soul cannot actually destroy it the soul must be imperishable. They employ the same argument, only Plato carries it a step further than Chrysostom.

A TREATISE

TO PROVE THAT NO ONE CAN HARM THE MAN WHO DOES NOT INJURE HIMSELF.

1. I Know well that to coarse-minded per- an unlimited extent, they reserve an unprejusons, who are greedy in the pursuit of present diced hearing for the second. In fact the things, and are nailed to earth, and enslaved special merit of judges consists in ascertainto physical pleasure, and have no strong hold ing with all possible accuracy what each side upon spiritual ideas, this treatise will be of a has to allege and then bringing forward their strange and paradoxical kind; and they will laugh immoderately, and condemn me for of the judgment which is prevailing in your mind at the present time, but wait to hear the contention of my arguments and then you own judgment.

Now in the place of an orator we have the uttering incredible things from the very common assumption of mankind which in the outset of my theme. Nevertheless, I shall course of ages has taken deep root in the not on this account desist from my prom- minds of the multitude, and declaims to the ise, but for this very reason shall proceed following effect throughout the world. "All with great earnestness to the proof of what things "it says "have been turned upside I have undertaken. For if those who take down, the human race is full of much confuthat view of my subject will please not to sion and many are they who every day are make a clamour and disturbance, but wait to being wronged, insulted, subjected to violence the end of my discourse, I am sure that and injury, the weak by the strong, the poor they will take my side, and condemn them- by the rich: and as it is impossible to numselves, finding that they have been deceived ber the waves of the sea, so is it impossible hitherto, and will make a recantation, and to reckon the multitude of those who are the apology, and crave pardon for the mistaken victims of intrigue, insult, and suffering; and opinion which they held concerning these neither the correction of law, nor the fear of matters, and will express great gratitude to being brought to trial, nor anything else can me, as patients do to physicians, when they arrest this pestilence and disorder, but the have been relieved from the disorders which evil is increasing every day, and the groans, lay seige to their body. For do not tell me and lamentations, and weeping of the sufferers are universal; and the judges who are appointed to reform such evils, themselves intensify the tempest, and inflame the disorder, will be able to record an impartial verdict and hence many of the more senseless and without being hindered by ignorance from despicable kind, seized with a new kind of forming a true judgment. For even judges in frenzy, accuse the providence of God, when secular causes, if they see the first orator they see the forbearing man often violently pouring forth a mighty torrent of words and seized, racked, and oppressed, and the audaoverwhelming everything with his speech do cious, impetous, low and low-born man waxing not venture to record their decision without rich, and invested with authority, and becomhaving patiently listened to the other speaker ing formidable to many, and inflicting countwho is opposed to him; and even if the re- less troubles upon the more moderate, and marks of the first speaker seem to be just to this perpetrated both in town and country, and desert, on sea and land. This discourse lament the inmates of the prison, some those of ours of necessity comes in by way of who have been expelled from their country direct opposition to what has been alleged, and transported to the land of exile, others maintaining a contention which is new, as I those who have been deprived of their freesaid at the beginning, and contrary to opinion, yet useful and true, and profitable to those who will give heed to it and be persuaded by it; for what I undertake is to prove (only make no commotion) that no one of those who are wronged is wronged by another, but experiences this injury at his own hands.

plainer, let us first of all enquire what injustice is, and of what kind of things the material of it is wont to be composed; also what which have been mentioned injure the man human virtue is, and what it is which ruins it; who lives soberly, nor can ruin his virtue. and further what it is which seems to ruin it For tell me if a man has lost his all either at but really does not. For instance (for I the hands of calumniators or of robbers, or must complete my argument by means of ex- has been stripped of his goods by knavish amples) each thing is subject to one evil servants, what harm has the loss done to the which ruins it; iron to rust, wool to moth, flocks of sheep to wolves. The virtue of wine is injured when it ferments and turns sour: in the first place what is the virtue of a man, of honey when it loses its natural sweetness, beginning by dealing with the subject in the and is reduced to a bitter juice. Ears of corn are ruined by mildew and drought, and make it more intelligible and plain to the the fruit, and leaves, and branches of vines majority of readers. by the mischievous host of locusts, other trees by the caterpillar, and irrational creatures by diseases of various kinds: and not match, and a band of silken threads to fasten to lengthen the list by going through all possible examples, our own flesh is subject to colours and gold tissue, and head gear studded fevers, and palsies, and a crowd of other with jewels, and locks of hair plaited with gold maladies. As then each one of these things cord? or is it to be swift and strong in its is liable to that which ruins its virtue, let us legs, and even in its paces, and to have hoofs now consider what it is which injures the suitable to a well bred horse, and courage human race, and what it is which ruins the fitted for long journies and warfare, and to virtue of a human being. Most men think be able to behave with calmness in the battle that there are divers things which have this field, and if a rout takes place to save its effect; for I must mention the erroneous rider? Is it not manifest that these are the opinions on the subject, and, after confuting things which constitute the virtue of the them, proceed to exhibit that which really horse, not the others? Again, what should does ruin our virtue; and to demonstrate you say was the virtue of asses and mules? is clearly that no one could inflict this injury or it not the power of carrying burdens with bring this ruin upon us unless we betrayed contentment, and accomplishing journies with ourselves. eous opinions imagine that there are many say that their outside trappings contribute different things which ruin our virtue: some anything to their own proper virtue? By no say it is poverty, others bodily disease, others means. And what kind of vine shall we loss of property, others calumny, others death, admire? one which abounds in leaves and and they are perpetually bewailing and branches, or one which is laden with fruit? or lamenting these things: and whilst they are what kind of virtue do we predicate of an commiserating the sufferers and shedding olive? is it to have large boughs, and great tears they excitedly exclaim to one another, luxuriance of leaves, or to exhibit an abun-"What a calamity has befallen such and such dance of its proper fruit dispersed over all a man! he has been deprived of all his for- parts of the tree? Well, let us act in the tune at a blow." Of another again one will same way in the case of human beings also: say: "such and such a man has been attacked let us determine what is the virtue of man, by severe sickness and is despaired of by the and let us regard that alone as an injury, dom, others those who have been seized and made captives by enemies, others those who have been drowned, or burnt, or buried by the fall of a house, but no one mourns those who are living in wickedness: on the contrary, which is worse than all, they often congratulate them, a practice which is the cause of all 2. But in order to make my argument manner of evils. Come then (only, as I exhorted you at the outset, do not make a commotion), let me prove that none of the things virtue of the man?

> But if it seems well let me rather indicate case of existences of another kind so as to

3. What then is the virtue of a horse? is it to have a bridle studded with gold and girths to the housing, and clothes wrought in divers The multitude then having erron- ease, and having hoofs like rock? Shall we physicians in attendance." Some bewail and which is destructive to it. What then is the fear poverty: nor health of body that thou cuse such and such a man alleging that they shouldest dread sickness, nor the opinion of have suffered injury at their hands, not at the public, that thou shouldest view an evil their own? reputation with alarm, nor life simply for its doctrine, and rectitude in life. Of these virtue of man? not riches that thou shouldest profited him: how shall certain be able to ac-

4. What then? some one will say, did he own sake, that death should be terrible to not inflict injury on Adam, and upset him, thee: nor liberty that thou shouldest avoid and cast him out of paradise? No: he did it servitude: but carefulness in holding true not, but the cause was the listlessness of him who was injured, and his want of temperance things not even the devil himself will be able and vigilance. For he who applied such to rob a man, if he who possesses them guards powerful and manifold devices and yet was them with the needful carefulness: and that not able to subdue Job, how could he by inmost malicious and ferocious demon is aware ferior means have mastered Adam, had not of this. For this cause also he robbed Job Adam betrayed himself through his own listof his substance, not to make him poor, but lessness? What then? Has not he been inthat he might force him into uttering some jured who has been exposed to slander, and blasphemous speech; and he tortured his body, suffered confiscation of his property, having not to subject him to infirmity, but to upset been deprived of all his goods, and is thrown the virtue of his soul. But nevertheless when out of his patrimony, and struggles with exhe had set all his devices in motion, and treme poverty? No! he has not been inturned him from a rich man into a poor one jured, but has even profited, if he be sober. (that calamity which seems to us the most For, tell me, what harm did this do the aposterrible of all), and had made him childless tles? Were they not continually struggling who was once surrounded by many children, and that scarified his whole body more cruelly that the executioners do in the public tribu-illustrious, and distinguished, and won for nals (for their nails do not lacerate the sides themselves much help from God. Again what of those who fall into their hands so severely harm was done to Lazarus by his disease, and as the gnawing of the worms lacerated his sores, and poverty and dearth of protectors? body), and when he had fastened a bad repu- Were they not the reasons why garlands of tation upon him (for Job's friends who were present with him said "thou hast not received the chastisement which thy sins deserve," ting evil reported of, both in his own land, and directed many words of accusation against and in the land of strangers? for he was suphim), and after he had not merely expelled posed to be both an adulterer and fornicator: him from city and home and transferred him or what harm did servitude do him or expato another city, but had actually made the triation? Is it not specially on account of dunghill serve as his home and city; after all these things that we regard him with admirathis, he not only did him no damage but rendered him more glorious by the designs which of removal into a foreign land, and poverty, he formed against him. And he not only and evil report, and bondage? For what failed to rob him of any of his possessions harm did death itself inflict on Abel, although although he had robbed him of so many it was a violent and untimely death, and perthings, but he even increased the wealth of petrated by a brother's hand? Is not this his virtue. For after these things he enjoyed the reason why his praise is sounded throughgreater confidence inasmuch as he had con-tended in a more severe contest. Now if he discourse has demonstrated even more than it who underwent such sufferings, and this not at promised? For not only has it disclosed the the hand of man, but at the hand of the devil fact that no one is injured by anybody, but who is more wicked than all men, sustained also that they who take heed to themselves no injury, which of those persons who say derive the greater gain (from such assaults). such and such a man injured and damaged What is the purpose then it will be said of me will have any defence to make in future? penalties and punishments? What is the For if the devil who is full of such great purpose of hell? What is the purpose of malice, after having set all his instruments in such great threatenings, if no one is either motion, and discharged all his weapons, and injured or injures? What is it thou sayest? poured out all the evils incident to man, in a Why dost thou confuse the argument? For superlative degree upon the family and the I did not say that no one injures, but that no person of that righteous man nevertheless did one is injured. And how is it possible, you him no injury, but as I was saying rather will say, for no one to be injured when many are committing injury? In the way which I deavour to prove the reverse, showing that on account of the virtue of those who suffer; but he ordains punishments on account of the malice of those who do wickedly. For although they who are evil entreated become more illustrious in consequence of the deto the intention of those who plan the designs. bravely.

all from any of these things? For I will en-

¹ Job. i. 21. ² r Tim. vi. 7. ³ Luke vi. 26. ⁴ There is a confusion in the quotation here between Matt. v. 11, and Luke vi. 22.

5 2 Cor. iv. 16.

indicated just now. For Joseph's brethren they who are most injured and insulted, and did indeed injure him, yet he himself was not suffer the most incurable evils are the persons injured: and Cain laid snares for Abel, yet who do these things. For what could be he himself was not ensuared. This is the more miserable than the condition of Cain, reason why there are penalties and punish- who dealt with his brother in this fashion? ments. For God does not abolish penalties what more pitiable than that of Phillip's wife who beheaded John? or the brethren of Joseph who sold him away, and transported him into the land of exile? or the devil who tortured Job with such great calamities? For not only on account of his other iniquisigns formed against them, this is not due ties, but at the same time also for this assault he will pay no trifling penalty. Dost thou but to the courage of those who are the vic- see how here the argument has proved even tims of them. Wherefore for the latter the more than was proposed, shewing that those rewards of philosophy are made ready and who are insulted not only sustain no harm prepared, for the former the penalties of from these assaults, but that the whole miswickedness. Hast thou been deprived of thy chief recoils on the head of those who conmoney? Read the word "Naked came I out trive them? For since neither wealth nor of my mother's womb, and naked shall I re- freedom, nor life in our native land nor the turn thither." And add to this the apostolic other things which I have mentioned, but saying "for we brought nothing into this only right actions of the soul, constitute the world; it is certain we can carry nothing virtue of man, naturally when the harm is out." Art thou evil reported of, and have directed against these things, human virtue some men loaded thee with countless abuse? itself is no wise harmed. What then? suppos-Remember that passage where it is said ing some one does harm the moral condition "Woe unto you when all men shall speak of the soul? Even then if a man suffers well of you"3 and "rejoice ye and leap for damage, the damage does not come from joy when they shall east upon you an evil another but proceeds from within, and from name." 4 Hast thou been transported into the man himself. "How so," do you say? the land of exile? Consider that thou hast When any one having been beaten by another, not here a fatherland, but that if thou wilt be or deprived of his goods, or having endured wise thou art bidden to regard the whole some other grievous insult, utters a blasworld as a strange country. Or hast thou phemous speech, he certainly sustains a been given over to a sore disease? quote the damage thereby, and a very great one, neverapostolic saying "the more our outward man theless it does not proceed from him who has decayeth, so much the more is the inward inflicted the insult, but from his own littleness man renewed day by day." 5 Has any one of soul. For what I said before I will now suffered a violent death? consider the case of repeat, no man if he be infinitely wicked John, his head cut off in prison, carried in a could attack any one more wickedly or more charger, and made the reward of a harlot's bitterly than that revengeful demon who is dancing. Consider the recompense which is implacably hostile to us, the devil: but yet derived from these things: for all these suf- this cruel demon had not power to upset or ferings when they are unjustly inflicted by overthrow him who lived before the law, and any one on another, expiate sins, and work before the time of grace, although he disrighteousness. So great is the advantage of charged so many and such bitter weapons them in the case of those who bear them against him from all quarters. Such is the force of nobility of soul. And what shall I 5. When then neither loss of money, nor say of Paul? Did he not suffer so many disslander, nor railing, nor banishment, nor distresses that even to make a list of them is no eases, nor tortures, nor that which seems easy matter? He was put in prison, loaded more formidable than all, namely death, harms with chains, dragged hither and hither, those who suffer them, but rather adds to scourged by the Jews, stoned, lacerated on their profit, whence can you prove to me that the back not only by thongs, but also by any one is injured when he is not injured at rods, he was immersed in the sea, oftentimes beset by robbers, involved in strife with his own countrymen, continually assailed both by foes and by acquaintance, subjected to countless intrigues, struggling with hunger and dergo the smallest fraction of them.

say, and even if I do not blaspheme, yet when I am robbed of my money I am disone who had only two mites,4 each of whom having spent all her substance upon those who the alms bestowed from the two mites was so abundant and generous as to eclipse all who had riches, and in wealth of intention and superabundance of zeal to surpass those who cast in much coin. Wherefore even in this matter thou art not injured but rather benefited, receiving by means of a small contribution rewards more glorious than they who put down large sums. But since, if I were to say these things for ever, sensuous characters which delight to grovel in worldly things, and revel in present things would not readily endure parting from the fading flowers (for such are the pleasant things of this life) or letting go its shadows: but the better sort of men indeed cling to both the one and the other, while the more pitiable and abject cling more strongly to the former than to the latter, come let us 5 strip off the pleasant and showy masks which hide the base and ugly countenance of these things, and let us expose the foul deformity of the harlot. For such is the character of a life of this kind which is devoted to luxury, and wealth and power: it is foul and ugly and full of much abomination, disagreeable and burdensome, nakedness, undergoing other frequent and and charged with bitterness. For this indeed lasting mischances and afflictions: and why is the special feature in this life which deneed I mention the greater part of them? he prives those who are captivated by it of every was dying every day: but yet, although sub- excuse, that although it is the aim of their jected to so many and such grievous suffer-longings and endeavours, yet is it filled with ings, he not only uttered no blasphemous much annoyance and bitterness, and teems word, but rejoiced over these things and with innumerable evils, dangers, bloodshed, gloried in them: and one time he says "I precipices, crags, murders, fears and tremrejoice in my sufferings," and then again blings, envy and ill-will, and intrigue, perpet-"not only this but we also glory in afflic- ual anxiety and care, and derives no profit, tions,"2 If then he rejoiced and gloried and produces no fruit from these great evils when suffering such great troubles what ex- save punishment and revenge, and incessant cuse will you have, and what defence will you torment. But although this is its character it make if you blaspheme when you do not un- seems to be to most men an object of ambition, and eager contention, which is a sign of 6. But I am injured in other ways, one will the folly of those who are captivated by it, not of the blessedness of the thing itself. Little children indeed are eager and excited abled from giving alms. This is a mere pre- about toys and cannot take notice of the text and pretence. For if you grieve on this things which become full grown men, There account know certainly that poverty is no bar is an excuse for them on account of their imto almsgiving. For even if you are infinitely maturity: but these others are debarred from poor you are not poorer than the woman who the right of defence, because, although of full possessed only a handful of meal,3 and the age they are childish in disposition, and more foolish than children in their manner of life.

Now tell me why is wealth an object of were in need was an object of surpassing ambition? For it is necessary to start from admiration: and such great poverty was no this point, because to the majority of those hindrance to such great lovingkindness, but who are afflicted with this grievous malady it seems to be more precious than health and life, and public reputation, and good opinion, and country, and household, and friends, and kindred and everything else. Moreover the flame has ascended to the very clouds: and this fierce heat has taken possession of land and sea. Nor is there any one to quench this fire: but all people are engaged in stirring it up, both those who have been already caught by it, and those who have not yet been caught, in order that they may be captured. And you may see every one, husband and wife, household slave, and freeman, rich and poor, each according to his ability carrying loads which supply much fuel to this fire by day and night: loads not of wood or faggots (for the fire is not of that kind), but loads of souls and bodies, of unrighteousness and iniquity. For such is the material of which a fire of this kind is wont to be kindled. For those who have riches place no limit anywhere to this monstrous passion, even if they compass the whole world: and the poor press on to get in advance of them, and a kind of incurable craze, and unrestrainable frenzy and irremediable disease possesses the souls of all. And this affection has conquered every other kind and thrust it away expelling it from the soul: neither friends nor kindred are taken into account: and why do I speak of friends and kindred? not even wife and children are

¹ Col. 1, 24.
3 1 Kings avii. 12.
5 The passage is obscure, but St. Chrysostom seems to divide the pleasures of this world into two classes: the more sensual he calls flowers, the rest he calls shadows: the grosser natures cling to the former more tenaciously than to any other kind. Comp. Homily LXXVI. on St. Matt., near the end.

of brutes: for as with the mire and the dung vessel by an overladen cargo of food, and the cause of pleasure is not in them, but in waterlog the ship, and drench it as in some the irrational nature of the creatures who shipwreck of the body, and devise fetters, and plunge into it; even so count it to be in the manacles, and gags, and bind their whole case of human beings.

thus disposed? It would be possible if they enjoy no sound pure sleep undisturbed by would open their ears to us, and unfold their frightful dreams, and are more miserable heart, and receive our words. For it is im- than madmen and introduce a kind of selfpossible to turn and divert the irrational animals from their unclean habit; for they are themselves as a laughing stock to the gaze of destitute of reason: but this the gentlest of their servants, or rather to the kinder sort all tribes, honoured by reason and speech, I amongst them as a tragical spectacle eliciting mean human nature, might, if it chose, readily tears, and cannot recognize any of those who and easily be released from the mire and the are present, and are incapable of speaking or stench, and the dung hill and its abomina- hearing but have to be carried away from to thee worthy such diligent pursuit? Is it are sober and vigilant, and limit their eating on account of the pleasure which no doubt is by their need, and sail with a favourable derived from the table? or on account of the breeze, and find hunger and thirst the best honour and the escort of those who pay court relish in their food and drink? For nothing to thee, because of thy wealth? is it because is so conducive to enjoyment and health as thou art able to defend thyself against those to be hungry and thirsty when one attacks the who annoy thee, and to be an object of fear viands, and to identify satiety with the sim-regarded, and what can be dearer to man than to all? For you cannot name any other reathese? but all things are dashed to the sons, save pleasure and flattery, and fear, and ground and trampled underfoot, when this the power of taking revenge; for wealth is not savage and inhuman mistress has laid hold of generally wont to make any one wiser, or the souls of all who are taken captive by her. more self-controlled, or more gentle, or more For as an inhuman mistress, and harsh intelligent, or kind, or benevolent, or superior tyrant, and savage barbarian, and public and to anger, or gluttony or pleasure: it does not expensive prostitute she debases and exhausts train any one to be moderate, or teach him and punishes with innumerable dangers and how to be humble, nor introduce and implant torments those who have chosen to be in any other piece of virtue in the soul. Neither bondage to her; and yet although she is ter- could you say for which of these things it rible and harsh, and fierce and cruel, and has deserves to be so diligently sought and dethe face of a barbarian, or rather of a wild sired. For not only is it ignorant how to beast, fiercer than a wolf or a lion, she seems plant and cultivate any good thing, but even to those who have been taken captive by her if it finds a store of them it mars and stunts gentle and loveable, and sweeter than honey, and blights them; and some of them it even And although she forges swords and weapons uproots, and introduces their opposites, unagainst them every day, and digs pitfalls and measured licentiousness, unseasonable wrath, leads them to precipices and crags and unrighteous anger, pride, arrogance, foolishweaves endless snares of punishment for ness. But let me not speak of these; for them, yet is she supposed to make these they who have been seized by this malady things objects of ambition to those who have will not endure to hear about virtue and vice. been made captive, and those who are desir-being entirely abandoned to pleasure and ing to be captured. And just as a sow de- therefore enslaved to it. Come then let us lights and revels in wallowing in the ditch and forego for the time being the consideration of mire, and beetles delight in perpetually crawl- these points, and let us bring forward the ing over dung; even so they who are captivated others which remain, and see whether wealth by the love of money are more miserable than has any pleasure, or any honour: for in my these creatures. For the abomination is eyes the case is quite the reverse. And first greater in this case, and the mire more offen- of all, if you please, let us investigate the sive: for they who are addicted to this pas- meals of rich and poor, and ask the guests sion imagine that much pleasure is derived which they are who enjoy the purest and from it: which does not arise from the nature most genuine pleasure; is it they who recline of the thing, but of the understanding which for a full day on couches, and join breakfast is afflicted with such an irrational taste. And and dinner together, and distend their this taste is worse in their case than in that stomach, and blunt their senses, and sink the body with the band of drunkenness and sur-7. And how might we cure those who are feit more grievous than an iron chain, and imposed demon into the soul and display For wherefore, O man, do riches seem their couches to their bed;—or is it they who limits of this, nor imposing a load upon the body too great for its strength.

8. But if you disbelieve my statement study the physical condition, and the soul of each Are not the hodies vigorous of those who live thus moderately (for do not tell me of that which rarely happens, although some may be weak from some other circumstance, but form your judgment from those instances which are of constant occurrence). I say are they not vigorous, and their senses clear, fulfilling their proper function with much ease? whereas the bodies of the others are flaccid and softer than wax, and beset with a crowd of maladies? For gout soon fastens upon them, and untimely palsy, and premature old age, and headache, and flatulence, and feebleness of digestion, and loss of appetite, and they require constant attendance of physicians, and perpetual doseing, and daily care. Are these things pleasurable? tell me. Who of those that know what pleasure really is would say so? For pleasure is produced when desire leads the way, and fruition folof disgust and sense of oppression: because there is no desire which gives a keen relish to the enjoyment of it. For it is not the nature of the food, or of the drink, but the appetite of the eaters which is wont to prople necessity of food, never overstepping the the pleasure received from the water rivalled the sweetness of honey, inasmuch as those who partook of it rushed to it in their eagerness to drink.

Since then these things are so and no one can deny it, however stupid he may be: is it not perfectly plain that pure, undiluted, and lively pleasure is to be found at the tables of the poor? whereas at the tables of the rich there is discomfort, and disgust and defilement? as that wise man has said "even sweet things seem to be a vexation." 3

o. But riches some one will say procure honour for those who possess them, and enable them to take vengeance on their enemies with ease. And is this a reason, pray, why riches seem to you desirable and worth contending for;-that they nourish the most dangerous passion in our nature, leading on anger into action, swelling the empty bubbles of ambition, and stimulating and urging men to arrogance? Why these are just the very reasons why we ought resolutely to turn our backs upon riches, because they introduce certain fierce and dangerous wild beasts into lows: now if there is fruition, but desire is our heart depriving us of the real honour nowhere to be found, the conditions of pleas- which we might receive from all, and introure fail and vanish. On this account also ducing to deluded men another which is the invalids, although the most charming food is opposite of this, only painted over with its set before them, partake of it with a feeling colours, and persuading them to fancy that it is the same, when by nature it is not so, but only seems to be so to the eye. For as the beauty of courtesans, made up as it is of dyes and pigments, is destitute of real beauty, yet makes a foul and ugly face appear fair and duce the desire, and is capable of causing beautiful to those who are deluded by it when pleasure. Therefore also a certain wise man it is not so in reality: even so also riches who had an accurate knowledge of all that force flattery to look like honour. For I beg concerned pleasure, and understood how to you not to consider the praises which are moralize about these things said "the full openly bestowed through fear and fawning: soul mocketh at honeycombs:" showing that for these are only tints and pigments; but the conditions of pleasure consist not in the unfold the conscience of each of those who nature of the meal, but in the disposition of flatter you in this fashion, and inside it you the eaters. Therefore also the prophet re- will see countless accusers declaring against counting the wonders in Egypt and in the you, and loathing and detesting you more desert mentioned this in connexion with the than your bitterest adversaries and foes. others "He satisfied them with honey out of And if ever a change of circumstances should the rock." 2 And yet nowhere does it appear occur which would remove and expose this that honey actually sprang forth for them out mask which fear has manufactured, just as of the rock: what then is the meaning of the the sun when it emits a hotter ray than usual expression? Because the people being ex-discloses the real countenances of those hausted by much toil and long travelling, and women whom I mentioned, then you will see distressed by great thirst rushed to the cool clearly that all through the former time you spring, their craving for drink serving as a were held in the greatest contempt by those relish, the writer wishing to describe the pleas- who paid court to you, and you fancied you ures which they received from those fountains were enjoying honour from those who thocalled the water honey, not meaning that the roughly hated you, and in their heart poured element was converted into honey, but that infinite abuse upon you, and longed to see times.

¹ Prov. xxvii. 7. Septuagint.

² Ps. lxxxi. 16.

³ Referring to Prov. xxvii. 7.

you involved in extreme calamities. For sides these-the unconcern and luxury of the there is nothing like virtue to produce honour, rich man who dwelt hard by. And if you -honour neither forced nor feigned, nor hid- would find a fifth thing, serving as fuel to the den under a mask of deceit, but real and flame, you will see quite clearly that he was genuine, and able to stand the test of hard beset by it. For not only was that rich man living luxuriously, but twice, and thrice, or 10. But do you wish to take vengeance on rather indeed several times in the day he saw those who have annoyed you? This, as I the poor man: for he had been laid at his was saying just now, is the very reason why gate, being a grievous spectacle of pitiable wealth ought specially to be avoided. For it distress, and the bare sight of him was suffiprepares thee to thrust the sword against thy-self, and renders thee liable to a heavier ac-count in the future day of reckoning, and makes thy punishment intolerable. For re-luxurious table spread, and goblets wreathed venge is so great an evil that it actually with flowers, and pure wine plentifully poured revokes the mercy of God, and cancels the forth, and grand armies of cooks, and paraforgiveness of countless sins which has been sites, and flatterers from early dawn, and already bestowed. For he who received remission of the debt of ten thousand talents, and he spent all his time in devising every and after having obtained so great a boon by species of dissipation, and drunkenness, and merely asking for it then made a demand of surfeiting, and in revelling in dress and feastone hundred pence from his fellow servant, a ling and many other things. But although he demand, that is, for satisfaction for his trans- saw that poor man every day distressed by gression against himself, in his severity grievous hunger and the bitterest infirmity, towards his fellow servant recorded his own and the oppression of his many sores, and condemnation; and for this reason and no by destitution, and the ills which result from other he was delivered to the tormentors, and these things, he never even gave him a racked, and required to pay back the ten thought: yet the parasites and the flatterers thousand talents; and he was not allowed the were pampered even beyond their need; but benefit of any excuse or defence, but suffered the poor man, and he so very poor, and enthe most extreme penalty, having been com- compassed with so many miseries, was not manded to deposit the whole debt which the even vouchsafed the crumbs which fell from loving kindness of God had formerly remitted. that table, although he greatly desired them: Is this then the reason, pray, why wealth is so and yet none of these things injured him, he earnestly pursued by thee, because it so did not give vent to a bitter word, he did not easily conducts thee into sin of this kind? utter a profane speech; but like a piece of Nay verily, this is why you ought to abhor it gold which shines all the more brilliantly as a foe and an adversary teeming with count- when it is purified by excessive heat, even so less murders. But poverty, some one will he, although oppressed by these sufferings, say, disposes men to be discontented and was superior to all of them, and to the agitaoften also to utter profane words, and con-tion which in many cases is produced by descend to mean actions. It is not poverty them. For if generally speaking poor men, which does this, but littleness of soul: for when they see rich men, are consumed with Lazarus also was poor, aye! very poor: and envy and racked by malicious ill-will, and besides poverty he suffered from infirmity, a deem life not worth living, and this even when bitterer trial than any form of poverty, and they are well supplied with necessary food, one which makes poverty more severely felt; and have persons to minister to their wants; and in addition to infirmity there was a total what would the condition of this poor man absence of protectors, and difficulty in finding any to supply his wants, which increased the noble hearted, seeing that he was poor bebitterness of poverty and infirmity. For each yound all other poor men, and not only poor, of these things is painful in itself, but when but also infirm, and without any one to prothere are none to minister to the sufferer's tect or cheer him, and lay in the midst of the wants, the suffering becomes greater, the city as if in a remote desert, and wasted away flame more painful, the distress more bitter, with bitter hunger, and saw all good things the tempest fiercer, the billows stronger, the being poured upon the rich man as out of a furnace hotter. And if one examines the case fountain, and had not the benefit of any thoroughly there was yet a fourth trial be- human consolation, but lay exposed as a perpetual meal for the tongues of the dogs, for he was so enfeebled and broken down in

¹ Matt. xviii. 23-35.

take up the same argument.

titude? Nowhere was he harmed at all, but lesser one. that multitude of sufferings, and the cruelty of the rich man, rather increased his strength, to injure a man who does not choose to injure of poverty, and infirmity and loneliness.

entrusted with the money of the poor, so that himself. But the house of the other man his passion might be soothed thereby (for he was a thief) even then did not become any Matt, vii. 24, etc.

body that he could not scare them away? better, although he had been favoured with Dost thou perceive that he who does not in- such great condescension. For since Christ jure himself suffers no evil? for I will again knew that he was covetous, and destined to perish on account of his love of money he not 11. For what harm was done to this hero only did not demand punishment of him for by his bodily infirmity? or by the absence of this at that time, but with a view to softening protectors? or by the coming of the dogs? or down his passion he was entrusted with the the evil proximity of the rich man? or by the money of the poor, that having some means great luxury, haughtiness and arrogance of of appeasing his greed he might be saved the latter? Did it enervate him for the con- from falling into that appalling gulf of sin, test on behalf of virtue? Did it ruin his for-checking the greater evil beforehand by a and became the pledge for him of infinite himself: but if a man is not willing to be crowns of victory, a means of adding to his temperate, and to aid himself from his own rewards, an augmentation of his recompense, resources no one will ever be able to profit and a promise of an increased requital. For him. Therefore also that wonderful history he was crowned not merely on account of his of the Holy Scriptures, as in some lofty, poverty, or of his hunger or of his sores, or large, and broad picture, has portrayed the of the dogs licking them: but because, having lives of the men of old time, extending the such a neighbour as the rich man, and being narrative from Adam to the coming of Christ: seen by him every day, and perpetually over- and it exhibits to you both those who are looked he endured this trial bravely and with upset, and those who are crowned with victory much fortitude, a trial which added no small in the contest, in order that it may instruct flame but in fact a very strong one to the fire you by means of all examples that no one will be able to injure one who is not injured by And, tell me, what was the case of the blessed himself, even if all the world were to kindle a Paul? for there is nothing to prevent my fierce war against him. For it is not stress of making mention of him again. Did he not circumstances, nor variation of seasons, nor experience innumerable storms of trial? And insults of men in power, nor intrigues besetin what respect was he injured by them? ting thee like snow storms, nor a crowd of Was he not crowned with victory all the more calamities, nor a promiscuous collection of all in consequence,—because he suffered hunger, the ills to which mankind is subject, which because he was consumed with cold and can disturb even slightly the man who is nakedness, because he was often tortured with brave, and temperate, and watchful; just as the scourge, because he was stoned, because on the contrary the indolent and supine man he was cast into the sea? But then some one who is his own betrayer cannot be made betsays he was Paul, and called by Christ. Yet ter, even with the aid of innumerable minis-Judas also was one of the twelve, and he too trations. This at least was made manifest to was called of Christ; but neither his being of us by the parable of the two men, of whom the twelve nor his call profited him, because the one built his house upon the rock, the he had not a mind disposed to virtue. But other upon the sand: not that we are to Paul although struggling with hunger, and at think of sand and rock, or of a building of a loss to procure necessary food, and daily stone, and a roof, or of rivers, and rain, and undergoing such great sufferings, pursued wild winds, beating against the buildings, but with great zeal the road which leads to heaven: we are to extract virtue and vice as the meanwhereas Judas although he had been called ung of these things, and to perceive from before him, and enjoyed the same advantages them that no one injures a man who does not as he did, and was initiated in the highest injure himself. Therefore neither the rain form of Christian life, and partook of the although driven furiously along, nor the holy table and that most awful of sacred streams dashing against it with much vehefeasts, and received such grace as to be able mence, nor the wild winds beating against it to raise the dead, and cleanse the lepers, and with a mighty rush, shook the one house in cast out devils, and often heard discourses any degree: but it remained undisturbed, unconcerning poverty, and spent so long a time moved: that thou mightest understand that no in the company of Christ Himself, and was trial can agitate the man who does not betray would have experienced the same fate), but on account of his own folly; for it did not fall because the wind blew upon it, but because it was built upon the sand, that is to say upon indolence and iniquity. For before that tempest beat upon it, it was weak and ready one puts any pressure on them, fall to pieces of themselves, the foundation sinking and giving way in every direction. And just as cobwebs part asunder, although no strain is put upon them, but adamant remains unshaken even when it is struck: even so also they who do not injure themselves become stronger, even if they receive innumerable blows; but they who betray themselves, even if there is no one to harass them, fall of themselves, and collapse and perish. For even thus did Judas perish, not only having been unassailed by any trial of this kind, but having actually enjoyed the benefit of much assistance.

13. Would you like me to illustrate this argument in the case of whole nations? What great forethought was bestowed upon the Jewish nation! was not the whole visible creation arranged with a view to their service? was not a new and strange method of life introduced amongst them? For they had not to send down to a market, and so they had a chariot, but to their enemies it became a the benefit of things which are sold for money without paying any price for them: neither but drowning the latter with great violence. did they cleave furrows nor drag a plough, nor harrow the ground, nor cast in seed, nor had they need of rain and wind, and annual seasons, nor sunshine, nor phases of the moon, nor climate, nor anything of that kind; they prepared no threshing floor, they threshed no grain, they used no winnowing fan for separating the grain from the chaff, they turned no mill-stone, they built no oven, they brought neither wood nor fire into the house, they needed no baker's art, they handled no spade, they sharpened no sickle, they required no the wilderness? what of the triumphs and other art, I mean of weaving or building or bloodless victories? for they subdued those supplying shoes: but the word of God was everything to them. And they had a table rather than making war. And they vanprepared off hand, free of all toil and labour, For such was the nature of the manna; it was arms; and overcame those who fought with new and fresh, nowhere costing them any them after they left Egypt by means of singtrouble, nor straining them by labour. And ing and music; and what they did was a festheir clothes, and shoes, and even their phy-tival rather than a campaign, a religious cersical frame forgot their natural infirmity: for emony rather than a battle. For all these the former did not wear out in the course of wonders took place not merely for the purso long a time nor did their feet swell all pose of supplying their need, but also that though they made such long marches. Of the people might preserve more accurately physicians, and medicine, and all other concern about that kind of art, there was no was easily swept away, not on account of the mention at all amongst them; so completely force of the trials (for in that case the other banished was infirmity of every kind; for it is said "He brought them out with silver and gold; and there was not one feeble person among their tribes." But like men who had quitted this world, and were transplanted to another and a better one, even so did they eat and drink, neither did the sun's ray when to fall. For buildings of that kind, even if no it waxed hot smite their heads; for the cloud parted them from the fiery beam, hovering all round them, and serving like a portable shelter for the whole body of the people. Neither at night did they need a torch to disperse the darkness, but they had the pillar of fire, a source of unspeakable light, supplying two wants, one by its shining, the other by directing the course of their journey; for it was not only luminous, but also conducted that countless host along the wilderness with more certainty than any human guide. And they journeyed not only upon land but also upon sea as if it had been dry land; and they made an audacious experiment upon the laws of nature by treading upon that angry sea, marching through it as if it had been the hard and resisting surface of a rock; and indeed when they placed their feet upon it the element became like solid earth, and gently sloping plains and fields; but when it received their enemies it wrought after the nature of sea; and to the Israelites indeed it served as grave; conveying the former across with ease, And the disorderly flood of water displayed the good order and subordination which marks reasonable and highly intelligent men. fulfilling the part at one time of a guardian, at another of an executioner, and exhibiting these opposites together on one day. What shall one say of the rocks which gave forth streams of water? what of the clouds of birds which covered the whole face of the earth by the number of their carcases? what of the wonders in Egypt? what of the marvels in who opposed them like men keeping holiday quished their own masters without the use of the doctrine which Moses inculcated of the knowledge of God; and voices proclaiming the presence of their Master were uttered on all sides of them. For the sea loudly declared this, by becoming a road for them to march upon, and then turning into sea again: and the waters of the Nile uttered this voice when they were converted into the nature of blood; and the frogs, and the great army of locusts, and the caterpillar and blight declared the same thing to all the people; and the wonders in the desert, the manna, the pillar of fire, the cloud, the quails, and all the other incidents served them as a book, and writing which could never be effaced, echoing daily in their memory and resounding in their mind. Nevertheless after such great and remarkable providence, after all those unspeakable benefits, after such mighty miracles, after care indescribable, after continual teaching, after instruction by means of speech, and admonition by means of deeds, after glorious victories, after extraordinary triumphs, after abundant supply of food, after the plentiful production of water, after the ineffable glory with which they were invested in the eyes of the human race, being ungrateful and senseless they worshipped a calf, and paid reverence to the head of a bull, even when the memorials of God's benefits in Egypt were fresh in their minds, and they were still in actual enjoyment of many more.

14. But the Ninevites, although a barbarous and foreign people who had never participated in any of these benefits, small or great, neither words, nor wonders, nor works, first time, enter their city and say "yet three days and Nineveh shall be overthrown," and were delivered from every kind of evil. "For," we read, "God saw that every man turned from his evil way, and was converted to the Lord." 2 How turned? I ask. Aldistance of the place the magnitude of their superior to worldly things, and despised all wickedness; nevertheless such great iniquity which was piled up to such a height as to reach even to the heaven, all this in the course of three days in a brief moment of time through the effect of a few words which they heard from the mouth of one man and he an unknown shipwrecked stranger they so thoroughly abolished, removed out of sight, and put away, as to have the happiness of hearing the declaration "God saw that every one turned from his evil way, and He repented of the evil which God said He would do them." Seest thou that he who is temperate and watchful not only suffers no injury at the hands of man, but even turns back Heaven-sent wrath? whereas he who betrays himself and harms himself by his own doing, even if he receives countless benefits, reaps no great advantage. So, at least, the Jews were not profited by those great miracles, nor on the other hand were the Ninevites harmed by having no share in them; but inasmuch as they were inwardly well-disposed, having laid hold of a slight opportunity they became better, barbarians and foreigners though they were, ignorant of all divine revelation, and dwelling at a distance from Palestine.

15. Again, I ask, was the virtue of the "three children" corrupted by the troubles which beset them? Whilst they were still young, mere youths, of immature age, did they not undergo that grievous affliction of captivity? had they not to make a long journey from home, and when they had arrived in the foreign country were they not cut off from fatherland and home and temple, and when they saw a man who had been saved altar and sacrifices, and offerings, and drink from shipwreck, who had never associated offerings, and even the singing of psalms? with them before, but appeared then for the For not only were they debarred from their home, but as a consequence from many forms of worship also. Were they not given up into were so converted and reformed by the mere the hands of barbarians, wolves rather than sound of these words, and putting away their men? and, most painful calamity of all, when former wickedness, advanced in the direction they had been banished into so distant and of virtue by the path of repentance, that they barbarous a country, and were suffering such caused the sentence of God to be revoked, a grievous captivity were they not without and arrested the threatened disturbance of teacher, without prophets, without ruler? their city, and averted the heaven-sent wrath, "for," it is written, "there is no ruler, nor prophet, nor governor, nor place for offering before Thee and finding mercy." 4 Yea moreover they were cast into the royal palace, as upon some cliff and crag, and a sea full of though their wickedness was great, their in- rocks and reefs, being compelled to sail over iquity unspeakable, their moral sores difficult that angry sea without a pilot, or signal man, to heal, which was plainly shown by the pro- or crew, or sails; and they were cooped up in phet when he said "their wickedness ascended the royal court as in a prison. For inasmuch even unto the heaven:"3 indicating by the as they knew spiritual wisdom, and were dour of the palace no better than a prison, numbers, and dwelling in the midst of barno safer than a place of rocks and crags) they barians, and having enemies for masters, and were straightway subjected to cruel embar-rassment. For the king commanded them to be partakers of his own table, a luxurious, unclean and profane table, a thing which was all others who cared for them, and the cessaforbidden them, and seemed more terrible tion of drink offerings and sacrifices, and loss than death; and they were lonely men hemmed of the temple and psalmody, and yet none of in like lambs amongst so many wolves. And these things harmed them; but they had more they were constrained to choose between renown then than when they enjoyed these being consumed by famine or rather led off things in their native land. And after they to execution, and tasting of forbidden meats. What then did these youths do, forlorn as they wreathed their brows with the glorious garland were, captives, strangers, slaves of those who of victory, and had kept the law even in a forcommanded these things. They did not con-eign land, and trampled under foot the sider that this strait or the absolute power of tyrant's command, and overcome fear of the him who possessed the state sufficed to justify avenger, and yet received no harm from any their compliance; but they employed every quarter, as if they had been quietly living at device and expedient to enable them to avoid home and enjoying the benefit of all those the sin. although they were abandoned on things which I mentioned, after they had every side. For they could not influence thus fearlessly accomplished their work they men by money: how should they, being cap- were again summoned to other contests. And tives? nor by friendship and social inter- again they were the same men; and they course? how should they being strangers? were subjected to a more severe trial than the nor could they get the better of them by any former one, and a furnace was kindled, and exertion of power: how was it possible being slaves? nor master them by force of numbers: they were confronted by the barbarian army slaves? nor master them by force of numbers: they were confronted by the barbarian army in company with the king: and the whole how could they being only three? Therefore Persian force was set in motion and everythey approached the eunuch who possessed thing was devised which tended to put deceit the necessary authority, and persuaded him or constraint upon them: divers kinds of by their arguments. For when they saw him music, and various forms of punishment, and fearful and trembling, and in an agony of alarm concerning his own safety, and the dread of death which agitated his soul was heard were more alarming than what they intolerable: "for I fear" said he "my lord the saw; nevertheless inasmuch as they did not king, lest he should see your countenances betray themselves, but made the most of their sadder than the children which are of your own strength, they never sustained any kind sort and so shall ve endanger my head to the of damage: but even won for themselves king," having released him from this fear more glorious crowns of victory than before. they persuaded him to grant them the favour. For Nabuchadonosor bound them and cast And inasmuch as they brought to the work them into the furnace, yet he burnt them not, all the strength which they had, God also but rather benefited them, and rendered them henceforth contributed his strength to it. For it was not God's doing only that they deprived of temple (for I will repeat my achieved those things for the sake of which former remarks) and altar, and fatherland, they were to receive a reward, but the begin- and priests and prophets, although they were ning and starting point was from their own in a foreign and barbarous country, in the purpose, and having manifested that to be very midst of the furnace, surrounded by all human pride and made the wings of their does not injure himself, no one else will be soul soar upwards, they counted their sojourn able to harm him? Behold at least youththere as an aggravation of their trouble. For fulness, and captivity and destitution, and rehad they been outside the court, and dwelling in a private house they would have enjoyed dearth of protectors, and a stern command, more independence: but having been cast and great fear of death assailing the mind of into that prison (for they deemed the splen- the eunuch, and poverty, and feebleness of noble and brave, they won for themselves the help of God, and so accomplished their aim. that mighty host, the king himself who wrought this looking on, they set up a glori-16. Dost thou then perceive that if a man ous trophy, and won a notable victory, having sung that admirable and extraordinary hymn which from that day to this has been sung sung to future generations. himself, he cannot possibly be hurt by an-soon as they set foot in the flames had erected other: for I will not cease harping constantly their trophy, and won their victory, and put upon this saying. For if captivity, and on their crown, and had been proclaimed conbondage, and loneliness and loss of country querors both in Heaven and on earth, and so and all kindred and death, and burning, and far as they were concerned nothing was wanta great army and a savage tyrant could not ing for their renown. What then wouldst do any damage to the innate virtue of the thou have to say to these things? Hast thou three children captives, bondmen, strangers been driven into exile, and expelled from thy though they were in a foreign land, but the country? Behold so also were they. Hast enemy's assault became to them rather the thou suffered captivity, and become the servoccasion of greater confidence: what shall be ant of barbarian masters. Well! this also able to harm the temperate man? There is thou wilt find befell these men. But thou nothing, even should he have the whole world hast no one present there to regulate thy state in arms against him. But, some one may nor to advise or instruct thee? Well! of at-assuredly follow.

¹ Dan. i. 10.

mire those youths, and pronounce them them, yea more exceedingly illustrious, and blessed, and enviable, is not because they increased the store of their treasures in trampled on the flame, and vanquished the force of the fire: but because they were temple, and altar, and ark and cherubim, and bound, and cast into the furnace, and deliv- mercy-seat, and veil, and an infinite multitude ered to the fire for the sake of true doctrine. of priests, and daily services, and morning For this it was which constituted the com- and evening sacrifices, and continually heard pleteness of their triumph, and the wreath of the voices of the prophets, both living and devictory was placed on their brows as soon as parted, sounding in their ears, and carried they were cast into the furnace and before the about with them the recollection of the wonissue of events it began to be weaved for ders which were done in Egypt, and in the them from the moment that they uttered wilderness, and all the rest, and turned the those words which they spoke with much story of these things over in their hands, and boldness and freedom of speech to the king had them inscribed upon their door posts and when they were brought into his presence, enjoyed the benefit at that time of much "We have no need to answer thee concerning supernatural power and every other kind of this thing: for our God in Heaven whom we help were yet no wise profited, but rather serve is able to rescue us out of the burning damaged, having set up idols in the temple fiery furnace: and He will deliver us out of itself, and having sacrificed their sons and thy hands, O King. But if not, be it known daughters under trees, and in almost every unto thee, O King, that we will not serve thy part of the country in Palestine having offered Gods nor worship the golden image which those unlawful and accursed sacrifices, and thou hast set up." After the utterance of perpetrated countless other deeds yet more these words I proclaimed them conquerors; monstrous. But these men although in the after these words having grasped the prize of midst of a barbarous and hostile land, having victory, they hastened on to the glorious their occupation in a tyrant's house, deprived crown of martyrdom, following up the confes- of all that care of which I have been speaking, sion which they made through their words led away to execution, and subjected to burnwith the confession made through their deeds. ing, not only suffered no harm there from small But if when they had been cast into it, the or great, but became the more illustrious. fire had respect for their bodies, and undid Knowing then these things, and collecting their bonds, and suffered them to go down instances of the like kind from the inspired into it without fear, and forgot its natural divine Scriptures (for it is possible to find force, so that the furnace of fire became as a many such examples in the case of various throughout the world and will continue to be effect of God's grace and of the divine wonder-working power. Yet the heroes them-Thus then when a man does not injure selves even before these things took place, as say, in their case God stood beside them, and tention of this kind these men were destitute. plucked them out of the flame. Certainly He Or thou hast been bound, burned, put to did; and if thou wilt play thy part to the best death? for thou canst not tell me of anything of thy power, the help which God supplies will more painful than these things. Yet lo! these men having gone through them all, 17. Nevertheless the reason why I ad- were made more glorious by each one of fountain of cool water, this marvel was the other persons) we deem that neither a difficulty arising from seasons or events, nor compulsion and force, nor the arbitrary authority there be countless multitudes injuring and lasting and pure blessings in Christ Jesus our insulting him: so that if he does not suffer this at his own hands, not all the creatures ever throughout all ages. Amen.

of potentates furnish a sufficient excuse for who inhabit the whole earth and sea if they us when we transgress. I will now conclude combined to attack him would be able to hurt my discourse by repeating what I said at the one who is vigilant and sober in the Lord. beginning, that if any one be harmed and in- Let us then, I beseech you, be sober and vigijured he certainly suffers this at his own lant at all times, and let us endure all painful hands, not at the hands of others even if things bravely that we may obtain those ever-

LETTERS OF ST. CHRYSOSTOM TO OLYMPIAS.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

INTRODUCTION TO THE LETTERS TO OLYMPIAS.

THE deaconess Olympias to whom seventeen of Chrysostom's extant letters are addressed was the most eminent of his female friends. She belonged to a Pagan family of high rank, and was born about 368. Her father Seleucus who was a count of the Empire died when she was a young girl, and she was brought up under the guardianship of an uncle Procopius, who was a devout Christian and a friend of Gregory of Nazianzus. Gregory took great interest in her, speaking of her in his letters as "his own Olympias" and delighting to be addressed by her as "father." Her governess Theodosia, sister of St. Amphilochius of Iconium, was a woman whom Gregory exhorted her to imitate as the very pattern of Christian goodness. The orphan girl had great personal beauty, and was the heiress of a large fortune. Naturally therefore she had many suitors, and in 384 at the age of sixteen she was wedded to Nebridius, a young man of high rank and irreproachable character. The marriage however does not seem to have been a happy one, and perhaps in this fact as well as in the death of her husband about two years after their union, Olympias saw a divine intimation that she should not entangle herself again in the worldly cares and anxieties incident to married life. The Emperor Theodosius wished to unite her to a young Spaniard, Elpidius, a kinsman of his own, and irritated by her refusal, ordered her property to be confiscated until she should have attained her thirtieth year, unless she consented to the proposed union. Olympias however remained inflexible and in a letter of dignified sarcasm thanked the Emperor for relieving her from a heavy burden. "He could not have conferred a greater blessing upon her unless he had ordered her wealth to be bestowed upon the Churches and the poor." Theodosius perceiving the uselessness, if not regretting the injustice, of his harsh decree, cancelled it, and left her in the undisturbed enjoyment of her property. Henceforward her time and wealth were devoted to the service of religion. She ministered to the necessities of the sick and poor, and supported the work of the Church in Greece, Asia Minor and Syria with such lavish donations, not only of her money but of her land, that even Chrysostom, who might be called the great preacher of almsgiving, warned her against indiscriminate liberality, reminding her that as her wealth was a trust committed to her by God she ought to be discreet in the management of it. This salutary advice gained him the ill-will of many avaricious bishops and clergy who had profited, or hoped to profit, by her gifts. She in her turn requited the Archbishop for his spiritual care by many little feminine attentions to his bodily wants, especially by seeing that he was supplied with wholesome food, and did not overstrain his feeble constitution by a too rigid abstinence. She herself however practised the most austere asceticism, renouncing the luxury of the bath, wearing none but old coarse clothing, and subjecting herself to severe restrictions in respect of food and sleep.

After the expulsion of Chrysostom from Constantinople 404, through the intrigues of his enemies, Olympias suffered much from the persecution to which all his followers were subjected. She was accused of having been concerned in causing the fire which broke out immediately after his departure, and destroyed the Cathedral Church and the Senate House.

Her intrepid demeanour before the præfect who tried in vain to frighten her into a confession of guilt, or induce her to acknowledge Arsacius who had been intruded into the See by an arbitrary exercise of imperial power, excited general admiration; and the tidings of her fortitude were a great consolation to the exiled archbishop in the midst of much bodily suffering, and mental distress. It is not quite certain whether she was driven from Constantinople or voluntarily retired from it; nor have we any definite information concerning the remainder of her life.

LETTERS TO OLYMPIAS.

TO MY LADY,

SEND GREETING IN THE LORD.

unattainable? for whatever image of our pressingle out any one part of it, as wealth alone, ent evils I may seek speech shrinks baffled or luxury alone, or power, or honour; but havlook at these calamities I do not abandon the splendid amongst men under the one designahope of better things, considering as I do who the pilot is in all this—not one who gets the 12 Cor. iv. 18.

better of the storm by his art, but calms the raging waters by his rod. But if He does not THE MOST REVEREND AND DIVINELY FAVORED effect this at the outset and speedily, such is DEACONESS OLYMPIAS, I JOHN, BISHOP, His custom—He does not at the beginning put down these terrible evils, but when they have increased, and come to extremities, and I. Come now let me relieve the wound of most persons are reduced to despair, then He thy despondency, and disperse the thoughts works wondrously, and beyond all expectation, which gather this cloud of care around thee, thus manifesting his own power, and training For what is it which upsets thy mind, and why the patience of those who undergo these caart thou sorrowful and dejected? Is it be-lamities. Do not therefore be cast down. cause of the fierce black storm which has For there is only one thing, Olympias, which overtaken the Church, enveloping all things is really terrible, only one real trial, and that in darkness as of a night without a moon, and is sin; and I have never ceased continually is growing to a head every day, travailing to harping upon this theme; but as for all other bring forth disastrous shipwrecks, and increas- things, plots, enmities, frauds, calumnies, ining the ruin of the world? I know all this as sults, accusations, confiscation, exile, the keen well as you; none shall gainsay it, and if sword of the enemy, the peril of the deep, you like I will form an image of the things now warfare of the whole world, or anything else taking place so as to present the tragedy yet you like to name, they are but idle tales. For more distinctly to thee. We behold a sea up-, whatever the nature of these things may be heaved from the very lowest depths, some sail, they are transitory and perishable, and operate ors floating dead upon the waves, others in a mortal body without doing any injury to engulfed by them, the planks of the ships the vigilant soul. Therefore the blessed Paul, breaking up, the sails torn to tatters, the masts desiring to prove the insignificance both of the sprung, the oars dashed out of the sailors' pleasures and sorrows relating to this life, de-hands, the pilots seated on the deck, clasping clared the whole truth in one sentence when their knees with their hands instead of grasp- he said-" For the things which are seen are ing the rudder, bewailing the hopelessness of temporal." Why then dost thou fear temtheir situation with sharp cries and bitter lam- poral things which pass away like the stream entations, neither sky nor sea clearly visible, of a river. For such is the nature of present but all one deep and impenetrable darkness, things whether they be pleasant or painful. so that no one can see his neighbour, whilst And another prophet compared all human mighty is the roaring of the billows, and mon-sters of the sea attack the crews on every side. even more flimsy, describing the whole of But how much further shall I pursue the it "as the flower of grass." For he did not from the attempt. Nevertheless even when I ing comprised all the things which are esteemed

as the flower of grass." 1

look at it again compared with another image least as the malice of their enemies had power; and then also learn to despise it. For the that they had been exiles from their country, railings, and insults, and reproaches, and gibes captives deprived of their liberty, wandering inflicted by enemies, and their plots are com- outcasts from city and home, sojourners in a pared to a worn-out garment, and moth-eaten strange and barbarous land; for all this was wool when God says "Fear ye not the reproach the outpouring of a grateful heart. And when of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings, the malicious devices of their enemies were for they shall wax old as doth a garment, and perfected (for what further could they attempt like moth-eaten wool so shall they be consum- after their death?) and the labours of the heroes ed." 2 Therefore let none of these things which were completed, and the garland of victory was are happening trouble thee, but ceasing to in- woven, and their rewards were prepared and voke the aid of this or that person, and to run nothing more was wanting for their renown; after shadows (for such are human alliances), then at last their calamities were brought to an do thou persistently call upon Jesus, whom thou end, and he who caused the furnace to be servest, merely to bow his head; and in a kindled, and delivered them over to that great moment of time all these evils will be dissolved. punishment, became himself the panegyrist of yet they have not been dissolved, such is the marvellous deed, and everywhere throughout manner of God's dealing (for I will resume my the world issued letters full of reverent praise, former argument); He does not put down evils recording what had taken place, and becoming at the outset, but when they have grown to a the faithful herald of the miracles wrought by head, when scarcely any form of the enemy's the wonder-working God. For inasmuch as he malice remains ungratified, then He suddenly had been an enemy and adversary what he converts all things to a state of tranquillity and wrote was above suspicion even in the opinion conducts them to an unexpected settlement. of enemies. For He is not only able to turn as many things as we expect and hope, to good, but many belonging to God? His wisdom, His extraormore, yea infinitely more. Wherefore also Paul saith "now to Him who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think." Could He not, for example, have pre- ing, and invoking Him; beseeching and supvented the three children at the outset from falling into trial? But He did not choose to do this, thereby conferring great pain upon before thy eyes let none of these things disturb them. Therefore He suffered them to be de-thee. For our Master is not baffled by the livered into the hands of barbarians, and the difficulty, even if all things are reduced to the furnace to be heated to an immeasurable height extremity of ruin. For it is possible for Him and the wrath of the king to blaze even more to raise those who have fallen, to convert those selves to be cast into the fire; and then, when laden with countless sins, and make them suddenly, and beyond all hope, the wonderwas displayed, and shone forth with exceeding splendour. For the fire was bound, and the bondmen were released; and the furnace became a temple of prayer, a place of fountains and dew, of higher dignity than a royal court, and the very hairs of their head prevailed over ter even of iron and stone, and masters every kind of substance. And a solemn song of universal praise was instituted there by these holy tion of glory he said "all the glory of man is men inviting every kind of created thing to join in the wondrous melody; and they ut-2. Nevertheless, you will say, adversity is a tered hymns of thanksgiving to God for that terrible thing and grievous to be borne. Yet they had been bound, and also burnt, as far at But if thou hast already called upon Him, and those holy heroes, and the herald of God's

3. Dost thou see the abundance of resource dinary power, His loving-kindness and care? Be not therefore dismayed or troubled but continue to give thanks to God for all things, praisplicating; even if countless tumults and troubles come upon thee, even if tempests are stirred up fiercely than the furnace, and hands and feet to who are in error, to set straight those who have be bound with great severity and they them- been ensuared, to release those who have been all they who beheld despaired of their rescue, righteous, to quicken those who are dead, to restore lustre to decayed things, and freshness to working power of God, the supreme artificer, those which have waxen old. For if He makes things which are not, come into being, and bestows existence on things which are nowhere by any means manifest, how much more will He rectify things which already exist. But you will say there are many who perish, many who are caught by snares. Many such things have that all devouring element which gets the bet- indeed often taken place, yet afterwards have all received their appropriate correction, save some few who have remained in an incurable condition, even after the change in their circumstances. Why are you troubled and distracted because such a person is cast out and crucified and the release of Barabbas the robber was demanded, and the depraved populace clamoured for the preservation of the murderer "the Son of man came eating and drinking and diately after his birth a wanderer and a fugitive? known who this woman is which speaketh unto their throats, the sword was driven through such another is put into his place? Christ was Him an adversary of God, and a gluttonous, rather than of the Saviour and benefactor, they say behold a gluttonous man and a wine-How many think you then stumbled at these bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners."6 things? how many were destroyed? But I And when he was conversing with the harlot must carry my argument yet further back. they called Him a false prophet; "For had Did not He who was crucified become imme- He been a prophet," one said, "He would have was He not from the very cradle removed with Him;" in fact every day they sharpened their the whole household into a strange land, taking teeth against Him. And not only did the Jews that long journey into a barbarous region? And thus oppose Him, but even those who were this removal gave occasion to torrents of blood, reputed to be his brethren were not sincerely and cruel murder and slaughter, and all the attached to Him, but even out of his own famchildren of tender age were cut to pieces just ily opposition was kindled against Him. See as if they had been soldiers arrayed in battle, at least how they also themselves were perand infants torn from the breast were handed verted, from the evangelist adding the remark over to death, and even when the milk was in "for neither did His brethren believe on Him."

4. But since you call to mind many who their necks. What could be more distressing were offended and went astray, how many of than this tragedy? And these things were the disciples do you suppose were offended at done by him who sought to destroy Jesus, yet the time of the crucifixion? One betrayed the long-suffering God endured this tragical Him, the others took to flight, one denied Him, cruelty, which caused so much bloodshed, and and when all had abandoned Him He was led forbore to prevent it although He had the away bound without companions. How many power, displaying his long-suffering for some in- then think you who had lately seen Him workscrutably wise purpose. And when Jesus had ing His miracles, raising the dead, cleansing returned from the foreign land and was grown lepers, casting out devils, multiplying loaves, up, war was rekindled against him on every and doing all other kinds of wonderful deeds, side. First of all the disciples of John were were offended at that season, when they beheld envious of Him and tried to slander Him, al- Him led away and bound, surrounded by comthough John himself behaved reverently to mon soldiers, and followed by Jewish priests Him, and they said "He who was with thee making a tumult and uproar; alone in the beyond Jordan, behold the same baptizeth and midst hemmed in by all his enemies, and the all men come to Him." For these were the traitor standing by and exulting in his deed? words of men who were already irritated, and And what was the effect think you when He agitated by ill-will, and consumed by that pas- was being scourged? and probably a vast mulsion. For the same reason also one of the distitude was present. For it was an illustrious ciples who said these things disputed with a festival which brought all together, and this certain Jew and raised a contentious argument drama of iniquity was enacted in the capital about purifying, comparing one kind of baptism city, and in the very middle of the day. How with another, the baptism of John with that of many think you who were present then were the disciples of Christ. "For there arose" it offended when they saw Him bound, scourged, is said, "a questioning on the part of John's streaming with blood, examined before the disciples with a certain Jew about purifying." governor's tribunal, and not one of His disci-And when He began to work miracles how ples standing by? What was the effect again many calumniators He had! Some called Him when He was subjected to those manifold a Samaritan and demoniac saying "Thou art a kinds of mockery, successively repeated, when Samaritan and hast a Devil 5,3 others "a de- they crowned Him with thorns, then arrayed ceiver," saying "This man is not of God but Him in a gorgeous robe, then put a reed in deceiveth the multitude "4 others "a sorcerer" His hand, then fell down and worshipped saying "He casteth out devils through Beelze- Him, setting in motion every species of ribaldbub the prince of the Devils" and they continu-ry and derision? How many think you were ally said these things against Him and called offended, how many bewildered, how many perplexed when they smote Him on the cheek and said "prophesy unto us thou Christ who is He that smote thee?" and when they led to the cross, having the marks of the scourge upon His back, and was fastened to the wood, how many think you were offended? For not even then were those savage beasts softened, but became more furious than before, and the tragedy became more intense, and the ribaldry increased. For some said "Ah! thou that destroyest the temple, and in three days buildest it up;" and some, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." 2

¹ John iii, 26, 21,00 hi ii. 25, St.Chrysostom here follows the same reading which is found in the three oldestextant MSS, of the New Testament, the Smaitte, Vatican and Alexandrian. The testus receptus has será 'Ivodaiow' with the Jews'' instead of será 'Ivodaiow' with a Jew.'' 3 John viii, 48. 5 Matt. ix. 34.

⁶ Luke vii. 34.

8 John vii. 5.

And others said "If thou art the Son of God come down from the cross and we will believe thee."3

Again when they insulted Him by offering Him gall and vinegar on the sponge how many think you were offended? or when the robbers reviled Him? or when as I have already said, they made that dreadful and monstrous assertion that the robber and housebreaker, the man laden with the crime of murder deserved to be released rather than Jesus, and having received permission from the judge to make their choice preferred Barabbas, desiring not only to crucify Christ, but also to involve Him in infamy? For they thought that by these means they should be able to manufacture the belief that He was worse than the robber, and such a great transgressor that neither on the plea of mercy, nor of the privilege of the Festival was it possible to save Him. For they did everything with a view to slander His fame; which also was the reason why they crucified the two robbers with Him. Nevertheless the truth was not obscured, but shone forth all the more clearly. And they accused Him of usurping kingly power saying "Every one who maketh himself a king is not a friend of Cæsar " 4 bringhad not where to lay his head. Moreover they brought a calumnious accusation of blasphemy against Him. For the High Priest rent his clothes saying "He hath spoken blasphemy; what further need have we of witnesses?" 5 And what was the nature of his death? was it not a violent one? was it not the death of capital offenders? of execrable criminals? was it not of the vilest kind? was it not the death of those who have perpetrated the worst offences, and are not worthy to draw even their last breath upon the earth? And then as to the manner

Him hither and thither, and spent the whole of his burial, was it not accomplished as a matday in scoffs and abuse, and ribaldry and deri- ter of favour? For a certain one came and sion in the midst of the Jewish assembly? and begged for his body. Thus not even he who when the servant of the High-Priest dealt Him buried Him belonged to his own friends, to a blow; and when the soldiers parted His gar- those whom He had benefited, to his disciples, ments amongst them and when He was led up to those who had enjoyed such free and salutary intercourse with Him, for all had taken to flight, all had hurried away from Him. And that base suspicion which his enemies contrived in consequence of the resurrection when they said "His disciples came and stole Him "6 how many think you were offended, how many for a time upset by that? For the story prevailed at that time, although it was a fabrication, and was bought for money; nevertheless it held its ground amongst some people, after the seals (of the sepulchre were broken) 7 after the manifest appearance of the truth. For the multitude did not know the prediction of the resurrection (and no wonder), inasmuch as even his disciples did not understand it; for we read "they did not know that He must rise again from the dead." 8 How many therefore think you were offended in those days? And yet the long-suffering God patiently endured, ordering all things according to His own inscrutable

5. Then again after those days the disciples continued to live in hiding and secrecy, being fugitives full of fear and trembling, continually shifting from place to place, and even when they began to appear after fifty days, and to work miracles, they did not enjoy perfect security; but even after those events there were innumerable stumbling-blocks to offend the weaker brethren, when they were scourged, when the Church was distressed, when they themselves were driven away, and their enemies had the upper hand in many places, and raised tumults. For when they had acquired much confidence by means of the miracles which they wrought, then the death of Stephen again caused a severe persecution, and dispersed them all, ing this charge of usurpation against one who and involved the Church in confusion; and the disciples were again alarmed, fugitive, and distressed. And yet the Church continually grew, when it flourished by means of the signs which were wrought and became illustrious from the manner of its introduction. One disciple for example was let down through a window, and so escaped the hands of the ruler; others were brought out of prison by an angel and so released from their fetters; others were received into the houses of common people and artisans when they were driven out by those in authority; they were courteously treated in every way, by female sellers of purple, by tentmakers, and

¹ Matt, xxvii, 40. ² Matt, xxvii, 42. ³ Matt, xxvii, 40. ⁴ John xix, 12. The latter part of the sentence, which is not correctly quoted, was probably suggested by the words immediately preceding, "if thou let this man go, thou art not Cessar's friend." ⁵ Matt, xxvi. 65.

⁶ Matt. xxviii. 13.
7 These words in brackets are not in the original, but must be understood, to make sense of the passage.

8 John xx. 9.

tanners dwelling in the outskirts of the cities, and it does not very seriously injure me. amidst alternate trials, and respites from trial, the fabric of the Church was wrought, and they who once stumbled were afterwards set upright, some to me, if it were not for the benefit to be reckon up the good things with the painful, the assistance of physicians, and of a whole-you will see that many events have occurred some climate, and an abundant supply of the which if not positive signs and wonders do yet necessaries of life, consider how great an agthe great providence and succour of God. But Wherefore I beseech you, dear lady, to employ that you may not hear everything from me various and skilled physicians, and to take without any trouble, I leave this as thy task, medicines which avail to correct these condithat you may reckon up everything accurately tions. For a few days ago when I suffered from and compare them with the misfortunes, and a tendency to vomiting, owing to the state of by occupying yourself with this good employ- the atmosphere, I had recourse amongst other ment may divert your mind from despondency; remedies to the drug which was sent me by my for you will derive much consolation from this most discreet mistress Syncletion, and I found your blessed household. May you continue in to make use of this remedy also yourself and good health and good spirits, most reverend and to arrange that some more of it may be sent to divinely favoured lady.

ing, but in serenity and cheerfulness.

TO OLYMPIAS.

and by the sea shore. Frequently moreover in anticipation of these things I have devised they did not dare to appear in the middle of many plans for averting the mischief which the towns; and if they did venture there them- might arise from them; keeping up a constant selves their entertainers did not. And thus fire, setting screens about the chamber in and they who wandered away were brought derived; for as long as I remain indoors I am back, and the ruined places were built up more not severely distressed by the cold; but if I am firmly than before. For this cause when Paul compelled to go out a little, and come in conprayed that the preaching of the word might tact with the outer air, I suffer no small damproceed by a smooth course only, God rich in age. Wherefore I beseech thee dear lady, wisdom and resource did not yield to His dis- and entreat thee as a very great favour to pay ciple; nay even when many times invoked he great attention to the restoration of thy bodily would not consent but said "my grace is suffi- health. For dejection causes sickness; and cient for thee, for my strength is made perfect when the body is exhausted and enfeebled, and in weakness." If then even now you will remains in a neglected condition, deprived of resemble signs, and are unspeakable proofs of gravation of distress is occasioned thereby. that no more than three days' application of it Pray say many kind words from me to all cured my infirmity. I beseech you therefore me. For having again felt somewhat upset, I If you wish me to write long letters inform again had recourse to it, and completely cured me of this, and pray do not deceive me by say- my disorder; for it allays the deep internal ing that you have thrown off all despondency, inflammation, draws out moisture on the skin, and are enjoying a season of rest. For letters causes a moderate degree of warmth, infuses are a remedy of the proper kind to produce no little vigor, and excites an appetite for great cheerfulness in thee, and you will contin- food; and all these effects I experienced in ually see letters from me. And when you write the course of a few days. Let then my most to me again do not say "I have much comfort honoured lord the Count Theophilus be exfrom your letters, for this I know of myself, horted to take means to send some of this to but tell me that you have as much as I wish me again. And do not be distressed at my you to have, that you are not confounded with wintering here, for I am in a much more comsorrow, that you do not pass your time in weep- fortable and sounder state of health than I was last year; so that if you also would take the requisite care of yourself, you would be in a far more satisfactory condition. Now if you say that your ailments have been produced by despondency how is it that you again ask for Do not be anxious on my behalf, nor rack letters from me, seeing that you have not deyourself with solicitude, on account of the rived any benefit from them in the direction of severity of the winter, and the weakness of my cheerfulness, but have sunk so deeply under digestion, and the incursions of the Isaurians, the tyranny of despondency as even to desire For the winter is only what it is wont to be in to depart out of this world. Are you ignorant Armenia; nothing more need be said about it; how great a reward even of sickness awaits one who has a thankful spirit? Have I not often, both in person, and through letters, dissafe." 1

Nothing, Olympias, redounds so much to the table of brotherly kindness, they were all overcredit of any one as patient endurance in suf- whelmed; and blood, and wine, the cups and fering. For this is indeed the queen of virtues, the ceiling, the table, and the dust, and the and the perfection of crowns; and as it excels limbs of his children, were all mingled together, all other forms of righteousness, so this partic- Nevertheless when he heard these things, and ular species of it is more glorious than the rest. others before these which were also distressing; Perhaps what I have said seems obscure; I for they too had perished in a distressing way; will therefore try to make it clearer. What flocks and whole herds had been destroyed, the then is it that I affirm? Not the spoliation of latter having been consumed by fire sent down goods, even if one were to be stripped bare of from heaven, (so said the evil messenger of this all one's possessions, not the loss of honours, nor expulsion from one's country, and transportation to a distant land, nor the strain of as well as the shepherds themselves; neverthelabour and toil, nor imprisonment, and bond-less I say when he saw this great storm stirred age, nor reproaches, and abuse, and scoffings up in a brief moment of time affecting his lands, (not indeed that you are to think the courage- his house, his cattle, and his children, when he ous endurance of such things a slight kind of saw billow following billow, and long lines of fortitude, as Jeremiah that great and eminent rocks, and the darkness was profound, and the prophet proves who was not a little distressed surging waves unbearable, even then he was by this kind of trial); 2 yet not even this, nor not tortured by despondency, and scarcely the loss of children, even should they be torn seemed to feel the things which had happened, from us in one fell swoop, nor the perpetual save so far as he was a man and a father. But assaults of enemies, nor anything else of that when he was delivered over to sickness and nature, no, nor even the head and crown of sores, then did he also long for death, then did things accounted painful, namely death, terri- he also bewail himself and lament, so that you ble and loathsome though it be, is so oppressive may understand how this kind of suffering is as infirmity of body. And this is proved by the more severe than all others, and this form of greatest hero of endurance,3 who, when he was patience the highest of all. Nor is the Devil encompassed by bodily sickness, thought death himself unaware of this fact; for when after would be a release from the calamities which having set in motion all these trials he perwere depressing him; and when he underwent ceived that the hero remained untroubled and all the other sufferings, was not sensible of undismayed he rushed to this as the greatest them, although he received blow after blow, contest of all, saying that all the other calamiand at last a deadly one. For it was no slight ties were bearable, as loss of child, or property, matter, but rather an evidence of the most or anything else (for this is what is meant by malignant cruelty on the part of his enemy in the expression "skin for skin" 4) but the deadly dealing with one who was no novice in suffer- blow was when pain was inflicted on a man's ing, nor entering the lists for the first time, body. And therefore when he had been worsted but already exhausted with the frequent repe- after this contest, he had no longer a word to tition of assaults, to inflict upon him that deadly utter, although on former occasions he had blow, the destruction of his children, so cruelly made the most strenuous and shameless reinflicted moreover that all of either sex were sistance. In this instance however he found destroyed at the same moment in early youth that he could not invent any further shameless and by a violent end, and so instantaneous was device, but hid his face and retreated. their death that it involved their burial also.

coursed to you concerning this theme? But For their father neither saw them laid upon a since the pressure of business perhaps, or the bed, nor kissed their hands, nor heard their peculiar nature of your sickness, and the quick last words, nor touched their hands and knees, succession of changes in your condition do not nor did he shut their mouths, or close their permit you to retain what I have said constantly eves when they were about to die, acts which and clearly in your mind, listen once more tend not a little to console parents who are whilst I try to heal the wounds of thy despon- being parted from their children; neither did dency by repeating the same incantations: he follow some of them to burial, and find "for to write the same things," it is said, "to others on his return home to console him for me indeed is not grievous, and for you it is those who had departed; but he heard that as they were reclining on their couches at a ban-2. What is it then which I say and write? quet, a banquet full of love, not of excess, a

3. Think not however that it is an excuse to justify you in desiring death, that Job desired when he was accusing others of another very . more necessary for your sake." 2 For in pro- ment is plain from the case of Job, who was come purified, the longer the merchant makes portant ministry, and made the circuit of the his voyage on the sea, the larger is the freight world with Paul passed not two or three days, labour now allotted to you is a slight one, but succession in ill health, his body being very possessed a dwelling which he shared with all which Paul himself had enjoyed from his Mascheerfully endured poverty, and infirmity, and the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet me "10 the just, shining far above the brightness of the many times) that I might be delivered from sun, and it is the greatest means of purification this thorn." And then when he did not obfor those who have sinned. On this account tain his petition, having learned the benefit of Paul delivers the man who had made the in- the trial, he held his peace, and rejoiced at cestuous marriage to "destruction of the flesh," purifying him by this means. For as a proof that what was done did purify even from so are set fast in bed, do not consider your life great a stain hear his words "that his spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord." 5 And it, not being able to bear his sufferings. For awful sin, that of partaking unworthily of the consider the time when he desired it, and the holy table and those secret mysteries, and had disposition of his circumstances—the law was said that such a person will be "guilty of the not given, the prophets had not appeared, grace body and blood of the Lord," 6 observe how he had not been shed forth as it was afterwards, says that they also are purified from that grievnor had he the advantage of any other kind of ous stain—"therefore are many weak and philosophy. For as a proof that more is desickly among you." And then by way of manded from us than from those who lived proving that they will not be confined to this then, and that harder tasks are assigned to us, condition of punishment, but that some profit listen to Christ, when He says "Except your will be derived from it, namely release from righteousness exceed the righteousness of the the penalties to which the sin is liable, he Scribes and Pharisees ye shall in no case enter added: "for if we would judge ourselves, we into the kingdom of Heaven." Do not think should not be judged. But now when we are therefore that to pray for death now is exempt judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we from blame, but hearken to the voice of St. should not be condemned with the world."8 Paul when he says "To depart and to be with Moreover that they who have lived very right-Christ is far better, but to abide in the flesh is eously derive much benefit from such chastiseportion as the strain of the affliction is in- more illustrious after it than before, and from creased are the garlands of victory multiplied; the case of Timothy, who although he was such in proportion as the gold is heated does it be- a good man, and entrusted with such an imwhich he collects. Do not then think that the nor ten or twenty, or a hundred, but many in rather that it is higher than all which you have seriously enfeebled. Paul shows this where he undergone, I mean that which consists in in- said "Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, firmity of body. For in the case of Lazarus 3 and thine often infirmities." And he who (and although I may have often said this to raised the dead did not cure this man's infirmity. you, it nowise hinders me from saying it now) but left him in the furnace of his sickness so this bodily infirmity availed for his salvation; that he might therefrom contract a very great and he departed to the bosom of the man who abundance of confidence. For the lessons who passed by,4 and was continually shifting ter, and the training which he had received his home on account of God's command, and from Him, he imparted to his disciple. For sacrificed his own son, his only begotten, who although he was not subjected to bodily infirmhad been given him in extreme old age; all ity, yet he was buffeted by trials not less sethough Lazarus had done none of these things vere, which inflicted much physical pain. "For yet he obtained this blessing inasmuch as he there was given unto me" he says "a thorn in friendlessness. For this is so great a good to meaning by this the blows, the bonds, the those who bear anything bravely that it releases chains, the imprisonments, the being dragged any one who may have committed the greatest about, and maltreated, and tortured by the sins from the heaviest burden of them; or if scourges of public executioners. Wherefore any one is an upright and just man it becomes also being unable to bear the pain occasioned an additional ground of the greatest confi- to the body by these things "for this I bedence. For it is a bright wreath of victory for sought the Lord thrice (thrice here meaning the things which happened unto him.

Therefore even if you remain at home, and

¹ Matt. v. 20. ² Phil. i. 23, 24. ³ Luke xvi. ⁴ Referring to the hospitality of Abraham as illustrated by his reception of the divine visitors, Gen. xviii.

⁶ r Cor, xi, 27.
7 r Cor, xi, 30.
9 r Tim. v, 23.
10 r 2 Cor, xii, 31, 32.
10 r 2 Cor, xii, 7. The word rendered "thorn" more properly similar a "stake;" and the expression, especially when compared with Gal. iv, 14, would rather seem to indicate some painful bodily infirmity, perhaps weakness of eyesight (see Gal. iv, 19) than the indignities to which he was subjected.

an idle one; for you undergo more severe from yourself. I sent you the treatise which I a perpetual executioner residing with you.

lect the means of cure; for indeed this would permits you, recite it aloud. For if you will, of the necessaries of life, and deprived of the munications. Deem it then no small consolahere I have been constantly without this lux- that in the midst of such circumstances I have ury I am now so established in the habit that been set free from sickness and infirmity, rived from it, but am in sounder health than vexation to my enemies. It follows therefore before. And neither the inclemency of the that you should deem this the greatest enclimate, nor the desolation of the region, nor couragement, and the crown of your consolathe scarcity of provisions, nor the lack of at- tion. Do not call your household desolate. tendants, nor the unskillfulness of physicians, which has now a higher place assigned to it in nor the deprivation of the bath, nor perpetual Heaven by reason of the sufferings which it confinement in one chamber as in a prison, endures. I was grievously distressed on acand the impossibility of moving about which I count of Pelagius the monk.2 Consider therealways used continually to need, nor perpetual fore what great rewards they deserve who contact with fire and smoke, nor fear of rob- bravely hold their ground, when men who pass bers, nor a constant state of siege, nor anything their time in such a habit of discipline and else of this kind has got the better of me; on endurance are found susceptible of degradathe contrary I am in a sounder condition of tion. health than I was elsewhere, although I then received great care and attention. Taking all these things then into consideration pray shake off the despondency which now oppresses you, and do not exact inordinate and cruel penances pains than those who are dragged, and mal- have lately written, that "no one can harm treated, and tortured by executioners, inasmuch the man who does not injure himself," and as in this excessive infirmity of yours you have the letter which I now send your honour contends for the same position. I beg you there-4. Do not then now desire death, nor neg- fore to go over it constantly, and if your health not be safe. On this account Paul also ex-horts Timothy to take the greatest care of him-if you are contentious with me, and do not try self. As regards infirmity then enough has to cure yourself, and will not rouse yourself now been said. But if it is separation from from these dismal swamps of despondency in me which causes your despondency expect re- spite of the unlimited amount of advice and lease from this. And I have not said this now exhortation which you enjoy I shall not on merely to encourage you, but I am sure that it my part readily consent to send you frequent really will be the case. For if it were not destined to happen, I should long ago, so at least benefit in the way of cheerfulness from them. I think, have departed from this world, consid- How then shall I know this? not by your ering the trials which have been inflicted on merely saying so, but by a practical proof, inme. For to pass over all that occurred in asmuch as you lately affirmed that it was noth-Constantinople, after my departure thence, you ing but despondency which caused this sickmay understand what sufferings I endured on ness of yours. Since then you have yourself that long and cruel journey, most of which were made this confession I shall not believe that sufficient to produce death; what I endured you have got rid of your despondency unless after my arrival here, after my removal from you have got rid of your bodily infirmity. For Cucusus, and after my sojourn in Arabissus, if it is the former which causes your disorder, Yet I have survived all these things, and now as you say in your letter, it is obvious that I am in sound health, and great security, so when that has been dispersed the other will be that all Armenians are astonished that with removed at the same time, and when the root such a feeble and flimsy frame as mine I can has been plucked up, the branches perish with support such an intolerable amount of cold, or it; -- and if the branches continue flowering that I can breathe at all, when those who are and flourishing, and producing an unnatural habituated to the winter are suffering from it amount of fruit I cannot believe that you have in no common degree. Nevertheless I have been set free from the root of your distress. remained uninjured up to the present day, having escaped the hands of robbers who have repeatedly attacked us, and yet in daily want you again exceeding the limits of former comuse of a bath; and although since my sojourn tion that I am alive, and in good health, and I do not even long for the comfort to be de- which, as I know, is a great annoyance and ration to health.

TO OLYMPIAS.

tunes bravely but to be actually insensible to them, to overlook them, and with such little exertion to wreathe your brows with the garland prize of patience, neither labouring,

1 Here, as often elsewhere, St. Chrysostom uses the word dynamic form of the was commonly called η φιλοσοφία, the "philosophy."

2 Sc. Constantinople.

nor toiling, neither feeling distress nor causing it to others, but as it were leaping and HAVING risen from the very gates of death dancing for joy all the while, this is indeed I address this letter to the discreet lady; and I a proof of the most finished philosophy. am very glad that thy servants have met me Therefore I rejoice, and leap for joy, I am in just as I am anchoring at last in harbour. For a flutter of delight, I am insensible to my preshad they met me when I was still tossing on ent loneliness, and the other troubles which the open sea, and experiencing the cruel waves surround me, being cheered, and brightened, of bodily sickness, it would not have been easy and not a little proud on account of your for me to deceive your cautious spirit, by send-greatness of soul, and the repeated victories ing good tidings instead of sorrowful. For the which you have won, and this, not only for winter, which has become more than commonly severe, brought on a storm of internal disorder large and populous city, where you are like a even more distressing, and during the last two tower, a haven, and a wall of defence, speakmonths I have been no better than one dead, ing in the eloquent voice of example, and nay worse. For I had just enough life to be through your sufferings instructing either sex sensible of the horrors which encircled me, to strip readily for these contests, and descend and day and dawn and noon were all one night into the lists with all courage, and cheerfully to me as I spent all my time closely contined bear the toils which such contests involve. to my bed, and in spite of endless contrivances And the wonder is that without thrusting I could not shake off the pernicious effects of yourself into the forum, or occupying the pubthe cold; but although I kept a fire burning, lic centres of the city, but sitting all the while and endured a most unpleasant amount of in a small house and confined chamber you smoke, and remained cooped up in one cham-serve and anoint the combatants for the conber, covered with any quantity of wraps, and test, and whilst the sea is thus raging round not daring to set a foot outside the threshold I you, and the billows are rising to a crest, and underwent extreme sufferings, perpetual vom- crags and reefs, and rocky ledges and fierce iting supervening on headache, loss of appetite, monsters appear on every side, and everything and constant sleeplessness. Thus restlessly is shrouded in the most profound darkness did I pass through my long dark sea of troubles you, setting the sails of patience, float on with But not to distress thy mind by dwelling upon great serenity, as if it was noonday, and calm my miseries, from all of them I am now re-weather, and a favourable breeze wafting you lieved. For as soon as spring approached, and on, and so far from being overwhelmed by a little change in the temperature took place, this grievous tempest are not even sprinkled all my troubles spontaneously vanished. Nev- by the spray; and very naturally so; such is ertheless I still require great care as regards the force of virtue as a rudder. Now merdiet; therefore I put only a light load on my chants and pilots, and sailors and voyagers stomach, so that it may be able to digest it when they see clouds gathering up, or fierce easily. But it has occasioned me no little con- winds rushing down upon them, or the breakers cern to learn that my discreet mistress was seething with an abundance of foam keep their brought to the verge of death. Nevertheless vessels moored inside harbour; and if they in consideration of my great affection, and anx-chance to be tempest-tossed in the open sea iety, and solicitude for your welfare I was rethey do their best, and devise every means to lieved from this care, even before the arrival bring their ship to some anchorage, or island of your letters, many persons having come from or shore. But you, although such innumera-thence who brought me tidings of your resto-ble winds, and fierce waves burst upon you together, and the sea is heaved up from its very And now I am exceedingly glad and de- depths owing to the severity of the storm, and lighted to hear, not only that you have been some are submerged, others floating dead upon released from your infirmity, but above all that the water, others drifting naked upon planks, you bear the things which befall you so bravely, you plunging into the mid ocean of calamities calling them all but an idle tale; and, which is call all these things an idle tale, sailing on with indeed a greater matter, that you have applied a favourable breeze in the midst of the temthis name even to your bodily infirmity, which pest; and naturally so; for pilots, even if they is an evidence of a robust spirit, rich in the are infinitely wise in that science, nevertheless fruit of courage. For not only to bear misfor- have not skill sufficient to withstand every kind doing battle with the waves. But the science the disposition. Thus women have been which you have is superior to every kind of crowned victors, while men have been upset; storm—the power of a philosophic soul—which so also boys have been proclaimed conquerors, is stronger than ten thousand armies, more while aged men have been put to shame. It powerful than arms, and more secure than is indeed always fitting to admire those who towers and bulwarks. For the arms, and bul-pursue virtue, but especially when some are warks, and towers which soldiers have, are serv- found to cling to it at a time when many are iceable for the security of the body only, and deserting it. Therefore, my sweet lady, you this not always, nor in every way; but there deserve superlative admiration, inasmuch as are times when all these resources are baffled, after so many men, women, and aged persons and leave those who fly to them for refuge des- who seemed to enjoy the greatest reputation titute of protection. But thy powers do not have been turned to flight, all lying prostrate repel the weapons of barbarians, nor the de- before the eyes of the world, and this not after vices of hostile men, nor any assaults and strat- a severe onslaught, nor any alarming muster agems of that kind, but they have trampled of the enemy's force, but overthrown before under foot the constraining forces of nature, the encounter and worsted before the struggle, put down their tyranny and levelled their cityou on the contrary after so many battles and adel. And whilst ceaselessly contending with such large muster of the enemy are so far from demons, you have won countless victories, yet being unstrung, or dismayed by the number of have not received a single blow, but stand un- your adversities, that you are all the more vigwounded in the midst of a storm of darts and orous, and the increase of the contest gives turn the spears which are hurled at you back you an increase of strength. For the recollecupon those who discharge them. Such is the tion of what has been already achieved bewisdom of your art; by the sufferings which comes the ground of cheerfulness, and joy, and you undergo you take vengeance on those who greater zeal. Therefore I rejoice, and leap inflict them; by the plots of which you are for joy; for I will not cease repeating this, and the subject you put your enemies to pain, pos- taking about with me everywhere the material sessing in their malice the best foundation for of my joy; so that although my separation the materials of fame. And you, knowing these from you distresses you, yet you have this very things well yourself, and having gained percep- great consolation arising from your successful tion by experience, naturally call them all an exploits; for I also who am banished to so idle tale. For how, pray, should you not call great a distance gain no small cheerfulness them by that name, possessing as you do a from this cause,—I mean your courage. mortal body, and yet despising death as if you were hastening to quit a foreign country, and return to your own land; a chronic sufferer from the most severe infirmity, and yet more cheerfully disposed than the thriving and robust, not depressed by insults, nor elated by yourself, and demand of yourself a punish-honours and glory, the latter being a cause of ment which your enemies were not able to infinite mischief to many who after an illustri- demand from you, having thus abandoned ous career in the priesthood, and after reaching your soul to the tyranny of dejection? For extreme old age, and the most venerable hoar the letters which you sent to me by the hands hairs, have fallen into disgrace on this account, of Patricius have discovered to me the wounds and become a common spectacle of derision which have been inflicted on your mind. for those who wish to make merry. But you Wherefore also I am very sorrowful and much on the contrary, woman as you are, clothed distressed that when you ought to be using with a fragile body, and subject to these se- every exertion and making it your business to vere attacks, have not only avoided falling into expel dejection from your soul, you go about such a condition yourself, but have prevented collecting distressing thoughts, even inventing many others from so doing. They indeed be-things (so you say) which do not exist, and fore they had advanced far in the contest, even tearing yourself to pieces for no purpose, and at the very outset and starting point, have been to your very great injury. For why are you overthrown; whereas you, after having gone grieved because you could not remove me countless times round the farther turning post, from Cucusus? Yet indeed, as far as you have won a prize in every course, after playing were concerned, you did remove me, having your part in manifold kinds of wrestling and made every exertion and endeavour for this of storm; consequently they often shrink from or bodily strength, but only on the spirit and

TO OLYMPIAS.

Why do you lament? why do you belabour combats. And very naturally so; for the purpose. And even if it has not been actually wrestlings of virtue do not depend upon age, accomplished you ought not to be vexed on that account. For perhaps it seemed good to God that I should be set to run the longer double course, in order that the garland of victory might be rendered more glorious. Why then are you vexed on account of these things, in consequence of which my fame is spread abroad, when you ought to leap and dance for joy and bind wreaths upon your brow, because I have been deemed worthy of so great an honour which far exceeds my merits? Is it the desolation of this place which grieves you? Yet what can be pleasanter than my sojourn here? I have quietness, and tranquillity, plenty of leisure and good bodily health. For although the town has neither market-place nor market that is nothing to me. For all things are poured abundantly upon me as out of a flowing spring. I find my lord the Bishop here and my lord Dioscorus are constantly employed in providing for my refreshment. And the good Patricius will tell you that as far as my sojourn here is concerned I pass my time cheerfully and gladly, surrounded by atten-But if you lament the events which occurred in Casarea, here again your conduct is unworthy of yourself. For there also bright garlands of victory were woven for me, inasmuch as all were proclaiming and publishing my praises, and expressing wonder and astonishment at the ill-treatment to which I had been subjected followed by expulsion. Meanwhile however do not let any one know these things, although they are the theme of much gossip. For my lord Poanius has disclosed to me that the presbyters of Pharetrius himself 2 have arrived on the spot, who declare that they were in communion with me and had no communication or intercourse or partnership with my adversaries. Therefore to avoid upsetting them do not let any one know these things. For certainly the things which befell me were very grievous: and if I had not suffered any other distress the events which happened there would have sufficed to procure innumerable rewards for me: so extreme was the danger which I encountered. Now I beseech you to keep these matters secret, and so I will give you a short account of them, not in order to grieve you but rather to make you glad. For herein consists the material of my gain, herein consists my wealth, herein the means of getting rid of my sins-that my journey is continually encompassed by trials of this kind, and that they are inflicted upon me by persons from whom they were quite unexpected. For when I was about to enter the region of Cappadocia, having escaped from that man of Galatia, who nearly threatened me with death,3 many persons met me on the way saying "the lord Pharetrius is awaiting you, and going about in all directions for fear of missing the pleasure of meeting you, and making every possible endeavour to see you, and embrace you, and show you all manner of affectionate regard; and he has set the monasteries of men and women in motion for this purpose. Now when I heard these things I did not expect that any of them would really take place, but formed an impression in my own mind precisely the reverse: but of this I said nothing to any of those who brought me this message.

2. Now when I arrived late one evening at Cæsarea, in an exhausted and worn-out condition, being in the very height of a burning fever, faint and suffering to the last degree, I lighted upon an inn situated just at the outskirts of the city, and took great pains to find some physicians and allay this fiery fever; for it was now the height of my tertian malady. And in addition to this there was the fatigue of the journey, the toil, the strain, the total absence of attendants, the difficulty of getting supplies, the want of a physician, the wasting effects of toil, and heat and sleeplessness; thus I was well nigh a dead man when I entered the city. Then indeed I was visited by the whole body of the clergy, and the people, monks, nuns, physicians, and I had the benefit of great attention, as all paid me every kind of ministration and assistance. Yet even thus, being oppressed by the lethargy arising from the feverish heat I was in an extremely distressed condition. At length by degrees the malady was coming to an end and abating. Pharetrius however nowhere appeared; but waited for my departure, I know not with what purpose in view. When then I saw that my disorder had slightly abated I began to form plans for my journey so as to reach Cucusus, and enjoy a little repose after the calamities of the way. And whilst I was thus situated it was suddenly announced that the Isaurians 4 in countless multitudes were overrunning the district of Cæsarea, and had burnt a large village, and were most violently disposed. The tribune, having heard this, took the soldiers which he had and went out. For they were afraid lest the enemy should make an assault also upon

¹ The single course in the Grecian games was the stadium, so called because it was a stade in length. In the double course the runner had to turn the post at the extremity of the stadium and run back again.
² Pharetrius was Bishop of Cresarea, and, as the sequel shows, a malicious enemy of Chrysostom.

³ Probably Leontius, Archbishop of Ancyra in Galatia, a bitter adversary of Chrysostom.

⁴ A predatory race of barbarians who inhabited the fastnesses of Mount Taurus.

agony of alarm the very soil of their country hands of the Isaurians, provided you get clear being in jeopardy, so that even the old men away from us. For wherever you may fall, undertook the defence of the walls. While you will fall into a place of security, if only affairs were in this condition suddenly you escape our hands." Having heard and towards dawn a rabble tof monks (for so I seen these things the good Seleucia, the genmust call them, indicating their frenzy by the erous wife of my lord Ruffinus (a most attenexpression) rushed up to the house where we live friend she was to me), exhorted and were, threatening to set fire to it, and to treat entreated me to lodge at her suburban house us with the utmost violence unless we turned which was about five miles from the city and out of it. And neither the fear of the Isau- she sent some men to escort me, and so I rians, nor my own infirmity which was so departed thither. grievously afflicting me, nor anything else made them more reasonable, but they pressed me to come to an end. For as soon as on, animated by such fierce rage that even the Pharetrius knew what she had done, he pubproconsular soldiers were terrified. For they lished, as she said, many threats against her. kept threatening them with blows and boasted But when she received me into her suburban that they had shamefully beaten many of the villa I knew nothing of these things; for when proconsular soldiers. The soldiers having she came out to meet me she concealed these heard these things, sought refuge with me, and entreated and beseeched me, saying steward who was there, and ordered him to "even if we are to fall into the hands of the afford me every possible means of repose, and Isaurians deliver us from these wild beasts." When the governor heard this he hastened wishing to insult or maltreat me, he was to down to the house intending to succour me. But the monks would not pay any heed to his and thus marshal a force against them. exhortations, and in fact he was powerless. Moreover she besought me to take refuge in Perceiving the great strait in which affairs her house, which had a fortress and was imwere placed and not daring to advise me pregnable, that I might escape the hands of either to go out to certain death, or on the the bishop and monks. This however I other hand to stay indoors, owing to the ex- could not be induced to do, but remained in cessive fury of these men, he sent to Phare- the villa, knowing nothing of the plans which trius beseeching him to grant a few days were devised after these things. For even respite on account of my infirmity and the then they were not content to desist from impending danger. But even then nothing their fury against me but Pharetrius beset was effected, and on the morrow the monks the lady as she says, straitly threatening her, arrived even fiercer than before, and none of constraining and forcing her to expel me even the presbyters dared to stand by me and help from the suburbs, so that at midnight, I me, but covered with shame and blushes (for knowing nothing of these things, the lady they said that these things were done by the being unable to endure his annoyance, aninstructions of Pharetrius) they concealed nounced, without my knowledge, that the themselves and lay hid, not responding even barbarians were at hand, for she was ashamed when I called them. What need to make a to mention the compulsion which she had long story? Although such great terrors were undergone. So in the middle of the night imminent, and death well nigh a certainty, and the fever was oppressing me (for I had ing roused me from sleep, exclaimed with a not yet got relief from the troubles arising from that cause) I flung myself at high noon into the litter, and was carried out thence, all the people shricking and howling, and imprecating curses on the perpetrator of these deeds, whilst every one wailed and lamented. But when I got outside the city, some of the clergy also gradually came out and escorted me, mourning as they went. And having heard some persons say "Where are you leading him away to manifest death?" one of those who was warmly attached to me said the city, and all were in terror, and in an to me "Depart I entreat you; fall into the

3. But not even there was this plot against things from me, but disclosed them to her if any of the monks should make an assault, collect the labourers from her other farms, Evethius the presbyter came to me, and havloud voice "Get up, I pray you, the barbarians are upon us, they are close at hand," Imagine my condition on hearing this! Then, when I said to him what must we do? we cannot take refuge in the city lest we suffer worse things than what the Isaurians are going to do to us, he compelled me to go out. It was midnight, a dark, murky night without a moon-a circumstance which filled up the measure of our perplexity-we had no companion, no assistant, for all had deserted us. Nevertheless under the pressure of fear and in the expectation of immediate death, I got up, suffering as I was, having ordered torches to be lit. These however the presby-ment should remain, know for certain that I struction, after which I dismounted, and was in official positions, the learned men who were to dispel your affliction you do the devil's ex-vicars, and ex-governors, the ex-tribunes will, by increasing your despondency and and indeed the whole people visited me every sorrow. Are you not aware how great an evil day, paid me great attention, and treated me despondency is?

² There are many instances in the early history of the Eastern Church of similar fanatical fury on the part of monks.

danger.

this from your prudence, but rather put down have derived much advantage therefrom. I those who talk about it. But if you are dishave also a third letter ready, similar to these, tressed lest the consequences of my ill-treat- which I do not choose to send at the present

ter ordered to be put out, for fear as he said have shaken myself entirely free from them, lest the barbarians should be attracted by the and that I am in better bodily health than light and attack us; so the torches were ex- when I was sojourning in Cæsarea. And why tinguished. Then the mule which carried my do you dread the cold? for a suitable dwelllitter fell on its knees, the road being rugged, ing has been prepared for me, and my lord and steep and stony, and I who was inside Dioscorus does and arranges everything so was thrown down and narrowly escaped de- as to prevent my having the least sensation of cold. And if I may form a conjecture from dragged along on foot, being held fast by the outset of my experience, the climate now Evethius the presbyter (for he also had seems to me oriental in character, no less alighted from his mule), and so I plodded on, than that of Antioch. So great is the warmth, led, or rather hauled by the hand, for to walk so pleasant is the temperature. But you have was impossible through such a difficult coungrieved me much by saying, "perhaps you try, and amongst steep mountains in the mid- are annoyed with me as having neglected dle of the night. Imagine what my sufferings you," yet I despatched a letter many days ago must have been, encompassed as I was by to your honour begging you not to move me such calamities, and oppressed by the fever, from this place. Now I have had occasion ignorant of the plans which had been made, to consider that you need a strong defence but in terror of the barbarians and trembling and much toil and labour to be able to make with the expectation of falling into their a satisfactory apology for this expression. hands. Do you not think that these suffer- But perhaps you have made a partial apology, ings alone, even if nothing else besides had by saying "I am generally occupied in think-befallen me, would avail to blot out many of ing how to increase my affliction." But I in my sins, and afford ample material for ob- my turn reckon it as the greatest accusation taining praise with God? Now the reason of that you should say 'I take a pride in inall this, at least as I suppose, was, that as creasing my sorrow by thinking over it:" for soon as I arrived in Cæsarea, those who were when you ought to make every possible effort as the apple of their eye; I suppose these As to the Isaurians, dismiss your fears in things irritated Pharetrius and that the envy future concerning them: for they have rewhich drove me from Constantinople did not turned into their own country: and the govrefrain from pursuing me even here. This ernor has done everything necessary in this at least is what I suppose, for I do not posi-respect; and I am in far greater security here tively declare it but only suspect it to be the than when I was in Cæsarea. For in future I have no one to fear so much as the bishops, And what is one to say about the other with a few exceptions. On account of the events which happened on the way, the fears Isaurians then fear nothing: for they have and the perils? as I recall them day by day, retreated, and when winter has set in they are and continually bear them in mind, I am confined to their own homes, although they elated with pleasure, I leap for joy as one may possibly come out after Whitsuntide. who has a great treasure laid up in store for And what do you mean by saying that you him; for such is my position and feeling have not the benefit of letters from me? I about them. Wherefore also I beseech your have already sent you three long letters, one Honour to rejoice at these things, to be glad, by the proconsular soldiers, one by Antonius, and leap for joy, and to glorify God who has and the third by Anatolius my servant; two counted me worthy to suffer such things, of them were a salutary medicine capable of And I beseech you to keep these matters to reviving any one who was desponding or yourself, and not to divulge them to any one, stumbling, and conducting him into a healthy although for the most part the proconsular state of serenity. When you have received soldiers can fill all the city (with the story) as these letters then go over them constantly and they themselves have undergone extreme thoroughly, and you will perceive their force and enjoy experience of their healing power, 4. Nevertheless do not let any one know and benefit, and will inform me that you time having been exceedingly vexed at your cealed have informed me that Moduarius the saying "I accumulate sorrowful thoughts, deacon has come bringing word that Unilas, even inventing things which do not exist," an that excellent bishop whom I lately ordained utterance unworthy of yourself, which makes and sent into Gothia, has been laid to rest, me hide my head for shame. But read those after achieving many great exploits: and the letters which I have sent, and you will no deacon was the bearer of a letter from the longer say these things, even if you are infi- king of the Goths begging that a bishop nitely bent on being despondent. I at least might be sent to them. Since then I see no have not ceased, and will not cease saying other means of meeting the threatened catasthat sin is the only thing which is really dis- trophe with a view to its correction save delay tressing; and that all other things are but and postponement (as it is impossible for dust and smoke. For what is there grievous them to sail into the Bosporus or into those in inhabiting a prison and wearing a chain? or in being ill-treated when it is the occasion put them off for a time on account of the of so much gain? or why should exile be winter season: and do not by any means grievous or confiscation of goods? These are mere words, destitute of any terrible reality, words void of sorrow. For if you speak of death you only mention that which is the debt of nature: a thing which must in any case be undergone even if no one hastens it: and if you speak of exile you mention that who have no right to appoint, and the other which only involves a change of country and the sight of many cities: or if you speak of confiscation of goods you mention what is only freedom and emancipation from care.

5. Do not cease to pay attention to Maruthas the Bishop, as far as it concerns you, so as to lift him up out of the pit.2 For I have special need of him on account of the affairs in Persia. And ascertain from him, if you hasten out to me it would be of the greatest can, what has been accomplished there through his agency, and for what purpose he has come home, and let me know whether you have delivered the two epistles which I sent case of money, and actually occurred in the to him: and if he is willing to write to me, I will write again to him: but if he should not good in the case of practical affairs. For as be willing let him at least signify to your that poor woman when she had cast two mites prudence whether any thing more has taken into the treasury surpassed all those who had place there, and whether he is likely to accomplish anything by going thither again. For on this account I was anxious to have an interview with him. Nevertheless let all things which depend on you be done, and take care to fulfill your own part, even if all men are rushing headlong to ruin. For your reward will thus be perfected. By all means therefore make friends with him as far as it is pos- depart to his own country, and to set things sible. I beseech you not to neglect what I am about to say, but to pay diligent heed to As his presence therefore is of great service it. The Marsian and Gothic monks where the (for he is a devout, inflexible, and zealous Bishop Serapion has constantly been con- man) I have urged him to depart and to re-parts at the present time), take measures to neglect this: for it is a matter of the greatest importance. For there are two things which would specially distress me if they were to happen, which God forbid: one is that a bishop should be appointed by these men who have wrought such great wickedness,3 and is that any one should be made without consideration. For you know yourself that they are not anxious to create some worthy man bishop, and if this should take place, which heaven forbid, you are aware what will follow. Use all diligence therefore to prevent either of these things happening: but if it were possible for Moduarius quietly and secretly to advantage. But if this is not possible let what is practicable under the circumstances be done. For that which takes place in the case of the widow in the gospel, also holds cast in more, because she used up her whole substance: even so they who devote themselves to the work in hand with all their might discharge it completely, so far as they are concerned, even if nothing results from it, and they have their reward perfected.

I am very grateful to Hilarius the bishop: for he wrote to me asking to be allowed to in order there, and then to come back again. turn speedily. Take care then that the letter is quickly and safely delivered to him and not cast on one side: for he eagerly and earnestly begged for letters from me, and his presence is a great benefit. By all means

A short passage is omitted here in the translation. It refers to the transaction of some business between Olympias and an un-known bishop, Heracleides. The exact meaning is obscure, in the absence of any clue from historical knowledge of the incident.

2 He means, "to detach him from the influence of the hostile party." Maruthas was Bishop of Martyropolis in Persia. He had taken part in one of the synods at Constantinople which condemned Chrysostom; had returned to Persia, and after doing good work there had revisited Constantinople, and Chrysostom seems to have hopes of reclaiming him to his side.

³ i. e., the party at Constantinople hostile to Chrysostom, and the Archbishop Atticus whom they had placed in the See after the death of Arsacius the first intruder.

hands of some discreet man who has a head on his shoulders.

TO OLYMPIAS.

NOTHING strange or unnatural has befallen your Piety, but only what is quite natural and consonant to reason, that by a constant succession of trials the sinews of your soul should become more braced, and your zeal and energy for the struggle increased, and that you should therefrom derive much joy. For such is the nature of affliction; -when it lays hold of a brave and noble soul, this is what it is wont to effect. And as the fire makes the piece of gold, when it is applied to it, of better proof; so also affliction when it visits golden characters renders them purer and more proven. Wherefore also Paul said "affliction worketh patience, and patience probation." For these reasons I also rejoice and leap for joy, and derive the greatest consolation of this my solitude from a consideration of thy fortitude. On this account, even though innumerable wolves encompass thee, and many crowds of wicked doers, I fear nothing; but I pray both that existing temptations may be suppressed, and that others may not occur, thus fulfilling the Lord's precept who bids us pray that we may not enter into temptation; but if it should be permitted to happen again I have good confidence concerning thy golden soul, which acquires therefrom the greatest riches for itself. For by what means will they be able to terrify you, who dare everything to their own destruction? Will it be by loss of goods? But I know well that these are counted by thee as dust and cheaper than dirt. Or shall it be by expulsion from country and home. But you know how to dwell in great and populous cities as if they were uninhabited, spending the whole of your time in quietness and rest, and treading worldly ambitions under foot. Or do they threaten death? This also you have constantly practiced by anticipation, and if they should drag you to slaughter, they will be dragging a body which is already dead. What need to speak more at length? No one will be able to do anything to thee of this kind which he will not find you have already abundantly made yourself undergo. For by always walking in the narrow and strait path, you have trained yourself in all these things, Wherefore having practised this most beautitherefore have a care of the letters; and if ful art in the course of your training, you Helladius the presbyter be not on the spot see now shine forth the more gloriously in the that they are delivered to my friends by the contest itself, not only being in no wise disturbed by the things which are happening, but rather elated, and leaping and dancing for joy. For the contests which you have anticipated in your training you now undertake with much ease, although it be in a woman's body, feebler than a cobweb, treading under foot with derisive scorn the fury of lusty men gnashing their teeth upon you; being ready to suffer even worse things than they prepare for you. Happy and thrice happy are you by reason of the crowns of victory to be won, but even more by reason of the contest itself. For such is the nature of these struggles, even before the prizes are given even in the midst of strife they have their recompense and reward;—the pleasure which you are now enjoying, the cheerfulness, the courage, the endurance, the patience, the power which is proof against capture and conquest and rises superior to all things; the perfect training which renders you insensible to any terror at the hands of any one, the power of standing on a rock in the midst of mighty billows of tribulation, and sailing in a calm with a favourable breeze when the sea is raging around you. These are the prizes of affliction even in this world before the kingdom of heaven is won. For I know very well that, even at this present time, being elated with joy, thou dost not consider thyself clothed with a body, but if an opportunity should summon thee to do it, thou wouldst divest thyself of it more readily than others do of the raiment which they wear. Rejoice therefore and be glad both for thyself, and for those who have died a blessed death, not in a bed, nor in a house, but in prison, and chains, and torment; and bewail those only who do these things, and grieve for them. But since you also wish to be informed concerning my bodily health, let me tell you that I have been relieved for the present from the infirmity which was lately oppressing me, and am now in a more comfortable condition: the only fear is lest the winter on its return should again make havoc of my feeble digestion; and as far as the Isaurians are concerned we now enjoy great security.

> The following letter is added as a specimen, out of a very large number, of the natural, almost playful style, and tone of warm affection, in which Chrysostom wrote to his intimate friends. All his extant letters were written during his exile, and therefore there is much repetition in their contents, and great general similarity of character.

¹ Rom. v. 3, 4.

TO CASTUS, VALERIUS, DIOPHAN-TUS, CYRIACUS,

PRESBYTERS OF ANTIOCH.

I AM not surprised that you call my long letter a short one. For this is just the way with lovers; they do not recognize such a thing as satiety, they will not admit such a thing as satisfaction, but the more they receive from the objects of their love the more they seek. Therefore, even if the letter which you have received had been ten times as large as the former one, it would not have escaped the epithet of "brief;" in fact it would have been called a small letter, and not only would it have been so called, but it would have actually seemed such in your eyes. Hence I also in my turn am never satisfied with the measure of affection for me which you have attained, but am always seeking to make additions to your love-draught, and daily demanding the discharge of your love debt which is always being paid, and yet is always owing (for it is written, "owe no man anything but to love one another "1). I am indeed continually receiving what I ask in great abundance, yet never think that I have received the whole. Do not cease then to pay down this goodly debt, which has a twofold pleasure. For those who pay, and those who receive, derive equal enjoyment, inasmuch as they are both alike enriched by the payment; which in the case of money is an impossibility, for there the one who pays becomes poorer, and only the man who has received is richer. But this is not what commonly happens in the covenant of love. For he who pays it is not less bereft of it, as in the case of money when it is transferred to the receiver; but payment of love makes him who pays richer than before. Knowing these things then, O Sirs, most honoured and devout, cease not continually displaying this excellent disposition towards me. For although you need no exhortation for this purpose from me yet as I greatly long for your love I remind you, even when you need it not, both in order that you may constantly write to me, and also inform me of the state of your health. For even if you do not need any one to remind you on this account, I shall not desist from continually seeking this at your hands; as it is a matter which I have very much at heart. That it is a difficult task owing both to the season of the year, and the difficulty of the journey, and the scarcity of travellers who will do this service for you I am well aware: nevertheless as far as is possible and practicable in the midst of so much difficulty, we exhort you to write constantly, and crave this favour from your love.

¹ Rom. xiii, 8.

CORRESPONDENCE OF ST. CHRYSOS-TOM WITH THE BISHOP OF ROME.

TRANSLATED WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

INTRODUCTION TO THE CORRESPONDENCE OF ST. CHRYSOSTOM, AND THE CHURCH AT CONSTANTINOPLE, WITH INNOCENT, BISHOP OF ROME.

Of these four letters the last three were written during the final exile of St. Chrysostom from Constantinople. The first was written a few weeks before his departure. The complication of events which led to that exile cannot be unfolded here. The student will find a full account of them in most historians of this period of the Church, both ancient and modern, and in the Life of St. Chrysostom by the editor of this volume chapters XVI—XIX. It must suffice to say here that Theophilus Patriarch of Alexandria having been summoned by an imperial mandate to Constantinople to be tried on the charge of having cruelly ill-treated certain Egyptian monks, formed a cabal amongst the enemies of St. Chrysostom, and artfully contrived to change his own position from that of the accused into that of the accuser. His devices were in the end only too successful, and in the summer of the year 404 St. Chrysostom was driven from his see, never to return.

The first letter of St. Chrysostom seems to have been written soon after Easter 404 and refers to the events immediately preceding his expulsion.

The second was written, as we learn from the letter itself, after he had entered the third year of his exile, probably near the close of the year 406.

Copies of the first letter were addressed also to Venerius Bishop of Milan, and Chromatius Bishop of Aquileia. It is interesting therefore as indicating the relation between the Eastern and Western branches of the Church at the beginning of the fifth century. On the one hand it illustrates the growing tendency of Christendom to appeal to the authority of the Western Church, especially of the Bishop of Rome, on questions of ecclesiastical discipline. The law-making, law-protecting spirit of the West is invoked to restrain the turbulence and licentiousness of the East. No jealousy is entertained of the Patriarch of the old Rome by the Patriarch of the new. But on the other hand it is to be noted that the Bishop of Rome is in no sense addressed as a supreme arbitrator: aid and sympathy are solicited from him as from an elder brother, and two other prelates of Italy are joint recipients with him of the appeal.

To Chrysostom Innocent writes, as friend to friend and bishop to brother bishop, a letter of Christian consolation and encouragement, not entering into the legal questions of the case, and not pledging himself to decisive action of any kind. In his letter to the Church of Constantinople he denounces the illegality of the late proceedings of Theophilus and his accomplices, in the strongest terms; but insists upon the necessity of convoking an ecumenical council as the only means of allaying the tempest. And it must be allowed that he did his best to accomplish this object. He wrote a letter to Honorius, the Emperor of the Western Empire, who resided at Ravenna, describing the pitiable condition of the Church at Constantinople. The Emperor issued an order for the convention of an Italian synod, and the synod, swayed no doubt by Innocent, requested Honorius to write to his brother Arcadius the Eastern Emperor urging the convention of a general council to be held in Thessalonica which would be a convenient meeting-point for the prelates of East and West. Honorius complied, and the letter was despatched under the care of a deputation from the Italian Church, consisting of five bishops, two priests and a deacon. They were the bearers also of letters from Innocent, and the Bishops of Milan and Aquileia, and of a memorial from the Italian synod, recommending that Chrysostom should be reinstated in his see before he was required to take his trial before the Council. The party hostile to Chrysostom however had now such complete sway over the court at Constantinople that the deputation never succeeded in getting an audience with the Emperor, and after suffering many insults and indignities, returned to Italy without having accomplished anything.

The letters of Innocent were probably written in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek. The Greek version is in several passages clumsy and obscure.

CORRESPONDENCE OF ST. CHRYSOSTOM WITH THE BISHOP OF ROME.

LETTER FROM ST. JOHN CHRYSOS- to show from the outset, that he came for ROME.

TO MY LORD, THE MOST REVEREND AND DI-VINELY BELOVED BISHOP INNOCENT, JOHN SENDS GREETING IN THE LORD.

letter your Piety has heard of the iniquity

TOM TO INNOCENT, BISHOP OF war and antagonism; moreover when he set foot in the great and divinely beloved Constantinople he did not enter the Church according to the custom and the law which has prevailed from ancient time, he held no intercourse with us, and admitted us to no share in his conversation, his prayers, or his society: 1. I suppose that even before receiving our but as soon as he disembarked, having hurried past the vestibule of the Church, he dewhich has been perpetrated here. For the parted and lodged somewhere outside the magnitude of our distress has left scarcely a city, and although we earnestly entreated single portion of the world uninformed of this him, and those who had come with him, to grievous tragedy: for report carrying the tid- be our guests (for everything had been made ings of what has happened to the very extremities of the earth, has everywhere caused great was suitable) neither they, nor he consented. mourning and lamentation. But inasmuch We seeing this, were in great perplexity, not as we ought not to mourn, but to restore being able to discover the cause of this unjust order, and to see by what means this most hostility; nevertheless we discharged our grievous storm of the Church may be stayed, part, doing what became us, and continually we have deemed it necessary to persuade my beseeching him to meet us and to say for lords, the most honoured and pious bishops what cause he hazarded so great a contest at Demetrius, Pansophius, Pappus and Eugen- the outset, and threw the city into such conius to leave their own churches, and venture fusion. But as he did not choose to state the on this great sea voyage, and set out on a reason, and those who accused him were long journey from home, and hasten to your urgent, our most devout Emperor summoned Charity, and, after informing you clearly of us and commanded us to go outside the walls everything, to take measures for redressing to the place where Theophilus was sojourn-the evils as speedily as possible. And with them we have sent the most honoured and they accused him of assault, and slaughter beloved of our Deacons, Paulus and Cyriacus, and countless other crimes; but knowing as but we also ourselves, in the form of a letter, we did the laws of the fathers, and paying rewill briefly instruct your Charity concerning spect and deference to the man, and having the things which have come to pass. For also his own letters which prove that law-Theophilus, who has been entrusted with the presidency of the Church in Alexandria, having been commanded to repair alone to Conshold be treated within the limits of the stantinople, certain men having brought an province, we would not accept the office of accusation against him to the most devout judge, but deprecated it with great earnest-Emperor, arrived bringing with him no small ness. But he, as if striving to aggravate the multitude of Egyptian Bishops, as if wishing former insults, having summoned my archdeacon, by a stretch of arbitrary power, as ing everything until, with all possible display the clergy to his own side; and the Churches became destitute, as the clergy in each were gradually withdrawn, and instructed to hand in petitions against us, and trained to prepare accusations. And having done this he sent and summoned us to trial, although he had not yet cleared himself of the charges brought against him, a proceeding directly contrary to the canons and to all the laws.

2. But we being aware that we were not cited to a trial (for otherwise we would have presented ourselves any number of times) but to the presence of an enemy and an adversary, as was clearly proved by all which occurred both before and after, despatched certain bishops to him, Demetrius of Pesinus, Eulysius of Apamea, Lupicinus of Appiaria,¹ and the presbyters Germanus and Severus, who replied with the moderation which became us, and said, that we did not decline to be judged, but to appear before an open the Bishops present seeing their iniquity had enemy, and manifest adversary. For how retreated into their own dioceses, flying from could one who had not yet received any bills of indictment against me, and had acted from the outset in the manner described, and severed himself from the Church, from communion, and from prayer, and was training accusers, and seducing the clergy, and desolating the Church, how, I say, could he with justice mount the throne of the judge which was not in any sense befitting him? For it is not suitable that one who belongs to Egypt should act as judge of those who are in Thrace, and this a man who is himself under an accusation, and an enemy and adversary. Nevertheless he, in no way abashed, but hurrying on to the completion of his design, although we had declared our readiness to clear ourselves of the charges in the presence of a hundred yea or a thousand bishops, and to prove ourselves innocent as indeed we are, would not consent: but in our absence, when we were appealing to a synod, and demanding a trial, and not shrinking from a hearing of our cause, but only from open enmity, he both received our accusers and absolved those who had been excommunicated by me, and from them, who had not yet cleared themselves of the offences laid to their charge, he received complaints against me, and had minutes made of the proceedings, all which things are contrary to law, and the order of the canons. But what need is there of a long story? He did not cease doing and contriv-

if the Church were already widowed, and had of arbitrary power and authority, he ejected no bishop, by means of this man seduced all us from the city and the church, when the evening was far advanced and all the people were streaming after us. Being drawn by the public informer 3 through the midst of the city, and dragged along by force I was taken down to the sea, and thrust on board ship, and made a night voyage, because I appealed to a synod for a just hearing of my cause. Who could hear these things without tears, even if he had a heart of stone?

But seeing, as I said before, that we ought not merely to lament the evils which have been done, but also to amend them, I beseech your Charity to rouse yourself and have compassion, and do everything so as to put a stop to the mischief at this point. For even after what I have mentioned he did not desist from his deeds of iniquity, but sought to renew the former attack. For when the most devout Emperor had turned out those who shamelessly rushed into the Church, and many of the incursion of these men as from a fire devouring all things, we were again invited to the city, and to the Church, from which we had been unjustly expelled, more than thirty bishops introducing us, and our most pious Emperor sending a notary for this purpose, while Theophilus immediately took to flight. For what purpose, and from what cause? When we entered the city we besought our most pious Emperor to convene a synod for prosecuting the offenders in the late transactions. Being conscious therefore of what he had done, and dreading conviction, the imperial letters having been sent in every direction, convoking all men from all quarters, Theophilus secretly at midnight flung himself into a boat, and so made his escape, taking all his company with him.

3. But even then we did not desist, supported as we were by a clear conscience, from making the same supplication again to the most devout Emperor: and he, acting as became his piety, sent to Theophilus again, summoning him from Egypt, and his associates, in order to give an account of the late proceedings, and informing him that he was not to suppose that the one-sided deeds which he had so unjustly perpetrated in our absence, and in violation of so many canons, would suffice for his defence. He did not however submit to the royal mandate, but remained at home, alleging an insurrection of the people in excuse, and the unseasonable zeal of cer-

¹ Pesinus was in Galatia, Apamea in Bithynia, Appiaria I have not identified. ² Libellos, a technical word signifying a formal petition of complaint or accusation

³ Curiosus, an official whose duty it was to investigate charges, and inform the Emperor of offenders.

pretended: and yet before the arrival of the imperial letters this same people had deluged him with abuse. But we do not make much of these matters now, but have said what we have said as wishing to prove the fact that he was arrested in his mischievous course. Yet even after these things we did not rest, but were urgent in our demand that a tribunal should be formed for the purpose of enquiry and defence: for we said that we were ready to prove that we ourselves were guiltless, but that they had flagrantly transgressed. For there were some Syrians amongst those present with him at that time, who were left behind here; and we accosted them expressing our readiness to plead our cause, and frequently importuned them on this behalf, demanding that the minutes (of the late transactions) should be given up to us, or that the formal bills of indictment, or the nature of the charges, or the accusers themselves, should be made known; and yet we did not obtain any of these things, but were again expelled from the Church. How am I to relate the events which followed, transcending as they do every kind of tragedy? What language will set forth these events? what kind of ear will receive them without shuddering? For when we were urging these things, as I said before, a dense troop of soldiers, on the great Sabbath itself, as the day was hastening towards eventide, having broken into the Churches violently drove out all the clergy who were with us, and surrounded the sanctuary with arms. And women from the oratories 2 who had stripped themselves for baptism just at that time, fled unclothed, from terror at this grievous assault, not being permitted to put on the modest apparel which befits women; indeed many received wounds before they were expelled, and the baptismal pools were filled with blood, and the sacred water reddened by it. Nor did the distress cease even at this point; but the soldiers, some of whom as we understand were unbaptized, having entered the place where the sacred vessels were stored, saw all the things which were inside it, and the most holy blood of Christ, as might happen in the midst of such confusion, was spilt upon the garments of the soldiers aforesaid: and every kind of outrage was committed as in a barbarian siege. And the common people were driven to the wilderness, and all the people tarried outside the city, tain persons who were attached to him, as he and the Churches became empty in the midst of this great Festival, and more than forty bishops who associated with us were vainly and causelessly expelled together with the people and clergy. And there were shrieks and lamentations, and torrents of tears were shed everywhere, in the market places, in the houses, in the desert places, and every part of the city was filled with these calamities; for owing to the immoderate extent of the outrage not only the sufferers, but also they who did not undergo anything of the kind sympathized with us, not only those who held the same opinions as ours, but also heretics, and Jews, and Greeks, and all places were in a state of tumult and confusion, and lamentation, as if the city had been captured by force. And these things were perpetrated contrary to the intention of our most pious Emperor, under cover of night, the Bishops contriving them, and in many places conducting the attack, nor were they ashamed to have sergeants 3 instead of deacons marching in front of them. And when day dawned all the city was migrating outside the walls under trees and groves, celebrating the festival, like scattered sheep.

> 4. All which happened afterwards I leave you to imagine; for as I said before it is not possible to describe each separate incident. The worst of it is that these evils, great and serious as they are, have not even now been suppressed nor is there any hope of their suppression; on the contrary the mischief is extending itself every day, and we have become a laughing stock to the multitude, or rather I should say, no one laughs even if he is infinitely lawless, but all men mourn, as I was saying, this new kind of lawlessness, the finishing stroke of all our ills.

> What is one to say to the disorders in the other Churches? For the evil did not stop even here, but made its way to the east. For as when some evil humor is discharged from the head, all the other parts are corrupted, so now also these evils, having originated in this great city as from a fountain, confusion has spread in every direction, and clergy have everywhere made insurrection against bishops. there has been schism between bishop and bishop, people and people, and will be yet more; every place is suffering from the throes of calamity, and the subversion of the whole civilized world. Having been informed then of all these things, my lords, most honourable and devout, exhibit the courage and zeal which becomes you, so as to put a stop to this great assault of lawlessness which has been made upon the Churches. For if this i, c., Easter Eve.

2 okos dvarijooi. Churches were sometimes so called, more often, however, private chapels as distinguished from parish often, however, private chapels as distinguished from parish some charles. The meaning here is not very obvious; perhaps some chambers attached to the Church, where catechumens prayed becambers attached to the Church, where catechumens prayed fore baptism, are referred to.

³ Campiductores-their special business was to drill recruits.

custom were to prevail, and it became lawful for any persons who desired it to enter strange dioceses, so widely separated, and expel those whom one wished to remove, and do whatever they pleased according to their own but the pinion of love wings its way round arbitrary power, be assured that all things will go to ruin, and an implacable kind of war will overrun the whole world, all men attacking others, and being in turn attacked. Therefore to prevent such confusion overtaking the whole earth yield to our entreaties that ye will signify by writing that these lawless transactions executed in our absence, and after hearing one side only, although we did not decline a trial, are invalid, as indeed they are by the very nature of the case, and that those who are convicted of having committed such those who have committed such lawless acts dashing vehemently, and the deepest darkeven in the heathen courts would such audathe accused, who only deprecated enmity, be innocent and able to clear himself of the charges in the face of the world, and prove himself guiltless in every respect.

things, and having been clearly informed of brethren the bishops, may you be induced to exert your zeal on our behalf; for in so doing ye will confer a favour not upon ourselves does all things for the peace of the Churches. honoured and holy master.

TO INNOCENT, BISHOP OF ROME, GREETING IN THE LORD.

Our body it is true is settled in one place, every part of the world. Even so we also although we be separated by a journey of such great extent are nigh to your Piety, and in daily communion with you, beholding with the eyes of love the courage of your soul, the sterling nature of your disposition, your firmness and inflexibility, the great consolation, constant and abiding, which you bestow upon us. For in proportion as the billows mount higher, and concealed reefs increase, and the hurricanes are many does your vigilance wax stronger: and neither the great length of the iniquities must be subjected to the penalty of journey between us, nor the large amount of the ecclesiastical laws; and for ourselves, who time consumed, nor the difficulty in dealing have not been detected or convicted, or with events has disposed you to become proved liable to punishment may we continue supine: but ye continue to imitate the best to have the benefit of your correspondence, class of pilots who are on the alert at those and your love, and all other things which we times most especially when they see the have enjoyed aforetime. But if even now waves crested, the sea swelling, the water are willing to disclose the charges on the ness in day-time. Therefore also we feel great strength of which they have unjustly expelled gratitude towards you, and we long to send us, neither memoranda, nor formal bills of you showers of letters, thus affording ourindictment being given, nor the accusers hav- selves the greatest gratification. But since ing appeared: yet if an impartial tribunal is we are deprived of this, owing to the desolaformed, we will submit to be tried, and will tion of the place; (for not only of those who make our defence, and prove ourselves guilt- arrive from your regions, but even of those less of the things laid to our charge, as indeed who dwell in our part of the world no one we are: for the things which they have done could easily have intercourse with us, both on are outside the bounds of every kind of order, account of the distance, the spot in which we and every kind of ecclesiastical law and canon, are confined being situated at the very ex-And why do I say ecclesiastical canon? Not tremity of the country, and also the terror of robbers acting as a bar to the whole journey:) cious deeds ever have been committed, or we beseech you rather to pity us because of rather not even in a barbarian court, neither our long silence, than to condemn us for in-Scythians, nor Sarmatians would ever have dolence on that account. For as a proof that judged a cause in this fashion, deciding it our silence has not been due to negligence, after hearing one side only, in the absence of we have now at last after a long time secured our most honoured and beloved John the not a trial of his case, who was ready to call presbyter, and Paul the deacon, and we send any number of judges, asserting himself to a letter through them, and continue to exf press our gratitude to you, that you have surpassed even affectionate parents in your good will and zeal concerning us. And indeed so Having considered therefore all these far as your Piety is concerned all things would have been duly amended, and the acall particulars by my lords, our most devout cumulation of evils and offences have been swept away, and the Churches would have enjoyed peace and a glassy calm, and all things would have floated along with a smooth alone but also upon the Church at large, and stream, and the despised laws and violated ye will receive your reward from God who decrees of the fathers would have been vindicated. But since in reality none of these Fare thee weil always, and pray for me, most things has taken place, they who perpetrated the former deeds striving to aggravate their former iniquities, I omit any detailed narra- argument for evil surmising. For he ought narrative would exceed the limits not merely of a letter but even of a history; only this I beseech your vigilant soul, even if they who have filled everything with confusion be impenitently and incurably corrupt, let not those who have undertaken to cure them become faint-hearted or despondent, when they consider the magnitude of the thing to be accomplished. For the contest now before you has to be fought on behalf of nearly the whole world, on behalf of Churches humbled to the ground, of people dispersed, of clergy assaulted, of bishops sent into exile, of ancestral laws violated. Wherefore we beseech vour Diligence, once, twice, yea many times, in proportion as the storm increases, to manifest still greater zeal. For we expect that something more will be done for the purpose of amending these wrongs. But even if this should not take place, ye at least have your crown made ready for you by the merciful God, and the resistance offered by your love will be no small consolation to those who are third year of our sojourn in exile exposed to famine, pestilence, wars, continual sieges, indescribable solitude, daily death, and Isaurian swords, we are not a little encouraged and comforted by the constant and abiding nature of your disposition and confidence, and by revelling in your abundant and genuine love. This is our wall of defence, this is our security, this our calm haven, this our treasure of infinite blessings, this our gladness, and ground of much joy. And even if we should be carried off again to some spot more desolate than this, we shall carry this love away with us as no small consolation of our sufferings.

TO THE BELOVED BROTHER JOHN, INNOCENT.

Although the innocent man ought to ex-tive of their subsequent proceedings: for the to endure all things who trusts first of all in God, and then in his own conscience; seeing that the noble and good man can be specially trained to endurance, inasmuch as the holy Scriptures guard his mind; and the sacred lessons which we deliver to the people abound in examples, testifying as they do that nearly all the saints have been continually oppressed in divers ways, and are tested as by a kind of scrutiny, and so attain to the crown of patience. Let conscience itself console thy love, most honoured brother, which in affliction supplies the consolation of virtue. For under the eye of the Master Christ, the conscience, having been purged, will find rest in the haven of peace.

> INNOCENT, BISHOP, TO PRESBYTERS AND DEA-CONS, AND TO ALL THE CLERGY AND PEO-PLE OF THE CHURCH OF CONSTANTINOPLE, THE BRETHREN BELOVED WHO ARE SUB-JECT TO THE BISHOP JOHN, GREETING.

From the letters of your love which ye have wronged: for now that we are passing the sent by the hands of Germanus the presbyter, and Casianus the deacon, I have studied with anxious care the scene of calamity which ye have placed before my eyes, and by repeated perusal of your description I thoroughly perceived under what great distress and toil your faith is labouring: and this is a matter which can be cured only by the consolation of patience: for our God will speedily grant an end to such great afflictions, and He will aid you in your endurance of these Moreover whilst praising the statement of your case which contains many testimonies encouraging to patience I notice this necessary consolation placed at the beginning of the epistle of your love: for the consolation which we ought to have written to you, ye have anticipated by your letter. For this is the kind of patience which our Master is wont to supply to those who are in distress, pect all good things, and to crave mercy from in order that the servants of Christ when they God, nevertheless we also, counselling resig- are in affliction may console themselves by nation, have sent an appropriate letter by the reflecting that the things which they themhands of Cyriacus the deacon; so that inso-selves are suffering have happened to the lence may not have more power in oppressing, saints also in former times. And we also than a good conscience has in retaining hope. from your letter shall be able to derive con-For thou who art the teacher and pastor of solation: for we are not estranged from symso many people needest not to be taught that pathy with you, inasmuch as we also are the best men are ever frequently put to the chastised in your persons. For who will be test whether they will persevere in the perfec- able to endure the offences committed by tion of patience, and not succumb to any toil those men who ought to be specially zealous of distress: and certainly conscience is a promoters of the tranquillity of the Church strong defence against all things which un- and of concord itself. At the present time, justly befall us: and unless any one conquer by a perversion of custom, guiltless priests these by patient endurance he supplies an are expelled from the presidency of their own

Churches. And this is what your chief and schismatic decrees, as was formerly done brother, and fellow minister, John, your bish- in the Council of Sardica by the bishops who op has unjustly suffered, not having obtained any hearing: no crime is charged against him, none is heard. And what is the object of this iniquitous device? that no pretext for a trial may occur, or be sought, other men are introduced into the places of living priests, as if those who start from an offence of this description could be judged by any one to have anything good or to have done anything right.1 For we understand that such deeds have never been perpetrated by our fathers; or rather that they were prevented by the fact these evils should be committed to the will of that no one had authority given him to ordain another to take the place of one who was still living. For a spurious ordination cannot deprive the priest of his rank; seeing that neither can he be a bishop who is wrongfully substituted for another. And as regards the observance of the canons we lay it down that we ought to follow those, which were defined at Nicæa, to which alone the Catholic Church is bound to pay obedience and recognition. And if others are brought forward by certain men, which are at variance with the canons framed at Nicæa, and are proved to have been composed by heretics, let them be rejected by the Catholic bishops. For the in- ye say ye have undergone we have learned by ventions of heretics ought not to be appended accurate enquiry from our fellow bishops who to the Catholic canons; for by their adverse have already taken refuge in Rome, although and unlawful decrees they are always intending to weaken the design of the canons of say, Demetrius, Cyriacus, Eulysius and Pal-Nicæa. Not only therefore do we say that these ought not to be followed, but rather that they should be condemned amongst heretical were before us.2 For it were more fitting, most honoured brethren, that good deeds should be condemned than that things done in direct opposition to the canons should have any validity. But what are we to do against such things at the present time? A synodical decision of them is necessary, and we have long declared that a synod ought to be convened, as it is the only means of allaying the agitation of such tempests as these: and if we obtain this it is expedient that the healing of the great God, and His Christ our Lord. All the disturbances then which have been caused by the envy of the devil for the probation of the faithful will be mitigated; through the firmness of our faith we ought not to despair of anything from the Lord. For we ourselves also are considering much by what means the œcumenical synod may be brought together in order that by the will of God these disturbing movements may be brought to an end. Let us therefore endure for a while, and fortified by the wall of patience let us hope that all things may be restored to us by the assistance of our God. Moreover all things which for the most part at different times, that is to ladius, who are here with us.

I I have followed the Latin here. The Greek version of the passage seems to me hopelessly confused.

² The Council of Sardica was convened A.D. 343, (or A.D. 344?) with a view of settling the Arian controversy. The Oriental bishops, however, of whom the majority belonged to the Arian faction, seceded from Sardica, and held a separate council at Philippopolis, where they drew up a creed which was condemned by the Western bishops as heretical.

ST. CHRYSOSTOM.

THE HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.

TO THE PEOPLE OF ANTIOCH.

THE OXFORD TRANSLATION AND NOTES, REVISED BY

REV. W. R. W. STEPHENS, M.A.,

PREBENDARY OF CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL, AND RECTOR OF WOOLBEDING, SUSSEX.

PREFACE TO THE BENEDICTINE EDITION.

- 1. Among the events which occurred in the time of John Chrysostom, there is none more memorable than that sedition of the inhabitants of Antioch, in which the Statues of the Emperor Theodosius and Flacilla his wife were thrown down and dragged about the city, at which Theodosius was so exasperated, as even to think of destroying the city entirely. This afforded ample matter for our Chrysostom to exercise his powers of preaching. For as the people of Antioch were fluctuating between hope and fear (sudden accidents offering of course daily some fresh cause for hope or alarm) Chrysostom, compelled as he was to adapt his style to circumstances as they arose, almost always without preparation, delivered on the spur of the occasion these Homilies, which are certainly well deserving of admiration. At one time his object here is to console a people struggling with present distress; at another, to strengthen minds that were sinking under the extremity of danger; and above all, by repeated admonition, to persuade the people of Antioch, on occasion of the threatened calamities, to correct the vices and to wipe away the crimes that had thus provoked God's wrath; which endeavour on the part of Chrysostom certainly ended in results agreeable to his desire, as he sometimes acknowledges.
- 2. But the cause of this great sedition was, according to the testimony of Zosimus, excess of taxation, which was daily inventing new imposts; an exaction required either for the celebration of the fifth year upon which Arcadius had entered, from the time he was proclaimed under the title of Augustus, and the tenth year of the Emperor Theodosius, commencing in the year 388, or for the expenses of the war against the tyrant Maximus.2 or on account of both these events, as well as for other necessities of the state. The people of Antioch, that is to say, the superior class of the citizens, dismayed at the burden of this impost, first approached the prefect, and with tears lamented the excess of the tax that had been announced, and implored the Divine assistance. And next, a multitude of yagabonds and foreigners of the lowest class of the people, in a state of excited feeling, broke out into deeds of violence. At first they turned every thing upside down in the public baths; hence they proceeded to the prefect's palace, and attacked the doors and windows, and were scarcely repelled, when they turned their rage in another direction, and attacked the painted tablets of the Emperors with stones, covered them with filth, and reduced them to a ruinous condition, while they loaded the Augusti themselves with curses and reproaches. At length they threw down the Statues of the Emperor Theodosius and Flacilla his deceased wife,4 and dragged them through the streets of the city; and had already commenced further outrages, when they were put down by a band of archers, dispatched from the prefect. The sedition being thus extinguished, fear took the place of madness, and the expectation of impending punishment caused the burdensome tax that had been imposed to

I [That is events which occurred at Antioch during St. Chrysostom's sojourn in that city.—ED.]

^{2 [}And the Goths who were threatening the Danubian frontier .- ED.]

^{3 [}These low foreign adventurers were sometimes hired by actors to get up applause in the theatre, or by men of rank, not overpopular, to raise a cheer when they appeared in public.—En.]

⁴ See Hom. XXI., where St. Chrysostom speaks of him as especially pained at this.

be entirely forgotten. What followed afterwards will be narrated below in the review of the Homilies. Something must now be said as to the year of the sedition, in which these Homilies were delivered.

- 3. Dismissing the narrative of Sozomen and Theodoret, according to whose account, this sedition, and the delivery of these discourses, must have been after the war against Maximus, learned men, and Tillemont especially (at length in note 27 appended to his Life of the Emperor Theodosius) have proved from far more certain notes of time, that these events took place before the war against Maximus. In opposition to that former opinion, he produces a most convincing argument from Chrysostom's own words, who in the sixteenth Homily (No. 2.), testifies that this was the second year since he had begun to preach; but he began when he was first ordained presbyter at the end of the year 385, or at the beginning of 386. Wherefore these discourses ought to be attributed either to the year 388, or rather 387. For the former opinion Baronius contends, and after him, Petavius and Henry Valesius, who assign them to the year 388, for this reason, that the tenth year of the reign of Theodosius then commenced, for the celebration of which the tax before mentioned was imposed. But what is adduced from Libanius for the defence of this opinion is full of perplexity, and is capable of being twisted to support either opinion. A still more certain indication than any of these is gathered from the circumstance, that the Emperor Theodosius was certainly at Constantinople during the winter and Lent of the year 387, in which year also the sedition must necessarily have occurred; for at the time of the sedition he was most certainly staying at Constantinople,2 but on the other hand at the same season in the year immediately following, he was living at Thessalonica. But what is alleged to the contrary from the celebration of the tenth year of Theodosius, which commenced in the year 388, amounts, as I said, to nothing; since it is evident from the Fasti of Idatius and of Marcellinus, that he anticipated by one year the celebration of the tenth year of his reign, in order that he might celebrate his tenth together with his son Arcadius, who entered upon the fifth year of his reign in 387; just in the same manner as Maximianus Herculius did, when he celebrated the twentieth, though it was only the eighteenth, year of his reign, along with Diocletian, whose twentieth year of empire it was.3
- 4. But another and not a less difficulty arises, which has been already treated of in the Preface to the work, "Against the Jews;" viz. that in a certain discourse against the Jews, held in the month of September of the year 386, Chrysostom in reproving many of the Christians at Antioch who fasted and kept Easter with the Jews, or at the time observed by the Jews, "Behold," saith he, "the first day of unleavened bread in this year falls on Sunday, and it is necessary that we should fast throughout the whole week, and after the Passion is past, and the Cross and the Resurrection arrived, we should continue fasting; and very often the same thing occurs, that after the Passion has passed away, and the Cross and the Resurrection arrived, we are still keeping the fast, the week being not yet finished." From these words it is further evident, that those Christians, who acted as Jews in keeping

¹ i. e., so far as the inference is concerned. His testimony is explicit to the fact that the tax was levied for that purpose, and he was on the spot.

² See the opening of the oration of Libanius, written as if to be delivered by him there, and Hom. XVII. 6, and Hom. XXI. (2). 3 [See also Life of St. John Chrysostom, chapter xi. by Stephens, where the sedition at Antioch is described, and a summary of the Homilies on the Statues is given.—Eb.]

⁴ Pascha is either Passover or Easter. St. Thos. Aquinas, in the Hymn Lauda Sion, appropriates it to the Christian Festival, calling the Jewish Phase vetus.

⁵ i. e., the actual days of them on the Jewish computation. This appears the true answer to the difficulty. The Jews kept the Passover this year earlier than the Christians: viz. on the 14th day of the moon, or April 18. See PArt de Verifier les Dates on the year. Thus the supposed difficulty becomes a confirmation of the date otherwise determined. Montfaucon understood it, "we must . . . if we follow the Judairers." Tillemont is at a loss to explain the title of Homily III. against the Jews. Against these who would fast the first Passover. It may mean either the original, or that which then happened to be the earlier. The word fast is explained by taking it as their expression for keep. He thinks it necessary to tell them that the true Passover is not fusting, but t. e Holy Communion. Ben. t. i. p. 6r1, b. And this agrees with what he says is the common case, viz. that the Christian Easter is so much later, as is required to complete the week.

the fast and celebrating the Passover, must sometimes have fasted when other Christians were celebrating the Paschal feast, and at other times not so; for example, they fasted on the day of the Resurrection when the Jews celebrated the feast of the Passover later than the rest of the Christians did, but they did not fast when the Jews celebrated the same feast earlier than the Christians. But in the discourse of Chrysostom above mentioned, and held about the month of September of the year 386, he is doubtless treating of Lent and Easter of the year 387. But in that year, according to the Paschal tables, the feast fell on the 25th of April, that is to say, as late as it can possibly occur. How then could these judaizing Christians be fasting this year during the Paschal feast, and celebrate that feast too late, when this could not occur later than on the 25th of April, on which day the other nonjudaizing Christians celebrated it this year, at least if the Paschal tables are to be relied upon? This is certainly a very great difficulty; but one which, as Tillemont himself confesses, is not sufficient to overturn the marks of the period by which we assign the Homily, "Against the Jews," to the month of September, in the year 386. For as we have said in the Preface to the Homilies against the Jews, it has not yet been made out to us so certainly, whether the people of Antioch always followed by an invariable rule the Alexandrian reckoning as to the Feast of the Lord's Passover, and if they had always followed it, can we affirm that they never fell into error in their reckoning? Certainly the persons best skilled in the Paschal reckonings, whom I have consulted, have admitted that an error of this sort sometimes does happen in such reckonings, and did happen not many years since; and that it is not always safe to prefer the Paschal indications to any other notes of time.

5. Tillemont, however, who notices this kind of difficulty, and discusses it in his notes to the Life of Chrysostom, where he treats of the Homilies against the Jews, has not mentioned it in the notes to the Life of the Emperor Theodosius, where he arranges these Homilies of Chrysostom to the people of Antioch as if the Feast of Easter had fallen on the 25th of April, as the Paschal tables have it. The first Homily therefore he places a little before the sedition; but the sedition on the 26th of February, ten days before Lent, which at Antioch began on the Monday of our Quinquagesima, falling that year on the 8th of March. The second Homily either on the Thursday, or the Saturday before Lent; viz. on the 6th of March, the eighth day after the sedition. The third on the following Sunday, the 7th of March, or thereabout. The fourth, on the Monday following, March 8. The fifth, on Tuesday, March 9. The sixth, about the next Wednesday, on March 10. The seventh, on Thursday, March 11. The eighth, on Friday, March 12. The ninth on the Monday of the second week in Lent, March 15. The tenth, after the lapse of a few days. The eleventh, (considering it transposed,) on the Monday of the fourth week in Lent, March 29. The twelfth, on the following Tuesday, March 30. The thirteenth, on the following Wednesday, March 31. The fourteenth, a little after that one which is numbered the eighteenth, which was delivered on the fifth Sunday in Lent, April 5. The fifteenth, on the Saturday of the second week in Lent, or March 20. The sixteenth, on the third Saturday in Lent, March 21. The seventeenth, about the end of the fourth week in Lent. The eighteenth, Sunday, April 5, or thereabout. The nineteenth, after the fourteenth, about April 11. The twentieth, on Easter Day, April 25. The twenty-first, about the same time as the twenty-second following it, which was delivered on the Friday after Passion Sunday, April 16.1 Thus does Tillemont endeavour to restore with the utmost accuracy the deranged order of these Homilies. Whilst however we agree with him in many things, we are compelled to differ from him in others. The order of the Homilies, as he lays it down, we may here further represent in one tabular view.

¹ The second before Easter. It has lately become common to call the week immediately before Easter "Passion Week," but this name belongs to the week before it. The proper title of the last is the "Great" or "Holy" Week.

Tillemont's	Ist	is placed in Edition of Fronto Ducæus	First
	2d		Second
	3d		Third
	4th		Fourth
	5th		Fifth
	6th		Sixth
	7th		Seventh
	8th		Eighth
	9th		Ninth
	10th		Tenth
	11th		Fifteenth
	12th		Sixteenth
	13th		Eleventh
	14th		Twelfth
	15th		Thirteenth
	16th		Seventeenth
	17th		Eighteenth
	18th		Fourteenth
	19th		Nineteenth
	20th		Twenty-second
	21st		Twenty-first
	22d
	224		I WCHIELLI

But before we discourse singly of the Homilies, and make a few observations as to the order as well as the argument of each, it may be worth while to remark, that from the title of the Homily which formerly was numbered the twenty-second, but now the twentieth, which title it has in the notes of Fronton, and in our Mss.; it must have been spoken ten days before Easter; and that from these words likewise, just before the end of the Homily, "Forty days have already passed away," Tillemont justly infers, that Lent among the people of Antioch began on the Monday after Quinquagesima; and that among them the whole Lent extended through seven weeks; and he rightly assigns this Homily to a Friday during Lent; so that that day was both the fortieth from the beginning of the fast, and the tenth before Easter. Hence we hold it as a thing established, that Lent, which in divers Churches was defined by various limits, was observed at Antioch during seven weeks.

Moreover, since for the causes before related, we may account the diurnal Paschal tables, which place the Easter of the year 387 upon the 25th of April, as of doubtful authority, 3 at least those for the use of the Church at Antioch; we have not discovered with certainty on what day the people of Antioch kept Easter in this year 387, we shall abstain from mentioning the day of the month in the review of the Homilies, and we shall account it sufficient to have indicated, when that may be safely done, on what day of the week the Homilies were spoken.

The first Homily, then, was delivered a few days before the sedition at Antioch, as is discoverable from these words in No. (3.) of the second Homily; "I lately protracted a long discourse to your charity.... and I have received a reward for my labours. But what was the reward? To punish the blasphemers in the city, and to chastise those who treat God with contempt, and to restrain the violent." Without doubt these words have reference to the first Homily, one of great length, on the subject of the sorrows of the Saints, and the providence of God towards His Elect, who are tormented in this life, where [&]quot; "Feriam sextam Quadragesima." This looks like a reprint, as he is more definite.

² As now in the Greek Church. The Latins do not count the week in which Ash-Wednesday is, as not being a whole one.

³ It has been shewn, in a former note, that there is no reason for this doubt.

^{4 &}quot;accepi," it should be, as in Text, "exegi," "I demanded."

at last he thus expresses himself in a manner certainly worthy of observation. "But since our discourse has now turned to the subject of blasphemy, I desire to ask one favour of you all in return for this address and speaking with you, which is, that you will correct on my behalf those who blaspheme in this city. And should you hear any one in the public thoroughfare, or in the midst of the forum, blaspheming God; go up to him, rebuke him; and should it be necessary to inflict blows, spare not to do so. Smite him on the face; strike his mouth; sanctify thy hand with the blow." Which truly would be a mode of correction not suited to modern usage.

The second Homily, Tillemont refers either to the Thursday or to the Saturday before Lent; but it may more safely be pronounced to have been spoken "about" that time, seven days having been completed as Chrysostom himself says, since the sedition, during which he declares that he had been silent, because the people of Antioch, being in consternation from the mighty calamity and from the immensity of the danger, were in no fit state for the hearing of Sermons; moreover, that this evil was one sent from God, on account of their having neglected the correction of their blaspheming brethren; and after he has drawn a beautiful picture of their state, he concludes the discourse, after having preached at length on riches, the use of riches, alms-giving, and poverty.

The third Homily follows close on the second. But we suppose with Tillemont, that it was delivered on Quinquagesima Sunday (to speak according to modern custom). Chrysostom treats here of the departure of Flavian the Bishop of Antioch to Constantinople for the purpose of appeasing the Emperor, and consoles the people with the hope of his succeeding. He then proves at length that there is no utility in fasting, unless there be an abstinence from vices. But after making a few remarks on avoiding slander, he deplores the present calamity, and relates some harsh severities. "Some," saith he, "have perished by the sword, some by fire; some given to wild beasts; and not men only but children. And neither this immaturity of age, nor the tumult of the people, nor the circumstance that they were infuriated by demons when they perpetrated such deeds, nor that the exaction was thought to be intolerable, nor poverty, nor having offended in company with all, nor promising that they would never hereafter dare to repeat such deeds, nor any thing else could at all rescue them; but they were led away to the pit without reprieve, armed soldiers conducting and guarding them on either side, lest any one should carry off the criminals; whilst mothers also followed afar off, seeing their children beheaded, but not daring to bewail their calamity; for terror conquered grief, and fear overcame nature."

All these evils were inflicted on the people of Antioch by the Prefects or Magistrates before Theodosius had heard any thing of the sedition, as Chrysostom says in the same place. But he concludes the address by admonishing that they should abstain from slander, from enmities, and from oaths.

The fourth Homily, delivered as it seems on the Monday, which was the beginning of Lent, describes the advantages gained from the calamity. He speaks of the people of Antioch as changed and brought back from their former habits. But at the close he again repeats the same admonition, which he reminds them that he had given in the foregoing Homily, that is to say, concerning slanders, enmities, and oaths. But in No. (6.), he says, that he should speak throughout this week concerning oaths.

The fifth Homily was pronounced on the day following, that is, on the Tuesday, as Chrysostom says at the beginning of it. In this Chrysostom consoles the people of Antioch as usual, under their sadness, and exhorts them to a contempt for death. In the end also he treats No. (7.) of the avoidance of oaths, and indicates somewhat of the order of the foregoing and following Homilies in these words. "Let us therefore persuade it (our soul) to make this first change for the better by the avoidance of oaths; for although I spake to you yesterday and the day before on this same subject, yet neither to-day, nor to-morrow, nor the day after, will I desist from giving my counsel on this subject."

In the sixth Homily, delivered on the Wednesday of the first week, he imparts consolation to the afflicted, and urges them to hope for a prosperous turn of affairs. He speaks of the delays the messengers had met with, who were gone to announce to the Emperor the sedition at Antioch, as proceeding from God; and from thence deduces a favourable hope for his hearers, and bids them feel confidence of obtaining pardon by the petition of Flavian the Bishop; and after he had discoursed on the subject of not being afraid of death, he again speaks as usual against oaths.

The seventh Homily was delivered, as is evident from many indications, on the day following. "It is the fifth day," says Chrysostom, "we are engaged in speaking words of comfort to your charity." But this fifth day is reckoned by beginning from the Sunday, so that he must be speaking of the fifth day of the week. He here treats of the first words of Genesis, "In the beginning God made heaven and earth;" and he observes, that God is not only good when He chastises, but also when He confers favours; and concludes by exhorting to avoid oaths.

The eighth Homily Tillemont supposes to have been spoken on the day following the seventh Homily, that is, on the Friday. But Chrysostom disclaims it, who testifies at the outset that he discoursed on the passage, "In the beginning God made heaven and earth, lately" $(\pi \rho \psi \eta \rho)$ not yesterday $(\chi \theta \dot{\epsilon} \tau)$, which without doubt belongs to the seventh Homily. Therefore the present Homily is to be assigned to the Saturday; which these words just immediately after the beginning would also incline us to think. "The week hath nearly arrived at its close with us." The argument of the Homily he draws from these words, "God was walking in Paradise in the cool of the day." On this he observes the wicked are always timid and fearful, but the godly full of confidence. Finally, he treats according to his custom of the avoiding of oaths, and says, that it is now the sixth day since he had been admonishing as to the observance of this law.

The ninth Homily Tillemont with probability allots to the Monday of the second week in Lent. But as to this matter no indication presents itself by which we may lay down any thing certain or probable. This discourse was, however, delivered after a silence of one or more days, as Chrysostom expressly states at the beginning; contrary to which is the opinion of Tillemont, who, whilst he allots the eighth Homily to the Friday of one week, and the ninth to the Monday of the week following, says in the Life of Chrysostom, Art. (15.), that the intervening Sabbaths and Lord's days were doubtless distinguished by discourses of Chrysostom, which discourses have been lost. Chrysostom, at the commencement of this, praises the people of Antioch, that yielding to his admonitions they were taking pains to expel the practice of oaths. On these words also, "The heavens declare the glory of God," he speaks at length, and sets forth God's providence in the order and harmony of the natural world, and at length he concludes the address by admonishing that oaths should be abstained from.

The tenth Homily was not delivered on the day following the ninth, although it follows up the same argument, as is shewn by the word, $\pi\rho\dot{\psi}\eta\nu$ "lately." But Chrysostom here congratulates his auditors that they had yielded to his admonitions. He declares it is far better to hear the word of God than to fast. He then proves that the world could not pos-

^{*} Lat, has only "the day before yesterday."

² This must be a slip of the pen. [The sentences have clearly got transposed, and we should read "not only good when He confers favours, but also when He chastises."—ED.]

³ Both arguments may stand, as the common use of πρώην is undoubted.

⁴ By using the word πρώτην. But this may be in anticipation of his reference to Hom. VII. But if this Homily were delivered on modaly, the first day of strict fasting, the scruples of the congregation would be accounted for. No difficulty remains but the use of πρώτην, in Hom. X., against which is ἐπιοῦναν. Placing the trials, and Hom. XI.-XVIII. a week later throughout, seems less consistent.

sibly subsist without a divine Providence, and he ends, at length, by an exhortation to abstain from oaths.

The eleventh Homily, Tillemont supposes to have been delivered after that which here has the inscription of the fifteenth, as well as after the sixteenth which follows it. The argument he employs is this; In this Homily he says, the subject is concerning certain dangers and distresses which the city of Antioch had already passed through, which events seem to have taken place after the arrival of Hellebichus and Cæsarius. But that arrival of Hellebichus and Cæsarius is mentioned in the Title of the seventeenth Homily, long after the eleventh of which we are now treating.

Supported by this argument, Tillemont thinks that not only the fifteenth, but also the sixteenth ought to be placed before the eleventh. But besides that all the Manuscripts, without exception, preserve the very same order as the published Editions, we have not a sufficiently accurate knowledge of all the events, the dangers, terrors, and threats of the time, that for a reason of this sort we should deem there ought to be any change in the order. Chrysostom has spoken of many things, but was perhaps silent on many more. Wherefore, until something more certain be brought to light, we think the ancient order must be adhered to. In this Homily Chrysostom at the beginning gives thanks, because the city breathed again after the terror that had fallen on it, since multitudes had taken flight in consequence of suspicions that had been thrown out among them. For some days Chrysostom was silent (as he himself says) during this season of calamity and terror. But Tillemont assigns this Homily to the Monday of the fourth week in Lent, and indeed with the best reason, as we shall shew when we come to the thirteenth Homily. In the present Homily he treats principally of the wisdom of God in the constitution of man, and at the end concerning the avoiding of oaths.

The twelfth, as well as the thirteenth, for the same reason as above, Tillemont makes later than the fifteenth and sixteenth. But I know not in what way he understands that passage in this twelfth Homily, No. (2.) "On the three foregoing days, then, we have investigated one method of acquiring the knowledge of God, and have brought it to a conclusion, explaining how 'the' visible 'heavens declare the glory of God,' and what is the meaning of that which is said by Paul; 'The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made;' and we have shewed how from the creation of the world, and how by heaven, and earth, and sea, the Creator is glorified. But to-day," etc. Here Chrysostom clearly refers to a series of these Homilies in the order in which they were delivered before the twelfth, that is to say, the ninth, the tenth, and the eleventh. In the ninth (No. 2.) he places as the argument of his discourse the saying of Paul, "The invisible things of Him," etc. as well as that of the Psalms, "The heavens declare the glory of God," In the tenth (No. 2.) likewise he declares that he is pursuing this very argument. In the eleventh (No. 2.) also he testifies that he is insisting on the same argument. Is not Tillemont doing violence to the words of Chrysostom, when he wishes the tenth and the eleventh to be inserted between the fifteenth and sixteenth? This, however, he only proposes, half doubtingly, in note (29) on the Emperor Theodosius, No. 10, 11 seqq. and he confesses, that the order which we have laid down is clearly indicated by Chrysostom; but for what reason I know not, he afterwards departs from the same order. But when Chrysostom says, "on the three past days," it is not to be understood of three successive days, but of the three last days on which he had preached. In this twelfth Homily, likewise, which was delivered on the Tuesday of the fourth week, he dwells on the same subject of the wisdom of God in the creation of the world. He afterwards treats of the natural law, the knowledge of which God hath implanted in man, and on the avoidance of oaths.

^{*} See note at the beginning of that Homily and the preceding; it is almost certain from the whole character of Hom. XVII, that it was not delivered immediately after the events referred to. Probably many had returned, whom St. Chrysostom wished to inform of the events during their absence.

The thirteenth Homily was spoken the day after the twelfth. At the commencement he returns thanks to God that the face of affairs was changed, and the fear removed, which had been such that "the greater part of the city," as he says, "had taken refuge from the fear and danger of that occasion in secret places, in deserts, and hollows." Hence he proceeds to speak of many who were dragged to the tribunal; of the horrible inquisition that took place by means of the scourge; of others who were hurried away to punishment; of a mother and sister of a certain person, who, whilst he was undergoing his trial within, were rolling in the dust at the vestibule. Chrysostom describes pathetically these events which had been transacted a few days before, that is to say, before he delivered the eleventh discourse. But the words which Chrysostom uses in the beginning, σταν τήν παρελθούσαν εξδομεν τετράδα και οΐαν την παρούσαν δρώμεν νύν, Bernard Brixianus thus renders, "Quale præteritum vidimus quatriduum et quale nunc videmus præsens:" I know not for what reason we have left this untouched. For although τετράς is sometimes taken to signify the fourth day, yet in ecclesiastical language, even from the time of Clemens Alexandrinus, $\tau \varepsilon \pi \rho \dot{a}$ is the fourth day of the week, so that the Translation should be corrected, and should stand, "Qualem feriam quartam præteritam vidimus," etc. In which it is declared, that the Homily was delivered on the fourth day of the week, and that indeed the fourth week in Lent, or perhaps the third, according to another mode of reckoning; since for many ages downwards the Greeks call that the first Sunday and week of the fast which we call the first of Lent. But this is only a question as to a name. The Homily was however delivered on the fourth day of the week, and from the series of the Homilies, as well as from the silence of Chrysostom, there seems plainly to be an interval of some days between the tenth and eleventh Homilies. In this Homily, moreover, after much premised on that calamity of Antioch, he comes down to the former argument concerning man's creation, and concludes his discourse by an exhortation after his manner on avoiding oaths.

The fourteenth Tillemont thinks ought to be placed after the eighteenth; influenced by this reason, that Chrysostom says at the beginning, "Not a little did the devil yesterday disturb our city, but God hath also not a little comforted us again." These words, he observes, denote that the arrival of Hellebichus, and of news from Constantinople, had already occurred. But these are mere conjectures spoken at random. How many suspicions and terrors think you were cast abroad among the people of Antioch, whilst they hung in doubt, and were ignorant to what result so unhappy an affair might lead? But how can we possibly argue respecting these terrors and reports, when we are doubtless ignorant of the greater part of them, and have so obscure a perception of what we do know, that we can scarcely gather from thence any indication of the time? This Homily is almost wholly on the subject of avoiding oaths.

The fifteenth Homily, Tillemont would have it, was delivered between the tenth and eleventh, both for the reasons above mentioned, and because Chrysostom has these words at the commencement. ${}^*E\partial\varepsilon\iota$ xai $\tau\dot{\eta}\mu\varepsilon\rho\sigma\nu$ xai $\tau\ddot{\phi}$ $\pi\rho\sigma\dot{\varepsilon}\rho\phi$ $\sigma a\dot{\beta}\dot{\beta}\dot{\alpha}\tau\phi$ $\tau\dot{\delta}\nu$ $\pi\varepsilon\rho\dot{\epsilon}$ $\nu\eta\sigma\tau\dot{\varepsilon} lag$ $x\nu\ddot{\eta}\sigma a\iota$ $\dot{\delta}\dot{\gamma}\sigma\nu$. "It had been right both to-day and on the former Sabbath, to let the discourse turn on the subject of fasting." Where he understands the expression, $\tau\phi$ $\pi\rho\sigma\dot{\epsilon}\rho\phi$, as though it were $\tau\ddot{\phi}$ $\pi\rho\dot{\omega}\tau\phi$,—the first Saturday in Lent, entertaining however some doubts on the point. But we, as well as Bernard Brixianus, understand it of the earlier or preceding one.² And we have already proved in a former paragraph, that no other Homily can be placed between the tenth and the eleventh. On the occasion of the dread with which the people of Antioch' were affected, he enlarges on the advantage of fear, and at the end he preaches against the custom of swearing, and of requiring an oath from others.

¹ See Sir H. Nicolas, Chron. of History, p. 117. Gloss. of Dates, art. Hebdomadæ Græcæ, observes, that the Greeks named the weeks as beginning on Monday, and taking in Sunday at the end. Still they count Monday the second day, etc. Thus the first Sumday would be the same as with the Latins, but the first week earlier. It seems probable that this was a week earlier than here stated, see Hom. XVIII.

² And dependent on the erroneous notions, that Hom. XVII. was delivered immediately on the arrival of the commissioners.

³ It may be that, or the first in Lent, considered as the last on which he had preached.

The sixteenth Homily was delivered when all were deliberating upon making their escape from the city, in consequence of a certain report, that a sack was to take place. Tillemont endeavours also to change the position of this Homily, and to place it between the tenth and eleventh, which, however, as we have said in our remarks upon the twelfth, it cannot admit of. Tillemont further supports his argument by these words: in No. 6, the holy Doctor says, "We have passed through the second week of the fast." He infers, therefore, that two weeks only of the fast had passed away, and Tillemont on that ground determines, that it ought to be moved out of its place. He supposes it was spoken on the third Sunday in Lent, reckoning for the first Sunday that which preceded the first day of the fast, which we call Quinquagesima Sunday. But what if at Antioch at that time, that was called the first Sunday of Lent, which according to modern custom occurs as the first within the fast?2 For the fast did begin the Monday after Quinquagesima, and now it begins on the Wednesday, and the people of Antioch might not reckon that week for the first week of Lent, just as we do not reckon it as so, and in that way this Homily would have been delivered one week later, that is to say, taking the Sunday after the modern custom. But even then a great difficulty would remain, for this Homily would precede the thirteenth and following ones. Certainly all these points are full of perplexity, as Tillemont himself confesses, who is compelled to leave the question, without entirely coming to any conclusion upon it. Perhaps familarity, and longer handling, will add to our knowledge on so obscure a subject, which it is possible we may be able to determine, in drawing up the life of Chrysostom at the end of his works,3 more clearly and accurately. For which reason we have purposely determined to leave the matter doubtful. That one point only we contend for, that this Homily cannot be placed between the tenth and eleventh, for the reasons above mentioned. Certain things being premised as to the timidity of the people of Antioch, and the avoiding of oaths, Chrysostom borrows the argument of the Homily from those words of Paul, "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother;" and shews that Paul was more glorious from bonds, than from the power of miracles.

The seventeenth was delivered after Ellebichus, or Hellebichus, (styled Magister Militum), and Cæsarius, (styled Magister), the persons sent by the Emperor for the purpose of instituting an inquiry into the sedition, had arrived at Antioch. This Hellebichus, Master of the Horse or Foot, is found mentioned elsewhere, and was distinguished by a reputation for justice and clemency. Cæsarius, also styled elsewhere Master of the Offices, enjoyed a similar reputation for high character. But this Homily was pronounced when the people of Antioch were almost free from fear. "We expected," says Chrysostom (No. 1.), "innumerable horrors, that the property of all was to be plundered; the habitations consumed, together with their inmates; the city snatched away from the midst of the world; and all its relics obliterated, and its soil ploughed up: but, lo! all these things stood only in expectance, and came not actually to pass." Next he relates how the monks descended from the mountains to Antioch, that they might appease the judges, while at the same time all the Greek philosophers deserted the city; and in what way also the priests strenuously exerted

¹ Printed, Constantinople.

² He may exclude the τυροφάγος, or cheese-week, as not one of the strictest fasting. This appears to have been the case from Homily XVIII., which cannot well be placed anywhere but on the fourth Sunday, and which says that half the fast is over.

³ This is chiefly a reprint of this preface. Here nothing better is suggested than the supposition of a mistake in transcribing. The difficulty arises from the mistaken notion, that it was before the trials, whereas it was probably delivered a little before the return of a messenger from Caesarius. See Tabular View.

⁴ In the Life "and Foot."

themselves on behalf of the people. He declares the penalties imposed by the Emperor to be light and easy, and no matter of grief or complaint, though the orchestra and public bath were closed, and the dignity of a metropolis taken away from the city of Antioch. The true dignity of Antioch was, that the disciples of Christ were first called Christians there; that the people of Antioch had brought assistance to the saints at Jerusalem, when struggling with famine; that not magnitude, but piety, is the ornament of cities. Finally, however, he says that some were yet remaining in prison; and that others were sent into exile. This Homily Tillemont assigns to the fourth week of Lent, after Wednesday, but only from conjecture.

The eighteenth Homily was spoken after half the fast was over, as Chrysostom himself says at the beginning. But Tillemont thinks it may probably be assigned to the fifth Sunday of Lent. He treats moreover of the true reason for fasting; of contempt for riches; of godly sorrow, &c.

The nineteenth Homily was delivered as the title has it, τ_R^2 κυριακ χ^2 τ_R^2 ς επισω χ^2 ομένης, or as Fronto Ducaus reads it, τ_R^2 ς σω χ^2 ομένης. Among the Cappadocians, επισω χ^2 ομένης is Ascension Day, as Allatius says in his book on the Sundays and Weeks of the Greeks, adding that the Sunday thus called is the fifth after Easter, i. e. the one which precedes the Ascension of our Lord. But Savile says that it is 3 the first Sunday after Easter; from whence he got his information I know not. Yet there seems no doubt that it was some one of the last Sundays in Lent, or, as Tillemont supposes, Passion-Sunday, to which I rather incline. Chrysostom, who had been detained at home for some time by sickness, after he has prefaced his subject with some remarks on the Festival of the Martyrs, which had been just celebrated at Antioch, and on the arrival of the rustics, speaks according to his custom against oaths, and illustrates their pernicious effects by many examples.

Hitherto, in the number and order of the Homilies, we have followed the editions of Savile and Fronto Ducæus. But henceforth it is otherwise; for that which follows as the twentieth in former editions, is without doubt the twenty-first and last on the Statues. But the twenty-first is a Catechesis, which we have placed second after another Catechesis, which was inscribed as the first, as we remark in the Notice placed at the end of the Homilies on the Statues, and in front of the Catechetical Lectures; since this Catechesis ought to be placed entirely without the series of the Homilies on the Statues. But the Homily, which is in former editions the twenty-second, is without doubt the twentieth, which was delivered ten days before Easter. Therefore we proceed in this order.

The twentieth Homily has these words in the title, according to manuscripts mentioned by Fronto Ducæus, and likewise in some of ours, and particularly that in the Royal Library, numbered 1971. $E\lambda \xi \chi \partial \eta \delta \hat{\epsilon} \pi \rho \delta \delta \xi \kappa a \dot{\gamma} \mu \epsilon \rho \partial \dot{\epsilon} \kappa a \dot{\gamma} \kappa a \dot{\gamma} \epsilon \alpha \rho \delta \delta \dot{\epsilon} \kappa a \dot{\gamma} \mu \epsilon \rho \partial \dot{\epsilon} \kappa a \dot{\gamma} \kappa a \dot{\gamma}$

The twenty-first Homily, which is the last on the Statues, seems, from what he says just

The Life adds, The rank of metropolis was transferred from Antioch to Laedicea, according to Theordoret, 1. 5, c. 10, ² In the Life, and in Pref. to vol. 4, it is proved from Hom, I. de Anná (1), that this Homily was actually delivered on that day. This being so, Flavian would be the "Leader" of the Festival.

³ Dominica in albis.

at the beginning, to have been delivered on the very day of the Lord's Resurrection, and after the return of Flavian the Bishop; whose journey to the Emperor, and address to the same on behalf of the city's preservation, as well as the Emperor's reply full of lenity in which he pardons the citizens, are all particularly related by Chrysostom, occupying the whole of this discourse. But even until the return of Flavian, the people of Antioch were terrified by every day's reports, and fluctuated between hope and fear, as Chrysostom observes a little after the beginning.

TABLE OF THE EVENTS CONNECTED WITH THE HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.

										Hom
Feb.	_									1
	26?										Sedition on the proclamation of a new impost.
March	6	Saturday								2	1
7 Sunday, Quinquages						1.4				3	Three precepts for this Lent.
	s s	М.								4	Plan for the week.
	9	T .								5
	10	W .	•					•		6
	II	T .			•		•		•	7
	12	F :						•		/
	13	s .	*				•		•	S	$(\pi \rho \phi \eta v_*)$
	13	., .	•	٠							(1/1/4/10.0)
14 SUNDAY I, IN LENT,
	14		I, IN	LE	ENT.
		M .								9
	16	Τ.	*							10	Arrival of Hellebichus and Cæsarius. Baths closed. Antioch deprived of its rank.
	17	W .									Trial of prisoners. Intercession of monks. Senate kept in prison; sentence to be left to the Emperor.
	18	Τ.									Departure of Casarius to Constantinople.
	21	SUNDAY	II. ı	хL	ENT
	22	М.								II
	23	Τ.								12	Cæsarius arrives at Constantinople. (Sixth day,
		-									Lib.)
	24	W .								13	(Trials referred to as on the preceding Wednes-
							-			- 5	day.)
	25	Т.								1.4	4-7-7
		F .
	27	S .		Ċ						15	(Ref. to former Saturday.)
	- /									- 5	(**, *** ***************************
	08	SUNDAY	TTT	The	Trans					+6	Folgo elema (Consed sounds of End and)
										16	False alarm. (Second week of Fast past.)
	30 :	A E +								17	News from Casarius. City to be spared. Senate still in prison.
April	4	SUNDAY	IV.	in I	LENT					18 of Baths.)
		Passion
	16	F .								20
	18	PALM SU	NDA	Υ.						_
		EASTER							Ť	21	Return of Flavian, and full pardon, related.
June	_										Feast of the Martyrs. St. Chrysostom ill.
J											- care at the state of the conference of the con
	28	SUNDAY	DEF	OD F	Accent	ION				T.O.	Hamily addragged to country needs
	20	SUNDAY	DEr (JRE	ZISCENS	1014	٠			19	Homily addressed to country people.

CONTENTS OF THE HOMILIES.

HOMILY I.	PAGE
This Homily was delivered in the Old Church of Antioch, while St. Chrysostom was yet a Presbyter, upon that saying of the Apostle, I Tim. v. 23: "Drink a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thy often infirmities"	331
HOMILY II.
Spoken in Antioch in the Old Church, as it was called, while he was a presbyter, on the subject of the calamity that had befallen the city in consequence of the tumult connected with the overthrow of the Statues of the Emperor Theodosius, the Great and Pious. And on the saying of the Apostle, "Charge them that are rich that they be not high-minded," I Tim. vi. 17. And against covetousness	344
HOMILY III.
On the departure of Flavian, Bishop of Antioch, who was gone on an embassy to the Emperor Theodosius, on behalf of the city. Of the dignity of the Priesthood. What is true fasting. Slander worse than devouring the human body. And finally of those who had been put to death on account of the sedition; and against those who complained that many innocent persons were apprehended	354
HOMILY IV.
An exhortation to the people respecting fortitude and patience, from the examples of Job and the Three Children in Babylon. The Homily concludes with an address on the subject of abstaining from oaths.	364
HOMILY V.
The exhortation of the last Homily is continued in this. The people are exhorted to bear with fortitude the impending wrath of the Emperor. The cases of Job and the Ninevites are referred to as examples. It is shewn that men ought not to fear death, but sin. What it is to die miserably is explained; and the Homily concludes with an earnest dissuasive against the use of oaths	371
HOMILY VI.
This Homily is intended to shew that the fear of Magistrates is beneficial. It also contains an account of what occurred, during their journey, to those who were conveying the tidings of the Sedition to the Emperor. The case of Jonah is further cited in illustration. The exhortation on the fear of death is here continued; and it is shewn, that he who suffers unjustly, and yet gives thanks to God, by whose permission it happens, is as one suffering for God's sake. Examples are again adduced from the history of the Three Children, and the Babylonian furnace. The Homily concludes with an address on the necessity of abstaining from oaths
HOMILY VII.
Recapitulation of former exhortations. Sin brought death and grief into the world, and they tend to its cure. Grief serviceable only for the destruction of sin. Remarks upon the passage, Gen. i. 1: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." It is argued that God's forethought for man in the work of creation affords ground of comfort; and that mercy is shewn even in chastisement, as in the saying, "Adam, where art thou?" Concluding admonition on the avoidance of oaths
HOMILY VIII.
An exhortation to virtue—and particularly upon the passage, "God was walking in Paradise in the cool of the day:"—and again on the subject of abstaining from oaths	395
HOMILY IX.
Commendation of those who had laid aside the practice of swearing. It is shewn that no one need scruple about hearing the divine oracles in the Church after a meal. Answer to the question, Why it was so long before the Holy Scriptures were given? Comment on the passage, "The heavens declare the glory of God," with a description of the natural world. And finally, an admonition against swearing.	399

	PAGE
HOMILY X.
Commendation of those who came to hear after taking a meal.—Observations on the physiology of the natural world; and against those who deify the creation; and on the duty of not swearing	406
HOMILY XI.
Thanksgiving to God for deliverance from the evils expected owing to the sedition; and recollection of the events which took place at the time. Also against those who find fault with the structure of the human body, and in general concerning the creation of man; and, in conclusion, on success in avoiding oaths.	412
HOMILY XII.
Thanksgiving to God for the pardon granted to the offenders against the Emperor. Physical discourse on the Creation. Proof that God, in creating man, implanted in him a natural law. Duty of avoiding oaths with the utmost diligence	418
HOMILY XIII.
A further thanksgiving to God for the change in the late melancholy aspect of affairs. Reminiscence of those who were dragged away, and punished because of the sedition. Exposition on the subject of the creation of man, and of his having received a natural law. Of the complete accomplishment of abstinence from oaths.	425
After the whole people had been freed from all distress, and had become assured of safety, certain persons again disturbed the city by fabricating false reports, and were convicted. Wherefore this Homily refers to that subject; and also to the admonition concerning oaths; for which reason also, the history of Jonathan, and Saul, and that of Jephthah, is brought forward; and it is shewn how many perjuries result from one oath	431
·
Again on the calamity of the city of Antioch. That fear is every way profitable. That sorrow is more useful than laughter. And upon the saying, "Remember that thou walkest in the midst of snares." And that it is worse to exact an oath than to commit murder	438
HOMILY XVI.
This Homily was delivered on the occasion of the Prefect entering the Church, for the purpose of pacifying the minds of the people, in consequence of a rumour of an intended sack having been announced to him, when all were meditating flight. It treats also on the subject of avoiding oaths, and on the words of the Apostle, "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ."	445
HOMILY XVII.
Of the Commissioners (Hellebichus, Commander of the Troops, and Cæsarius, Master of the Offices) sent by the Emperor Theodosius for the inquisition of the offenders, on account of the overturning of the Statues	452
HOMILY XVIII.
The former subject of the Sedition continued; also of fasting; and upon the Apostolic saying, "Rejoice in the Lord always"	458
HOMILY XIX.
On the Sunday called Episozomenes , to those who had come to Antioch from the country—also on the subject of avoiding oaths	464
HOMILY XX.
That the fast of Lent is not sufficient to make us competent to partake of the Communion, but that holiness is the first thing required. How it is possible not to entertain resentment, and that God takes much account of this law; and that the entertaining of resentment punishes those who are guilty of it even before they reach the place of torment Also concerning abstinence from oaths, and those who have not succeeded in abstaining from swearing	471
HOMILY XXI.
On the return of Flavian the Bishop, and the reconciliation of the Emperor with the city, and with those who had offended in overthrowing the Statues	482

HOMILIES OF ST. JOHN CHRYSOSTOM,

ARCHBISHOP OF CONSTANTINOPLE,

ADDRESSED TO THE PEOPLE OF ANTIOCH,

CONCERNING THE STATUES.

HOMILY I.

THE ARGUMENT.

This Homily was delivered in the Old Church of Antioch, while St. Chrysostom was yet a Presbyter, upon that saying of the Apostle, I Tim. v. 23, "Drink a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thy often infirmities."

For even as a trumpet sounding a fearful and coursed to us concerning the subjection of warlike note, it both dismays the enemy, and servants, and the madness of misers, as well arouses the dejected spirits on its own side, and filling them with great boldness, renders ous other matters. those who attend to it invincible against the devil! And again, as a lyre, that gently soothes with soul-captivating melody, it puts to slumber the disquietudes of perverse thoughts; and thus, with pleasure, instills into us much profit. Ye have heard then to-day the Apostle discoursing to Timothy of divers necessary matters! for he wrote to him as to the laying on of hands, saying, "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins." And he explained the grievous danger of such a trangression, by showing that so men will undergo the punishment of the sins perpetrated by others, in common with them, because they confer the power on their wickedness by the laying on of hands. Presently again he says, "Use a

1. Ye have heard the Apostolic voice, that little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine trumpet from heaven, that spiritual lyre! often infirmities." To-day also he has disas on the arrogance of the rich, and on vari-

> 2. Since then it is impossible to go through every part, what part of the words rehearsed would you have us select for the subject of our address to your charity? For as in a meadow, I perceive in what has been read a great diversity of flowers; a multiplicity of roses and violets, and of lilies not a few; and everywhere the various and copious fruit of the Spirit is scrttered around, as well as an abundant fragrance. Yea, rather the reading of the divine Scriptures is not a meadow only, but a paradise; for the flowers here have not a mere fragrance only, but fruit too, capable of nourishing the soul. What part then of the things rehearsed do you desire that we bring before you this day? Do you wish what seems the more insignificant, and easy for any one to understand, to be that which we should handle at present? To me, indeed, this seems proper, and I doubt not you

¹ So called, because situated in the more ancient part of the city of Antioch, near the river Orontes. It was also called the Apostolic Church, as being that founded by the Apostles.

This Homily was spoken a little before the breaking out of the sedition. It has, however, always been classed with the rest because alluded to in the next Homily.

² I Tim. v. 22.

³ Gr., "unto your love," a title by which St. Chrysostom addresses his hearers; as we say, "Your Grace," "Your Majesty."

that? "Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities." Well then, let us employ the whole of our discourse upon this subject; and this we would do, not for the love of praise, nor because we things about to be spoken are not our own, but such as the grace of the Holy Spirit may small, nor mean, but great and admirable, shall proceed at once to the proof. and worthy the munificence of the Giver.

ing of the divine Scriptures; for worldly instruction rolls forth its trifles in abundance, babblings, but dismisses them empty-handed, and without having gathered any profit great or small. Not so however is it with the grace of the Spirit, but, on the contrary, by means

5. For besides the subjects which have 3. Let us not therefore listen carelessly; been mentioned, there is another, about which since even they who roast the metallic earth, some are no less perplexed, enquiring within when they have thrown it into the furnace, themselves on what account God permitted a not only take up the masses of gold, but also man possessing such confidence towards Him,5 collect the small particles with the utmost whose bones and relics expelled demons,6 to care. Inasmuch, then, as we likewise have fall into such a state of infirmity; for it is not to roast the gold drawn from the Apostolic merely that he was sick, but constantly, and mines, not by casting it into the furnace, but for a length of time; and by these recurring by depositing it in the thoughts of your and prolonged infirmities he was not persouls; not lighting an earthly flame, but kin- mitted to have even a brief respite. "How dling the fire of the Spirit, let us collect the does this appear," it may be asked? From little particles with diligence. For if the the very words of Paul, for he does not say, saying be brief, yet is its virtue great. For on account of the "infirmity," but on account pearls too have their proper market, not owing of the "infirmities;" and not merely "into the size of the substance, but the beauty firmities," but he clearly speaks of these as of their nature. Even so is it with the read- being constant, when he says "thine often infirmities." Let those then attend to this, whoever they are, who being given over to a and deluges its hearers with a torrent of vain lingering? sickness are querulous and dejected under it.

will concur in this opinion. What then is this of small sentences, it implants divine wisdom that might seem plainer than anything else? in all who give heed, and one sentence often What but that, which seems so easy, and ob- times affords to those who receive it a suffivious for any one to say? Well! what is cient source of provision for the whole journey of life.3

^{4.} Since then its riches are so great, let us arouse ourselves, and receive that which is spoken with a watchful mind; for I am preparing to plunge our discussion to an extreme study to exhibit powers of oratory (for the depth. The admonition itself hath no doubt seemed beside the purpose, and superfluous to many; and they are apt to talk much in inspire); but in order that we may stir up this way, "Was Timothy of himself not able those hearers who are too listless, and may to judge what it was needful to make use of, convince them of the greatness of the treasure and did he wait to learn this of his teacher.4 of the holy Scriptures; and that it is neither And then did the teacher not only give direcsafe, nor free from peril, to run through them tions, but also set them down in writing, hastily. For if indeed a text so simple and graving it there as on a column of brass in obvious as this one, which seems to the mul- uis Epistle to him? and was he not ashamed titude to contain nothing that need be insisted to give directions about things of this nature, on, should appear to afford us the means of when writing in a public manner, to his disciabundant riches, and openings toward the ple?" For this end then, that thou mayest highest wisdom, much rather will those learn that the admonition, so far from being others, which at once manifest their native beside the purpose, was a necessary and wealth, satisfy those who attend to them with highly profitable one; and that the thing protheir infinite treasures. Assuredly then, we ceeded not from Paul, but from the grace of ought not hastily to pass by even those sen- the Spirit, viz. that this should have been (I tences of Scripture which are thought to be say) not a spoken precept, but one deposited plain; for these also have proceeded from the in letters, and to be handed down to all grace of the Spirit; but this grace is never future generations through the Epistle, I

³ Socr. H. E. iv. 23. Pambos was nineteen years in learning xxxix. 1. He excelled even St. Antony in exactness of speech. Ps. xxxix. 1. He excell Pall. Hist. Laus. c. 10.

A Or, the teacher, as he is called emphatically, Doctor Gentium, see 1 Tim. ii. 7.
5 Or, "Calman," παρρησίαν. See 1 Tim. iii. 13. Suicer misin-terprets the word as used by St. Chrysostom in Gen. Hom. IX. see, 4, of what man Jost in the fall; it means there not power, but confi-4,00 what man loss in deduce before God.
6 See on Rom. xvi. 5, Hom. XXXI.
7 An old translation has "slight," as if it were μικρφ.

¹ The operation of roasting the ore, in the Cornish mines, consists in placing it in a comminuted state in a furnace of a particular construction, where it is subjected to a strong heat, but not so strong as to smell it; by which the arsence, sulphur, and other impurities, are carried off in the form of vapor, leaving the heavier metallic substance behind. - Tr.

2 See on Rom, xvi. 5, Hom, XXXI.

world. For if he had been one of those who have retreated to the tops of mountains; who have fixed their cells in solitude, and who have chosen that life which is free from all business, the matter now enquired into were no such difficulty; but that one thrust forward in the throng, and in whose hands the care of so many Churches was placed, and who superintended whole cities and nations; nay, the world at large, with so much alacrity and diligence, should be subjected to the straitening of infirmities! This it is which may most of all bewilder one who does not duly consider it. Because, even if not for himself, yet for others at least, it was necessary he should have health. "He was the best general," says the objector. "The war was waged by him, not only against the unbeliever, but against demons, and against the devil himself. All the enemy contended with much vehemence, scattering the forces, and capturing prisoners;2 but this man was able to bring back myriads to the truth, and yet he was sick! For if," he says, "no other injury to the cause had come of this sickness, yet this alone was sufficient to discourage and relax the faithful. If soldiers, when they see their general detained in bed, become discouraged and slack for the fight, much rather was it probable that the faithful should betray somewhat of human nature, when they saw that teacher, who had wrought so many signs, in continual sickness and suffering of body."

7. But this is not all. These sceptics propose yet a further enquiry, by asking for what reason Timothy neither healed himself, nor was healed by his instructor, when he was reduced to this state. Whilst the Apostles raised the dead, cast out devils, and conquered death with abundant ease, they could not even restore the body of one sick man! Although with respect to other bodies, both during their own lives and after death, they manifested such extraordinary power, they did not restore a stomach that had lost its vigour! And what is more than this, Paul is not ashamed, and does not blush, after the many and great signs which he had displayed even by a simple word; yet, in writing to Timothy, to bid him take refuge in the healing virtue of wine drinking. Not that to drink wine is shameful. God forbid! For

6. But the subject of enquiry is not only, such precepts belong to heretics; but the that being a holy man he was sick, and sick matter of astonishment is, that he accounted so continually, but that he was at the same it no disgrace not to be able, without this time entrusted with the public affairs of the kind of assistance, to set one member right when it was disordered. Nevertheless, he was so far from being ashamed of this, that he has made it manifest to all posterity,3 You see then to what a depth we have brought down the subject, and how that which seemed to be little, is full of innumerable questions. Well then, let us proceed to the solution; for we have explored the question thus deep, in order that, having excited your attention, we might lay up the explanation in a safe storehouse.

8. But before I proceed to solve these questions, permit me to say something of the virtue of Timothy, and of the loving care of Paul. For what was ever more tender hearted than this man, who being so far distant, and encircled with so many cares, exercised so much consideration for the health of his disciple's stomach, and wrote with exact attention about the correction of his disorder? And what could equal the virtue of Timothy? He so despised luxury, and derided the sumptuous table, as to fall into sickness from excessive austerity, and intense fasting. For that he was not naturally so infirm a person, but had overthrown the strength of his stomach by fasting and water drinking; you may hear Paul himself carefully making this plain. For he does not simply say, "use a little wine;" but having said before, "drink no longer water," he then brings forward his counsel as to the drinking of wine. And this expression "no longer" was a manifest proof, that till then he had drunk water, and on that account was become infirm then would not wonder at his divine wisdom and strictness? He laid hold on the very heavens, and sprang to the highest point of virtue. And his Teacher testifies this, when he thus speaks, "I have sent unto you Timothy, who is my beloved and faithful son in the Lord;"4 and when Paul calls him "a son," and a "faithful and beloved son," these words are sufficient to show that he possessed every kind of virtue. For the judgments of the saints are not given according to favour or enmity, but are free from all prejudice. Timothy would not have been so enviable, if he had been Paul's son naturally, as he was now admirable, inasmuch as having no connection with him according to the flesh, he introduced himself by the relationship of piety into the Apostle's adoption;

¹ He appears to have acted beyond his local charge, as in joining in the address of several Epistles (see 2 Cor. i. 1, Phil. i. 1, Col. i. 2), and in various missions, as Phil. ii. 19, 22.

2 2 Tim. ii. 26.

³ i. e., by his precept to Timothy, ô (Paris reprint) seems a misprint for ôτι. Hoogeveen questions whether ότι can be used as ωστε. If that is not the sense here, the construction is imperfect. ωστε. If that is i preserving the marks of his spiritual wisdom " with exactness in all things. For even as a young bullock 2 linked to a bull, so he drew the yoke along with him, to whatever part of the world he went: and did not draw it the less on account of his youth, but his ready will made him emulate the labours of his teacher. And of this, Paul himself was again a witness when he said, "Let no man despise him, for he worketh the work of the Lord as I also do."3 See you how he bears witness, that the ardour of Timothy was the very counterpart of his own?

9. Furthermore, in order that he might not be thought to have said these things out of favour or kindness, he makes his hearers themselves to be witnesses of the virtue of his son, when he says, "But ye know the proof of him, that, as a son with a father, so he hath served with me in the Gospel;"4 that is, "ye have had experience of his virtue, and of his approved soul." At the same time, however, that he had reached to this height of good works, he did not thereby grow confident; but was full of anxiety and fear, therefore also he fasted rigidly, and was not affected as many are, who, when they have kept themselves to it but ten, or perhaps twenty months,5 straightway give up the matter altogether. He, I say, was in no wise thus affected, nor did he say anything like this to himself. "What further need have I of fasting? I have gotten the mastery of myself; I have overcome my lusts; I have mortified my body; I have affrighted demons; I have driven away the devil; I have raised the dead; I have cleansed lepers; I am become terrible to the adverse powers; what further need have I of fasting, or to seek safety from that quarter?" Anything like this he did not say, he did not think of; but, in proportion as he abounded with innumerable good works, so much the more did he fear and tremble.6 And he learnt this spiritual wisdom from his preceptor; for even he, after he had been rapt into the third heaven, and transported to paradise; and had heard unutterable words; and taken part in such mysteries; and traversed the whole world, like some winged being, when he wrote to the Corinthians, said, I fear "lest by any means having preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."7 And if Paul was afraid after so many signal good works; he who was able to say, "The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world;"8 much more does it become us to fear; and the rather in proportion as we have stored up 9 numerous good works. For then the devil becomes fiercer; then he is more savage, when he beholds us regulating our lives with carefulness! When he sees the cargo of virtue stowed together, and the lading become heavy, then he is in haste to accomplish a more grievous shipwreck! For the insignificant and abject man, although he may be supplanted and fall, brings not so great an injury to the common cause. But the man who has been standing most conspicuously as it were on some eminence of virtue. and who is one manifestly seen and known of all men, and admired of all; when he is assaulted and falls, causes great ruin and loss. Not only because he falls from this elevation but makes many of those who look up to him more negligent. And as it is in the body, some other limb may be destroyed without there being any great damage, but if the eyes be deprived of sight, or the head be seriously injured, the whole body is rendered useless; so also we must say of the saints, and of those who have performed the highest good works; when such are extinguished, when they contract any stain, they bring upon all the rest of the body a universal and, intolerable injury!

10. Timothy then, being aware of all these things, fortified himself on every side; for he knew that youth is an age of difficulty; that it is unstable; easily deceived; very apt to slip; and requires an exceedingly strong bridle. It is indeed a sort of combustible pile easily catching anything from without, and quickly kindled; and for that reason he took care to smother it on all sides; and strove to abate the flame in every way. The steed 10 that was unmanageable and restive he curbed with much vehemence, until he had tamed him of his wanton tricks; until he had made him docile; and delivered him under entire control, into the hands of that reason which is the charioteer." "Let the body," saith he, "be infirm; but let not the soul be infirm; let the flesh be bridled; but let not the race of the spirit towards heaven be checked."

means like these.

^{*} Gr. philosophy, which is almost always used by St. Chrysostom in this practical sense. "Divine wisdom" has been sometimes put for it.

for it.

2 μόσχος.

5 A course of discipline was usual with those who intended to live a truly Christian life. St. Chrysoctom spent four years in retirement. St. Augustin also practised self-discipline before his baptism (Conf. ix. 14, 17. p. 165), and afterwards x, 47, p. 293, see the end of Hom. XXVI. on Rom. xvi. 2, 4. And of men's falling off soon after haptism, on Rom. vi. 3; Hom. by 160, which passage favours the reading "days", allopted by Savile.

3 to the reading "days", allopted by Savile.

⁸ Gal. vi. 14. Valck-7 1 Cor. ix. 27.

^{7 1} Cor. ix. 27.
9 συνειληγότελ: "Have shared," makes no sense here. Valckenaer, Opusc. i. p. 208, corrects the same word in Or. i. de Laud. St. Paul, fin. Read συνειλογότελ. Att. from συλλέγον.
10 See on Rom, vii. 6; Hom. XII. p. 191.
11 Or., "which guided himself." A less easy construction, but better suited to the context. Compare Plato's famous illustration (probably hown to St. Chrysostom), Thedrus, 246, in which Reason is represented as a charioteer driving a chariot drawn by two horses, one of an aspiring, the other of a grovelling nature.

who are reduced to extreme weakness, no there be no drunkenness; for wine is the work noble and well awake.

counsel, such as it is, appears to some to that which is the workmanship of God, but give authority for drinking wine too freely, accuse the madness of a fellow mortal. But But this is not so. If indeed we closely in- thou, while omitting to reprove and correct vestigate this very saying, it rather amounts the sinner, treatest thy Benefactor with conto a recommendation of abstinence. For just tempt!" consider that Paul did not at first, nor at the 12. When, therefore, we hear men saying outset give this counsel. But when he saw such things, we should stop their mouths; for that all strength was overthrown, then he it is not the use of wine, but the want of gave it; and even then not simply, but with a moderation which produces drunkenness, certain prior limitation. He does not say Drunkenness! that root of all evils. Wine merely, "Use wine," but "a little" wine; was given to restore the body's weakness, not not because Timothy needed this admonition to overturn the soul's strength; to remove and advice, but because we need it. On this the sickness of the flesh, not to destroy the account, in writing to him, he prescribes the health of the spirit. Do not then, by using measure and limit of wine-drinking for us; the gift of God immoderately, afford a handle bidding him drink just so much as would to the foolish and the impudent. For what is correct disorder; as would bring health to the body, but not another disease. For the immoderate drinking of wine produces not fewer enness is a demon self-chosen, a disease withdiseases of body and of soul, than much out excuse, an overthrow that admits of no drinking of water, but many more, and more apology; a common shame to our kind. The severe; bringing in as it does upon the mind drunken man is not only useless in our asthe war of the passions, and a tempest of semblies; not only in public and private perverse thoughts, besides reducing the firm-ness of the body to a relaxed and flaccid con-dition. For the nature of land that is long stench. The belchings, and gapings, and disturbed by a superabundance of water, is speech of the intoxicated, are at once unnot thereby so much dissolved, as the force pleasant and offensive, and are utterly abhorof the human frame is enfeebled, relaxed, rent to those who see and converse with them; then against a want of moderation on either ards, and does not suffer them to win eternal side, and let us take care of the health of the body, at the same time that we prune away those who labour under this disease here, a given us of God, not that we might be there! Let us cut off then this evil habit, drunken, but that we might be sober; that we and let us hear Paul saying, "Use a little might be glad, not that we get ourselves pain. -"Wine," it says, "maketh glad the heart of 5 Ps. ciii. 15.

But moreover, one might especially wonder man," but thou makest it matter for sadness; at the man for this, that being thus diseased, since those who are inebriated are sullen and struggling with such an infirmity, he did beyond measure, and great darkness overnot become indifferent to God's business, but flew everywhere faster than those who have sound and vigourous constitutions; now to direct it. The passage before us is useful Ephesus; now to Corinth; often to Mace- also against heretics, who speak evil of God's donia and Italy; appearing everywhere, by creatures; for if it had been among the numland and by sea, with the Teacher, sharing in ber of things forbidden, Paul would not have everything his struggles and continuous dan- permitted it, nor would have said it was to gers; while the spiritual wisdom of his soul be used. And not only against the heretics, was not put to shame by his bodily infirmity. but against the simple ones among our breth-Such a thing is zeal for God! such lightness ren, who when they see any persons disgracof wing does it impart! For as with those ing themselves from drunkenness, instead of who possess well-regulated and sound consti- reproving such, blame the fruit given them tutions, strength is of no avail, if the soul is by God, and say, "Let there be no wine." abject, slothful, and stupid; so with those We should say then in answer to such, "Let hurt arises from their infirmity, if the soul be of God, but drunkenness is the work of the devil. Wine maketh not drunkenness; but II. The admonition however, and the intemperance produceth it. Do not accuse and reduced to a state of exhaustion, by the and the crown of these evils is, that this continual swilling of wine. Let us guard disease makes heaven inaccessible to drunkits luxurious propensities. For wine was grievous punishment is also awaiting them on account of his infirmity; so that if infirm- there will be no pardon nor excuse left us ity had not troubled him, he would not have hereafter for stumbling at the things which forced his disciple to allow himself even a happen, if after all, when there are so many small quantity, since it is fitting that we reasons, we are just as much perplexed and should always mete out even the needful meat disturbed as if there were not one to be found. and drink, which are given us, by occasions and necessities; and by no means go beyond them to suffer evil, that they may not too our need, nor do anything unmeaningly and easily be exalted into presumption, by the

to no purpose. 13. But since we have now learnt the tender care of Paul, and the virtue of Timothy, greater opinion of them than belongs to come and let us, in the next place, turn our human nature, and take them to be gods and discourse to the actual solution of those not men. questions. What then are the questions? For it is necessary again to mention them, made manifest, in prevailing, and overcomthat the solution of them may be plainer, ing, and advancing the word preached, For what reason then did God permit that through the efficacy of men who are infirm such a saint, and one entrusted with the and in bonds. management of so many matters, should fall into a state of disease; and that neither themselves may become more striking, serv-Timothy himself nor his teacher had strength ing God, as they do, not for a reward; but to correct the disorder, but needed that assist- showing even such right-mindedness as to ance which was to be had by drinking wine? give proof of their undiminished good will Such, indeed, were the questions proposed. towards Him after so many evils. But it is needful to bring forward a precise solution; so that if any should fall not only cerning the doctrine of a resurrection. For into the like sickness and disease, but into when thou seest a just man, and one aboundpoverty, and hunger, and bonds, and tor- ing in virtue, suffering ten thousand evils, ments, and discomfitures, and calumnies, and and thus departing the present life, thou art into all those evils which belong to the pres- altogether compelled, though unwillingly, to ent life, although they were great and won- think somewhat of the future judgment; for derful saints, you may still be able to find, if men do not suffer those who have laboured even for their case, in the things which are for themselves, to depart without wages and to-day to be advanced, an exact and very recompense; much more cannot God design, clear reply to those who are disposed to find that those who have so greatly laboured should fault. For ye have heard many asking such be sent away uncrowned. But if He cannot questions, as, "Why ever is it that such an intend to deprive those of the recompense of one, a moderate and meek man, comes to be their labours eventually, there must needs be dragged daily before the seat of judgment by a time, after the end of the life here, in which another who is lawless and wicked, and to they will receive the recompense of their suffer evils without number, and God permits present labours. this? For what reason again was another death?" "Such a man," says the objector, "was drowned; another was thrown down a precipice; and we might speak of many saints, as well in our own days as in the days of our the virtue of such persons, and we say to forefathers, who have suffered divers and every one of you, "Imitate Paul, emulate chequered tribulations." To the end, therefore, that we may see the reason of these passing character of their good works, sloththings, and that we ourselves may not be disturbed, nor overlook the case of others who thus meet with a stumbling-block, we should attend with earnest heed to the reasons now about to be advanced.

affliction which befalls the saints, I have reasons eight in number to declare unto your wine." For even this little he permits him me with the strictest attention, knowing that

The first reason then is, that God permits greatness of their good works and miracles.

The second, that others may not have a

The third, that the power of God may be

The fourth, that the endurance of these

The fifth, that our minds may be wise con-

The sixth, that all who fall into adversity man, upon false accusation, unjustly put to may have a sufficient consolation and alleviation, by looking at such persons, and remembering what sufferings have befallen them.

The seventh, that when we exhort you to Peter," ye may not, on account of the surfully shrink from such an imitation of them, as deeming them to have been partakers of a different nature.

The eighth, that when it is necessary to call any blessed, or the reverse, we may learn 14. For of the diversified and manifold whom we ought to account happy, and whom unhappy and wretched.

These then are the reasons; but it is neceslove. Therefore let all direct themselves to sary to establish them all from the Scriptures, HOMILY I.] deeper into your minds. the saints, that they may exercise moderation and lowliness, and that they may not be puffed that God permits it for this end; we may hear David the prophet, and Paul saying the same. The former says, "It is good for me, Lord, that I have been in trouble, that I might learn thy statutes:" and the latter having said, "I was caught up into the third heaven, and " transported to Paradise, goes on to say, "And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me." 2 What can be clearer than this? "That I might not be he, God permitted "the messengers of Satan to buffet me;" by messengers of Satan, indeed, he means not particular demons, but men 3 ministering for the devil, the unbelievers, the tyrants, the heathens, who perseveringly molested, and unceasingly worried him. And what he says is just this: "God was able to repress these persecutions and successive tribulations; but since I had been caught up into the third heaven, and transported to Paradise, lest through the abundance of these revelations I might be lifted up and think much of myself, he permitted these persecutions, and suffered these messengers of Satan to buffet me with persecutions and afflictions. that I might not be too much exalted." For them, be holy and wonderful men, as indeed they are, yet they are but men, and require much caution lest they should be too easily exalted; and as saints more than others. For nothing is so apt to exalt to presumption as a conscience full of good works, and a soul that lives in confidence. To the end, therefore, that these might suffer nothing of this kind, God permitted that there should be temptations and tribulations; these being powerful to keep them down, and to persuade to the exercise of moderation in all things.

16. That this very particular also contributes much to the showing forth of God's power, you may learn even from the same Apostle, who told us the former. In order that you may not say, (what indeed unbe-and to show with exactness that all that has lievers think), that God in permitting this, is been said on this subject is not an invention some infirm being, and suffers such persons of human reasoning, but the very sentence of to be continually afflicted, from not being the Scriptures. For thus will what we say be able to deliver His own from dangers: this at once more deserving of credit, and sink the very thing, I say, observe how Paul has demonstrated by means of these events, 15. That tribulation then is profitable to showing not only that the events were far from accusing Him of weakness, but that they proved His power more strikingly to all. up by their miracles and good works, and For having said, "There was given me a thorn in the flesh; a messenger of Satan to buffet me," and having thus signified his repeated trials, he goes on to add, "For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me; and He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is perfected in weakness." 4 "My power," He means, "is seen then when ye are in weakness; and yet through you, who seem to grow weak, the word preached is magnified, and is sown in all quarters." When therefore he was led to the dungeon, exalted above measure," for this reason, saith after having received a great number of stripes, he took prisoner the keeper of the prison.5 His feet were in the stocks, and his hands in the chain; and the prison shook at midnight while they were singing hymns. See you, how His power was perfected in weakness? If Paul had been at large, and had shaken that building, the thing would not have been so wonderful. "For this reason," He saith, "remain bound; and the walls shall be shaken on every side, and the prisoners shall be loosed; in order that My power may appear the greater, when through thee, confined and in fetters, all that are in bonds shall be loosed." This very circumstance then it was which at the time astounded the keeper of the prison, that being so forcibly confined, although Paul and Peter, and all that are like he, through prayer alone, prevailed to shake the foundations, and throw open the doors of the prison, and to unbind all the prisoners. Nor is this the only occasion. But with Peter too, and Paul himself, as well as the other disciples, one may see this occurring constantly; and in the midst of persecution, the grace of God ever flourishing, and appearing by the side of the tribulations, and thus proclaiming His power. Wherefore He saith, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is perfected in weakness."

17. But to show that many would be too often ready to imagine things of them above human nature, unless they saw them enduring such afflictions, hear how Paul was afraid on this very point; "For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool, but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above

¹ Ps. cxix. 71.

² 2 Cor. xii, 2, 4, 7.

³ So he explains it also on the passage, on 2 Cor., Hom. XXVI, See also on Rom. viii. 6, Trans. p. 251, and Bp. Bull, Serm. v.

heareth of me." But what is it that he imprisoned, banished, and placed in peril means? I am able, he declares, to speak of far greater miracles; but I am unwilling; lest the magnitude of the miracles should raise too high a notion of me among men. For this reason Peter also, when they a had restored the lame man, and all were wondering at them, in order to restrain the people, tion; and the fourth is, that the saints might and persuade them that they had exhibited nothing of this power of themselves, or from their native strength, says, "Why look ye so earnestly on us, as though by our own power or holiness we had made this man to walk?"3 And again at Lystra, the people were not mended for their cheerfulness under great only filled with astonishment, but led forth bulls, after crowning them with garlands, and were preparing to offer sacrifice to Paul and Barnabas. Observe the malice of the Devil. By those very same persons through whom the Lord was at work, to purge out ungodliness from the world, by the same did that enemy try to introduce it, again persuading them to take men for gods; which was what he had done in former times. And this is especially that which introduced the principle and root of idolatry. For many after having had success in wars, and set up trophies, and built cities, and done divers other benefits of this kind to the people of those times, came to be esteemed gods by the multitude, and were honoured with temples, and altars; and the whole catalogue of the Grecian gods is made up of such men. That this, therefore, may not be done towards the Saints,4 God permitted them constantly to be banished,to be scourged,—to fall into diseases; that the abundance of bodily infirmity, and the didst thou move me to destroy his substance." multiplicity of those temptations, might convince those who were then with them, both that they were men, who wrought such wonders, and that they contributed nothing of their own power; but that it was mere grace, that wrought through them all these miracles. For if they took men for gods, who had done but mean and vile things, much rather would they have thought these to be such, had they suffered nothing proper to humanity, when devil asked; for the latter said, "Put forth they performed miracles, such as no one had thine hand, and touch him;" " but God said ever before seen or heard of. For if when that which he seeth me to be, or that he they were scourged, thrown down precipices, every day, there were, notwithstanding, some who fell into this impious opinion, how much rather would they have been thus regarded, had they endured nothing which belongs to human nature!

18. This then is the third cause of afflicnot be supposed to serve God from a hope of present prosperity. For many of those who live in debauchery, when blamed as they often are by many, and invited to the labours of virtue; and when they hear the saints comhardships,5 attack their character on this ground; and not men only, but the devil himself hath taken up this suspicion. For when Job was surrounded with great wealth, and enjoyed much opulence, that wicked demon,6 being reproached by God on his account, and having nothing to say; when he could neither answer the accusations against himself, nor impugn the virtue of this just man; took refuge at once in this defence, speaking thus, "Doth Job fear thee for nought? Hast thou not made an hedge about him on all sides."1 "For reward then," saith he, "that man is virtuous, enjoying thereby so much opulence." What then did God? Being desirous to show, that it was not for reward that his saints serve Him, He stripped him of all his opulence; gave him over to poverty; and permitted him to fall into grievous disease. Afterwards reproving him,8 that he had suspected thus without cause, He saith, "He yet holdeth fast his integrity; to no purpose For it is a sufficient reward, and compensation to the saints, that they are serving God; since this indeed to the lover is reward enough, to love the object of his love; 9 and he seeks nothing besides, nor accounts anything greater than this. And if such be the case with regard to a man, much more in relation to God; which therefore that God might demonstrate, He gave more than the

² cor. xii, 6.

2 Cor. xii, 6.

2 Cor. xii, 6.

3 Cor., "he," referring to oi περὶ; St. John, however, may be included.

4 The heathen altars, βωμοὶ, must not be confounded with the Christian enverorigant raised over the relics of saints to God. St. Aug. ser. 273, c. γin Nat. Mart. Fructuati & C. de Sauctit, 1 (Ben. t. g.) "When didst thou ever hear me, or any of my bretheren and colleagues, say at the memorial of St. Theogenes, 'I ofker to thee, St. Theogenes,' or, 'I ofter to thee, Paul?' and if it be said to you, 'Do you worship (colis) to thee, St. Theogenes, 'I of the company of not thus, but, "I deliver him unto thee." world, the combatants that are vigorous, and in high condition of body, are not so well discerned, when they are enwrapt all around with the garment soaked in oil; but when casting this aside, they are brought forward unclothed into the arena; then above all they strike the spectators on every side with astonishment at the proportion of their limbs, there being no longer anything to conceal them; so also was it with Job. When he was enveloped in all that wealth, it was not visible to the many, what a man he was. But when, like the wrestler, that strips off his garment, he threw it aside, and came naked to the conflicts of piety, thus unclothed, he astonished all who saw him;' so that the very theatre of angels shouted at beholding his fortitude of soul, and applauded him as he won his crown! For, as I have already observed, he was not wealth, as when, casting it away like a garment, he exhibited himself naked as it were in a theatre, in the midst of the world, and all admired his vigor of soul, evidenced as this was not only by his being stripped of all things, but by the conflict, and by his patience in respect of his infirmity. And as I said and bodily strength, often do not seize their dle,4 that they may make a more splendid conquest; so also God gave to the devil to take this saint by the waist, that when he had overcome, after an attack so greatly to his disadvantage, and stretched his adversary on the ground, his crown might be so much the more glorious!

19. It is tried gold! Try it as thou desirest; examine it as thou wishest, thou wilt not find in it any dross. This shows us not only For just as in the contests' of the outer the fortitude of others, but also brings much farther 5 consolation; for what saith Christ, "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven: for in like manner did their fathers unto the prophets."6 Again, Paul writing to the Macedonians in his desire to console them, says, "For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which are in Judea. For ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews."7 And again, he consoles the Hebrews in like manner, reckoning up all the just who had lived 8 in furnaces; in pits; in deserts; in mountains; in caves; in hunger; and in poverty.9 For communion of suffering brings some consolation to the fallen.

20. But that this also introduces arguments so well seen of men, when clad in all that for the resurrection, hear the same Paul again, saying, "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what shall it profit me if the dead are not raised." 10 And further, "If in this life only we have hope, we are of all men the most miserable."" We suffer, he tells us, innumerable evils during the present life; if then there is no other before God Himself did not smite him; in life to be hoped for, what can be more order that the devil might not again say, wretched than our condition? Hence it is "Thou hast spared him, and hast not inflicted evident that our affairs are not bounded so great a trial as was necessary:" but he within the limits of this present state; and gave to the adversary the destruction of his this becomes manifest from our trials. For cattle, and power over his flesh. "I am God could never suffer those who have ensure," saith He, "of this wrestler; therefore dured so many and so great evils, and who I do not forbid thee to impose on him what- have spent all the present life in trials and ever struggles thou desirest." But as those dangers without number, to be without a recwho are well skilled in the sports of the ompense of far greater gifts; and if he could palæstra, and have reason to rely on their art not suffer this, it is certain that he has prepared another, a better and brighter life, in antagonists upright, nor take an equal advan- which he will crown those who have wrestled tage, but suffer them to take them by the mid- in the cause of godliness, and proclaim their praises in the presence of the whole world. So that when you see a just man straitened and afflicted; and in sickness, and in poverty, as well as innumerable other woes, till he ends this present life; say to thyself, that if there were no resurrection and judgment, God would not have permitted one, who endured such great evils for His sake, to depart hence without enjoying any good thing; from whence it is evident, that for such He has prepared another life, and one which is sweeter and much more endurable.

¹ τῶν ἐξωθεν, as being Pagan.
25ce St, Chrysostom on 1 lim. iv. 8, where "bodily exercise" means training for these games, or similar exercise for health. On the "garment," see Hom. III. c. (3), and on 1 lim. ii., Hom. VIII., Mor. Fabr. Afown. ii. 2, Grav. t. 8, he is mistaken in taking it to be a mere subligaculum.
3 Jobi. 21. stillow method of Patrochus united.

³ Job 1, 21.
4 See the wrestling match at Patroclus' funeral, II. xxiii. 726,
&c., where Ulysses, after an even trial, gives Ajax this advantage, and overthrows him by superior skill; and Ajax gives it in return, and gains an even fall by his greater weight and strength.

⁵ ἐτέραν al. ἐτέροις "brings the rest much." 6 Matt. v. 11, 12. The last clause of this passage seems quoted 6 Matt. v. 11, 12. The last clause of from the parallel passage, Luke vi. 23.

⁷ r Thess, ii. 14.

8 The word διάγοντας, in the Greek, comes last, and so separated from the "furnaces."

⁹ Heb. xi. 34, 35. 10 1 Cor. xv. 32. 22 g Cor. xvi. 19.

it were not so, then he would not suffer many another life, in which he is about to recomone for his wickedness, another for his virtue; on that account he forbears, while he sees the former enduring evil, and the latter living in luxury.

21. And that other reason too I will endeavor to bring forward from the Scriptures. say, when exhorted to the same virtue, that they were partakers of another nature, or were not men. On this account, a certain one speaking of the great Elias, says, "Elias was a man of like passions with us." Do you perceive, that he shows from a communion of suffering,3 that he was the same kind of man that we are? And again, "I too am a man of like passions with you." 4 And this guarantees a community of nature.

22. But that you may learn that this also teaches us to consider those blessed whom we ought to consider blessed, is evident from hence. For when you hear Paul saying, "Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffetted, and have no certain dwelling place." 5 And again; "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom us."14 Thus many then being the reasons he receiveth;"6 it is certain that it is not those which we have to advance for the afflictions who are enjoying quietness, but those who are in affliction for God's sake, and who are or be distressed, or disturbed on account of in tribulation, whom we must applaud, emulating those who live virtuously, and cultivate piety. For so speaks the prophet: "Their right hand is a right hand of iniquity. Their daughters beautified, ornamented after the similitude of a temple. Their garners full, bursting from one into another; their sheep fruitful; abundant in their streets; their oxen fat. There is no breaking down of the fence, nor passage through; nor clamor in their streets. They call the people blessed whose affairs are in this state." But what dost thou say, O prophet? "Blessed," saith he, "the people whose God is the Lord;" not the people affluent in wealth, but one adorned with godliness;8 that people, saith he, I esteem happy, although they suffer innumerable hardships!

ι την έτέραν. ² James v. 17. 5 1 Cor. iv. 11. 3 παθης. 6 Heb. xii. 6,

23. But if it were necessary to add a ninth? of the wicked to luxuriate through the present reason, we might say, that this tribulation life; and many of the just to remain in ten maketh those who are troubled more apthousand ills: but since there is provided proved; "For tribulation worketh patience: and patience, probation; and probation, hope; pense every man according to his deserts; and hope maketh not ashamed."10 Do you see that the probation, which comes of tribulation, fixes in us the hope of the good things to come, and that the abiding in trials causes us to have a good hope of the future? So that I did not say rashly, that these tribulations themselves mark out to us hopes of a But what was it? It was, that we might not resurrection, and make those who are tried the better; for, he saith, "as gold is tried in a furnace, so an acceptable man in the furnace of humiliation."

> 24. There is besides a tenth reason to mention; and what is it, but the one I have before frequently referred to? viz. that if we have any spots, we thus put them away. And the patriarch, making this matter plain, said to the rich man, "Lazarus hath received 12 his evil things," 13 hence "he is comforted." And besides this, we may find another reason, which is to this effect; that our crowns and rewards are thus increased. For in proportion as tribulations are more intense, so also are the rewards augmented; yea, even far more: "for the sufferings of the present time," it is said, "are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in of the saints, let us not take our trials amiss. them; but both ourselves discipline our own souls, and teach others to do the same.

> 25. And if, O beloved, thou seest a man living in virtue, keeping fast hold of spiritual wisdom, pleasing God, yet suffering innumerable ills, do not stumble! And although thou seest any one devoting himself to spiritual affairs, and about to achieve something useful, yet presently supplanted, be not discouraged! For I know there are many who offtimes propose a question to this effect: "Such a one," say they, "was performing a pilgrimage to some Martyr's shrine; and whilst conveying money to the poor, met with a shipwreck, and lost all. Another man, in doing the like, fell among robbers, and scarcely saved his life, leaving the place in a state of nudity." What then should we say? Why that in neither of these cases need one For if the one met with a shipwreck,

⁴ Wisd, vii. 1.

7 Ps. cxiiv. 11-15.

8 St. Chrysostom, it must be observed, in this quotation as elsewhere, follows the Septuagint Version. In the present instance that version is only supported by the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic. See Walton's Polyglott. But the Targum follows the Hebrew (our sons, v. 12), as do the English Translations. It is obvious that Job xxiv. or Ps. Ixxiii. might have been alleged, but this doctrine is clearer and more frequent in the New Testament.

⁹ St. Chrysostom has not exactly kept to his order of enumera-tion in these reasons, but considers the last three under one head, probably for the sake of brevity.

probably for the sake of Drevity.

10 Rom. v₃ -5,

12 " ἀπέλαβεν," which word he seems justified in applying to Lazarus too by the "likeviise," the article bears out "his evil things."

13 Luke xvi. 25,

14 Rom. viii. 18.

vet he hath the fruit of his righteousness complete inasmuch as he fulfilled all his own part. He collected the money together, he stowed it away, he took it with him, he departed on his pilgrimage; but the shipwreck that followed was not of his own will. why did God permit it?" In order that he might make the man approved. "But," says one, "the poor were deprived of the money." Thou dost not so care for the poor, as the God who made them? for if they were deprived of these things, He is able to provide a greater supply of wealth for them from another quarter.

26. Let us not then call Him to account for what He does; but let us give Him glory in all things. For it is not lightly and to no purpose that He often permits such events. But beside that He does not overlook those Lord! that would have enjoyed comfort from such wealth; and instead of it, affords them some other supply of sustenance; He also makes him who suffers the shipwreck more approved, and provides him a greater reward; inasmuch as the giving thanks to God, when one falls into such calamities, is a far greater matter than giving alms. For not what we give in alms only, but whatever we have been deprived of by others, and borne it with fortitude; this too brings us much fruit. And that you may learn, that the latter is indeed the greater thing, I will make it evident from what befell Job. He, when a possessor of wealth, opened his house to the poor, and whatever he had he bestowed; but he was not so illustrious when he opened his house to the poor, as when, upon hearing that his house had fallen down, he did not take it impatiently. He was not illustrious when he clad the naked with the fleece of his flock, as he was illustrious and renowned when he heard that the fire had fallen, and consumed all his flocks, and yet gave thanks. Before, he was a lover of man; now, he was a lover of Wisdom. Before, he had compassion on Lord! And he did not say to himself, "Why poor were supported; and if I was unworthy to enjoy such plenty, at least He should have spared me for the sake of the partakers."

27. Nothing of this sort did Job utter, no nor think, because he knew that God was dispensing all things for good. That you may learn, moreover, that he gave a heavier blow to the devil after this, when, being stripped of all things, he gave thanks, than when, being in possession of them, he gave alms; observe, that when he was in possession, the devil could utter a certain suspicion, and however false, he yet could utter it: "Doth Job serve thee for nought?" But when he had taken all, and stripped him of everything, and the man yet retained the same good will towards God, from that time his shameless mouth was stopped, and had nothing further to allege. For the just man was more illustrious than in his former state.2 For to bear nobly and thankfully the privation of all things, is a far greater thing than it was to give alms whilst living in affluence; and it has been accordingly demonstrated in the case of this just man. Before, there was much benignity to his fellow-servants; now, there was exceeding love shown towards the

28. And I do not lengthen out this discourse without purpose; forasmuch as there are many, who, often whilst engaged in works of mercy, as supporting widows, have been spoiled of all their substance. Some again, by the accident of some fire, have lost their all; some have met with shipwreck; others, by false informations and injuries of that sort, though they have done many alms-deeds, have fallen into the extremes of poverty, sickness, and disease, and have obtained no help from any one. Lest we should say then, as many often do, "No man knoweth anything; "2 what has just been said may suffice to remove all perplexity on this point. Suppose it is objected that "such an one, after having done many alms-deeds, has lost all?" And what if he had lost all? If he gives thanks for this loss, he will draw down much greater favour from God! And he will not receive twofold, as Job did, but a hundredfold in the life to come. But if here he does endure evil, the very circumstance of his sustaining all with fortitude will bring him a greater treasure; for God permits him to fall from plenty to poverty, for the purpose of the poor; but now he gave thanks to the calling him thus to the more frequent exercises, and greater conflicts. Hath it hapis it that this hath happened? The flocks pened as is often the case, that the fire seizare consumed from which thousands of the ing upon thy house, hath burnt it up and devoured all thy substance? Remember

² So Ben, render λαμπρότερος γὰρ ἀπὸ τῶν προτέρων ὁ δικαιος ην. No other sense seems possible, yet this is bad Greek: probably the right reading is γὰρ ἡ ἀπὸ, and the sense, "he was more illustrious than from his former deeds."
3 A proverbial expression, as it should seem, intended to deny that there is any evidence of a particular Providence. Comp. 1ph.

Πάντα γὰρτὰ τῶν θεῶν
Εἰς ἀἀρανς ἐρπει, κ'οὐδεν οἰδ' οὐδεὶς κακόν,
'Ἡ γὰρ τίχε παρηγος ἐς τὸ δυσμαθές.
'Ἡ The Gods' decree
Moves all to unseen ends, and none can tell
What ill shall meet him; fortune blinds our way."

But the sentiment of Iphigenia will admit a pious interpretation.

what happened to Job; give thanks to the dangers, and punishments, and deaths, and Lord, who though he was able to forbid, did ten thousand evils, still they did not desist a reward as if thou hadst deposited all thy wealth in the hands of the poor! But dost thou spend thy days in poverty and hunger, and in the midst of a thousand dangers? Remember Lazarus who had to buffet with disease, and poverty, and desolateness, and those other innumerable trials; and that after so high a degree of virtue! Remember the Apostles, who lived in hunger, and thirst, and nakedness; the prophets, the patriarchs, the just men, and you will find all these not among the rich or luxurious, but among the poor, the afflicted, and the distressed!

29. Saying these things to thyself, give thanks unto the Lord, that he hath made thee to be of this part, not hating thee, but loving thee greatly; since He would not have permitted those men either to suffer thus, if he had not exceedingly loved them, because He made them more illustrious by these evils. There is nothing so good as thanksgiving; even as there is nothing worse than blasphemy. We should not wonder. that when we become intent upon spiritual things, we suffer much that is grievous. For as thieves do not dig through and assiduously keep watch there, where there is hay, and chaff, and straw, but where there is gold and silver; so also the devil besets those especially who are engaged in spiritual matters. Where virtue is, there are many snares! where alms-giving is, there is envy! But we have one weapon which is the best, and sufeverything to give thanks to God. Tell me, vet God permitted it, not hating one who had honoured him, but loving him greatly; and beside that which came of that excellent sacrifice, providing him another crown by marsuch things are the more to be wondered at, permitted it; thus revealing the more abuneven for this; because, though they foresee not forbid it; and thou wilt receive as great from those good works, nor become less zealous from the expectation of terrors 3

30. As, therefore, the Three Children said, "There is a God in heaven, who is able to deliver us; and if not, let it be known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, and that we will not worship the golden image which thou hast set up."4 Do thou also, when about to perform any duty to God, look forward to manifold dangers, manifold punishments, manifold deaths; and be not surprised, nor be disturbed, if such things happen. For it is said, "My Son, if thou come to serve the Lord, prepare thy soul for temptation." 5 For surely no one choosing to fight,6 expects to carry off the crown without wounds! And thou, therefore, who hast undertaken to wage a complete combat? with the devil, think not to pursue a life without danger, and full of luxury! God hath not pledged to thee His recompense and His promise here; but everything that is splendid for thee in the future life! Be glad and rejoice then, if when thou hast thyself done any good action, thou receive the contrary, or if thou see another suffering this; inasmuch as this becomes to thee the source of a higher recompense! Do not be downcast: nor give up thy zeal, nor become the more torpid; but rather press onward with more eagerness; since even the Apostles, when they preached, although scourged, stoned, and constant inmates of the prisons, did not only after deliverance from dangers, but also ficient to repel all such engines as these; in in those very dangers, announce with greater forwardness the message of Truth. Paul is did not Abel, when offering the first fruits to be seen in prison, yea, even in chains, God, fall by the hand of his brother? But instructing and initiating: 8 and moreover doing the very same in a court of justice, in shipwreck, in tempest, and in a thousand dangers. Do thou too imitate these saints, and cease not from good works, so long as tyrdom. Moses wished to protect a certain thou art able; and although thou seest the one who was injured, and he was put into the devil thwarting thee ten thousand times, never extremest peril, and banished his country.2 fall back! Thou perchance, bearing with thee This too God permitted, that thou mightest thy wealth, hast met with shipwreck; but learn the patience of the saints. For if, Paul carrying the word, far more precious foreknowing that we should suffer nothing of than all wealth, was going to Rome, and was a grievous kind, we then put our hands to wrecked; and sustained innumerable hardthe work of religion, we should not seem to ships. And this he himself signified, when he be doing anything great, as having such a said, "Many times we desired to come unto pledge of safety. But as it is, those who do you, but Satan hindered us." And God

¹ St. Chrysostom is frequent in his praises of the patience of Lazarus, as in his Disc. Quod nema leditur nisi a seiβso, sec. 10, Ben. iii. p. 455, and in his Homilies de Lazarue. Ben. i. p. 720, &c. 2 Exod. 1.

2 Exod. 1.

2 Exod. 1.

3 al. deaths. 4 Dan. iii. 17, 18. 5 Eccles, ii. 1. 6 πυκτεύειν. 7πακραταίζειν. The Pancration "consists of the two exercises of wrestling and boxing; from the former it borrows the custom of throwing down; from the latter, that of beating adversaries," Pott. Ant. c. 21.

2 Exod. 1.

3 al. deaths. 4 Dan. iii. 17, 18. 5 Eccles, ii. 1. 6 πυκτεύειν. 7πακραταίζειν. The Pancration "consists of the two exercises of wrestling and boxing; from the former it borrows the custom of throwing down; from the latter, that of beating adversaries," Pott. Ant. c. 21.

3 Expod. 1.

4 Dan. iii. 17, 18. 5 Eccles, ii. 1. 6 πυκτεύειν. 7πακραταίζειν. The Pancration "consists of the two exercises of wrestling and boxing; from the former it borrows the custom of throwing down; from the latter, that of beating adversaries," Pott. Ant. c. 21.

4 Expod. 1.

5 Eccles, ii. 1. 6 πυκτεύειν. 7πακραταίζειν. The Pancration "consists of the two exercises" the supplies of the supplies dantly His power, and showing that the mul- for every one who is willing, to bring forward titude of things which the devil did, or prevented from being done, neither lessened nor interrupted the preaching of the Gospel. On this account Paul gave God thanks in all things; and knowing that he was himself thereby rendered more approved, he exhibited his exceeding forwardness on every occasion, letting none of these impediments prevent him !

reason did God permit these impediments?" everything giving thanks. This then let us would you not say that I was mad? But already. Hast thou lost money? If thou thy martyrdom, since John was also a martyr. not regained possession of thy wealth; yea for thee! And make me not this cold reply. and thy soul, which thou hadst, thou hast "What matters it to me? I have nothing in sacrificed!

32. But since our discourse has now turned to the subject of blasphemy, I desire to ask one favor of you all, in return for this my address, and speaking with you; which is, that you will correct on my behalf the blasphemers of this city. And should you hear any one in the public thoroughfare, or in the midst of the forum, blaspheming God; go up to him and rebuke him; and should it be necessary to inflict blows, spare not to do so. Smite him on the face; strike his mouth; sanctify thy hand with the blow, and if any should accuse thee, and drag thee to the place of justice, follow them thither; and when the judge on the bench calls thee to account, say boldly that the man blasphemed the King of angels! For if it be necessary to punish will but choose to take in hand the safety of those who blaspheme an earthly king, much more so those who insult God. It is a common crime, a public injury; and it is lawful an accusation. Let the Jews and Greeks learn, that the Christians are the saviours of the city; that they are its guardians, its patrons, and its teachers. Let the dissolute and the perverse also learn this; that they must fear the servants of God too; that if at any time they are inclined to utter such a thing, they may look round every way at each other, and tremble even at their own shadows. 31. As often then as we are frustrated in anxious lest perchance a Christian, having spiritual works, so often let us again take heard what they said, should spring upon them in hand; and let us not say, "for what them and sharply chastise them. Have you not heard what John did? He saw a man for He permitted them to this end, that He that was a tyrant overthrowing the laws of might show thy alacrity much more to others, marriage; and with holdness, he proclaimed and thy great love; this being the special in the midst of the forum, "It is not lawful mark of one that loves, never to desist from for thee to have thy brother Philip's wife."' those things which are approved by him whom But I urge thee on, not against a prince or he loves. The man, indeed, who is flaccid a judge; nor against the marriage ordinance and listless, will fall back from the first shock; outraged; nor in behalf of fellow-servants but he who is energetic and alert, although he insulted. But I require thee to castigate an be hindered a thousand times, will devote equal, for insolence against the Lord. Truly, himself so much the more to the things of if I had said unto thee, punish and correct God; fulfilling all as far as he is able; and in those kings or judges who transgress the laws, do! Thanksgiving is a great treasure; large John forsooth acted thus. So that even this wealth; a good that cannot be taken away; a is not too much for us. Now then, at least, powerful weapon! Even as blaspheniy in- correct a fellow-servant; an equal; and alcreases our present mishap; and makes us though it should be necessary to die, do not lose much more beside than we have lost shrink from chastising a brother. This is hast been thankful, thou hast gained thy And although he was not commanded to sacsoul; and obtained greater wealth; having rifice, nor to worship an idol, yet for the acquired a greater measure of the favour of sacred laws that were despised, he laid down God. But if thou blasphemest, thou hast, his head. Do thou too then contend, even besides this, lost thine own safety; and hast to the death, for the truth, and God will fight common with him."3 With the devil alone we have nothing in common, but with all men we have many things in common; for they partake of the same nature with us; they inhabit the same earth, and they are nourished with the same food; they have the same Lord; they have received the same laws, and are invited to the same blessings with ourselves. Let us not say then, that we have nothing in common with them; for this is a satanic speech; a diabolical inhumanity. Therefore let us not give utterance to such words, but exhibit such a tender care as becomes brethren!

33. This indeed I, for my part, engage with the strictest certainty, and pledge myself to you all, that if all you who are present σωφρονίζειν, which implies a kind intention.

Mark vi. 18.
 i. ε., the blasphemer. Tr.

the inhabitants of this city, we shall speedily neglect our perishing brethren! The blashave it amended throughout. And this, even although but the least part of the city is here; of his anger, he has fallen. Come forward the least as to multitude, but the chief part and raise him up, both by words and by as it respects piety. Let us take in hand the deeds; and both by meekness and by vehemsafety of our brethren! One man inflamed ence; let the medicine be various. And if with zeal is sufficient to reform a whole com- we thus administer our own part, and take munity! But when not merely one, or two, pains for the safety of our neighbours, we shall or three, but so great a multitude are able to soon become objects of desire and affection take on them the care of the neglected, it is to the very persons who have the benefit of in no other way but by our own supineness, our correction; and what is more than all, we and not from our want of strength, that the shall enjoy those good things which are laid majority perish and fall. Is it not indeed ab- up in store. Which God grant that we may surd? When we happen to see a fight taking all obtain, by the grace and mercy of our place in the forum, we go into the midst of Lord Jesus Christ; through whom and with it, and reconcile the combatants! But why whom, to the Father with the Holy Ghost, be do I speak of a fight? If, perchance, we see glory and power and honor, both now and an ass fallen down, we all make haste to always, and forever and ever. Amen. stretch out a hand to raise him up. Yet we

HOMILY II.

Spoken in Antioch in the Old Church, as it was called, while he was a presbyter, on the subject of the calamity that had befallen the city in consequence of the tumult connected with the overthrow of the Statues of the Emperor Theodosius, the Great and Pious. And on the saying of the Apostle, "Charge them that are rich that they be not high-minded," I Tim, vi. 17. And against covetousness.

of? The present season is one for tears, and now, that he may make us more sobernot for words; for lamentation, not for dis-minded by the extremity of this tribulation. course; for prayer, not for preaching. Such Suffer me to mourn over our present state. is the magnitude of the deeds daringly done; We have been silent seven days, even as the so incurable is the wound, so deep the blow, friends of Job were.2 Suffer me to open my even beyond the power of all treatment, and mouth to-day, and to bewail this common craving assistance from above. Thus it was calamity. that Job, when he had lost all, sat himself down upon a dunghill; and his friends heard hath envied us? Whence hath all this change of it, and came, and seeing him, while yet come over us? Nothing was more dignified afar off, they rent their garments, and than our city! Now, never was anything sprinkled themselves with ashes, and made great lamentation. The same thing now and quiet, yea, even like a tractable and well ought all the cities around to do, to come to tamed steed, always submissive to the hands our city and to lament with all sympathy of its rulers, hath now so suddenly started off what has befallen us. He then sat down on with us, as to have wrought such evils, as his dunghill; she is now seated in the midst one can hardly dare to mention. of a great snare. For even as the devil then leaped violently the flocks, and herds, and ness of that wrath which is to be expected, all the substance of the just man, so now hath but for the extravagance of the frenzy which he raged against this whole city. But then, has been manifested! For although the as well as now, God permitted it; then, Emperor should not be provoked, or in anger,

I. WHAT shall I say, or what shall I speak | illustrious by the greatness of his trials; and

2. Who, beloved, hath bewitched us? Who

I mourn now and lament, not for the greatindeed, that he might make the just man more although he were neither to punish, nor take vengeance; how, I pray, are we to bear the and parent.4 Lately our city was shaken;5 I would say.

it is now become. As bees buzzing around nounced us happy in being so numerous. But behold now, this hive hath become solitary! For even as smoke does those bees, so fear liath driven away our swarms; and 'like a terebinth that hath lost its leaves,' stripped of almost all her inhabitants.

the utmost haste, eager to save but their bare much as they are already dead with fear. bodies; even so now too, when the wrath of 6. But if any one who is devoid of this fear has fallen upon our city.

Let all men learn the sufferings of the city, that, sympathizing with their mother, they may lift up their united voice to God from the whole earth; and with one consent entreat the King of heaven for their universal nurse shame of all that has been done? I find the but now the very souls of the inhabitants totword of instruction broken off by lamentation; ter! Then the foundations of the houses scarcely am I able to open my mouth, to part shook, but now the very foundations of every my lips, to move my tongue, or to utter a heart quiver; and we all see death daily besyllable! So, even like a curb, the weight of fore our eyes! We live in constant terror, grief checks my tongue, and keeps back what and endure the penalty of Cain; a more pitiable one than that of those who were the 3. Aforetime there was nothing happier former inmates of the prison; undergoing as than our city; nothing more melancholy than we now do a new and strange kind of siege, far more terrible than the ordinary kind, For their hive, so before this the inhabitants every they who suffer this from enemies, are only day flitted about the forum, and all pro- shut up within the walls; but even the forum has become impassable to us, and every one is pent up within the walls of his own house! And as it is not safe for those who are beseiged to go beyond the walls, while the what the prophet says, bewailing Jerusalem, enemy without is encamped around; so we may fitly say now, "Our city is become neither, to many of those who inhabit this city, is it safe to go out of doors, or to apand as a garden that hath no water." For pear openly; on account of those who are in like manner as a garden when its irrigation everywhere hunting for the innocent as well fails, exhibits the trees stripped of their as the guilty; and seizing them even in the leaves, and bare of their fruits, so has it now midst of the forum, and dragging them to the fared with our city. For the help from above court of justice, without ceremony, and just having forsaken her, she stands desolate as chance directs.6 For this reason, freemen sit in doors shackled up with their domes-4. Nothing is sweeter than one's own tics; anxiously and minutely enquiring of country; but now, it has come to pass that those to whom they may safely put the quesnothing is more bitter! All flee from the tion, "Who has been seized to-day;" who place which brought them forth, as from a carried off; or punished? How was it? and snare. They desert it as they would a dun- in what mannner?" They live a life more geon; they leap out of it, as from a fire. And wretched than any kind of death; being comjust as when a house is seized upon by the pelled daily to mourn the calamities of others; flames, not only those who dwell therein, but while they tremble for their own safety, and all who are near, take their flight from it with are in no better case than the dead; inas-

the Emperor is expected to come as a fire 3 and anguish, chooses to enter the forum, he from above, every one presses to go forth in is presently driven back to his own dwelling, time, and to save the bare body, before the by the cheerless spectacle; finding hardly fire in its progress reaches them. And now perchance one or two people, and those hang-our calamity has become an enigma; a flight ing their heads and creeping about with without enemies; an expulsion of inhabitants downcast looks, where but a few days before without a battle; a captivity without capture! the multitude swept along more incessantly We have not seen the fire of barbarians, nor than the streams of rivers. Yet all these beheld the face of enemies; and yet we ex- have now been driven away from us! And, perience the sufferings of captives. All men as when many trees in a thick wood of oak are now hear of our calamities; for receiving our cut down in all directions, the spectacle beexiles, they learn from them the stroke which comes a melancholy one, even like that of a head with many patches of baldness; even so 5. Yet I am not ashamed, nor blush at this. the city itself, its inhabitants being dimin-

¹ E. V., as an oak whose leaf fadeth, Heb. 778 which may be either tree.

¹sa. i. 30 3 Ben. πυράς, "burning pile" (as of beams, &c.).

⁴ St. Chrysostom alludes more than once in these Homilies to the distinction referred to in Acts xi. 26, as one that all must still recognize.

5 Antioch suffered much from earthquakes before and after this period. It was almost demolished by this visitation, A.D. 340, and so again at several periods afterwards. More than 60,000 of its inhabitants perished from the same cause, A.D. 588.

6 ἀπλῶκ εαὶ ῶς ἔτυχεν, i.e., without regard to the ordinary forms of justice used in apprehending the guilty or suspected.

7 Or executed, ἀπάχθη, see Hom. 111. (6).

8 Or "more than rivalled," ἀπέχρηστεν.

the mourning women, that they may come, ary instruction! and for the cunning women, and let them take up a wailing. Let your 3 eyes run down me your ears awhile! Shake off this dewith water, and your eyelids gush out with tears." Ye hills take up wailing, and ye custom; 5 and as we have been used always mountains lamentation! Let us call the to meet here with gladness, so let us also do whole creation into sympathy with our evils. So great a city, and the head of those which lie under the eastern sky, is in danger of being torn away from the midst of the civilized world! She that had so many children, has now suddenly become childless, and there is no one who shall come to her aid! For he who has been insulted has not an equal in dignity upon earth; for he is a monarch; the summit and head of all here below! On this account then let us take refuge in the King that is above. Him let us call in to our aid. If we may not obtain the favour of heaven, there is no consolation left for what has befallen us!

8. Here I could wish to end this discourse;

ished and but few appearing here and there, for the minds of those who are in anguish are is now become dreary, and sheds a heavy indisposed to extend their discourses to a mist of sorrow over those who witness it, great length. And as when some dense cloud And not the ground only, but the very nature has formed, and flying under the solar rays, of the air, and even the circle of the sun's returns back to him all his splendour again, beams, seem now to me to look mournful, so indeed does the cloud of sadness, when it and to shine more dimly; not that the elements change their nature, but that our eyes easy passage for the word, but chokes it and being confused by the cloud of sadness, are restrains it forcibly within. And this is the unable to receive the light of the rays clearly, case not only with those who speak, but with or with the same relish. This is what the those who hear; for as it does not suffer the prophet of old bewailed, when he said, "The word to burst forth freely from the soul of sun shall go down at noon, and the day shall the speaker, so neither does it suffer it to be darkened." And this he said, not as sink into the mind of those who listen, with though the Day Star 2 should be eclipsed, or its natural power. Therefore also the Jews the day should disappear, but because those of old time, while slaving at the mud and who are in sorrow, are not able to perceive bricks, had not the heart to listen to Moses, the light even of noon day on account of the while he repeatedly told them great things darkness of their anguish; which indeed has respecting their future deliverance; despondbeen the case now. And wherever any one ency making their minds inaccessible to the looks abroad, whether upon the ground or address, and shutting up their sense of hearupon the walls; whether upon the columns ing. I could have wished then, as to myself, of the city, or upon his neighbours, he seems to have put an end here to my discourse; to see night and deep gloom; so full is all of but thinking that it is not only the nature of melancholy! There is a silence big with a cloud to intercept the forward passage of horror, and loneliness everywhere; and that the sun's rays, but that often just the opposite dear hum of the multitude is stifled; and happens to the cloud; since the sun continually even as though all were gone beneath the falling upon it with much warmth, wears it earth, so speechlessness hath now taken possession of the city; and all men seem like of it; and shining forth all at once, meets stones, and being oppressed by the calamity cheerfully the gaze of the beholders. This like a gag on their tongues; they maintain also I myself expect to do this day; and the the profoundest silence, yea, such a silence word being continually associated with your as if enemies had come on them, and had minds, and dwelling in them, I hope to burst consumed them all at once by fire and sword! the cloud of sadness, and to shine through 7. Now is it a fit season to say, "Call for your understandings again, with the custom-

> 9. But afford me your attention! Lend spondency! Let us return to our former now, casting all upon God. And this will contribute towards our actual deliverance from calamity. For should the Lord see that His words are listened to carefully; and that our love of divine wisdom stands the trial of the difficulty of these times, He will quickly take us up again, and will make out of the present tempest a calm and happy change. For this too is a thing in which it behoves the Christian to differ from the unbelievers, the bearing all things nobly; and through hope of the future, soaring above the attack of human evils. The believer hath his stand on the Rock; for this reason he cannot be overthrown by the dashing of the billows. For should the waves of temptation rise, they cannot reach to his feet. He stands too lofty my testimony, saying, Let us punish the for any such assault. Let us not then sink our own safety, as God who made us. There suffer any dreadful misfortune, as with Him who bestowed upon us a soul, and then gave us so many good things beside. Let us mount on the wings of these hopes, and hear the things about to be spoken with our accustomed readiness.

Amos viii. 9.
3 E. V., that our eyes may.

² τοῦ ἄστρου. 4 Jer. ix. 17, 18.

10. I made a prolonged discourse lately unto you beloved, and yet I saw all following it up, and no one turning back in the middle of the course." I return thanks to you for that readiness, and have received the reward of my labours. But there was another reward, besides that attention, which I asked of you at that time; perchance you know and recollect it. And what was the reward? That you should punish and chastise the blasphemers that were in the city; that ye should against God! I do not think that I then spoke these things of myself; but that God, foreseeing what was coming, injected these words into my mind; for if we had punished those who dared to do such things, that which has now happened would never have happened. How much better would it have been, if necessity so required, to run into danger; yea, to suffer in castigating and correcting such persons (which would have brought us a martyr's crown), than now to fear, to tremble, and to expect death, from the insubordination of such persons! Behold, the crime was that of a few, but the blame comes on all! Behold, through these, we are all now placed in fear, and are ourselves suffering the punishment of what these men dared to do! But if we had taken them in time, and cast them out of the city, and chastised them, and corrected the sick member, we should not have been subjected to our present terror. I know that the manners of this city have been of a noble character from old times; but that certain strangers, and men of mixed race, -accursed and pernicious characters,-hopeless of their own safety, have perpetrated what has been perpetrated. For this very reason I was always lifting up my voice, and unceasingly bearing madness of those blasphemers, -let us control down, beloved! We do not care so much for their spirit, and provide for their salvation; —yea, though it be necessary to die in doing is not so much solicitude on our part, lest we it, the deed would yet bring us great gain: let us not overlook the insult done to our common Lord; overlooking such things will bring forth some great evil to our city!

11. These things I foretold, and they have now actually taken place; -- and we are paying the penalty of that listlessness! You overlooked the insult that was done unto God !-Behold, he hath permitted the Emperor to be insulted, and peril to the utmost to hang over all, in order that we might pay by this fear the penalty of that listlessness; was it then vainly, and to no purpose I foretold these things, and assiduously urged your Charity? But nevertheless, nothing was done. Let it, however, be done now; and being chastened by our present calamity, let us now restrain the disorderly ma ness of restrain those who are violent and insolent these men. Let us shut up their mouths, even as we close up pestiferous fountains; and let us turn them to a contrary course, and the evils which have taken hold of the city shall undoubtedly be stayed. The Church is not a theatre, that we should listen for amusement. With profit ought we to depart hence, and some fresh and great gain should we acquire ere we leave this place. For it is but vainly and irrationally we meet together, if we have been but captivated for a time, and return home empty, and void of all improvement from the things spoken.

12. What need have I of these plaudits, these cheers and tumultuous signs of approval?3 The praise I seek, is that ye show forth all I have said in your works. Then am I an enviable and happy man, not when ye approve, but when ye perform with all readiness, whatsoever ye hear from me? Let every one then correct his neighbour, for "edify ye one another," it is said, and if we do not this, the crimes of each one will bring some general and intolerable damage to the city. Behold, while we are unconscious of any part in this transaction, we are no less affrighted than those who were daringly engaged in it! We are dreading lest the wrath of the Emperor should descend upon all; and it is not sufficient for us to say in defence, "I was not present; I was not an accomplice, nor a participator in these acts." "For this reason," he may reply, "thou shalt be punished, and pay the extreme penalty, because thou wert not present; and didst not

¹ οὐδένα ἐκ μέσης ὑποστρέψαντα τῆς ὁδοῦ. He evidently alludes to the first Homily—a long one—and which it appears from what he has just said, was preached seven days before this, T.κ. Montfaucon counts the seven days from the sedition. The order of reading the Epistles as lessons perhaps cannot be ascertained. The Codex Florer (Bodl. Auct. B. 123), has marks, but of later weeks: the passage presently mentioned and that in Hom. 1, fall on Thursday and Friday in the 27th, but this does not seem to the purpose. purpose.

² See Hom. III. (i.) fin.

³ Of public applause in the Church, see Bingham's Christian Antiquities, vol. 4, p. 593 sqq., New Ed.
4 1 Thess. v. 11.

check, nor restrain the rioters, and didst not it change its place with its migrating possesrun any risk for the honour of the Emperor! Hadst thou no part in these audacious deeds? I commend this, and take it well. But thou didst not check these things when being done. This is a cause of accusation!" Such words as these, we shall also hear from God, if we silently suffer the continuance of the injuries also who had buried his talent in the earth, was called to account, not for crimes done by himself, for he had given back the whole of that which was entrusted to him, but because he had not increased it; because he had not instructed others; because he had not deposited it in the hands of the bankers; that is, he had not admonished, or counselled, or rebuked, or amended those unruly sinners who were his neighbours. On this account he was sent away without reprieve to those intolerable punishments! But I fully trust that though ye did not before, ye will now at least perform this work of correction, and not overlook insult committed against God. For the events which have taken place are sufficient, even if no one had given any warning, to convince men ever so disposed to be insensible, that they must exert themselves for their own safety.

13. But it is now time that we should proceed to lay out before you the customary table from St. Paul, by handling the subject of this day's reading, and placing it in view for you all. What then was the text read today?' "Charge them that are rich in this world that they be not high-minded." 2 When he says, "the rich in this world," he makes it manifest, that there are others who are rich, that is, in the world to come: such as was that Lazarus, poor as to the present life, but rich as to the future; not in gold and silver, and such like perishable and transitory store of wealth; but in those unutterable good things "which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man."3 For this is true wealth and opulence, when there is good unmixed, and not subject to any change. Not such was the case of that rich man who despised him, but he became the poorest of mankind. Afterwards at least when he sought to obtain but a drop of water, he did not get possession even of that, to such extreme poverty was he come. For this reason he calls them rich "in the present world," to teach thee that along with the present life, worldly wealth is annihilated. It goes no further, neither does sors, but it often leaves them before their end; which therefore he shows by saying, "Neither trust in uncertain riches;" for nothing is so faithless as wealth; of which I have often said, and will not cease to say, that it is a runaway, thankless servant, having no fidelity; and should you throw over him and insults committed against Him. For he ten thousand chains, he will make off dragging his chains after him. Frequently, indeed, have those who possessed him shut him up with bars and doors, placing their slaves round about for guards. But he has over-persuaded these very servants, and has fled away together with his guards; dragging his keepers after him like a chain, so little security was there in this custody. What then can be more faithless than this? what more wretched than men devoted to it? When men endeavour with all eagerness to collect so frail and fleeting a thing, they do not hear what the prophet saith: "Woe unto them who trust in their power, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches." 4 Tell me why is this woe pronounced?-"He heapeth up treasure," saith he, "and knoweth not for whom he will gather it," 5—forasmuch as the labor is certain, but the enjoyment uncertain. Very often you toil and endure trouble for enemies. The inheritance of your wealth after your decease, coming as it does, in many instances, to those who have injured you, and plotted against you in a thousand ways, has assigned you the sins for your part, > 14. But here, it is worthy of enquiry, for what reason he does not say, "Charge those who are rich in the present world, not to be rich; charge them to become poor; charge them to get rid of what they have;' "charge them, not to be high-minded." For he knew that the root and foundation of riches is pride; and that if any man understood how to be unassuming, he would not make much ado about the matter. Tell me, indeed, for what reason thou leadest about so many servants, parasites, and flatterers, and all the other forms of pomp? Not for neces. sity, but only for pride; to the end that by these thou mayest seem more dignified than other men! Besides, he knew that wealth is not forbidden if it be used for that which is necessary. For as I observed,6 wine is not a bad thing, but drunkenness is so. A covetous man is one thing, and a rich man is another thing. The covetous man is not rich; he is in want of many things, and while he needs many things, he can never be rich.

but the enjoyment to others!

¹ On the ancient usages of the Church as to the reading of select portions of the Old and New Testament at stated seasons, see Bingham's Christian Antiquities, b. 14, c. 3.

² r Tim. vi. 17.

⁴ Ps. xlix. 6. 5 Ps. xxxix. 6.

The covetous man is a keeper, not a master, sooner give any one a portion of his flesh, than his buried gold. And as though he were ordered and compelled of some one to touch nothing of these hidden treasures, so with all earnestness he watches and keeps them, abstaining from his own, as if it were another's. And certainly, they are not his own. For what he can neither determine to bestow upon others, nor to distribute to the necessitous, although he may sustain infinite punishments, how can he possibly account his own? How does he hold possession of those things, of which he has neither the free use, nor enjoyment? But besides this,-Paul is not accustomed to enjoin everything on every man, but accommodates himself to the weakness of his hearers, even, indeed, as Christ also did. For when that rich man came to him, and asked him concerning Life, he did not say at once, "Go, sell that thou hast," i but omitting this, he spoke to him of other commandments. Nor afterwards, when he challenged Him and said, "What lack I yet?" did He simply say, "Sell what thou hast;" but, "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast." 3 "I lay it down for your determination. I give you full power to choose. I do not lay upon you any necessity." For this reason also, Paul spoke concerning humility; as well because of the weakness of his hearers, as because he perfectly knew, that could he bring them to exercise moderation, and to be free from pride, he should also quickly free them from eagerness about being rich.

15. And further, after giving this admonition, "not to be high-minded," he also taught the manner in which they would be able to avoid being so. And how was it? That they should consider the nature of wealth, how uncertain and faithless it is! therefore he goes on to say, "Neither trust in uncertain riches." The rich man is not one who is in possession of much, but one who gives much. Abraham was rich, but he was not covetous; for he turned not his thoughts to the house of this man, nor pryed into the wealth of that man; but going forth he looked around wherever there chanced to be a stranger, or a poor man, in order that he might succour poverty, and hospitably entertain the traveller. He covered not his roof with gold, but fixing his tent near the oak, he was contented with the shadow of its leaves. Yet so illustrious was his lodging, of wealth; a slave, not a lord. For he would that angels were not ashamed to tarry with him; for they sought not splendour of abode, but virtue of soul. This man then let us imitate, beloved, and bestow what we have upon the needy. That lodging was rudely prepared, but it was more illustrious than the halls of kings. No king has ever entertained angels; but he, dwelling under that oak, and having but pitched a tent, was thought worthy of that honour: not receiving the honour on account of the meanness of his dwelling, but enjoying that benefit on account of the magnificence of his soul, and the wealth therein deposited.

16. Let us too, then, adorn not our houses, but our souls in preference to the house. For is it not disgraceful to clothe our walls with marble, vainly and to no end, and to neglect Christ going about naked? What does thy house profit thee, O man! For wilt thou take it with thee when thou departest? This thou canst not take with thee, when thou departest. But thy soul, when thou departest, thou shalt assuredly take with thee! Behold now this great danger has overtaken us! Let your houses stand by you! Let them deliver you from the threatened peril! but they cannot! And ye yourselves are witnesses, who are leaving them solitary, and hurrying forth to the wilderness; fearing nothing to the rich concerning poverty, but them as ye would do snares and nets! Let riches now lend assistance! But it is no time for them to do so! If then the power of riches is found wanting before the wrath of man, much rather will this be the case, before the divine and inexorable tribunal! If it is but a man that is provoked and offended, and even now gold is of no avail, much more will the power of money be utterly impotent then, when God is angry, who has no need of wealth! We build houses that we may have a habitation; not that we may make an ambitious display. What is beyond our wants, is superfluous and useless. Put on a sandal which is larger than your foot! you will not endure it; for it is a hindrance to the step. Thus also a house larger than necessity requires, is an impediment to your progress towards heaven. Do you wish to build large and splendid houses? I forbid it not; but let it be not upon the earth! Build thyself tabernacles in heaven, and such that thou mayest be able to receive others; 4-tabernacles which never fall to pieces. Why art thou mad about fleeting things; and things that must be left here? Nothing is more slippery than wealth. comrade, a domestic enemy; and ye are witview; as even now too our very wealth makes the danger more insupportable to us! Thou seest indeed the poor ready for action, disit! Why, O man, dost thou seek thy fellow slaves? Christ stands ready to receive, and to keep thy deposits for thee; and not to keep only, but also to augment them, and to His hand no man can forcibly take them but it also here bestows a present reward. away. And He not only keeps the deposit, over thy wealth, He does not demand a recompense of thee, but gives thee a recompense!

¹ Matt. xix. 16.
2 Or "invited," as some read, προσεκαλέσατο. Ben. προεκα-

⁴ He may allude to Luke xvi. 9, but in Hom. de Las. 3, he cau-tions men against thinking that friends could save them if they did not themselves do good works.

things here! Thou hast a country which is house, and another the use thereof. mayest enjoy the recompense here. He who is nourished with good hopes, and is confident respecting things to come, hath here already tasted of the kingdom! For nothing ordinarily so repairs the soul, and makes a man better, as a good hope of things to come; mayest then provide for thy soul with suitable leisure. For they who spend all their cobwebs. But if they would be indifferent to exterior things, and earnestly expend all their

To-day it is for thee; to- attention upon the mind, adorning this at all morrow it is against thee. It arms the eyes points; then the soul of such men would be of the envious everywhere. It is a hostile a resting place for Christ. And having Christ for its inhabitant, what could ever be nesses of this, who possess it, and are in more blessed? Wouldest thou be rich? every way burying and concealing it from Have God for thy friend, and thou shalt be richer than all men !- Wouldest thou be rich? Be not high-minded!—This rule is suitable not only to things future, but to things presengaged, and prepared for all things; but ent. For there is no such object of envy, as the wealthy in great perplexity, and wander- a man of wealth; but when pride is supering about, seeking where they may bury their added, a two-fold precipice is formed; the gold, or seeking with whom they may deposit war becomes fiercer on all sides. But if you know how to exercise moderation, you undermine the tyranny of envy by your humility; and you possess whatever you do possess with safety. For such is the nature of virtue, that pay them back with much interest. Out of it not only profits us, as it respects futurity,

18. Let us not then be high-minded in but for this very thing He also frees thee reference to riches, or indeed to any other from thy perils. For among men, they who thing; for if even in spiritual things the man receive treasures in trust think that they have who is high-minded is fallen, and undone, done us a favour, in keeping that of which much more so as to carnal things. Let us they took charge; but with Christ it is the be mindful of our nature. Let us recollect contrary; for He does not say that He has our sins. Let us understand what we are; conferred, but that He has received a favour, and this will provide a sufficient groundwork when He receives thy deposited treasures; for complete humility. Tell me not, "I have and for the guardianship which He exercises laid up the revenues of this or that number of years; myriads of talents of gold; gains that are increasing every day." Say as much as you will, you say all in vain, and to no 17. What defence then can we claim, or purpose. Very often in one hour, yea, in one what excuse, when we pass by Him who is short moment, just as the light dust, when able to keep, and who is thankful for the trust the wind rushes down upon it from above, giving in return great and unspeakable re- are all these things swept out of the house by wards, and in place of this guardianship a blast. Our life is full of such examples, commit our treasures to men who have not and the Scriptures abound with lessons of the power to keep them, and who think they this sort. He who is rich to-day, is poor to-grant us a favour, and pay us back at last only morrow. Wherefore, I have often smiled, He who is rich to-day, is poor tothat which was given them. Thou art a when reading wills that said, let such a man stranger and a pilgrim with respect to the have the ownership of these fields, or of this thine own in the heavens! There transfer all have the use, but no man has the ownerall; —that before the actual enjoyment, thou ship. For although riches may remain with us all our lifetime, undergoing no change, we must transfer them in the end, whether we will or no, into the hands of others; having enjoyed only the use of them, and departing to another life naked and destitute of this ownership! Whence it is plain, that they only so that if thou transfer thy wealth there, thou have the ownership of property, who have despised its use, and derided its enjoyment. For the man that has cast his substance away endeavours upon the decoration of their dwell- from him, and bestowed it on the poor, he ing, rich as they are in outward things, are uses it as he ought; and takes with him the careless of that which is within, letting their ownership of these things when he departs, soul abide desolate and squalid, and full of not being stripped of the possession even in to render up an account of the deeds we have done. So that if any one wishes to have the possession of his riches, and the use and the ownership entire, let him disencumber himself from them all; since, truly, he who doth not this must at all events be separated from them at death; and frequently before his death will lose them, in the midst of dangers and innumerable ills.

¹ δεσποτεία, literally, the lordship.

the change comes suddenly; but that the rich man comes unpractised to the endurance of lifeless matter, but in "God, who giveth us all things richly to enjoy." So that the rich man stands in more uncertainty than the poor man, experiencing, as he does, frequent and diversified changes. What is the sense of this? "Who giveth to us all things richly to enjoy," 2 God giveth all those things with liberality, which are more necessary than riches; such, for example, as the air, the water, the fire, the sun; all things of this kind. The rich man is not able to say that poor man; he is not able to say that he may say, is it the greater and more necessary blessings, and those which maintain our life, that God hath made common; but the smaller and less valuable (I speak of money) are not thus common. Why is this? In order that our life might be disciplined, and that we might have training ground for virtue. if these necessaries were not common, perhaps they who are rich, practising their usual covetousness, would strangle those who were poor. For if they do this for the sake of money, much rather would they do so for the things referred to. Again, if money was also an universal possession, and were offered in the same manner to all, the occasion for almsgiving, and the opportunity for benevolence, would be taken away.

20. That we may live then securely, the sources of our existence have been made common. On the other hand, to the end that we may have an opportunity of gaining crowns and good report, property has not been made death, but at that time receiving all back common; in order that hating covetousness, again; yea, and much more than these things, and following after righteousness, and freely at that day of judgment, when he most needs bestowing our goods upon the poor, we may their protection, and when we shall all have by this method obtain a certain kind of relief for our sins,3 God hath made thee rich, why makest thou thyself poor? He hath made thee rich that thou mayest assist the needy; that thou mayest have release of thine own sins, by liberality to others. He hath given thee money, not that thou mayest shut it up for thy destruction, but that thou mayest pour it forth for thy salvation. this reason also He hath made the possession 19. And this is not the only disaster, that of riches uncertain and unstable, that by this means he might slack the intensity of thy madness concerning it. For if its possessors, poverty. But not so the poor man; for he even now whilst they can have no confidence confides not in gold and silver, which are in regard to it, but behold a multitude of snares produced from this quarter, are so inflamed with the desire of these things; if the elements of security and stability were added to wealth, whom would they have spared? From whom would they have refrained? From what widows? From what orphans? From what poor?

21. Wherefore let us not consider riches to be a great good; for the great good is, not to possess money, but to possess the fear of God and all manner of piety. Behold, now he enjoys more of the sunbeams than the if there were any righteous man here, having great boldness toward God,4 notwithstanding breathes more plenteous air: but all these he might be the poorest of mortals, he would are offered alike to all. And wherefore, one be sufficient to liberate us from present evils! For he only needed to spread forth his hands towards heaven, and to call upon God, and this cloud would pass away! But now gold is treasured up in abundance; and yet it is more useless than mere clay for the purpose of deliverance from the impending calamities! Nor is it only in a peril of this kind; but should disease or death, or any such evil befall us, the impotency of wealth is fully proved, since it is at a loss, and has no consolation of its own to offer us amidst these

> 22. There is one thing in which wealth seems to have an advantage over poverty, viz, that it lives in a state of daily luxury, and is supplied with an abundance of pleasure in its banquets. This however may also be seen exemplified at the table of the poor; and these enjoy there a pleasure superior to that of the rich. And marvel not at this, nor think what I say a paradox; for I will make the matter clear to you from the evidence of facts. Ye know of course, and ye all confess

¹ προστασίας. Comp. Hom. adv. Jud. vii. v. fin., where he speaks of the intercession of those whose souls we may have benefitted as even of more avail; also in the Homilies on 2 Cor. iv. 13, no. 3, v. fin., he refers to Luke xvi. 9, and soon after calls the poor προσάται, in this sense. See Cat. Aur., on that passage.

2 t Tim. vi. 17.

³ Plato de l.egg. x. (not xi.) uses παραμυθίον not, as Stephanus takes it, for "an expiation," but "a means of persuasion;" the word used here probably means relief.

4 παρβησίαν, as is said of Timothy, Hom. I. 5. Comp. James that in feasts it is not the nature of the such pleasure as I have said. But the rich. viands, but the disposition of those who feast upon them, which usually causes the pleasure; for instance, when any one comes to the table hungry, the food will taste sweeter than any delicacy, or condiment, or a thousand exquisite preparations for the palate, although it may be the most common article of diet. But he who without tarrying for necessity, or first waiting till he is hungry, (as the custom is with the wealthy), when he comes to the table, notwithstanding he finds the most refined dainties spread before him, has no sensation of pleasure, his appetite not being previously excited. And that you may learn that this is the actual state of the case, besides that you are all witnesses to it, let us hear the Scripture telling us the same truth; "The full soul," it is said, "loaths the honey comb, but to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet." Yet what can be sweeter than honey, and the honey comb? Still he saith it is not sweet to the man that is not hungry. And what can be more disagreeable than bitter things? And yet to those who are poverty stricken they are sweet. But that the poor come to the meal with need and hunger, and that the rich do not wait for this is manifest, I suppose, to every one. Hence they do not reap the fruit of a genuine and unmixed pleasure. Nor is it only in the article of food, but any one may perceive that the same thing occurs with respect to drinks; and as in the one case hunger is the cause of pleasure, far more than the quality of the yiands, so also in the other, thirst usually makes the draught sweetest, although what is drunk is only water. And this is that which the prophet intimated, when he said. "He satisfied them with honey out of the rock," 2 But we do not read in any part of Scripture that Moses brought honey out of the rock, but throughout the history we read of rivers, and waters, and cool streams. What then is it that was meant? For the Scripture by no means speaks falsely. Inasmuch, then, as they were thirsty and wearied with drought, and found these streams of water so cooling, in order to show the pleasure of such a draught, he calls the water honey, not as though its nature were changed into honey, but because the condition of the drinkers made these streams sweeter than honey. You see how the condition of the thirsty is wont to make the draught sweet? Yea oftentimes have many of the poor, when wearied, and distressed, and parched with thirst, partaken of such streams even with whilst drinking wine that is sweet, and has the fragrance of flowers,3 and every perfection that wine can have, experience no such enjoyment.

352

23. The same thing happens as every one may perceive with regard to sleep. For not a soft couch, nor a bedstead overlaid with silver, nor the quietness that exists throughout the house, nor anything else of this kind. are so generally wont to make sleep sweet and pleasant, as labour and fatigue, and the need of sleep, and drowsiness when one lies down. And to this particular the experience of facts, nay, before actual experience, the assertion of the Scriptures bears witness. For Solomon, who had passed his life in luxury, when he wished to make this matter evident, said, "The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much?"4 Why does he add, "whether he eat little or much?" Both these things usually bring sleeplessness, viz. indigence, and excess of food; the one drying up the body, stiffening the eyelids and not suffering them to be closed; the other straitening and oppressing the breath, and inducing many pains. But at the same time so powerful a persuasive is labour, that though both these things should befall him, the servant is able to sleep. For since throughout the whole day, they are running about everywhere, ministering to their masters, being knocked about5 and hard pressed, and having but little time to take breath, they receive a sufficient recompense for their toils and labours in the pleasure of sleeping. And thus it hath happened through the goodness of God toward man, that these pleasures are not to be purchased with gold and silver, but with labour, with hard toil, with necessity, and every kind of discipline. Not so the rich. On the contrary, whilst lying on their beds, they are frequently without sleep through the whole night; and though they devise many schemes, they do not obtain such pleasure. But the poor man when released from his daily labours. having his limbs completely tired, falls almost before he can lie down into a slumber that is sound, and sweet, and genuine, enjoying this reward, which is not a small one, of his fair day's toils. Since therefore the poor man sleeps, and drinks, and eats with more pleasure than the rich man, what further value is left to riches, now deprived of the one advantage they seemed to have over poverty? For this reason also, from the beginning, God tied the man to labour, not for the purpose of pun-

³ ἀνθοσμίαν, Plutus, 807.
5 κοπτόμενοι. Used thus Dem. Ol. 2, as we say "knocked 5 κοπτόμενοι. Used thus De about," not as Ben., vapulantes. 2 Ps. lxxx. 16, lxxxi. 16, LXX.

life, he fell from Paradise, but when the Apostle laboured abundantly, and toiled hard, and said, "In labour and travail, working night and day," then he was taken up into Paradise, and ascended to the third heaven!

24. Let us not then despise labour; let us not despise work; for before the kingdom of Heaven, we receive the greatest recompense from thence, deriving pleasure from that ciris greater than pleasure, the purest health. For in addition to their want of relish, many diseases also attack the rich; but the poor are tions. Poverty, to those who hear it wisely, is a great possession, a treasure that cannot may be objected, is oppressed. But then the rich man is still more subject to adverse and insulted. But the rich man is the subject of envy. The poor man is not so easily assailed as the rich man, offering, as the latter servant of all, on account of the great extent of his business. Standing in need of many things, he is compelled to flatter many persons, and to minister to them with much servility. But the poor man, if he knows how to be spiritually wise, is not assailable even by the devil himself. Job therefore, strong as he was before this, when he lost all, became still more powerful, and bore away an 3 illustrious victory from the devil!

25. But besides this, the poor man cannot possibly be injured, if he knows how to be spiritually wise. Now what I said of pleasure, that it consisted not in a costly provision of meats, but in the disposition of those who eat, this also I say respecting an insult; that the insult is either created or destroyed, not by the intention of those who insult, but by the disposition of those who bear it. For example. Some one hath insulted thee with much language, fit or unfit to repeat. If thou shalt laugh at the insults, if thou take not the words to heart, if thou showest thyself superior to the blow, thou art not insulted. And just as if we possessed an adamantine body, we should not be hurt, were we even ishing or chastising, but for amendment and attacked on all sides by a thousand darts, for education. When Adam lived an unlabourious darts beget wounds not from the hand of him who hurls them, but from the bodies of those who receive them, so too in this case, insults are constituted real and dishonourable ones, not from the folly of those who offer them, but from the weakness of the insulted. For if we know how to be truly wise, we are incapable of being insulted, or of suffering any serious evils. Some one it may be hath offered thee an insult, but thou hast not felt cumstance; and not pleasure only, but what it? thou hast not been pained. Then thou art not insulted, but hast given rather than received a blow! For when the insulting person perceives that his blow did not reach freed from the hands of physicians; and if at the soul of those who were reviled, he is himtimes they do fall into a sickness, they recover self the more severely fretted; and whilst themselves quickly, being far removed from those who are reproached remain silent, the all effeminacy, and having robust constitu- insulting blow is turned backwards, and recoils of its own accord upon him who aimed it.

26. In all things then, beloved, let us be be taken away; the stoutest of staves; a way spiritually wise, and poverty will be able to of gain 2 that cannot be thwarted; a lodging do us no harm, but will benefit us exceedthat is safe from snares. The poor man, it ingly, and render us more illustrious and wealthy than the richest. For tell me who was poorer than Elias? Yet for this reason designs. The poor man is looked down upon he surpassed all the wealthy, in that he was so poor, and this very poverty of his was his own choice from an opulence of mind. For since he accounted the wealth of all riches to does on every side, countless handles to the be beneath his magnanimity, and not worthy devil, and to his secret foes; and being the of his spiritual wisdom, therefore he welcomed this kind of poverty; so that if he had considered present things as of much worth, he would not have possessed only a mantle. But so did he contemn the vanity of the life that now is, and regard all gold as clay cast into the street,4 that he possessed himself of nothing more than that covering. Therefore the king had need of the poor man, and he who had so much gold hung upon the words of him who had nothing more than a sheepskin. Thus was the sheepskin 5 more splendid than the purple, and the cave of the just man than the halls of kings. Therefore also when he went up to heaven, he left nothing to his disciple save the sheepskin. "By the help of this," said he, "I have wrestled with the devil, and taking this, be thou armed against him!" For indigence is a powerful weapon, an unassailable retreat, an unshaken fortress! Elisha received the sheepskin as the greatest inheritance; for it was truly such; a more precious one than all gold. And thenceforth 6 that Elias was a twofold person; an Elias above and an Elias below!

⁴ Comp. Ps. xviii. 42.

Sayhavri, 2 Kings i. 2, Lxx., lit, sheepskin, the Hebrew is N which does not fix the material, they may have judged by 2 kings i. 8.

6 Sav. δε τότε.

I know ye account that just person blessed, and ye would each desire to be that person. What then if I show you that all among us, in these hopes, let us beseech Him continunor fear the difficulty of the times, for He glory to the Father together with the Holy who did not refuse to pour out His blood for Ghost, forever and ever. Amen. all, and has suffered us to partake of His

¹ Or μεμυσταγωγημένοι. The baptized: those who were admitted to the mystic privileges of the faithful; a term adopted from St. Paull's μυστήριον, ¹ Cor. iv., 1. It was also used in the ancient mysteries. See Bingham, b. i., c. iv., sec. 1, 2.

who are initiated, have received something ally; let us be earnest in prayers and supplifar greater than he did? For Elias left a cations; and let us with all strictness give our sheepskin to his disciple, but the Son of God attention to every other virtue; that so we ascending left to us His own flesh! Elias may escape the danger that now threatens, indeed, cast off his mantle, before he went and obtain the good things to come; which up; but Christ left it behind for our sakes; God grant we may all be worthy of, through and yet retained it when He ascended. Let the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord us not then be cast down. Let us not lament, Jesus Christ, by Whom, and with Whom be > ² This passage was quoted in favor of Transubstantiation against Bp. Ridley in the disputation at Oxford, A.o. 1554. See Foxe, Acts and Mon., vol. vi. p. 468, New Ed. It is scarcely necessary to remark, that the words of St. Chrysostom here, and in many other passages, if examined in their whole bearing, do not of necessity imply any change of the material substance of the holy elements.

HOMILY III.

On the departure of Flavian, Bishop of Antioch, who was gone on an embassy to the Emperor Theodosius, on behalf of the city. Of the dignity of the Priesthood, What is true fasting. Slander worse than devouring the human body. And finally of those who had been put to death on account of the sedition; and against those who complained that many innocent persons were apprehended.

a multitude from the wrath of the Emperor! actual deeds what Christ said. For having learnt that "the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep," 2 he took his departure; venturing his own life for us all, not-

I. WHEN I look on that throne, deserted | withstanding there were many things to hinand bereft of our teacher, I rejoice and der his absence, and enforce his stay, And weep at the same time. I weep, because I first, his time of life, extended as it is to the see not our father with us! but I rejoice that utmost limits of old age; next, his bodily he hath set out on a journey for our pres- infirmity, and the season of the year, as well ervation; that he is gone to snatch so great as the necessity for his presence at the holy festival; and besides these reasons, his only Here is both an ormament to you, and a sister even now at her last breath! He has crown to him! An ornament to you, that disregarded, however, the ties of kindred, of such a father hath been allotted to you; a old age, of infirmity, and the severity of the crown to him, because he is so affectionate season, and the toils of the journey; and towards his children, and hath confirmed by preferring you and your safety above all things, he has broken through all these restraints. And, even as a youth, the aged man is now hastening along, borne upon the wings of zeal! For if Christ (saith he) gave Himself for us, what excuse or pardon should we deserve, having undertaken the charge of so numerous a people, if we were not ready to do and to suffer anything for the security of those committed into our hands. For if (continues he) the patriarch Jacob, when in charge of flocks, and feeding brute sheep, and having to give account to man, passed sleepless nights, and bore heat and cold, and all the inclemency of the elements, to the end that not one of those animals might perish, much less doth it become us, who preside over those, who are not irrational, but spiritual sheep; who are about to give an account of this charge, not to man, but to God, to be slack in any respect, or shrink from anything which might benefit the flock. Besides, in proportion as the latter flock is superior to the former; men to brutes, and God to men; so it behoves us to manifest a greater and more intense anxiety and diligence. He knows well that his concern is now, not for one city only, but for the whole of the East. For our city is the head and mother of all that lie towards the East. For this reason he would encounter every danger, and nothing would avail to detain him here,

¹ This Flavianus was one of those who maintained the true faith against the Arians, but allowed himself to be ordained Bishop of Antoch as successor to Meletius, who was placed there by the Arians, but afterwards became orthodox. Paulinus had been consecrated Bishop for the orthodox by Lucifer, and should have had full possession of the see at the death of Meletius, to whom many of the orthodox had adhered. Hence Flavianus was not acknowledged by the Roman and Alexandrain patriarchs till after the death of Paulinus, and of another who succeeded him, and the elevation of his friend St. John Chrysostom to the see of Constantinople. Socr. jii. 6, v. o., 15. St. Chrysostom may allude to these circumstances in Rom. jii. 11; Hom. VII. Tr.

² John x. 11. This Flavianus was one of those who maintained the true

2. On this account I trust that there may be a good hope; for God will not disdain to look upon such earnestness and zeal, nor will He suffer his servant to return without sucour pious Emperor, and been seen by him, he endowed with abundant wisdom; and being well skilled in the divine laws, he will say to Christ remitted the sins of the whole world. ten thousand talents, and the hundred pence. I know the boldness of our father, that he will not hesitate to alarm him from the parable, and to say, "Take heed lest thou also hear it said in that day, 'O thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt, because thou desirest me; you ought also to forgive thy fellow-servants!'* Thou dost to thyself a greater benefit than them, since by pardoning these few offences thou gainest an amnesty for greater." To this address he will add that prayer, which those who initiated him into the sacred mystery taught him to offer up, and say, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.'

3. He will moreover inform him, that the offence was not common to the whole city, but the deed of certain strangers and adventurers, men that act upon no deliberate plan, but with every sort of audacity and lawlessness; and that it would not be just for the disorderly conduct of a few to extirpate so great a city, and to punish those who had done no wrong; and that even though all had been transgressors, they had paid a sufficient punishment, being consumed by fear so many days, and expecting every day to be put to death, and being exiles and fugitives; thus living more wretchedly than condemned criminals, carrying their life in their hands, and having no confidence of escape! "Let this punishment (he will say) suffice. Carry not thy resentment further! Make the Judge above merciful to thyself, by humanity towards thy fellow-servants! Think of the greatness of the city, and that the question now is not concerning one, or two, or three, cess. I know that when he has barely seen or ten souls, but of a vast multitude too numerous to be reckoned up! It is a queswill be able at once by his very countenance tion which affects the capital of the whole to allay his wrath. For not only the words world. This is the city in which Christians of the saints, but their very countenances were first called by that name.4 Honor are full of grace. And he is a person too Christ. Reverence the city which first proclaimed that name, so lovely and sweet to all! This city hath been the tabernacle of Aposhim as Moses said to God, "Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin;—and if not, slay me together with them." For such are the insurrection against its rulers; and all past bowels of the saints, that they think death time will bear favourable witness to the manwith their children sweeter than life without ners of the city. For had the people been them. He will also make the special season continually given to sedition, it might have his advocate and shelter himself behind the been necessary to make an example of such sacred festival of the Passover; and will iniquity; but if this hath happened only once remind the Emperor of the season when in all time, it is plain that the offence has not arisen from the habit of the city, but that it He will exhort him to imitate his Lord. He was the transgression of those who had in an will also remind him of that parable of the evil hour by mere random chance arrived there.

> 4. These things and more than these the priest will say with still greater boldness; and the Emperor will listen to them; and one is humane, and the other is faithful; so that on both sides we entertain favourable hopes. But much more do we rely upon the mercy of God, than upon the fidelity of our Teacher and the humanity of the Emperor. For whilst the Emperor is supplicated, and the priest is supplicating, He Himself will interpose, softening the heart of the Emperor, and exciting the tongue of the priest; facilitating

F. Ex. xxxii. 31, 32.

3 Matt. vi. 12. The use of the Lord's Prayer was at this period confined to those who were initiated or baptized. St. Chrysostom calls it the prayer of the faithful, and others of the Fathers speak in a similar manner. See Bingham, Ant. vol. I., p. 37, new ed.; St. Cyr. Cat. xxiii. 11; St. (ypr. de Or. Tract. vii. 6, p. 182; St. Chrys. Hom. on Rom. VII. 15.

4 Acts xi. 26, probably in derision; the people of Antioch being notorious for the invention of scurrilous nick-names.

his utterance; - preparing the mind of the Spirit." 4 For this is the custom of those who other to receive what is said and with much indulgence, to accede to the petitions. For our city is dearer to Christ than all others both because of the virtue of our ancestors, and of your own. And as Peter was the first among the apostles to preach Christ, so as I said before, this city was the first of cities that adorned itself by assuming the Christian appellation, as a sort of admirable diadem. But if where only ten just men were found, God promised to save all who dwelt therein, why should we not expect a favourable issue, and become assured of all our lives, when there are not only ten, twenty, or twice so many only, but far more; who are serving God with all strictness.

5. I have heard many saying, "The threats of a king are like the wrath of a Esther was her name. This Esther rescued That He who said, "The wolves and the lambs shall feed together; and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox," 2 will be able to convert the lion into a mild lamb. Let us therefore supplicate Him; let us send an embassy sorrowful soul, and with a contrite spirit, we cross the ocean, or to undertake a long journey. Let every man and woman among us, whether meeting together at church, or remaining at home, call upon God with much earnestness, and He will doubtless accede to these petitions.

Whence does this appear evident? Because He is exceedingly desirous, that we should always take refuge in Him, and in everything make our requests unto Him; and do nothing and speak nothing without Him. For men, when we trouble them repeatedly concerning our affairs, become slothful and evasive, and conduct themselves unpleasantly towards us; but with God it is quite the reverse. Not when we apply to him continually respecting our affairs, but when we fail to do so, then is he especially displeased. Hear at least what He reproves the Jews for, when He says, "Ye have taken counsel, but not of Me, and made treaties,3 but not by My love; they desire that all the concerns of their beloved should be accomplished by means of themselves; and that they should neither do anything, nor say anything, without them. On this account did God not only on that occasion, but again elsewhere, uttering a reproof, speak the same language. "They 5 have reigned, but not by Me; they have ruled, and they made it not known to Me."6 Let us not then be slow to take refuge in Him continually; and whatever be the evil, it will in any case find its appropriate solution.

6. Doth a man affright you? Hasten to the Lord above, and thou wilt suffer no evil. Thus the ancients had release from their calamities; and not men only, but also women. There was a certain Hebrew woman, lion; "being full of dejection and lamentation. What then should we say to such? about to be delivered over to destruction, by this very method. For when the Persian king gave orders that all the Jews should be utterly destroyed, and there was no one who was able to stand in the way of his wrath, this woman having divested herself of the splendid robe, and clothed herself with sackto Him; and He will doubtless allay the cloth and being besprinkled with ashes, sup-Emperor's wrath, and deliver us from the plicated the merciful God to go in with her impending distress. Our Father hath gone to the king; and offering up her prayer to thither on this embassy. Let us go on em- Him, these were the words she uttered, "O bassy from hence to the Majesty of heaven! Lord, make my words acceptable,7 and put Let us assist him by prayers! The com- eloquent speech in my mouth." 8 Let this be munity of the Church can do much, if with a the prayer which we offer to God for our Teacher. For if a woman, supplicating on offer up our prayers! It is unnecessary to behalf of the Jews, prevailed to allay the wrath of a barbarian, much rather will our Teacher, entreating on behalf of so great a city, and in conjunction with so great a Church, be able to persuade this most mild and merciful Emperor. For if he hath received authority to loose sins committed against God, much more will he be able to take away and blot out those which have been committed against a man. He is also himself a ruler and a ruler of more dignity than the other. For the sacred laws take and place under his hands even the royal head. And when there is need of any good thing from above, the Emperor is accustomed to fly to the priest: but not the priest to the Emperor. Heo too hath his breast-plate, that of right-

¹ Prov. xix. 12.

² Isa. xi. 6, 7.

³ So Lxx. E. V., cover with a covering, if this be taken for protection, the sense is the same, and apposite here, as it refers to seeking help from Egypt. The Hebrew 7327 admits both by a double derivation, see 712 and 732.

⁴ Isa, xxx. I.
5 SO LXX. E. V., They have set up kings, but not by Me;
they have made princes, and I knew if not; which is more exact, Baritavia, however, is used by the LXX, for "to make one king."
6 Hos. vii.
7 This clause is not in our text.
8 From the additions to the Book of Esther, in the Apocrypha, ch, xiv. 2, 3, 13. 9 Sav, and M, om. For.

eousness.' He too hath his girdle, that of be clothed, and yet not clothed! How? much discretion.

7. Let us not then despair of our safety, but let us pray; let us make invocation; let have this fast too as an ally, and as an assistant in this good intercession. Therefore, as when the winter is over and the summer is appearing, the sailor draws his vessel to the deep; and the soldier burnishes his arms, and traveller boldly undertakes a long journey, and the wrestler strips and bares himself for the contest. So too, when the fast makes its appearance, like a kind of spiritual summer, let us as soldiers burnish our weapons; and as husbandmen let us sharpen our sickle; and as sailors let us order our thoughts against the waves of extravagant desires; and as travellers let us set out on the journey towards heaven; and as wrestlers let us strip for the contest. For the believer is at once a husbandman, and a sailor, and a soldier, a wrestler, and a traveller. Hence St. Paul saith, "We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers. Put on therefore the whole armour of God."5 Hast thou observed the wrestler? Hast thou observed the soldier? If thou art a wrestler, it is necessary for thee to engage in the conflict naked. If a soldier, it behoves thee to stand in the battle line armed at all How then are both these things possible, to be naked, and yet not naked; to truth, and sandals of much greater dignity, will tell thee. Divest thyself of worldly those of the Gospel of peace. He too hath business, and thou hast become a wrestler. a sword, not of iron, but of the Spirit; he too Put on the spiritual armour, and thou hast hath a crown resting on his head. This become a soldier. Strip thyself of worldly panoply is the more splendid. The weapons cares, for the season is one of wrestling. are grander, the license of speech greater,3 Clothe thyself with the spiritual armour, for we and mightier the strength. So that from the have a heavy warfare to wage with demons. weight of his authority, and from his own Therefore also it is needful we should be greatness of soul; and more than all the rest, naked, so as to offer nothing that the devil may from the hope which he has in God, he will take hold of, while he is wrestling with us; address the Emperor with much freedom and and to be fully armed at all points, so as on no side to receive a deadly blow. Cultivate thy soul. Cut away the thorns. Sow the word of godliness. Propagate and nurse with us supplicate; let us go on embassy to the much care the fair plants of divine wisdom, King that is above with many tears! We and thou hast become a husbandman. And Paul will say to thee, "The husbandman that laboureth must be first partaker of the fruits."6 He too himself practised this art. Therefore writing to the Corinthians, he said, "I have planted, Apollos watered, but God gave the makes ready his steed for the battle; and the increase." The Sharpen thy sickle, which thou husbandman sharpens his sickle; and the hast blunted through gluttony-sharpen it by fasting. Lay hold of the pathway which leads towards heaven; rugged and narrow as it is, lay hold of it, and journey on. And how mayest thou be able to do these things? By subduing thy body, and bringing it into subiection. For when the way grows narrow, the corpulence that comes of gluttony is a great hindrance. Keep down the waves of inordinate desires. Repel the tempest of evil thoughts. Preserve the bark; display much skill, and thou hast become a pilot. But we shall have the fast for a groundwork and instructor in all these things.

> 8. I speak not, indeed, of such a fast as most persons keep, but of real fasting; not merely an abstinence from meats; but from sins too. For the nature of a fast is such, that it does not suffice to deliver those who practise it, unless it be done according to a suitable law.8 "For the wrestler," it is said, "is not crowned unless he strive lawfully." 9 To the end then, that when we have gone through the labour of fasting, we forfeit not the crown of fasting, we should understand how, and after what manner, it is necessary to conduct this business; since that Pharisee also fasted. 10 but afterwards went down empty, and destitute of the fruit of fasting.

^{*} The imperial armature is here compared not with the Ecclesi-¹ The imperial armature is here compared not with the Ecclesi-astical dress, but with the spiritual armour, which the Church has somewhat differently, according to her discretion, represented by outward forms. What is applied by St. Paul to the individual Christian is here used specially of one who represents our Lord in authority as well as in person. Compare on the breastplate, Ex. xxvii. 15, Issi. lix. 7; on the girdle, Ex. xxviii. 40, Issi. xii. 5, Rev. i. 13, Eph. vi. 14; on the sandals, Isa. lii. 7, Eph. vi. 15; on the sword, Heb. iv. 12, Eph. vi. 17; on the crown, Ex. xxii. 6, Eph. vi. 17; see also Faber. A.g. ii. 34, (Grav. These. viii. p. 2005). Marten de Ant. Eccl. Rit. 1. i. c. 4, art. 2, sec. 12; Durand. Rat. Div. Off. lib. 3.

de Ant. Eccl. RIL. 1. 1. 2. 4, man. 1972.

2 See on Rom. vii. 25; Hom. XIV. Mor., where the shoes are especially noticed as a part of imperial magnificence.

3 μείζων ή παρήρησία, lit. "greater the boldness of speech." but the context seems to give this meaning.

4 ι. α, than those belonging to an emperor. See Const. Aβ. ii, 34, and note: 1 of Cotelerius, p. 247.

^{6 2} Tim. ii. 6. St. Chrys, ad loc. Hom. IV. explains first, "be-fore any other person." Hammond's interpretation "labouring first," requires a different order in the Greek.

⁷ t Cor. iii. 6.

8 See Fabr. Agm. iii. 1, where St. Chrysostom's interpretation on the passage (Hom. 1V. in Eb. ad Tim.) is shown to be correct, Galen, Com. 1, ad Aph. xviii. fol. 45, is cited. "And they that contend by rule (or strive lawfully) eat only bread for breakfast and meat for dinner." There were other rules for the contest itself. See Hammond on 1 Cor. ix. notes f and g.

9 2 Tim. ii. 5.

Publican fasted not; and yet he was accepted they aimed at in this act, which the prophets in preference to him who had fasted; in order also are wont to do. For these, when they that thou mayest learn that fasting is unprofi- see some dreadful chastisement proceeding table, except all other duties follow with it. The Ninevites fasted, and won the favour of ished without anything to say for themselves; God. The Jews fasted too, and profited nothing, nay, they departed with blame.2 Since then the danger in fasting is so great to those who do not know how they ought to fast, we should learn the laws of this exercise, in order that we may not "run uncertainly, nor "beat the air," nor while we are fighting contend with a shadow. Fasting is a medicine; but a medicine, though it be never so profitable, becomes frequently useless owing to the unskilfulness of him who employs it, For it is necessary to know, moreover, the time when it should be applied, and the requisite quantity of it; and the temperament of body that admits it; and the nature of the the cattle of the field looked upward to Thee, country, and the season of the year; and the corresponding diet; as well as various other particulars; any of which, if one overlooks, he will mar all the rest that have been named. Now if, when the body needs healing, such it, because there was no grass. The wild exactness is required on our part, much more ought we, when our care is about the soul, and we seek to heal the distempers of the mind, to look, and to search into every particular with the utmost accuracy.

9. Let us see then how the Ninevites fasted, and how they were delivered from that wrath-"Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste anything," 3 saith (the prophet). What sayest thou? Tell me—must even the irrational things fast, and the horses and the mules be covered with sack-cloth? "Even so," he replies. For as when, at the decease of some rich man, the relatives clothe not only the men servants and maid servants, but the horses also with sackcloth, and give orders that they should follow the procession to the sepulchre, led by their grooms; thus signifying the greatness of the calamity, and inviting all to pity; thus also, indeed, when that city was about to be destroyed, even the irrational nature was enveloped in sackcloth, and subjected to the yoke of fasting. "It is not possible," saith he, "that irrational creatures should learn the wrath of God by means of reason; let them be taught by means of fasting, that this stroke is of divine infliction. For if the city should be overturned, not only would it be one common sepulchre for us, the Indwellers therein, but for these likewise. asmuch then as these would participate in the punishment, let them also do so in the fast. But there was yet another thing which from heaven, and those who are to be pun--laden with shame, -unworthy of the least pardon or excuse: -not knowing what to do. nor from whence they may procure an advocacy for the condemned, they have recourse to the things irrational; and describing their death in tragical fashion, they make intercession by them, putting forward as a plea their pitiable and mournful destruction. When therefore, aforetime, famine had seized upon the Jews, and a great drought oppressed their country, and all things were being consumed. one of the prophets spoke thus, "The young heifers leaped in their stalls; the herds of oxen wept, because there was no pasture; all because the streams of waters were dried up." 4 Another prophet bewailing the evils of drought again speaks to this effect: "The hinds calved in the fields and forsook asses did stand in the forests; they snuffed up the wind like a dragon; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass."5 Moreover, ye have heard Joel saying to-day, "Let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet; -the infants that suck the breast." 6 For what reason, I ask, does he call so immature an age to supplication? Is it not plainly for the very same reason? For since all who have arrived at the age of manhood, have inflamed and provoked God's wrath, let the age, saith he, which is devoid of transgressions supplicate Him who is provoked.

10. But, as I said before, we may see what it was that dissolved such inexorable wrath. Was it, forsooth, fasting only and sackcloth? We say not so; but the change of their whole life. Whence does this appear? From the very language of the prophet. For he who hath discoursed of the wrath of God, and of their fasting,7 himself too, when speaking of the reconciliation, and teaching us the cause of the reconciliation, speaks to this effect; "And God saw their works." What kind of

⁴ Joeli, 17.
5 Jer, xiv. 5.
6 Joelii, 16. This passage of scripture is read for the epistle in the service of our Church on Ash Wednesday as It also stands in the Roman Missal, it is read in the Greek Church on the same day. Ash Wednesday was not, however, constituted the first day of Lent till a later period, see Bingham, vol. vi. p. 456, b. xxi., c. 1, sec. 5. This Homily seems to have been preached on Quinquagesima Sunday, called by the Greeks, κυρακή τῆς ἀποκρίου [Lat, carnelevale, or in dimissione carnium, hence carnival] as the next is τῆς τυροφόγου (½β), denoting degrees of abstinence. See note near the end of the next Homily.
7 διά τῆν νηστείαν, with the article it is "the Fast," or here Lent, without it "fasting."
8 Jonah iii. 10.

¹ Jonah iii. 10, ² Isa. lviii. 3, 7; 1 Cor. ix. 26.

³ Jonah iii. 7.

works? That they had fasted? That they ye be not consumed one of another." 4 Thou evil that He had said He would do unto them." Seest thou, that fasting did not rescue from this danger, but it was the change of life, which rendered God propitious and kind to these barbarians?

II. I have said these things, not that we may disparage fasting, but that we may honour fasting; for the honour of fasting consists not in abstinence from food, but in withdrawing from sinful practices; since he who limits his fasting only to an abstinence from meats, is one who especially disparages it. Dost thou the hands, and all the members of our bodies. refusing to receive evil speakings and calumnies. "Thou shalt not receive a false report," a it says.

12. Let the mouth too fast from disgraceful speeches and railing. For what doth it profit if we abstain from birds and fishes; 3 and yet bite and devour our brethren? The evil speaker eateth the flesh of his brother, and biteth the body of his neighbour. Because of this Paul utters the fearful saying, "If ye bite and devour one another, take heed that had put on sackcloth? Nothing of the sort: hast not fixed thy teeth in the flesh, but thou but passing all these points in silence, he hast fixed the slander in the soul, and inadds, "That they turned every one from flicted the wound of evil suspicion; thou their evil ways, and the Lord repented of the hast harmed, in a thousand ways, thyself and him, and many others, for in slandering a neighbour thou hast made him who listens to the slander worse; 5 for should he be a wicked man, he becomes more careless when he finds a partner in his wickedness; and should he be a just man, he is lifted to arrogance, and puffed up; being led on by the sin of others to imagine great things concerning himself. Besides,6 thou hast struck at the common welfare of the Church; for all those who hear not only accuse the supposed sinner, but the reproach is fastened on the Christian commufast? Give me proof of it by thy works! Is nity; neither dost thou hear the unbelievers it said by what kind of works? If thou seest saying, "Such a person is a fornicator, or a a poor man, take pity on him! If thou seest libertine;" but instead of the individual who an enemy, be reconciled to him! If thou hath sinned, they accuse all Christians. In seest a friend gaining honour, envy him not! addition to this, thou hast caused the glory If thou seest a handsome woman, pass her of God to be blasphemed; for as His Name by! For let not the mouth only fast, but is glorified when we have good report, so also the eye, and the ear, and the feet, and when we sin, it is blasphemed and insulted!

13. A fourth reason is, that thou hast dis-Let the hands fast, by being pure from rapine graced him who is ill reported; and hast thus and avarice. Let the feet fast, by ceasing rendered him more snameless than he was, from running to the unlawful spectacles. Let by placing him in a state of enmity and hosthe eyes fast, being taught never to fix tility. Fifthly, thou hast made thyself liable themselves rudely upon handsome counte- to chastisement and vengeance; by involving 8 beauties. For looking is the food of the eyes, but if this be such as is unlawful or "Then I am an evil speaker when I speak" forbidden, it mars the fast; and upsets the falsely, but if I speak what is true, I cease to whole safety of the soul; but if it be lawful be so." Although it be with truth thou and safe, it adorns fasting. For it would be speakest evil, this also is a crime. For that among things the most absurd to abstain from Pharisee spake evil of the Publican with lawful food because of the fast, but with the truth; but nevertheless this availed him not eyes to touch even what is forbidden. Dost For was not the latter, I ask, a publican and thou not eat flesh? Feed not upon lascivi- a sinner? It is manifest to every one that he ousness by means of the eyes. Let the ear was a publican. But at the same time inasfast also. The fasting of the ear consists in much as the Pharisee spoke ill of him, he departed from the temple with the loss of every advantage. Dost thou wish to correct a brother? Weep; pray unto God; taking him apart, admonish, counsel, entreat him! So also Paul did, "Lest," saith he, "when I come again, my God will humble me among you, and I shall bewail many which have sinned already, and have not repented of the uncleanness and fornication and lasciviousness which they have committed." Show thy charity towards the sinner. Persuade him that it is from care and anxiety for his welfare, and not from a wish to expose him, that thou puttest him in mind of his sin. Take hold of his feet; embrace him; be not ^{*} μηδέποτε. This shows he did not mean only a temporary abstinence from sin, but a discipline to cure us of it for the future.

 * E. V., razis Heb, * χ̄΄, * E. xod, xxiii.* 1, Lxx.
 3 It would seem from this passage that not even the use of fish was then allowed during the season of Lent. On the strictness of the ancient fasts, consult Bingham, vol. 7, p. 208, new ed. Tr. (The like is now practiced in the Greek Church. Smith's Account of G. C., p. 35, and reports of recent travellers.)

⁴ Gal. v. 15. 7 3d reason.

⁵ ist reason. 8 πράγματα πλέξας.

ashamed, if thou truly desirest to cure him, him on oath for the safety of what has been Physicians too do things of this sort, often- spoken, times, when their patients are hard to please; " by embraces and entreaties they at length persuade them to take a salutary medicine. Thus also do thou. Show the wound to the priest;2 that is the part of one who cares for him, and provides for him, and is anxious on his behalf.

14. But not only do I now admonish the evil speakers; but those besides, who hear others ill spoken of, I exhort to stop up their ears, and to imitate the prophet who saith, "Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I punish." 3 Say to thy neighbour, " Hast thou any one to praise or highly to commend? may render up an account of our own transwhilst we never even take into consideration our own affairs, but thus inquisitively pry into those of others!" And as it is mean and extremely disgraceful to peer into a house, and to observe what is within as one passes, so also to make inquisition into another man's life is the last degree of illiberality. But what is yet more ridiculous is, that those who lead this sort of life, and are neglectful of their own affairs, when they have mentioned any of these secret matters, beseech and adjure him who has heard it, not to mention it more to any other person; thus making it plain that they have done an action which deserves censure. For if thou beseechest him to tell this to no other person, much more did it not become thee to tell these things first to him. The matter was safe while in thy possession; now, after betraying it, thou art grown anxious for its safety. thou art desirous that it be not carried abroad to another,4 do not thyself tell it. But when thou hast betrayed the custody of the matter to another, thou doest what is superfluous and useless, in charging him, and putting

15. "But it is sweet to slander." Nay, it is sweet not to speak evil. For he that hath spoken evil is henceforth contentious; he is suspicious and he fears, repents, and gnaws his own tongue. Being timorous and trembling, lest at any time, what he said should be carried to others, and bring great peril, and useless and needless enmity, on the sayer. But he who keeps the matter to himself, will spend his days in safety, with much pleasantness. "Thou hast heard a word," we read, "let it die with thee; and be bold; it will 5 not burst thee." 6 What is the meaning of this? "let it die with thee?" Extinguish I open my ears, to receive the fragrant oil; it; bury it; neither permit it to go forth, nor but if thou hast any evil to say, I block up even to move at all; but, as the best course, the entrance to thy words, -for I am not to be careful not to tolerate others in the pracman? The greatest injury indeed results from this, and the worst loss!" Say to him, "Let us be anxious about our own faults." admit dung and dirt. What profit doth it tice of evil speaking. And should you perheard it; and spend the present life with gressions; and exhibit this sort of curiosity much peace and security. Should the slanand meddlesome activity respecting our own derers learn that we abhor them more than lives. What excuse or pardon shall we find; those do whom they accuse, they themselves will henceforth abandon this evil habit, and correct the sin; and will afterwards applaud, and proclaim us as those who were their saviours and benefactors. For, as to speak well, and to applaud, is the beginning of friendship, so to speak ill and to calumniate, has been the beginning and foundation of enmity, and hatred, and a thousand quarrels. From nothing else have our own affairs been more neglected, than from the habit of prying into and meddling with the concerns of others; for it is not possible for one who is given to evil speaking, and busying himself with other men's lives, ever to look after his own life. His whole study being expended upon meddling with other men's matters, all those which belong to himself must of necessity be left at hazard and neglected. For it is well if one who spends all his leisure on the anxious consideration of his own sins, and the judgment of them, can make any progress. But when thou art always busy about other men's matters, when wilt thou pay any heed to thy own evils?

16. Let us flee then, beloved, let us flee slander! knowing that it is the very gulph of Satan, and the place where he lurks with his snares. For in order that we may be careless of our own state, and may thus render i δυσαρίστως έχοιτας.

2 This passage is erroneously quoted by Montfaucon, Synofs.

Phatr. l. 1, 3p, 179, as if it spoke of confessing one s own sins privately. St. Chrysostom certainly did not regard this as necessary. The original practice was a public confession of crimes. Private confession was at first subservient to this. See Bingham, b. xv. c. 8, sec. 6; xviii. c. 3, secs. 2, 7, 8; Socr. v. 10; Soz. vii. 16. 3 Ps. ci. 5.

⁵ ov $\mu\eta$ is used thus with the future indicative at least in the third person. See Kühner, Gr. Gram. 779, 2 \times 6 \times 6. Col. 176.

our account heavier, the devil leads us into in order that from the danger which has spoken, but that we shall make our own scans with bitterness the conduct of others, then expel from our mouth all slander, knowing that if we do not abstain from it, though we might feed upon ashes, this austerity would avail us nothing. "For not that which the mouth defileth the man." If any one were to stir up a cesspool, when you were passing, say, would you not reproach and rate the man who did it? This then also do with respect to the slanderer. For the stirred cesspool does not so grossly offend the sense of those who smell that ill savour, as the stirring up other men's sins, and the exposure of an impure life, offends and disturbs the soul of those who hear of it. Therefore let us abstain from evil speaking, from foul language, from blasphemy; and let us not speak ill of our neighbour, nor of God!

17. For many of our evil speakers have run into such madness, as to lift up their own tongue from their fellow servants against their Master. But how great an evil this is, you may learn from the affairs in which we are now involved. A man is insulted, and, lo! we are all fearing and trembling, both those who were guilty of the insult, and those who are conscious of nothing of the kind! But God is insulted every day! Why do I say every day?-every hour rather, by the rich, by the poor, by those who are at ease, by the afflicted, by those who calumniate, and those who are calumniated, and yet no one ever hears a word of this! Therefore He has permitted our fellow servant 3 to be insulted, this custom. But more than this; it is not happened through this insult, thou mayest only a very serious matter, that we shall here- learn the benignity of the Lord! And notafter have to give account of what we have withstanding that this is our first and only offence, we do not on that account expect to offences the heavier by these means; depriving an an excuse, or pardon. But we provoke ing ourselves of all excuse. For he who God every day, and we show no signs of returning to Him, and yet He endures it with can never obtain pardon for the sins com- all long-suffering! Seest thou then how great mitted by himself. For God will determine the benignity of the Lord is? Yet, in this the sentence, not only from the nature of our present outrage, those who had done amiss transgressions, but from the judgment which were taken and thrust into prison, and paid thou hast passed upon others. Therefore the penalty; nevertheless we are still in fear, He gave the admonition, "Judge not, that for he who has been insulted has not as yet ye be not judged." For the sin, of what- heard what has taken place, nor pronounced ever kind, will not there appear any more sentence, and we are all trembling. But God such as it was when committed, but will revery day hears of the insults offered Him, ceive a great and unpardonable addition from and no one heeds it, although God is thus the judgment passed by thee upon thy fellow merciful and loving toward man. With Him servants. For as he who is humane, and it suffices only to acknowledge the sin, and so merciful, and forgiving, cuts away the greater to cancel the accusation. But with man it mass of his sins, so he who is bitter, and is altogether the reverse. When those who cruel, and implacable, greatly increases the have sinned confess, then they are punished magnitude of his own offences. Let us the more; which indeed has happened in the present instance. And some have perished by the sword, some by fire; some given to wild beasts, and not men only, but children. And neither this immaturity of age, nor the entereth into, but that which cometh out of tumult of the people, nor the circumstance that they were infuriated by demons when they perpetrated these deeds;5 nor that the exaction was thought to be intolerable; onor poverty, nor having offended in company with all; nor promising that they would never hereafter dare to repeat such deeds; nor anything else, could at all rescue them; but they were led away to the pit,7 without reprieve: armed soldiers conducting and guarding them on either side, lest any one should carry off the criminals; whilst mothers also followed afar off, seeing their children beheaded, but not daring to bewail their calamity; for terror conquered grief, and fear overcame nature! And just as when men beholding from the land those who are shipwrecked, are deeply distressed, but are not able to approach and to rescue the drowning, so too here, the mothers restrained through fear of the soldiers, as it were by so many waves, not only dared not go near to their children, and res-

⁴ The two capitals of Antioch and Constantinople were separated by the distance of 800 miles. See Gibbon, c. 27,
5 He clearly means the same persons. See Soz, vii. 23. This might be pleaded as an excuse where demoniacal possession was a commonly acknowledged fact,
6 He probably refers to a tax which had been imposed on the citizens to defray the expenses of celebrating the toth year of Theodosius, whose treasury was exhausted by the late war with the Goths. (Sozomen and Theodoret mistake the date. See Pref. Ed.) See Gibbon, c. 27.
77 δ βάραθρον. Xen. Hell. i, γ, 21, seems to imply that criminals at Athens were first put to death, and then thrown into the Barathrum. But they were sometimes throwin in alive, to be killed by the fall. The places so called may have differed both in nature and in use.

cue them from condemnation, but were afraid even to shed tears?

18. Assuredly ye gather from thence the mercy of God, how unspeakable, how boundless, how transcending all description! Here indeed the person who has been insulted is of the same nature; and only once in all his lifetime has experienced this; and then it was not done to his face; nor while he was present to see or hear it; and nevertheless, none of those who perpetrated these deeds obtained pardon. But with regard to God nothing of the kind can be said; for the interval between man and God, is so great, as no language can at all express; and throughout every day He is insulted, although present, and seeing and hearing it: and yet He sends not forth the lightning, nor commands the sea to overflow the land, and submerge all men; nor does He bid the earth to cleave asunder and swallow up all the contumelious; but He forbears, and suffers long, and still offers to pardon those who have insulted Him, if they only repent and promise to do these things no more! Truly now is the season to proclaim. "Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? who can show forth all His praise?"2 How many men have not only cast down, but also trodden under foot the images of God! For when thou throttlest a debtor, when thou strippest him, when thou draggest him away,3 thou tramplest under foot God's image. Hear for a certainty Paul saying, that "a man ought not to cover his head, forasmuch as he is the image and glory of God." And again, hear God Himself saying, "Let us make man in Our Image, after Our likeness."5 But if thou sayest that man is not of the same substance as God, - what matters that? For neither was the brazen statue of the same substance as the Emperor; yet nevertheless, they who defied it paid the penalty. Thus also with regard to mankind, if men are not of the same substance as God. (as indeed they are not), still they have been called His image; and it were fitting they should receive honour on account of the appellation. But thou for the sake of a little gold dost trample them under foot, dost throttle them, and drag them away; and hast not to this day in any wise paid the penalty!

19. May there be then speedily some favourable and propitious change! This certainly I foretell and testify, that although this cloud should pass away, and we yet remain in the same condition of listlessness, we shall again have to suffer much heavier evils than those we are now dreading; for I do not so much fear the wrath of the Emperor, as your own listlessness. Surely it is not sufficient by way of apology that we supplicate 6 two or three days, but it is necessary that we should make a change in our whole life,7 and that whilst abstaining from wickedness we should persevere continually in virtue. For as those who are sickly, unless they keep up a constant regimen, would find no advantage by their observing a two or three days' discipline; so those who are in sin, if they do not exercise sobriety at all times, will find no benefit in two or three days' amendment. For as it is said, that he who is washed, and is again afterwards polluted with the mire, hath gained nothing; so he who has repented for three days, and has again returned to his former state, has accomplished nothing. Let us not therefore, now act as we have always done hitherto. For many times, when we have been surprised by earthquakes, as well as famine and drought, after becoming more sober and gentle for three or four days, we did but return again to the former course. For this cause our present troubles have happened. But if we have not done so before; yet, now at least let us all persevere in the same piety; let us preserve the same meekness, that we may not again need another stroke. Was not God able to have prevented what has taken place? He did, however, permit it, that He might make those who despised Him more sober-minded, through dread of a fellow-servant!

20. But let not any one say, that many of the guilty escaped, and that many of the innocent incurred punishment. For I hear of numerous persons who frequently say this: not only in the case of the present sedition, but also in many other circumstances of this nature. What then should I reply to those who make such observations? Why, that if he who was captured was innocent of the present sedition, he had wrought some other transgression before this still more grievous, for which, not having afterwards repented, he has paid the penalty at the present time. For thus is the custom of God to deal with us. When we sin, He does not straightway visit the transgression, but lets it pass, giving us space 8 for repentance, in order that we may be amended and converted. But if, because we have not paid the penalty, we suppose that the offence too is blotted out, and make light of it; then somewhere, where

^{*} ουστας,
3 Some add δταν καταβάλλης, lit, "when thou throwest him down;" it may have some special meaning.

See on Rom. ii. 18, Hom. XI. Comp. Ja. iii. 9.

4 1 Cor. xi. 7.

5 Gen. i. 26,

⁶ λιτανεύσαι. 5 Σαν. and Μ. "the change that of our whole life:" the Greek reads best so. 6 προθεσμίαν, we think not of it, we are sure afterwards to is imposed, each one going within, and calldeliverance from the impending distress.

be punished. And this takes place in order ing his wife and children and servants, conthat, when we sin and are not punished, we siders and consults with them how he may may not be free from fear, unless we amend, pay this tribute, so also let us do with respect knowing that we shall certainly fall into pun- to these spiritual precepts. Let every one ishment where we do not expect it. So that when he has returned home call together his if thou sinnest, beloved, and art not punished, wife and children, and let him say, that a do not grow presumptuous, but for this very cause be the more alarmed, knowing that it tribute by which there will be some deliveris an easy matter with God to recompense ance and removal of these evils; a tribute again when he pleases. For this reason then which does not make those who pay it poor. he hath not punished thee, that thou mightest but richer; that is to say, to have no enemy, receive space for repentance. Let us not to speak evil of no man, and to swear not at therefore say, that such a person whilst inno- all. Let us consider; let us think; let us cent incurred punishment; and another whilst resolve how we may fulfill these precepts. guilty escaped, for he who incurred it, being Let us exert every endeavour. Let us admonguiltless, as I observed, paid the punishment ish each other. Let us correct each other, of other transgressions; and he who now that we may not go to the other world as escapes it, if he repents not, will be captured debtors, and then, needing to borrow of in another snare. If our minds are thus dis- others, suffer the fate of the foolish virgins, posed, we shall never forget our own sins, and fall from immortal salvation. If we thus but, always fearful and trembling lest we set our lives in order, I warrant you and should have to pay the penalty, we shall promise, that from this there will be deliverreadily recollect them. For nothing is so apt ance from the present calamity, and a removal to bring sin to remembrance as punishment of these dreadful ills; and what is greater and chastisement. And this is shown by than all, there will be the enjoyment of the Joseph's brethren. For when they had sold good things to come. For it were fitting that the just man, and thirteen years had passed I should commit to you the whole body of away, suspecting they had fallen into punish- virtue; but I think it the best method of corment, and fearing for their lives, they re- rection, to take the laws by parts, and reduce membered their sin, and said one to another, them to practice, and then to proceed to "We are verily guilty concerning our brother others. For as in a given field, the husband-Joseph." Seest thou, how fear brought man, digging it all up piecemeal, gradually their guilt to recollection? And yet when comes to the end of his task; so we too if we they were sinning they perceived it not, but make this rule for ourselves, in any wise to when they were fearful of being punished, reduce to a correct practice these three then they remembered it? Knowing, there- precepts during the present Lent, and to fore, all these things, let us make a change commit them to the safe custody of good and amendment of our lives; and let us think habit, we shall proceed with greater ease to of religion and virtue, before we think of the rest; and by this means arriving at the summit of spiritual wisdom, we shall both 21. And in the meanwhile I desire to fix reap the fruit of a favourable hope in the three precepts in your mind, to the end that present life; and in the life to come we shall you may accomplish me these during the stand before Christ with great confidence, and fast, -viz. to speak ill of no one; to hold no enjoy those unspeakable blessings; which, one for an enemy; and to expel from the God grant, we may all be found worthy of. mouth altogether the evil custom of oaths, through the grace and loving kindness of And as when we hear that some money tax Jesus Christ our Lord, with Whom be glory to the Father and the Holy Spirit forever and ever. Amen.

HOMILY IV.

An exhortation to the people respecting fortitude and patience, from the examples of Job and the Three Children in Babylon. The Homily concludes with an address on the subject of abstaining from oaths.

readiness to listen which ye are now showing. For it is impossible that a soul in anguisa, and oppressed with the cloud of despondency, should have power to hear with readiness anything that is spoken. But I see you are attending to us with much good will, and with an intense earnestness; and that you have shaken off gloomy thoughts, and put aside the sense of present distress, in your affectionate desire of listening. For this cause, I thank God heartily together with you, that the calamity has not overmatched your philosophy; nor fear relaxed your vigour; nor tribulation quenched your alacrity; nor danger dried up your zeal: nor the fear of men overcome the desire for God; nor the difficulty of the times overthrown your earnestness; nay, so far from overthrowing, it has strengthened it; so far from slackening, it has given it more intensity; so far from quenching, has kindled it the more. The forum is indeed empty, but the church is filled; the former supplies material for melancholy, the latter is an occasion of joy and spiritual gladness! When therefore, beloved, you betake yourcalls forth a groan, fly back to thy Mother, and straightway she will console thee with the multitude of her offspring and will show thee the chorus of the Brethren complete, and will drive away all thy despondency! For in the city we are as earnestly longing to see human beings, as those who inhabit the deserts; but when we take refuge in the church, we are straitened for room by the multitude. And as when the sea is in uproar, and rendered furious by the violent tempest, fear compels all to fly for refuge from without into the harbour; so also now, the waves of the forum, and the tempest of the city, drives together every one from all sides into the church, and by the bond of love knits the members close to one another.

2. Let us then give thanks to God even for these things, that we have reaped so much fruit from the tribulation; that we have received so great an advantage from the trial.

1. Blessed be God! who hath comforted If there were no trial, there would be no your sorrowing souls, and stayed your agi-tated spirits! For that ye have received no would be no prize; if there were no lists! small consolation is evident by the desire and marked out, there would be no honours; if there were no tribulation, there would be no rest; if there were no winter, there would be no summer. And this may be observed, not only amongst men, but even with the very seeds; for if, in that case, we expect the ear of corn to spring and flourish, there must be much rain, much gathering of the clouds, and much frost; and the time of sowing is also a rainy season. Since therefore the winter, a winter not of the elements, but of souls, has now set in, let us too sow in this winter that we may reap in the summer; let us sow tears, that we may reap gladness. This is not my word, it is a prophetic promise, "They who sow in tears, shall reap in joy." The rain which cometh down, doth not so make the seeds to sprout and grow, as the shower of falling tears maketh the seed of godliness to spring up and flourish. This it is that cleanseth the soul; watereth the mind, and causeth the growing germ of doctrine to push rapidly forwards. For this reason also, it is needful to plough up a deep furrow. This the Prophet signified when he spoke thus, "Break up your fallow ground, and sow not self to the forum, and the sight of the solitude among thorns." Therefore, as when he who has set the plough on the field, turns up the earth from below, preparing beforehand a safe lodgment for the seeds, in order that they may not lie dispersed over the surface, but may be hidden in the very womb of the earth, and deposit their roots in safety: so also it is our business to act; and making use of the plough of tribulation to break up the depth of the heart. For another Prophet admonishes of this, when he says, "Rend your hearts and not your garments." Let us then rend our hearts, that if any evil plant, any treacherous thought be present in us, we may tear it up by the roots, and provide a pure soil for the seeds of godliness. For if we do not now break up the fallow ground; if we do not now sow; if we do not now water it with tears, whilst it is a time of tribulation and fasting, when shall we ever be brought to compunction? Will it be when we are at ease, and in luxury? But this is impossible. For ease and luxury generally lead to indolence, just as tribulation leads back again to diligence; and restores to itself the mind that had wandered abroad, and been dreaming after a multitude of objects.

¹ σκάμματα, elsewhere translated "arena," see Fabr. Ag. ii. γ. Græv. viii. 1963, he quotes St. Ephraim De Lucta Spirituali. In Iuctanininins knjus sæcuti, &c. Ed. Rom. Gr. Lat. iii. 577, Voss. p. 371. "The most perfect combatants are ever to be found fearless and active within the lines (scamma, but the timid and feeble fly this way and that before they begin to strive, and for their great of Intess and laziness will not exert themselves in the scamma, the scamma will not exert themselves in the scamma the view of the scamma to the view of the scamma to the view of view of the view of view Voss's note, p. 123. ² Ps. cxxv. 5. 3 Ter. iv. 3. 4 Toel ii. 13.

3. Let us not then grieve on account of this despondency, but even give thanks to God, for great is the gain that comes of tribulation. The husbandman, when he has sown the seed he had gathered with so much labour, prays that a shower may come; and the ignorant man, looking on, will be surprised at all that takes place; and perhaps say to himself, "what can this man be doing? He is scattering what he has collected; and together again; and besides mixing them with the earth, he is moreover desiring a heavy rain, so that all he has cast therein will rot, and become mire." Such a person is also terrified when he observes the thunders bursting through the clouds, and the regard what is present, but awaits the future. flourishing ears of corn; not of the tedious rain, but of the delightful dust of the threshing floor. Thus indeed, also, should we regard, not our present tribulation, nor the pain of it, but the benefit that may arise from it-the fruit that it will bring forth. Let us wait for the sheaves of the threshing floor; for if we be sober, we shall be able to collect much fruit from the present time, and to fill the granaries of our minds. If we be sober, we shall not only be far from taking any harm from this trouble, but we shall also reap innumerable benefits. But should we be slothful, even tranquillity will destroy us! Either of these things is injurious to him who takes no heed; but they both profit him who lives with strictness. And even as gold if it be covered with water, still shows its own proper beauty, and although it should fall into the furnace, would again come forth brighter than before; but on the other hand, should clay or grass be mixed with water, the one dissolves and the other corrupts; and should they fall into the fire, the one is parched and the other is burnt up; so also in truth it is with the just man and the sinner! For should the former enjoy repose, he remains illustrious, even as gold is when immersed in water; and though he falls into trial, he becomes the more illustrious, like gold when subjected to the test of fire; but the sinner, if he obtains rest, is enervated and corrupted like the grass and the clay, when they come in contact with water; and should he undergo trial, he is burnt up and destroyed, in the same way as the grass and the clay are by the action of fire!

4. Let us not then be out of heart for the present evils; for if thou hast any sins " remaining, they will disappear, and easily be burnt up by the tribulation; but if thou possessest virtue, thou wilt become thereby more illustrious and distinguished; for if thou art continually vigilant and sober, thou wilt be not only scattering, but he is also mixing it superior to all injury. For it is not the up in the earth with much industry, so that it nature of the trials, but the listlessness of will be no easy matter for him to collect these those who are tried, that is apt to cause their overthrow. So that if thou desirest to rejoice, and to enjoy ease and pleasure, seek neither for pleasure nor ease, but seek for a soul full of patience, and one that is able to manifest fortitude; since if thou hast not this, not only will trial put thee to shame, lightnings striking downwards. But not so but repose will destroy and overthrow thee the farmer. He is glad and rejoices whilst yet more signally. For to prove that it is beholding the heavy rain. For he does not not the attack of evils, but the listlessness of the mind which subverts our salvation, He does not attend to the thunderings, but hear what Christ saith: "Whosoever hearis reckoning the number of his sheaves. He eth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I thinks not of the decaying seed, but of the will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock." again: "Every one who heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it."2 Do you perceive that it was not the attack of these trials that produced the overthrow, but the folly of the builders? For there was rain there, and there was rain here; there were floods there, founded upon the rock should have fallen, Old Testament, endured this most grievous whereas nothing of that kind befell it. But war so nobly! These things, beloved, we do not suppose that these things were spoken should therefore always discourse of with one to a soul, giving proof by its works that it ourselves. For ye are witnesses, and your hears the divine word, or rejects it. Thus conscience is a witness how much gain we scended;-for the fire fell from heaven and dissolute man hath now become sober; the devoured all his flocks; the floods came;—the bold man meek; the slothful man active. frequent,—the constant,—the successive mes- They who never at any time saw a church, sengers of his calamities, telling him of the but constantly spent their time at the theatre, destruction of his herds—of his camels—of now remain in the church the whole day long. his children. The winds blew,—the bitter words of his wife:—"Curse God," she said, count, that God hath made thee earnest through fear; that He hath led thee by tribsoul was not supplanted: the just man did ulation to a sense of thine own safety? But come to pass." Seest thou that not the from thence too we shall gain a great advance nature of the trials, but the negligence of the toward virtue, if our piety is made more indolent, is wont to cause the overthrow? renders them still firmer and stronger by lives in a religious state, is not supplanted by the inroads of trial and tribulation, but stimulated thereby to more patience; even as the blessed Job, whom they made more illustrious and honourable.

5. At the present time then, a man is angry with us, a man of like passions, and of like soul, and we are afraid: but in the case of Job it was an evil and malignant demon who was angry; nay, he was not simply angry, but set in motion all sorts of machinations, and brought forward every stratagem; and be in constant tribulation, yet even with all he could not conquer the it, and become desperate. fortitude of the just man. But here is a man, who is at one time angry, at another the removal of our evils; let us only pray; time is reconciled; and we are nevertheless let us live in piety: for this is our work, to and there were floods here; here the beating devil that waged war, who is never reconciled of winds, and there again the same. The to human nature, but has engaged in a war one man built a house, and the other built a without treaty, and a battle without truce house. The building was the same; the against our race; yet nevertheless, the just trials were the same; but the end was not the man laughed his darts to scorn. What apolsame; because there was not the same ogy then, or what pardon can be ours, if we foundation. For the folly of the builder, not cannot sustain a human trial; we who are the nature of the trials, caused the fall of the taught such spiritual wisdom under grace; building; otherwise the house that was when this man before grace, and before the merely of a house; for the discourse relates another; and by words of this kind encourage Job builded up his soul. The rain de- have already received from this trial! The not blaspheme; but even gave thanks thus, is thy conscience pained? Yea, is thy mind saying, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath pierced every day as with a dart, expecting taken away. As it pleased the Lord, so is it death, and the greatest wrath? Nevertheless, since tribulation makes the strong man is able to free you from all these evils this stronger. Who saith this? It is the man who day. But not until He sees that you are lived in tribulation, the blessed Paul; he purified; not until He sees that a conversion speaks thus: "Tribulation worketh patience, has taken place, and a repentance firm and and patience probation, and probation hope," unshaken, will He entirely remove the tribu-And even as the violence of the wind, when lation. The goldsmith, until he perceives it rushes upon strong trees, and sways them the gold well refined, will not draw it out from in all directions, does not root them up, but the furnace; and even so God will not take away this cloud before He hath thoroughly these attacks; so the soul that is holy, and amended us. For He Himself who hath permitted this trial, knows the time for removing it. So it is also with one who plays the harp; he neither overstrains the string, lest he break it, nor relaxes it too much, lest he mar the consonance of its harmony. Thus does God act. He neither places our souls in a state of constant repose, nor of lengthened tribulation; making use of both these at His discretion: for he neither suffers us to enjoy continual repose, lest we should grow listless, nor on the other hand does he permit us to be in constant tribulation, lest we sink under

6. Let us then leave to Him the time for dead with fear. On that occasion it was a turn to virtue; but to set us free from these evils is God's work! For indeed He is more desirous to quench this fire than thou who art tried by it: but He is waiting for thy salvation. As tribulation then came of rest, so also after tribulation, rest must be expected. For neither is it always winter, nor always summer; neither are there always waves, nor always a calm; neither always night, nor always day. Thus tribulation is not perpetual, but there will be also repose; only in our tribulation, let us give thanks to God always. For the three youths were cast into the furnace, and did not even for this forget their piety; neither did the flames affright them, but more earnestly than men sitting in a chamber, and suffering nothing to alarm them, did they, whilst encircled by the fire, send up to heaven those sacred prayers'therefore the fire became a wall unto them, and the flame a robe; and the furnace was a fountain; and whereas it received them bound, it restored them free. It received his own power; not intentionally, but because bodies that were mortal, but abstained from the wisdom and abundant contrivance of God them as if they had been immortal! It knew turns all his weapons and devices upon his their nature, yet it reverenced their piety! own head; which assuredly happened on that The tyrant bound their feet, and their feet occasion. For the devil at that time inspiring bound the operation of the fire! O marvel- the tyrant, neither suffered the heads of the lous thing! The flame loosed those who were bound, and was itself afterwards bound by they should be delivered to wild beasts, nor those who had been in bonds; for the piety of the youths changed the nature of things; should be thrown into the fire; to the end or rather it did not change the nature, but, what was far more wonderful, it stayed the remain, their bodies being altogether conoperation of them, even whilst their nature remained. For it did not quench the fire, but though burning, made it powerless. And it was truly marvellous and unaccountable, that this not only happened with respect to the bodies of these saints, but also with respect to their garments, and their shoes. And as it was in the case of the Apostles, the garments of Paul expelled diseases and demons,2 and the shadow3 of Peter4 put death to flight; so indeed also in this case, the shoes of these youths extinguished the power of the fire.

7. I know not how I should speak, for the wonder surpasses all description! The force of the fire was both quenched and not quenched: for whilst it came in contact with the bodies of these saints, it was quenched; but when it was needful to burst their bonds, it was not quenched; wherefore it broke their bonds, but touched not their ancles.5 Do you see how very near it was? Yet the fire was not deceived, and dared not penetrate within the bonds. The tyrant bound, and the flame set loose; that thou mightest learn at once the fierceness of the barbarian, and the submissiveness of the element. For what reason did he bind, when he was about to cast into the fire? In order that the miracle might be the greater; that the sign might be the more unaccountable; that thou mayest not suppose that the things seen were an optical delusion. For if that fire had been no fire, it would not have consumed the bands; and what is much more, it would not have seized upon the soldiers who were placed without the furnace; but as the case was, it showed its power upon those without; but towards those within, its submissiveness. But observe, I pray, in everything, how the devil by the very same means with which he fights with the servants of God, pulls down punished in any such manner; but that they that not even any relics of these saints should sumed, and their ashes being mingled with the ashes of the fagots. But God accordingly employed this very circumstance for the taking away of impiety.6 And how? I will tell you. Fire is accounted by the Persians to be a god; and the barbarians, who inhabit that country even now honour it with much worship. God, therefore, being desirous to pull up by the roots the material of impiety, permitted the punishment to take this form, in order that He might give the victory to His servants before the eyes of all these fireworshippers; persuading them by the plain fact, that the gods of the Gentiles are in dread not of God only, but even of the servants of God.

8. Consider, moreover, how the crown of this victory was woven by the adversaries, and the enemies themselves were made witnesses of this trophy. For "Nebuchadnezzar," it says, "sent to gather together the princes, the governors, and the captains, the judges, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image, and they were all gathered together."7

¹ St. Chrysostom refers to the Benedicite, or "Song of the Three Children." In his book Quad nemo leaditur nisi a seipso, he calls it "That admirable and marvellous song, which from that day to this hath been sung every where throughout the world, and shall yet be sung in future generations." Ben. 1: ii., 464; E. quoted by Bingham, b. xiv. c. ii., sec. 6, New Ed., vol. iv., p. 461.

2 Acts xix, 12.

4 Acts v. 15.

5 Dan. iii. 25.

⁶ τῆς ἀσεβείας, used especially of Heathenism, as "ungodliness." Hom. I. 15, so εὐσεβεία perhaps; Tit. i. 1, for right religion, but this use of the words belongs rather to the Fathers than to the New Testament.

⁷ Dan. 111, 2,

The enemy prepares the theatre, and he midst; in order that from this too the conprepares the lists; a theatre too, not of chance alone conquering and being proclaimed vicpersons, or of some private individuals, but tors among so vast a multitude. For this of all those who were honourable and in would not have been so surprising if they had image; and they departed, having derided the say to themselves any such things as many image, and struck with wonder at the power are ofttimes wont to say; "If we were the of God, through the signs which had taken first, and the only persons to worship the place with respect to these young men. And image, this would have been a sin: but if we observe, where the field for this display was spread out. No city, nor select enclosure make allowance? who will not think us worthy furnished room for this theatre of the whole of defence?" nothing of that sort did they world, but smooth and naked plains. For in say or think, when they beheld the prostrate the plain of Dura, outside the city, he set up forms of so many tyrants. Consider thou the image, and the herald came and cried, also with me the wickedness of those who "To you it is commanded, O people, nations, and languages, that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, are," say they, "certain Jews whom thou psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye hast set up over the works of the province of fall down and worship the golden image;" Babylon." They did not merely make (for a fall indeed it was to worship the idol); mention of the nation, but they also bring to peth, shall the same hour be cast into the may inflame the wrath of the king; almost midst of a burning fiery furnace." Seest as if they had said, "These slaves, these thou how difficult these struggles are made; captives, who are without a city, thou hast how irresistible the snare; and how deep the made rulers over us. But they shew congulph, and a precipice on either hand? But tempt for such honour, and treat insolently be not afraid. In whatever degree the enemy him who has given them this honour!" increases his machinations, so much the more | Therefore they say this; "The Jews whom does he display the courage of the young thou hast set over the works of the province men. For this reason is there this symphony of Babylon, obey not thy decree, nor serve of so many musicians; for this reason the thy gods." The accusation becomes their burning furnace; in order that both pleasure, greatest praise; and the crimes imputed, and fear, may besiege the souls of those their encomium; a testimony indeed that is present. Is there any one of harsh and un-indubitable, since their enemies bring it foryielding character among them? "Let the ward. What then does the king? He commelody of every kind of music," saith he, "enchant and soften him." But is he superior to this artifice, "let the sight of the flame way. But nothing dismayed them, neither the affright and astound him." Thus was fear wrath of the king, nor their being left alone as well as pleasure present; the one entering to assault the soul by the ears, the other by the eyes. But the noble character of these youths was not by any such means to be conquered; but even as, when they fell into the fire, they mastered the flames, even so they derided all desire and all fear. For it was for them the devil had prepared all these things beforehand. For he had no doubts of his own subjects, but was exceedingly confident that no one would resist the royal mandate. But when all fell down, and were subdued, then the youths alone are led into the himself collects together the spectators, and quest may become the more illustrious, they authority, to the end that their testimony acted courageously at the first, when as yet may be worthy of credit with the multitude. They had come summoned for one thing; but est, and most astonishing fact was, that the they all departed having beheld another multitude of those who fell down, neither They came in order to worship the affrighted, nor enfeebled them. They did not "and whoso falleth not down, and worship mind their honourable condition, that they mands that they should be brought into the midst, so that he may affright them in every in the midst of so many, nor the sight of the fire, nor the sound of the trumpet, nor the whole multitude looking fire at them; for deriding all these things, as if they were about to be cast into a cool fountain of water, they entered the furnace uttering that blessed sentence, "We will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.",5

9. I have not referred to this history without reason, but that ye may learn that whether it be the wrath of a king, or the earthly king had not been angry with them, King!

² πτώματα, usually of fallen carcases.

³ Or princes, τυράννων. 5 Dan, iii, 18,

⁴ Dan, iii. 12,

10. Thou too then, if thou hast Him for righteouness and not instruments of sin. thy Friend, be not despairing, although thou preserving thy religion; be not cast down! these he said, "Iniquities are in their hands, For if thou depart hence in possession of that, God will restore to thee all things with more abundant splendour, and will raise again violence of soldiers, or the envy of enemies, thy body with greater glory; and instead of or captivity, or destitution, or fire, or furnace, riches, there will be the good things that or ten thousand terrors, nothing will avail to surpass all power of description. Did not put to shame or terrify a righteous man. Job sit naked on a dunghill, sustaining a life For if where the king was godless the youths more grievous than ten thousand deaths? were not dismayed at the tyrant's wrath, Yet since he did not cast away his piety, all how much more ought we to be confident, his former things came back to him in greater having an emperor who is humane and mer-ciful, and to express thankfulness to God for his full band of children; his possessions; this tribulation, knowing from what has now and what was greater than all, the splendid been said, that tribulations render men more crown of his patience. For as it happens illustrious both in the presence of God and with trees, should any one pluck away the of man, if they know how to bear them with fruit and the leaves together; should he even fortitude! For indeed if these had not been cut off all the branches letting the root only made slaves, we should not have known their remain; the tree will rise again entire, with freedom! If they had not been captives, we greater beauty, so indeed is it also with us. should not have learned their nobility of soul! If the root of piety remain, although wealth If they had not been exiles from their coun- be taken away, although the body destroyed, try below, we should not have known the all things again revert to us with greater glory excellency of their citizenship above! If the than before, Casting away therefore all anxiety and superfluous care, let us return to we should not have known the favour with ourselves; and let us adorn the body and the which they were regarded by the heavenly soul with the ornament of virtue; converting our bodily members into instruments of

11. And first of all, let us discipline our fallest into the furnace: and in like manner tongue to be the minister of the grace of the if He be angry, think not thou art safe though Spirit, expelling from the mouth all virulence thou be in Paradise. For Adam indeed was and malignity, and the practice of using disin Paradise, yet, when he had provoked God, graceful words. For it is in our power to Paradise profited him nothing. These youths make each one of our members an instrument were in the furnace; yet, since they were ap- of wickedness, or of righteousness. Hear proved, the furnace injured them not at all, then how men make the tongue an instru-Adam was in Paradise, but when he was ment, some of sin, others of righteousness! supine, he was supplanted! Job sat down "Their tongue is a sharp sword." But anon the dunghill, yet, since he was vigilant other speaks thus of his own tongue: "My he prevailed! Yet how much better was tongue is the pen of a ready writer."5 The Paradise than a dunghill! still the excellency former wrought destruction; the latter wrote of the place benefitted in no degree the in- the divine law. Thus was one a sword, the habitant; forasmuch as he had betrayed him- other a pen, not according to its own nature, self; as likewise indeed the vileness of the but according to the choice of those who emplace did to one no injury, who was fortified ployed it. For the nature of this tongue and on every side with virtue. As to ourselves of that was the same, but the operation was then, let us fortify our souls; for if the loss not the same. And again, as to the mouth of wealth should threaten us, or even death, likewise, we may see this same thing. For and yet no one can rob us of our religion, we these had a mouth full of filth and of wickedare the happiest of men, Christ commended ness, therefore against such it is said by way this when he said, "Be ye wise as ser- of accusation," Their mouth is full of curspents." For just as he exposes the whole ing and bitterness; "6 not such was his, but body in order that he may save the head,2 "My mouth shall speak of wisdom, and the so also do thou. Although it should be nec- meditation of my heart shall be of underessary to expose wealth, or the body, or the standing." Again, there were others who present life, or all things, for the purpose of had their hands full of iniquity; and accusing

¹ Matt. x. 16. ² So St. Jerome, Cal. Aur., St. Aug., Doct. Christ. II. xvi. (24); Comp. Gen. lii. 15. Luc. xvi. 8, 9; Origen on Prov. i. 2.

³ PS, 1911. 4.

4 The references in the Psalms are made to the English version, which is divided as the Hebrew, except that it sometimes varies a verse or two. LXX, and Vulg, annex Ps, x. to ix., and call Ps. xi. Ps. x., and so on till Ps. cxlvii., which they divide, beginning their Ps. cxlvii. at v. 12.

5 Ps., viv. 4.

⁶ Ps. xiv. 6. 5 Ps. xlv. 1.

and their right hand is filled with gifts." life too this day; that he has altered his ill like that of beasts, which is not to be charmed was the receptacle of the divine words, and this he again makes manifest, when he says, open my dark speech upon the harp." 5 12. Knowing these things then, let us fortify ourselves with virtue on all sides, and thus we shall avert the wrath of God, and let us make the members of the body instrueyes, and mouth, and hands, and feet, and heart, and tongue, and the 6 whole body, to be employed only in the service of virtue. And let us remember those three precepts, of which I discoursed to your Charity, exhorting you to consider no one as an enemy, nor to speak evil of any one of those who have aggrieved you; and to expel from your mouth the evil custom of oaths. And with respect to the two former precepts, we will discourse to you on another occasion; but we shall speak to you during the whole of the present week respecting oaths; thus beginning with the easier precept. For it is no labour at all would but apply a little endeavour, by reminding each other; by advising; by observing; and by requiring those who thus forget themselves, to render an account, and to pay the penalty. For what advantage shall we gain by abstinence from meats, if we do not also expel the evil habits of the soul? Lo, we have spent the whole of this day fasting; and in the evening we shall spread a table, not such as we did on yester-eve, but one of an altered and more solemn kind.8 Can any one of us then say that he has changed his

But he himself had hands practised in noth- custom, as well as his food? Truly, I suping but in being stretched out towards pose not! Of what advantage then is our Therefore he said of' these too, fasting? Wherefore I exhort, and I will not "The lifting up of my hands (let it be) an cease to exhort, that undertaking each preevening sacrifice."2 The same may also be cept separately, you should spend two or perceived with reference to the heart; for three days in the attainment of it; and just their heart indeed was foolish, but this man's as there are some who rival one another in was true; hence he speaks of them thus, 'Their heart is vain;' but of his own, 'My heart is inditing of a good matter.'' And without food; and others who, rejecting from as to the ear, one may see that the case is their tables not only the use of wine, and of the same; for some have a sense of hearing oil, but of every dish, and taking only bread and water, persevere in this practice during or moved to pity; and reproaching such the Psalmist says, "They are like the deaf adder, that stoppeth her ears." But his ear ing the frequency of oaths. For this is more useful than any fasting; this is more profitable than any austerity. And this same "I will incline mine ear to a parable, I will care which we display in abstaining from food, let us exhibit with respect to abstinence from oaths; since we shall be chargeable with the reproach of extreme folly, while we regard not things that are forbidden, and expend all our care upon things indifferent; for ments of righteousness; and let us discipline to eat is not forbidden, but to swear is forbidden; we, however, abstaining from those things that are permitted, daringly venture upon those things that are forbidden! On this account I beseech your Charity to make some change, and to let the beginning of it be visible from this day. For if we spend the whole of the present fast with such zeal, having in this week attained the practice of not swearing at all; and in the following having extinguished wrath; and in that which succeeds it, having pulled up evil-speaking by the roots; and after that, having amended what yet remains; thus going forward in our course, we shall come by little and little to to overcome the habit of swearing, if we the very summit of virtue; and we shall escape the present danger; and shall make God propitious; and the multitude will come back again to our city; and we shall teach the fugitives that we are to place our hopes of safety neither in security of place, nor in flight and retirement; but in piety of soul, and in virtue of manners. And thus shall we obtain the good things of this and of the future life; which, God grant! we may all be found worthy of, by the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom and with whom be glory to the Father, together with the Holy Ghost, now and for ever and ever. Amen.

¹ Ps. xxvi, 10. Or, more perspicuously, according to the usual sense of the Hebrew, bribes.

2 Ps. cxli, 2.

3 Ps. v, 9, Lxx.; Ps. xlv. 1. 3 Ps. v. 9, LXX.; Ps. xlv. 1. 6 Sav. our.

² Ps. cxli. 2.
⁴ Ps. Ivii. 2.
Fs. xlix. 4.
7 i. e., at the close of the last Homily.
8 σ₆μνστραμ. Tillemont supposes as well as Montfaucon, that the preceding Homily (the 3d) was delivered on Quinquagesima Sunday, and that this (the 4th) was preached on the Monday, which explains this allusion, Tr. The Lent fast began with that Monday. During Lent the Greek Church allows the use of fish on Sundays.

9 Or, beseech.

¹⁰ νιφάδας, lit. snowflakes. Comp. Il. iii. 222.

HOMILY V.

The exhortation of the last Homily is continued in this. The people are exhorted to bear with fortitude the impending wrath of the Emperor. The cases of Job and the Ninevites are referred to as examples. It is shewn that men ought not to fear death, but sin. What it is to die miserably is explained; and the Homily concludes with an earnest dissuasive against the use of oaths.

young men, and the Babylonian furnace, did, ing thus thou wouldest extinguish all the as it would seem, yesterday give no small sufferer's sadness, and remove all his distress. comfort to your Charity; and still more the example in the case of Job, and that dunghill more to be venerated than any kingly throne. results to the spectators, but only a temporary pleasure, which has no profit; but from the sight of Job's dunghill, one may derive every kind of benefit, yea, much divine wisdom and consolation, in order to patience. Therefore to this day many undertake a long pilgrimage,' even across the sea, hastening from the extremities of the earth, as far as Arabia, that they may see that dunghill; and having beheld it, may kiss the land, which contained the wrestling-ground of such a victor, and received the blood that was more precious than all gold! For the purple shines not so brilliantly, as did that body when dyed 3 not in another's blood, but in its own! Even those very wounds were more precious than all manner of jewels! For the nature of pearls is of no help to our life; nor do they satisfy any necessary want on the part of those who have them. But those wounds are a consolation for all sadness; and that thou mayest learn this to be the truth, suppose any one were to lose a beloved and only son. Shew him ten thousand pearls, and you will not console his grief, or lighten his anguish; but recall to his mind the wounds of Job, and thou wouldest easily be able to minister comfort by speaking thus: "Why sorrowest thou, O man? Thou hast lost one son; but that blessed man, after he had been bereaved of the whole family of his children, both received a plague in his own flesh, and sat down naked upon the dunghill, streaming with gore from every part, and his flesh gradually wasting away; even he who was just, and true, so devout a man, who abstained from every evil deed, and had even

1. The discourse concerning the three God for a witness to his virtue." By speak-Thus the wounds of the just man become more useful than pearls!

2. Figure to yourselves then this wrestler; For from seeing a royal throne no advantage and imagine that you see that dunghill, and himself sitting in the midst of it! That golden statue! set with gems! I know not how to express it: for I am unable to find any material so precious as to compare it with that body stained with blood! So far above every substance, however costly, was the nature of that flesh, beyond all comparison more precious, and those wounds more splendid than the sun's beams; for these illumine the eyes of the body; but those enlighten the eyes of the mind! those struck the devil with utter blindness! Therefore it was, that after that blow, he started back and appeared no more. And do thou, O beloved, learn thence too what advantage there is in tribulation! For when the just man was rich, and enjoyed ease, he had the means of accusing him. However falsely, yet still he had it in his power to say, "Doth Job serve thee for nought?" But after he had stripped him and made him poor, he dared not even open his mouth any more. When he was wealthy, he prepared to wrestle with him, and threatened to overthrow him; but when he had made him poor, and taken away all he had, and thrown him into the deepest distress, then he started back. When indeed his body was sound, he lifted up his hands against him,4 but when he had battered his flesh, then he fled, -defeated! Seest thou how to the vigilant, poverty is much better and more beneficial than riches; and infirmity and sickness, than health; and trial, than tranquillity; inasmuch as it makes the combatants more illustrious and vigorous?

3. Who hath seen or heard of such an astonishing contest? The fighters in worldly contests, when they have battered the heads of their adversaries, are then victorious, and are crowned! But this adversary, when he

¹ Comp. Hom. I. 23; Hom. XXXI. on Rom. xvi. 4.
² την δεξαμένην τὰ σκάμματα, see Hom. IV., this word can only mean the prepared place, not the spectators.
³ βαπτιζάμενον, perhaps rather "drenched," but the mention of the purple favors "dyed," the present tense does not admit "baptized," though the allusion is well sustained in Ben. tinctum.

⁴ Or buffetted with him, xeipas artipper.

conquered, and drew back. Even when he had pierced his ribs in every direction, he more conspicuous to us; and through that drawest thou? "Because," saith he, "every not happen now, it will happen shortly. thing I chose is come to pass, and yet that 5. I speak thus, not anticipating any that dunghill, the kingdom of heaven!

4. Collecting then all these reasons, let us raise ourselves from the dejection which oppresses us. For I have laid these histories before you, not that ye may applaud what is had battered the body of the just man, per- spoken, but that ye may imitate the virtue forating it with ulcers of every kind, and and the patience of such noble men; that ye had reduced him to great weakness, was then may learn from the very facts, that there is nothing of human ills to be dreaded, save sin only; neither poverty, nor disease, nor insult, was no gainer thereby; for he spoiled him nor malicious treatment, nor ignominy, nor not of his hidden treasure, but he made him death, which is accounted the worst of all evils. To those who love spiritual wisdom, piercing he gave to all the privilege to look such things are only the names of calamities; into his interior, and to discern completely names which have no substantial reality. the whole of his wealth! When he expected But the true calamity consists in offending to prevail, then he withdrew with much God, and in doing aught which is displeasing ignominy, and never again uttered a syllable! to Him. For tell me, what is there in death What is the matter, O devil? For what cause which is terrible? Is it because it transports withdrawest thou? Was not everything done thee more quickly to the peaceful haven, and that thou chosest? Hast thou not taken to that life which is free from tumult? Alaway his flocks, his herds, his droves of though man should not put thee to death, horses and of mules? Hast thou not also will not the very law of nature, at length destroyed his troop of children? and battered stealing upon thee, separate the body from his flesh to pieces. For what reason with- the soul; and if this event which we fear does which I most desired should come to pass, dread or melancholy event: ³ God forbid! and for which I did all those things, is not But because I am ashamed for those who are come to pass; he hath not blasphemed! For afraid of death. Tell me, whilst expecting it was in order to this, continues he, that I such good things as "eye hath not seen, nor was doing all those things; and as this is not ear heard, nor have entered the heart of come to pass, I am no gainer by having de- man," 4 dost thou demur about this enjoyprived him of his wealth; or by the destruc- ment, and art negligent and slothful; and not tion of his children; or by the plague inflicted only slothful, but fearful and trembling? upon his body; but the reverse of what I And is it not shameful that thou art distressed purposed hath come to pass; I have made my on account of death, whereas Paul groaned enemy more illustrious; I have added lustre on account of the present life, and writing to to his reputation." Perceivest thou, O be- the Romans said, "The creation groaneth loved, how great was the reward of tribula- together, and ourselves also which have the tion? His body was fair and sound before, first fruits of the Spirit do groan."5 And he but it became more venerable, when pierced spoke thus, not as condemning the things through and through by these wounds! present, but longing for the things to come. And thus wool, fair as it is before the dyeing, "I have tasted," saith he, "of the grace, and when it becomes purple, takes an indescribable beauty, and an additional grace. But if have the first fruits of the Spirit, and I press he had not stripped him, we should not have on towards the whole. I have ascended to known the good condition of the victor; if the third heaven; I have seen that glory he had not pierced the body with ulcers, the which is unutterable; I have beheld the shinrays within would not have shone forth. If ing palaces; I have learnt what joys I am he had not made him sit down upon a dung-deprived of, while I linger here, and therefore hill, we should not have known his wealth. do I groan." For suppose any one had con-For a king sitting on a throne is not so illus-ducted thee into princely halls, and shewn trious, as this man was notable and conspicu- thee the gold everywhere glittering on the ous, whilst sitting upon his dunghill! For walls, and all the rest of the glorious show; if after the royal throne, comes death; but after from thence he had led thee back afterward to a poor man's hut, and promised that in a short time he would bring thee back to those palaces, and would there give thee a perpetual mansion; tell me, wouldest thou not indeed languish with desire, and feel impatient, even at these few days? Thus think

¹ ἡθέλησα, desired is ἐβουλόμην. See Plat. Gorg, where Socrates argues that a tyrant has no great power, since, though he can do all he chooses, ἃ δοκεῖ αὐτῷ, he cannot attain what he wishes, å βούλεται.
² εὐεξίαν. See Hom. 1. 16.

³ i. e., as connected with the present events.
4 r Cor. ii. 9; Isa. Ixiv. 4. 5 Rom. viii. 22, 23.
6 οὐ στέγω. Cf. r Thess. iii. r.

then of heaven, and of earth, and groan with others by the sword; and some cast into the

the present life!

religion from thy fathers; and from thy the eternal justice.9 earliest age hast been nourished in the study 8. Since therefore such evils await sinners, travelling toward better things, and hast the not with violence? opportunity of meditating on the hope of the same time as fearful of death, as those who believe not the resurrection?

7. But I have no fear of death, says one, nor of the act of dying, but of a miserable death, of being beheaded. Did John then, I ask, die miserably? for he was beheaded. Or did Stephen die miserably? for he was stoned; and all the martyrs have thus died wretchedly, according to this objection: since some have ended their lives by fire; and

Paul, not because of death, but because of ocean; others down a precipice; and others into the jaws of wild beasts, have so come by 6. But grant me, saith one, to be like Paul, their death. To die basely, O man, is not and I shall never be afraid of death. Why, to come to one's end by a violent death, but what is it that forbids thee, O man, to become to die in sin! Hear, at least, the prophet like Paul? Was he not a poor man? Was moralising on this very matter, and saying, he not a tent maker? Was he not a man of "The death of sinners is evil." He does humble position? For if he had been rich not say that a violent death is evil; but what and high born, the poor, when called upon then? "The death of sinners is evil." to imitate his zeal, would have had their And justly so; for after the departure from poverty to plead; but now thou canst say this life, there is an intolerable punishment; who exercised a manual art, and supported the fire unquenchable, the outer darkness, himself too by his daily labours. And thou, the chains indissoluble; the gnashing of indeed, from the first hast inherited true teeth, the tribulation, and the anguish, and of the sacred writings; but he was "a blas- what advantage can it be to them, though phemer, and a persecutor, and injurious," they should end their days at home, and in and ravaged the Church! Nevertheless, he their bed? Even so, on the other hand, it so changed all at once, as to surpass all in the can do no harm to the righteous to lay down vehemence of his zeal, and he cries out, say- the present life through sword, or steel, or ing, "Be ye imitators of me, even as I also fire, when they are to depart to the good am of Christ." He imitated the Lord; and things that are immortal. Truly "the death wilt not thou who hast been educated in piety of sinners is evil." Such a death was that from the first, imitate a fellow-servant; one of the rich man, who despised Lazarus. He, who by conversion was brought to the faith at a later period of life? Knowest thou not, end, at home and on his bed, and with his that they who are in sins are dead whilst they relatives about him, experienced after his live; and that they who live 3 in righteous-departure to the other world a fiery torment; ness, although they be dead, yet they live?4 nor was he able to obtain there even a little And this is not my word. It is the declara- comfort, out of all the pleasure he had ention of Christ speaking to Martha, "He that joyed in the present life! But not so was it believeth in me though he were dead yet with Lazarus; for when lying upon the paveshall he live." Is our doctrine, indeed, a ment, while the dogs came and licked his fable? If thou art a Christian, believe in sores, he had suffered a violent death (for Christ; if thou believest in Christ, shew me what could be more painful than hunger?), thy faith by thy works,6 But how mayest but on his departing hence he enjoyed eterthou shew this? By thy contempt of death; nal blessings, luxuriating in the bosom of for in this we differ from the unbelievers. Abraham! In what respect, then, did it in-They may well fear death; since they have jure him that he died a violent death? or no hope of a resurrection. But thou, who art what did it profit the rich man, that he died

9. But, says some one, "We have no fear future; what excuse hast thou, if whilst as- of dying by violence, but of dying unjustly; sured of a resurrection, thou are yet at the and of being punished in a similar way with the guilty,-we who have had nothing to do with the crimes of which we are suspected." What sayest thou, tell me? Art thou afraid

⁷ In this rendering of the Septuagint there is a coincidence with that of the Targum, and the Vulgate, Æthiopic, and Arabic versions. But the Syriac is conformable with the Hebrew. The discrepancy may be accounted for by a slight difference in the reading

crepancy may be accounted for by a slight difference in the reading of the vowel points.

8 Ps. xxxiv. 21. This passage is quoted by Bishop Latimer at the close of a sermon upon the epistle for the twenty-third Sunday after Trinity, preached A. D. 1552. His words are, Mors precatorum pexistina. "Death to sinners is the worst thing that can happen unto them." "What meaneth he by that? he signified unto us, that the wicked be not enough punished here, therefore it shall be worse with them after their death. So that it shall be a change; they that have their pleasure here, and live according to their desires, they shall come to afflictions in the other world, 9 See Hom. III, on Rom. i. th.

^{1 1} Tim, i. 13. 3 ζωντες, but Ben. Mar. ὅντες, who are. 5 John xi. 5.

² 1 Cor. xi. 6. ⁴ 1 Tim. v. 6. ⁶ Jas. ii. 18.

of dying unjustly, and wouldest thou wish utmost peril; and now that we are in fear for ished? Would you have me declare unto being made sober by this continual fear! your Charity, whence it is that we are afraid to enter.

persons, trampling under foot the laws, threw |down the statues, and involved all in the 11 Cor. xiv. 20.

tive of dying unjustly, would rather depart by an act of justice? For if it be necessary from all a language of a different kind. to fear death, it is necessary to fear it when "Let the Emperor take our substance, we it comes upon us justly; since he indeed who will gladly be deprived of our fields and posdies unjustly, is by this very means made a sessions, if any one will but ensure us safety partaker with all the saints. For many of for the bare body." As therefore, before those who were approved and distinguished the fear of death pressed upon us, the loss of by God, have been subjected to an unjust our wealth tormented us; and after these lawend; and first of all Abel. For it was not less outrages had been perpetrated, the fear that he had sinned against his brother, or of death succeeding, expelled the grief for done Cain any harm; but inasmuch as he had that loss; so if the fear of hell had held poshonoured God, therefore was he slaughtered. session of our souls, the fear of death would But God permitted it. Was it, think you, not have possessed them. But even as it is because He loved him, or because He hated him? Most clearly, because He loved him, upon us, the more powerful usually overand wished to make his crown the brighter, shadows the weaker one, so also would it now by that most unjust murder. Seest thou happen; if the dread of future punishment then, that it becomes us not to be afraid of remained in the soul, that would overshadow dying by violence; nor yet of dying unjustly; all human fear. So that if any one endeav-but of dying in a state of sin? Abel died ours always to have the remembrance of hell, unjustly. Cain lived, groaning and trember bling! Which then, I would ask, was the more blessed of the two; he who went to rest distress, but will even rescue him from the in righteousness, or he who lived in sin; he flame to come. For he who is always afraid who died unjustly, or he who was justly pun- of hell, will never fall into the fire of hell;

11. Permit me, that I now say to you at a of death? The love of the kingdom hath not penetrated us, nor the desire of things to understanding; howbeit in malice be ye chilcome inflamed us: otherwise we should dedren." For this is a childish terror of ours, spise all present things, even as the blessed if we fear death, but are not fearful of sin. Paul did. Add to this, on the other hand, Little children too are afraid of masks, but that we do not stand in awe of hell; therefore fear not the fire. On the contrary, if they death is terrible. We are not sensible of the are carried by accident near a lighted candle, unsufferable nature of the punishment there; they stretch out the hand without any contherefore, instead of sin, we fear death; since cern towards the candle and the flame; yet a if the fear of the one held possession of our mask which is so utterly contemptible terrisouls, the fear of the other would not be able fies them; whereas they have no dread of fire, which is really a thing to be afraid of. Just 10. And this I will endeavour to make so we too have a fear of death, which is a manifest, not from anything of a remote mask that might well be despised; but have nature, but from what is at our own doors; no fear of sin, which is truly dreadful; and, and from the events which have happened even as fire, devours the conscience! And among us in these days. For when the this is wont to happen not on account of the Emperor's letter came, ordering that tribute nature of the things, but by reason of our to be imposed which was thought to be so own folly; so that if we were once to conintolerable, all were in a tumult; all quarrelled sider what death is, we should at no time be with it; thought it a sore grievance, resented afraid of it. What then, I pray you, is it; and when they met one another said, death? Just what it is to put off a garment. "Our life is not worth living, the city is un- For the body is about the soul as a garment; done;—no one will be able to stand under and after laying this aside for a short time this heavy burden; "and they were distressed by means of death, we shall resume it again as if placed in the extremest danger. After with the more splendour. What is death at this, when the rebellion was actually perpe-most? It is a journey for a season; a sleep trated, and certain vile, yea, thoroughly vile longer than usual! So that if thou fearest death, thou shouldest also fear sleep! If for is able to benefit a malady of the eyes only, for those too who are eating and drinking, for as this is natural, so is that! Let not natural things sadden thee; rather let things which arise from an evil choice make thee sorrowful. Sorrow not for the dying man; but sorrow for him who is living in sin!

12. Would you have me mention another reason on account of which we fear death? We do not live with strictness, nor keep a clear conscience; for if this were the case nothing would alarm us, neither death, nor famine, nor the loss of wealth, nor anything else of this kind. For he who lives virtuously, cannot be injured by any of these things, or be deprived of his inward pleasure. For being supported by favourable hopes, nothing will be able to throw him into dejection. What is there that any one can possibly effect, by which he can cause the nobleminded man to become sorrowful? Take away his riches? He has yet wealth that is in the heavens! Cast him out of his country? He will take his journey to that city which is above! Load him with fetters? He has still his conscience free, and is insensible to the external chain! Put his body to death? Yet he shall rise again! And as he who fights with a shadow, and beaten the air, will be unable to hit any one; so he who is at war with the just man, is but striking at a shadow, and wasting his own strength, without being able to inflict any injury upon him. Grant me then to be sure of the kingdom of heaven; and, if thou wishest, slay me this day. shall be thankful to thee for the slaughter; forasmuch as thou sendest me quickly to the possession of those good things! "This, however," says some one, "is what we especially lament, that hindered as we are by to that kingdom." Such being the case then, leave off lamenting death, and lament thy sins, in order that thou mayest be freed from them! Grief, indeed, hath had its existence, not that we should sorrow for the loss of the taking away of our sins,2 And I will make the truth of this evident by an example. Healing medicines 3 have been made for those diseases only which they are able to remove; not for those which are in no respect assisted by them. For instance (for I wish to make the matter still plainer), the medicine which those who are dying thou art pained, grieve and no other disease, one might justly say was made only for the sake of the eyes; not for the stomach, nor for the hands, nor any other member. Let us then transfer this argument to the subject of grief; and we shall find, that in none of those things which happen to us, is it of any advantage, except to correct sin; whence it is apparent that it hath had its existence only for the destruction of this. Let us now take a survey of each of those evils which befall us, and let us apply despondency as a remedy, and see what sort of advantage 4 results from it.

13. Some one is mulcted in property: he becomes sad, but this does not make good his loss. Some one hath lost a son: he grieves, but he cannot raise the dead, nor benefit the departed. Some one hath been scourged, beaten, and insulted; he becomes sorrowful. This does not recall the insult. Some one falls into sickness, and a most grievous disease; he is dejected. This does not remove his disease, but only makes it the more grievous. Do you see that in none of these cases does sadness answer any useful purpose? Suppose that any one hath sinned, and is sad. He blots out the sin; he gets free from the transgression. How is this shewn? By the declaration of the Lord; for, speaking of a certain one who had sinned, He said, "Because of his iniquity I made him sad for a while; and I saw that he was grieved, and he went on heavily; and I healed his ways."5 Therefore also Paul saith, "Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of."6 Since then what I have said clearly shews, that neither the loss of riches, nor insult, nor abuse, nor stripes, nor sickness, nor death, nor any other thing of that kind can possibly be relieved by the multitude of our sins, we shall not attain the interference of grief, but sin only can it blot out and do away, it is evident that this is the only reason why it hath its existence. Let us therefore no more grieve for the loss of wealth, but let us grieve only when we commit sin. For great in this case is the wealth, nor for death, nor for anything else gain that comes of sorrow. Art thou of that kind, but that we may employ it for amerced? Be not dejected, for thus thou wilt not be at all benefited. Hast thou sinned? Then be sorry: for it is profitable; and consider the skill and wisdom of God. Sin hath brought forth for us these two things, sorrow and death. For "in the day thou eatest," He saith, "thou shalt surely die; στελεί είς, al. τελεί είς, is free of.

² αμαρτημάτων, see Hom. IV. 4.

3 Thus in Plat. Gorg. 78. Socrates argues that it is best to be punished when one does wrong, comparing punishment to medi-

⁴ M. what is the advantage that.
5 Isa, Ivii, 17. The English version seems rather to give the sense of the Hebrew, and is less pointedly apposite, though it too implies that trouble is given for our good, and, as the context also implies, sorrow too.

and to the woman, "In sorrow thou shalt the fire (for it is no crime to be burnt), but bring forth children." And by both of these things he took away sin, and provided that the mother should be destroyed by her offspring. For that death as well as grief takes away sin, is evident, in the first place, from the case of the martyrs; 2 and it is plain too from what Paul saith to those who had sinned, speaking on this wise, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep."3 Inasmuch, he observes, as ye have sinned, ye die, so that ye are freed from sin by death. Therefore ne goes on to say, "For if we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord, that we should not be condemned with the world." 4 And even as the worm is brought forth from the wood, and devours the wood; and a moth consumes the wool, from whence it originates; so grief and death were born of sin. and devour sin.

14. Let us not then fear death, but let us only fear sin, and grieve on account of this. And these things I speak, not anticipating any thing fearful, God forbid! but wishing you when alarmed to be always thus affected, and to fulfil the law of Christ in very deed. For "he," saith Christ, "that taketh not his cross, and followeth after Me, is not worthy of Me." 5 This He said, not that we should bear the wood upon our shoulders, but that we should always have death before our eyes. Even so as Paul, that is, died daily, and laughed at death, and despised the present life. For indeed thou art a soldier, and standest continually at arms; but a soldier who is afraid of death, will never perform a noble action. Thus then neither will a Christian man, if fearful of dangers, perform anything great or admirable; nay, besides this, he will be apt to be easily vanquished. But not so is it with the man who is bold and lofty minded. He remains impregnable and unconquerable. As then the Three Children, when they feared not the fire, escaped from the fire, so also we, if we fear not death, shall entirely escape from death. They feared not they feared sin, for it is a crime to commit impiety. Let us also imitate these and all such, and let us not be afraid of dangers, and then we shall pass safely through them.

15. As for me, "I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet,"6 yet I understand clearly thus much of the future, and I proclaim, both loudly and distinctly, that if we become changed, and bestow some care upon our souls, and desist from iniquity, nothing will be unpleasant or painful. And this I plainly know from the love of God toward man, as well as from those things which He hath done for men, and cities, and nations, and whole populations. For He threatened the city of Nineveh, and said, "There are yet three days," and Nineveh shall be overthrown."8 What then, I ask, Was Nineveh overthrown? Was the city destroyed? Nay, quite the contrary; it both arose, and became still more distinguished; and long as is the time which has elapsed, it has not effaced its glory, but we all still celebrate and admire it even to this day.9 For from that time it hath been a sort of excellent haven for all who have sinned, not suffering them to sink into desperation, but calling all to repentance; and by what it did, and by what it obtained of God's favour, persuading men never to despair of their salvation, but exhibiting the best life they can, " and setting before them a" good hope, to be confident of the issue as destined in any wise to be favourable. For who would not be stirred up on hearing of such an example, even if he were the laziest of mortals?

16. For God even preferred that His own prediction should fall to the ground, so that the city should not fall. Or rather, the prophecy did not even so fall to the ground. For if indeed while the men continued in the same wickedness, the sentence had not taken effect, some one perhaps might have brought a charge against what was uttered. But if when they had changed, and desisted from their iniquity, God also desisted from His

Gen. ii. 17.

Martyrdom was held to be a kind of second baptism, or instead ² Martyrdom was held to be a kind of second baptism, or instead of baptism to those on whom it came before they could be baptized, St. Cyr. Cat. iii. (r); St. Cypr. Ex. to Mart.; Ep. 33, ad Jud., Ed. Hen. p. 136. Tertullian says, "This is a baptism which will either supply the place of water-baptism to one that has not received it, or will restore it to one that has lost for defaced) it. De Bapt. c. xii., quoted by Wall on Inf. Bapt. c. vi., t. ii., p. 100.

p. 150.

3 So St. Ang. Serm. de Script. exlviii. (al. 10, de Div.) on Acts
v. 4, Origen, xv. 15, on Matt. xix. 21, Ed. Ben. iii. 673. C thinks Ananias to have had this benefit, but he supposes his death not to have been an immediate judgment, but the wflect of his feeling at the moment. Cecumenius speaks of 1 Cor. xi. 31, as not merely threatening death, but foture punishment. Photius, Cat. Cramer, p. 233, speaks as St. Chrysostom.

5 Matt. x. 38.

⁶ Amos vii. 14.
7 πρείς πμέρσια. Thus it has always been read in the Septnagint, even from the first ages of the Church (note in Ed. Par. 1834). But this reading, it should be remarked, is not supported by the Targum, or the Vulgate, or Syriac, which all read ferty days, as in the Hebrew copies (St. Jerome on the passage corrects the eror, and Theodoret says that the Syriac, and Hebrew, and the translations of Aquilia, Symmachus, and Theodotion, read forty. Origen, Hom, XVI. on Num. xxiii. 19, Ed. Ben. ii. p. 330, d. corrects the LXXx, from the Hebrew.)

8 Jonah iii.
9 Nineveh was entirely rained in the reign of the Emperor

⁸ Jonah iii. 9 Nineveh was entirely ruined in the reign of the Emperor Hadrian, and though it was afterwards rebuilt by the Persians, and not finally destroyed till about the seventh century, it seems probable that St. Chrysostom alludes here rather to its moral than to its actual glory at that time. The article is not used, and the words added seem nearly to express what is intended to be underwords added seem nearly to express what is intended to be underwords added seem nearly to express what is intended to be underwords.

II Gr. The good hope, i. e., the hope of the better alternative.

fault with the prophecy, or to convict the tions,3 but of habits.4 things spoken of falsehood. The same law indeed which God had laid down from the not ashamed, and ought we not to hide our beginning, publishing it to all men by the faces, whilst instead of changing our habits, prophet, was on that occasion strictly observed. What then is this law? "I shall speak a sentence," saith He, "concerning a nation or a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; and it shall be, that if they repent of their evil, I will also repent of the wrath which I said I would do unto and thither, seeking where we may deposit them," Guarding then this law, he saved those who were converted and released from His wrath those who desisted from their wickedness. He knew the virtue of the barthreatening death, brought forth life! The sentence after it was published became cancelled; the very opposite to that which takes place among temporal judges! for in their case the proclamation of the sentence causes it to become valid, is fully to ratify it; but on the contrary, with God, the publication of the sentence, caused it to be cancelled. For if it had not been published, the offenders would not have heard; and if they had not heard, they would not have repented, and if they had not repented,2 they would not have warded off the punishment, nor would they have obtained that astonishing deliverance. For how is it less than astonishing, when the judge declares sentence, and the condemned discharge the sentence by their repentance! They, indeed, did not flee from the city as we are now doing, but remaining in it they caused it to stand. It was a snare, and they made it a fortification! It was a gulph, and a precipice, and they turned it into a tower of safety! They had heard that the buildings would fall, and yet they fled not from the buildings, but they fled from their sins! They did not depart each from his house as we do now, but each departed from his evil way; for, said they, "why should we think the walls have brought forth the wrath? we are the causes of the wound; we then should provide the medicine." Therefore they wrath, who shall be able any longer to find trusted for safety, not to a change of habita-

17. Thus did the barbarians! and are we as they did, we change only our habitations; privily removing our goods, and doing the deeds of men that are drunken? Our Master is angry with us; and we, neglecting to appease His wrath, carry about our household stuff from place to place, and run hither our substance; while we ought rather to seek where we may deposit our soul in safety; or rather, it benoveth us not to seek, but to entrust its safety to virtue and uprightness of barians; therefore He hastened the prophet life. For when we were angry and displeased thither. Thus was the city agitated at the with a servant, if he, instead of defending time, when it heard the prophet's voice, but himself against our displeasure, went down to instead of being injured it was benefited by his apartment, and collecting together his fear. For that fear was the cause of its clothes, and binding up together all his movsafety. The threatening effected the deliv- ables, meditated a flight, we could not tamely erance from the peril. The sentence of put up with this contempt. Let us then overthrow put a stop to the overthrow. O desist from this unseasonable endeavour, and strange and astonishing event! the sentence let us each say to God, "Whither shall I go from Thy Spirit, and whither shall I flee from Thy presence?"5 Let us imitate the spiritual wisdom of the barbarians. They repented even on uncertain grounds! For the sentence had no such clause, "If ye turn and repent, I will set up the city;" but simply, "Yet three days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown."6 What then said they? "Who knoweth whether God will repent of the evil He said He would do unto us?" Who knoweth? They know not the end of the event, and yet they do not neglect repentance! They are unacquainted with God's method of snewing mercy, and yet they change upon the strength of uncertainties! For neither was it in their power to look at other Ninevites who had repented and been saved; nor had they read prophets; nor had they heard patriarchs; nor had they enjoyed counsel, or partaken of admonition; nor had they persuaded themselves that they should certainly propitiate God by repentance. For the threatening did not imply this: but they were doubtful, and hesitating concerning it; and yet they repented with all diligence. What reason then shall we have to urge, when those, who had no ground for confidence as to the issue, are seen to have exhibited so great a change; but thou who hast ground of confidence in the mercy of God, and who hast frequently received many pledges of His care, and hast heard prophets, and apostles, and hast been instructed by actual events; hast yet no emulation to reach the same measure of virtue as these did! Great assuredly was their virtue! but greater by far was the mercy of God! and this may be seen from the very greatness of the threat. For this reason God did not add to the declaration, "But if ye repent, I will spare:" in order that by setting forth a sentence without limitation, He might increase the fear, and having increased the fear. He might constrain them more speedily to repentance.

¹ Jer. xviii. 7, 8.

² The clause, "and if they had not repented," inserted from Savile. Both the general sense, and the parallel with Rom. x, 14,

³ τόπων. 5 Ps. cxxxix, 7.

18. The prophet is indeed ashamed, foreseeing what the issue would be, and conjecturing that what he had prophesied, would remain unaccomplished; God however is not ashamed, but is desirous of one thing only, viz. the salvation of men, and corrects His own servant. For when he had entered the ship, He straightway there raised a boisterous sea; in order that thou mightest know that where sin is, there is a tempest; where there is disobedience, there is the swelling of the waves." The city was shaken because of the sins of the Ninevites; and the ship was shaken because of the disobedience of the prophet. The sailors therefore threw Jonah in the deep, and the ship was preserved. Let us then drown our sins, and our city will assuredly be safe! Flight will certainly be no advantage to us; for it did not profit him; on the contrary, it did him injury. He fled from the land indeed, but he fled not from by his flight, that he plunged those also who received him into the extremest peril. And whilst he sat sailing in the ship, although the sailors, the pilots, and all the necessary apparatus of the ship were there present, he was placed in the utmost danger. After, however, having been thrown out into the deep, and having put away his sin by means of the punishment, he had been conveyed into that unstable 'vessel, I mean, the whale's belly, he enjoyed great security. This was for the purpose of teaching thee, that as no ship can be of any use to him who is living in sin, so him who has put away his sin, the sea cannot drown, nor monsters destroy. Of a truth, the waves received, but they did not suffocate him. The whale received him, but did not destroy him; but both the animal and the element gave back to God unhurt that with which they were entrusted; and by all these things the prophet was taught to be humane and merciful; and not to be more cruel than wild beasts, or thoughtless sailors, or unruly waves. For even the sailors did not immediately at first give him up, but after much compulsion; and the sea and the monster guarded him with great kindness; all these things being under God's direction.

19. Therefore he came back again; he preached; he threatened; he persuaded; he preserved; he affrighted; he amended; he established; by one, and that the first preaching! Many days he needed not, nor continued counsel; but speaking these simple words only, he brought all to repentance! On this account God did not lead him directly from the snip into the city; but the sailors committed him to the sea; the sea to the whale; the whale to God; God to the Ninevites; and by this long circuit he brought back the fugitive, that he might instruct all, that it is impossible to fly from the hands of God; that whithersoever any one may roam, dragging his sin after him, he will have to undergo a thousand evils; and though no mortal were present, yet on every side the whole creation will rise up against him with the utmost vehemence! Let us not then provide for our safety by flight, but by a change of the moral character. Is it for remaining in the city that God is angry with thee, that thou shouldest fly? It is because thou hast sinned, that the wrath of God; he fled from the land, but He is indignant. Lay aside therefore the he brought the tempest after him on the sea; sin, and where the cause of thy wound lies, and so far was he from obtaining any benefit thence remove 3 the fountain of the evil. For the physicians too give us directions to cure contraries by contraries. Is fever, for instance, produced by a full diet? They subject the disease to the regimen of abstinence. Does any one fall sick from sadness? They say that mirth is the suitable medicine for it. Thus also it befits us to act with respect to diseases of the soul. Hath listlessness excited the wrath? let us shake this off by zeal, and let us manifest in our conduct a great change. We have the fast, a very great auxiliary and ally in our warfare; and besides the fast, we have the impending distress, and the fear of danger. Now then, in season, let us be at work on the soul; for we shall easily be able to persuade it to whatever we choose; since he who is alarmed and trembling, and set free from all luxury, and who lives in terror, is able to practise moral wisdom without difficulty, and to receive the seeds of virtue with much alacrity.

20. Let us therefore persuade it to make

¹ κλυδώνιον.
2 ἀτερμάτιστον, this word means "vast," "immeasurable," and does not suit the sense: ἀνερμάτιστον is undoubtedly the right reading, unless indeed St. Chrysostom used one for the other, as Suidas. Hesychius gives it "without ballast," and so Arstotle with the suit of t

³ ἀνάστειλον, divert as a stream. The metaphor is explained by the sequel, the "wound" meaning an incision made for surgical purposes.

this first change for the better, by the avoidance of oaths; for although I spake to you yesterday, and the day before, on this same subject; yet neither to-day, nor to-morrow, nor the day after, will I desist giving my counsel on this subject. And why do I say to-morrow and the day following? Until I see that you are amended, I will not abstain from doing so. If those, indeed, who transgress this law, are not ashamed, far less should we who bid them not transgress it, feel this frequency of the admonition to be a matter worthy of shame. For to be continually fault of the speaker, but of the hearers, needing as they do perpetual instruction, upon simple and easily-observed precepts. What indeed is easier than not to swear? It is only a good work of habit. It is neither labour of the body, nor expenditure of wealth. Art thou desirous to learn how it is possible to get the better of this infirmity, how it is possible to be set free from this evil habit? I will tell thee of a particular method by which if pursued thou wilt certainly master it. thy children, or thy wife, ensnared in this them of it, and they are not amended, order them to retire to rest supperless; 2 and impose this sentence upon thyself, as well as upon them, a sentence which will bring with it no injury, but a gain. For such is the nature of spiritual acts; they bring profit and a stantly punished, when straitened by thirst, and pained by hunger, receives a sufficient nition. admonition, even whilst no one is its monitor; tals, yet when we are thus reminded by the greatness of the punishment during a whole day, we shall need no other counsel and exhortation.

21. Ye have applauded what I have spoken. But still shew me your applause too by deeds. Else what is the advantage of our meeting here? Suppose a child were to go to school every day, yet if he learnt nothing the more for it, would the excuse satisfy us that he every day went there? Should we not esteem it the greatest fault, that going there daily, he did it to no purpose. Let us consider this with ourselves, and let us say to ourselves,

For so long a time have we met together at church, having the benefit of a most solemn Communion,3 which has in it much profit; and should we return back again just as we came, with none of our defects corrected, of what advantage is our coming here? For most actions are done, not for themselves, but for the effects which follow through their means; as, for example, the sower does not sow for the mere sake of sowing, but in order that he may reap too; since if this were not to follow, the sowing would be a loss, the seeds rotting without any kind of advantage. reminding men of the same topics is not the The merchant doth not take a voyage merely for sailing's sake, but that he may increase his substance by going abroad; since, if this be not attained beside, extreme mischief will result, and the voyage of merchants were but for loss. Let us indeed consider this in relation to ourselves. We also meet together in the church, not for the mere purpose of spending time here, but in order that we may return having gained a great and spiritual benefit. Should we then depart empty, and without having received any advantage, this If thou seest either thyself or any other per- our diligence becomes our condemnation! son, whether it be one of thy servants, or of In order that this may not occur, and extreme mischief result, on departing from this place, vice; when thou hast continually reminded let friends practise with one another; fathers with children; and masters with servants; and train yourselves to perform the task assigned you; so that when ye come back again, and hear us giving you counsel on the same subjects, ye may not be put to shame by an accusing conscience, but may rejoice speedy reformation. The tongue when con- and be glad, whilst ye perceive that ye have accomplished the greatest part of the admo-

22. Let us not moralize on these things and though we were the most stupid of mor- here only. For this temporary admonition does not suffice to extirpate the whole evil; but at home also, let the husband hear of these things from the wife, and the wife from the husband. And let there be a kind of rivalry among all in endeavouring to gain precedence in the fulfilment of this law; and let him who is in advance, and hath amended his conduct, reproach him who is still loitering behind; to the end that he may stir him up the more by these gibes. He who is deficient, and hath not yet amended his conduct, let him look at him who hath outstripped him, and strive with emulation to come up with him quickly. If we take advice on these points, and are anxiously concerned about them, our other affairs will speedily be well virtue may be laid in your souls. We pray adjusted. Be thou solicitous about God's do not say to me, "What if any one should impose upon us the necessity of taking oaths? assuredly, where a law is transgressed, it is improper to make mention of necessity; forasmuch as there is but one necessity which offending God! This, however, I say furoaths, those that are taken uselessly, and without any necessity; those to your own family, those to your friends, those to your servants; and should you take away these, you will have no further need of me for the others. For the very mouth that has been well disciplined to dread and to avoid the frequent oath, should any one constrain it a thousand times, would never consent to relapse again into the same habit. On the contrary, as now, with much labor and vast importunity, by alarming, threatening, exhorting, and counselling, we have scarcely been able to bring it over to a different habit, so in that case, although any one were to impose ever so great necessity, he could not possibly persuade to a transgression of this law. And as a person would never choose to take a particular poison, however urgent the necessity might be, so neither would he to utter an oath!

¹ This passage will serve to shew, that during the season of Lent it was the practice to have sermons daily at Antioch. Bingham has given a variety of quotations to the same effect. B. xiv. c. iv., sec. y., vol. iv. p. 536. New Ed.

² The supper, it should be remembered, was the chief meal of the day among the Greeks and Romans. And with those who observed the fast strictly the only meal: see Hom. VI. [6], and Hom. IV. 12.

³ συνάξεως φρικωβεστάτης. The word σύναξις is of frequent occurrence in St. Chrysostom, but is of somewhat ambigaous signification, and means commonly the service of the Church; but here and in some other passages, it seems to mean the Communion service. See a passage in Homily 1X, on Penitence, where the same expression receives a most striking commentary.

23. Should this amendment then take place, it will be an encouragement and inducement to the attainment of the remaining parts of virtue. For he who has not accomplished anything at all becomes listless, and quickly falls; but he who is conscious with himself that he has fulfilled at least one precept, coming by this to have a good hope, will go on with greater alacrity towards the rest; so that, after he has reached one, he will presently come to another; and will not halt until he has attained the crown of all. For if with regard to wealth, the more any one obtains of it, the more he desires, much rather may this be seen with reference to ristical attainments. Therefore I hasten, and am urgent that this work may take its commencement, and that the foundation of and beseech, that ye will remember these business, and he will take care of thine! And words, not only at the present time, but also at home, and in the market, and wheresoever ye pass your time. Oh! that it were possi-What if he should not believe us?" For ble for me familiarly to converse with you! then this long harangue of mine would have been unnecessary. But now since this may not be, instead of me, remember my words: cannot be dispensed with, viz. that of not and while you are sitting at table, suppose me to enter, and to be standing beside you, ther; cut off in the meantime superfluous and dinning into you the things I now say to you in this place. And wheresoever there may be any discourse concerning me among you, above all things remember this precept. and render me this recompense for my love toward you. If I see that you have fulfilled it, I have received my full return, and have obtained a sufficient recompense for my labours. In order then that ye may both render us the more active, and that yourselves too may be in the enjoyment of a good hope; and may provide for the accomplishment of the remaining precepts with greater facility; treasure up this precept in your souls with much care, and ye will then understand the benefit of this admonition. And since a vestment broidered with gold is a beautiful and conspicuous object, but seems much more so to us when it is worn upon our own person; thus also the precepts of God are beautiful when being praised, but appear far more lovely when they are rightly practised. For now indeed ye commend what is spoken during a brief moment of time, but if ye reduce it to practice, you will alike commend both yourselves and us all day long, and all your lives long. And this is not the grand point, that we shall praise one another; but that God will accept us; and not only accept us, but will also reward us with those gifts that are great and unspeakable! Of which may we all be deemed worthy, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom, and with whom, to the Father together with the Holy Ghost, be glory, now and always, for ever and ever. Amen.

HOMILY VI.

This Homily is intended to shew that the fear of Magistrates is beneficial. It also contains an account of what occurred, during their journey, to those who were conveying the tidings of the sedition to the Emperor. The case of Jonah is further cited in illustration. The exhortation on the fear of death is here continued; and it is shewn, that he who suffers unjustly, and yet gives thanks to God, by whose permission it happens, is as one suffering for God's sake. Examples are again adduced from the history of the Three Children, and the Babylonian furnace. The Homily concludes with an address on the necessity of abstaining from oaths.

fomentations, until they perceive that the pain lation to those that are in sorrow. has subsided; much less ought this to be

I. WE have spent many days addressing ness, but the consolation of the latter does words of comfort to your Charity. We would not allow us to sink under the weight of sadnot, however, on that account lay the subject ness; and by both these means God provides aside; but as long as the sore of despondency for our safety. He Himself hath armed remains, we will apply to it the medicine of magistrates with power; that they may strike consolation. For if in the case of bodily terror into the licentious; and hath ordained wounds, physicians do not give over their His priests that they may administer conso-

2. And both these things are taught us by done in regard to the soul. Despondency is the Scripture, and by actual experience of a sore of the soul; and we must therefore recent events. For if, whilst there are magfoment it continually with soothing words. istrates and soldiers living under arms, the For not so naturally is warm water efficacious madness of a few individuals, a motley crew to soften a hard tumour of the flesh, as words of adventurers, hath kindled such a fire of comfort are powerful to allay the swelling among us, in so short a moment 3 of time, passions of the soul. Here, there is no need and raised such a tempest, and made us all to of the sponge as with physicians, but instead stand in fear of shipwreck, suppose the fear of this we employ the tongue. No need of of magistrates to be wholly taken away? To fire here, that we may warm the water; but what lengths would they not have gone in instead of fire, we make use of the grace of their madness? Would they not have overthe Spirit. Suffer us then to do so to-day. thrown the city from its foundations, turning For if we were not to comfort you, where else all things upside down, and have taken our could ye obtain consolation? The judges very lives? If you were to abolish the public affright; the priests therefore must console! tribunals, you would abolish all order from The rulers threaten; therefore must the our life. And even as if you deprive the Church give comfort! Thus it happens with ship of its pilot, you sink the vessel; or as, if respect to little children. The teachers you remove the general from the army, you frighten them, and send them away weeping place the soldiers bound in the hands of the to their mothers; but the mothers receiving enemy; so if you deprive the city of its them back to their own bosoms, keep them rulers, we must lead a life less rational than there, embrace them, and kiss them, while that of the brutes, biting and devouring one they wipe away their tears, and relieve their another; the rich man, the poorer; the sorrowing spirits; persuading them by what stronger man, the weaker; and the bolder they say, that it is profitable for them to fear man, him who is more gentle. But now by their teachers. Since therefore the rulers the grace of God none of these things hapalso make you afraid, and render you anxious, pen. For they who live in a state of piety, the Church, which is the common mother of require no correction on the part of the magus all, opening her bosom, and cradling us istrates; for "the law is not made for a rightin her arms, administers daily consolation; eous man," saith one. But the more numertelling us that the fear of rulers is profitable, and profitable too the consolation that comes from hence.² For the fear of the former does not permit us to be relaxed by listless- knowing, observed, "There is no power, but of God, the powers that be are ordained of stant agony of mind. So that if we have God." For what the tie-beams are in kindled God's wrath, we have appeased Him houses, that rulers are in cities; and in the in the endurance of such a punishment. For same manner as if you were to take away the if we have not paid the satisfaction due to our former, the walls, being disunited, would fall in upon one another of their own accord; so were you to deprive the world of magistrates, and of the fear that comes of them, houses at once, and cities, and nations, would fall on hath already given us not a few pledges for one another in unrestrained confusion, there being no one to repress, or repel, or persuade them to be peaceful, by the fear of punish-the fear of our rulers, but let us give thanks to God that He hath removed our listlesstell me, what harm hath arisen from this contears? that unseasonable laughter, and im- before him they might kindle the fire, and Dost thou grieve, I ask, for any of these reasons? For these things, assuredly, it were right to rejoice, and to be thankful to God, that by the terror of a few days He hath put an end to such stupidity!

"Very true," saith some one, "if our danger did not go beyond fear, we should have reaped a sufficient benefit; but we are now in dread lest the mischief should proceed much farther, and we should be all placed in the extremest peril."

Nevertheless, I say, fear not. Paul comforteth you, saying, "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able, but will with the temptation also make the way of escape, that ye may be able to bear it."4 He indeed Himself hath said. "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." 5 For had He resolved to punish us in deed, and in actual endurance, He would not have given us over to terror during so many days. For when He would not punish, He affrights; since if He were intending to punish, fear would be superfluous, and threatening superfluous. But now, we have sustained a life more grievous than countless deaths; fearing and trembling during so many days, and being suspicious of our very shadows; and paying the punishment of Cain; and in the midst of our sleep, starting up, through con-sins, yet it hath been enough to satisfy the mercy of God.

4. But not this, but many other grounds for confidence ought we to have. For God favourable hopes. And first of all, those who carried the evil tidings departing hence with the speed of wings, supposing they should long ere this have reached the camp,6 are yet 3. Let us not then be grieved, beloved, by delayed in the midst of their journey. So many hindrances and impediments have arisen; and they have left their horses, and ness, and rendered us more diligent. For are now proceeding in vehicles; whence their arrival must of necessity be retarded. For cern and anxiety? Is it that we are become since God here stirred up our priest, and more grave, and gentle; more diligent, and common father, and persuaded him to go attentive? that we see no one intoxicated, forth, and undertake this embassy, he deand singing lascivious airs? Or is it that there tained the messengers for a while, when they are continual supplications, and prayers, and were but half way on their road, lest arriving pure words, and all dissoluteness is banished; make our teacher's efforts to mend matters and that the city is now in all respects, like useless, when the royal ears had become inthe pattern of a modest and virtuous woman? flamed. For that this hindrance on the road, was not without God's interposition is evident from this. Men who had been familiar with such journeys all their lives, and whose constant business it was to ride on horseback, now broke down through the fatigue of this very riding; so that what hath now happened is the reverse of what took place in the case of Jonah. For God hastened him when unwilling, to go on his mission. But these, who were desirous to go, He hindered. O strange and wonderful event! He wished not to preach of an overthrow; and God forced him to go 7 against his will. These men with much haste set forward to be the bearers of a message of overthrow, and against their will again He has hindered them! For what reason think you? Why, because in this case the haste was an injury; but in the other case, haste brought gain. On this account, He hastened him forward by means of the whale; and detained these by means of their horses. Seest thou the wisdom of God? Through the very means by which each party hoped to accomplish their object, through these each received an hindrance. Jonah expected to

⁶ τὸ στρατόπεδον. The common Lexicons quote only Can. 7, of Sardica for the use of this word, to signify the court of an Emperor. Du Cange, Gloss. Med. Gr., shews it to be common, quoting St. Basil, Ep. 127, al. 59, &c.; St. Athanasius, Afol. ad Constantium, c. 4, St. Macar. Hom. XV. p. 21 (St. ed.) sec. 30, and other passages. The term is accounted for by the acknowledged dependence of the Emperors on the army, and their constantly having a strong guard about them. Compare our expression, 'head-quarters' to the control of the control o

⁷ ανέστησεν.

⁴ Rom, xiii. 1.
² ἐν ταῖς οἰκίαις τῶν ξύλων αἰ ἰμαντώσεις, literally, "strappings of beams;" or "bondings of the timbers."
³ λιταῖ.
⁴ 1 Cor. x. 13.

⁵ Heb. xiii. 5; Josh. i. 5.

case, nor the ship in the other, but the Providence of God everywhere directing all things

according to its own wisdom! 5. Consider also His care over us, and how He both affrighted and consoled us. For after permitting them to set out on the very day when all these outrages were committed, as if they would report all that had taken place to the Emperor; He alarmed us all at their sudden departure. But when they were gone, and two or three days had elapsed, and we thought the journey of our Priest would now be useless, as he would arrive when it was too late, He delivered us from this fear, and comforted us by detaining them, as I observed, midway; and by providing persons coming to us from thence by the same road, to announce to us all the difficulties they had met with on their journey, that we might thus take a little breath, as indeed we did, and were relieved of a great part of our anxiety. Having heard of this, we adored God who had done it, who hath even now more tenderly than any father disposed all things for us, delaying by some invisible power those evil messengers, and all but saying to them, "Why do ye hasten? Why do ye press on, when ye are going to overwhelm so great a city? For are ye the bearers of a good message to the Emperor? Wait there till I have made ready my servant, as an excellent physician, to come up with you and anticipate you in your course." But if there was so much of providential care in the first breaking out of this wound of iniquity, much more shall we obtain a greater freedom from anxiety, after conversion, after repentance, after so much fear, after tears and prayers. For Jonah was very properly constrained, repentance; but ye have already given striking evidences of repentance, and conversion. Therefore, it is necessary that you should receive consolation, instead of a threatening For this reason also hath He messenger. sent our common father hence, notwithstanding the many things to hinder it. But if He had not been tender of our safety, He would not have persuaded him to this, but would have hindered him, however disposed he might be to undertake the journey.

6. There is a third reason by which I may possibly persuade you to have confidence: I mean, the present sacred season, which escape by the ship, and the ship became his almost all, even unbelievers, respect; but to chain. These couriers, by means of their which this our divinely-favoured Emperor has horses, expected the more quickly to see the shewn such reverence and honour, as to sur-Emperor; and the horses became the obsta- pass all the Emperors who have reigned with cles; or rather, neither the horses in one a regard for religion before him. As a proof of this, by sending a letter on these days in honour of the feast, he liberated nearly all those who were lodged in prison; and this letter our Priest when he arrives will read to him; and remind him of his own laws, and will say to him, "Do thou exhort thyself, and remember thine own deeds! Thou hast an example for thy philanthropy at home! Thou didst choose to forbear from executing a justifiable slaughter, and wilt thou endure to perpetrate one that is unjust. Reverencing the feast, thou didst discharge those who had been convicted and condemned; and wilt thou, I ask, condemn the innocent, and those who have not committed any violence, and this when the sacred season is present? That be far from thee, O Emperor! Thou, speaking by this Epistle to all the cities, didst say, 'Would it were possible for me to raise even the dead.' This philanthropy and these words we now stand in need of. conquer enemies, doth not render kings so illustrious, as to conquer wrath and anger; for in the former case, the success is due to arms and soldiers; but here the trophy is simply thine own, and thou hast no one to divide with thee the glory of thy moral wisdom. Thou hast overcome barbarian war, overcome also Imperial wrath! Let all unbelievers learn that the fear of Christ is able to bridle every kind of authority. Glorify thy Lord by forgiving the trespasses of thy fellow-servants; that He also may glorify thee the more; that at the Day of Judgment. He may bend on thee an Eye merciful and serene, being mindful of this thy lovingkind-ness!" This, and much more, he will say, and will assuredly rescue us from the Emperor's wrath. And not only will this fast be in order that he might be forcibly brought to of the greatest assistance to us in influencing the Emperor in our favour, but also towards enduring what befalls us with fortitude; for we reap no small consolation from this season. For our very meeting together daily as we do, and having the benefit of hearing the divine Scriptures; and beholding each other; and weeping with each other; and praying, and receiving Benedictions,2 and so

I Tillemont, Theodos. art. vi., mentions a law of his against holding criminal processes in Lent, and one deferring all executions thirty days. The massacre of Thessalonica, for which St. Ambrose caused him to do penance, occurred after the date of these Homilies, and that event forms a striking comment on Hom. III. 6. St. Ambrose then required him to renew the last-mentioned law. Tanaslator, meant according to Hingham the very same as the Encharist in the uncer ancient writers, and is always so applied by Cyril of Alexandra, and Chrysostom. In after times, he further departing home, takes off the chief part of of austerity, and mortification, earnestly longs our distress.

7. Let us, therefore, not despond, nor give ourselves up by reason of our distress; but let full assurance in regard to the crowns laid up us give heed to the things that are now about migrating to the place where there is no furto be spoken. For it is my purpose to discourse to you again to day respecting contempt for death. I said to you, yesterday, that we are afraid of death, not because he is really formidable; but because the love of the kingdom hath not kindled us, nor the fear of hell laid hold of us; and because besides this we have not a good conscience. Are you desirous that I should speak of a fourth reason for this unseasonable distress, one which is not less, and truer than the rest? We do not live with the austerity that becometh Christians. On the contrary, we love to follow this voluptuous and dissolute and indolent life; therefore also it is but natural that we cleave to present things; since if we spent this life in fastings, vigils, and poverty of diet, cutting off all our extravagant desires; setting a restraint upon our pleasures; undergoing the toils of virtue; keeping the body under 2 like Paul, and bringing it into subjection; not "making provision for the lusts of the flesh;"3 and pursuing the strait and narrow way, we should soon be earnestly desirous of future things, and eager to be delivered from our present labours. And to prove that what I say is not untrue, ascend to the tops of the mountains, and observe the monks who are there; some in sackcloth; some in bonds; some in fastings; some shut up4 in darkness. Thou wilt then perceive, that all these are earnestly desiring death, and calling it rest. For even as the pugilist is eager to leave the stadium, in order that he may be freed from wounds; and the wrestler longs for the theatre to break up, that he may be released from his toils; so also he who by the aid of virtue leads a life for death in order that he may be freed from his present labours, and may be able to have us wait, expecting a favourable issue; and let in store, by arriving in the still harbour, and ther apprehension of shipwreck. Therefore, also, hath God provided for us a life that is naturally laborious and troublesome; to the end that being here urged by tribulation, we may conceive an eager longing for future blessings; for if now, whilst there are so many sorrows, and dangers, and fears, and anxieties, surrounding us on all sides, we thus cling to the present life; when should we ever be desirous of the life to come, if our present existence were altogether void of grief and misery?

8. Thus also God acted towards the Jews. For wishing to infuse into them a desire of returning (to Canaan), and to persuade them to hate Egypt, He permitted them to be distressed by working in clay, and brick-making, that being oppressed by that weight of toil and affliction, they might cry unto God respecting their return. For if, indeed when they departed after these things had happened, they did again remember Egypt, with their hard slavery, and were urgent to turn back to that former tyranny; what if they had received no such treatment from these barbarians? when would they have ever wished to leave that strange land?5 To the end, therefore, that we may not be too closely attached to the earth, and grow wretched whilst gaping after present things, and become unmindful of futurity, God hath made our lives here full of labour. Let us not then cherish the love of the present life beyond what is necessary. For what doth it profit us? or what is the advantage of being closely rivetted to the desire of this present state? Art thou willing to learn in what respect this life is advantageous? It is so, inasmuch as it is the ground-work and starting point of the life to come; the wrestling-school and the arena for crowns of victory hereafter! so that if it does not provide these for us, it is worse than a thousand deaths. For if we do not wish to live so as to please God, it is better to die. For what is the gain? What have we the more? Do we not every day see the same sun, and the same moon, the same winter, the same summer, the same course of things? "The thing that hath been, shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done."6 Let us not then at once pronounce those happy, who are alive, and observes, that this term was applied to portions of bread blessed, observes, that this term was applied to portions of bread blessed, but distinct from the Fucharist (being the residue of that brought for consecration), which was given to those who were not prepared to communicate, b, xv, c. iv, sec. 3, v0. v, p. 155, new Ed. The term was evidently derived from the Apostolic phraseology, το ποτήριον της ευλογίας, 1 cor. x. i.6. It is used in the plural, for portions of the consecrated bread, both at communion, and when portions of the consecrated bread, both at communion, and when reserved to be sent to the sick, or to other churches.

1 M. (and Ben, and Bas. Tr. apparently) read οὐκ ἐλαττον τῶν προτρῶν ἐληθεστρῶν; 'not less the true one than those aforesaid.' This use of the comparative, however, seems unusual.

2 ὑτωπαίζων, the same word as used by St. Paul, t Cor. ix. 27, which alludes to the bruiving of the face, or the parts under the lift of the same than the contraction of the same than the sam ity in its favor.

ity in its favor.

3 Rom, xii, 14; Matt, vii. 14.

4 This word may perhaps belong to the whole series of penances. St. Chrysostom is not recommending such austerities at all, but urging them to imitate in some measure a life which they already honored and esteemed holy. See on Rom, xiv. 23, Hom, XXVI. fin., where he accuses them of leaving religion to monks and hermits, Also on Rom. vii. 1, Hom, XIII. Mor, Tr. p. 229.

bewail the dead, but let us weep for those of sins. Therefore it is a great advantage to forsooth, fearest and lamentest "one" death; but Paul, who was dying daily, was so far from shedding a tear on that account, that he rejoiced and exulted! 9. "O that I did endure the peril for God," saith some one, "then I should have no anxiety!" But do not even now sink into despondency; for not only indeed is he well approved, who suffers in the cause of God: but he who is suffering any thing unjustly " who sustains these trials for God's sake. vainly, and without cause. Yet, nevertheless, because he bore them courageously, and brought nothing into this world, and it is cerand take me; and though thou slay me not, fear none of these things which are brought on us by the order of nature, but those which are engendered by our own evil will; for these bring forth our penalty. But let us continually consider this, that as regards the events which come upon us unexpectedly we shall cease to grieve.

10. And moreover we should think of this again, that if we suffer any evil unjustly, during the present life, we discharge a multitude who are in their sins, whether they be dead have out the chastisement of our sins here, or alive. And on the other hand, let us call and not there; for the rich man received no those happy in whatsoever condition they be, evil here, and therefore he was scorched in who are in a state of righteousness. Thou, the flames there; and that this was the reason why he did not enjoy any consolation,6 hear in proof what Abraham saith, "Son, thou hast received thy good things; therefore thou art tormented." But that to the good things bestowed on Lazarus, not only his virtue, but his having here suffered a thousand ills, contributed, learn also from the patriarch's words. For having said to the rich man, "Thou hast received thy good things," he goes on to say, "and Lazarus evil things, and bearing it nobly, and giving thanks to and for this reason he is comforted." For God who permits it, is not inferior to him as they who live virtuously, and are afflicted, receive a double reward from God, so he who The blessed Job is a proof of this, who re-liveth in wickedness, and fares sumptuously, ceived so many intolerable wounds through shall have a double punishment. Again, I the devil's plotting against him uselessly, declare this not for the purpose of accusing those who have taken flight, for it is said, "Add not more trouble to a heart that is gave thanks to God who permitted them, he vexed;", nor do I say it because I wish to was invested with a perfect 3 crown. Be not rebuke; (for the sick man stands in need of sad then on account of death; for it is natural consolation); but for the purpose of endeavto die: but grieve for sin; because it is a ouring to promote an amendment. Let us fault of the will. But if thou grievest for the not entrust our safety to flight, but flee from dead, mourn also for those who are born into sins, and depart from our evil way. If we the world; for as the one thing is of nature, escape from these things, although we be in so is the other too of nature. Should any the midst of ten thousand soldiers; not one of one, therefore, threaten thee with death, say them will be able to smite us; but not flying to him, "I am instructed by Christ not to from these, though we ascend to the very 'fear them which kill the body, but are not summit of the mountains, we shall there find able to kill the soul." 4 Or should he threaten innumerable enemies! Let us again call to thee with the confiscation of thy goods, say mind those three children, who were in the to him, "Naked came I out of my mother's midst of the furnace, yet suffered no evil, womb, and naked shall I return thither. We and those who cast them into it, how they that sat around were all consumed. What is tain we can carry nothing out." 5 "And more wonderful than this? The fire freed though thou take me not, death will come those it held possession of, and violently seized those whom it did not hold, to teach yet the law of nature will presently interfere thee, that not the habitation, but the habit of and bring the end." Therefore we should life, bringeth safety or punishment. Those within the furnace escaped, but those without were consumed. To each alike were the same bodies, but not the same dispositions.10 For this reason neither were the effects on them the same; for hay, although it lie without the flame, is quickly kindled; but gold, shall not mend them by grieving, and so we although it remain within, becomes the more resplendent!

11. Where now are those who said, "Let the Emperor take all, and grant us our bodies free?" Let such go and learn what is a free body. It is not immunity from

¹ r Cor. xv. 31.
2 1 Pet. xi. 19, 20; "'for it" in this text is not in the original, as is marked by the italics in our version.
3 à λόκληρον. He seems to mean a reward as full as if he had suffered for God. See on Rom. v. 11, Hom. IX.
4 Matt. x. 28.
5 Jobi. 21; 1 Tim. vi. 7.

 ⁶ παραμυθίας. See Hom. II. 19; also Hom. IV. (2).
 7 ἀπέλαβες. See Hom. I. 22.
 8 Luke xvi. 25.
 9 Ecclus 9 Ecclus, iv. 3. 10 φρονήματα.

free, though they were given over to the fur-nace, because they had before put off the slavery of sin. For this alone is liberty; and not an immunity from punishment, or from suffering anything fearful. But having heard of the furnace, call thou to mind the "rivers of fire," which there shall be in that fearful day. For as on the above occasion, the fire seized upon some, but reverenced others, so also shall it be with those rivers. If any one should then have hay, wood, stubble, he increases 2 the fire; but if he has gold and silver, he 3 becomes the brighter. Let us therefore get together this kind of material, and let us bear the present state of things nobly; knowing that this tribulation will both bring us deliverance from that punishment if we understand how to practise true wisdom,4 and will also make us better here; and not only us, but but often those too, who throw us into trouble, if we be vigilant; so abundant is the force of this spiritual wisdom; which was the case then even with the tyrant. For when he knew that they had suffered no harm, hear how he changed his language. "Ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither." 5 Didst not thou say, a little before "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?"6 What hath happened? Whence this change? Thou sawest those without destroyed, and dost thou call on those within? Whence hath it come to pass that thou art grown wise in such matters. Thou seest how great a change took place in the monarch! Whilst he had not yet exercised his power over them, he blasphemed, but as soon as he had cast them into fire, he began to shew moral wisdom. For this reason also God permitted all to take place, whatsoever the tyrant wished, in order that He might make it manifest, that none will be able to injure those who are kept by Him. And what He did towards Job, He performed here. For on that occasion also, He permitted the devil to manifest all his power; and not till he had exhausted all his darts, and no further mode of plotting against him punishment that makes the body free, but remained, was the combatant led out of the perseverance in a life of righteousness. The field, that the victory might be brilliant and bodies of these youths, for instance, were indubitable. So here too He did the very free, though they were given over to the furcity, and God stayed him not: he willed to carry them away captive, and He hindered him not: he willed to bind them, and He permitted; to cast them into the furnace, and He allowed it: to heat the flame beyond its measure, and this too He suffered; and when there was nothing further left for the tyrant to do, and he had exhausted all his strength. then God manifested His own power, and the patience of the youths. Seest thou how God permitted these tribulations even to the end, that He might shew the assailants the spiritual wisdom of those whom they assailed, as well as His own providence. Both of which circumstances also that man then discerned, and cried out, "Ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither."

> 12. But consider thou with me the magnanimity of the youths; for they neither sprang out before the call, lest some should suppose they feared the fire; nor when they were called did they remain within, lest any one should think that they were ambitious and contentious. "As soon," say they, "as thou hast learnt whose servants we are, as soon as thou hast acknowledged our Lord, we come forth to be heralds to all who are present of the power of God." Or rather, not only they themselves, but even the enemy with his own voice, yea, both orally, and by his epistle, proclaimed to all men both the constancy of the combatants, and the strength of Him who presided over the contest. And even as the heralds, when they proclaim the names of the victorious combatants in the midst of the theatre, mention also the cities to which they belong; "such an one, of such a city!" So he too, instead of their city, proclaimed their Lord, by saying, "Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, ye servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither." What is come to pass, that thou callest them the servants of God? Were they not thy servants? "Yea," saith he, "but they have overthrown? my sovereignty; they have trampled under foot my pride. They have shown by deeds, that He is their true Lord. If they were the servants of men, the fire would not have feared them; the flame would not have made way for them; for the creation knows nothing of reverencing or honoring the servants of men." Therefore again he saith, "Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego."

¹ Dan, viii, 10. The rivers (or as some read river) of fire. This expression is taken from Dan, viii, 10, as appears by the coincidence of ελεετα, Hom. V. on Rom. ii, 16, and ελεετ in 1xx. In Hom. de Pref. Car. near the end, Ben. vi. 263, Ε., he speaks of the labled rivers of the heathen as a shadow of truth. So Greg. Naz. in Jul. inv. ii., Cr. v. 36, Ben. (iv. 46, p. 132, Col.). See on 1 Cor. iii. 12, Hom. IX. (1).

⁴ όλλοσφότι, which is a favorite word of St. Chrysostom, and which he seems to use in a variety of passages to express the nobler emotions of the mind
5 Dan. iii. 26,
6 Dan, iii. 15.

⁷ κατέλυσαν.

cause they trusted in Him!"3

14. But I say all this now, and select all the histories that contain trials and tribulations, and the wrath of kings, and their evil designs, in order that we may fear nothing, save only offending God. For then also was there a furnace burning; yet they derided it, but feared sin. For they knew that if they were consumed in the fire, they should suffer nothing that was to be dreaded; but that if they were guilty of impiety, they should undergo the extremes of misery. It is the greatest punishment to commit sin, though we may remain unpunished; as on the other hand, it is the greatest honour and repose to live virtuously, though we may be punished. For sins separate us from God; as He Him-

13. Contemplate with me also, how first self speaks; "Have not your sins separated he proclaims the Arbiter of the contest. between you and Me?" But punishments Blessed be God, who hath sent His angel lead us back to God. As one saith, "Give and delivered His servants." This of the peace; for Thou hast recompensed us for all power of God. He speaks also of the virtue things."5 Suppose any one hath a wound; of the combatants. "Because they trusted which is the most deserving of fear, gangrene, in Him, and have changed the king's word, or the surgeon's knife? the steel, or the deand have yielded their bodies, that they might vouring progress of the ulcer? Sin is a gannot worship any god except their own God." grene, punishment is the surgeon's knife. Could anything equal the virtue of this? As then, he who hath a gangrene, although Before this, when they said, "We will not he is not lanced, hath to sustain the malady, serve thy gods," he was inflamed more and is then in the worse condition, when he fiercely than the very furnace; but now, when is not lanced; so also the sinner, though he by their deeds they had taught him this, he be not punished, is the most wretched of was so far from being indignant, that he men; and is then especially wretched, when praised and admired them, for not having he hath no punishment, and is suffering no obeyed him! So good a thing is virtue, that distress. And as those who have a disease it has even its enemies themselves to applaud of the spleen, or a dropsy, when they enjoy and admire it! These had fought and conquered, but the vanquished party gave of delicacies, and condiments, are then esthanks, that the sight of the fire had not ter- pecially in a most pitiable state, increasing as rified them, but that the hope in their Lord they do their disease by luxury; but should had comforted them. And He names the they rigorously subject themselves to hunger God of the whole world after the three and thirst, according to medical laws, they youths, not at all circumscribing His sover- might have some hope of recovery; so also eignty, but inasmuch as these three youths those who live in iniquity, if they are punwere equivalent to the whole world. For ished, may have favourable hopes; but if, this reason he both applauds those who had together with their wickedness, they enjoy despised him, and passing by so many gover- security and luxury, they become more nors, kings, and princes, those who had wretched than those who cram their bellies, obeyed him, he stands in admiration of the though they are in a state of dropsy; and so three captives and slaves, who derided his much the more, as the soul is better than the tyranny! For they did these things, not for body. If then thou seest any who are in the the sake of contention, but for the love of same sins, and some of them struggling conwisdom; not of defiance, but of devotion; tinually with hunger, and a thousand ills; not as being puffed up with pride, but fired while others are drinking their fill, and living with zeal. For great indeed is the blessing sumptuously, and gormandizing; think those of a hope in God; which then also the bar- the better off, who endure sufferings. For barian learned, and making it manifest that not only is the flame of voluptuousness cut it was from that source they had escaped the off by these misfortunes, but they also deimpending peril, he exclaimed aloud: "Be- part to the future Judgment, and that dread tribunal,6 with no small relief; and go hence,

⁴ Isa, lix. 2.
5 Isaiah xxvi. 12, Lxx., the Eng. V. is, "Thou hast wrought all our works in us." Compare, however, Isa, i. 5, xl. 2, liv. 8; 10an, ix. 12, 16; Lev. xxvi. 34; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21.
6 It was the common opinion of the Greek Fathers, that the fire

Dan, ix. 12, 16; Lev. xxvi. 34; 2 Chron, xxxvi. 21.

o It was the common opinion of the Greek Fathers, that the fire of the day of judgment would cause severe suffering to some of those who would be finally saved, and that this might be mitigated by a severe repentance, and in some degree by suffering here, and by the prayers of others. St. Chrys. on Phil. 12; thom. III. Mor. Orig. on Ps. xxxvi. (al. xxxvii.)v. 8; Ben. ii. 66; D.; St. C. C. Lebt., xv. (c); Corg. Nyss. Or. de Moret, ed. 1698, I. iii. Cyr. Catech. xv. (c); Corg. Nyss. Or. de Moret, ed. 1698, I. iii. p. 460, he says. "Such a soul, having nothing for which to judged, fears not Held, dreads not Judgment." It habides free from fear and astonishment, no evil conscience causing a fear of Judgment. It habides free from fear and astonishment, no evil conscience causing a fear of Judgment. This last exposition is attributed to "the Greeks" by Bellarmine, de Purg. lib. 1. c. 5, having been defended by them in the discussion on Purgatory preliminary to the Council of Florence. Labbe, 1. xiii. p. 26-30. It is also held by Photius, (Ecum. ad loc. Theodorct, on 1 Cor. iii., takes the passage in general to refer to teachers and their work as such, but explains the words called of a fiery trial of the teacher's own life. Euseb. (quoted as Emisen, really a Gali. Bp. of later date). Bibl. Pat. Col. iii. 549, speaks of rivers of fire (see, p. 126); Hom. III. de Epife., (Ecumenius on 1 Cor. iii., (doubtfully). Also the Commentary on Isaiah, having discharged here the penalty of the greater part of their sins by the ills they have suffered.

² Ecclus, xliv. 17, on Rom. i. 8, Hom. II. 3 Dan. iii. 28.

15. But enough of consolation. It is time for us now, at last, to proceed to the exhorta. tion on the subject of avoiding oaths, and to remove that seeming palliation on behalf of those who swear, which is but futile, and useless. For when we bring an accusation against them, they allege the case of others who do the very same thing; and they say, "such and such persons swear." Let us then say to these, Nevertheless; such a man does not swear: and God will give His judgment concerning thee, from those who do good works; for sinners do not profit sinners by fellowship in transgressions; but they who perform what is right condemn sinners.2 For they who gave not Christ food, or drink, were many; but they rendered no aid to each other.3 Similar also was the case of the five virgins, who found no pardon from companionship,4 but being condemned by a comparison with those who had acted wisely, both these and the former were alike punished.

16. Dismissing then this argument of frigid self-deception, let us not look at the case of those who fall, but at those who fashion their conduct rightly; and let us endeavour to carry along with us a memento of the present fast when it is over. And as it oftens happens when we have purchased a vestment, or a slave, or a precious vase, we recall again the time when we did so, and say to each other, "That slave I purchased at such a festival; that garment I bought at such a time;" so, in like manner, if we now reduce to practice this law, we shall say, I reformed the practice of swearing during that Lent; for till then I was a swearer; but from barely hearing an admonition, I have abstained from the sin.

But "the custom," it may be objected, "is a hard thing to be reformed." I know it is; and therefore am urgent to throw you into another custom, which is good and pro-For when you say, it is difficult for me to abstain from what is habitual; for that very reason, I say, you should make haste to abstain, knowing for certain, that if you once 5 make another custom for yourself of not swearing, you will want no labour afterwards. Which is the more difficult thing; not to swear, or to remain the whole day without food; and to shrivel up on water-drinking. and meagre diet? It is evident that the latter surpasses the former; yet, notwithstanding, custom has made this matter so possible and easy of execution, that when the fast comes round, although any one should exhort a thousand times, or as frequently constrain and compel one to partake of wine, or taste of any other of those things which are forbidden during fasts, yet a man would prefer to suffer anything, rather than touch the prohibited article of food;7 and that not for want of relish for the table, nevertheless, we bear it all with fortitude, from the habit of our conscience. And the case will be the same in regard to oaths; and just as if now, any one were to impose ever so great necessity, you would remain immovable, holding fast the habit; so also in that case, if any one should urge you ten thousand times, you would not depart from your cus-

18. When you go home, therefore, discourse of all these things with those who are in your house; and as many persons often do, when they come back from a meadow, having plucked there a rose, or a violet, or some flower of that kind, they return twisting o it about with their fingers; and as some, again, when they quit the gardens to go home, take with them branches of trees, with their fruit upon them; and as others, moreover, from sumptuous feasts, carry away leavings of the entertainment for their dependents; so indeed do thou, departing from hence, take an exhortation home to thy wife, thy children, and all thine household. For this admonition is more profitable than the meadow, the garden, or the banquetting table. These roses never wither; these fruits never drop off; these dainties never corrupt. The former yield a temporary delight; but the latter a lasting advantage, not only after this reformation has taken place, but in the very act of reforming. For think what a good practice this would be, having dismissed all other matters public or private, to discourse 10 attributed to St. Rasil, on c. ix. 10; Ben. t. i. p. 554 (cited as his by Photius), speak of a cleansing by the Judgment fire. Origen, on Px. xxxxi; 10; 11; 2; 3; "Agment fire. Origen, on St. xxxi; 10; 11; 2; 3; "Agment fire. Origen, on the st. 11; 2; 3; "Agment fire. Though one be Paul or Peter we the comes to that fire." So St. Ambr. on verse 15, see, 26, of Excisic land Daniel, and St. Hil. on Ps. cxviii. (19) 20, of the Blessed Virgin herself, so applying Luc. ii, 35. See Cat. Aur. on St. Matt, iii, 11, 12, Tr. p. 104, note e. St. Greg. Naz. Or. xxxix, c. 10, speaks of Novatans, as "perhaps to be baptized in the fire of the other world, in that last Baptism, which is longer and more painful." There is no minutely defined and universal doctrine on the subject. See on Fleury, b. 10, c. 31.

1 dyupph, somewhat as we say, "cold comfort," See Herod. v. i. 108, and note of Baehr., also Dem. de Fals. Leg. 207.

2 Comp. Hom. IX. on 1 Cor. iii. and see Matt. Xxxv. 10.

⁵ Implied in the aorist, ποιήσης.
5 Tapa; κυεσθαι, Dem. adv. Aristogit, i. 72, of the effect of long imprisonment, lit. "to be dried like a mummy."
7 That this strictness was not quite universal appears from Hom. IX, 1. The feeling there referred to may have been partly occasioned by this passage.
9 Sav. πρωτρηθήσητες. Ben. περιφέροντες. Thus St. Francis de Sales recommends "culling flowers" for the day from morning devotions.

devotions.

only of the divine laws continually, at the shame, and punished, in the presence of the table, in the forum, and in your other meetings. Would we give our attention to these things, we should say nothing of a dangerous or injurious nature, nor should we sin unwittingly. Giving our leisure to discourse respecting these things, we should be able to withdraw our soul even from this despondency that hangs over us, instead of looking with so much anxiety as we do, whilst we say one to another, "Hath the Emperor heard what hath happened? Is he incensed? What sentence hath he pronounced?' Hath any one petitioned him? What? Will he himself endure to destroy utterly a city so great and populous?" Casting these and all such cares upon God, let us be anxious only as to what He hath commanded! Thus shall we rid ourselves of all these sorrows; and although ten only among us should succeed, the ten would quickly become twenty; the twenty fifty; the fifty a hundred; the hundred a thousand; the thousand all the city. And just as when ten lamps are lighted, one may easily fill the whole house with light, so also with respect to right actions; should only ten act rightly, we shall light up a general flame throughout the city, to shine forth, and to procure us safety. For not so naturally does the fire, when it falls upon a forest, kindle the neighbouring trees successively, as will the emulation for virtue, when it seizes upon a few minds, be mighty in its progress to diffuse itself through the whole community.

19. Give me cause, then, to exult over you both in the present life, and at that future Day, when those to whom talents have been entrusted, shall be summoned! Your good reputation is a sufficient reward for my labours; and if I see you living in piety, I have all I wish. Do, then, what yesterday I recommended, and to-day will repeat, and will not cease to say it. Fix a penalty for those who swear; a penalty which is a gain, and not a loss; and prepare yourselves henceforth so as you may give us a proof of success. For I shall endeavour to hold a long conversation with each of you, when this assembly is dismissed; in order that in the continuance of discourse I may discover the persons who have been acting rightly, and those who have not.2 And if I find any one still swearing, I shall make him manifest to all who are amended, that by reproving, rebuking, and correcting, we may quickly deliver him from this evil habit. For better it is that he should amend through being reproached here, than that he should be put to whole assembled universe, on that Day, when our sins shall be revealed to the eyes of all men! But God forbid that any in this fair assembly should appear there suffering such things! but by the prayers of the holy fathers,3 correcting all our offences, and hav-

3 εύχαῖς τῶν ἀγίων πατέρων. See on Rom. xvi. 24, Hom. XXXII., where the translation perhaps ought to be, "These unitators of Paul. Only let us yield ourselves worthy of such intercession." This rendering is confirmed by its agreement with Hom. XLIV. on Gen. xix. 29; Ien. iv. 448, 449. But there is a difficulty in it owing to the reference to St. Paul's eeparture. This may be explained as a turn of rhetoric. The passage on Gen. xix. does not define whether saints on earth or above are spoken of; but from others it is probable he means the latter. The close of the Homily on St. Meletius, Ben. ii. 522, A. speaks of such intercession, and that of Hom. in SS. Bernicen and Proxd. Ben. ii. 652, 50, of invoking it. The Homily quoted above, on the intercession of Abraham, warns men against trusting to prayers of saints so as to of invoking it. The Homily quoted above, on the intercession of Abraham, warns men against trusting to prayers of saints so as to neglect their own life. An expression like that in the text occurs in a Homily de Sp. Sancto, attributed to St. Chrys by Photius, Iten iii. 793, Ct. Origen on Cant. ii. 5, asserts the intercession of the saints, proving it from 2 Mac. xv. 14, and on Numb. xxxii., Hom. XXVI. 6, he asks, who doubts it? Hom. I. 7, on Ezekiel, he invokes an angel, as holding that angels are present, though in a rhetorical way. Lib. 2, in Job (fin.) sometimes cited as his, is spurious, and the Com. on Lament, doubtful, and the manner of invocation looks as if of later date. St. Cyprian, Ep. 57, ad Cornel, fin. desires that whoever dies first may pray for the other and de Hab. Pirg. fin. makes a similar request; and so Theodosia in Euseb. de MarxI. Pal. c. 7.

In the fourth century, the invocation of departed saints, or prayer to God for their prayers, becomes common. So Eusebus,

In the fourth century, the invocation of departed saints, or prayer to God for the prayers, becomes common. So Eusebus, on Ps. Ixxviii. (19) takes prayers, becomes common. So Eusebus, on Ps. Ixxviii. (19) takes prayers, becomes common. So Eusebus, stain (18th of death), i.e., of the marrier. Thou the sons of the Gom, on Isaiah, he prays just as St. Chrys, in the text. So. God his common Isaiah, he prays just as St. Chrys, in the text. So. Psalins exactly, "that the inspired writers may know their own words, and pray with us, or rather, that the Holy Spirit who spoke in them, hearing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words He dictated to them, may take our part "(or prairing the words). A direct address to the Blessed Virgin . "Oueen, and Mother of God, intercede for us!" is gouted as his (Serm, in Annunt, t. ii. p. 401), but is spurious, as is there stated.

St. James, of Nisibis, Ser. 4, p. 72, seems to speak of an angel.

for us?" is quoted as his (Serm. in Annunf. t. ii. p. 401), but is spurious, as is there stated.

St. James, of Nisibis, Ser. 4, p. 72, seems to speak of an angel presenting our prayers, which his editor connects with Tertullian's Angelus Orationis, de Or. xii. and Tob. xii. 12. St. Hilary, on Pis. cxxiv. (125) 2, takes the hills (as others constantly elsewhere), for the saints and angels. On Matt. xxv. p. 736, he says, "none shall be helped by another's works and merits, because every one must buy oil for his own lamp." This seems to imply the existence of the same tendency which St. Chrysostom reproves, as quoted above on Gen. xix. The Martry Justina, early in this century, is said by St. Greg. Naz. Or. xviii. p. 279. [Hen. Or. xxiv. rt, p. 43] d.), to have implored the aid of the Virgin Mary.

In the latter part of the century, instances are more frequent. St. Cyrl of Jerusalem, Cat. Myst. v. (6), says, "Then we commemorate also those who have fallen asleep before us, first, patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, that at their prayers and intervention God would receive our petition." St. Basil, Hom. oil of their intervestions for former mends asking it. "Here is found, a pious woman praying for former mends asking it. "Here is found, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick: let your prayers he made with headard, his recovery when sick set your prayers he made with headard." It of St. Am-and a ransom of my sins was be made and eranted." To St. Am-and a ransom of my sins was be made and eranted." To St. Amthem to supplication unto God that through them, that is, through their mediation, the merciful God may become propitious to me, and a ransom of my sins may be made and granted. "To St. Ambrose, Ep. 107, al. 55, Pen. iil. 288, he speaks of the relies of a martyr as a protection to those who kept them. St. Ephraim, in Marryres, i. iii. Gr. Lat. p. 281, has, "Victorious Martyrs, willing sufferers for the love of your God and Saviour, ye that have bold-for us that are worthless, and sisteric times, holy as ye are for us that are worthless, and sisteric times, holy as ye are the grace of Christ may come upon us." Some prayers to the Blessed Virgin, calling her the only hope of sinners, and giving her the titles of our Lord, are ascribed to him. Such would stand alone in this age, and long after. But one which has been long known in Latin (ed. Voss, p. 543), has been generally thought spurious. The last Roman Edition contains more, but even the Mss. from which they are taken seem to ascribe them but doubt-spurious. The last Roman Edition contains more, but even the Mss. from which they are taken seem to ascribe them but doubt-spurious. The last Roman Edition Contains more, but even the Mss. from which they are taken seem to ascribe them but doubt-spurious. The last Roman Edition Contains more, but even the Mss. from which they are taken seem to ascribe them but doubt-spurious. Hin 'Prayers collected from Holy Scripture, but most of them from St. Ephraim, "Ac.), especially as others precede these. He, however, used invocation freely, though some allowance must be made for his rich imagination, and his fondness for apostrophes. Thus he apostrophies estaith, advs. Sexut. Sex. vi. Gr. Lat. ii. fo. 16. "O Faith I I pray Thee adapt Thy vastness to our littleness!" or while we may not see and measure thee, love can neither rest nor be silent!" "Come hither, O Faith, Gift of God to the Holy their mediation, the merciful God may become propitious to me, ing shown forth the abundant fruit of virtue. may we depart hence with much confidence, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom, and with whom, be glory to the Father together with the Holy Spirit, for ever and ever.

Church, and rest in this bosom! Several spurious passages, as from the Christus Patiens attributed to St. Greg. Naz. 1. 2582 (but rejected and objected to by the Ben. editor), are examined by Mr. Palmer, Letter v. to Dr. Wiseman, The real practice of St. Greg. Naz. appears in his funeral oration on St. Basil, Or. xx. fin. p. 373 (Ben. xlii. & 23, p. 831). "But do thou, O divine and sacred head, look on us from above, and either remove by thy intercessions the thorn in the flesh that chastises us, or persuade us to bear it with fortitude," &c. Or. vi. ad Greg. Nyss. p. 140 (Ben. xi. 5, p. 245); he says, that martyrs are "Mediators for attaining a divine state ($\theta_{obs}(v_s)$). St. Chrysostom is of the same date. St. Greg. Nyss. on St. Theodorus, speaks repeatedly of asking his intercession. "To touch his relies, if any chance give one the opportunity... Then, shedding on them the tear of piety and affection, as though to the martyr, appearing in full presence, they present their entreaty for intercession; beseeching him, as an attendant*upon God, and invoking him as one who obtains favors at will," t. iii, p. 580, and so.

*δορυφόρφ, A term which shows that an allusion to an earthly court is intended.

in other parts of the oration; and in p. 586, he begs him, if need be, to call his brother-martyrs to his aid. And in the close of his life of St. Ephraim, he both invokes him, "Remember us all, asking remission for our sins," and speaks of a person having invoked his help, in circumstances of danger, with success. St. Ambrose, de Vid. c. 9, says, "The angels are to be entreated for us, who are given us for our guard; the martyrs are to be entreated, whose patronage we may in a manner claim by the pledge of their bodies. They can pray for our sins, who have washed in their own blood their own sins, if such they had." These are most of the authors alleged down to the end of the fourth century, but in most of the later of them other passages of the same kind appear. Thus the practice of direct invocation seems to have come in by degrees, and that chiefly in the course of this century. Some passages relating merely to the intercession of the saints have been passed over, as they would rather confuse the view of the subject of seeking it. Bellarmine, De Sanetia, i. e. 19, and Coccius, Thesaur. I. v., art. 4, give collections of passages. See on Fleury, Book 19, e. 31, Tr. p. 202, note k.

HOMILY VII.

Recapitulation of former exhortations. Sin brought death and grief into the world, and they tend to its cure. Grief serviceable only for the destruction of sin. Remarks upon the passage, Gen. 1, 1. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." It is argued that God's forethought for man in the work of creation affords grounds of comfort; and that mercy is shewn even in chastisement, as in the saying, "Adam, where art thou?" Concluding admonition on the avoidance of oaths.

Charity in many words, and upon many sub- and then we shall escape 3 punishment. Even jects; and if out of this variety, it be not as the Three Children were not afraid of the possible for you to retain all, I wish more furnace, and so escaped from the furnace. particularly to recall to memory the observation, that God hath implanted the affection grief in our natures for no other reason but because of sin, and He hath made this evident from actual experience. For whilst we are grieved and distressed through the loss of wealth; or by reason of sickness, and death, and the other evils that befall us, we not only reap no consolation from our sorrow, but we also increase the force of these calamities. But if we are in pain and sorrow " for our sins, we diminish the weight of sin; we make that little which is great; and very often we blot it all out entirely. Ye should continually remember this, I repeat, in order that ye may mourn for sin only, and for nothing besides; and the additional fact, that sin, though it brought death and sadness into our life, is again destroyed 2 by both these; which I have recently made evident. Therefore, let us fear nothing so much as sin and

I. YESTERDAY, I discoursed unto your transgression. Let us not fear punishment. Such indeed it becomes the servants of God to be. For if those who were brought up under the Old dispensation, when death was not yet slain,4 nor his "brazen gates broken down," nor his "iron bars smitten in sunder; "5 so nobly encountered their end,6 how destitute of all defence or excuse shall we be, if, after having had the benefit of such great grace, we attain not even to the same measure of virtue as they did, now when death is only a name, devoid of reality. For death is nothing more than a sleep, a journey, a migration, a rest, a tranquil haven; an escape from trouble, and a freedom from the cares of this present life!

2. But here let us dismiss the subject of consolation; it is the fifth day we are engaged in speaking words of comfort to your Charity, and we might now seem to be troublesome. For what hath been already said is sufficient for those who give heed; but to those who way take comfort and receive this as the though we were to add to what we have said. exposition of the Scriptures. For as, if we had said nothing in reference to the present calamity, one might have condemned us for cruelty, and a want of humanity; so, were we always discoursing of this, we might justly be condemned for pusillanimity. Commending then your hearts to God, who is able to speak into your minds, and to expel all grief from within, let us now take up our accustomed manner of instruction; and that especially since every exposition of Scripture is matter of comfort and relief. So that, although we may seem to be desisting from arguments consolatory; but in order that I may make the proof of the matter which I especially seem to present no trace of consolation, but to be altogether foreign to topics evident.

¹ St. Greg. Nyss. de Beat. iii. t. i. 781. ² Or, in funere Pulcheriæ, t. iii, 460.

³ διαφευξόμεθα.

⁵ θαστυχομένου. 4 Hos. xiii. 14. which, however, is less clear in LXX. 5 Ps. cvii. 16; Isa. xlv. 2. 6 Or, "defied death," κατετόλμησαν τῆς τελευτῆς.

earth, and the earth was invisible, and unformed,3 and darkness was upon the face of the abyss." 4 Do these words seem to some of you incapable of affording consolation under distress? Is it not an historical narrative, and an instruction about the creation?

Would you then that I show the consolation that is hidden in this saying? Arouse yourselves then, and attend with earnestness to the things which are about to be spoken. For when thou hearest that God made the heaven, the earth, the sea, the air, the waters, the multitude of stars, the two great lights, the plants, the quadrupeds, the swimming and the flying animals, and all things without exception which thou seest, for thee, and for thy safety and honour; dost thou not straight-are pusillanimous it will be no gain, even strongest proof of the love of God, when thou thinkest that He produced such a world as It is now time to direct our teaching to the this, so fair, so vast and wonderful, for such a puny being as thyself! When therefore thou hearest that, "In the beginning God made the heaven and the earth," run not hastily over the declaration; but traverse in thy mind the breadth of the earth; and reflect how He hath spread out 5 so sumptuous and exquisite a table for us, and provided us with such abundant gladness.6 And this is, indeed, the most marvellous thing, that He gave us not such a world as this in payment for services done; or as a recompense for good works; but at the very time He formed us, He honoured our race with this kingdom. the topic of consolation, we shall again light For He said, "Let us make man after our upon the same subject by means of Scriptural image, and after our likeness."7 What is exposition. For that all Scripture furnishes the sense of this, "after our image, and after consolation to those who give attention to it, our likeness?" The image of government. I will make manifest to you from its own evil is that which is meant; and as there is no one dence.2 For I shall not go about among the in heaven superior to God, so let there be Scripture narratives to search out certain none upon earth superior to man. This then is one, and the first respect, in which He did him honour; by making him after His own have undertaken plainer, we will take in hand image; and secondly, by providing us with the book which has to day been read to us; this principality, not as a payment for servand bringing forward, if you will, the intro- ices, but making it entirely the gift of His own duction and commencement of it, which may love toward man; and thirdly, in that He conferred it upon us as a thing of nature. For of governments there are some natural, of comfort, I will make that which I affirm and others which are elective; -natural as of the lion over the quadrupeds, or as that of 3. What then is this introduction? "In the eagle over the birds; elective, as that of the beginning God made the heaven and the an Emperor over us; for he doth not reign over his fellow-servants by any natural authority. Therefore it is that he oftentimes loses his sovereignty. For such are things which are not naturally inherent; they readily admit of change and transposition. But not so with the lion; he rules by nature over the quadrupeds, as the eagle doth over The character of sovereignty is, therefore, constantly allotted to his race; and no lion hath ever been seen deprived of it. Such a kind of sovereignty God bestowed upon us from the beginning, and set us over all things. And not only in this respect did He confer honour upon our nature, " but also, by the very eminence of the spot in which we ¹ See Isa, xl. 2, Heb. and Lxx. 2 αὐτόθεν. 3 Or, un/μυπιδικός, Ε. V., without form, and roid. This rendering came in with the Genevan Bible. All the previous translations had void, and empty. Perhaps by the term roid, was meant just the same as the Septuagint ακατασκευαστο: The word Böhn, which occurs Deut. xxxii. 10, and Fs. cvii. 40, is in both case a waste, or widerness. See Dr. Buckland's Bridgewater Treatise, e. 2, and notes.

⁵ ἀνῆκεν, "sent up," i. e., "caused to grow." 6 εὐφροσύνην. Comp. Acts xiv. 17. Filling our hearts with food and gladness.

Then i. 26.

This of course does not exclude, but rather implies, an intrinsic resemblance. See St. Cyr. Cat. xii. (3), and xiv. (5); St. Aug. Pec. C. D. xii. 26, xii. 23; Conf. xiii. 12; St. Greg. Nyss. on the course of the course o

¹⁰ Or, kind, were placed, fixing upon Paradise as our choice dwelling, and bestowing the gift of reason, and an immortal soul,

4. But I would not speak of these things: for I say that such was the abundance of God's care, that we may know His goodness, and His love towards man, not only from the way in which He hath honoured, but also from the way in which He hath punished us. And this, I especially exhort you to consider with attention, that God is alike good, not only whilst He is treating us with honour and beneficence, but also whilst He is punishing and chastising. And whether we should have to carry on our contest and combat against the heathen, or against the heretics, respecting the lovingkindness and goodness of God, we shall make His goodness evident, not only from the cases in which He bestows honour, but also from the cases in which He inflicts punishment. For if He is good only whilst honouring us, and not good whilst punishing us, He were but half good. But this is not the case. God forbid! Among men this may probably happen, when they inflict punishments in anger and passion; but God being free from passion, whether He exercise kindness, or whether He punish, He is alike good. Nor less does the threat of hell serve to show His goodness, than the promise of the kingdom." But how? I answer. If He had not threatened hell, if He had not prepared punishment, there are not many who would have attained the kingdom.2 For the promise of good things doth not so strongly induce the multitude to virtue; as doth the threat of evil things compel by fear, and arouse them to the care of the soul. So that, although hell be the opposite of the kingdom of heaven, yet each hath respect to the same end-the salvation of men; the one alluring to itself, the other driving them towards its opposite, and by the operation of fear correcting those who are carelessly disposed.

5. I do not enlarge upon this subject without reason; but because there are many who often, when famines, and droughts, and wars take place, or when the wrath of an Emperor overtakes them, or when any other unexpected events of this kind happen, deceive the simpler class by saying, that these things are unworthy of the Providence of God.

I am therefore compelled to dwell on this part of my discourse, that we may not be beguiled by words, but that we may plainly perceive, that whether He brings upon us a famine, or a war, or any calamity, whatsoever, He doth it out of His exceeding great care and kindness. For even those fathers, who especially love their offspring, will forbid them the table, and inflict stripes, and punish them by disgrace, and in endless other ways of this kind correct their children when they are disorderly; yet are they nevertheless fathers, not only while doing them honour, but when acting thus; yea, they are preeminently fathers when they act thus,3 But if men, who are frequently carried away beyond what is meet by the force of angry feelings, are yet held to punish those whom they love, not from cruelty and inhumanity, but from a kind care and regard; much rather is it proper to be thus minded concerning God; who in the exceeding abundance of His goodness, far transcends every degree of paternal fondness. And that you may not suppose that what I say is a mere conjecture, let us, I pray you, direct our discourse to the Scripture itself. When man, then, had been deceived and beguiled by the wicked demon, let us observe how God treated him, after his committing so great a sin. Did He then altogether destroy him? Yet the reason of the thing in justice demanded this, that one who had displayed nothing that was good, but, after enjoying so much favour, had waxed wanton even from the very first, should be made away with, and utterly destroyed; yet God acted not so; neither did He regard with disgust and aversion him who had been so ungrateful towards his Benefactor, but He comes to him as a physician cometh to a sick man.

6. Do not, O beloved, pass over unthinkingly, what has just been said! but consider what an act it was, not to send an angel, or archangel, or any other of his fellow-servants, but that the Lord Himself should have descended to him who had fallen from the right way, and should have raised him when thus cast down; and should have approached him, One to one,4 as a friend comes to a friend when he is unfortunate, and is plunged in great distress! For that He acted thus out of His great kindness, the very words too which He spake to him evidently show His ineffable affection. And why do I say, all the words? The first utterance signifies at once His tenderness. For He said not, what it was probble a person treated so contemptuously would say, "O wicked, yea most wicked man! When thou hadst enjoyed so great favour from Me, and hadst been honoured with such a sovereignty, being exalted above all the creatures upon the earth for no merit of thine own; and having received in actual deeds the that sin had not quenched His tenderness, and pestiferous demon, the enemy of thy salvation, to be worthy of more credit than thy heaven, the earth, the sea, the sun, the moon, and saying, "Adam, where art thou?" when all were seated together, not seeing David to be present, what said he? He said of Jesse?''' a calling him by his father's name. And again, the Jews did the same with respect to Christ, for since they abhorred and hated Him, they did not say, "Where is Christ?" but, "Where is that man?" 4 pledges of My care, and a true manifestation nor disobedience taken away His favor of My Providence, didst thou esteem a wicked toward him, and that He still exercised His Providence and care for the fallen one, said. "Adam, where art thou?" 5 not being igno-Lord and Benefactor? What proof did he rant of the place where he was, but because give of regard for thee, like that which I the mouth of those who have sinned is closed have done? Did I not make for thee the up; sin turning the tongue backward, and conscience taking hold of it; so that such and all the stars? For truly none of the persons remain speechless, held fast in silence angels needed this work of creation; but for as by a kind of chain. And God wishing thee, and for thy recreation, I made so great therefore to invite him to freedom of utterand excellent a world; and didst thou esteem ance, and to give him confidence, and to lead mere words alone, a false engagement, and a him to make an apology for his offences, in promise full of deceit, as more worthy to be order that he might obtain some forgiveness, believed than the kindness and providence was Himself the first to call; cutting off much that was manifested by deeds; that thou of Adam's distress by the familiar appellation, gavest thyself over to him, and didst trample and dispelling his fear, and opening by this My laws under foot!" These words, and address the mouth that was shut. Hence more of this kind, one who had been treated also it was that he said, "Adam, where art contemptuously would probably say. But thou?" "I left thee," saith he, "in one God acted not so; but quite in the contrary situation, and I find thee in another. I left manner. For by His first word He at once thee in confidence and glory; and I now find raised him up from his dejection, and gave thee in disgrace and silence!" And observe the fearful and trembling man confidence, by the care of God in this instance. He called being the first Himself to call him, or rather, not Eve; -He called not the serpent, -but not by merely calling him first, but by ad- him who had sinned in the lightest degree of dressing him by his own familiar appellation, all, he brings first to the tribunal, in order that beginning from him who was able to find Thus He shewed His tenderness, and the some degree of excuse, He might pass a more great regard He had for him. For ye must merciful sentence, even against her who had all know, that this is a mark of intimate sinned the most. And judges, indeed, do friendship. And thus those who call upon not deign to make inquiry in their own perthe dead are wont to do, continually repeat- son of their fellow-servants, and those who ing their names. And so, on the other hand, are partakers of a common nature with them, those who entertain hatred and enmity against but putting forward some one of their attenany, cannot bear to mention the very names dants to intervene, they instruct him to conof those who have aggrieved them. Saul, vey their own questions to the criminal; and for instance, though he had sustained no in- through him they say and hear whatever they jury from David, but had wronged him exceed- wish, when they examine the offenders.6 ingly, since he abhorred and hated him, could But God had no need of a go-between in not endure to mention his proper name; but dealing with man; but Himself in His own person at once judges and consoles him. And not only this is wonderful, but also that not, "Where is David? but, 'Where is the son he corrects the crimes that had been committed. For judges in general, when they find thieves and grave-robbers,7 do not consider how they may make them better, but how they may make them pay the penalty of the offences committed. But God, quite on the contrary, when He finds a sinner, considers not how He may make him pay the penalty, but how He may amend him, and make him better, and invincible 8 for the

¹ Gal. iii. 24.
² ¹ Tim. i. o. St. Greg, Nyss, on the Beatitudes, Or. 3, t. i. p. 791, explains Blessed are they that mourn; first, of those whom the fear of hell causes to mourn for their sins; secondly, of those who mourn for their present exclusion from the good things they hope for hereafter. See on Rom. xiv. 13, Hom. XXV.

⁴ μόνον πρὸς μόνον. There being no third party present.

7. But God, willing to show even by this

Thus Thetis, //. . . 361, and throughout Homer ἐκ τ' ὀνόμαζε expresses affection; the scholast, however, explains the word of merely speaking at length, which seems almost absurd.

merely speaking at length, which seems almost absurd.

2 t Kings xx. 27.

3 From this peculiar illustration it would seem, that St. Chrysotom supposed the term Christ to have been one of the familiar names by which our Saviour was known. But the term Jesus of Nazareth seems to have been His more general and distinctive appellation; though it by no means follows that He was not as familiarly known by the title of Christ among His followers, and addressed as such, especially after Peter's confession. (See John ix. 22; Matt. xxvii. 17, contrasted with verse 63.)

4 John vii. 11.

⁵ Gen. iii. 9, LXX.
6 What it was to be brought to the bar in those days may be seen in Hom. XIII.

Seen in Hom. A111.

7 A common crime then, probably from the richness of burials. See on Rom. vi. 18, Hom. XI.

8 ἀχείρωτον, i.e., to the adversary. See Hom. 1, and εὐχὲίρωτον, Hom. VIII. (2).

So that God is at the same time a cried unto another, and said, Holy, Holy, Judge, a Physician, and a Teacher; for as a Judge He examines, and as a Physician He amends, and as a Teacher He instructs those who have sinned, directing them unto all spiritual wisdom.

8. But if one short and simple speech thus demonstrates the care of God, what if we should read through this whole judgment, and unfold its entire records? Seest thou how all Scripture is consolation and comfort? But of these records we will speak at a befitting season; before that, however, it is necessary to state at what time this Book was given; for these things were not written in the beginning, nor at once when Adam was made, but many generations afterwards; and it were worth while to enquire for what reason this delay took place, and why at length they were given to the Jews only, and not to all men: and why written in the Hebrew tongue; and why in the wilderness of Sinai? For the Apostle doth not mention the place merely in a cursory manner; but shews that in that circumstance too there was a great subject of contemplation for us, when he saith to us: "For these are two covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage."2

q. Other things too besides these it were to our purpose to enquire into. But I see that the time doth not permit us to launch our discourse upon so wide a sea; wherefore prudently reserving these to a fit season, we would again address you on the subject of abstinence from oaths; and we would entreat your Charity to use much diligence respecting this matter. For what is it but an absurdity, that not even a servant dares to call his master by name, nor to mention him unceremoniously, and casually, but that he should everywhere bandy about the name of the Lord of Angels familiarly with much irreverence! And if it be necessary to take the book of the Gospel, thou receivest it with hands that have been first washed; and fearfully and tremblingly, with much reverence and devotion; and dost thou unceremoniously bandy about upon thy tongue the Lord of the Gospel? Dost thou desire to learn how the Powers above pronounce that Name; with what awe, with what terror, with what wonder? "I saw the Lord," saith the prophet, "sitting upon a throne, high, and lifted up; around Him stood the Seraphim; and one

Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth; the whole earth is full of His glory !"3 Perceivest thou, with what dread, with what awe, they pronounce that Name, whilst glorifying and praising Him? But thou, in thy prayers and supplications, callest upon Him with much listlessness; when it would become thee to be full of awe, and to be watchful and sober! But in oaths, where it is wholly unsuitable that this wonderful Name should be introduced, there thou makest a long string of divers forms of imprecation! What pardon then, or what excuse shall we have, howsoever we may plead this "custom"? It is said, that a certain heathen orator, by a kind of foolish habit, was continually moving his right shoulder as he went along.4 He conquered this habit, however, by fastening sharp knives on each side over his shoulders, so that the fear of being cut controlled the member in its unseasonable movement by fear of the wound! Do thou too, then, act thus with regard to thy tongue, and instead of the knife, suspend over it the fear of God's chastisement, and thou wilt assuredly get the better! For it seems impossible, utterly impossible, that those should ever be overcome, who are solicitous and earnest about this, and really make it their business.

10. Ye applaud what is now said, but when ye have amended, ye will applaud in a greater degree not only us, but also yourselves; and ye will hear with more pleasure what is spoken; and ye will call upon God with a pure conscience, who is so sparing of thee, O man! that He saith, "Neither shalt thou swear by 5 thy head." 6 But thou so despisest Him as to swear even by His glory. what shall I do," saith one, "with those who impose necessity on me?" What kind of necessity can there be, O man? Let all men understand that thou wilt choose to suffer anything rather than transgress the law of God; and they will abstain from compelling thee. For as a proof that it is not an oath which rendereth a man worthy of credit, but the testimony of his life, the uprightness of his conversation, and his good reputation, many have often split their throats with swearing, and yet have been able to convince no one; whereas others by a mere expression of assent, have been esteemed more deserving

 $^{^1}$ γενομένου. This seems the usual meaning, as Plut, Mor. p. 109 (cit. Steph.) ἀλλ' οἶει συ διαφορὰν εἶναι $\mathring{\eta}$ μὴ γένεσθας $\mathring{\eta}$ γένομε-100 (CI. Mcpl), 1αA ο 161 συ οιαφοραν είναι η μη γενέσσα η γενόμε-νον απογενέσθαι; but Luc. ix, 36, γενέσθα seems to mean the com-pletion of an event. He is speaking, however, of the whole Bible, or at least the Pentateuch, not merely of the history of the Fall, as appears from the sequel. Hom, VIII, 2, and the general argument of those which follow.

² Gal. iv. 24.

³ 18, VI. 3. 4 Demosthenes. Libanius says that it was in speaking he did this, and that he cured himself by hanging a sword before his shoulder in his private practice. Life of Dem. in Oral. AM. 1, w. and so Platarch. St. Chrys. mentions him also on St. Matt. Hom. XVII. Ben. p. 232 a., βab¿we may possibly be applied to the course

Avii., ben. p. 232 a., βασίζων may possiny θε applied to the course of a speech.

5 κατά, "against," and so on St. Matt. Hom. XVII., Hen. p.

28 e., but Griesbach gives no reading except ἐν.

6 Matt. v. 36.

those who swear falsely, let us abstain from and with Whom to the Father with the Holy this evil custom, that advancing from hence Ghost be glory, and power, and honour, now to the correction of what remains, we may and ever, and world without end. Amen.

of belief than they who swore never so much. enjoy the blessedness of the life to come, Knowing, therefore, all these things, and which God grant that we may all be found placing before our eyes the punishment that worthy to obtain, by the grace and love toward is in store for those who swear, as well as for man of our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom

HOMILY VIII.

An exhortation to virtue—and particularly upon the passage, "God was walking in Paradise in the cool of the day; "—and again on the subject of abstaining from oaths.

be an historical narrative. For instance, and the earth," was an historical declaration; but it was shewn in our discourse, that this sentence was one pregnant with comfort; as, for example, that God made us a twofold at the same time; by kindling above the twofold lights, the sun and moon; by determining the twofold seasons of their course, the day and night, the one for labour, and the other for rest. For the night ministers to us no less benefit than the day. But as I said with reference to trees, those which are barren, rival in their utility those which bear fruit; since we are thus not necessitated to touch those trees which are p'easant for food, untamed animals are also subservient to our eth that some one hath lost a son; 7 and comneed, in no less a degree than the tame animals; by driving us together, through the fear of them, into cities; making us more cautious, and binding us to one another; and by exercising the strength of some, and freeing others from their sicknesses; for the physicians concoct many medicines out of these;3 and by reminding us of our ancient sin. For when I hear it said, "The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon all the wild beasts of the earth:" 4 and then observe, that this honour was afterwards curtailed, I am reminded of sin, which hath dissipated the fear of us, and undermined our YE have lately heard, how all Scripture authority. Thus I become a better and a bringeth consolation and comfort, although it wiser 5 man, whilst I learn the harm that sin hath occasioned us. As then, what I said "In the beginning, God created the heaven was, that the things alluded to, and others of a similar kind, which God, who is the Maker, knoweth of, contribute not a little to our present life; so now also I say, that the night no less than the day brings along with it its table, by spreading out the sea and the land advantage, being a rest from labours, and a medicine for disease. Often, indeed, physicians, though exerting themselves in many ways, and preparing an endless variety of remedies, are not able to deliver the man who is labouring under infirmity. But sleep coming upon him of its own accord hath entirely removed the disease, and freed them 6 from an infinite deal of trouble. again, is not only a medicine for bodily labours, but also for mental diseases, in giving for the purposes of building. The wild and rest to anguished souls. Ofttimes it happenforters without number have been of no avail to withdraw him from tears and groans. But on the approach of night, conquered by the despotic power8 of sleep, he hath closed his eyelids in slumber, and received some small relief from the miseries of the day time.

2. And now, I pray you, let us proceed to the subject which hath given rise to these observations. For well I know, that ye are all eagerly awaiting this matter; and that each one of you is in pain till he learn on what account this Book was not given from the beginning. But even now I do not see that the

I Gen. i. 1.

² ¬pāmṣʿau, i, e, of refreshment, as "for thee and for thy recreation," Hom. VII. (3). What he says presently of the trees has not occurred in these Homiles.

³ Viz. the wild animals: 1. xxviii. of Pliny's Natural History is devoted to," medicines from animals."

⁴ Gen. ix. 2.

⁵ Or, more sober, σωφρονέστερος. 7 Comp. Apoll. Rhod. Arg. iii, 746, 6 The physicians.

[&]quot;The traveller now,
And the tired porter, claimed the boon of sleep,
The mother's self, of children late bereaved, Sunk in deep slumber lay.

and Virgil's imitation, Æn. iv. 522.

time is fit for a discourse on this subject. timid being; one that trembles at a sound: several days in succession, and a continuous effort of memory: wherefore we must again defer it. But take it not amiss! we will assuredly pay you the debt with interest; for thus it is expedient both for you, and for us who are to discharge it. Meanwhile, however, let us now speak on that subject which we left out yesterday. And what was it we left out yesterday? "God was walking," it says, "in Paradise in the cool of the day."2 What is here meant, I ask? "God was walking!" God was not walking; for how should He do this who is everywhere present, and filleth all things? But He caused a perception of this sort in Adam, in order that he might collect 3 himself; that he might not be careless; that in flying and in hiding himself, he might present beforehand some portion of the excuse, even before any words had passed. For even as those who are about to be led to the tribunal, to sustain the charges respecting the crimes they have committed, present themselves before those who are to try them with a squalid, begrimed, sad, and subdued visage, in order that from their appearance, they may incline them to lovingkindness, mercy, and torgiveness, so also did it happen in the case of Adam. For it was necessary that he should be led to this Tribunal in a subdued state. Therefore God took him beforehand, and humbled him. But that some one was walking there, he perceived; but whence came he to suppose that God was walking there? Such is the habitual custom of those who have committed sin. They are suspicious of all things; they tremble at shadows; they are in terror at every sound, and they imagine that every one is approaching them in a hostile manner. Often therefore the guilty, when they observe people running on another business, suppose that they are come against them; and when others are conversing one with another on quite a different subject, they that are conscious of sin suppose they are conversing about them.

3. For such is the nature of sin, that it betrays whilst no one finds fault; it condemns whilst no one accuses; it makes the sinner a

¹ Tillemont places this Homily on Friday, but the reference to the last is "lately," not "yesterday," so that it was probably de-livered on Saturday, as Montfaucon supposes. The Ben. reading gives, "For a subject of several days in succession requires a con-tinued recollection," &c.

3 συστείλη. See Rom. xii. 1, Hom. XX., where it is used of

And why so? Because the week hath nearly even as righteousness has the contrary effect. arrived at its close with us, and I fear to Hear, at least, how the Scripture describes touch upon a subject, the exposition of which this cowardice of the former, and this bold-I should presently afterwards be obliged to ness of the latter. "The wicked flee when cut short. For the subject requires of us no man pursueth." How doth he flee when no man pursueth? He hath that within which drives him on-an accuser in his conscience; and this he carries about everywhere: and just as it would be impossible to flee from himself, so neither can he escape the persecutor within; but wherever he goeth,5 he is scourged, and hath an incurable wound! But not such is the righteous man. Of what nature then is he? Hear: "The righteous is bold as a lion!" Such a man was Elias. He saw, for instance, the king coming towards him, and when he said, "Why is it that thou pervertest Israel?"6 he answered, "I pervert not Israel, but thou and thy father's house."7 'Truly, the just man is bold as a lion; for he stood up against the king just as a lion doth against some vile cur. though the one had the purple, the other had the sheepskin, which was the more venerable garment of the two; for that purple brought forth the grievous famine; but this sheepskin effected a liberation from that calamity! It divided the Jordan! It made Elisha a twofold 8 Elias! O how great is the virtue of the Saints! Not only their words; not only their bodies, but even their very garments are always esteemed venerable by the whole creation. The sheepskin of this man divided the Jordan! the sandals of the Three Children trampled down the fire! The word of Elisha changed the waters, so that it made them to bear the iron on their surface! The rod of Moses divided the Red Sea and cleft? the rock! The garments of Paul expelled diseases! The shadow of Peter put death to flight! The ashes of the holy Martyrs 10 drive away demons! For this reason they do all things with authority, even as Elias did. For he looked not on the diadem, nor the outward pomp " of the king, but he looked on the soul clad in rags, squalid, begrimed, and in a more wretched condition than that of any criminal; and seeing him the captive and slave of his passions, he despised his power. For he seemed to see a king but in a scene,

⁴ Prov. xxviii. 1. 5 Sav. and M., &win. 6 wa ri &corpéese. There is no authority for why dost thou instead of art thou he that. The word pervertest is the 1xx, rendering of 77%, disturbest, and seems to mean "turnest from right worship," or "from allegiance;" but the meaning of the Hebrew seems to be troublest (i. e., with famine), as in E. V.: comp. Jos. vii. 25, where they render it "destroy."

71 Kings xviii. 17, 18. 8 See Hom. II. 25.

Schulba Avill. 17, 10.
 PS. Ixxviii. 15,
 See Hom. 1. 5.
 The like is said of the relics of St. Epiphanus, in the second part of the Homily against the Peril of Idolatry, quoted from Cassiodori Hist, Eccl. Trip. ix. 48 (Soz. vii. 27).

and not a real one. For what was the advantage of outward abundance, when the poverty within was so great? And what harm could outward poverty do, when there was such a treasure of wealth within? Such a lion also was the blessed Paul; for when he had entered into the prison, and only raised his voice, he shook all the foundations; he gnawed in pieces the fetters, employing not his teeth, but words; on which account it were fitting to call such men not merely lions, but something more than lions; for a lion oftputteth all the wild beasts to flight. The useless, by that assault! Saint uttereth his voice, and driveth away the demons on every side! The weapons of the lion are a hairy mane, pointed claws, and sharp teeth. The weapons of the righteous man are spiritual wisdom, temperance, patience, contempt of all present things, Whoever hath these weapons shall not only be able to deride wicked men, but even the adverse powers themselves.

4. Study then, O man, the life according to God, and no one shall conquer thee at any time; and although thou mayest be accounted the most insignificant of men, thou shalt be more powerful than all. On the other hand, if thou art indifferent about virtue of soul, though thou wert the most powerful of men, thee. And the examples already quoted proved this. But if thou art desirous, I will also endeavour to teach thee by actual facts? the unconquerableness of the righteous, and the vulnerable condition of sinners. Hear then how the prophet intimates both these particulars. "The ungodly," saith he, "are not so, but are like the chaff which the wind scattereth away from the face of the earth."3 For even as chaff lies exposed to the gusts of wind, and is easily caught up and swept along, so is also the sinner driven about by every temptation; for whilst he is at war with himself, and bears the warfare about with him, what hope of safety does he possess; betrayed as he is at home, and carrying with him that conscience, which is a constant enemy? Such, however, is not the nature of the righteous man. But what manner of man is he? Hear the same prophet, saying, "They that trust in the Lord are as Mount Zion." 4 What means then, "As Mount Zion?" "He shall not be shaken," saith he, "for ever." For whatever engines thou bringest up, whatever darts thou hurlest, desiring to overturn a mountain, thou wilt never be able to prevail; for how canst thou? thou wilt break in pieces all thine engines, and exhaust thine own strength. Such also is the righteous man. Whatever blows he may receive, he suffereth no evil therefrom; but detimes, after he hath fallen into a net, is taken; stroyeth the power of those who take counsel but the Saints when they are bound, become against him, and not of men only, but of still more powerful; just as this blessed man demons. Thou hast heard often what endid then in the prison, having loosed the gines the Devil brought up against Job; but prisoners, shaken the walls, and bound the not only did he fail to overthrow that mounkeeper, and overcome him by the word of tain, but drew back exhausted, his darts godliness. The lion uttereth his voice, and broken to pieces, and his engines rendered

5. Knowing these things, let us take heed to our life; and let us not be earnest as to the goods that perish; neither as to the glory that goeth out; nor as to that body which groweth old; nor as to that beauty which is fading; nor as to that pleasure which is fleeting; but let us expend all our care about the soul; and let us provide for the welfare of this in every way. For to cure the body, when diseased, is not an easy matter to every one; but to cure a sick soul is easy to all; and the sickness of the body requires medicines, as well as money, for its healing; but the healing of the soul is a thing that is easy to procure, and devoid of expense. And the nature of the flesh is with much labour dethou wilt easily be worsted by all that assail livered from those wounds which are troublesome; for very often the knife must be applied, and medicines that are bitter; but with respect to the soul there is nothing of this kind. It suffices only to exercise the will, and the desire, and all things are accomplished. And this hath been the work of God's providence. For inasmuch as from bodily sickness no great injury could arise, (for though we were not diseased, yet death would in any case come, and destroy and dissolve the body); but everything depends upon the health of our souls; this being by far the more precious and necessary, He hath made the medicining of it easy, and void of expense or pain. What excuse therefore, or what pardon shall we obtain, if when the body is sick, and money must be expended on its behalf, and physicians called in, and much anguish endured, we make this so much a matter of our care (though what might result from that sickness could be no great

^{*} κατέφαγεν,

* He seems to mean "by experience," i. e., if they would follow his advice. The new Coll. MSS., and from it Harmar, however, read δi erέρων, "through other (examples)," which removes the
3 P.S. i. 5.
3 P.S. i. 5.

injury to us), and yet treat the soul with the saying, "Believe me;" and this will be others any trouble; nor to sustain any sufferings; but without any of all these things, by only choosing and willing, have it in our power to accomplish the entire amendment of it; and knowing assuredly that if we fail to do this, we shall sustain the extreme sentence. inexorable! For tell me, if any one promised to teach thee the healing art in a short space of time, without money or labour, wouldest thou not think him a benefactor? Wouldest thou not submit both to do and to suffer all things, whatsoever he who promised these things commanded? Behold, now, it is permitted thee without labour to find a medicine a pious behaviour. "But what," says one, for wounds, not of the body, but of the soul, and to restore it to a state of health, without there is a transgression of the law, there is any suffering! Let us not be indifferent to the matter! For pray what is the pain of laying aside anger against one who hath aggrieved thee? It is a pain, indeed, to remember injuries, and not to be reconciled! What labour is it to pray, and to ask for a impossible that His law should not be kept; thousand good things from God, who is ready and I am desirous to persuade you from presto give? What labour is it, not to speak evil ent circumstances of this; that so far from its of any one? What difficulty is there in being being impossible not to swear, it is impossible delivered from envy and ill-will? What trouble to swear. For behold, the inhabitants of the is it to love one's neighbour? What suffering city were commanded to bring in a payment is it not to utter shameful words, nor to re- of gold,4 such as it might have seemed bevile, nor to insult another? What fatigue is yound the power of many to do; yet the greater it not to swear? for again I return to this part of the sum has been collected; and you same admonition. The labour of swearing is may hear the tax gatherers saying, "Why indeed exceedingly great. Oftentimes, whilst delay, man? Why put us off from day to under the influence of anger or wrath, we day? It is not possible to avoid it. It is the have sworn, perhaps, that we would never be law of the Emperor, which admits of no reconciled to those who have injured us. delay." What sayest thou, I ask? The Yet afterwards, when our wrath was quenched, Emperor hath commanded thee to bring in and our anger allayed, desiring to be recon-thy money, and it is impossible not to bring ciled, and restrained by the obligation of it in! God hath commanded thee to avoid these oaths, we have suffered the same an- oaths! and how sayest thou, it is impossible guish, as if we were in a snare, and held fast to avoid them! by indissoluble bonds. Of which fact the Devil being aware, and understanding clearly you in respect of this precept. Henceforth, that anger is a fire; that it is easily extinguished, and that when it is extinguished, then reconciliation and love follows; wishing this fire to remain unquenched, he often binds us by an oath; so that although the anger should cease, the obligation of the oath remaining may keep up the fire within us; and selves, for it is not a thing of an intricate that one of these two things may take place, either that being reconciled we are forsworn, or that not being reconciled we subject ourselves to the penalties of cherishing malice.

6. Knowing these things then, let us avoid oaths; and let our mouth continually practise neglect? And this, when we are neither to us a foundation for all pious behaviour; called upon to pay down money; nor to give for the tongue, when it has been disciplined to use this one expression, is ashamed, and would blush to utter words that are disgraceful and ugly; and should it at any time be drawn away by habit, it will be checked again, by having many accusers. For when any one observes him who is not a swearer and punishments, and penalties, which are giving utterance to foul words, he will take his advantage over him, and ridicule, and exclaim tauntingly, "Thou who sayest in all affairs, 'Believe me,' and venturest not to utter an oath, dost thou disgrace thy tongue with these shameful expressions?" So that being forcibly urged by those who are with us, even if unwilling, we shall return again to "if it be necessary to take an oath?" Where no such thing as necessity. "Is it possible then," it is replied, "not to swear at all?" What sayest thou? Hath God commanded, and darest thou to ask if it be possible for His law to be kept? Why, truly it is a thing

7. I am now for the sixth day admonishing I am desirous to take leave 5 of you, meaning to abstain from the subject, that ye may be on your guard. There will no longer be any excuse or allowance for you; for of right, indeed, if nothing had been said on this matter, it ought to have been amended of your-

i i. e., instead of any stronger asseverations.

² ευλαβείσς.

^{*} eυλλβείσε.
3 That is, assuming men to act as reasonably in their relations to God, as they do in their relations to man.
4 The tax which was demanded previously to the sedition, and before alluded to, Hom. 111. 18.
5 συνταβείσθα, used as ασιστάβασθαι (that word having passed rather to the sense of renouncing, see St. Cyr. Hier. Cat. xix.).
See Du Cange, who quotes Conc. Chalc. act i., and many other passages.

nature, or that requires great preparation, them, exhort ye one another, that the things

But since ye have enjoyed the advantage of spoken of during so many days may be kept so much admonition and counsel, what ex- with all watchfulness in your minds, so that cuse will ye have to offer, when ye stand accused before that dread tribunal, and are required to give account of this transgres-improvement; and having fulfilled all the sion. It is impossible to invent any excuse; other precepts, may enjoy eternal crowns; but of necessity you must either go hence which God grant we may all obtain, through amended, or, if you have not amended, be the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord punished, and abide the extremest penalty! Jesus Christ, by whom and with whom be Thinking, therefore, upon all these things, glory, to the Father, together with the Holy and departing hence with much anxiety about Ghost, for ever and ever. Amen.

HOMILY IX.

Commendation of those who had laid aside the practice of swearing. It is shown that no one need scruple about hearing the divine oracles in the Church after a meal. Answer to the question, Why it was so long before the Holy Scriptures were given? Comment on the passage, "The heavens declare the glory of God," with a description of the natural world. And finally, an admonition against swearing.

be always with you,—yea, rather am I always if it be no reproach to the physician to make with you, though not by bodily presence, yet enquiry concerning the patient, neither is it by the power of love! For I have no other any fault in us to be ever asking about your life but' you, and the care of your salvation, salvation; since thus being informed what has As the husbandman hath no other anxiety, been accomplished, and what has been left but about his seeds and his harvests; and the undone, we shall be able to apply the further pilot about the waves and the harbours; so the preacher is anxious with respect to his These things we have ascertained by enquiry; auditors and their progress, even as I am at and we give thanks to God that we have not the present time! Wherefore I bear you all sown our seed upon rocks, nor dropped it the measure of my heart be narrow, yet love that we might reap the harvest. On this acis wide; and "ye are not straitened in us." count I have you continually upon my heart. are we straitened with you. Whence is this teaching, being eased of the burden by the apparent? Because I have met with many profit of the hearer. This reward is, indeed, penalties for those who swear, and enforcing undergo the utmost toil on your behalf. punishment upon those who transgress this law." A punishment which is indeed well generosity of feeling, suffer us to discharge becoming you,3 and which is a sign of the the further debt of which we gave a promise making myself busy in these matters, since present who were here when I made the

I. It was but lately that I spoke to you as this love of interference does not proceed I do now to you again! And O that I could from idle curiosity but from tender care,4 For upon my mind, not only here, but also at amidst thorns; and that we have neither home. For if the multitude be great, and needed much time, nor long delay, in order I will not add what follows next,2 for neither On this account I do not feel the labours of who have said, "We have performed the pre- sufficient to recruit our strength, to give us cept, by making rules for each other, defining wings, to elevate us, and to persuade us to

2. Since therefore ye have manifested much greatest charity. For I am not ashamed of the other day; although indeed I see not all

¹ Comp. Phil, i. 24, Country Parson, c. 7.

² Alluding to the passage, 2 Cor. vi. 11, 12. Ye are not straitened in us, but ye are straitened in your own bowels.

³ He seems to mean those who voluntarily submitted to it. He had recommended masters to punish themselves, as well as their dependents. See above.

⁴ Country Parson, c. 32.

6 This Homily is placed by Montfaucon on the Monday after the last; it is difficult to find any especial reason for the circumstance here referred to; there was the same impediment when the following Homily was delivered. Perhaps the most probable account is, that some persons began the fast with a strictness from cause of this? What hath repelled them from body here, but his mind wandering elsewhere, our table? He that hath partaken of a bodily and such a one, though he may be fasting, is meal, it would seem, has thought it an indignity after receiving material food, to come the man who is in earnest, who is watchful to the hearing of the divine oracles. But not rightly do they think thus. For if this were improper, Christ would not have gone through His large and long discourses after that mystic supper; and if this had been unsuitable, He would not, when He had fed the multitude in the desert, have communicated His discourses to them after that meal. For (if one must say something startling on this point), the hearing of the divine oracles at that time is especially profitable. For when thou hast made up thy mind that after eating and drinking thou must repair also to the assembly, thou wilt assuredly be careful, of sobriety; and wilt neither be led away at any time into excess of wine, or gluttony. For the thought, and the expectation of entering the church, schools thee to partake of of the body when it has become weakened. food and drink with becoming decency; lest, after thou hast entered there, and joined thy with famine. Yet what kind of apology hast thou for doing this? For in the matter of fasting thou hast, perhaps, bodily weakness to plead, but what hast thou to say with respect to hearing? For surely weakness of body is no impediment to thy partaking of the divine oracles! If I had said, "Let no one who has breakfasted 3 mix with us;" "let no one who has eaten be a hearer," thou wouldest have had some kind of excuse; but now, when we would fain drag, entice, and beseech you to come, what apology can Adam, nor of Noah, nor of Abraham, but in ye have for turning away from us? The unfit hearer is not he that hath eaten and drunk; that if the Book was profitable, it ought to but he who gives no heed to what is said, who promise. What, I would ask, can be the yawns, and is slack in attention, having his an unprofitable hearer. On the other hand, and keeps his mind in a state of attention, though he may have eaten and drunk, will be our most suitable hearer of all. For this rule, indeed, very properly prevails with relation to the secular tribunals and councils. Inasmuch as they know not how to be spiritually wise, therefore they eat not to nourishment, but to bursting; and they drink often to excess. For this reason, as they render themselves unfit for the management of their affairs, they shut up the court-houses and council-chambers in the evening and at midday.4 But here there is nothing of this sort, -God forbid! But he who has eaten will though perchance with reluctance, of the duty rival him who fasts, as far as regards sobriety of soul; for he eats and drinks, not so as to distend the stomach, or to darken the reason, but in such a way as to recruit the strength

3. But enough of this admonition. It is time now to deal with our subject; although brethren, thou shouldest appear ridiculous to our mind holds back and shrinks from giving all present, by smelling of wine, and unmannelly eructation. These things I now speak are not come. And just as an affectionate not to you who are now present, but to the mother when she is about to spread out her absent; that they may learn them through table, grieves and laments when all her chilyour means. For it is not having eaten that dren are not there, thus also do I now suffer; hinders one's hearing, but listlessness. But and when I think of the absence of our breththou whilst deeming it to be a condemnation ren, I am reluctant to discharge my debt. not to fast, then addest another fault, which But ye have it in your power to rid me of this is far greater and heavier, in not being a tardiness. For if ye promise me that ye will partaker of this sacred food; and having convey to them an exact report of all I say, nourished the body, thou consumest the soul we shall readily pay you down the whole;5 for thus the instruction, charitably afforded on your part, will make up to them for their absence; and ye will hear me the more attentively, knowing that you must necessarily give an account of these things to others. In order then that our subject may be made the clearer, let us take it up and repeat it from the beginning. We were enquiring, then, the other day, "On what account the Scriptures were delivered after so many years. For this Book was delivered neither in the time of that of Moses. And I hear many who say, which they afterwards fell off. The meal spoken of was an early which they atterwards fell off. The meal spoken of was an early dinner. Eumaus takes his δρατον at daybreak, Od. xvi. 2. But Athenaeus, I. i. c. 9 and 10, says that in his day such a meal was called ἀρφάτομα, and the δείπνου of the ancients, at mid-day, δρατον (quoted by Perizonius on Ælian, V. H. ix. 19).

πολλάκε, But Sav. and M. πολλής, making the sense, "thou wilt assuredly, even if unwilling, observing great sobriety."

2 i.e., the oracles of Scripture explained at church. (See Hom. II. 12.) The Holy Communion was always received fasting.

3 πρατηκώς.

³ ήριστηκώς.

⁴ A canon of Isaac Lingonensis (in the eighth century), Tit, vifis, cap. 2, Labbe viii. δ20, forbids any one to take an oath except fasting. The Athenian courts did not sit after sunset, and the great time for forensic business was the forenoon. Goeller on Thuc, viii. 22. Ælian, V. H. xii. 20, says that the luxurious Tarentines would be drunk even when the forum is fullest, περί πλή-δυσταν άγοραν. v. Act. ii. 15; Perizonius on Ælian, cites Dio Chrys, Or. 67, de (Gior. 2, who shews it was about that time.

5 i. e., the promise or explaining the salout thich had been proposed in the troopen control of the proposed in the troopen control of the proposed of the control of the obsolete argument; for it is not quite true another writer has referred to; "For from given to us only when we are children; and signified when he said, "The heavens declare solid food is useful; but no one ever gives it the glory of God." How then, tell me, do us in the beginning of our life, but when we they declare it? Voice they have none; ter season is advantageous; yet this too beauty, the breadth, the height, the position, makes room for others. What then? Do the form, the stability thereof during so long not by letters, but by things. But what does the ear, but through the medium of the eyes; the expression "by things" But what does the ear, but through the medium of the eyes; for the latter is a sense which is more sure means of the Creation itself.

4. Observe then, how the Apostle, alighting upon this same topic, and directing him- means of books, and of letters, he who knew self to those very Greeks who said, that they letters would have learnt what was written; had not from the beginning learnt the knowledge of God from the Scriptures, frames his answer. Having said that, "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all un- it; and the wealthy man would have purchased godliness and unrighteousness of men, who the Bible, but the poor man would not have hold the truth in unrighteousness;" 3 when been able to obtain it. Again, he who knew he saw that he was met by an objection; and the language that was expressed by the letthat many would still enquire, from whence ters, might have known what was therein contained; but the Scythian, and the Barbarian, on to add, "Because that which may be and the Indian, and the Egyptian, and all known of God is manifest in them." But those who were excluded from that language, how is it manifest in them? How were they would have gone away without receiving any able to know God, and who hath shewed? instruction. This however cannot be said what he means is just this, He hath placed have been delivered from the very beginning; His Creation in the midst, before the eyes but if it was useless, it ought not to have of all men; in order that they may guess at been delivered afterwards. But this is an the Creator from His works; which, indeed, that anything which is profitable ought to the greatness and beauty of the creatures, have been delivered from the beginning, nor proportionably the Maker of them is seen."5 if anything was delivered from the begin- Seest thou the greatness? Marvel at the ning, is it quite necessary that the same should power of Him that made it! Seest thou the continue afterwards. For example; Milk is beauty? be astonished at the wisdom which useful, yet it is not always given; but it is adorned it! This it was which the prophet have passed out of the age of childhood, mouth they possess not; no tongue is theirs! Again, the summer season is useful; but it how then do they declare? By means of the does not shew itself constantly; and the win- spectacle itself. For when thou seest the they say that the Scriptures are not useful? a period; hearing as it were a voice, and I reply; they are most useful and most nec- being instructed by the spectacle, thou adoressary. And if so useful, for what reason est Him who created a body so fair and then, say they, were they not delivered to us strange! The heavens may be silent, but from the beginning? It was because God the sight of them emits a voice, that is louder was desirous of instructing the nature of man, than a trumpet's sound; instructing us not by and more distinct than the former.

5. For if God had given instruction by but the illiterate man would have gone away without receiving any benefit from this source, unless some one else had introduced him to Declare this. "God," saith he, "hath with respect to the heavens; but the Scyshewed it unto them." In what manner? thian, and Barbarian, and Indian, and Egypt-By the sending of what kind of prophet? ian, and every man that walks upon the earth, what evangelist? what kind of teacher? if the shall hear this voice; for not by means of the holy Scriptures were not yet given. "The ears, but through the sight, it reaches our invisible things of Him," says he, "from the understanding. And of the things that are creation of the world are clearly seen, being seen, there is one uniform perception; and understood by the things that are made, even there is no difference, as is the case with re-His eternal Power and Godhead." But spect to languages. Upon this volume the unlearned, as well as the wise man, shall be alike able to look; the poor man as well as the rich man; and wherever any one may chance to come, there looking upwards towards the heavens, he will receive a sufficient lesson from the view of them: and the

¹ See Butler's Analogy, p. ii. c. 6, where the somewhat similar objection, "that Christianity is not universal," is discussed.

² An enlarged view of this proceiple is given in Butler's Analogy, p. ii. c. 7, applying it further to the facts recorded in Holy Scripture. "The general design of Scripture, which contains in it this revelation, thus considered as historical, may be said to be, to give us an account of the world, in this one single view, as God? sworld."

³ Rom. i. 18. 26

⁴ Rom. i. 20.

prophet himself intimated and indicated this fact, that the creation utters this voice so as to be intelligible to barbarians, and to Greeks, and to all mankind without exception, when he spoke on this wise; "There is no speech, nor language, where there voice is not heard." What he means is to this effect, that there is no nation or tongue which is unable to understand this language; but that such is their utterance, that it may be heard of all mankind. And that not merely of the heavens, but of the day and night. But how of the day and night? The heavens, indeed, by their beauty and magnitude, and by all the rest, astonish the beholder, and transport him to an admiration of the Creator; but as to the day and night, what can these show us of the same kind? Nothing certainly of the same kind, but other things which are not inferior to them; as for example; the harmony, and the order which they so accurately observe. For when thou considerest how they distribute between them the whole year, and mutually divide the length of the whole space, even as if it were by a beam and scales, thou wilt be astonished at Him who hath ordered them! For just as certain sisters dividing their father's inheritance among themselves with much affection, and not insulting one another in the smallest degree, even so too the day and the night distribute the year with such an equality of parts, with the utmost accuracy; 2 and keep to their own boundaries, and never push one another aside. Never hath the day been long in winter; and in like manner never hath the night been long in summer, whilst so many generations have passed away; but during so great an interval and length of time one hath not defrauded the other even in the smallest degree; not of half an hour's space, no, nor of the twinkling of an eye!

6. Therefore also the Psalmist,3 struck with astonishment at the equality of this distribution, exclaimed, "Night unto night sheweth knowledge." If thou knowest how to meditate wisely on these matters, thou wilt admire the Being who fixed these immoveable boundaries even from the beginning. Let the avaricious hear these things; and those who are coveting the wealth of others; and let them imitate the equality of the day and night. Let those who are puffed up and high-minded also hear; and those who are unwilling to concede the first places to others!

The day gives place to the night, and does not invade the territory of others! But thou, whilst always enjoying honour, canst thou not bear to share it with thy brethren? Consider also with me the wisdom of the Lawgiver. In winter He hath ordered that the night should be long; when the germs 4 are tender, and require more coolness; and are unable to sustain the hotter rays of the sun; but when they are somewhat grown, the day again increases with them, and becomes then the longest, when the fruit has now attained ripeness. And this is a beneficial arrangement not only for seeds, but for our bodies. For since during winter, the sailor, and the pilot. and the traveller, and the soldier, and the farmer, sit down for the most part at home, fettered by the frost; and the season is one of idleness; God hath appointed that the greater part of this time should be consumed in night, in order that the length of the day might not be superfluous, when men were unable to do anything. Who can describe the perfect order of the seasons; and how these, like some virgins dancing in a circle, succeed one another with the happiest harmony; and how those who are in the middle cease not to pass over to the opposite ones with a gradual and noiseless transition? Therefore, neither are we overtaken by the summer immediately after winter; nor by the winter immediately after the summer; but mid-way the spring is interposed; that while we gently and gradually take up one season after the other, we may have our bodies hardened to encounter the summer heat without uneasiness. For since sudden changes to opposite extremes are productive of the worst injury and disease, God hath contrived that after winter we should take up the spring, and after the spring the summer; and after the summer the autumn; and thus transport us to winter, so that these changes from seasons which are opposite, should come upon us harmlessly and by degrees, through the aid of intermediate ones. Who then is so wretched and pitiable, that beholding the heavens; and beholding sea, and land; and beholding this exact adjustment of the seasons, and the unfailing order of day and night, he can think that these things happen of their own accord, instead of adoring Him who hath arranged them all with a corresponding wisdom!

7. But I have yet somewhat more to say on this head. For not only, indeed, does the magnitude and beauty of the creation, but

¹ Ps, xix. 3.
² The diurnal motion of the earth, or, as they called it, of the heavens, was taken by Plato for the very type of stability. The exactness of its rate is far greater than the ancients had means to appreciate, as is proved by constant observations, as well as by the

³ ψαλμφδὸς: St. Chrys. usually says "the prophet."

⁴ σπέρματα. He seems to mean the young blade. These remarks are adapted to a climate in which the harvest is over before midsummer.

this creation to become our best teacher, by compounding all things in a manner which transcends the course of nature. Perhaps what I have said, is not sufficiently clear. nature for water to be supported on the earth, earth being a certain dense, hard, unvielding, and solid substance, is easily able to support | destroyed ! 4 the nature of water; but the water, which is fluid, and rare, and soft, and diffusive, and astonished and amazed at these things; and giving way to all it meets with, must be unwere of the lightest kind. Often indeed is above nature? Therefore one speaks thus: when a small pebble falls upon it, it yields, and makes way, and sends it down to the And another observes, "In His hands are bottom. When therefore thou beholdest not the corners of the earth."6 And again: a small pebble, but the whole earth borne "He hath laid the foundation of it upon the upon the waters, and not submerged, admire seas." And these declarations, though they vellous things in a supernatural manner! is borne upon the waters? The prophet declares this when he says, "He hath founded tains, and hills, and cities, and plants, and men, and brutes; and it is not submerged! What do I say? Is not submerged? How comes it to pass, that since the water has been in close contact with it below, during so long a period, it has not been dissolved, and the whole of it become mud? For the sub-

also the very manner of it, display a God stance of wood, when soaked in water but a who is the artificer of the universe. For little time, is rotted and dissolved; and why since we were not present at the beginning, do I say of wood? What can be firmer than whilst he was engaged in the work of forming iron? yet often this is softened, when it reand creating all things; nor had we been mains a long time in water; and well it may. present, could we have known how they came For it derives its substance from the earth. into being, the power that disposed them being invisible; He hath made the mode of they make their escape, dragging their shackles and chains along with them, go to brooks of water, and thrust their shackled feet therein, and after making the iron softer by this means, they easily break it by strik-Therefore it is necessary that I should again repeat it in a clearer manner. All men, ened, and wood is rotted, and stones are then, must admit that it is the course of worn away by the nature of water; yet so great a mass as the earth hath remained such and not the earth on the waters. For the a length of time lying upon the waters, without being either submerged, or dissolved, and

8. And who is there that must not feel confidently pronounce that they are not the able to support any solid body, though it works of nature, but of that Providence which "Who hangeth the earth upon nothing." 5 the power of Him who wrought these mar- seem contrary to one another, have yet an entire agreement. For he that said, "He And whence does this appear, that the earth hath laid the foundation of it upon the seas," meant the same thing as he did who declared, "He hath hung it upon nothing." For its it upon the seas, and prepared it upon the standing upon the waters is just the same floods," And again: "To him who hath thing as hanging upon nothing. Where then founded the earth upon the waters." What is it suspended and placed? Hear the same sayest thou? The water is not able to sup- one saying, "In His hands are the corners port a small pebble on its surface, and yet of the earth." Not that God hath hands, bears up the earth, great as it is; and moun- but that thou mayest know that His power it is, providing for all things which holds together 8 and supports the body of the earth! But if thou believest not what I now say, believe what thou beholdest! for even in another element it is possible to find this admirable workmanship. For it is the nature of fire to tend upwards,9 and to be always mounting aloft; and although you force and constrain it never so much, it cannot submit to have its course directed downwards. For often, when we are carrying a lighted torch, although we incline its head downwards, we cannot compel the force of the flame to direct

³ Ps. cxxxvi. 6. Among the variety of opinions that anciently prevailed respecting the earth's form and situation, one of the prevailed especing the earth's form and situation, one of the prevailed was, that it seems a form and situation, one of the earth's a form and situation, one of the earth's a was, that it seems a fine the local case is a fact that all beneath the ocean case is the earth of the solution of the invisible universe; and that all beneath the ocean case is a fine green or cann; and when any went to Hades, they must first pass the ocean. Of this opinion were not only the ancient poets, but some of the Christian Fathers, particularly Lactantius, and St. Augustin, and others, who thought their opinion was favoured by the Psalmist, in Ps. xxiv. 2, and exxxvi. 6. Derham's Physical Pheology, p. 41. St. Chrysostom must evidently have adopted the same opinion. St. Greg. Nyss. in Hexam. t. 1, p. 22 c., speaks of the earth's conical shadow. See Plin. it. 1. St. Bas. in Hex. i. c., o., explains the "founding on the waters," of their being spread all round: ix. c. 1, he speaks of various opinions as to its shape, and some who thought it to be 180,000 stadia round. See St. Greg. Naz. Or. xvxiii. al. xxivi. c. 28, and Philoponus de Mund. Cr. iii. 6-13; Galland, xii. p. 525.

⁴ This line of argument, from arrangements above the course of nature, is a dangerous one; and it would be less difficult than in-vidious, to search out instances of fallacy in modern writers. It vidious, to search out instances of failacy in modern writers. It always brings men's ignorance into play.

5 Job xxvi. 7.

6 vy, xvv, 4.

8 ovy, parovova, but Sav. ovy, poroiova. There is constant variation of reading wherever these words occur.

9 Sec in Bacon's Novum Organum, his Vindemiatio prima de forma calidi, L. II. Aph. so, Diff. 2, he says, "the motion of heat is at once expansive, and a tendency upwards."

itself to the ground; but still it turns upward, boundaries, but the work of Him whose hath turned his beams toward the earth, and made his light to direct itself downward, all but saying to him by the very shape (of the heavens), "Look downward.—Shine upon men, for thou wert made for them!" The light, indeed, of a candle cannot be made to submit to this; but this star, great and marvellous as it is, bends downward, and looks toward the earth, which is contrary to the nature of fire; owing to the power of Him who hath commanded it. Wouldest thou have me speak of another thing of the like kind? Waters embrace the back of the visible heaven on all parts; and yet they neither flow down, nor are moved out of their place, kind. For it easily runs together into what is concave; but when the body is of a convex that are above the heavens." Besides, the lies above.

ing with waves, and fierce winds; yet this sea, regulation; but remaining within its limits, it lifts up its voice, and is in tumult, and roars aloud, and raises its waves to a prodigious height. But when it comes to the shores, and beholds the sand, it breaks up, and returns back again within itself; teaching thee, by both these things, that it is not the work of nature that it remains within its

and passes from below toward that which is power restrains it! For this cause accordabove. But with respect to the sun, God ingly He hath made the wall feeble; and hath hath made it quite the contrary. For He not encompassed these shores with wood, or stone, or mountains, lest thou shouldest impute the regulation of the elements to such things. And, therefore, God Himself, upbraiding the Jews with this very circumstance, said, "Fear ye not Me, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea that it cannot pass it." 5 But the marvellous thing is not this only, that He hath made a great and admirable world; and that He hath compacted it in a way above the usual course of nature; but that He hath also constituted it out of opposite things; such as hot and cold, dry and moist, fire and water, earth and air, and that these contrary elements, of which this whole universe consists, though continalthough the nature of water is not of this ually at strife one with another, are not consumed of one another. The fire hath not overrun and burnt up all things; the water form, it glides away on all sides; and not hath not overflowed and drowned the whole even a small portion 2 is capable of standing earth. With respect to our bodies, however, upon such a figure,3 But, lo! this wonder these effects really take place; and upon the is found to exist in the heavens; and the increase of the bile, fever is generated; and prophet, again, to intimate this very circum- the whole animal frame sustains an injury; stance, observes, "Praise the Lord, ye waters and when there is a superabundance of phlegm, many diseases are produced which water hath not quenched the sun; nor hath destroy the animal. But in the case of the the sun, which hath gone on his way beneath universe, nothing of this kind happens; but for so long a time, dried up the water that each thing remains held as it were by a kind of bridle and band; preserving, by the will 9. Dost thou desire that we should lead of the Creator, its own boundaries; and their thee down again to the earth, and point out strife becomes a source of peace to the whole. the marvel? Seest thou not this sea abound- Are not these things evident even to a blind man? and are not even the simple easily able spacious, and large, and furious as it is, is to comprehend, that they were made, and are walled in with a feeble sand! Mark also the upheld, by some Providence? For who is so wisdom of God, He permitted it not to be at silly and senseless, that beholding such a rest, nor tranquil, lest thou shouldest sup- mass of substances, such beauty, such compose its good order to be of mere natural bination, the continual strife of such vast elements, their opposition, and yet durability, would not reason with himself and say, "If there were not some Providence to uphold the mass of these bodies, not permitting the universe to fall to pieces, it could not remain; it could not have been lasting. So perfect is the order of the seasons, such the harmony of the day and night, so many the kinds of brute animals, and plants, and seeds, and herbs, that preserve their course, and yet, to the present day, none has ever fallen into decay or sudden dissolution.

10. We might continue to speak not only of these things, but also of many others, which are even more profound; and might moralise even upon the Creation itself; but

^{*} In accordance with the notions of his age, St. Chrysostom supposed that the firmament was something solid; and it seems to have been entirely a notion of modern times, that the visible heavens are formed of a subtle ether. Thus Homer terms them χάλκον υὐρανόν, and χαλκοβατή δωμανα; and sometimes σιδήρειο υὐρανόν. The notion of St. Chrysostom seems to have been similar. He supposes a solid spherical arch, which he terms the visible heaven, which divided the waters above from those below it. See Gen. 1, - A similar idea seems to have prevailed among those who translated the Bible into English, from the use of the word who translated the Bible into English, from the use of the word and the Greek evrepeus. It is remarkable that this idea is effected by Drusius in his Loca Difficitions Pentateuchi, and in Sylvester's translation of Du Bartas's Weeks and Days.

2 Sav. and M., of it.

3 σχήματος.

4 Ps. cxlviii. 4.

been said, and to convey it to the rest." I know indeed, that the abstruseness of these speculations has seemed strange to your ears; but if we be a little vigilant, and accustom ourselves to them, we shall easily be able to teach others. Meanwhile, it is necessary farther to say this to your Charity. Even as God hath given us glory by means of this great creation, so let us also glorify Him by a pure conversation! "The heavens declare the glory of God," though only seen; and we therefore should declare God's glory 3 not only in speaking, but in silence, and in asbefore men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."4 For when an unbeliever beholds thee, who art a believer, subdued, modest, and orderly in manners, he will wonder and say, "Truly great is the God of the Christians! What manner of men hath He formed? What, and from what hath He made them? Hath He turned them from men into angels? If any one treats them contemptuously, they revile not! If any one beats them, they are not enraged! If any one does them an injury, they pray for him who has put them in pain! They have no enemy! They know learnt to utter a falsehood! They cannot endure a false oath, or rather, they swear not out of their mouth!" Such are the things which we should give them cause to say of us; and we should exterminate our evil habit of oaths, and pay at least as much honour to God, as we do to our more valuable garments. For how truly absurd is it, that when we have one garment better than the rest, we do not suffer ourselves to be continually wearing it; and yet everywhere we draggle about the name of God without concern, or ceremony! Let us not, I earnestly pray and beseech you, let us not thus despise our own salvation; but the care which we have used respecting this precept from the beginning, let us carry on even to the end. For I thus continually exhort you on the subject of oaths, not as though condemning you of listlessness, but inasmuch as I have seen that ye are for the most part reformed, I press you, and am urgent, that the whole work should be finished reserving these subjects for the morrow, let off, and come to its perfection. Even so act us earnestly endeavour to retain what has the spectators of public games. They excite those who are near the prize, with the more vehemence. Let us, then, by no means become weary; for we have nearly reached the completion of this amendment; and the dif-ficulty was at the beginning. But now that the greater part of the evil habit has been cut away, and less remains to correct, no labour is necessary, but we only need a moderate degree of watchfulness, and diligence for some short time, in order that we ourselves being amended, may also become instructors to others; and that we may behold the Holy Passover with much confidence, and that with tonishing all men by the brightness of our much pleasure we may reap a double or life. For He saith, "Let your light so shine treble measure of the customary gladness of the festival. For not so much does it delight us to be delivered from the toil and fatigue of fasting, as to meet that holy season with an illustrious and well-earned crown; a crown indeed that is never to fade!

11. But in order that the amendment may take place the more quickly, do this which I tell thee. Inscribe upon the wall of thy house, and upon the wall of thy heart, that "flying sickle;" and think that it is flying forth on occasion of the curse, and constantly remember it. And if thou observest another person swearing, restrain, forbid, and be careful for him, and be careful for thine nothing of cherishing malice! They are own domestics. For if we would look to guiltless of vain babbling! They have not this, that we might not merely correct ourselves, but also bring others to the same point, we shall ourselves quickly arrive at the at all, but would prefer to have their tongue goal; since while we undertake to instruct cut out, rather than to let an oath proceed others, we shall be ashamed and blush, should we in our own case seem to leave those things unperformed, which we enjoin upon them. There is no need to say more; for much has been already spoken on these matters; and these things are now said only by way of remembrance. But may God, who is more sparing of our souls than we are, make us perfect in this, and every good work; that so having completed the whole fruit of righteousness, we may be found worthy of the kingdom of heaven, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, through Whom, and with Whom, to the Father, with the Holy Ghost, be glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

⁵ Flying hook, or sickle. See Zech, v. 1-3. A flying roll, is the version given in the present translation of the Bible, which follows the Hebrew as well as the Vulgate, the Targum, and the Syriac. (See St. Jerome on the place, who adds Aquila, Theodotion, and Symmachus.) The Septuagint, which St. Chrysostom usually follows, instead of [7522, probably read 722], which signifies a reap-hook, or sickle; in this, as in some other instances, the final letter having been dropped through the carelessness of transcribers. See Homily XV., conclusion.

Or the next day of preaching.

3 See on Rom. xi. 6, Hom. XVIII.

² See his request, 4 Matt. v. 16.

HOMILY X.

Commendation of those who came to hear after taking a meal.-Observations on the physiology of the natural world; and against those who deify the creation; and on the duty of not swearing.

1. I Joy, and rejoice with you all, that ye even before this, abstinence from sin; since mainest at home, thou wilt be more slothful and supine; but coming here thou wilt shake off all slumber and listlessness; and laying aside not only listlessness,4 but also all sadheart in all the events that may happen.

2. What need then is there to say more? Stand only nigh the man who fasts, and thou wilt straightway partake of his good odour; for fasting is a spiritual perfume; and through the eyes, the tongue, and every part, it manithose who have dined, but that I may shew the advantage of fasting. I do not, however, call mere abstinence from meats, fasting; but have actually put in practice that admonition he who, after he has taken a meal, has come of ours, which we lately made with respect to hither with suitable sobriety, is not very far those who were absent, for the reason that behind the man who fasts; even as he who they were not fasting. For I think that continues fasting, if he does not give earnest many of those who have dined are to-day and diligent heed to what is spoken, will depresent; and go to fill up this goodly assem- rive no great benefit from his fast. He who blage; and that this is the fact, I conjecture eats, and yet takes a part in the sacred asfrom the more brilliant spectacle that I see sembly with suitable earnestness, is in much around me, and the greater concourse of better case than he who eats not at all, and hearers. Not in vain, it seems, did I lately remains absent. This abstinence will by no spend so many words on their account, ap- means be able to benefit us as much as the pealing to your Charity, to draw them to participation in spiritual instruction conveyeth their Mother; and to persuade them that it to us benefit and advantage. Where indeed, is lawful, even after bodily nourishment, to besides, wilt thou hear the things upon which partake also of that which is spiritual. And thou meditatest here? Wert thou to go to in which case, beloved, I ask, did ye act for the bench of justice? quarrels and contenthe better; at the time of the last assembly tions are there! or into the council-chamber? when after your meal ye turned to your there is anxious thought about political matslumbers; or now, when after the meal ye ters! or to thine home? solicitude on the have presented yourselves at the hearing of subject of thy private affairs afflicts thee in the divine laws? Was it best when ye loitered every direction! or wert thou to go to the about in the forum, and took part in meetings conferences and debates of the forum? every which were no wise profitable; or now, when thing there is earthly and corruptible! For ye stand with your own brethren, and hear all the words that pass among those assemthe prophetic oracles? It is no disgrace, bled there, are concerning merchandize, or beloved, to have eaten, but after eating to taxes, or the sumptuous table, or the sale of remain at home, and so to be deprived of lands, or other contracts, or wills, or inherithis sacred banquet. For whilst thou re-tances, or some other things of that kind. And shouldest thou enter even into the royal halls, there again thou wouldest hear in the same way all discoursing of wealth, or power, or of the glory which is held in honour here, ness, thou wilt be more at ease, and in better but of nothing that is spiritual. But here on the contrary everything relates to heaven, and heavenly things; to our soul, to our life, the purpose for which we were born, and why we spend an allotted time upon earth, and on what terms we migrate from hence, and into what condition we shall enter after these fests the good disposition of the soul. I have things, and why our body is of clay, what also said this, not for the purpose of condemning is the nature of death, what, in short, the present life is, and what the future. The discourses that are here made by us contain nothing at all of an earthly kind, but are all in reference to spiritual things. Thus, then, it is that we shall have made great provision for our salvation, and shall depart hence with a good hope.

3. Since, therefore, we did not scatter the seed in vain, but ye hunted out all who were

¹ ἡριστηκότων. Suidas, however, places this meal about the third hour.

² πρώην. Montfaucon assumes that this word is never applied to the preceding day: if so, την ἐποῦσαν, Hom. IX, sec. 10, cannot be the morrow, unless some accident delayed the delivery of this Homily. It may be the next Σyνακιές.

³ Sec Hom. IV. 1.

⁴ There is a play on the words ἀθυμία and ἡαθυμία which it seems impossible to preserve.

absent, as I exhorted you; suffer us now to what is dry, that is, of yellow bile; of what is What then were those matters that were before treated of? We were enquiring how, and in what manner, before the giving of the Scriptures, God ordered His dispensation toward us; and we said, that by means of the creation He instructed our race, stretching out the heavens, and there openly unfolding the wise, to the poor and to the rich, to Scythians and to barbarians, and to all in general who dwell upon the earth; a volume which is much larger than the multitude of those instructed by it. We discoursed also at length the will of God becomes their bond.

return you a recompense; and having re- moist, that is, of phlegm; of what is cold, minded you of a few things that were said that is, of black bile. And let no one think before, to repay you again what remains, this subject foreign to that which we have in hand, "For He that is spiritual judgeth all things; yet He Himself is judged of no man." Thus also Paul touched upon principles of agriculture, whilst discoursing to us of the Resurrection; and said, "Thou fool; that which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die."3 But if that blessed man a vast volume, useful alike to the simple and brought forward questions of agriculture, neither should any one blame us if we handle matters pertaining to medical science. For our discourse is now respecting the Creation of God; and this ground-work of ideas will be necessary for our purpose. As, therefore, I concerning the night, and the day, and the said before, this body of ours consists of four order of these, as well as of the harmony elements; and if either revolts against the which is strictly preserved by them; and much whole, death is the result of this revolt. As was said respecting the measured dance of for instance, by a superabundance "of bile" the seasons of the year, and of their equality. fever is produced; and should this proceed For just as the day defraudeth not the night beyond a certain measure, it effects a rapid even of half an hour throughout the whole dissolution. Again, when there is an excess year, so also do these distribute all the days of the cold element, paralyses, agues, apoamong themselves equally. But, as I said plexies, and an infinite number of other malabefore, not only does the greatness and dies are generated. And every form of disbeauty of the creation shew forth the Divine ease is the effect of an excess of these Architect, but the very manner likewise in elements; when either of them overpassing its which it is compacted together, and the own bounds, acts the part of a tyrant against method of operation, transcending as it does, the rest, and mars the symmetry of the the ordinary course of nature. For it would whole. Interrogate then him who says, that have been in accordance with nature for all things are spontaneous and self-produced. water to be borne upon the earth; but now If this little and diminutive body, having the we see, on the contrary, that the earth is sup-advantage of medicines, and of medical skill, ported by the waters. It would have been in and of a soul within which regulates it, and accordance with nature that fire should tend of much moral wisdom, as well as innumeraupwards; but now on the contrary we see the ble other helps, be not always able to conbeams of the sun directed towards the earth; tinue in a state of order, but often perishes, and the waters to be above the heavens, yet and is destroyed, when some disturbance takes not falling away; and the sun running below place within it; how could a world like this, them, yet not quenched by the waters, nor containing substances of such vast bulk and dispelling their moisture. Besides these compounded of those same elements, remain things we said that this whole universe conduring so long a time without any disturbance, sists of four elements, these being adverse to unless it enjoyed the advantage of a manifold and at strife with one another; yet one does providence? Neither would it be reasonable not consume the other, although they are to suppose that this body, which has the benmutually destructive. Whence it is evident efit of superintendence both without and that some invisible power bridles them, and within, should scarcely be sufficient for its own preservation; and that a world such as 4. To-day, I wish to dwell a little more on this is, enjoying no such superintendence, this subject. Arouse yourselves, however, should during so many years suffer nothing and give earnest heed unto us! And that of that sort which our body suffers. For the wonder may appear more clearly, I will how, I ask, is it that not one of these eledraw the lesson concerning these things from ments hath gone beyond its own boundaries, our own bodies. This body of ours, so nor swallowed up all the rest? Who hath short, and small, consists of four elements; brought them together from the beginning? viz. of what is warm, that is, of blood; of Who hath bound? Who hath bridled? Who hath held them together during so long a marvellous; the laws of the night and day; if we who are evil-affected towards one anremain at variance, and hold ourselves ungraciously towards one another; if we have yet need of some one else to bring us into a state of conjunction; and after this conjunction further to clench us, and persuade us to abide by our reconciliation, and not again to be at variance; how could the elements, which neither partake of sense nor reason, and which are naturally adverse, and inimical to each other, have come together, and agreed and remained with one another, if there were not some ineffable Power which effected this conjunction; and after this conjunction, always restrained them by the same bond?

5. Dost thou not perceive how this body wastes away, withers, and perishes after the secession of the soul, and each of the elements thereof returns to its own appointed place? This very same thing, indeed, would also happen to the world, if the Power which always governs it had left it devoid of Its own providence. For if a ship does not hold together without a pilot, but soon founders, how could the world have held together so long a time if there was no one governing its course? And that I may not enlarge, suppose the world to be a ship; the earth to be placed below as the keel; the sky to be the sail; men to be the passengers;2 the subjacent abyss, the sea. How is it then that during so long a time, no shipwreck has taken place? Now let a ship go one day without a pilot and crew,3 and thou wilt see it straightway foundering! But the world, though subsisting now five thousand years, and many more, hath suffered nothing of the kind. But why do I talk of a ship? Suppose one hath pitched a small hut in the vineyards; and when the fruit is gathered, leaves it vacant; it stands, however, scarce two or three days, but soon goes to pieces, and tumbles down! Could not a hut, forsooth, stand without superintendence? How then could the workmanship of a world, so fair and period? For if the body of the world were the interchanging dances of the seasons; the simple and uniform, what I speak of would course of nature chequered and varied as it not have been so impossible. But when there is in every way throughout the earth, the hath been such a strife between the elements, sea, the sky; in plants, and in animals that even from the beginning; who so senseless as fly, swim, walk, creep; and in the race of to think that these things would have come men, far more dignified than any of these. together, and remained together when united, continue yet unbroken, during so long a without One to effect this conjunction? For period, without some kind of providence? But in addition to what has been said, follow other not by nature, but by will, cannot come me whilst I enumerate the meadows, the garspontaneously to an agreement as long as we dens, the various tribes of flowers; all sorts of herbs, and their uses; 4 their odours, forms, disposition, yea, but their very names; the trees which are fruitful, and which are barren; the nature of metals, - and of animals, -in the sea, or on the land; of those that swim, and those that traverse the air; the mountains, the forests, the groves; the meadow below, and the meadow above; for there is a meadow on the earth, and a meadow too in the sky; the various flowers of the stars; the rose below, and the rainbow above! Would you have me point out also the meadow of birds? Consider the variegated body of the peacock, surpassing every dye, and the fowls of purple plumage.5 Contemplate with me the beauty of the sky; how it has been preserved so long without being dimmed; and remains as bright and clear as if it had been only fabricated to-day; moreover, the power of the earth, how its womb has not become effete by bringing forth during so long a time! Contemplate with me the fountains; how they burst forth and fail not, since the time they were begotten, to flow forth continually throughout the day and night! Contemplate with me the sea, receiving so many rivers, yet never exceeding its measure! But how long shall we pursue things unattainable! It is fit, indeed, that over every one of these which has been spoken of, we should say, "O Lord, how hast Thou magnified Thy works; in wisdom hast Thou made them

6. But what is the sapient argument of the unbelievers, when we go over all these particulars with them; the magnitude, the beauty of the creation, the prodigality, the munificence everywhere displayed? This very thing, say they, is the worst fault, that God hath made the world so beautiful and so vast. For if He had not made it beautiful and vast, we should not have made a god of it; but now being struck with its grandeur, and

¹ λῆξιν. See on Rom. iii. 11, Hom. VII.
² ἐπιβάτας. Usually soldiers on ship-board; here clearly distinguished from the sailors.

³ Comp. Acts xxvii. 30, 31.

⁴ χρίως: others read χροιώς, "colours," 5 τούς πορφυρίζοντας στρουθούς. Ælian, de Animalibus, iii. 42, mentions a bird called Porphyrio, more esteemed even than the peacock, so that none ever killed it for the table. See also Plin, x, 46, but this expression may apply to various kinds. 6 Ps. ctv. 24.

affected. Why then have "we" not made a same advantage from the creation with themtread the same earth? How comes it that this beauty and magnitude hath not persuaded us to think the same as they do? But this will be evident not from this proof only, but from another besides. For as a proof that it is not for its beauty they have made a deity of it, but by reason of their own folly, why do they adore the ape, the crocodile, the dog, and the vilest of animals? Truly, "they became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened. Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools." 2

answer from these things only, but will also say something yet further. For God, foreseeing these things of old, destroyed, in His wisdom, this plea of theirs. On this account He made the world not only wonderful and vast, but also corruptible and perishable; and placed therein many evidences of its weakness; and what He did with respect to the Apostles,3 He did with respect to the whole world. What then did He with respect to the Apostles? Since they used to perform many great and astonishing signs and wonscourged, to be expelled, to inhabit the dungeon, to encounter bodily infirmities, to be in continual tribulations, lest the greatness of their miracles should make them to be accounted as gods amongst mankind. Therefore when He had bestowed so great favour upon them, He suffered their bodies to be mortal, and in many cases obnoxious to disease; and did not remove their infirmity, that He might give full proof of their nature. And this is not merely my assertion, but that of Paul himself, who says, "For though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me." 4 And again, "But we have this treasure in earthen vesmarvelling at its beauty, we have thought it sels."5 But what is meant by "earthen to be a deity.' But such an argument is good vessels?" In this body, he means, which is for nothing. For that neither the magnitude, mortal and perishable. For just as the nor beauty of the world is the cause of this earthen vessel is formed from clay and fire, impiety, but their own want of understanding, so also the body of these saints being clay, is what we are prepared to show, proved by and receiving the energy of the spiritual fire, the case of ourselves, who have never been so becomes an earthen vessel. But for what reason was it thus constituted, and so great a deity of it? Do we not see it with the same treasure, and such a plentitude of graces eneyes as themselves? Do we not enjoy the trusted to a mortal and corruptible body? "That the excellency of the power may be of selves? Do we not possess the same soul? God, and not of us." For when thou seest Have we not the same body? Do we not the Apostles raising the dead, yet themselves sick, and unable to remove their own infirmities, thou mayest clearly perceive, that the resurrection of the dead man was not effected by the power of him who raised him, but by the energy of the Spirit. For in proof, that they were frequently sick, hear what Paul saith respecting Timothy, "Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine often infirmities."6 And again, of another he saith, "But Trophimus I have left at Miletus sick." And writing to the Philippians, he said, "Epaphroditus was sick nigh unto 7. Nevertheless, we will not frame our death." For if, when this was the case, they accounted them to be gods, and prepared to do sacrifice unto them, saying, "The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men; "9 had such infirmities not existed, to what extent of impiety might not men have proceeded, when they beheld their miracles? As then in this case, because of the greatness of these signs. He suffered their nature to remain in a state of infirmity, and permitted those repeated trials, in order that they might not be thought to be gods, thus likewise He did with respect to the creation, a thing nearly parallel ders, He suffered them constantly to be to this. For He fashioned it beautiful and vast; but on the other hand corruptible.

> 8. And both of these points the Scriptures teach, for one in treating of the beauty of the heavens thus speaks "The heavens declare the glory of God." And again, "Who hath placed the sky as a vault," and spread it out as a tent over the earth." 12 And again, "Who holdeth the circle of heaven." 13 But another writer, shewing that although the world be great and fair, it is yet corruptible, thus speaks; "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the

¹ See the argument of Balhus (the Stoic), Cic. de Nat. Deor. 1, 2, c. 17, 34, &c. Seneca, Nat. Quant, ii. 45, says, that God may likewise be called Mundus, or Fatum, or Providentia, or Natura.

² Rom. i. 21, 22.

³ See Hom. 1, 15.

⁴ 2 Cor. xii, 6

^{5 2} Cor. iv. 7.
6 1 Tim. v. 23. The subject of the first of these Homilies, 7 2 Tim. iv. 20. 8 Phil. ii. 25. 9 Acts xiv. 11.
10 Ps. xix. 1. II The Hebrew 77 means something small or thin, the Vulgate has nihilum. No ancient version has curtain. Perhaps the word is an emphatic allusion to the exquisitely minute consistence of the blue ether. The Hebrews say that by this word is signified the finest dust. In the revised version "gauze" is suggested in the margin.

12 [as. xl. 22.

3] This seems a slip of memory for carth in the same verse; but see Ecclus, xliii. 12.

heavens are the works of Thine hands. They shall perish, but Thou remainest, and they all shall wax old as doth a garment, and as a vesture shalt Thou fold them up, and they shall be changed." And again, David saith of the sun, that "he is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a giant to run his course," 2 Seest thou how he places before thee the beauty of this star, and its greatness? For even as a bridegroom when he appears from some stately chamber,3 so the sun sends forth his rays under the East; and adorning the heaven as it were with a saffron-coloured veil, and making the clouds like roses, and running unimpeded all the day; he meets no obstacle to interrupt his course. Beholdest thou, then, his beauty? Beholdest thou his greatness? Look also at the proof of his weakness! For a certain wise man, to make this plain, said, "What is brighter than the sun, yet the light thereof suffers eclipse." 4 Nor is it only from this circumstance that his infirmity is to be perceived, but also in the concourse of the clouds. Often, at least, when a cloud passes underneath him, though emitting his beams, and endeavouring to pierce through it, he has not strength to do so; the cloud being too dense, and not suffering him to penetrate through it. "He nourishes the seeds, however." 5 replies some one—Yes—still he does not nourish them by himself, but requires the assistance of the earth, and of the dew, and of the rains, and of the winds, and the right distribution of the seasons. And unless all these things concur, the sun's aid is but superfluous. But this would not seem to be like a deity, to stand in need of the assistance of others, for that which he wishes to do; for it is a special attribute of God to want nothing; He Himself at least did not in this manner bring forth the seeds from the ground; He only commanded, and they all shot forth. And again, that thou mayest learn that it is not the nature of the elements, but His command which effects all things; He both brought into being these very elements which before were not; and without the need of any aid, He brought down the manna for the Jews. For it is said, "He gave them bread from heaven."6 But why do I say, that in order to the perfection of fruits, the sun requires the aid of other elements for their sustenance; when he himself requires the assistance of many things for his sustenance, and would not himself be sufficient for himself. For in order that he may proceed on his way, he needs the heaven as a kind of pavement spread out underneath him; and that he may shine, he needs the clearness and rarity of the air; since if even this become unusually dense, he is not able to show his light; and, on the other hand, he requires coolness and moisture, lest his rays should be intolerable to all, and burn up everything. When, therefore, other elements overrule him, and correct his weakness (overrule as for example, clouds, and walls, and certain other bodies that intercept his light: -or correct his excess, as the dews, and fountains, and cool air), how can such a one be a Deity? For God must be independent, and not stand in need of assistance, be the source of all good things to all, and be hindered by nothing; even as Paul, as well as the prophet Isaiah, saith of God; the latter? thus making Him speak in His own Person, "I fill heaven and earth, saith the Lord." And again, "Am I a God nigh at hand, and not a God afar off?"9 And again, David says, "I have said unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord, for Thou hast no need of my good things."10 But Paul, demonstrating this independence of help, and shewing that both these things especially belong to God; to stand in need of nothing, and of Himself to supply all things to all; speaks on this wise, "God that made the heaven, and the earth, and the sea, Himself needeth not any thing, giving to all life and all things."13

3 παστάδος. 6 Ps. Ixxviii. 24. ¹ Ps. cii. 25, 26. 4 Ecclus, xvii. 31. ² Ps. xix. 6. 5 See Plin, ii, 6.

9. It would indeed be easy for us to take a survey of the other elements, the heaven, the air, the earth, the sea, and to shew the imbecility of these, and how each requires the assistance of his neighbour, and without this assistance, is lost and destroyed. For as it regards the earth, if the fountains fail it, and the moisture infused from the sea and the rivers, it quickly perishes by being parched. The remaining elements too stand in need of one another, the air of the sun, as well as the sun of the air. But not to protract this discourse; in what has been said, having given a sufficient supply of reasons to start from for those who are willing to receive them, we shall be content. For if the sun, which is the most surprising part of the whole creation, hath been proved to be so feeble and needy, how much more the other parts of the universe? What then I have advanced (offering these things for the consideration of the studious), I will myself again shew you in discourse from the Scriptures; and prove, that not only the sun, but also the whole universe is thus corruptible. For since the elements are mutually destructive, and when much cold intervenes, it chastens the force of the sun's rays; and on the other hand, the heat prevailing, consumes the cold; and since the elements are both the causes and subjects of contrary qualities, and dispositions, in one another; it is very evident that these things offer a proof of great corruptibility; and of the fact, that all these things which are visible, are a corporeal substance.

⁷ St. Chrysostom here seems to have quoted from memory, and to have mentioned Isaiah in mistake for Jeremiah, where these passages occur, as above.

8 Jer. xxiii. 24. 9 Jer. xxiii. 23. 10 Ps. xvi. 2.

11 Acts xvii. 25. Here also St. Chrysostom quotes from memory, as the first clause shows.

10. But since this subject is too lofty for our simplicity, permit me now to lead you to the sweet fountain of the Scriptures, that we may refresh your ears. For we will not discourse to you of the heaven and the earth separately, but will exhibit the Apostle declaring this very thing to us concerning the whole creation, in these plain terms, that the whole creation is now in bondage to corruption; and why it is thus in bondage, and at what time it shall be delivered from it, and unto what condition it shall be translated. For after he had said, "The sufferings of lapse into the worship of them. this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in let us glorify Him, our Guardian; not only us;" he goes on to add; "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not implied in the expression, "being made subject to vanity." For it was made corruptible by the command of God. But God so commanded it for the sake of our race; for since character; for of course corruptible bodies were not to dwell in an incorruptible creation. But, nevertheless, he tells us, it will not remain so. "The creature also itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption;" and afterwards, for the purpose of shewing when this event shall take place, and through whom, he adds, "Into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." For when we are raised, his meaning is, and assume incorruptible earth, and the whole creation, shall be incorruptible, and imperishable. When, therefore, thou beholdest the sun arising, admire the Creator; when thou beholdest him hiding himself and disappearing, learn the weakness of his nature, that thou mayest not adore him as a Deity! For God hath not only implanted in the nature of the elements this proof of their weakness, but hath also bidden His servants, that were but men, command them; so that although thou shouldest not know their servitude from their aspect, thou mayest learn, from those who have commanded them, that they are all thy fellow-servants. Therefore it was, that Joshua, the son of Nave,3 said, "Let the sun stand still in Gibeon, and the moon over against the valley of Ajalon. And again the prophet Isaiah made the sun to retrace his steps, under the reign of Hezekiah; and Moses gave orders to the air, and the sea, the earth, and the rocks. Elisha changed the nature of the waters; the Three Children triumphed over the fire. seest how God hath provided for us on either hand; leading us by the beauty of the elements to the knowledge of His divinity; and, by their feebleness, not permitting us to by words, but also by deeds; and let us shew forth an excellent conversation, not only in general, but in particular with regard to abstinence from oaths. For not every sin brings willingly, but by reason of Him who hath the same penalty; but those which are easiest subjected the same in hope," But what he to be amended, bring upon us the greatest intends is to this effect; "The creature," punishment: which indeed Solomon intihe says, "was made corruptible;" for this is mated, when he said, "It is not wonderful if any one be taken stealing; for he stealeth that he may satisfy his soul that is hungry; but the adulterer, by the lack of understanding, destroyeth his own soul." 4 But what it was to nurture a corruptible man, it was he means is to this effect. The thief is a necessary itself should also be of the same grievous offender, but not so grievous a one as the adulterer: for the former, though it be a sorry reason for his conduct, yet at the same time has to plead the necessity arising from indigence; but the latter, when no necessity compels him, by his mere madness rushes into the gulph of iniquity. This also

II. For the sake of all these things then, merely their contempt. 12. I know, indeed, that I may seem to be bodies; then also this body of the heaven, the too tedious and burdensome; and that I may be thought to give annoyance by continuing this admonition. But nevertheless, I do not desist, in order that ye may even be shamed by my shamelessness to abstain from the cus-may be said with regard to those who swear.

For they have not any pretext to allege, but

¹ Rom, viii, 21.

² Arives, rendered here erealure, would be in modern English, ereation. "Creature" is used by Wiclif even for the act of creating, Rom, i. 20. "Creation" properly means the act, "creature" evidently from the final n or 1 of the Hebrew, so closely corresponding with the 1 or v.

4 Prov. vi. 30, 32, LXX.

tom of oaths. For if that unmerciful and petition, when I asked so trifling a favour? consented? would ye not have granted my and ever. Amen.

cruel judge, paying respect to the importu- But when it is God who asks this favour, and nity of the widow, changed his custom, much for the sake of yourselves, who are to grant more will ye do this; and especially when he it, and not for Himself, Who is to receive it: who is exhorting you, doth it not for himself, who is there so ungracious, who is there so but for your salvation. Or rather, indeed, I miserable and wretched, that he will not grant cannot deny that I do this for myself; for I this favour to God, when He asks it; and consider your benefit as my own success. especially when he himself who grants it, is But I could wish that you, even as I labour, in future to enjoy the benefit of it? Considand weary myself for your safety, would in ering these things then, repeat over to yourlike manner make your own souls a matter of selves, when ye depart hence, all that has anxiety to vourselves; and then assuredly been said; and correct in every way those this work of reformation would be perfected, who take no heed to it; to the end that we And what need is there to multiply words? may receive the recompense of other men's For if there were no hell, neither punishment good actions, as well as our own, through the for the contumacious, nor reward for the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus obedient; and I had come to you, and asked Christ, by Whom, and with Whom be glory this in the way of a favour, would ye not have to the Father, with the Holy Ghost, for ever

HOMILY XI.

Thanksgiving to God for deliverance from the evils expected owing to the sedition; and recollection of the events which took place at the time. Also against those who find fault with the structure of the human body, and in general concerning the creation of man; and, in conclusion, on success in avoiding oaths.

fits, it is plain that we shall enjoy others also, destruction. which are greater. Let us say, then, contindesire to hear; that we no longer meet one another with agony, trembling, and anxious

1. WHEN I think of the past tempest, and shaken off all our fear. Our condition, inof the present calm, I cease not saying, deed, on former days was nothing better than "Blessed be God, who maketh all things, and that of those who are tossed up and down in changeth them; who hath brought light out the midst of the deep; and expecting shipof darkness; who leadeth to the gates of wreck every hour. We were scared all day hell, and bringeth back; who chastiseth, but long by innumerable rumours, and disturbed killeth not." And this I desire you too to and agitated on every side; and were every repeat constantly, and never to desist. For day busy and curious to know who had come if He hath benefitted us by deeds, what par- from the court?" what news he had brought? don shall we deserve, if we do not requite and whether what was reported was true or Him even by words. Therefore, I exhort false? Our nights too we passed without that we never cease to give Him thanks; sleep, and whilst we looked upon the city, since if we are grateful for the former bene- we wept over it, as if it were on the eve of its

2. For this cause yourselves too kept ually, Blessed be God, who hath permitted us silence on those former days, because the to spread before you in security the accus- whole city was empty, and all had migrated tomed table, whilst He hath also granted you to the deserts, and because those who were to hear our word with assurance of safety! left behind were overshadowed 3 by the cloud Blessed be God, that we no longer run hither of despondency. For the soul when once it flying from the danger without, but only from is filled with despondency, is not apt to hear anything that may be said. For this cause, when the friends of Job came, and saw that thoughts; but with much confidence, having tragedy of his house, and the just man sitting down upon the dunghill, and covered with ing us on by its beauty to admiration of Him sores, they rent their garments, and groaned who framed it; and by its weakness leading and sat down by him in silence; making it us away from the worship of the creature; manifest that nothing is so suitable to the this we may see, take place also in the case afflicted at first, as quiet and silence. For of the body. For with respect to this too the calamity was too great for consolation, there are many among the enemies to the Therefore also the Jews, whilst they were in truth, as well as among those who belong to bondage to work in clay and the brick- our own ranks, who make it a subject of making, when they saw Moses come to them, enquiry, why it was created corruptible and were not able to give heed to his words, by frail? Many also of the Greeks and heretics affliction. And what marvel is it that faint- For they declare it to be unworthy of God's the Disciples also fell into the same infirmity. its sweat, its tears, its labours, and sufferings, took them apart and discoursed with them, for my part, when such things are talked of, the disciples at first asked Him more than I would first make this reply. Tell me not of once, "Whither goest Thou?" But when man, fallen, degraded and condemned. But and the persecutions, and the universal Paradise, and survey the Man that was enmity, the stripes, the prisons, the tribunals, created at the beginning. For that body with the sadness of these approaching events, was free from all corruption. Labour did Christ, therefore, perceiving their conster- did not conspire against it; nor sorrows beshould seek a fit season, so that he may address his discourse to an auditor well affected, and free from all care and despondency; which accordingly we have done.

¹ Amos v. 8; Job xxxvii. 15; 1 Sam. ii. 6; 2 Cor. vi. 19.

² Literally "camp," στρατοπέδου. 3 Sav. ἐσκοτῶσθαι. Ben, κεκακῶσθαι, "were distressed."

3. Inasmuch, then, as ye have now shaken off despondency, we are desirous to recall you to the recollection of former matters; so that our discourse may be rendered the clearer to you. For what we said of the creation, that God not only made it beautiful, and wonderful, and vast, but also weak and corruptible; and moreover that He hath established divers proofs of this; ordering both these circumstances for our advantage; lead-

reason of their failure of spirit, and their affirm, that it was not even created by God." hearted men have felt this, when we find that creative art, and enlarge upon its impurities, For after that mystic Supper, when Christ and all the other incidents of the body. But, He had told them what evils they should in a if thou wouldest learn what manner of body little while afterwards encounter, the wars, God formed us with at the first, let us go to the appearance before magistrates; then, their was not thus corruptible and mortal; but like souls oppressed as by a heavy burthen with as some statue of gold just brought from the the dread of the things He had spoken, and furnace, that shines splendidly, so that frame remained henceforth in a state of stupor, not trouble it, nor sweat deface it. Cares nation, reproved it by saying, "I go to siege it; nor was there any other affection of My Father, and no one among you asketh that kind to distress it. But when man did Me, Whither goest Thou? But because I not bear his felicity with moderation, but have said these things unto you, sorrow threw contempt upon his Benefactor, and hath filled your hearts." For this reason thought a deceiving demon more worthy of also we were silent for some time past, await- credit than God who cared for him, and who ing the present opportunity. For if a person had raised him to honour, and when he exwho is about to ask a favour of any one, pected to become himself a god, and conthough the request be a reasonable one, waits ceived thoughts above his proper dignity, a fitting occasion to propose it, that he may then, -then indeed it was that God, to humfind him who is to grant the petition in a ble him by decisive acts, made him mortal, mild and well-disposed frame of mind; and as well as corruptible; and fettered him with that receiving assistance from the favourable such varied necessities; not from hatred or opportunity, he may obtain the benefit; how aversion, but in care for him, and to repress much rather is it necessary that the speaker at the very outset that evil and destructive pride; and instead of permitting it to proceed any further, He admonished him by actual experience, that he was mortal and corruptible; thus to convince him that he must never again think or dream of such things as he had done. For the devil's suggestion, was, "Ye shall be as gods." 3 Desiring then utterly to eradicate this idea, God made the body subject to much suffering and disease; to instruct him by its very nature that he must never again entertain such a thought. And that this is true, is really most evident from what befel him; for after such an expectation, he was condemned to this punishment. Consider also with me the wisdom ' of God in this matter. He did not allow him to be the first to die, but permitted his son to suffer this death; in order that seeing before his eves the body corrupting and decaying, he might receive a striking lesson of wisdom 2 from that spectacle; and learn what had come to pass, and be duly chastened before he departed hence.

² Plato, in his Timœus, 40, d. 42 e., makes the human body the work of (x00d) demons, or created gods, because it would have been of a more perfect nature if the Supreme God had made st. Rom, viii, 2-y, Hom. XIII. Valentinus, Marcion, Rasilides, and other early hereties of the Gnostic school, held matter to be evil, and the world made by evil beings.
3 Gen. iii. 5. ¹ Or, "had" (λαβῶν, which may refer to Judas' going out). John xiii. 31. For it is plain they did not go out until the end of the discourse. John xviii. 1.

4. Really then, as I said, this point is apparent from what has already taken place; but it will be made no less clear from what yet remains to be stated. For if whilst we are fettered with such necessities of the body; and whilst it is the lot of all men to die, to suffer corruption, to moulder in the sight of all, and to dissolve into dust, so that the Gentile philosophers made one and the same comprehensive definition of the human race (for when asked what man was, they answered, he is an animal, rational and mortal); if, forsooth, whilst all admitted this. there were some who dared in the opinion of the multitude to immortalize themselves; and notwithstanding that the very sense of sight bore witness to their mortality, were ambitious to be called gods, and were honoured as such; to what a length of impiety would not many men have proceeded, if death had not gone on teaching all men the mortality and corruptibility of our nature? Hear, for instance, what the prophet says of a barbarian king, when seized with this frenzy. "I will exalt, saith he, "my throne above the stars of heaven; and I will be like unto the Most High."3 Afterwards, deriding him, and speaking of his death, he says, "Corruption is under thee, and the worm is thy covering; "4 but his meaning is, "Dost thou dare, O man, whom such an end is awaiting, to entertain such imaginations?" Again, of another, I mean the king of the Tyrians, when he conceived the like aims, and was ambitious to be considered as a God, he says, "Thou art not a God, but a man, and they that pierce thee shall say so."5 Thus God, in making this body of ours as it is, hath from the beginning utterly taken away all occasion of idolatry.

5. But why dost thou marvel if this hath happened in respect to the body, when even with respect to the soul it is plain, that a similar thing hath taken place. For God made it not mortal, but permitted it to be immortal; He constituted it however subject to forgetfulness, to ignorance, to sadness, and to care; and this, lest regarding its own nobility of birth, it might take up a conceit too high for its proper dignity. For if, even while the case stands thus, some have dared to aver, that it is of the Divine essence; to what a pitch of frenzy would they not have reached, if it had been devoid of these imperfections? What, however, I affirmed respecting the creation, I affirm also respecting the body, that both these things alike excite my admiration of God; that He hath made it corruptible; and that in its very corruptibility, He hath manifested His own power and wisdom. For that He could have made it of some better material, He hath evidenced from the celestial and the solar substance. For He that made those such as they are, could have made this also like them, had He thought proper to do so. But the cause of its imperfection is what I before adverted to. This circumstance by no means lowers the admiration due to the Creator's workmanship, but rather increases it; for the meanness of the substance, manifests the resource and adaptiveness of His art; since He hath introduced such a harmony of parts in clay and ashes, and senses so various and manifold and capable of such spiritual wisdom.

6. In proportion, therefore, as thou findest fault with the meanness of the substance, be so much the more astonished at the greatness of the art displayed. For this reason also, I do not so much admire the statuary who forms a beautiful figure out of gold, as him who, by the resources of art, is able, even in crumbling clay, to exhibit a marvellous and inimitable mould of beauty. In the former case, the material gives some aid to the artist, but in the latter, there is a naked display of his art. Wouldest thou learn then, how great the wisdom of the Creator is, consider what it is that is made out of clay? What else is there but brick and tile? Nevertheless, God, the Supreme Artist, from the same material of which only the brick and tile is formed, hath been able to make an eye so beautiful, as to astonish all who behold it, and to implant in it such power, that it can at once survey the high aerial expanse, and by the aid of a small pupil embrace the mountains, forests, hills, the ocean, yea, the heaven, by so small a thing! Tell me not then of tears and rheums, for these things are the fruit of thy sin; but consider its beauty, and visual power; and how it is that whilst it ranges over such an expanse of air, it experiences no weariness or distress! The feet indeed become tired and weakened even after going but a small distance; but the eye, in travers-

⁴ Isa. xiv. 11.

² φιλοσοφία. 5 Ezek, xxviii, q.

³ Isa. xiv. 13, 14.

ing a space so lofty and so wide, is not sensi- one, but also a second; the former being ble of any infirmity. For since this is the spread out on the under side of the skull, but most necessary to us of all our members, He has not suffered it to be oppressed with fatigue; in order that the service it renders us might be free and unfettered.

7. But rather, I should say, what language is fully adequate to set forth the whole excellency of this member? And why do I speak of the pupil and the visual faculty? for if you were to investigate that which seems the meanest of all the members, I mean the eyelashes, you would behold even in these the manifold wisdom of God the Creator! For as it is with respect to the ears of corn; the beards, standing forth as a sort of spears, repel the birds, and do not suffer them to settle upon the fruits, and to break the stalk, which is too tender to bear them; so also is it with regard to the eyes. The hairs of the eyelids are ranged in front, and answer the purpose of beards and spears; keeping dust and light substances at a distance from the eyes, and any thing that might incommode the sight; and not permitting the eyelids to be annoyed. Another instance of wisdom, no less remarkable, is to be observed in evebrows. Who can help being struck by their position? For they do not project to an immoderate degree, so as to obscure the sight; nor do they retire farther back than is fitting; but in the same manner as the eaves of a house, they stand out above, receiving the perspiration as it descends from the forehead, and not permitting it to annoy the eyes. For this purpose too there is a growth of hair upon them, which serves by its roughness to stay what descends from above, and affords the exact protection that is needed, and contributes also much appearance of beauty to the eyes. Nor is this the only matter of wonder! There is another thing also which is equally so. How is it, I ask, that the hairs of the head increase, and are cut off; but those of the eyebrows, not so? For not even this has happened undesignedly, or by chance, but in order that they might not darken the sight too much by becoming very long; an inconvenience from which those suffer who have arrived at extreme old age.

8. And who could possibly trace out all the wisdom which is manifested by means of the brain! For, in the first place, He made it soft, since it serves as a fountain to all the senses. Next, in order that it might not suffer injury owing to its peculiar nature, He fortified it on every side with bones. Further; that it might not suffer from friction, by the hardness of the bones, He interposed a middle membrane; and not only a single

the latter enveloping the upper substance of the brain, and the first being the harder of the two. And this was done, both for the cause that has been mentioned, and in order that the brain might not be the first to receive the blows inflicted upon the head; but that these membranes first encountering them, might free it from all injury, and preserve it unwounded. Moreover, that the bone which covers the brain is not a single and continuous one, but has many sutures on every side, is a circumstance which contributes much to its security. For a ventilation of the vapours that surround it may easily take place outward through these sutures, so as to prevent it from being suffocated; and if a blow should be inflicted upon it, on any particular point, the damage does not extend to the whole. For if the bone had been one and continuous, the stroke even when it fell upon one part, only, would have injured the whole; but now, by its being divided into many parts, this can never happen. For if one part should chance to be wounded, only the bone that is situated near that part receives injury, but all the rest remain unhurt; the continuity of the stroke being intercepted by the division of the bones, and being unable to extend itself to the adjacent parts. By reason of this God hath constructed a covering for the brain of many bones; and just as when one builds a house, he lays on a roof, and tiles upon the upper part, so God hath placed these bones above upon the head, and hath provided that the hairs should shoot forth, and serve as a kind of cap for it.

9. The very same thing also He hath done with regard to the heart. For inasmuch as the heart has preeminence over all the members in our body, and that the supreme power over our whole life is entrusted to it, and death happens when it receives but a slight blow; He hath fenced it about on every side with stiff and hard bones, surrounding it by the protection of the breast-bone 2 before, and the blade-bones 3 behind. And what He did with respect to the membranes of the brain, He hath done in this instance also. For in order that it might not be rubbed and pained in striking against the hard bones which encompass it, in the throbbing and quick pulsation to which it is subject in anger and similar affections, He both interposed many membranes there, and placed the lungs by the side of it to act the part of a soft bed to these pulsations, so that the heart may break its force on these without sustaining injury or distress.

¹ This is an unfounded notion. What follows is true, since a fracture usually stops at a suture (or joining) of the skull, as a crack in glass does at a cross cut of the diamond. *σ βράγμα, above, is strictly the parietal bone. See also Hom. V. fin, on kp. to Heb. ² δώρακος.

But why do I speak of the heart, and of the brain, when if any one will investigate even the very nails, he will see the manifold wisdom of God displayed in these; as well by their form, as by their substance and position. I might also have mentioned why our fingers are not all equal, and many other particulars besides; but to those who are inclined to attend, the wisdom of God Who created us, will be sufficiently clear from what has been said. Wherefore, leaving this department to be investigated with diligence by those who are desirous of the task, I shall turn myself to another objection.

10. There are many forsooth, who, besides what has been already referred to, bring forward this objection. If man be the king of the brutes, why have many animals an advantage over him in strength, agility, and fleetness? For the horse is swifter, the ox is to reply to this argument? Thus much; that from that circumstance we may especially discern the wisdom of God and the honour which He has put upon us. A horse, it is true, is swifter than man, but for making than the horse. For a horse, though the very swiftest and strongest that may be, can scarcely travel two hundred stadia in a day; " but a man, harnessing a number of horses in succession, will be able to accomplish a distance of two thousand stadia. Thus, the advantage which swiftness affords to the horse, intelligence and art afford to the man in a much greater excess. The man, it is true, he has those of the other which serve him as well as his own. For not one of the brutes has ever been able to subjugate another to his own use; but man has the range of them all; and by that variety of skill which is given him of God, makes each of the animals subservient to the employment best suited to him. For if the feet of men had been as strong as those of horses, they would have been useless for other purposes, for difficult ground, for the summits of mountains, for climbing trees; for the hoof is usually an impediment to treading in such places. So that although the feet of men are softer than theirs, they are still adapted to more various uses, and are not the worse for their want of strength, while they have the power of the horse ministering to their aid, and at the same time they have the advantage over him in variety of tread. Again, the eagle has his light pinion; but I have reason and art, by which I am enabled to bring down and master all the winged animals. But if thou wouldest see my pinion too, I have one much lighter than he; one which can soar, not merely ten or twenty stadia, or even as high as heaven, but above heaven itself, and above the heaven of heavens; even to "where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God !"2

11. Again, the irrational animals have their weapons in their own body; thus, the ox has his horns; the wild boar his tusks; the lion his claws. But God hath not furnished the nature of my body with weapons, but hath made these to be extraneous to it, for the purpose of shewing that man is a gentle animal; and that I have not always occasion to use my weapons, for from time to time I lay more enduring, the eagle is lighter, and the these aside, and from time to time resume lion stronger, than man. What then have we them. In order then that I might be free and unfettered in this matter, not being at all times compelled to carry my weapons, He hath made these to be separate from my nature. For it is not only in our possessing a rational nature that we surpass the brutes, dispatch on a journey, the man is better fitted but we also excel them in body. For God has made this to correspond with the soul's nobility, and fitted to excute its commands. He has not, indeed, made the body such as it is, without reason; but such as it ought to be, as having to minister to a rational soul; so that if it were not such as it is, the operations of the soul would be greatly impeded: and this is manifest from diseases. this nice adjustment of the body be diverted has not feet so strong as the other, but then from its proper condition in ever so small a degree, many of the soul's energies are impeded; as, for instance, if the brain should become too hot, or too cold. So that from the body it is easy to see much of the Divine Providence, not only because He made it at first better than it is at present; nor because even now He hath changed it for a useful purpose, but also because He will raise it again to much greater glory.

12. But, if thou art desirous to learn in a different way what wisdom God hath shewn respecting the body, I will mention that by which Paul seems most especially to be constantly struck. But what is this? That He

^{*} He must mean for a continuance, as the stadium was rather less than our furlong. The word harnessing, brogérêa, seems to imply a vehicle. It is very likely that the persons mentioned had not the advantage of relays of draught horses. Some read here "a thousand," for "two thousand?" see note of Duczeus.

² Col. iii. 1. So again Hom, XV. (3). Compare the lines in one of Wesley's hymns, "And on the eagle wings of love, To joys celestial rise."

hath made the members to excel one another, der care that for the benefit of the soul He though not in the same things? Some He hath made it corruptible, that He might rehath appointed to surpass the rest in beauty, press her vanity, and subdue her pride! and some in strength. Thus, the eye is Why then did He not make it thus from the beautiful, but the feet are stronger. The beginning, asks some one? It was, I reply, head is honourable, but it cannot say to the to justify Himself before thee by these very feet, "I have no need of you," And this works; and as much as to say by the result may be seen too with regard to irrational itself, "I called thee to greater honour, but animals; and the same in all the relations of thou didst constitute thyself unworthy of life. The king, for instance, has need of his the gift, banishing thyself from Paradise! subjects, and the subjects of the king; just Nevertheless, I will not even now despise as the head has need of the feet. And again, thee, but I will correct thy sin, and bring thee as to brutes; some are more powerful than back 3 to heaven. Therefore for thine own the rest; and some more beautiful. Some sake, I have permitted thee so long to decay there are that delight us; some that nourish; and suffer corruption, that in the fulness of and some that clothe us. Thus the peacock time the discipline of thy humility might be delights; and fowls and swine nourish; sheep established; and that thou mightest never and goats provide us clothing; and the ox and ass share our labours. There are also others which provide us with none of these, but which call our powers into active exercise. Thus the wild animals increase the strength of the hunters; and instruct our race by the and as regards the commandment which I so fear which they inspire, and render us more frequently discourse of to you, let us use our cautious; and for medical purposes, they utmost diligence! For I will not desist from supply no small contributions from their the exhortation until ye are amended: seeing bodies.2 So that if any one say to thee, "How art thou a lord of the brutes, whilst afraid of the lion?" Answer him, "Things were not ordered in this manner at the beginning, when I was in favour with God, when I dwelt in Paradise. But when I had offended debate, to what purpose do ye fast for me?"4 my Master, I fell under the power of those who were my servants! Yet not even now entirely; since I possess an art by which I fast? For how shall we behold the sacred overcome the wild animals." So also it hap- Passover? How shall we receive the holy yet under age, are afraid of many of the servants; but when they have done amiss, their dread is greatly heightened. And this we may say also of serpents, and scorpions, and vipers; that they are formidable to us by reason of sin.

13. And not only as it regards our body, and the various states of life, is this diversity observable; nor is it confined to brutes; but it may be seen also in trees; and the meanest of them may be observed to have an excellence above those which are greater; so that all things are not alike in all, that all may be necessary to us; and that we may perceive the manifold wisdom of the Lord, Do not then lay blame on God on account of the body's corruptibleness, but for this the rather do Him homage, and admire Him for His wisdom and His tender care; His wisdom, that in so corruptible a body He hath been able to display such harmony; His ten-more resume thy former conceit.

14. For all these things then let us give thanks to God who loveth man; and for His tender care over us, render Him a recompense, that will also be profitable to ourselves; that what we aim at is not that we may address you seldom or frequently, but that we may continue speaking till we have persuaded you. To the Jews when God said by the prophet, "If ye fast for strife and And by us He saith to you, "If ye fast unto oaths and perjuries, to what purpose do ye pens in great houses; the sons, while they are Sacrifice? How shall we be partakers of those wonderful mysteries by means of the same tongue with which we have trampled upon God's law, the same tongue with which we have contaminated the soul? For if no one would dare to receive the royal purple with filthy hands, how shall we receive the Lord's Body with a tongue that has become polluted! For the oath is of the wicked one, but the Sacrifice is of the Lord. communion then hath light with darkness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial?"5

15. That ye are desirous, indeed, to be rid of this impiety, I know well; but since each man may not be able easily to accomplish this by himself, let us enter into fraternities and partnerships in this matter; and as the poor do in their feasts,6 when each one alone would not be able to furnish a complete banquet; when they all meet together, they each

³ Or, take thee up.

⁴ Isa, Iviii. 4, 5.

⁵² Cor, vi. 14, 15, 6 See on Rom, xiii. 14, Hom, XXIV., where St. Chrysostom recommends sober conversation at such meetings.

bring their contribution to the feast; so also guardianship of ourselves to them; and let us let us act. Inasmuch as we are of ourselves engage in this pious rivalry, to the end that too listless, let us make partnerships with thus becoming superior to such an evil habit, each other, and pledge ourselves to contribute we may come with boldness to this holy feast; counsel, and admonition, and exhortation, and be partakers of the holy Sacrifice, with a and rebuke and reminiscence, and threatening; in order that from the diligence of each through the grace and lovingkindness of our we may all be amended. For seeing that we Lord Jesus Christ, by whom and with whom, observe the affairs of our neighbour more be glory to the Father, with the Holy Spirit, sharply than we do our own, let us be watch- for ever and ever. Amen. ful of the safety of others, and commit the

HOMILY XII.

Thanksgiving to God for the pardon granted to the offenders against the Emperor. Physical discourse on the Creation. Proof that God, in creating man, implanted in him a natural law. Duty of avoiding oaths with the utmost diligence.

them to disappear; not indeed that we may jurious." 3 "Let the life of the servant," grieve, but that we may give thanks. For if saith he, "be openly exposed, so that the the memory of these terrors abide with us, lovingkindness of the Master be apparent, we shall never be overtaken by the actual For although I have received the remission experience of such terrors. For what need of sins, I do not reject the memory of those have we of the experience, whilst our memory sins." And this not only manifested the less when these are passed away. Then, when thou seest out of what he came to be when we were sad, He consoled us, let us what he was, then thou wilt commend him the forsake us; therefore let us not betray ourselves in prosperity by declining into sloth. "Forget not," saith one, "the time of famine in the day of plenty." Therefore let us be mindful of the time of temptation in the day of relief; and with respect to our sins let us also act in the same manner. If thou hast sinned, and God hath pardoned thy sin, receive thy pardon, and give thanks; but be not forgetful of the sin; not that thou shouldest fret thyself with the thought of it, but that thou mayest school thy soul, not to grow wanton, and relapse again into the same snares.2

I. YESTERDAY I said "Blessed be God!" | 2, Thus also Paul did; for having said, and to-day again I say the very same thing. "He counted me faithful, putting me into For although the evils we dreaded have passed the ministry," he goes on to add, "who was away, we should not suffer the memory of before a blasphemer, a persecutor, and inacts the part of a monitor? Seeing then that lovingkindness of the Lord, but made the God hath not permitted us to be overwhelmed man himself the more illustrious. For when in the flood of those troubles when upon us, thou hast learnt who he was before, then thou let us not permit ourselves to become care- wilt be the more astonished at him; and give thanks to Him now that we are joyful, more; and if thou hast greatly sinned, yet In our agony He comforted us, and did not upon being changed thou wilt conceive favourable hopes from this instance. For in addition to what has been said, such an example comforts those who are in despair, and causes them again to stand erect. The same thing also will be the case with regard to our city; for all the events that have happened serve to shew your virtue, who by means of repentance have prevailed to ward off such wrath, whilst at the same time they proclaim the lovingkindness of God, who has removed the cloud that was so threatening, in consequence of a small change of conduct, and so raises up again all those who are sunk in despair, when they learn, from our case, that he who looks upward for the Divine help, is waves should encompass him on all sides.

Ecclus. xviii. 25.

3. For who hath seen, who hath ever heard of sufferings such as were ours? We were every day in expectation that our city would be overturned from its foundations together with its inhabitants. But when the Devil was hoping to sink the vessel, then God produced a perfect calm. Let us not then be unmindful of the greatness of these terrors, in order that we may remember the magnitude of the benefits received from God. He who knows not the nature of the disease will not understand the physician's art. Let us tel! these things also to our children; and transmit them to the remotest generations, pelled with much speed the peril it had been placed in. For even through the past week we were all expecting that our substance would be confiscated; and that soldiers would have been let loose upon us; and we were dreaming of a thousand other horrors. But lo! all these things have passed away, even like a cloud or a flitting shadow; and we have been punished only in the expectation of what is dreadful; or rather we have not been punished, but we have been disciplined, and have become better; God having softened the heart of the Emperor. Let us then always and every day say, "Blessed be God!" and with greater zeal let us give heed to our assembling, and let us hasten to the church, from whence we have reaped this benefit. For ye know whither ye fled at the first; whither ye flocked together; and from what quarter our safety came. Let us then hold fast by this sacred anchor; and as in the season of danger it did not betray us, so now let us not leave it in the season of relief; but let us await with exact attention the stated assemblies and prayers; and let us every day give a hearing to the divine oracles. And the leisure which we spent in busily running about after those who came from the court," whilst we were labouring under anxiety in respect to the evils that threatened us; this let us consume wholly in hearing the divine laws, instead of unseasonable and senseless pastimes; lest we should again reduce ourselves to the necessity of that sort of occupation.2

4. On the three foregoing days, then, we not to be overwhelmed, though innumerable have investigated one method of acquiring the knowledge of God, and have brought it to a conclusion; explaining how "the heavens declare the glory of God;" and what the meaning of that is, which is said by Paul; viz. "That the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." And we shewed how from the creation of the world, and how by heaven, and earth, the sea, the Creator is glorified. But to-day, after briefly philosophising on that same subject, we will proceed to another topic. For He not only made it,5 but provided also that when it was made, it should carry on its operations; not permitting it to that all may learn how the Devil had endeav- be all immoveable, nor commanding it to be oured to destroy the very foundation of the all in a state of motion. The heaven, for incity; and how God was able visibly to raise stance, hath remained immoveable, accordit up again, when it was fallen and prostrate; ing as the prophet says, "He placed the and did not permit even the least injury to heaven as a vault, and stretched it out as a befall it, but took away the fear; and dis- tent over the earth." 6 But, on the other hand, the sun with the rest of the stars, runs on his course through every day.7 And again, the earth is fixed, but the waters are continually in motion; and not the waters only, but the clouds, and the frequent and successive showers, which return at their proper season. The nature of the clouds is one, but the things which are produced out of them are different. For the rain, indeed, becomes wine in the grape, but oil in the olive. And in other plants is changed into their juices; and the womb of the earth is one, and yet bears different fruits. The heat, too, of the sun-beams is one, but it ripens all things differently; bringing some to maturity more slowly, and others more quickly. Who then but must feel astonishment and admiration at these things?

5. Nay, this is not the only wonder, that He hath formed it with this great variety and diversity; but farther, that He hath spread it before all in common; the rich and the poor, sinners as well as the righteous. Even as Christ also declared: "He maketh His sun to rise upon the evil and the good, and sendeth His rain upon the just and unjust."8 Moreover, when He stocked the world with various animals, and implanted divers dispositions in the creatures, He commanded us to imitate some of these, and to avoid others, For example; the ant is industrious, and per-

8 Matt. v. 45.

¹ στρατοπέδον.
² That is, of being busy about the news from the court and the Emperor, upon which the fate of the city depended.

⁵ αὐτην, i. ε., την κτίσιν, the Creation. 6 Isa. xl. 42.
7 Hom. IX. (3) (4), and notes. St. Chrys. on Hebr viii. 1, Hom. XIV. (1), denies that the Heaven is either moveable or spherical. Plato, and most others, thought that the fixed stars moved with the whole solid firmament, but Philoponus argues that a sphere moving round its axis has motion of translation, and may be called fixed. See Mont, pref. to Cosmas Ægypt., in Coll. Nov. Patr. t. ii.

thou wilt receive the strongest admonition advantage that may be gained from irrational from this animal not to indulge in sloth, nor creatures for the correction of manners. to shun labour and toil. Therefore also the Scripture has sent the sluggard to the ant, saying, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, emulate his ways, and be wiser than he." Art dom. Consider then how prudent the ant is, is devoid of shame. Hate, therefore, this and consider how God hath implanted in so kind of wickedness. The fox also is crafty, a lesson of neatness, industry, and social ing that which is useful, leaves the rest; so concord! For it is not more for herself also do thou; and whilst surveying the whole the bee is more honoured than the other animals; not because she labours, but because she labours for others? For the spider also labours, and toils, and spreads out his fine textures over the walls, surpassing the utmost skill of woman; but the creature is without estimation, since his work is in no way profitable to us; such are they that labour and toil, but for themselves! Imitate too the simplicity of the dove! Imitate the ass in his love to his master, and the ox also! Imitate the birds in their freedom from forms a laborious task. By giving heed then, anxiety! For great, great indeed is the

6. From these animals Christ also instructs us, when He says, "Be ye wise as serpents. and harmless as doves."5 And again: "Behold the fowls of the air, for they sow not, thou unwilling, he means, to learn from the neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; Scriptures, that it is good to labour, and that yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." he who will not work, neither ought he to The prophet also, to shame the ungrateful eat? learn it from the irrationals! This Jews, thus speaks; "The ox knoweth his also we do in our families, when those who owner, and the ass his master's crib; but are older, and who are considered superior, Israel doth not know me." And again; have done amiss, we bid them to attend to "The turtle and the swallow and the crane thoughtful children. We say, "Mark such observe the time of their coming, but my an one, who is less than you, how earnest people knoweth not the judgment of the Lord and watchful he is." Do thou then likewise his God." From these animals, and such receive from this animal the best exhortation as these, learn to achieve virtue, and be into industry; and marvel at thy Lord, not structed to avoid wickedness by the contrary only because He hath made heaven and the ones. For as the bee followeth good, so the sun, but because He hath also made the ant. asp is destructive. Therefore shun wicked-For although the animal be small, it affords ness, lest thou hear it said, "The poison of much proof of the greatness of God's wis- asps is under their lips." Again, the dog small a body, such an unceasing desire of and fraudulent. Emulate not this vice; but working! But whilst from this animal thou as the bee, in flying over the meadows, does learnest industry; take from the bee at once not choose every sort of flower; 10 but selectthan for us, that the bee labours, and toils race of irrational animals, if any thing profitevery day; which is indeed a thing especially able may be drawn from these, accept it; the proper for a Christian; not to seek his own advantages which they have naturally, make things, but the things of others. As then it thy business to practise of thine own free she traverses all the meadows that she may choice. For in this respect also thou hast prepare a banquet for another, so also, O been honoured of God; that what they have man, do thou likewise; and if thou hast as natural advantages He hath permitted thee accumulated wealth, expend it upon others; to achieve of thy own free choice, in order if thou hast the faculty of teaching, 4 do not that thou mayest also receive a reward. For bury the talent, but bring it out publicly for good works with them spring not from free the sake of those who need it! Or if thou will, and reason, but from nature only. In hast any other advantage, become useful to other words, the bee makes honey, not bethose who require the benefit of thy labours ! cause it has learnt this by reason and reflec-Seest thou not that for this reason, especially, tion, but because it is instructed by nature. Because if the work had not been natural. and allotted to the race, some of them assuredly would have been unskilled in their art; whereas from the time that the world was first made, even to the present day, no one hath observed bees resting from labour, and not making honey. For such natural characteristics are common to the whole race. But those things which depend on our free choice are not common; for labour is necessary that they may be accomplished.

7. Take then all the best things, and clothe thyself with them; for thou art indeed king of the irrationals; but kings, if there be any

¹ Prov. vi. 6.
² 2 Thess. iii, 10.
³ 2 See Wordsworth's Vernal Ode, Poems, vol. 3. He however only speaks of her as 'a statist prudent to confer—upon the public weal.'
⁴ Δόγους διδασκαλίαs, v. 1 Tim. v. 17, Rom. xii, 7.

⁵ Matt. x. 16. 8 Jer. vi:i. 7.

⁶ Matt. vi. 26.

⁷ Isa. i. 3.

be it gold or silver, or precious stones, or made both alike profitably; and hath revealed sumptuous vestments, usually possess the some things, but hidden others, providing for same in greater abundance. From the crea- thy safety. tion also, learn to admire thy Lord! And if God; that He hath neither made all things such a disquisition. manifest to thee, nor permitted all things to greater part of His works are done in secret."2 speaks for the purpose of consoling the man who is sad and vexed, because he does not know all things; for even those things he observes, which thou art permitted to know, greatly surpass thine understanding; for thou couldest not have found them by thyself, but thou hast been taught them of God. Wherefore be content with the wealth given thee, and do not seek more; but for what thou hast received give thanks; and do not be angry on account of those things which thou hast not received. And, for what thou knowest, give glory, and do not stumble at those things of thing excellent possessed by their subjects, which thou art ignorant. For God hath

8. One mode, then, of knowing God, is any of the things thou seest exceed thy com- that by the creation, which I have spoken of, prehension, and thou art not able to find the and which might occupy many days. For reason thereof, yet for this glorify the Crea- in order that we might go over the formation tor, that the wisdom of these works surpasses of man only with exactness, (and I speak of thine understanding. Say not, wherefore is exactness such as is possible to us, not of this? or, to what end? for everything is use- real exactness; since many as are the reasons ful, even if we know not the reason of it, we have already given for the works of crea-As therefore, if thou goest into a surgery, tion, many more of these there are, ineffable, and seest many instruments lying before which God who made them knoweth, for of thee, thou wonderest at the variety of the course we do not know them all); in order implements though ignorant of their use; so then, I say, that we might take an exact suralso act with respect to the creation. Al- vey of the whole modelling of man; and that though thou seest many of the animals, and we might discover the skill there is in every of the herbs, and plants, and other things, of member; and examine the distribution and which thou knowest not the use, admire the situation of the sinews, the veins, and the variety of these; and feel astonishment for arteries, and the moulding of every other this reason at the perfect workmanship of part; not even a whole year would suffice for

9. For this reason, here dismissing this be unknown. For He hath not permitted all subject; and having given to the laborious things to be unknown, lest thou shouldest and studious an opportunity, by what has say, that the things that exist are not of prov- been said, of going over likewise the other idence. He hath not permitted all things to parts of Creation; we shall now direct our be known to thee, lest the greatness of thy discourse to another point which is itself also knowledge should excite thee to pride. Thus demonstrative of God's providence. What at least it was that the evil demon precipithen is this second point? It is, that when tated the first man headlong and by means God formed man, he implanted within him of the hope of greater knowledge, deprived from the beginning a natural law. And what him of that he already possessed. Therefore then was this natural law? He gave utterance also, a certain wise man exhorts, saying, to conscience within us; and made the knowl-"Seek not out the things that are too hard edge of good things, and of those which are for thee; neither search the things that are the contrary, to be self-taught. For we have too deep for thee. But what is commanded no need to learn that fornication is an evil thee, think thereupon with reverence; for the thing, and that chastity is a good thing, but we know this from the first. And that you And again; "More things are shewed unto may learn that we know this from the first, thee than men understand." But this he the Lawgiver, when He afterwards gave laws, and said, "Thou shalt not kill," did not add, "since murder is an evil thing," but simply said, "Thou shalt not kill;" for He merely prohibited the sin, without teaching. How was it then when He said, "Thou shalt not kill," that He did not add, "because murder is a wicked thing." The reason was, that conscience had taught this beforehand; and He speaks thus, as to those who know and understand the point. Wherefore when He speaks to us of another commandment, not known to us by the dictate of conscience, He not only prohibits, but adds the reason. When, for instance, He gave commandment respecting the Sabbath; "On the seventh day thou shalt do no work;" He subjoined also the reason for this cessation. What was this? "Because on the seventh day God rested from all His works which He had begun to make." And again; "Because thou wert a servant in the land of Egypt." 2 For what purpose then I ask did He add a reason respecting the Sabbath, but did no such thing in regard to murder? Because this commandment was not one of the leading the same proceeding is observable. For, in ones. It was not one of those which were accurately defined of our conscience, but a kind of partial and temporary one; and for this reason it was abolished afterwards.3 But those which are necessary and uphold our life, are the following; "Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not commit adultery; Thou shalt not steal." On this account then He adds no reason in this case, nor enters into any instruction on the matter, but is content with the bare prohibition.

¹ έξετροχήλισεν (a word used of a horse who throws the rider over his head), lit. brake the neck of, but the word is generally used of overthrowing by treachery. St. Chrysostom also uses it of ele-vating with pride, which may be intended here. As Hom. XIII. in Heb. v. fin.

2 Ecclus. iii. 21, 22, 23.

³ He seems to mean the Divine Lawgiver. See Hom. de Panit. VI. (4), where he speaks of the "One Law-giver of the two Covenants," and so on Ps. xlvi. (al. xlvii.) (5), Ben. t. 5, p. 196; A. in Matt. Hom. XVI. Ben. t. 7, p. 213, B. 4 Exod. xx. 13.

10. And not only from thence, but from another consideration also, I will endeavour to shew you how man was self-taught with respect to the knowledge of virtue. Adam sinned the first sin; and after the sin straightway hid himself; but if he had not known he had been doing something wrong, why did he hide himself? For then there were neither letters, nor law, nor Moses. Whence then doth he recognise the sin, and hide himself? Yet not only does he so hide himself, but when called to account, he endeavours to lay the blame on another, saying, "The woman, whom Thou gavest me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." And that woman again transfers the accusation to another, viz. the serpent. Observe also the wisdom of God; for when Adam said, "I heard Thy voice, and I was afraid, for I was naked, and I hid myself," 4 God does not at once convict him of what he had done, nor say, "Why hast thou eaten of the tree?" But how? "Who told thee," He asks, "that thou wast naked, unless thou hast eaten of that Tree of which alone I commanded thee not to eat?" He did not keep silence, nor did He openly convict him. He did not keep silence, that He might call him forth to the confession of his crime. He did not convict him openly, lest the whole might come from Himself, and the man should so be deprived of that pardon which is granted us from confession.5 Therefore he did not declare openly the cause from whence this knowledge sprung, but he carried on the discourse in the form of interrogation, leaving the man himself to come to the confession.

11. Again, in the case of Cain and Abel, the first place, they set apart the fruits of their own labours to God. For we would shew not from his sin only, but also from his virtue, that man was capable of knowing both these things. Wherefore that man knew sin to be an evil thing, Adam manifested; and that he knew that virtue was a good thing, Abel again made evident. For without having learnt it from any one, without having heard any law promulgated respecting the first fruits, but having been taught from within, and from his conscience, he presented that sacrifice. On this account I do not carry the argument down to a later period; but I bring it to bear upon the time of these earlier men, when there were as yet no letters, as yet no 6 law, nor as yet prophets and judges; but Adam only existed with his children; in order that thou mayest learn, that the knowledge of good and evil had been previously implanted in their natures. For from whence did Abel learn that to offer sacrifice was a good thing;7 that it was good to honour God, and in all things to give thanks? "Why then?" replies some one, "did not Cain bring his offering?" This man also did offer sacrifice, but not in like manner. And from in the Greek. Ben. t. ii. 653, a. Sav. viii. 97, 12.

⁵ See Hom. VIII. 2. He does not mean that this of itself merits pardon; indeed the word is rather "allowance," or indulgence (συγγγώων), but that it is a condition of pardon, and a great means of recovery. See on Heb. vi. 5, and Hooker, b. vi. c. iv. 16, where "Hom. de Pan. de conf." is an extract from one found in the Greek. Ben. t. ii. 663, a. Sav. viii. 97, 12.

O Sav. rep., as yet.
T See Davison's "Inquiry into the Origin and Intent of Primitive Sacrifice," reprinted in his Remains, where this view is maintained as at least probable, and freed from some objections. Archibishop Magee, in his work on the Atonement, vol. i. no. 43, vol. ii. no. 54, vol. iii. of mere nature, as well as moral actions not specially enjoined, are typical, and represented as typical in Holy Scripture. And again, sacrifice, if it originated in God's gift of reason, was certainly sanctioned, and endowed with an atoning power, by His special laws. The prevailing neglect of our Eucharstic oblation as such, and separating in thought our partaking of the sacrifice of our Lord from the sacrament of the altar, tend to obscure men's views on this subject. It is, however, difficult to conceive how the sacrifice of animals should have occurred to man, without some divine indication beword the nervision to use them for food. St. Chres. rifice of animals should have occurred to man, without some divine indication beyond the permission to use them for food. St. Chrys. on Gen. iv. Hom. XVIII. (5), speaks of nothing more than an offering "out of our possessions" as taught by natural conscience; and of Abel's offering being of the first-born, and of the best, as a proof of his devotion. On this view the type would arise from the divine permission of animal food.

² Deut, xxi. 18.

³ κατκλύθη μετά ταϋτα. See on Matt, v. 12, Hom, XVI. (1), St. Augustin, contr. Faust. vi. 4, speaks of it as allegorical, and now become superfluous in the letter. And Ep. Iv. (al. cxix.), (Ad ing. Jan. i. 2), c. 22, he writes, "of all the Ten Commandments only that of the Sabbath is enjoined to be observed figuratively, which figure we have received to be understood, not to be still celebrated by rest of the body." St. Chrys. on Gen. ii. 3, Hom. X. (7), has, "Now already from the beginning God offered us instruction typically (airypharoböx), teaching us to dedicate and separate the one day in the circle of the week wholly to employment in things spiritual!" thus making the Sabbath a type of the Lord's Day, and rest from secular, of rest in spiritual work.

been honoured, he deliberated upon murder, he conceals his crafty determination, And what says he; "Come, let us go forth into the field." The outward guise was one thing, the pretence of love; the thought another, the purpose of fratricide. But if he had not known the design to be a wicked one, denies his guilt, and after his conviction, again says, pardon." 2 did those learn who were the originators and to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile.' first enactors of laws among them? Is it not thence again the knowledge of conscience is formed him from the beginning, laws were apparent. For when, envying him who had laid down, and arts discovered, and all other things. For the arts too were thus established, their originators having come to the knowledge of them in a self-taught manner.

13. So also came there to be courts of justice, and so were penalties defined, as Paul accordingly observes. For since many of the Gentiles were ready to controvert this, why did he conceal it? And again, after and to say, "How will God judge mankind the murder had been perpetrated, being asked who lived before Moses? He did not send a of God, "Where is Abel thy brother?" he lawgiver; He did not introduce a law; He answers, "I know not; Am I my brother's commissioned no prophet, nor apostle, nor keeper?" Wherefore does he deny the crime? Is it not evidently because he exceedingly condemns himself. For as his prove that they possessed a self taught law; father had hid himself, so also this man and that they knew clearly what they ought to do; hear how he speaks; "For when the 'My crime is too great to obtain Gentiles who have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having 12. But it may be objected, that the Gen- not the law, are a law unto themselves; which tile allows nothing of this sort. Come then, shew the work of the law written in their let us discuss this point, and as we have done hearts." 4 But how without letters? "Their with respect to the creation, having carried on conscience also bearing witness, and their the warfare against these objectors not only thoughts the meanwhile accusing, or else by the help of the Scriptures, but of reason, so also let us now do with respect to conscience. For Paul too, when he was engaged in controversy with such persons, entered again; "As many as have sinned without law, upon this head. What then is it that they shall perish without law; and as many as have urge? They say, that there is no self-evident sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law seated in our consciences; and that God law."6 What means, "They shall perish hath not implanted this in our nature. But without law?" The law not accusing them, if so, whence is it, I ask, that legislators have but their thoughts, and their conscience; for written those laws which are among them if they had not a law of conscience, it were concerning marriages, concerning murders, not necessary that they should perish through concerning wills, concerning trusts, concern- having done amiss. For how should it be so ing abstinence from encroachments on one if they sinned without a law? but when he another, and a thousand other things. For the men now living may perchance have that they had no law, but that they had no learned them from their elders;3 and they written law, though they had the law of from those who were before them, and these nature. And again; "But glory, honour, again from those beyond? But from whom and peace, to every man that worketh good,

14. But these things he spake in reference evident that it was from conscience? For to the early times, before the coming of they cannot say, that they held communication they cannot say they cannot sa tion with Moses; or that they heard the proph- an idolater, but one who worshipped God ets. How could it be so when they were only; unfettered by the necessity of Judaical Gentiles? But it is evident that from the observances, (I mean Sabbaths, and circumvery law which God placed in man when He cision, and divers purifications,) yet exhibiting all manner of wisdom and piety.8 And י Gen. iv. 9. This clause is added in the Vulgate as well as the Septuagint. The Hebrew seems to present an hiatus after (צמני האוני האונ vhat went betwee,

² Gen. iv. 13, L.XX.

³ πρώτων, Lat. majoribus natu, which suggests πρὸ αὐτῶν, or opeσβυτέρων, but 6 Mss. agree. See Hom. IX. in St. Matt. ed.

⁴ Rom. 1i, 14, 15. 5 Rom. ii. 16.

⁷ Rom. ii. to.

8 The term Ελλην, "Gentile," or literally "Greek," usually at 8 The term 'EAAPH, '' Gentile,'' or literally "Greek,' usually at that time meant idolater. Thus we find many works of the Fathers "against the Greeks," But on the passage referred to, Hom. V. on Rom, he expressly includes Melchizedek and Job under the name as there used. These expressions, therefore, indicate what a man might be, though a Gentile, not what Gentiles usually were. Observe also that this description applies only to those spoken of in verse 10. But the being out of the Jewish Covenant applies also to the Gentiles in verses 8 and 9.

424

again, discoursing of such a worshipper, he then judge thee. For surely thou art not just. observes, "Wrath and indignation, tribulation and anguish, upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile." Again he here calls by the name of Greek one who was free from the observance of Judaic customs. If, then, he had not heard the law, nor conversed with the Jews, how could there be wrath, indignation and tribulation against him for working evil? The reason is, that he possessed a conscience inwardly admonishing him, and teaching him, and instructing him in all things. Whence is this manifest? From the way in which he2 punished others when they did amiss; from the way in which he laid down laws; from the way in which he set up the tribunals of justice. With the view of making this more plain, Paul spoke of those who were living in wickedness. "Who, knowing the ordinance of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but also consent with them that practise them."3 "But from whence," says some one, "did they know, that it is the will of God, that those who live in iniquity should be punished with death?" From whence? Why, from the way in which they judged others who sinned. For if thou deemest not murder to be a wicked thing, when thou hast gotten a murderer at thy bar, thou shouldest not punish him. So if thou deemest it not an evil thing to commit adultery, when the adulterer has fallen into thy hands, release him from punishment! But if thou recordest laws, and prescribest punishments, and art a severe judge of the sins of others; what defence canst thou make, in matters wherein thou thyself doest amiss, by saying that thou art ignorant what things ought to be done? For suppose that thou and another person have alike been guilty of adultery. On what account dost thou punish him, and deem thyself worthy of forgiveness? Since if thou didst not know adultery to be wickedness, it were not right to punish it in another. But if thou punishest, and thinkest to escape the punishment thyself, how is it agreeable to reason that the same offences should not pay the same penalty?

15. This indeed is the very thing which Paul rebukes, when he says, "And thinkest thou this, O man, that judgest them which do such things, and doest the same, that thou shalt escape the judgment of God?" 4 It is not, it cannot be possible; for from the very sentence, he means, which thou pronouncest upon another, from this sentence God will and God unjust! But if thou overlookest not another suffering wrong, how shall God overlook? And if thou correctest the sins of others, how will not God correct thee? And though He may not bring the punishment upon thee instantly, be not confident on that account, but fear the more. So also Paul bade thee, saying, "Despisest thou the riches of His goodness, and forbearance, and longsuffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?"5 For therefore, saith he, doth he bear with thee, not that thou mayest become worse, but that thou mayest repent. But if thou wilt not, this longsuffering becomes a cause of thy greater punishment; continuing, as thou dost, impenitent. This, however, is the very thing he means, when he says, "But after thy hardness and impenitent heart treasurest up to thyself wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Who will render to every man according to his deeds."6 Since, therefore, He rendereth to every man according to his works; for this reason He both implanted within us a natural law, and afterwards gave us a written one, in order that He might demand an account of sins, and that He might crown those who act rightly. Let us then order our conduct with the utmost care, and as those who have soon to encounter a fearful tribunal; knowing that we shall enjoy no pardon, if after a natural as well as written law, and so much teaching and continual admonition, we neglect our own salvation.

16. I desire then to address you again on the subject of oaths; but I feel ashamed. For to me, indeed, it is not wearisome both by day and by night to repeat the same things to you. But I am afraid, lest, having followed you up so many days, I should seem to condemn you of great listlessness, that you should require continual admonition respecting so easy a matter. And I am not only ashamed, but also in fear for you! for frequent instruction, to those who give heed, is salutary and profitable; but to those who are listless, it is injurious, and exceedingly perilous; for the oftener any one hears, the greater punishment does he draw upon himself, if he does not practise what is told him. With this accordingly God reproached the Jews, speaking thus: "I have sent my prophets, rising up early, and sending them; and even then ye did not hearken."7 We therefore do this of our great care for you. But we fear, lest, on that tremendous Day, this admonition and counsel should rise up against faithful over a few things, I will make thee you all. For when the point to be attained ruler over many things," 4 is easy, and he whose office it is continually defence shall we have to offer? or what argudebtor, remind him of the loan? Do thou his neighbour owes him money, viz., the fulfilling of this precept; and upon meeting him, any means I should hear it said on that day, with which we are entrusted; but let us keep ing to him who had made profit, "Well done,

¹ Rom. ii. 9. 4 Rom. ii. 3.

² al. they.

³ Rom. i. 32.

17. And this voice we shall hear, if we . to admonish, desists not from his task, what shew the same earnestness as he did. And we shall shew this earnestness, if we do this ment will save us from punishment? Tell which I say. When you depart, whilst what me, if a sum of money chance to be due to you have heard is yet warm within you, ex-you, do you not always, when you meet the hort one another! And just as ye each salute at parting, so let every one go from too ' act thus; and let every one suppose that hence with an admonition, and say to his neighbour, "Observe and remember that thou keep the commandment; " and thus let him put him in mind of the payment, shall we assuredly get the mastery. For knowing that no small danger lies at our when friends also dismiss one with such door, whilst we are unmindful of our breth- counsel; and on one's return home, one's ren. For this cause I too cease not to make wife again admonishes one to the same effect; mention of these things. For I fear, lest by and our word keeps its hold on you when alone; we shall soon shake off this evil habit. "O wicked and slothful servant, thou oughtest I know, indeed, that ye marvel why I am so to have put my money to the exchangers." arnest respecting this precept. But dis-Behold, however, I have laid it down, not charge the duty enjoined, and then I will tell once, or twice, but oftentimes. It is left you. Meanwhile, this I say; that this precept then for you to discharge the usury of it, is a divine law; and it is not safe to trans-Now the usury of hearing is the manifestation gress it. But if I shall see it rightly perof it by deeds, for the deposit is the Lord's, formed, I will speak of another reason, which Therefore let us not negligently receive that is not less than this, that ye may learn that it is with justice I make so much ado about this it with diligence, that we may restore it with law. But it is now time to conclude this much interest on That Day. For unless thou address in a prayer. Wherefore, let us all bring others to the performance of the same say in common, "O God, Who willest not good works, thou shalt hear that voice, which the death of a sinner, but that he should be he who buried the talent heard. But God converted and live; grant that we, having forbid it should be this! but may you hear discharged this and every other precept, may that different voice which Christ uttered, say- be found worthy so to stand at the tribunal of 'Thy Christ, that having enjoyed great good and faithful servant; thou hast been boldness, we may attain the kingdom to Thy glory. For to Thee belongeth glory, together with Thine only begotten Son, and the Holy Ghost, now and ever, and world without end." Amen.

4 Matt. xxv. 21.

5 See Hom. XIV. (6).

r i. e., "as I am doing, and as thou wouldest in the case just mentioned."

mentionen.

2 Matt. xxv. 26, 27.

3 Matt. xxv. 26, 27.

3 Legislating them as the exchangers, to whom he was 3 i.e., considering them as the exchangers, to whom he was 5 bound to deliver the truth entrusted to him, that its good effect mind multiply. See his Commentary on the passage, Hom. LXXVIII., and another application on Kom. xvi. 6, Hom. XXXII.

HOMILY XIII.

A further thanksgiving to God for the change in the late melancholy aspect of affairs, Reminiscence of those who were dragged away, and punished because of the sedition. Exposition on the subject of the creation of man, and of his having received a natural law. Of the complete accomplishment of abstinence from oaths, shall begin to-day. Now again I will say, was the day when that fearful tribunal was "Blessed be God!" What a day did we see

1. With the same introduction and prelude On that day how heavy was the gloom! that I began yesterday and the day before, I How bright the calm of the present! That last Wednesday! and what in the present!

- trepada. Feriam quartam, the fourth day of the week. The "respada. Feriam quartam, the fourth day of the week. The set in the city, and shook the hearts of all, the waves; yet away on the shore, with outmakes the present prosperity to appear more thus preoccupying their mind with fear, strikingly.

and made the day to seem no better than stretched hands and tears, they supplicate night; not because the beams of the sun were God that He may help the drowning; so there extinguished, but because that despondency in like manner, did all silently and mentally and fear darkened your eyes. Wherefore, call upon God, pleading for those at the that we may reap the more pleasure, I wish tribunal, as for men surrounded by the waves, to relate a few of the circumstances which that He would stretch out His hand, and not then occurred; for I perceive that a narrative suffer the vessel to be overwhelmed, nor the of these things will be serviceable to you, and judgment of those under trial to end in an to all who shall come afterwards. Besides, utter wreck. Such was the state of things in to those who have been delivered from ship-front of the doors; but when I entered within wreck, it is sweet to remember the waves, and the court, other sights I saw which were still the tempest, and the winds, when they are more awful; soldiers armed with swords and come into port. And to those who have clubs, and strictly keeping the peace for the fallen into sickness, it is an agreeable thing, judges within. For since all the relatives of when the sickness is over, to talk over with those under trial, whether wives, or mothers, others the fevers by which they were nearly or daughters, or fathers, stood before the brought to the grave. When terrors have doors of the seat of justice; in order that if passed away, there is a pleasure in relating any one happened to be led away to executhose terrors; the soul no longer fearing tion, yet no one inflamed at the sight of the them, but deriving therefrom more cheerful-calamity might raise any tumult or disturbness. The remembrance of past evils always ance; the soldiers drove them all afar off:

3. One sight there was, more pitiable than 2. When the greater portion of the city all; a mother, and a sister of a certain perhad taken refuge from the fear and danger of son, who was among those under trial within, that occasion, in secret places, in deserts, and sat at the very vestibule of the court of in hollows; terror besetting them in all justice, rolling themselves on the pavement, directions; and the houses were empty of and becoming a common spectacle to all the women, and the forum of men, and scarce two bystanders; veiling their faces, and shewing or three appeared walking together across it, no sense of shame, but that which the and even these going about as if they had urgency of the calamity permitted. No maid been animated corpses: at this period, I pro- servant, nor neighbour, nor female friend, ceeded to the tribunal of justice, for the purpose of seeing the end of these transactions; But hemmed in by a crowd of soldiers, alone, and there, beholding the fragments of the and meanly clad, and grovelling on the city collected together, I marvelled most of ground, about the very doors, they were in all at this, that although a multitude was more pitiable case than those who were unaround the doors, there was the profoundest dergoing judgment within, and hearing as silence, as though there had been no man they did the voice of the executioners, the there, all looking upon one another; not one strokes of the scourge, the wailing of those daring to enquire of his neighbour, nor to who were being scourged, the fearful threats hear anything from him; for each regarded of the judges, they themselves endured, at his neighbour with suspicion; since many every scourging, sharper pains than those already, having been dragged away, beyond who were beaten. For since, in the confesall expectation, from the midst of the forum, sions of others, there was a danger of accusawere now confined within. Thus we all alike tions being proved, if they heard any one looked up to heaven, and stretched out our scourged that he might mention those who hands in silence, expecting help from above, were guilty, and uttering cries, they, looking and beseeching God to stand by those who up to heaven, besought God to give the were brought to judgment, to soften the sufferer some strength of endurance, lest hearts of the judges, and to make their sen- the safety of their own relations should be tence a merciful one. And just as when betrayed by the weakness of others, while some persons on land, beholding others suf- incapable of sustaining the sharp anguish of fering shipwreck, cannot indeed go near to the strokes. And again, the same thing octhem, and reach out the hand, and relieve curred as in the case of men who are strugtheir distress, being kept back from them by gling with a tempest. For just as when they perceive the violence of a wave lifting up its 1 φάραγγας, usually "ravines." There were, however, caves near Antioch. head from afar, and gradually increasing, and ready to overwhelm the vessel, they are the ship; so also was it with these. If at any them, they saw a thousand deaths before their eyes, being in terror, lest those who were urged to bear witness, giving way to their torments, should name some one of those who were their own relatives. And thus, one saw tortures both within and without. Those within the executioners were tormenting; these women, the despotic force of nature, and the sympathy of the affections. on the part of those who were found guilty, and outside on the part of their relatives. Yea, rather not these only, but their very judges inwardly lamented, and suffered more severely than all the rest; being compelled to take part in so bitter a tragedy.

4. As for me, while I sat and beheld all this, how matrons and virgins, wont to live in seclusion, were now made a common spectacle to all; and how those who were accustomed to lie on a soft couch, had now the pavement for their bed; and how they who had enjoyed so constant an attendance of female servants and eunuchs, and every sort of outward distinction, were now bereft of all these things; and grovelling at the feet of every one, beseeching him to lend help by any means in his power to those who were undergoing examination, and that there might be a kind of the remnants of the city; and not suffer it general contribution of mercy from all; I exclaimed, in those words of Solomon, "Vanity Nor could one see any one joining in this cry of vanities, all is vanity." For I saw both but with tears. Nevertheless, none of these this and another oracle fulfilled in every things then moved the judges within, aldeed, which saith, "All the glory of man is though they heard. One thing only they indeed, wealth, and nobility, and notoriety, and the patronage of friends, and kinship and all worldly things, were found worthless; the sin, and transgression of the law which had taken place, having put all these succours to flight. And just as the mother of young birds, when the nestlings have been carried games,6 who could reckon up a thousand difaway, coming and finding her nest empty, is ferent offices of distinction which they had unable to rescue her captive brood: but by hovering around the hands of the fowler, in might be seen placed upon all their doors. this way displays her grief; even so did these women then do, when their children were snatched away from their dwellings, and shut up within, as it were in a net, or a trap. They could not indeed come in and deliver the prisoners, but they manifested their anguish by wallowing on the ground near the very doors; by lamentation and groans; and by endeavouring to approach as near as pos-almost dead with terror, before it comes near sible to those who had captured them, These things then beholding, I cast in my time they heard voices, and cries that reached mind That Dread Tribunal; and I said within myself, "If now, when men are the judges, neither mother, nor sister, nor father, nor any other person, though guiltless of the deeds which have been perpetrated, can avail to rescue the criminals; who will stand by us when we are judged at the dread Tribunal of Christ? Who will dare to raise his voice? Who will be able to rescue those who shall There be led away to those unbearable punishments. was lamentation within, and without! inside, Notwithstanding they were the first men of the city who were then brought to trial, and the very chief of the nobility, yet they would have been glad if it could be granted them to lose all their possessions, yea, if need were, their liberty itself, so that they might continue to enjoy this present life.

5. But to proceed. The day now hastening to its close, and late 3 evening arriving, and the final sentence of the court being expected, all were in still greater agony, and besought God that He would grant some delay and respite; and incline the soul of the judges to refer the facts that had been investigated to the decision of the Emperor; since perchance some advantage might arise from this reference.4 Moreover, by the people. general supplications 5 were sent up to the Merciful God; imploring that He would save entirely to be razed from its foundations. as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, considered, that there might be a rigid enand the flower falleth away." For then, quiry into the deeds that had been perpetrated.

6. At last having loaded the culprits with chains, and bound them with iron, they sent them away to the prison through the midst of the forum. Men that had kept their studs of horses, who had been presidents of the held, had their goods confiscated, and seals

3 βαθυτάτης, which seems to imply darkness. See Luc. xxiv. 1. 4 Or. "delay." ὑπέρθεσις. Βαι ὑπερτίθεμαι is "to refer" in Herodotus, as i. 8, and elsewhere.

Herodotus, as i. 8, and elsewhere.

Atrai. The term was originally used of any kind of prayer, but about this time was beginning to be applied to a special kind of penitential prayer. St. Basil, A.D. 375, ep. 20; (Al. 63), writes to the Neocassareans in defence of Atraevea, to which they objected as newly introduced; and the prayers here mentioned seem to be something distinct from the common service. See Bingham, b. xiii. c. 1, sec. 10. The passage he quotes from St. Augustin, Hom. CIXXII. de Temp. is attributed by the Benedictine editor to Cassarius, after some MSS.

6 aywooderas. Those who bore this office were men of distinction, and of wealth, as they usually furnished the spectacles at their own expense. Such were the Asiarchs, mentioned Acts xix. 31, and Mart. of St. Polycarp, c. 12. See note in ed. Jacobson.

Their wives also being ejected from their strenuously to the same subject of discourse. from the terrors that are hereafter.

you, has greatly softened your hearts. Do cept, he would induce to a departure from not however take it amiss. For since I am iniquity; by the former, to the exercise of about to venture upon some more subtle virtue. "Do not thou to another," he thoughts and require a more sensitive state of saith, 6 "what thou hatest." Dost thou hate mind on your part, I have done this inten- to be insulted? Do not insult another. Dost tionally, in order that by the terror of the description your minds might have shaken off Dost thou hate to be deceived? Do not deall listlessness, and withdrawn themselves ceive another. And, in a word, in all things, from all worldly cares, and might with the if we hold fast these two precepts, we shall more readiness convey the force of the things not need any other instruction. For the about to be spoken into the depths of your soul.

Sufficiently indeed, then, our discourse of late 3 evinced to you, that a natural law of good and evil is seated within us. But that our proof of it may be more abundantly evident, we will again to-day apply ourselves parents' home, each had literally to play the For that God from the beginning, when He part of Job's wife. For they went "wander- formed man, made him capable of discriming from house to house and from place to inating both these, all men make evident. place, seeking a lodging." 2 And this it was Hence when we sin, we are all ashamed at not easy for them to find, every one fearing the presence of our inferiors; and oftentimes and trembling to receive, or to render assist- a master, on his way to the house of a harance in any way to the relatives of those lot, if he then perceives any one of his more who were under impeachment. Nevertheless, respectable servants, turns back, reddening though such events had happened, the suf- with shame, from this untoward path. Again, ferers were patient under all; since they were when others reproach us, fixing on us the not deprived of the present life. And neither names of particular vices, we call it an insult; the loss of wealth, nor dishonour, nor so much and if we are aggrieved, we drag those who public exposure, nor any other matter of that have done the wrong to the public tribunal. nature, caused them vexation. For the Thus we can understand what vice is, and greatness of the calamity, and the circum- what virtue is. Wherefore Christ, for the stance of their having expected still worse purpose of declaring this, and shewing that things, when they suffered these, had pre- He was not introducing a strange law, or one pared the soul for the exercise of a wise forti- which surpassed our nature, but that which tude. And now they learnt, how simple a He had of old deposited beforehand in our thing is virtue for us, how easy and expedi- conscience, after pronouncing those numertious of performance, and that from our ous Beatitudes, thus speaks; "All things neglect only it seems to be laborious. They whatsoever ye would that men should do to who before this time could not bear the loss of you, do ye even so to them."4 "Many a little money with meekness, now they were words," saith He, "are not necessary, nor subject to a greater fear, although they had laws of great length, nor a diversity of inlost all their substance, felt as if they had struction. Let thine own will be the law. found a treasure, because they had not lost Dost thou wish to receive kindness? Be kind their lives. So that if the sense of a future to another. Dost thou wish to receive mercy? hell took possession of us, and we thought of Show mercy to thy neighbour. Dost thou those intolerable punishments, we should not wish to be applauded? Applaud another. grieve, even though for the sake of the law Dost thou wish to be beloved? Exercise of God we were to give both our substance, love. Dost thou wish to enjoy the first rank? and our bodies and lives too, knowing that First concede that place to another. Become we should gain greater things; deliverance thyself the judge, thyself the lawgiver of om the terrors that are hereafter.

7. Perchance the tragedy of all I have told other what thou hatest." By the latter preknowledge of virtue He hath implanted in our nature; but the practice of it and the correction He hath entrusted to our moral choice.7

> 8. Perhaps what is thus said, is obscure; wherefore I will again endeavour to make it more plain. In order to know that it is a good thing to exercise temperance, we need

¹ Chrysostom here alludes to the history of Job as given in the Septuagint. Job's wife is there made to address him in a long speech, of which the words, "wandering from house to house,"

Section, of which the words, wandering from noise to noise, &c., are a part.

² Job ii. 9, LXX,

³ $\pi p \omega_p p_i$, which seems to refer to the last Homily, as also $\chi \theta i$; at the beginning. This reference may, however, include also Hom, XI.

⁴ Matt, vii. 12. 5 Tobit iv. 16. 6 So Sav. 7 "The light of reason does not, any more than that of Revelation, force men to submit to its authority." Butler, Analogy, 5 Tobit iv. 16. etation, force men to submit to its authority. Butler, d and p and p are in c. i. sec. 1, where the relation of Christianity to natural religion is investigated. See also his Sermons, II. and III. on Human Nature, for the sense in which the term nature is here used. See also Aristotle Eth. vi. 5, on $\phi \rho \phi \eta \eta \sigma s$.

have the knowledge of it in our nature, and come by the calamities of others, as well as there is no necessity for labour or fatigue in by mutual tenderness.' For although calamgoing about and enquiring whether temper- itous events may seem to induce a certain is in doubt as to this virtue. So also we this effect a certain wise man speaks signifineither is there here any need of trouble or man his neighbour."3 learning, that the wickedness of this sin may we hate vice, though we practise it. And givers and judges for those who are to be this hath been an exceeding good work of governed, and friends for friends. And freour power of choice already, and before the than friends; for when the former reproach action, claim kindred with virtue, and be at us with our offences, they stir us up, even enmity with wickedness.

and again, He did not suffer our will to un- so as to restrain us, however reluctantly. dertake the whole burden of knowledge, and even some good dispositions exist naturally within us. For we are all naturally disposed to feel indignation along with those who are contemptuously treated, (whence it arises that we become the enemies of those who are insolent, though we ourselves may have suffered no part of the grievance,) and to sympathize in the pleasure of those who enjoy no words, nor instruction; for we ourselves assistance and protection; and we are overance is good and profitable; but we all ac- pusillanimity," we entertain nevertheless a knowledge this with one consent, and no man common fondness for each other. And to account adultery to be an evil thing, and cantly; "Every animal loveth his like, and

10. But God hath provided many other be known; but we are all self-taught in such instructors for us besides conscience; viz., judgments; and we applaud virtue, though fathers for children, masters for servants, we do not follow it; as, on the other hand, husbands for wives, teachers for pupils, law-God; that He hath made our conscience, and quently too we gain no less from enemies against our will, to the amendment of them. 9. As I said then, the knowledge of each So many teachers hath He set over us, in of these things resides within the conscience order that the discovery of what is profitable, of all men, and we require no teacher to in- and the regulation of our conduct, might be struct us in these things; but the regulation easy to us, the multitude of those things of our conduct is left to our choice, and which urge us on toward it not permitting us earnestness, and efforts. And why was this? to fall away from what is expedient for us. but because if He had made everything to For although we should despise parents, yet be of nature, we should have departed un- while we fear magistrates, we shall in any crowned and destitute of reward; and even case be more submissive than otherwise. as the brutes, who receive no reward nor And though we may set them at nought 4 praise for those advantages which they have when we sin, we can never escape the rebuke naturally, so neither should we enjoy any of of conscience: and if we dishonour and repel these things; for natural advantages are not this, yet whilst fearing the opinion of the the praise and commendation of those who many, we shall be the better for it. And have them, but of the Giver. For this rea- though we are destitute of shame with regard son, then, He did not commit all to nature; to this, the fear of the laws will press on us

11. Thus fathers and teachers take the of right regulation; lest it should despair at young in hand, and bring them into order;5 the labour of virtue. But conscience sug- and lawgivers and magistrates, those who are gests to it what ought to be done; and it grown up. And servants, as being more incontributes its own exertions for the accom-clined to listlessness, in addition to what has plishment. That it is a good thing to be been previously mentioned, have their mastemperate, we all understand without diffi- ters to constrain them to temperance; and culty; for the knowledge is of nature: but wives have their husbands. And many are we should not be able without difficulty, with- the walls which environ our race on all sides, out bridling lust, and employing much exer- lest it should too easily slide away, and fall tion, to practise the rule of temperance; for into wickedness. Beside all these too, sickthis does not come to us by nature as the nesses and calamities instruct us. For povknowledge does, but requires also a willing erty restrains, and losses sober us, and danmind and earnestness. And not only in this ger subdues us, and there are many other respect has He made the burden lighter for things of this sort. Doth neither father, nor us, but also in another way again, by letting teacher, nor prince, nor lawgiver, nor judge

¹ καi seems to be out of place. Without it the sense is, "are afflicted in the calamities of others through mutual tenderness." Or the true reading may be καί τῆν, "and we have a mutual tenderness," but six NSS. agree.

² That is, on the part of those who witness the calamity. In allusion to the disposition of many to forsake their friends in adersity.

³ Compare Herbert's Poems, No. xvii

"bard, wither is poems, No. xvii

"bard, with season us; then begint us round!

Parents first season us; then schoolmasters

Deliver us to laws;" &cs make thee fear? Doth no friend move thee to shame, nor enemy sting thee? Doth no master chastise? Doth no husband instruct? Doth no conscience correct thee? Still, when bodily sickness comes, it often sets all right; and a loss has made the audacious man to become gentle. And what is more than this, heavy misfortunes, which befal not only ourselves but others too, are often of great advantage to us; and we who ourselves suffered nothing, yet beholding others enduring pun-

12. And with respect to right deeds, any one may see that this happens; for as when the bad are punished others become better, so whenever the good achieve any thing right, to the avoiding of oaths. For many persons, diligence, and got the better of the sin; wherefore we are the more disposed to touch let no one tell me that "many" have accomplished this; this is not what is desired, but shewn for your amendment. that "all" should do so; and until I see this hundred sheep, and yet when one of them also happens with respect to the body; for if only turned back a nail, the whole body symthere was but one who had committed fornication among the Corinthians, yet Paul so groaned as if the whole city were lost. And very reasonably, for he knew that if that member were not chastened, the disease progressing onward would at length attack all the rest. I saw, but lately, in the court of justice, those distinguished men bound and conducted through the forum; and while some were wondering at this extraordinary degradation, others said there was nothing to wonder at; for that, where there is matter of treason,3 rank must go for nothing. Is it not then much more true that rank must be of no avail where is impiety?

13. Thinking therefore of these things, let us arouse ourselves; for if ye bring not your own endeavours to the task, every thing on our part is to no purpose. And why so? Because it is not with the office of teaching, as it is with other arts. For the silversmith. when he has fabricated a vessel of any kind, and laid it aside, will find it on the morrow just as he left it. And the worker in brass, and the stone-cutter, and every other artificer, will each again take his own work in ishment, have been no less sobered by it than hand, whatever it is, just in the state he quitted it. But it is not so with us, but altogether the reverse; for we have not lifeless vessels to forge, but reasonable souls. Therefore we do not find you such as we leave you, but when we have taken you, and many are urged onward to a similar zeal: a with manifold labour moulded, reformed you thing which hath also taken place with respect and increased your ardour on your departing from this place, the urgency of business, observing that others had laid aside the evil besetting you on every side, again perverts practice of oaths, took a pattern from their you, and causes us increased difficulty. Therefore, I supplicate and beseech you to put your own hand to the work; and when ye again on the subject of this admonition. For depart hence, to shew the same earnest regard for your own safety, that I have here

14. Oh! that it were possible that I could I cannot take breath. That Shepherd had a perform good works as your substitute, and that you could receive the rewards of those had wandered away, he took no account of works! Then I would not give you so much the safety of the ninety and nine, until he trouble. But how can I do this? The thing found the one that was lost, and restored it is impossible; for to every man will He renagain to the flock.2 Seest thou not that this der according to his own works. Wherefore as a mother, when she beholds her son in a by striking against any obstacle, we have fever while she witnesses his sufferings4 from choking and inflammation, frequently bewails pathizes with the member. Say not this; him, and says to him, "O my son, would that that only a certain few have failed; but con-I could sustain thy fever, and draw off its that only a certain few have failed; but con-sider this point, that these few being unre-flame upon myself!" so now I say, Oh! formed, will corrupt many others. Although that by labouring as your substitute, I could do good works for you all! But no, this is not to be done. But of his own doings must each man give the account, and one cannot see one person suffer punishment in the room of another. For this reason I am pained and mourn, that on That Day, when ye are called to judgment, I shall not be able to assist you, since, to say the truth, no such confidence of speech with God belongs to me. But even if I had much confidence, I am not holier than Moses, or more righteous than Samuel; of whom it is said, that though they had attained to so great virtue, they could not in any way avail to assist the Jews; inasmuch as that people had given themselves over to excessive negligence.5 Since, then, from our own works we shall be i.e., "to stop this exhortation;" an allusion to the exercise of running.

² Matt. xviii. 12, 13.

³ καθοσίωσες, so called as being against the sacred person of the Emperor. See Ducange.

⁴

may obtain those good things which are without end. Amen.

punished or saved; let us endeavour, I beseech you, in conjunction with all the other precepts, to fulfill this one; that, finally deam of the father, with the Holy parting this life with a favourable hope, we Ghost, be glory both now and ever, world

HOMILY XIV.

After the whole people had been freed from all distress, and had become assured of safety, certain persons again disturbed the city by fabricating false reports, and were convicted. Wherefore this Homily refers to that subject; and also to the admonition concerning oaths; for which reason also, the history of Jonathan, and Saul, and that of Jephthah, is brought forward; and it is shewn how many perjuries result from one oath.

"We would not, brethren, have you ignorant earnest, and more intimate with Himself. of our trouble which came to us in Asia, that | 2. Let us not then be desponding; nor let

1. Not a little did the devil yesterday dis- | moved the cloud, and snatched us from the turb our city; but God also hath not a little very gates of death. And afterwards, for comforted us again; so that each one of us the purpose of shewing that his being permay seasonably take up that prophetic say- mitted to fall into this danger also was the ing, "In the multitude of the sorrows that I result of much tender care for him, he menhad in my heart, thy comforts have refreshed tions the advantage which resulted from the my soul." And not only in consoling, but temptations, which was, that he might coneven in permitting us to be troubled, God tinually look to Him, and be neither high-hath manifested His tender care towards us. For to-day I shall repeat what I have never said this, "We had the sentence of death in ceased to say, that not only our deliverance ourselves;" he adds also the reason; from evils, but also the permission of them "That we should not trust in ourselves, but arises from the benevolence of God. For in God which quickeneth the dead." For it when He sees us falling away into listless- is in the nature of trials to arouse us when we ness, and starting off from communion with are dozing, or falling down, and to stir us up, Him, and making no account of spiritual and make us more religious. When, therethings, He leaves us for a while; that thus fore, O beloved! thou seest a trial at one brought to soberness, we may return to Him time extinguished, and at another time the more earnestly. And what marvel is it, kindled again, be not cast down! Do not if He does this towards us, listless as we are; despond, but retain a favourable hope, reasince even Paul declares that with regard to soning thus with thyself, that God does not himself and his disciples, this was the cause deliver us into the hands of our enemies either of their trials? For inditing his second because He hates or abandons us, but be-Epistle to the Corinthians, he speaks thus: cause He is desirous to make us more in

we were pressed out of measure, above us despair of a change for the better; but let strength, insomuch that we despaired even us hope that speedily there will be a calm; of life; but we had the sentence of death in ourselves." As though he would say, "Dangers so great hung over us, that we handle the customary points; and again bring gave up ourselves for lost; and no longer forward our usual topic of instruction. For hoped that any favourable change would take I am desirous to discourse to you further place, but were altogether in expectation of concerning the same subject, to the end that death." For such is the sense of that clause, "We had the sentence of death in ourselves." the wicked practice of oaths. Wherefore it is necessary for me again to have recourse to peration, God dispelled the tempest, and rethe head of John, just cut off, and the warm case. blood yet dripping from it, you would thus go home, and think that you saw it before your eyes, while it emitted a voice, and said, "Abhor my murderer, the oath!" What a rebuke did not effect, this an oath effected; what a tyrant's wrath was insufficient for, this the necessity of keeping an oath brought about! And when the tyrant was publicly rebuked in the hearing of all, he bore the censure nobly; but when he had thrown himself into the fatal necessity caused by oaths, then he cut off that blessed head. This same ing this head; and that we shew it to all, crying aloud, as it does, and denouncing oaths. For although we were never so listless and remiss, yet beholding the eyes of that head fearfully glaring upon us, and threatening us if we swear, we should be more powerfully kept in check by this terror, than by any curb; and be easily able to restrain and avert the tongue from its inclination toward oaths.

3. There is not only this great evil in an oath, that it punishes those who are guilty of it, both when violated, and when kept; a thing we do not see take place with any other sin; but there is another equally great evil attending it. And what is that? Why that ofttimes it is utterly impossible even for those who are desirous, and even make a point of it, to keep their oath. For, in the first place, he who is continually swearing, whether willingly or unwillingly; knowingly or unknowingly; in jest or in earnest; being frequently things, will most surely become perjured. who swears frequently, must also be a pernot become the victim of perjury unwillingly himself. their oaths, it is no longer possible; but the others. whatever happens, one or other of these will lately I besought you, that each one taking be ensuared in perjury; or rather both in any

4. And how, I will explain; for this is the paradox. He who hath sworn that he would flog the man-servant or maid-servant, yet hath afterwards been prohibited from this, hath perjured himself, not having done what he hath sworn to do: and also, he hath involved in the crime of perjury the party forbidding and hindering the oath from being kept. For not only they who take a false oath, but they who impose that necessity on others, are liable to the same accusation. And not merely in houses, but also in the thing, therefore, I entreat; and cease not forum we may see that this takes place; and entreating, that wherever we go, we go bear- especially in fights, when those who box with one another swear things that are contrary. One swears that he will beat, the other that he will not be beaten. One swears that he will carry off the cloak, the other that he will not suffer this. One that he will exact the money, the other that he will not pay it. And many other such contradictory things, those who are contentious take an oath to do. So also in shops, and in schools, it may generally be observed that the same thing occurs. Thus the workman hath often sworn that he will not suffer his apprentice2 to eat or drink, before he has finished all his assigned task. And so also the pedagogue has often acted towards a youth; and a mistress towards her maid-servant; and when the evening hath overtaken them, and the work hath remained unfinished, it is necessary either that those who have not executed their task should perish with hunger, or that those who have sworn should altogether forswear themselves. For carried away by anger and by many other that malignant demon, who is always lying in wait against our blessings, being present and And no one can gainsay this; so evident and hearing the obligation of the oaths, impels generally allowed is the fact, that the man those who are answerable to indifference; or works some other difficulty; so that the task jurer. Secondly, I affirm, that although he being unperformed, blows, insults. and perwere not carried away by passion, and did juries, and a thousand other evils, may take place. And just as when children drag with and unwittingly, yet by the very nature of all their might a long and rotten cord in the case he will assuredly be necessitated directions opposite to each other; if the cord both consciously and voluntarily to perjure snaps in the middle, they all fall flat upon Thus, oftentimes when we are din-their backs, and some strike their heads, and ing at home, and one of the servants happens some another part of the body; so also they to do amiss, the wife swears that he shall be who each engage with an oath to perform flogged, and then the husband swears the things that are contrary, when the oath is contrary, resisting, and not permitting it. In broken by the necessity of the case, both this case, whatever they may do, perjury parties fall into the same gulf of perjury; must in any case be the result; for however these by actually perjuring themselves, and much they may wish and endeavour to keep those by affording the occasion of perjury to

5. That this also may be rendered evident,

^{*} τοῦτο παθη, al. ποιη, become guilty of,

which bears upon what has been said. Once, from a single oath a thousand perjuries. when the Jews had been invaded by their enemies, and Jonathan (now he was the son the case of Saul. Observe, however, what a rest to flight; Saul, his father, being desirous when it was needful that he should have re-fatigue, and the hour, (for "all the land," it freshed those who were fatigued and exissaid, "was dining)," then urged them to hausted, and have sent them forth with the transgression. Moreover, the sight of renewed vigour against their enemies, he the combs invited them from without to relax treated them far worse than he had done the strain on their resolution. For the sweettheir enemies, by the constraint of an oath, ness, as well as the present readiness of the which delivered them over to excessive hun-table, and the difficulty of detecting the ger. Dangerous, indeed, it is for any one to stealth, were sufficient to ensnare their utmost swear in a matter pertaining to himself; for wisdom. If it had been flesh, which needed we are forcibly impelled to do many things by boiling or roasting, their minds would not the urgency of circumstances. But much have been so much bewitched; since while more dangerous is it by the obligation of they were delaying in the cookery of these, one's own oath, to bind the determination of and engaged in preparing them for food, others; and especially where any one swears, they might expect to be discovered. But now not concerning one, or two, or three, but an there was nothing of this kind; there was unlimited multitude, which Saul then incon- honey only, for which no such labour was siderately did, without thinking that it was required, and for which the dipping of the probable that, in so vast a number, one at tip of the finger sufficed to partake of the diers, and soldiers too on campaign, are very these persons restrained their appetite, and nothing of ruling the belly; more especially it concern us? Hath any one of us sworn when their fatigue is great. He, however, this? He may pay the penalty of his inconoverlooking all these points, as if he were siderate oath, for why did he swear?" Nothmerely taking an oath about a single servant, ing of this sort did they think; but religiously whom he was easily able to restrain, counted passed on; and though there were so many equally on his whole army. In consequence enticements, they behaved themselves wisely. of this he opened such a door for the devil, "The people went on talking." What is that in a short time he framed, not two, three, the meaning of this word "talking?" Why, or four, but many more perjuries out of this that for the purpose of soothing their pain oath. For as when we do not swear at all, we close the whole entrance against him, so if we utter but a single oath, we afford him great liberty for constructing endless perjuries. And just as those who twist skeins, if they have one to hold the end, work the whole string with nicety, but if there is no one to do this, cannot even undertake the commencement of it; in the same manner too the devil, when about to twist the skein of our sins, if he could not get the beginning from our tongues, would not be able to undertake the work; but should we only make not only from what happens every day in a commencement, while we hold the oath on private houses, and the places of public con- our tongue, as it were a hand, then with full course, but from the Scriptures themselves, I liberty he manifests his malignant art in the will relate to you a piece of ancient history, rest of the work, constructing and weaving of Saul) had slaughtered some, and put the snare is immediately framed for this oath: "The army passed through a wood, that conto rouse the army more effectually against the tained a nest of bees, and the nest was in remainder; and in order that they might not front of the people, and the people came desist until he had subjugated them all, did upon the nest, and went along talking. that which was altogether opposite to what he Seest thou what a pit-fall was here? A table desired, by swearing that no one should eat ready spread, that the easiness of access, the any food until evening, and until vengeance sweetness of the food, and the hope of conwas taken of his enemies. What, I ask, could cealment, might entice them to a transgreshave been more senseless than this? For sion of the oath. For hunger at once, and least might transgress the oath; or that sol- table, and that with secresy. Nevertheless, far removed from moral wisdom, and know did not say within themselves, "What does with words, they held discourse with one another.

7. What then, did nothing more come of

I Some MSS, read του άγρου, of the ground, as LXX.

^{2 1} Sam. xiv. 26, LXX.
3 So LXX., 1 Kings xiv. 24 (i. e., 1 Samuel). The clause in the Hebrew, corresponding to the Greek words καὶ πᾶσα ἡ γῆ ἡρίστα, is בארץ בארץ באר ובק-הארץ באו E. V. "And all they of the land came counted for as being paraphrastic.

Was the oath, forsooth, observed? Not even so was it observed. On the contrary, did not indeed forbid this; but what He had it was violated! How, and in what way? Ye shall hear forthwith, in order that ye may He directly prohibited; plainly shewing devil. For Jonathan, not having heard his in such sacrifices. learn that it was not after the mind of God partakers of the crime. that this should be done, for in that case He wail and lament her. And that what I have and spoil them. And the priest said, Let us said is not conjectural, the event demon-

this, when all the people had acted so wisely? strated; for after this sacrifice, no one vowed also thoroughly discern the whole art of the through both cases, that He doti not delight father take the oath, " put forth the end of 8. But the malignant demon was labouring the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in hard now again to produce such a tragedy. the honeycomb, and his eyes saw clearly." Therefore he impelled Jonathan to the tres-Observe, who it was whom he impelled to pass. For if any one of the soldiers had break the oath; not one of the soldiers, but transgressed the law, it seemed to him no the very son of him who had sworn it. For great evil that would have been done; but he did not only desire to effect perjury, but now being insatiate of human ills, and never was also plotting the slaughter of a son, and able to get his fill of our calamities, he making provision for it beforehand; and was thought it would be no grand exploit if he in haste to divide nature against her own self, effected only a simple murder. And if he and what he had done aforetime in the case could not also pollute the king's right hand of Jephthah, that he hoped now again to accomplish. For he likewise, when he had that he had achieved no great matter. And promised that the first thing that met him, why do I speak of child-murder? For he, after a victorious battle, he would sacrifice,2 the wicked one, thought that by this means fell into the snare of child-murder; for his he should compass a slaughter even more daughter first meeting him, he sacrificed her, accursed than that. For if he had sinned and God did not forbid it. And I know, wittingly, and been sacrificed, this would only indeed, that many of the unbelievers impugn have been child-murder; but now sinning us of cruelty and inhumanity on account of ignorantly, (for he had not heard of the oath), this sacrifice; but I should say, that the con- if he had been slain, he would have made the cession 3 in the case of this sacrifice was a anguish of his father double; for he would striking example of providence and clemency; have had both to sacrifice a son, and a son and that it was in care for our race that He who had done no wrong. But now to prodid not prevent that sacrifice. For if after ceed with the rest of the history; "When that vow and promise He had forbidden the he had eaten," it is said, "His eyes saw sacrifice, many also who were subsequent to clearly." And here it condemns the king Jephthah, in the expectation that God would of great folly; shewing that hunger had not receive their vows, would have increased almost blinded the whole army, and diffused the number of such vows, and proceeding much darkness over their eyes. Afterwards on their way would have fallen into child- some one of the soldiers, perceiving the murder. But now, by suffering this vow to action, saith, "Thy father sware an oath be actually fulfilled, He put a stop to all upon all the people, saying, cursed be the such cases in future. And to shew that this man who eateth any food to-day. And the is true, after Jephthah's daughter had been people were faint. And Jonathan said, My slain, in order that the calamity might be father hath made away with the land."9 always remembered, and that her fate might What does he mean by the word, "made not be consigned to oblivion, it became a law with?" Why, that he had ruined, or among the Jews, that the virgins assembling destroyed them all. Hence, when the oath at the same season should bewail during was transgressed, all kept silence, and no one forty 5 days the sacrifice which had taken dared to bring forth the criminal; and this place; in order that renewing the memory of became afterwards no small matter of blame, it by lamentation, they should make all men for not only are those who break an oath, but wiser for the future; and that they might those also who are privy to it and conceal it,

9. But let us see what follows; "And would not have permitted the virgins to be- Saul said, Let us go down after the strangers, 10

¹ r Sam. xiv. 27.

3 He means the absence of interference, for it was against the law of Moses. Deut. xii. 31.

4 Jud. xi. 39.

5 Some MSS, read four, as the text. Judg. xi. 40.

⁶ Gen. xxii. 12.
7 I Sam. xiv. 28. Or, "recovered their sight;" see Acts xxii. 13, where the same word occurs in reference to the restoration of St. Paul's sight.
8 Lxx., απλλλαχεν. Heb. ¬ΣΣ, E. V., troubled.
9 Used in this passage for the people.
10 Δλοφόνων, usually put in Lxx. for the Philistines.

of soul overpowered these brave men.

and meet not a woman addicted to fornica- nication; both for its present evils, and for tion.4 For honey distils from the lips of an its future punishment. harlot, which at the time may seem smooth to thy throat, but afterward thou wilt find it aside from the subject; but to say thus much, more bitter than gall, and sharper than a two- is no departure from it. For we do not wish edged sword."5 For the harlot knows not to read you histories merely for their own how to love, but only to ensnare; her kiss sake, but that you may correct each of the hath poison, and her mouth a pernicious drug, passions which trouble you: therefore also we And if this does not immediately appear, it make these frequent appeals,9 preparing our is the more necessary to avoid her on that discourse for you in all varieties of style; account, because she veils that destruction, since it is probable that in so large an asand keeps that death concealed, and suffers sembly, there is a great variety of distempers; it not to become manifest at the first. So and our task is to cure not one only, but that if any one pursues pleasure, and a life many different wounds; and therefore it is full of gladness, let him avoid the society of necessary that the medicine of instruction fornicating women, for they fill the minds of should be various. Let us however return their lovers with a thousand conflicts and thither from whence we made this digression: tumults, setting in motion against them con-

draw near hither unto God." For in old tinual strifes and contentions, by means of times God led forth the people to battle; and their words, and all their actions. And just without His consent no one dared to engage as it is with those who are the most virulent in the fight, and war was with them a matter enemies, so the object of their actions and of religion. For not from weakness of body, schemes is to plunge their lovers into shame but from their sins they were conquered, and poverty, and the worst extremities. And whenever they were conquered; and not by in the same manner as hunters, when they might and courage, but by favour from above they prevailed, whenever they did prevail. drive thither the wild animals, in order that Victory and defeat were also to them a means they may put them to death, so also is it of training, and a school of virtue. And not with these women. When they have spread to them only, but to their adversaries; for out on every side the wings of lasciviousness this was made evident to them too, that the by means of the eyes, and dress, and lanfate of battle with the Jews was decided not guage, they afterwards drive in their lovers, by the nature of their arms, but by the life and bind them; nor do they give over until and good works of the warriors. The Mid-they have drunk up their blood, insulting ianites at least perceiving this, and knowing them at last, and mocking their folly, and that people to be invincible, and that to have pouring over them a flood of ridicule. And attacked them with arms and engines of war indeed such a man is no longer worthy of would have been fruitless, and that it was compassion but deserves to be derided and only possible to conquer them by sin, having decked out handsome virgins, and set them in the array, excited the soldiers to lascivithe Wise Man gives this word of exhortation ousness, endeavouring by means of fornica- again, "Drink waters from thine own cistern, tion to deprive them of God's assistance; and from the fountain of thine own well."? which accordingly happened. For when they And again; "Let the hind of thy friendship, had fallen into sin, they became an easy and the foal of thy favours, consort with prey to all; and those whom weapons, and thee." 8 These things he speaks of a wife horses, and soldiers, and so many engines associated with her husband by the law of availed not to capture,3 sin by its nature demarriage. Why leavest thou her who is a livered over bound to their enemies. Shields, helpmate, to run to one who is a plotter and spears, and darts were all alike found against thee? Why dost thou turn away useless; but beauty of visage and wantonness from her who is the partner of thy living, and court her who would subvert thy life? The 10. Therefore one gives this admonition; one is thy member and body, the other is "Observe not the beauty of a strange woman, a sharp sword. Therefore, beloved, flee for-> 11. Perchance we may seem to have fallen "And the Priest said, Let us draw near unto God, And Saul asked counsel of God.

¹¹ Sam. xiv. 36.
2 ἐπὶ τῆς παρατάξεως. An expression so proper to battle, that it must be metaphorical, meaning "they adopted this method of ³ This may perhaps be said with a tacit reference to Samson, as the Midianites did not gain any victory. See Numb. xxxi. 16; Jud. iii. 6. 4 Eccles, ix. 8, 3.

⁵ Prov. v. 3, 4.

⁶ A word often used metaphorically, here probably of wide nets, spread out like wings.

ness, spread out new migs.

7 Prov. v. 15.

8 Prov. v. 15, LXX. There is an ellipsis in the Hebrew text here which may account for the difference between it and the Septuagint.

9 Or, "reproofs," erpomas; but Savile and Oxf. MSS. read exporas, "digressions."

Shall I go down after the strangers? Wilt geance by an oath; that becoming less afraid, ing?

and all were in a state of great trembling and also swore, and swore contrary to the king. terror. But the devil rejoiced, at having randered them all thus anxious. There was by the children, and breaking, and throwing

Thou deliver them into my hands? But on they might more readily bring the offender that day the Lord answered him not." to light.4 But under the influence of anger. Observe the benignity and mildness of God and great madness, and his former unreasonwho loveth man. For He did not launch a ableness, he again does that which is directly thunderbolt, nor shake the earth; but what contrary to what he desires. What need is friends do to friends, when treated contempt- there to enlarge? He commits the matter uously, this the Lord did towards the servant. to a decision by lot; and the lot falleth upon He only received him silently, speaking by Saul, and Jonathan; "And Saul said, Cast His silence, and by it giving utterance to all ye the lot between me and Jonathan; and His wrath. This Saul understood, and said, they cast the lot, and Jonathan was taken. as it is recorded, "Bring near hither all the tribes of the people, and know and see in hast thou done? And Jonathan told him, whom this sin hath been this day. For as saying, I only tasted a little honey on the top the Lord liveth, Who hath saved Israel, of the rod which is in my hand, and, lo! I though the answer be against Jonathan my must die."5 Who is there that these words son, he shall surely die." 2 Seest thou his would not have moved and turned to pity? rashness? Perceiving that his first oath had Consider what a tempest Saul then sustained, been transgressed, he does not even then his bowels being torn with anguish, and the learn self-control, but adds again a second. most profound precipice appearing on either Consider also the malignity of the devil. hand! But nevertheless he did not learn For since he was aware that frequently the self-control, for what does he say? "God son when discovered, and publicly arraigned, do so to me, and more also; for thou shalt is able by the very sight at once to make the surely die this day." 6 Behold again the father relent, and might soften the king's third oath, and not simply the third, but one wrath, he anticipated his sentence by the with a very narrow limit as to time; for he obligation of a second oath; holding him by a kind of double bond, and not permitting him to be the master of his own determina-hurrying him on, constraining him and drivtion, but forcing him on every side to that ing him to this impious murder. Wherefore iniquitous murder. And even whilst the he did not suffer him to assign any future offender was not yet produced, he hath passed day for the sentence, lest there should be any judgment, and whilst ignorant of the crimi- correction of the evil by delay. And the nal, he gave sentence. The father became people said to Saul, "God do so to us, and the executioner; and before the enquiry de-clared his verdict of condemnation! What hath wrought this great salvation in Israel. could be more irrational than this proceed. As the Lord liveth, there shall not an hair of his head fall to the ground; because he hath 12. Saul then having made this declara- wrought a merciful thing from God to-day," 8 tion, the people were more afraid than before, Behold how, in the second place, the people

13. Now recollect, I pray, the cord pulled no one, we are told, of all the people, who on their backs those who pull it. Saul swore answered. "And Saul said, Ye will be in not once or twice, but several times. The bondage, and I, and Jonathan my son, will people swore what was contrary, and strained be in bondage," 3 But what he means is to in the opposite direction. Of necessity then this effect; "You are aiming at nothing else, it followed, that the oath must in any wise than to deliver yourselves to your enemies, be broken through. For it were impossible and to become slaves instead of free men; that all these should keep their oaths. And whilst you provoke God against you, in not delivering up the guilty person." Observe action; but consider how many evils were also another contradiction produced by the springing from it; and how the devil from oath. It had been fitting, if he wished to find thence was preparing the tragedy and usurthe author of this guilt, to have made no such pation of Absalom. For if the king had threat, nor to have bound himself to ven- chosen to resist, and to proceed to the execution of his oath, the people would have been

^{2 1} Sam. xiv. 38. 1 1 Sam. xiv. 36, 37.

³ So LXX., as though there had stood רעבר for ארעבר for פאל one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side, in array against him; and a grievous rebel- of Jonathan, and the general destruction of a again, if the son consulting his own safety of the army, he would straightway have become a parricide. Seest thou not, that rebellion, as well as child-murder, and parricide, and battle, and civil war, and slaughter, and blood, and dead bodies without number, are the consequences of one oath. have been slain, and Jonathan perchance too, and many of the soldiers would have been cut to pieces; and after all the keeping of the oath would not have been forwarded. So that it is not for thee to consider that these events did not occur, but to mark this point, that it was the nature of the case to necessitate the occurrence of such things. ever, the people prevailed. Come then, let us reckon up the perjuries that were the consequence. The oath of Saul was first broken by his son; and again a second and a third, concerning the slaying of his son, by Saul himself. And the people seemed to have kept their oath. Yet if any one closely examines the matter, they too all became liable to the charge of perjury. For they compelled the father of Jonathan to perjure himself, by not surrendering the son to the father. Seest thou how many persons one oath made obnoxious to perjury,2 willingly and unwillingly; how many evils it wrought, how many deaths it caused?

⁴ eis μέσον. 5 1 Sam. xiv. 42, 43, 6 1 Sam. xiv. 7 The words this day are only found in the Septuagint. 8 1 Sam. xiv. 45. 6 1 Sam. xiv. 44.

14. Now in the commencement of this discourse I promised to shew that perjury would in any case result from opposite oaths; but truly the course of the history has proved more than I was establishing. It has exhibited not one, two, or three individuals, but a whole people, and not one, two, or three oaths, but many more transgressed. I might also make mention of another instance, and shew from that, how one oath caused a still greater and more grievous calamity. For one oath3 entailed upon all the Jews the capture of their cities, as well as of their wives and children; the ravages of fire, the invasion of barbarians, the pollution of sacred things, and ten thousand other evils yet more distressing. But I perceive that the discourse is running to a great length. Therefore, dismissing here the narration of this history, I beseech you, together with the beheading of John, to tell one another also of the murder lion' would have been set on foot. And whole people (which did not indeed take place, but which was involved in the obligahad chosen to throw himself into the hands tion of the oaths); and both at home, and in public, and with your wives, and friends, and with neighbours, and with all men in general, to make an earnest business of this matter, and not to think it a sufficient apology that we can plead custom.

15. For that this excuse is a mere pretext, war had perchance broken out. Saul might and that the fault arises not from custom but from listlessness, I will endeavour to convince you from what has already occurred. Emperor has shut up the baths of the city, and has given orders that no one shall bathe; and no one has dared to transgress the law, nor to find fault with what has taken place, nor to allege custom. But even though in weak health perchance, men and women, and children and old men; and many women but recently eased from the pangs of childbirth; though all requiring this as a necessary medicine; bear with the injunction, willingly or unwillingly; and neither plead infirmity of body, nor the tyranny of custom, nor that they are punished, whereas others were the offenders, nor any other thing of this kind, but contentedly put up with this punishment, because they were in expectation of greater evils; and pray daily that the wrath of the Emperor may go no further. Seest thou that where there is fear, the bond of custom is easily relaxed, although it be of exceedingly long standing, and great necessity? To be denied the use of the bath is certainly a grievous matter. For although we be never so philosophic, the nature of the body proves incapable of deriving any benefit for its own health, from the philosophy of the soul. But as to abstinence from swearing, this is exceedingly easy, and brings no injury at all; none to the body, none to the mind; but, on the contrary, great gain, much safety, and abundant wealth. How then is it any thing but absurd, to submit to the greatest hardships, when an Emperor enjoins it; but when God commands nothing grievous nor difficult, but what is very tolerable and easy, to despise or to deride it, and to advance custom as an excuse? Let us not, I entreat, so far despise our own safety, but let us fear God as we fear man. I know that ye shudder at hearing this, but what deserves to be shuddered at is that ye do not pay even so much respect to God; and that whilst ve diligently observe the Emperor's decrees, ye trample under foot those which are divine, and which have come down from heaven; and consider diligence concerning these a secondary object. For what apology will above.

¹ τυραννίς, here used for "rebellion" or "usurpation," as just

2 It seems that all actually remained under this guilt. The only remedy would have been in Jonathan's confessing as soon as he knew his trespass, and an offering being made for him, according to Lev. v. 4-6, see also Lev. v. 1, iv. 22, and xxxvii. 2.

3 See Hom. XIX.

there be left for us, and what pardon, if after will not be purified of his sin." It is imso much admonition we persist in the same practices. For I began this admonition at the very commencement of the calamity which has taken hold of the city, and that is now on the point of coming to an end; but we have not as yet thoroughly put in practice even one precept. How then can we ask a removal of the evils which still beset us, when we have not been able to perform a single precept? How can we expect a change for the better? How shall we pray? With what tongue shall we call upon God? For if we perform the law, we shall enjoy much pleasure, when the Emperor is reconciled to the city. But if we remain in the transgression, shame and reproach will be ours on every hand, inasmuch as when God hath freed us from the danger we have continued in the same listlessness, undress the souls of those who swear frequently, and to expose to view the wounds and the bruises which they receive daily from and of the instruction afforded to others. oaths! We should then need neither admonition nor counsel; for the sight of these wounds would avail more powerfully than all that could be said, to withdraw from their wickedness even those who are most addicted o this wicked practice. Nevertheless, if it be not possible to spread before the eyes the shameful state of their soul, it may be possible to expose it to the thoughts, and to display it in its rottenness and corruption. For as it saith, "As a servant that is continually as it saith, "As a servant that is continually beaten will not be clear of a bruise, so he that sweareth and nameth God continually but Ducavas prefers the former, and quotes four Mss. A problem of the former, and quotes four Mss. for it.

possible, utterly impossible, that the mouth which is practised in swearing, should not frequently commit perjury. Therefore, I beseech you all, by laying aside this dreadful and wicked habit, to win another crown. And since it is every where sung of our city, that first of all the cities of the world, she bound on her brow 2 the name of Christians, so let all have to say, that Antioch alone, of all the cities throughout the wold, hath expelled all oaths from her own borders. Yea, rather, should this be done, she will not be herself crowned alone, but will also carry others along with her to the same pitch of zeal. And as the name of Christians having had its origin here, hath as it were from a kind of fountain overflown all the world, even so this good work, having taken its root and starting-point from hence, will make all men 16. Oh! that it were possible for me to that inhabit the earth your disciples; so that a double and treble reward may arise to you, at once on account of your own good works, This will be to you the brightest of diadems! This will make your city a mother city, not on earth, but in the heavens! This will stand by us at That Day, and bring us the crown of righteousness; which God grant that we may all obtain, through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, with Whom to the Father, together with the Holy Spirit, be glory, now and ever, and world without end, Amen.

HOMILY XV.

Again on the calamity of the city of Antioch. That fear is every way profitable. That sorrow is more useful than laughter. And upon the saying, "Remember that thou walkest in the midst of snares." And that it is worse to exact an oath, than to commit murder said was unseasonable.3 For on the days of to enter upon the fast, as if the belly were the fast, counsel and admonition on that subject are indeed not at all necessary; the very

1. To-day, and on the former Sabbath, presence of these days exciting even those it had behoved us to enter on the subject of who are the most remiss to the effort of fastfasting; nor let any one suppose that what I ing. But since many men, both when about on the point of being delivered over to a sort of lengthened seige, lay in beforehand a stock of gluttony and drunkenness; and again, on being set at liberty, going forth as from a long tamine and a grievous prison, run to the r Ecclus, ix. 13.

3 As being at the close of the week, when the fast was just going to be intermitted, or at least relaxed.

table with unseemly greediness, just as if they evil concupiscence is repressed, and every gained through the fast, by an excess of gluttony; it might have been needful, that then as well as now, we should agitate the subject of temperance. Nevertheless, we have neither lately said any thing of that kind, neither shall we now speak upon it. For the fear of the impending calamity suffices, instead of the strongest admonition and counsel, to sober the soul of every one. For who is there so miserable and degraded, as to be drunken in such a tempest? Who is there so insensible, when the city is thus agitated, and such a shipwreck is threatened, as not to become abstemious and watchful, and more thoroughly reformed by this distress than by any other sort of admonition to effect as much as fear does. And this very thing it is now possible to shew from the events which have taken place. How many words then did we spend before this in exhorting many that were listless, and counselling them to abstain from the theatres, and the now they are all fled hither from thence to the church, and all alike join in praising our God!

fear? If fear were not a good thing, fathers would not have set tutors over their chil- and thanksgivings, and tears, instead of rude dren; nor lawgivers magistrates for cities. What can be more grievous than hell? Yet for the fear of hell will bring us the crown of the kingdom. Where fear is, there is no envy; where fear is, the love of money does not disturb; where fear is, wrath is quenched.

were striving to undo again the advantage unreasonable passion is exterminated. And even as in a house, where there is always a soldier under arms, no robber, nor housebreaker, nor any such evil doer will dare to make his appearance; so also while fear holds possession of our minds, none of the base passions will readily attack us, but all fly off and are banished, being driven away in every direction by the despotic power of fear. And not only this advantage do we gain from fear, but also another which is far greater. For not only, indeed, does it expel our evil passions, but it also introduces every kind of virtue with great facility. Where fear exists, there is zeal in alms-giving, and intensity of prayer, and tears warm and frequent, and groans fraught with compunction. For nothand counsel? For discourse will not be able ing so swallows up sin, and makes virtue to increase and flourish, as a perpetual state of dread. Therefore it is impossible for him who does not live in fear to act aright; as, on the other hand, it is impossible that the man who lives in fear can go wrong.

3. Let us not then grieve, beloved, let us impurities of these places! And still they not despond on account of the present tribudid not abstain; but always on this day they lation, but let us admire the well-devised plan flocked together to the unlawful spectacles of of God's wisdom. For by these very means the dancers; and they held their diabolical through which the devil hoped to overturn assembly in opposition to the full congrega- our city, hath God restored and corrected it. tion of God's Church; so that their venement The devil animated certain lawless men to shouts, borne in the air from that place, re-treat the very statues of the Emperor consounded against the psalms which we were temptuously, in order that the very foundasinging here. But behold, now whilst we tions of the city might be razed. But God were keeping silence, and saying nothing on employed this same circumstance for our the subject, they of themselves have shut up greater correction; driving out all sloth by their orchestra; and the Hippodrome has the dread of the expected wrath; and the been left deserted! Before this, many of thing has turned out directly opposite to what our own people used to hasten to them; but the devil wished, by the means which he had himself prepared. For our city is being purified every day; and the lanes and crossings, and places of public concourse, are freed 2. Seest thou what advantage is come of from lascivious and voluptuous songs; and turn where we will there are supplications, laughter; there are words of sound wisdom instead of obscene language, and our whole nothing is more profitable than the fear of it; city has become a Church, the workshops being closed, and all being engaged throughout the day in these general prayers; and calling upon God in one united voice with much earnestness. What preaching, what admonition, what counsel, what length of time had ever availed to accomplish these things?

> 4. For this then let us be thankful, and let us not be petulant or discontented; for that fear is a good thing, what we have said hath made manifest. But hear Solomon thus uttering a lesson of wisdom concerning it: Solomon, who was nourished in every luxury,

¹ Or, "right opposite," ἀντικαθίστασαν. The word may be taken to imply that those spectacles were held in the immediate neighbourhood of the church. Stage plays, and players, and all who took part in the public games, were excluded from communion. The act, considered little short of idolatry, with which it was connected, was denounced in several Councils. See lingham, b. xvi.

and enjoyed much security. What then does which are not less than these. For each one he say? "It is better to go to the house of is also put in mind of his own sins, and of mourning than to the house of laughter." the fearful Tribunal; of the great Account, What sayest thou, I ask? Is it better to go and of the Judgment; and although he may where there is weeping, lamentation, and have been suffering a thousand evils from groans, and anguish, and so much sadness, than where there is the dance, the cymbals, he will receive and take back with him the and laughter, and luxury, and full eating and medicine for all these things. For reflecting drinking? Yes, verily, he replies. And tell that he himself, and all those who swell with me why is it so, and for what reason? Be- pride, will in a little while suffer the same cause, at the former place, insolence is bred, at the latter, sobriety. And when a person goes to the banquet of one more opulent, he will no longer behold his own house with the same pleasure, but he comes back to his wife heart; and hence he will hereafter be more in a discontented mood; and in discontent meek, and gentle, and benignant to all; as he partakes of his own table; and is peevish towards his own servants, and his own children, and every body in his house; perceiving his own poverty the more forcibly by the wealth of others. And this is not the only said, "It is better to go to the house of evil; but that he also often envies him who hath invited him to the feast, and returns From the one grows listlessness, from the home having received no benefit at all. But with regard to the house of mourning, noth-contempt; from the other, fear; a fear which ing of this sort can be said. On the contrary, much spiritual wisdom is to be gained there, If fear were not a good thing, Christ would as well as sobriety. For when once a person not have expended such long and frequent hath passed the threshold of a house which discourses on the subject of punishment, and contains a corpse, and hath seen the departed vengeance to come. Fear is nothing less one lying speechless, and the wife tearing her than a wall, and a defence, and an impregnahair, mangling her cheeks, and wounding her ble tower. For indeed we stand in need of arms, he is subdued; his countenance be- much defence, seeing that there are many comes sad; and every one of those who sit ambushments on every side. Even as this down together can say to his neighbour but same Solomon again says admonishingly, this, "We are nothing, and our wickedness ment of Solomon-that sentiment which is so an enemy. Seest thou how much better that others, and have a cause for sadness at home, thing; and that all present things, whether pleasant or painful, are transitory; he thus returns to his house, disburdened of all sadness and envy, with a light and buoyant well as more wise; the fear of things to come having made its way into his soul, and consumed all the thorns.

6. All this Solomon perceived when he mourning than to the house of drinking."4 other an earnest anxiety. From the one, conducts us to the practice of every virtue. "Perceive that thou goest in the midst of is inexpressible!"2 What can be more full snares, and that thou walkest on the battleof wisdom than these words, when we both ments of cities."5 Oh with how many good acknowledge the insignificance of our nature, things is this saying pregnant! Yea, not and accuse our own wickedness, and account less than the former! Let us then, write it, present things as nothing? Giving utterance, each of us, upon our minds, and carry it though in different words, to that very sentiabout ever in our memories, and we shall not easily commit sin. Let us write it there, marvellous and pregnant with Divine wisdom having first learnt it with the utmost exact--"Vanity of vanities, all is vanity." He ness. For he does not say, "Observe" that who enters the house of mourning, weeps thou goest in the midst of snares; but, "Perforthwith for the departed, even though he be ceive!" And for what reason did he sav, "Discern?" He tells us that the snare is house is than the other? for there, though concealed; for this is indeed a snare, when he be a friend, he envies; but here, though the destruction does not appear openly, and he be an enemy, he weeps. This is a thing the injury is not manifest, which lies hidden which God requires of us above all, that we on all sides. Therefore he says, "Pershould not insult over those who have occacive!" Thou needest much reflection and sioned us grief. And not only may we diligent scrutiny. For even as boys conceal gather these advantages, but others also traps with earth, so the devil covers up our sins with the pleasures of this life.

3 Eccles. i. 2.

¹ Eccles, vii. 3. This may be a proverbial misquotation; St. Chrysostom afterwards adopts the txx., house of drinking; but his remarks are equally suitable to the E. V. feating. Laughter is mentioned in verse 4.

² This seems to be a proverbial saying, from the next sentence.

^{7.} But "perceive;" scrutinizing diligently;

⁵ Ecclus ix, 13. 4 Eccles. vii. 3,
 6 βλέπε, "see," as anything obvious.
 7 ἐπίγνωθι, "perceive," implies taking pains to discover.

and if any kind of gain falls in thy way, look mounted aloft will no longer admire any not only at the gain, but inspect it carefully, gain; and shouldest thou perceive this, fly from it. Again, when some delight or pleasure may chance to present itself, look not only at the pleasure; but lest somewhere in the depth of the pleasure some iniquity should lie enveloped, search closely, and if thou discoverest it, hasten away! And should any one counsel, or flatter, or cajole, or promise honours, or any other such thing whatever, let us make the closest investigation; and look at the matter on all sides, lest something pernicious, something perilous, should perchance befall us through this ad-clamation, "The world is crucified unto vice, or honour, or attention, and we run me." Hence also his admonition, "Set upon it hastily and unwittingly. For if there were only one or two snares, the precaution What kinds of things do you speak of pray? would be easy. But now, hear how Solomon Where the sun is, where the moon is? Nay, speaks when he wishes to set forth the multi- saith he. But where then? Where angels tude of these; "Perceive that thou goest in are? where archangels? where the cherubim? the midst of snares;" he does not say, that where the seraphim are? Nay, saith he thou "goest by" snares, but "in the midst" of snares. On either side are the pit-falls; the right hand of God," on either side the deceits. One goes into the forum; one sees an enemy; one is inflamed this continually, that even as to the bird by the bare sight of him! one sees a friend caught in the snare, wings are of no service, honoured; one is envious! One sees a poor but he beats them about vainly, and to no man; one despises and takes no notice of him! One sees a rich man; one envies him! One sees some one injuriously treated; one fully captivated by wicked lust, but struggle recoils in disgust! One sees some one acting injuriously; one is indignant! One sees a handsome woman, and is caught! Seest that they may avoid snares. For this reason thou, beloved, how many snares there are? Therefore it is said, "Remember that thou may avoid sin. What pardon then, or what goest in the midst of snares." There are snares in the house, snares at the table, and snares in social intercourse. Very often a person unwittingly, in the confidence of of those matters which ought not to be repeated again, and so great a peril is brought about, that the whole family is thereby ruined!

into these matters. Often has a wife, often imitate the forethought and care of the irrahave children, often have friends, often have tional animals! Hence how often do we, neighbours, proved a saare to the unheeding! from beholding a woman, suffer a thousand And why, it is asked, are there so many evils; returning home, and entertaining an snares? That we may not fly low, but seek inordinate desire, and experiencing anguish the things that are above. For just as birds, for many days; yet, nevertheless, we are not as long as they cleave the upper air, are not made discreet; but when we have scarcely easily caught; so also thou, as long as thou cured one wound, we again fall into the same lookest to things above, wilt not be easily mischief, and are caught by the same means; captured, whether by a snare, or by any other and for the sake of the brief pleasure of a device. The devil is a fowler. Soar, then, glance, we sustain a kind of lengthened and too high for his arrows." The man who hath continual torment, But if we learn con-thing in the affairs of this life. But as when lest somewhere death and sin lurk within the we have ascended to the top of the mountains, the city and its walls seem to us to be but small, and the men appear to us to be going along upon the earth like ants; so when thou hast ascended to the heights of spiritual wisdom, nothing upon the earth will be able to fascinate thee; but every thing, yea even riches, and glory, and honour, and whatever else there be of that kind, will appear insignificant when thou regardest heavenly things. According to Paul all the glories of the present life appeared trifling, and more unprofitable than dead things. Hence his exyour affections on things above."3 Above? But where then? "Where Christ sitteth at

9. Let us obey then, and let us think of purpose; so also to thee there is no utility in thy reasonings,4 when once thou art poweras much as thou mayest, thou art captured! For this reason wings are given to birds; men have the power of thinking; that they excuse will be ours, when we become more senseless than the brutes? For the bird which has once been captured by the snare, yet afterwards escaped, and the deer which friendship, gives utterance to some particular has fallen into the net, but has broken through it, are hard to be captured again with the like; since experience becomes a teacher of caution to every one But we, though often snared in the same nets, fall into the same again; and 8. On every side then let us search closely though honoured with reason, we do not stantly to repeat to ourselves this saying, we walk far off from them! Let us discern the shall be kept from all these grievous evils,

See on Rom. iii. 31, Hom. VIII.

10. The beauty of woman is the greatest accuse the objects, but ourselves, and our own ferent, and yet are apt to make us stumble carelessness. Nor should we say, Let there be no women, but Let there be no adulteries. We should not say, Let there be no beauty, but Let there be no fornication. We should not say, Let there be no belly, but let there be no gluttony; for the belly makes not the gluttony, but our negligence. We should not say, that it is because of eating and drinking that all these evils exist; for it is not because of this, but because of our carelessness and insatiableness. Thus the devil neither ate nor drank, and yet he fell! Paul foul deeds, or blows, and wounds, and murate and drank, and ascended up to heaven! How many do I hear say, Let there be no the very language of banter; since these poverty! Therefore let us stop the mouths things have proved the root of subsequent of those who murmur at such things. For it evils. Therefore Paul saith, "Let no foolish is blasphemy to utter such complaints. To talking nor jesting proceed out of thy such then, let us say, Let there be no mean-mouth." For although this seems to be a ness of spirit. For poverty brings innumerable good things into our state of life, and cause of much mischief to us. Again, to live without poverty riches would be unprofitable. in luxury does not seem to be a manifest and Hence we should accuse neither the one nor admitted crime; but then it brings forth in the other of these; for poverty and riches are us great evils,—drunkenness, violence, extorboth alike weapons which will tend to virtue, tion, and rapine, For the prodigal and if we are willing. As then the courageous sumptuous liver, bestowing extravagant servsoldier, whichever weapon he takes, displays ice upon the belly, is often compelled to his own virtue, so the unmanly and cowardly steal, and to seize the property of others, and one is encumbered by either. And that thou to use extortion and violence. If, then, thou mayest learn that this is true, remember, I avoidest luxurious living, thou removest the pray, the case of Job; who became both rich, foundation of extortion, and rapine, and and likewise poor, and handled both these drunkenness, and a thousand other evils; cutweapons alike, and conquered in both. When ting away the root of iniquity from its exhe was rich, he said, "My door was open to tremity. Hence Paul saith, that "she who every comer." 2 But when he had become liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." 5 poor, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away. As it seemed good unto the horse-race, or to play at dice, does not seem, Lord, so hath it come to pass." 3 When he to most men, to be an admitted crime; but it was rich, he shewed much hospitality; when he was poor, much patience. And thou, then, -art thou rich? Display much bountifulness! Hast thou become poor? Shew much endurance and patience! For neither is wealth an evil, nor poverty in itself; but these things, either of them, become so according to the free choice of those who make use of them. Let us school ourselves then to entertain no such opinions on these subjects; nor let us accuse the works of God, but the wicked choice of men. Riches are not able to profit the little-minded: nor is poverty able ever to injure the magnanimous. 11. Let us then discern the snares, and

i. e., Ecclus. ix. 20.

Job i. 21. This last clause is added in Lxx. and Vulg.

precipices, and not even approach them! This will be the foundation of our greatest snare. Or rather, not the beauty of woman, safety not only to avoid things sinful, but but unchastened gazing! For we should not those things which seem indeed to be indiftowards sin. For example; to laugh, to speak jocosely, does not seem an acknowledged sin, but it leads to acknowledged sin. Thus laughter often gives birth to foul discourse, and foul discourse to actions still more foul. Often from words and laughter proceed railing and insult; and from railing and insult, blows and wounds; and from blows and wounds, slaughter and murder. If, then, thou wouldest take good counsel for thyself, avoid not merely foul words, and ders, but unseasonable laughter, itself, and small thing in itself, it becomes, however, the Again, to go to the theatres, or to survey the introduces into our life an infinite host of miseries. For spending time in the theatres produces fornication, intemperance, and every kind of impurity. The spectacle of the horse-race also brings about fightings, railings, blows, insults, and lasting enmities. And a passion for dice-playing hath often caused blasphemies, injuries, anger, reproaches, and a thousand other things more fearful still.

12. Therefore, let us not only avoid sins, but those things too which seem to be indifterent, yet by degrees lead us into these misdeeds. He, indeed, who walks by the side of a precipice, even though he may not fall over, trembles: and very often he is overset by this same trembling, and falls to the bottom. So also he who does not avoid sins from afar, but walks near them, will live in fear, and will often fall into them. Besides, he who eagerly looks at strange beauties, although he may not commit adultery, hath in so doing entertained lust; and hath become already an adulterer according to the declaration of Christ; and often by this very lust he is carried on to the actual sin. Let us then withdraw ourselves far from sins. Dost thou wish to live soberly? Avoid not only adultery, but also the licentious glance! Dost thou wish to be far removed from foul words? Avoid not only foul words, but also inordinate laughter, and every kind of lust. Dost thou wish to keep far from committing murders? Avoid railing too. Dost thou wish to keep aloof from drunkenness? luxury and sumptuous tables, and pluck up the vice by the roots.

⁴ A quotation made up of two passages, in Ephes. iv. 29, and Ephes. v. 4. 5 1 Tim. v. 6.

13. The licentiousness of the tongue is a great snare, and needs a strong bridle. Therefore also some one saith, "His own lips are a powerful snare to a man, and he is snared by the words of his own mouth." 2 Above all the other members, then, let us control this; let us bridle it; and let us expel from the mouth railings, and contumelies, and foul and slanderous language, and the evil habit of oaths. For again our discourse hath brought us to the same exhortation. But I had arranged with your charity, yesterday, that I would say no more concerning this precept, forasmuch as enough has been said upon it on all the foregoing days. But what is to become of me? I cannot bear to desist from this counsel, until I see that ye have put it in practice; since Paul also, when he saith to the Galatians," Henceforth let no man trouble me,"3 appears again to have met and addressed them.4 Such are the paternal bowels; although they say they will depart, yet they depart not, until they see that their sons are chastened. Have ye heard to-day what the prophet speaks to us con-cerning oaths? "I lifted up mine eyes, and I saw," saith he, "and, behold, a flying sickle, the length thereof twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits; and he said to me, What seest thou? and I said, I see a flying sickle, twenty cubits in length, and ten cubits in breadth. It shall also enter into the house," saith he, 'of every one that sweareth in my name, and shall remain 5 in the midst, and shall pull down the stones and the wood."6 What, forsooth, is this which is here spoken? and for what reason is it in the form of a "sickle," and that a "flying sickle," that vengeance is seen to pursue the swearers? In order that thou mayest see that the judgment is inevitable, and the punishment not to be eluded. For from a flying sword some one might perchance be able to escape, but from a sickle, falling upon the neck, and acting in the place of a cord,7 no one can escape. And when wings too are added, what further hope is there of safety? But on what account doth it pull down the stones and the wood of the swearer's house? In order that the ruin may be a correction to all. For since it is necessary that the earth must hide the swearer when dead; the very sight of his ruined house, now become a heap, will be an admonition to all who pass by and observe it, not to venture on the like, lest they suffer the like; and it will be a lasting witness against the sin of the departed. The sword is not so piercing as the nature of an oath! The sabre is not so destructive as the stroke of an oath! The swearer, although he seems to live, is already dead, and hath received the fatal blow. And as the man who hath received the halter.8 before he hath gone out of the city and come to the pit,9 and seen the executioner standing over him, is dead from the time he passed the doors of the hall of justice: so also the swearer.

14. All this let us consider, and let us not put our brethren on oath. What dost thou, O man? At the sacred table thou exactest an oath, and where Christ lies slain, there thou slayest thine own brother. Robbers, indeed, murder on the highways; but thou slayest the son in the presence of the mother: committing a murder more accursed than Cain himself; for he slew his brother in solitude and only with present death; but thou slayest thy brother in the midst of the church, and that with the deathless death that is to come! For think you that the church was made for this purpose, that we might swear? Yea, for this it was made, that we might pray! Is the Table placed there, that we may make adjurations? It is placed there to this end, that we may loose sins, not that we may bind them. But thou, if thou heedest nothing else, reverence at least that book, which thou reachest forth in putting the oath; and open the Gospel, which thou takest in hand when thou biddest swear; and when thou

¹ Matt. v. 28. 2 Prov. vi. 2. 3 Gal. vi. 17.
4 He may mean Acts xviii. 23, but this seems to have been earlier.
Or perhaps that he spoke afterwards to those who held the like error. See on Acts, Hom. XXXIX.
5 καταλύσει in LXX. means this, though it is possible St. Chrys.
may have taken it in the transitive sense, "shall destroy."

⁶ Zech. v. 1, 4. St. Chrysostom, it should be observed, here only quotes a portion of these verses. See Hom. IX. fin. ? From its hooked shape: ¿φόρς is rather the pointed weapon for stalbing; μάχαιρα the edged weapon for cutting.

⁹ Bapappov. Into which his body would be thrown.

hearest what Christ there declares concerning oaths, shudder and desist! What then does He there say concerning oaths? "But I say unto you, Swear not at all." And dost thou convert the Law which forbids swearing into an oath. Oh, what contempt! Oh, what outrage! For thou doest just the same thing as if any one should bid the lawgiver, who prohibits murder, become himself a party to the murder. Not so much do I lament and weep, when I hear that some persons are slain 3 upon the highway, as I groan, and shed tears, and am horrified, when I see any one coming near this Table, placing his hands upon it, and touching the Gospels, and swearing! Art thou in doubt, I ask, concerning money, and wouldest thou slay a soul? What gainest thou to match the injury thou doest to thine own soul, and to thy neighbour? If thou believest that the man is true, do not impose the obligation of the oath; but if thou knowest him to be a liar. do not force him to commit perjury. "But that I may have a full assurance:" saith one. Verily, when thou hast not sworn him, then thou wilt receive a good and full assurance.4

15. For now, when thou hast returned home, thou wilt be continually the prey of conscience, whilst reasoning thus with thyself; "Was it to no purpose, then, that I put him upon his oath? Was he not really perjured? Have I not become the cause of the sin?" But if thou dost not put him upon his oath, thou wilt receive much consolation on returning home, rendering thanks to God, and saying, "Blessed be God, that I restrained myself, and did not compel him to swear vainly, and to no purpose. Away with gold! Perish the money!" for that which specially gives us assurance is, that we did not transgress the law, nor compel another to do it. Consider, for Whose sake thou didst not put any one on his oath; and this will suffice thee for refreshment and consolation. Often, indeed, when a fight takes place, we bear being insulted with fortitude, and we say to the insulter, "What shall I do with thee? Such an one hinders me, who is thy patron; he keeps back my hands." And this is sufficient to console us. So when thou art about to put any one on his oath, restrain thyself; and stop; and say to him who is about to swear, "What shall I do with thee? God hath forbidden me to put any one on oath. He now holds me back." This suffices both for the honour of the Lawgiver, and for thy safety, and for keeping him in fear who is ready to swear. For when he seeth that we are thus afraid to put others on oath, much more will he himself be afraid to swear rashly. Wouldest thou say thus, thy return to thine own home would be with much fulness of assurance. Hear God, therefore, in His Commandments, that He may Himself hear thee in thy prayers! This word shall be written in heaven, and shall stand by thee on the Day of Judgment, and shall discharge many sins.

16. This also let us consider not only with respect to an oath, but to every thing. And when we are about to do any good action for God's sake, and it is found to bring loss with it, let us look not merely at the loss connected with the matter, but at the gain which we shall reap by doing it for God. That is to say, Hath any one insulted thee? Bear it nobly! And thou wilt do so, if thou thinkest not of the insult merely, but of the dignity of Him who commands thee to bear it, and thou bearest it meekly. Hast thou given an alms? Think not of the outlay, but of the produce which arises from the outlay. Hast thou been mulcted of money? Give thanks, and regard not only the pain which is the result of the loss, but the gain which comes of thanksgiving. If we thus regulate ourselves, none of those heavy events which may befal us will give us pain; but from those things which may seem to be grievous, we shall be even gainers, and loss will be sweeter and more desired than wealth, pain than pleasure, and mirth and insult than honour. Thus all things adverse will turn to our gain. And here we shall enjoy much tranquillity, and there we shall attain the kingdom of heaven; which God grant that we may all be deemed worthy to obtain,5 by the grace and

¹ Matt. v. 34.
² Upon oaths, see Bingham, b. xxi. c. vii. sec. 4, sqq., who however does not mention this use of the allar.
³ σφαζομένους. The present participle is accounted for by the fact that robbers took advantage of those troubles. See Libanius, fact final robbers took advantage of those troubles.

Or, de Sedit, ad fin.

4πληροφορία, This word occurs Heb, vi. 11, x. 22; and 1 Thess.
i. 5; and Col. ii. 2. The elliptical sense of the word will be understood by a reference to these passages.

⁵ Of remission of sins in the Holy Eucharist, see Theodorus in Cat. on r Cor. xii. 31. "He that practiseth the greatest and strongly forbidden sins, ought to abstain from the mysteries; for Cat. on r Cor. xii. 31. "He that practiseth the greatest and strongly forbidden sins, ought to abstain from the mysteres; for to such an one it is not good to partake of them, until he first abstain from the miss ans, through fear of the laws laid down. But of other things, such as must befall men ... if we fall into such, it is not well to deprive ourselves of the mysteries, but to come in the greater fear ... inasmuch as remission also comes to us from thence, when we abstain from what is in our power, and are found not neglectful of the rest; beside spiritual aid for the easier amendment of life. For all things that are added to us by the death of Christ, the same it is just should be accomplished by the symbols of His death." Ed. Cramer, p. 222. This is implied in our own service, in the prayer after communicating, and in the final answers of the catechism. So too in the Roman Canon of the Mass, "Deliver me, by this Thy Holy Body and Blood, from all my iniquities and all evils." Lit. of St. lissai, later the Gospel. ... "We pray and beseech Thy goodness, O' I hou Lover of men that this Mystery which Thou didst institute for our salvation, be away of our sins, and the sum of the prople back... "Renaude, L. i. pp. 9, 98. It. St. Cyrll, in Orat, Tacis. "that we may offer the this holy, reasonable, spiritual, unbloody Sacrifice for the remission of our sins, and the pardon of the ignorances of Thy people. 16. p. 30, and Goar, p. 164. So Lit. St. Greg, after the Invocation of the Holy Ghost, Ren. p. 106. Lit. St. Marc. pp.

through Whom and with Whom, to the Father end. Amen. with the Holy Spirit, be glory, dominion, and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, honour, now and ever, and world without 143, 158; Canon Univ. Ethiop. p. 502; Lit. of St. Chrys., Prayer of Oblation, Goar, p. 74. See also the note on Tertulian referred is one of such and termal life.

HOMILY XVI.

This Homily was delivered on the occasion of the Prefect entering the Church, for the purpose of pacifying the minds of the people, in consequence of a rumour of an intended sack 2 having been announced to him, when all were meditating flight. It treats also on the subject of avoiding oaths, and on the words of the Apostle, "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ."3

I. I COMMEND the Prefect's consideration, but men!" This is indeed the very reason that the earth would open and swallow me up, structed by him; but you ought yourselves to the dreaded event. be teachers to all the unbelievers.6 Paul did proaching evils, when we became through this alarm more timid than any hare? "But what could we do," says some one, "we are that seeing the city agitated, and every one why we ought not to be terrified, because we purposing a flight, he hath come here and are men, and not brutes. For these are afforded you consolation, and hath led you scared by all manner of sounds and noises; to entertain favourable hopes. But for you because they have not reasoning power, which I blushed, and was ashamed, that after these is adequate to dispel fear. But thou who long and frequent discourses ye should have hast been honoured with the gift of speech needed consolation from without.4 I longed and reason, how is it that thou sinkest to their ignoble condition? Hath some one enwhen I heard him discoursing with you, tered the city, and announced the march of alternately administering comfort, or blaming soldiers against it? Be not terrified, but such ill-timed and senseless cowardice. For leaving him, bend the knee: call upon thy it was not becoming, that you should be in- Lord: groan bitterly, and He will keep off

2. Thou hadst heard indeed a false report not permit even going to law before the un- of the march, and wert in danger of being believers; but thou, after so much admoni- severed from the present life. But that tion of our Fathers,8 hast needed teachers blessed Job, when the messengers came one from without; and certain vagabonds and after another, and he had heard them anmiscreants have again unsettled this great nouncing their dreadful news, and adding city, and set it upon flight. With what eyes thereto the insupportable destruction of his shall we hereafter look upon the unbelievers, children, neither cried nor groaned, but we who were so timid and cowardly? With turned to prayer, and gave thanks to the what tongue shall we speak to them, and Lord. Him do thou too imitate; and when persuade them to exercise courage as to ap- any comer announces that soldiers have encircled the city, and are about to plunder its wealth, flee to thy Lord and say, "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; as it seemeth good to the Lord, so is it done. Blessed be the name of the Lord for ever." The experience of the actual events did not terrify him; yet the mere report frightens thee. And how are we to be accounted of, who when we are commanded to boldly to encounter death itself, are thus affrighted by a false rumour! The man who is bewildered con-

ι ἄρχοντος, some read κόμητος, which seems to imply that this

¹ άρχοντος, some read κόμητος, which seems to imply that this officer was the Pratectian Praefect of the East. See nate of Duceus I. Illemont, art. xxxiv. calls him "le Gouverneur." ² πραίδες, from the Latin Præda. Duceus takes it with πρός τὸν άρχοντα, making it only a confiscation. Montfaucon does net agree with Tillemont in dating the Homily, but it must have been delivered after the return of Cæsarius to the Emperor, and before any news from him. The Prefect may be Hellebichus, who was left at Antioch: but see Pref.

ε, from one outside the pale of the church.
 δωκαρον. This word favours the supposition, that all real ground of fear was at an end.
 Γερρρειτs from this, and from what follows, that the Prefect

⁷ z Cor. vi. z.

⁸ See sec. 3.

⁹ He seems to mean, "wert almost dead with fear." But this harsh: the text may be in fault.

10 He means that Job had no such command.

structs fear which is unreal; and trouble which houses of swearers. Now, out of all these pieces even that which is real. Seest thou are bursting forth, and all on board are in is in God, remain unshaken and immoveable. disaster, were overturned by a mere rumour, were meditating.

now have I been able to recover myself; since season of practice. anger and sorrow have laid such seige to my For who would not feel provoked and therefore that free utterance may be given us able to shake off this sadness, and to hold up again a little; for indeed this shame on account of your pusillanimity hath greatly depressed our spirits.

4. Lately, I addressed to your Charity many things concerning the snares lying on all sides of us; and concerning fear and sadness, sorrow and pleasure; and also concerning the sickle that flieth down upon the

is not visible; but he who abides in a settled many matters, I would have you especially and tranquil condition of soul, breaks in to remember what I said respecting the "winged sickle," and its settling in the swearnot pilots; when the sea is raging, and the er's house; and pulling down the stones and clouds are rushing together, and the thunders the wood, and consuming the whole mass. And withal, take heed to this; that it is the confusion, they seat themselves at the helm extreme of folly to swear by taking the Goswithout turnult or disturbance; giving earnest | pels, and to turn the very Law which forbids heed to their own art, and considering how swearing into an oath; and that it is better to they may ward off the effects of the approach- suffer loss of property than to impose an oath ing storm. Be these thy example; and lay- on our neighbours; since this is a great ing hold of the sacred anchor, the hope that honour to be done to God. For when thou sayest to God, "For thy sake I have not put "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, such a one, who hath robbed and injured me, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a on his oath," God will pay thee back a great foolish man, which built his house upon the recompense on account of this honour, both sand; and the rain descended, and the floods here and hereafter. Say these things to came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that others, and observe them also yourselves. I house; and it fell, and great was the fall of know that in this place we become more revit." Seest thou that it is the character of erent, and lay aside every evil habit. But folly to fall down headlong, and to be over- what is to be aimed at is, not that we be thrown? Or rather, we were not only re- lovers of wisdom here only, but that when duced to the condition of that foolish man, we depart, we may take this reverence out but our fall was still more wretched. For with us, where we especially need it. For the house of that man fell down after the those who carry water do not merely have rivers and rains had descended, and the their vessels full when near the fountain, and winds had beaten upon it; but we, when there empty them when they reach home, but there were no winds striking, nor floods invading, they put them away with especial caution, nor blasts assaulting, before the experience of that they may not be overturned, and their labours rendered useless. Let us all imitate and dropped at once all the philosophy we these persons; and when we come home, let us strictly retain what has been spoken; since 3. What think ye are now my thoughts? if ye here have gotten full, but return home How should I conceal,—yea, bury myself? empty, having the vessels of your understand-How must I blush with shame? If I had not ings destitute of what ye have heard, there been forcibly urged by our Fathers, I would will be no advantage from your replenishment not have arisen, I would not have spoken, here. Shew me not the wrestler in the place whilst my mind was darkened with sadness of exercise, but of actual contest; and religbecause of your pusillanimity. But neither ion not at the season of hearing, but at the

5. Thou applaudest what is said now. When thou art required to swear, then reindignant, that after so much teaching ye member all these things. If ye quickly acshould need the instructions of Gentiles, that complish this law, we will advance our teachye might be comforted and persuaded to bear ing to other and greater things. Lo! this is in a manly way the present alarm. Pray ye the second year that I am discoursing to your Charity; and I have not yet been able in opening our mouth; and that we may be to explain a hundred lines of the Scriptures. And the reason is, that we need to learn of us what ye might reduce to practice at home, and of yourselves; and thus the greater part of our exhortation is consumed on ethical discourse. But this ought not to have been so; the regulation of manners you ought to

 $^{^2}$ $\sigma \tau (\chi_0)$. Lines, or sentences. The ancients had two kind of verses, one of which they called $\sigma \tau (\chi_0)$, and the other $\sigma \sigma_0$ the stichol were lines that contained a certain number of letters, and were not limited by the sense as our modern verses. The Codex Bezz and Alex, are so divided into parts, shorter than have learnt at home, and of yourselves; but benefits they receive from them. A king is the sense of the Scriptures, and the specula- not so proud of his diadem, as Paul gloried tions upon them, you might commit to us. If, in his chains. And very justly. For a diahowever, it were necessary that you should dem affords but an ornament to the crowned hear such things of us, there was no need of head; but the chain is a much greater ornamore than one day: for what there is to be ment as well as a security. The kingly crown said is of no diversified or difficult character, often betrays the head it encircles, and allures or such as requires any elaboration. For innumerable traitors, and invites them to the when God declares His sentence, subtle lust of empire. And in battles this ornament arguments are unseasonable. God hath said, is so dangerous, that it must be hidden and "Thou shalt not swear." Do not then de- laid aside. Hence kings in battle, change mand of me the reasons of this. It is a royal the outward dress, and so mingle in the crowd law. He who established it, knows the rea- of combatants; so much betrayal does there son of the law. If it had not been profitable, result from the crown; but the chain will in laws, and not all perchance profitable; for have it, but altogether the contrary; since if they are men, and cannot be competent to there be a war, and an engagement with discover what is useful, like God. Neverthe- demons, and the hostile powers; the man who less, we obey them. Whether we marry, or is thus encompassed, by holding forth his make wills, or are about to purchase servants, or houses, or fields, or to co any other the secular magistrates not only bear the act, we do these things not according to our name of office while they are in authority, but own mind, but according to the laws which when they have given up their authority. they ordain; and we are not entirely at liberty Such a one is called an ex-consul, such a one to dispose of the things which concern our- an ex-prætor. But he, instead of all such selves according to our own minds; but in titles, says, "Paul the prisoner." And very many cases we are subject to their will; and of? He hath said, "Thou shalt not swear." down a law contrary to His.

He would not have forbidden it. Kings bring bring nothing of this kind upon those who rightly. For those magisterial offices are no should we do any thing that is contrary to complete evidences of virtue in respect to the their judgment, it becomes invalid and use- soul; for they are to be purchased by money, So then tell me, are we to pay so and obtained by the solicitations of friends; much respect to the laws of men, and trample but this distinction that is obtained by bonds under foot the law of God? What defence, is a proof of the soul's love of wisdom, and or what pardon can such conduct be worthy the strongest sign of a longing for Christ. And the former are soon gone, but this dis-In order that thou mayest do and speak all tinction has none to succeed to it. Behold at things with safety, do not in practice lay least from that time to the present day how long a time has passed, and yet the name of 6. But enough of these matters. Let us this Prisoner has become increasingly illusnow proceed to lay before you one sentence trious. As to all the consuls, whoever they of those which have been read to-day, and were, of former times, they are passed into thus end this discourse. "Paul, a prisoner silence; and not even their names are known of Jesus Christ," saith he, "and Timothy the to the generality of mankind. But the name brother." Great is the designation of Paul: of this Prisoner, the blessed Paul, is still no title of principality and power, but he great here, great in the land of the barbaspeaks of bonds and chains! Truly great rians, great also among the Scythians and indeed! Although many other things made Indians; and were you to go even to the very him illustrious; his being caught up into the bounds of the habitable world, you would third heaven, his being transported to Para-dise, his hearing unutterable words; yet he any one could come, he would perceive that sets down none of these, but mentions the the name of Paul was borne in the mouths chain instead of all, for this made him more of all men. And what marvel is it, if it be conspicuous and illustrious than these. And so by land and sea, when even in the heavens why so? Because the one were the free gifts the name of Paul is great; with angels and of the Lord's lovingkindness; and the other archangels and the powers above, and with the marks of the constancy and patience of the servant. But it is customary with those who love, to glory more in the things which they suffer for those who are beloved, than in the were they not formed of iron?" Of iron, - | indeed, they were formed; but they contained the grace of the Spirit, abundantly flourishing in them; since he wore them for Christ's these bonds." 4 What sayest thou, O Paul? the Master was crucified, and yet the preachthrough the means by which it was supposed that it would be extinguished, by these very means it was kindled; and the Cross and bonds, which were thought to be an abomination, these are now become the symbols of salvation; and that iron was to us more precious than all gold, not by its intrinsic nature, but for this cause and ground!

this point; and if you give me your attention, I will both state the question exactly, and will add the solution. What then is the subhim, and telling how he had seen Jesus, how been struck with blindness and recovered sight, and had fallen down and risen up again; how he had come a captive into Damascus, bound without chains; after speaking likeshewing that they had foretold all these things, he captured the judge, and almost such are the souls of holy men: when they how they may be delivered from dangers, but even the reverse? strive every way how they may capture their persecutors. Just so did it then happen, tion? The solution of it, however, I will He came in to defend himself, and he de bring forward at once. For Paul acted thus, parted taking the judge with him! And to not from distress or fear, but from an abunthis the judge bore witness, saying, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And this ought to have happened to-day; and this Prefect, on coming among you, ought who knew nothing of our matters. Hence to have admired your magnanimity, your fortitude, your perfect tranquillity; and to have gone away, taking with him a lesson from your good order, admiring your assembly, praising your congress, and learning from the actual fact, how great a difference there is between Gentiles and Christians!

8. But as I was saying:-When Paul had caught him, and he said, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian," Paul answered thus, "I would to God that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except sake. Oh, wonder! the servants were bound, When thou writest to the Ephesians, thou sayest, "I therefore, the prisoner of the ing of the Gospel every day increases! And Lord, beseech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." 5 And when thou speakest to Timothy, "Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil-doer, even unto bonds."6 And again, when to Philemon, thus; "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ." And again, when debating with the Jews, thou sayest, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." 8 And writing to the 7. But here I see an enquiry arising out of Philippians, thou sayest, "Many of the brethren in the Lord, waxing confident by my bonds, are much more bold to speak the word without fear." Every where thou ject of enquiry? This same Paul once having bearest about the chain, everywhere thou come before Festus, whilst discoursing to puttest forward thy bonds, and boastest in him, and defending himself concerning the the thing. But when thou comest to the charges which the Jews had alleged against tribunal, thou betrayest thy philosophy, where it were right to have spoken the most boldly, he had heard that blessed voice; how he had and sayest to the judge, "I would to God that thou mightest become a Christian 'with. out' these bonds!" Yet surely if the bonds were good, and so good, that they could be the means of making others to grow bold in wise of the Law and of the Prophets, and the cause of true religion; (for this very thing thou didst declare before, when thou saidst, "Many of the brethren, waxing confident by persuaded him to come over to himself. For my bonds, did speak the word without fear"); for what reason dost thou not glory in this have fallen into dangers, they do not consider thing in the presence of the judge, but doest

> 9. Does not what I say appear a quesdance of wisdom and spiritual understanding. And how this was, I proceed to explain. He was addressing a Gentile, and an unbeliever, he was unwilling to introduce him by way of disagreeable things, but as he said, "I became to them that are without law, as without law; " so he acted in the present instance. His meaning is, "If the Gentile hear of bonds and tribulations, he will straightway be taking flight; since he knows not the power of bonds. First, let him become a believer; let him taste of the word preached, and then he will even of himself hasten towards these bonds. I have heard the Lord saying, "No man putteth a piece of new cloth into an old garment, for that which is put in to fill it up taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worse. Neither do men put new wine into old wine-skins; else the wine-skins ti.e., in conviction, though not in act. St. Chrysostom used the word almost a few lines back. Agrippa is named presently, but some there read Festus.

² if δΑγγγ. St. Chrysostom clearly understood this as it is rendered in our English version of 1611. See above "almost persuaded him," σχεδο 'πευσε. Modern scholars have attached a different sense to the expression. See Revised Version.

3 Acts xxvi. 28.

⁴ Acts xxvi. 29. 10 1 Cor. ix. 21.

⁵ Ephes. iv. 1.
8 Acts xxviii. 20.

^{6 2} Tim. ii. o. 9 Philip. i. 14.

burst." The soul of this man is an old circumstance exceedingly. And very justly, garment: an old wine-skin. It is not renewed | For this it is which especially snews the power the Spirit. It is yet weak and earthly. It by such means; by bonds, by tribulations, affects the things of this life. It flutters by scourgings, and the worst of ills. eagerly after worldly show. It loves a glory from the first, that if he becomes a Christian will be encompassed with a chain; feeling word preached. Therefore, saith he, "Ex- are pleasant; at once shewing that He did gold. Whence is this apparent? "I rejoice," saith he, "in my sufferings for you, And elsewhere, comparing himself with others, and exhibiting to us his superiority in the comparison, he thus speaks; "Are sides. But when they have thus spent the the dead, nor that he had expelled demons, the wealth that is theirs. nor that he had cleansed lepers, nor that he had done any other thing of the sort, but that he had suffered those innumerable hardships. Hence when he said, "I am more," he presently cites the multitude of his trials; "In stripes, above measure, in deaths oft, in prisons more frequent of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; " and all the rest. Thus Paul everywhere glories in tribulations; and prides himself upon this by the faith, nor renovated by the grace of of Christ, viz. that the Apostles conquered

10. For these two things Christ had anthat is present. Should he hear at once, even nounced, tribulation and remission, labours and crowns, toils and rewards, things pleasant he will become immediately a prisoner, and and sad. Nevertheless, to the present life he assigns the sorrowful things; but for the ashamed and indignant, he will recoil from the life to come, he has stored up those which cept these bonds." Not as deprecating the not mean to deceive men, and wishing by this bonds themselves, God forbid! But conde-arrangement to diminish the burden of scending to the other's infirmity; for he him- human woes. For the imposter first holds self loved and welcomed his bonds, even as a out the things which are pleasant, and afterwoman fond of ornament doth her jewels of wards brings forward those which are disagreeable. Thus for example:-Kidnappers, when they intend to steal and carry off little and fill up that which is behind of the afflic-children, do not promise them blows and tions of Christ in my flesh," And again; stripes, or any other thing of that kind, but "Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ, offer them cakes, and sweetmeats, and such not only to believe on Him, but to suffer for like, by which the age of childhood is usually His sake." 4 And again; "And not only so, gratified; in order that, enticed by these but we also glory in tribulations."5 Where- things, they may sell their liberty, and may fore, if he rejoices and glories in this, and fall into the utmost peril. Moreover, birdcalls it a gift of grace, it is manifest that catchers, and fishermen, thus entice the prey when he was addressing the judge, he spoke which they pursue, offering first their usual to him as he did, for the reason assigned, food, and such as is agreeable to them, and Moreover, also in a different passage, when by this means concealing the snare. So that he happened to find a necessity for glorying, this is especially the work of imposters, first he shews the very same by saying, "Most to hold out things which are agreeable, but gladly, therefore, will I glory in my infirmities in reproaches, in necessities, in disagreeable. But the case is altogether the persecutions, in distresses, that the power of reverse with those who are really careful and Christ may rest upon me." And again; provident for others. Fathers at least act "If I must needs glory, I will glory of the quite in a contrary manner to kidnappers. things which concern mine infirmities," 7 When they send their children to school, they they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool), first portion of their lives, and their habits I am more." And wishing to shew this are formed, they then put them in possession superiority, he did not say that he had raised of honour, and power, and luxury, and all

11. And thus God has acted. After the manner of provident fathers, and not after that of kidnappers, He has first involved us in things that are grievous; handing us over to present tribulation, as it were to schoolmasters and teachers; in order that being chastened and sobered by these things, after shewing forth all patience, and learning all right discipline, we may afterwards, when formed into due habits, inherit the kingdom of heaven. He first prepares and fits us for the management of the wealth He is to give, and then puts us into the actual possession of riches. For if He had not acted thus, the giving of riches would have been no boon,

¹ Matt. ix. 16, 17: Mark ii. 21; Luke v. 36.

² Acts xxvi. 28.

³ Coloss, i. 24.

⁴ Philip. i. 29.

⁶ 2 Cor. xii. 9, 10.

⁷ 2 Cor. xi. 30.

but a punishment and a vengeance. For a state of grief and tribulation, hath a suffiwe have all attained to "perfect manhood," puts us in possession of all that He has promus, together with consolation and soothing, And this is not the only advantage of receivgood things which are to come. Not only, our pleasure and consolation hath He ordained that the things which are grievous should be first; in order that being lightened with the hope of futurity, we should be rendered insensible to what is present. And this Paul would shew and make plain, when he said, "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceedlook not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." He calls cause of the expectation of good things to come. For even as the merchant is indifferent to the labour that attends navigation, being buoyed up with the hope of a cargo; and as the boxer bravely sustains the blows on his head, looking to the crown beyond; so also indeed do we, earnestly gazing towards heaven, and the good things that are in the heavens, whatever evils come on us, sustain them all with fortitude, being nerved with the good hope of the things to come.

12. Therefore let us go home, taking with us this saying; for though it be simple and doctrine of spiritual wisdom. He who is in what advantage is it, if we have gone through even as a son that is senseless and prodigal, cient consolation; he who lives in luxury and when he has succeeded to a paternal inherit-ance, is precipitated headlong by this very him. For when as thou sittest at the table thing, having none of the practical wisdom thou art reminded of this saying, thou wilt requisite for the economy of wealth; but if speedily shrink from drunkenness and gluthe be intelligent, and gentle, and sober, and tony; learning through this sentence, how moderate, managing his paternal estate as is needful it is for us to be striving; and thou befitting, he becomes by this means more wilt say with thyself, "Paul lived in bonds illustrious and distinguished: so must it also and in dungeons, but I in drunkenness and necessarily happen in our case. When we at a luxurious table! What pardon then shall have acquired spiritual understanding, when I obtain?" This also is a fit saying for women; since those who are fond of ornaand the measure of full stature;" then He ment, and expensive dresses, and bind themselves about with gold on every side, when ised: but now as little children He chastens they remember this chain, will hate, I feel assured, and abominate that adorning of themselves; and will hasten to such bonds as ing the tribulation beforehand, but there is these. For those ornaments have often been also another, not less than this. For the the cause of manifold evils, and introduced man who first of all lives luxuriously, and a thousand quarrels into a family, and have then has to expect punishment after his luxu- bred envy, and jealousy, and hatred. But rious living, has not even a sense of his prest hese loosed the sins of the wide world, ent luxury, merely by reason of the expecta- affrighted demons, and drove away the devil. tion of impending woes; but he who is first With these, while tarrying in prison, he perin a sorrowful state, if he is anticipating the suaded the jailor; with these he attracted enjoyment of good things afterwards, over- Agrippa himself; with these he procured many looks present difficulties, in the hope of the disciples. Therefore he said, "Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil-doer unto bonds, but then, on account of our security, but also for the word of God is not bound."3 For just as it is not possible to bind a sunbeam, or to shut it up within the house, so neither the preaching of the word; and what was much more, the teacher was bound, and yet the word flew abroad; he inhabited the prison, and yet his doctrine rapidly winged its way every where throughout the world!

Knowing these things then, let us not be ing and eternal weight of glory. While we depressed, when adverse affairs meet us, but then let us be more strong, then more powerful; "for tribulation worketh patience." 4 tribulation light, not because of the intrinsic Let us not grieve for the calamities which benature of things that are grievous, but be fall us, but let us in all things give thanks unto God!

13. We have completed the second week of the fast, but this we should not consider; for going through the fast does not consist in merely going through the time, but in going through it with amendment of manners. Let us consider this; whether we have become more diligent; whether we have corrected any of our defects; whether we have washed away our sins? It is common for every one to ask in Lent, how many weeks each has fasted; and some may be heard saying that they have fasted two, others three, and others that they short, it nevertheless contains much of the have fasted the whole of the weeks. But ciled; I had a custom of evil-speaking, but I put a stop to it; I had a custom of swearing, but I have broken through this evil practice." It is of no advantage to merchants, to have gone over a great extent of ocean, but to have sailed with a freight and much merchandise. The fast will profit us nothing, if we pass through it as a mere matter of course, without any result. If we practise a mere abstinence from meats, when the forty days are past, the fast is over too. But if we abstain from sins, this still remains, even when the fast has gone by, and will be from this time a continual advantage to us; and will here render us no small recompense, before we attain unto the kingdom of heaven. For as he who is living in iniquity, even before hell, hath punishment, being stung by his conscience; so the man who is rich in good works, even before the kingdom, will have the benefit of exceeding joy, in that he is nourished with blessed hopes.

14. Therefore Christ says, "I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man taketh from you." A brief saying, but one that hath in it much consolation. What then is this, "your joy no man taketh?" If thou hast money, many are able to take away the joy that comes of thy wealth; as, for instance, a thief, by digging through the wall; a servant by carrying off what was entrusted to him; an emperor by confiscation; and the envious man by contumely. Should you possess power, there are many who are able to deprive you of the joy of it. For when the conditions of office are at an end, the conditions of pleasure will itself too, there are many accidents occurring, the fast devoid of good works? If another could not take away the possession, once desays, "I have fasted the whole of Lent," do posited in heaven; but the joy thereof conthou say, "I had an enemy, but I was recontinually abideth; for it is said, "He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor, his righteousness endureth for ever." And very justly; for in the storehouses of heaven it is laid up, where no thief breaks in, nor robber seizes, nor moth devours.3 If thou pourest out continued and fervent prayers, no man will be able to spoil thee of the fruit of them; for this fruit too is rooted in the heavens; it is out of the way of all injury, and remains beyond mortal reach. If when evil-treated thou has done a kind action; if thou hast borne with patience to hear thyself evil spoken of; if thou hast returned blessings for reproaches; these are good works that abide continually, and the joy of them no man taketh away; but as often as thou rememberest these, thou art glad and re-joicest, and reapest large fruits of pleasure. So also, indeed, if we succeed in avoiding oaths; and persuade our tongue to abstain from this pernicious practice, the good work will be finished in a short time, but the delight arising from it will be continuous and unfailing.

17. And now, it is time that you should be teachers and guides of others; that friends should undertake to instruct and lead on their neighbours; servants their fellow-servants; and youths those of their own age. What if any one had promised thee a single piece of gold for every man who was reformed, wouldest thou not then have used every exertion, and been all day long sitting by them, persuading and exhorting. Yet now God promises thee not one piece of gold, nor ten, or twenty, or a hundred, or a thousand; no, nor the whole earth, for thy also be ended. And in the exercise of office labours, but He gives thee that which is greater than all the world, the kingdom of which by bringing difficulty and care, strike heaven; and not only this, but also another at the root of thy satisfaction. If thou hast thing besides it. And what kind of thing is bodily strength, the assaults of disease put a that? "He who taketh forth the precious stop to joy from that source. If thou hast from the vile," saith He, "shall be as my beauty and bloom, the approach of old age mouth."5 What can be equal to this in point withers it, and takes away that joy. Or if of honour or security? What kind of excuse thou enjoyest a sumptuous table, when even- or pardon can be left to those, who after so ing comes on the joy of the banquet is at an great a promise neglect their neighbour's end; for every thing belonging to this life is safety? Now if you see a blind man falling liable to damage, and is unable to afford us a into a pit, you stretch forth a hand, and lasting pleasure; but piety and the virtue of think it a disgraceful thing to overlook one the soul is altogether the reverse of this. If who is about to perish? But daily beholding thou hast done an alms, no one is able to all thy brethren precipitated into the wicked take away this good work. Though an army, custom of oaths, dost thou not dare even to or kings, or myriads of calumniators and conspirators, were to beset thee on all sides, they haps, and he hath not heard. Speak therefore twice, and thrice, and as often as it may ever advantages each man is able to confer God is addressing us, and we do not hear; shrink from doing it, but let there be some thou, therefore, imitate this tender care towards thy neighbour. For this reason it is that we are placed with one another; that we inhabit cities, and that we meet together in churches, in order that we may bear one another's burdens, that we may correct one another's sins. And in the same manner as persons inhabiting the same shop, carry on a separate traffic, yet put all afterwards into the common fund, so also let us act. What-be, till thou hast persuaded him. Every day upon his neighbour, let him not grudge, nor and yet He does not leave off speaking. Do such kind of spiritual commerce, and reciprocity; in order that having deposited every thing in the common store, and obtained great riches, and procured a large treasure, we may be all together partakers of the kingdom of heaven; through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, by Whom and with Whom, to the Father, with the Holy Ghost, be glory, both now and ever, and world without end. Amen.

² Ps. cxii, 9.

³ Matt. vi, 19; Luke xii, 33.

⁴ i.e., the soul of a man from the vile state of sin, 5 Jer. xv. 19.

HOMILY XVII.

Of the Commissioners (Hellebichus Commander of the Troops, and Cæsarius Master of the Offices 2) sent by the Emperor Theodosius for the inquisition of the offenders, on account of the overturning of the Statues.

1. Most opportunely have we all this day sung together, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things."3 For marvellous, and beyond all expectation, are the things which have happened? A whole city, and so great a population, when just about to be overwhelmed-to sink under the waves, and to be utterly and instantly destroyed--He hath entirely rescued from shipwreck in a single moment of time! Let us give thanks then, not only that God hath calmed the tempest, but that He suffered it to take place; not only that He rescued us from shipwreck, but that He allowed us to fall into such distress; and such an extreme peril to hang over us. Thus also Paul bids us "in every thing give thanks." 4 But when he says, "In every thing give thanks," he means not only in our deliverance from evils. but also at the time when we suffer those evils. "For all things work together for good to them that love God."5 Let us be thankful to Him for this deliverance from trials; and let us never forget them. Let us devote ourselves to prayer, to continual supplications, and to much piety.

2. When the sad conflagration of these calamities was first kindled, I said, that it was a season not for doctrine, but for prayer.6 The very same thing I now repeat, when the fire has been extinguished—that it is now especially, and more than before, a time for prayer; that now is the season especially for tears and compunction, for an anxious soul, for much diligence, and for much caution. For at that time the very nature of our tribulation restrained us, however unwillingly, and disposed us to sobriety; and led us to become more religious; but now when the bridle is removed, and the cloud has passed away, there is fear lest we should fall back again into sloth, or become relaxed by this respite; and lest one should have reason to say of us too, "When He slew them, then they sought Him, and returned, and enquired early after God."7 Wherefore also Moses admonished the Jews, saying, "When thou shalt have eaten, and drunk, and art full, remember the Lord thy God."8 The goodness of your disposition will now be rendered manifest, if you continue in the practice of the same piety. For at that time, many imputed your earnestness to fear, and the approach of calamity; but now, it will be purely your own achievement, if you still persevere in maintaining this earnestness. Since with a boy too, as long as he is guided

¹ στρατηλάτης. See Dufresna. This title was given to one who had the general command of the troops in a province, or division had the general command of the troops in a province, or division of the empire.

6 Hom. II. 1. 7 Ps. lxxviii. 34. 8 Deut. vi. 11, 12.

^a Mayurppe,

^b Mayurppe,

Theod art. 33. Montfaucon has already called in question the judgment of Tillemont's note on these Homilies, placing this before XI. It does not appear that this was delivered immediately on the arrival of the Commissioners, but on occasion of some fresh news from the Emperor after the trials.

^a Ps. Ixxii. 18.

^a Thess. v. 16.

^b Rom, viii. 28.

by some tutor whom he fears, if he lives with over our portion of the world is a godly man, sobriety and meekness, there is nothing to a believer, one who lives in the practice of admire, for all persons ascribe the sobriety of the stripling to his fear of the tutor. But when he remains in the same seemly behaviour, after the restraint from that quarter is done away with, all persons give him credit too for the sobriety that was seen in his earlier age. Thus also let us act; let us continue in the same state of godly fear, in order that for our former diligence too we may gain much praise from God.

3. We had expected innumerable woes; that our property would be plundered, that the houses would have been burnt together with their inmates, that the city would have been plucked up from the midst of the world, that its very fragments would have been utterly destroyed, and that its soil would have been placed under the plough! But, lo! all these things existed only in expectation, and did not come into operation. And this is not the only wonder, that God hath removed so great a danger, but that He hath also greatly blessed us, and adorned our city; and by this trial and calamity hath made us more approved! But how, I will state. When those who were sent by the Emperor erected that fearful tribunal for making inquisition into the events which had taken place, and summoned every one to give account of the deeds which they had perpetrated, and various anticipations of death pervaded the minds of all, then the monks who dwelt on the mountain-tops shewed their own true philosophy. For although they had been shut up so many years in their cells, yet at no one's entreaty, by no one's counsel, when they beheld such a cloud overhanging the city, they left their caves and huts, and flocked together in every direction, as if they had been so many angels arriving from heaven. Then might one see the city likened to heaven, while these saints appeared everywhere; by their mere aspect consoling the mourners, and leading them to an utter disregard of the calamity. For who on beholding these would not deride death, would not despise life. And not only was this wonderful, but that when they drew nigh to the magistrates themselves, they spoke to them with boldness on behalf of the accused, and were all ready to shed their blood, and to lay down their heads, so that they might snatch the captured from the terrible events which they expected. They also declared that they would not depart until the judges should spare the population of the city, or send them spare the population of the city, or send them themselves together with the accused to the Emperor. "He," said they, "who rules speech to the Person the speech the speech through an interpreter."

piety. We therefore shall assuredly reconcile him. We will not give you leave, nor permit you to embrue the sword, or take off a head. But if ye do not desist, we also are quite resolved to die with them. We confess that the crimes committed are very heinous; but the iniquity of those deeds does not surpass the humanity of the Emperor." One of them is also reported to have uttered another saying, full of wisdom, to this effect: * "The Statues which have been thrown down are again set up, and have resumed their proper appearance; and the mischief was speedily rectified; but if ye put to death the image of God, how will ye be again able to revoke the deed! or how to reanimate those who are deprived of life, and to restore their souls to their bodies?" Many things too they said to them of the Judgment.

4. Who could but be astonished? Who could but admire the moral wisdom of these men? When the mother of one of the accused, uncovering her head, and exposing her grey hairs, laid hold of the horse of the judge by the bridle, and running beside him through the forum, thus entered with him the place of justice, we were all struck with astonishment, we all admired that exceeding tenderness and magnanimity.2 Ought we not, then, to have been much more impressed with wonder at the conduct of these men? For if she had even died for her son, it would have been nothing strange, since great is the tyranny of nature, and irresistible is the obligation arising from the maternal pangs! But these men so loved those whom they had not begotten, whom they had not brought up, yea rather, whom they had never seen, whom they had not heard of, whom they had never met, whom they knew only from their calamity, that if they had possessed a thousand lives, they would have chosen to deliver them all up for their safety. Tell me not that they were not slaughtered, that they did not pour forth their blood, but that they used as much boldness with their judges as it was likely that no other men would do, but such as had already renounced their own lives; and that with this sentiment they ran from the mountains to the tribunal. For, indeed, if they had not before prepared themselves against every sort of slaughter, they would not have been able to speak thus freely to the judges, or to have manifested such magnanimity. For they remained all day long sitting before the doors of the place of justice, being prepared to snatch from the hands of the executioners those who were about to be led off to punishment!

5. Where now are those who are clad in threadbare cloaks, and display a long beard, and carry staves in the right hand; the philosophers of the world, who are more abject in disposition than the dogs under the table; and do every thing for the sake of the belly? All these men then forsook the city, they all hasted away, and hid themselves in caves! But they only, who truly by works manifest the love of wisdom, appeared as fearlessly in the forum, as if no evil had overtaken the city. And the inhabitants of the city fled away to the mountains and to the deserts, but the citizens of the desert hastened into the city; demonstrating by deeds what, on the preceding days, I have not desisted from saying, that the very furnace will not be able to harm the man who leads a virtuous life. Such a thing is philosophy of soul, rising superior to all things, and to all prosperous or adverse events; for neither is it enfeebled by the former, nor beaten down and debased by the latter, but abides on the same level its own native force and power! Who, indifficulty of the present crisis? Those who had held the first offices in our city, who were in places of power, who were surrounded with immense wealth, and who were in high favour with the Emperor, leaving their houses utterly deserted, all consulted their own safety, and all friendship and kindred were found worthless, and those whom they formerly knew, at this season of calamity, they desired not to know, and prayed to be unknown of them! But the monks, poor as they were, having nothing more than a mean garment, who had lived in the coarsest manner, who seemed formerly to be nobodies, men habituated to mountains and forests; as if they had been so many lions, with a great and lofty soul, whilst all were fearing and quaking, stood forth and relieved the danger, and that, not in the course of many days, but in a brief moment of time! And as distinguished warriors without coming into close conflict with their adversaries, but merely by making their appearance in the ranks, and shouting, put the foe to rout, so also these in one day the calamity, and returned to their own tabernacles. So great is the moral wisdom that was brought among men by Christ.

6. And why do I speak of the rich, and of those in authority? When those very persons who had been invested with power to judge the criminals; who acted with the highest authority, were entreated by these selfsame monks to grant a sentence of pardon, they said, they had no power over the result: for that it was unsafe and dangerous, not only to insult the Emperor, but even to dismiss those who had insulted him, when taken, without punishment. But these men were too powerful for any one to resist; and besieging them by magnanimity and perseverance, they induced these officers by their importunity to exercise a power which they had not received from the Emperor; and even succeeded in persuading the judges, when men had been manifestly convicted of the guilt, not to declare the sentence of condemnation, but to defer the final result to the decision of the Emperor; and they promised certainly to persuade him to grant a pardon to those who had transgressed against him; and they were about to set out on a journey to him. But the judges, reverencing the moral wisdom of these men, and being struck with their loftiness of spirit, did not permit through the whole course of things, shewing them to undertake this long journey, but promised that if they should only receive their deed, was not convicted of weakness by the words in writing, they would themselves depart and successfully importune 2 the Emperor to dismiss all anger (which, indeed, we are now expecting that he will). For when sentence should have been given, they, on being admitted into court, uttered words of the highest wisdom, and besought the Emperor by letters to shew mercy; and they reminded him of the Judgment, and said that they would lay down their own heads, if his mercy was not granted. And the judges took down these words in writing, and departed. This, more than the brightest crown, will adorn our city. And what has here taken place, the Emperor will now hear; yea, the great City will hear, and the whole world will hear, that the monks who dwell at the city of Antioch, are men who have displayed an apostolic boldness; and now when their letters are read at court, all men will admire their magnanimity; all men will call our city blessed; and we shall shake off our evil reputation; and it will be known every where, that what has happened was not the work of the inhab. itants of the city, but of strangers and cordescended, and said their say, and removed rupt-minded men; and that this testimony of the monks will be a sufficient evidence of the character of the city.

 $^{^{1}}$ των i ξωθεν. "Of those without;" a common phrase with St. Chrysostom to denote those without the pale of the Church.

² δυσωπήσειν: same word as is rendered above "induced by importunity." Literally, "to put out of countenance;" to make another ashamed not to grant a request.

7. Therefore, beloved, let us not be distressed, but let us entertain favourable hopes; had he erected golden statues in the forum, for if their boldness toward men has been as it has now been adorned and distinguished, able to prevent such a danger, then what will in producing those beautiful images of virtue, not their boldness toward God effect? These things also let us tell the Greeks, when they dare to dispute with us respecting their philosophers! From hence it is manifest that their stories of former days are false, but that the things of old reported among us are true; that is, the things concerning John, and Paul, and Peter, and all the rest. For inas-charge of our safety. One of them, indeed, secondary to the love of you; and being him- love of true wisdom. self ready, if he could not persuade the Emperor, to lay down his own life. And these, virtues as the monks themselves; and holding fast the judges with their own hands, they would not let them enter into the court, before they gave a promise respecting the result of the trial. And when they saw them makthey saw that they did consent, embracing their feet and knees, and kissing their hands. not the boldness of presumption, they plainly spirit, their former acts attested their holdness. And these are not the only good results we have reaped from the trial, but also an abundance of sobriety and meekness; and

Not thus would any one have adorned it, and displaying its true riches!

9. But it may be that the things which the Emperor hath decreed are painful. No! not even these are really burdensome, but have brought much advantage with them. For what is there, I ask, which is oppressive in any of them? that the Emperor hath shut up the Orchestra, that he hath forbidden the Hippomuch as these monks have succeeded to the drome, that he hath closed and stopped up piety of those men, they have consequently these fountains of iniquity. May they never exhibited their boldness. Inasmuch as they again be opened! From thence did the roots were brought up in the same laws, they have of wickedness shoot forth to the injury of the consequently imitated their virtues. So that city!3 From thence sprung those who blast we stand in no need of writings for the pur- its character; men who sell their voices to pose of shewing the apostolical virtues, whilst the dancers, and who for the sake of three the very facts cry aloud, and the masters are obols prostitute their salvation to them, turnshewn forth by the scholars. We have no ing all things upside down! Art thou disneed of disputation to display the trifling of tressed, O beloved! for these things? Truly the Greeks, and the little-mindedness of their it were fitting that for these thou shouldest be philosophers, whilst their deeds now loudly glad, and rejoice, and express thy thanks to proclaim, as they did aforetime, that all with the Emperor, since his castigation hath them is a fable, a stage-play, a piece of acting. proved a correction, his punishment a disci-8. And the same magnanimity was dis- pline, his wrath a means of instruction! But played by the priests too, as well as the that the Baths are shut up? Neither is this monks, and they shared among them the an intolerable hardship, that those who lead a soft, effeminate, and dissolute life, should proceeded to court, esteeming all things as be brought back, though unwillingly, to the

10. But is it complained of, that the Emperor hath taken away the dignity of the city, who remained here, have displayed the same and hath no more permitted it to be called a metropolis? But what was he to do? Could he praise what had been done, and acknowledge it as a favour? Then who would not have blamed him, for not shewing even the outward form of indignation? Seest thou not ing signs of refusal, they again exerted them- that fathers do many things of a similar selves with much boldness; and as soon as nature towards their children? They turn away from them, and forbid them the table. This also hath the Emperor done by imposthey gave an exceeding proof of either virtue, ling such punishments as have nothing in of liberty and meekness. For that theirs was them hurtful, but carry with them much correction. Think what we expected, and what signified by their kissing the knees, and em- has taken place, and then we shall especially bracing the feet of the judges. Again, in discern the favour of God! Dost thou grieve proof that this was not flattery, nor a kind of that the dignity of the city is taken away? fawning servility, nor the fruit of a slavish Learn what the dignity of a city is; and then thou wilt know clearly, that if the inhabitants do not betray it, no one else will be able to take away the dignity of a city! Not the fact that it is a metropolis; nor that it conour city has become all at once a monastery,2 tains large and beautiful buildings;6 nor that

¹ The bishop, spoken of in the opening of Hom. 111. and in

Hom. XXI.

The state of monasteries at that time may be gathered from Theodoret's Historia Religiosa; the Collations of Cassan; the ascetic works, and parts of the correspondence of St. Basil; the Historia Lausiaca of Palladius, and many parts of St. Macarius.

³ Such was the case, too, with the tumults at Alexandria. See Libanius, Or. de Sed. 4 i. c., their applause. 5 It appears that the metropolitan dignity of Antioch was transferred to Laodicea. 6 For such topics of praise, see the Antiochicus of Libanius, who however also extols the virtue of the citizens.

and walks, nor that it is named in proclamations before other cities, but the virtue and piety of its inhabitants; this is a city's dignity, and ornament, and defence; since if these things are not found in it, it is the most insignificant in the world, though it may enjoy unlimited honour from Emperors! Dost thou wish to learn the dignity of thy city? Dost thou wish to know its ancestry? I will tell it exactly; not only that thou mayest know, but that thou mayest also emulate. What then is after all the dignity of this city of ours? "It came to pass, that the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch." 1 the world possesses, not even the city of Romulus nerself! For this it can look the whole world in the face; on account of that love toward Christ, that boldness and virtue.2 Dost thou wish farther to hear of a different dignity and commendation belonging to this city? A grievous famine was once approaching, and the inhabitants of Antioch determined, as far as each person had the means, to send relief to the Saints dwelling at Jerusalem.3 Behold a second dignity, charity in a time of famine! The season did not make them niggardly, nor the expectation of the calamity backward in helping; but when all are apt to be scraping up what is not their own, then they distributed their own, not merely to those who were near, but also to those who were living afar off! Seest thou here the faith towards God, and the love towards their neighbour? Wouldest thou learn another dignity of this city? Certain men came down from Judæa to Antioch, defiling the doctrine preached, and introducing Jewish observances.5 The men of Antioch did not bear this novelty in silence. They did not hold their peace, but having come together, and made an assembly, they sent Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem, and caused the Apostles to provide that pure doctrines. cleared from all Jewish imperfection, might be distributed throughout all parts of the world! This is the dignity of the city! this is its precedence! this makes it a metropolis, not in the earth, but in heaven; forasmuch as that all other honours are corruptible, and fleeting, and perish with the present life, and often come to their end before the close of it, as they have done in the present instance! To me, a city that hath not pious citizens is it has many columns, and spacious porticoes meaner than any village, and more ignoble than any cave.

11. And why do I speak of a city? For that thou mayest exactly understand that victue alone is the ornament of the inhabitants, I will not speak to thee of a city, but I will endeavour to demonstrate this by bringing forward what is more venerable than any city -the Temple of God which was in Jerusa-lem. For this was the Temple in which were sacrifices and prayers and services; where was the Holy of Holies, and the Cherubim, the Covenant,6 and the golden pot;7 the great symbols of God's providence towards that people; where oracles from heaven were con-This dignity, none of the cities throughout stantly being received, where prophets became inspired, where the fashioning was not the work of human art, but proceeded from the wisdom of God, where the walls were on every side resplendent with much gold, and where, in surpassing excellence, costliness of material and perfection of art met together, and demonstrated that there was no other temple like this upon earth! Yea rather, not only the perfection of art, but also the wisdom of God assisted in that building. For Solomon had learned all, not intuitively and from himself, but from God;8 and having received the design of it from the heavens, he then marked it out and erected it. Nevertheless, this Temple, thus beautiful and marvellous and sacred, when those who used it were corrupted, was so dishonoured, despised, and profaned, that even before the captivity it was called "a den of robbers, a cave of hyænas;" 9 and afterwards it was delivered over to hands that were barbarous, polluted. and profane!

> 12. Wouldest thou learn the same truth respecting cities? What could be more illustrious than the cities of Sodom? For the houses and the buildings were splendid, and so were their walls; and the country was fat and fertile, and "like the Paradise of God." 10 But the tent of Abraham was mean and small, and had no fortification. Yet when a foreign war took place, the strangers broke down and took the walled cities, and departed, carrying away their inhabitants captives. Abraham, however, the citizen of the desert, they could not resist when he attacked them! And so it was likely to be. For he had true piety: a power much greater than numbers and the defence of walls. If thou art a Christian, no earthly city is thine. Of our City "the Builder and Maker is God."" Though we

Acts xi. 26.

² These expressions imply that the name Christian was fastened on the disciples of Jesus by way of derision and reproach.

3 Acts xi. 28, 29.

⁴ Making turbid, i. e., by additions, ἐπιθολοῦντες. 5 See Acts. xv. τ.

⁶ f. e., the Tables, Ex. xxxiv. 28. 7 That contained the manna. Ex. xvi. 33; Heb. ix. 4. 8 1 Kings iv. 29; 2 Chron, iii. 3. 9 Jer. vii. 11. 10 Gen. xiii. 10.

all! We are enrolled in heaven: our citizen- does a multitude bring, if their system of livof little children, despise things that are great, and admire those which are little! Not our city's greatness, but virtue of soul is dignity to belong to a city, think how many a partaker of it, who has not exhibited every virtue.

of our dignity of soul, when we commit sin, porticoes, and other dignities of this kind! all; since as regards the things that have now regards the present life, what can it benefit befallen us, so far are they from injuring the thee that this thy city is a metropolis? Pray, city, that if we are watchful, they will greatly has any one restored a distressed family by benefit us. For even already our city seems means of this? or received any revenue from to be like a decorous, noble, sober-minded this dignity? or dispelled sadness? or got those miscreants who were concerned in the nor regard the opinions of the multitude, but late audacious deeds. Let us therefore not understand what is indeed the dignity of a give way to womanish lamentations. For I city; what it is that makes a city truly a have heard many about the forum saying, metropolis? "Alas! for thee, Antioch! What hath beselves, and lying, then apply such a saying place the honour of our city to that account. as this: "Alas! for thee, O city, what hath befallen thee!" But if thou seest the forum on the city, tell me not of the suburb of say, "Multitude will never prevail with Me." because they were not of metropolitan rank.2 desert, the presence of these things makes it And Jerusalem itself again, He calls wretched for the very same reason, speaking thus; "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest may gain possession of the whole world, we the prophets, and stonest them which are sent are withal but strangers and sojourners in it unto thee!" For what advantage, I ask, ship is there! Let us not, after the manner ing be vicious? Nay, on the contrary, even injury results from it. What else, indeed, hath wrought the evils which have lately sprung up? Was it not the sloth, the reckour ornament and defence. If you suppose lessness, and the depravity of the inhabitants? Did the dignity of the city, did the persons must partake in this dignity, who are magnificence of its architecture, or the cirwhoremongers, effeminate, deprayed and full cumstance that it was a metropolis, do it any of ten thousand evil things, and at last despise service? If with the king who is on earth, such honour! But that City above is not of nothing could protect it when it had done this kind; for it is impossible that he can be thus amiss, but all these privileges are taken away; much more with the Lord of angels will its dignity fail to protect it? For at that 13. Let us not therefore be senseless; but Day, it will nought avail us, that we have then let us grieve when any one deprives us dwelt in a metropolis, that has many spacious when we have offended the common Lord of And why do I say, at That Day? For as matron. Fear hath made her gentler and more dignified, and hath delivered her from vice of the soul? Beloved! let us not trifle,

14. I say all this, though I expect that the fallen thee! How art thou dishonoured!" city will again regain even this outward dis-Truly when I heard, I smiled at the puerile tinction, and appear in its own proper place mind which could give vent to these words! of precedence. For the Emperor is both Such words were not becoming now; but philanthropic and godly. But I am desirous when thou seest men dancing, drunken, sing- that if it should be restored, ye may not think ing, blaspheming, swearing, perjuring them- too much of this; nor be boastful of it; nor containing a few meek, modest, and tem Daphne,4 nor of the height and multitude of perate persons, then pronounce the city, its cypresses, nor of its fountains of waters, "Blessed!" For the fewness will never be nor of the great population who inhabit the able to injure it in any respect, if there be city, nor of the great freedom with which its virtue withal; as on the other hand, numbers market-place is frequented even to midnight, will never profit it at all, whilst iniquity is nor of the abundance of its wares! All these there. "If," saith the prophet, "the num- are things of the outward sense, and remain ber of the sons of Israel be as the sand of the only as long as the present life. But if you sea, the remnant shall be saved;" that is to are able to mention virtue, meekness, almsgiving, nocturnal vigils, prayers, sobriety, So also Christ spoke. He called cities true wisdom of soul; commend the city for wretched; not because of their littleness, nor these things! To those who inhabit the

¹ Isa. x. 22; Rom. ix. 27.

² It is possible that a clause may have been omitted here. If not, the next sentence refers back beyond this.

³ Matt. xxiii, 37.

4 See Hom. I. contr. Jud. (6). The same is to be said of the Synagogue. For though there be no idol there, yet devils inhabit the place. Which I say not only of the Synagogue that is here, but also of that in Daphne, where is that more abominable pit which they call Matrona's, &c. See also Macc. iv, 33, and Libanius Antione, Reiske, t. i. pp. 302, 352. For some account of Daphne, see Introduction to the Honilly on St. Babylas in this volume.

more illustrious than any city; and again the joy the calm! Let no one say, "What vilest of all places, should these things not be found with its citizens. Let us make this estimate not in the case of cities only, but also of men. And if you see a big man, who has been brought into good condition, tall, and surpassing others in length of limb, do not admire him, until you have ascertained what the man's soul is. Not from the outward comeliness, but from the beauty that appertains to the soul, should we pronounce any persons blessed! David was little, and short of stature; nevertheless, one so short and little, and bare of all arms, brought down at one blow so large an army, and that tower of flesh; and this without hurling spear, or letting fly arrow, or unsheathing sword, but doing all with a small pebble! For this reason a certain one exhorts, saying," Commend not a man for his beauty, neither abhor a man for his outward appearance. The bee is little among such as fly, but her fruit is the chief of sweet things." 2

15. Thus also let us speak both of a city, and of men, and utter such wisdom one to an other, and be continually thankful to God, as well for present as for past mercies; and call upon Him in common with all our might, that those who now dwell in prison 3 may be discharged, and that those who are about to be sent into exile may return back again. They too are our members. With us they have buffetted the waves, with us they have withstood the storm! Let us, then, beseech the merciful God, that with us they may en-farther concerns me? I am freed from danger; such an one may perish; such another may be destroyed!" Let us not provoke God by this indifference; but lament, as if we ourselves were in the same peril. So let us supplicate God with intense earnestness, fulfilling that saying of Paul, "Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them; and them which suffer adversity, as being yourselves also in the body.4 Weeping also with them that weep; condescending to men of low estate,"5 This will also be of the greatest advantage to ourselves; for nothing useth so much to delight God, as that we should be very ready to mourn for our own members. Him therefore let us supplicate in common, both for things present, and for things to come; in order that He may deliver us from punishment hereafter. For the things present, whatever they are, are endurable, and have an end; but the torments there are immortal, and interminable! And while we are consoled, let us also ourselves endeavour to fall no more into such sins, knowing that hereafter 6 we shall enjoy no pardon! Let us, then, all in common prostrate ourselves before God; and both while we are here, and when we are at home, let us say, "Thou, O Lord, art righteous in all things which Thou hast done towards us; for Thou hast brought upon us by a just judgment whatever Thou hast brought,"7 If "our sins rise up against us, undertake for us, for thy Name's sake; "8 and do not permit us any more to experience such grievous troubles. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, the Power, and the Glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

HOMILY XVIII.

The former subject of the Sedition continued; also of fasting; and upon the Apostolic saying, "Rejoice in the Lord always." 1

ing, and saying one to another, "We have so, then to exult. For this is a fit subject of conquered; we have prevailed; the half of gratification. This is what is to be sought

I. I HAVE observed many persons rejoic- whether the half of their sins be gone; and if the fast is spent." But I exhort such per- after, and for which all things are done, that sons not to rejoice on this account, that the we may correct our defects; and that we may half of the fast is gone, but to consider not quit the fast the same persons as we entered upon it, but in a cleansed state; and

¹ Ben. καὶ πάλιν πάντων εὐτελέστεραν. Sav. πάλιν, "and a city the vilest." The former seems favoured by ἐκείνης following, and would be the more forcible, supposing the audience duly affected. The imperfect construction of the original is kept.

² Ecclus, xi. 2, 3.

3 The whole Senate of Antioch were imprisoned till the Emor's pleasure should be known. See Libanius' Or. to Hellebichus, whom he praises for providing them tolerable lodging.

⁴ Heb. xiii. 3. 6 i. e., if not thus amended. 8 Jer. xiv. 7.

⁵ Rom. xii. 15, 16. 7 Neh. ix. 33.

that having laid aside all that helongs to evil a man, can continually rejoice? To rejoice completion of the fast will be the greatest injury to us. Let us, therefore, not rejoice that we have gone through the length of the iast, for this is nothing great; but let us rejoice, if we have got through it with fresh attainments, so that when this is over, the fruit of it may shine forth. For the gain of winter is more especially manifested after the season is gone by. Then, the flourishing corn, and the trees teeming with leaves and fruit, proclaim, by their appearance, the benefit that has accrued to them from the winter! Let the same thing also take place with us. For during the winter, we have enjoyed divers and frequent showers, having been during the fast partakers of a continued course of instruction, and have received spiritual seeds, and cut away the thorns of luxury.

2. Wherefore let us persevere, retaining with all diligence what we have heard; that when the fast is over, the fruit of the fast may abound, and that by the good things we gathered from the fast, we may remember the fast itself.1 If thus we fashion ourselves, we shall, when the fast returns, welcome it again with pleasure. For I see many who are so feeble-minded, that at the present season they are anxious about the following Lent; and I have heard many saying, that after their liberation from the fast, they are insensible to any pleasure from this remission, on account of their anxiety about the coming year. What can be more feeble-minded than this? I ask; and what is the cause of this? It is, that when the fast is arrived, we do not take pains that the concerns of the soul may be well ordered, but we limit the fast solely to an abstinence from food. Since, were we to reap the full benefit of it in a reformation of conduct, we should wish the fast to come round every day, receiving in very deed an experience of its good effects; and we should never cast away the desire of it, or be dejected and anxious whilst expecting it.

3. For there is nothing whatever that will be able to afflict one who is well ordered in mind, and careful about his own soul; but he will enjoy a pure and continued pleasure. And that this is true ye have to-day heard from Paul, who exhorts us, saying, "Rejoice in the Lord always, and again I say, rejoice." I know indeed that to many this saying seems impossible. "For how is it possible," says some one, "that he who is but habits, we may thus keep the sacred feast, is no hard matter, but to rejoice continually, since if the case be otherwise, we shall be so this seems to me to be impossible." For far from obtaining any advantage, that the many are the causes of sadness, which surround us on all sides. A man has lost either a son, or a wife, or a beloved friend, more necessary to him than all kindred; or he has to sustain the loss of wealth; or he has fallen into sickness; or he has to bear some other change of fortune; or to grieve for contempt. uous treatment which he did not deserve; or famine, or pestilence, or some intolerable exaction, or circumstances in his family trouble him;-nay, there is no saying how many circumstances of a public or private nature are accustomed to occasion us grief. How then, he may say, is it possible to "rejoice always?" Yea, O man! it is possible; and if it were not so, Paul would not have given the exhortation; nor would a man endowed with spiritual wisdom have offered such counsel; and for this reason I have constantly said to you, and will not cease to say, that what ye could no where have learnt from any other, that wisdom ye may here meditate. For mankind are universally desirous of pleasure,3 and of rejoicing; and for this, they do all, say all, and undertake all things. Therefore it is, that the merchant goes on a voyage, in order that he may amass wealth; and he amasses wealth, to the end that he may rejoice over what he has treasured up. soldier also for this reason exercises his warfare, and the husbandman his husbandry; for this each man plies his art. Those also who love dominion, love it for this end, that they may obtain glory; and they desire to obtain glory, that they may rejoice; and any one may perceive that each of our undertakings is directed to this point, and that every man looking to this makes haste to go towards it through a variety of means.

4. For as I said, all love gladness, but all are not able to attain it, since they know not the way which leads to it; but many suppose that the source of it is in being rich. But if this were its source, no one possessed of wealth would ever be sad. But in fact many of the rich think life not worth living, and would infinitely prefer death when they experience any hardship; and of all men these are the most liable to excessive sadness. For you should not look to their tables, or their flatterers, and parasites, but to the trouble that comes of such things, the insults, the wars, and battles, and the insurrections of calumnies, the dangers, and the distresses, reverses unpractised, and know not how to take them philosophically, or to bear with fortitude what befalls them; whence it happens that calamities do not appear to them such as they are in their own nature, but even things which are really light come to seem intolerable; whereas, with regard to the poor, the contrary takes place; things that are irremediable seem easy to be borne, since they so much the nature of the events as the dis- us this treasure. position of the sufferers, that makes the evils And that I may not go a long way off for examples of both these facts, I will speak to you of what has lately befallen ourselves. Behold then how all the poor escaped, and the populace are delivered from the danger, and enjoy an entire freedom! but those who manage the affairs of the city, the men who keep their studs of horses, and preside over other public charges, they are now the inhave been perpetrated by all, and are in a luxury in which hitherto they have lived! counselled to sustain these adverse affairs need so much consolation.'

³ See Arist. Eth. 1, ch. 5, and Plat. Phileb., where the general aim of human action is discussed. Speaking popularly, St. Chrysostom does not enquire by what name it is most correct to call the real object of our desires. He is satisfied with shewing that the highest pleasure, satisfaction, joy, or whatever it may be called, is found in God. And this is a better beginning, for practical purposes, than a philosophical definition. But see Hooker, b. i. c. vii, and Butler, ser, xı, xii, ziii.

good health is the source of pleasure. But upon an immense ocean of joy, are quenched it is not so. For many of those who enjoy and destroyed! This indeed is most to be good health have a thousand times wished wondered at, that whilst things which minister themselves dead, not being able to bear the sadness are present, the man should remain insults inflicted on them. Others again joyful. For if there was nothing to produce affirm, that to enjoy glory, and to have at grief, it would be no great matter to him that tained to power, and to administer the high- he was able continually to rejoice. But that est offices, and to be flattered by multitudes, at a time when he is urged to sadness by the is productive of continual gladness. But pressure of many things, he is superior to all neither is this the case. And why do I speak these, and is blithe in the midst of sorrow. of other offices of power? For although we this is truly a matter for astonishment! And were to mount up in thought to royalty itself, as no one would have wondered that the three and to him who lives in that station, we Children were not burnt, if they had remained should find it encompassed with a diversity far off from the furnace of Babylon! (for of troubles, and having so many necessary the circumstance that astonished all was, that causes the more of sadness, in proportion as having been so long in such close contact it is surrounded with a greater weight of with the fire, they left it more free from hurt barbarians? Oftentimes he has reason to and what is far worse, that they meet these fear those by whom he is surrounded at home. For many of those monarchs who have escaped from the hands of their enemies, have not escaped the conspiracies of their own body-guards. And kings have of necessity as many causes of sadness as there are waves on the ocean. But if monarchy is unable to render life devoid of grief, then what else can possibly achieve this? Nothing, indeed, of this life; but this saying of Paul alone, are familiar with many such. For it is not brief and simple as it is, will of itself open to

6. For many words are not needed, nor a which come upon us seem great or small long round of argument, but if we only consider his expression, we shall find the way that leads to it. He does not simply say, "Rejoice always;" but he adds the cause of the continual pleasure, saying, "Rejoice in the Lord always." He who rejoices "in the Lord," can not be deprived of the pleasure by any thing that may happen. For all other things in which we rejoice are mutable the public games, and such as have borne and changeable, and subject to variation. And not only does this grievous circumstance mates of the prison, and fear the worst; and attend them, but moreover while they remain they alone pay the penalty of the deeds that they do not afford us a pleasure sufficient to repel and veil the sadness that comes upon state of constant terror; and they are now the us from other quarters. But the fear of God most wretched of men, not because of the contains both these requisites. It is steadgreatness of the danger, but on account of the fast and immoveable, and sheds so much g.adness that we can admit no sense of other Many, at least when exhorted by us, and evils. For the man who fears God as he ought, and trusts in Him, gathers from the with fortitude, said this, "We never practised very root of pleasure, and has possession of any thing of the kind, and do not know how the whole fountain of cheerfulness. And as to exercise such philosophy; this is why we a spark falling upon a wide ocean quickly disappears, so whatever events happen to the 5. Others again suppose, that to enjoy man who fears God, these, falling as it were And what need is there to speak of than those who had not been in contact with it); so also we are able to say of the saints, that if no temptation had fastened itself upon them, we should not have wondered at their another admonishing, and saying, "In discontinual rejoicing. But the point worthy ease and poverty trust thou in Him; for as of admiration, and that which surpasses gold is tried in the fire, so are acceptable human nature, is this, that being encircled on men in the furnace of humiliation."5 Since, all sides with innumerable waves, their condi-therefore, neither death, nor loss of money, tion is easier than that of those who enjoy an entire calm!

I Proof of wealth.

7. From what has been said, it is evident that amongst those who are outside the church it is impossible to find any situation in life, encircled with continual gladness from the things without. But that the believer cannot not the Saint to be in sadness? Do you not possibly be deprived of the enjoyment of a cherishing a good conscience, and yearning again the sorrow procured them those great after the future state, and the fulfilment of crowns. And this is the paradox; that not to throw such a person into sadness? Does joy, contains extreme loss; but in the case of not death seem the most insupportable of all spiritual things, it is exactly the reverse; and things? Yet the expectation of this is so far not the joy only, but the sadness too confrom grieving him, that it makes him the tains a rich treasure of good things! But more joyful; for he knows that the arrival of how, I proceed to explain. In the world, a death is a release from labour, and a speed-person often rejoices, on beholding an enemy ing toward the crowns and rewards laid up in trouble; and by this joy he draws on himpiety and virtue. But is it the untimely end person mourns, on seeing a brother fall; and of his children? Nay, he will also bear this because of this sadness he will procure for nobly, and will take up the words of Job, himself much favour with God. Seest thou "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; how godly sorrow is better and more profitas it seemed good unto the Lord, so is it able than the joy of the world? Thus also great and noble; no, nor anguish of body, since the Apostles were scourged, yet they wiz. that grief is often capable of refreshing were not made sad. This, indeed, was a distressed souls, and of rendering a burdened nor bodily disease, nor dishonour, nor reproach, nor any other thing of that nature, will be able to grieve him, but makes him even the more joyful, what foundation for sadness will he have at any time?

hear Paul saying, "I have great heaviness, continued pleasure is what I will now pro- and continual sorrow in my heart?" This, ceed to prove, to the end that we may not indeed, is the thing to wonder at, that sorrow only learn, but also emulate this painless brought a gain, and a pleasure that resulted condition of life. For suppose a man having from the gain; for as the scourge did not nothing for which to condemn himself, but procure them anguish, but gladness; so also those good hopes; what, I ask, will be able only the sadness of the world, but also its for those who have contended in the race of self a great punishment. Again, another come to pass. Blessed be the name of the Paul sorrowed for sinners, and for those who Lord for ever." But if death and loss of disbelieved in God; and this sorrow was the children cannot grieve, much less can the loss means of laying up a great reward for him. of money, or dishonour, or reproaches, or But that I may make what I say more clear, false accusations, at any time affect a soul so and that ye may know that although what I great thing; but what is much more, instead conscience light: consider how often women, of being made sad, they considered their very when they have lost their most beloved chilscourgings, as a ground of additional pleas-dren, break their hearts, and perish, if they ure. "And they departed from the presence are forbidden to mourn, and to shed tears. of the council, rejoicing that they were But if they do all which those who are sad, counted worthy to suffer shame for the name are wont to do, they are relieved, and receive of Christ." Did any person insult and re- consolation. And what wonder that this vile such a one? Well, he was taught by should be the case with women, when you Christ to rejoice in these revilings. "Remay even see a prophet affected in a similar joice," 3 saith He, "and be exceeding glad, manner? Therefore he was continually saywhen they shall say all manner of evil against ing, "Suffer me-I will weep bitterly-labour you falsely for my sake; for great is your not to comfort me, because of the spoiling of reward in heaven." But suppose a man the daughter of my people." So that, hath fallen into disease? Well, he hath heard oftentimes, sadness is the bearer of consolation; and if it is so with regard to this world. much more with regard to spiritual things.

¹ Job i. 21.
2 Acts v. 41.
3 Sav. Blessed are ye, &c., as in text.
4 Matt. v. 11, 12.

⁵ F.cclus, ii. 4, 5. 6 Rom. ix. 2.

Therefore he says, "Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of." This indeed seems to be obscure; but what he says is to this effect: "If thou grievest over wealth, thou art nothing profited. If for sickness, thou hast gained nothing, but hast increased thy affliction."

9. And I have heard many, after such exhast both encouraged and comforted thyself, thus charges one of them: "Set a mark are in anguish." And after charging the others, and saying, "Begin ye from mine will ease, and honour, and glory, and attenholy ones," He goes on to add, "But upon tion, produce fruits that shall be pleasurable whomsoever the sign is, touch them not." 2 to thee; but hostilities also, and calumnies, For what reason, tell me? Because although and contempt, and disgrace, and torments, the things which are done, and deplore them. as the roots of trees are bitter in themselves, And again, He accuses others, saying, That and yet produce our sweetest fruits, so, Joseph:"3 meaning by Joseph the whole the nature of the things, but our disposition, people. And again: "The inhabitants of which is wont to make us sad or joyful. If Ænan went not forth to bewail the house next then we can render the latter such as it ought unto them." 4 For although they are justly to be, we shall have a pledge for all gladness. punished, God willeth that we should condole And just as, with the body, it is not so much with them, and not rejoice or insult. "For the nature of the air, or the things it meets if I that punish," saith He, "do not this re- from without, as its own internal condition. joicingly; nor take pleasure in their punish. that either injures or assists it, so also it is in ment; for "I do not at all will the death of the case of the soul; and much more so; for the sinner;"5 it is right that thou shouldest in the one case, there is the necessity of imitate thy Lord; and shouldest mourn for nature; in the other, the whole is seated in this very thing, that the sinner hath provided matter and occasion for a just punishment." So that if any one entertains a godly sorrow, he will thence reap a great advantage.

10. Since therefore those who are scourged are more blessed than the scourgers, and those in tribulation among us than those who are free from it outside the Christian pale; and those who are sad are more blessed than those in pleasure; what further source of tribulation shall we have? On this account we should call no man happy, save him only perience, blame themselves, and say, What who lives according to God. These only the advantage is it that I have grieved? I have Scripture terms blessed. For "blessed," it Scripture terms blessed. For "blessed," it not recovered my money, and I have injured is said, "is the man who hath not walked in myself. But if thou hast grieved on account the counsel of the ungodly. Blessed is he of sin, thou hast blotted it out, and hast whom Thou chastenest, and teachest him out reaped the greatest pleasure. If thou hast of Thy law. Blessed are the undefiled in the grieved for thy brethren who have fallen, thou way. Blessed are all they who trust in Him. Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord. and hast also restored them; and even if thou Blessed is he whom his soul condemneth not. wert not to profit them, thou hast an abun- Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord."6 dant recompense. And that thou mayest And again, Christ speaks thus: "Blessed learn that this grieving for those who have are they that mourn; blessed are the humble; fallen, though we should not at all benefit blessed are the meek; blessed are the peacethem, still brings us a large reward, hear makers; blessed are they who are persecuted what Ezekiel says; or rather, what God Him- for righteousness' sake," Seest thou how self speaks through him. For when He had the divine laws everywhere pronounce blessed sent certain messengers to overturn the city, none of the rich, or of the well-born, or of and to consume all the dwellings with sword the possessors of glory, but the man who has and fire, along with their inhabitants, He gotten hold of virtue. For what is required of us is, that in every thing we do or suffer, upon the forehead of the men that groan, and the fear of God should be the foundation: and if you implant this as the root, not merely they avail nothing, they nevertheless lament and all things without exception. And just in their luxury, and gluttony, and enjoyment verily, godly sorrow will bring us an abundant of great security, when they beheld the Jews pleasure. They know, who have often prayed carried away into captivity, they did not grieve, nor partake of their sadness. And they have reaped; how they purged the conhear what He says, reproaching them: science; how they rose up with favourable "They suffered nothing in the affliction of hopes! For as I am always saying, it is not the power of choice. Therefore Paul, when he had endured innumerable evils-shipwrecks, wars, persecutions, plots, the assaults of robbers, and things too numerous to be

¹ ² Cor. vii. 10. ⁴ Mich. i. ⁴.

² Ezek, ix. 4

³ Amos vi. 6.

⁶ Ps. i. 1, xciv. 12, cxix. 1, ii. 13, xxxiii. 12; Ecclus. xiv. 2; Ps. 7 Matt. v. 3-10.

recounted, dying also daily deaths-was so tains no adversity, but enjoys a continued we glory in tribulations." Now, glorying signifies an extension of pleasure.

11. If then thou desirest joy, seek not after riches, nor bodily health, nor glory, nor power, nor luxury, nor sumptuous tables, nor splendid and conspicuous, nor any thing else of that kind; but pursue that spiritual wisdom are present, or which are expected, will be able to sadden thee. Why do I say to sadden? Verily, the things that make others sad, we do not make ourselves such; nor, on the other hand, blessed, if we do not make our. selves such, following up the grace of God.

12. And that ye may learn that he only is holding us fast to the same pious resolutions. blessed, who feareth the Lord, I will now demonstrate this to you, not by what has happened in past times, but by what has befallen ourselves. Our city was in danger of seems universally terrible and awful, they awaited it with the utmost readiness, and ran far from grieving or being discontented, that tranquillity, and laughs to scorn all things he gloried, and rejoiced, and said, "I now which seem to be sorrowful. At the present rejoice in my sufferings, and fill up that which time at least, those who were once in power is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my are oppressed by much sadness, inhabiting flesh." And again: "And not only so, but the prison, and loaded with chains, and daily expecting to be put to death. But these men on the contrary enjoy the purest pleasure; and if it be their lot to suffer anything terrible, this, and the very things which seem formidable to others, are welcome to them, vestures of silk, nor costly lands, nor houses for they know well towards what point they are running, and what lot will await them when they depart hence. But whilst they which is according to God, and take hold of live with so much exactness, and smile at virtue; and then nought of the things which death, they nevertheless grieve for others, and reap therefrom, in turn, the greatest advantage. Let us then be in earnest to take care of our souls, and nothing which may will prove to thee an accession of pleasure, come unlooked for can make us sad. And For scourges, and death, and losses, and on behalf of those who are in prison, let us slanders, and the being evil entreated, and beseech God that He will deliver them from all such things, when they are brought upon their present calamity. For it was in God's us for God's sake, and spring from this root, power at once to release us from this dire will bring into our souls much pleasure. For evil, and not to suffer even the smallest part no one will be able to make us miserable, if of it to remain; but in order that we may not again go back to our former negligence, He hath provided that the torrent of these evils should subside gently and by little and little,

13. And that this is true, and that many would have gone back to their former supineness, if we had been released from the whole difficulty at once, is manifest from this cirbeing utterly effaced; and no man among the cumstance; that whilst yet the remnants of rich, or eminent, or illustrious, dared to ap- the calamity are left, whilst the sentence of pear in public, but all fled, and hurried out the Emperor is yet doubtful, and those who of the way. But they who feared God, the conducted the affairs of the city are all in men who passed their time in monasteries, prison, many of our fellow inhabitants, hastened down with much boldness, and set through their inordinate desire of bathing, all free from this terror; and the terrible run to the river, there making endless merrievents that had taken place, and the threats ment, behaving wantonly, leaping, dancing, which had been expected to be put into exe- and dragging women after them. What parcution, were so far from causing them to fear, don can such be worthy of? What kind of or from throwing them into anxiety, that excuse can they offer? Or rather, what kind although they were placed far off from the of punishment and vengeance do they not calamity, and had no share in it, they cast deserve? The head of the city is in the themselves willingly into the midst of the public prison; our members are in exile; the fire, and rescued all; and as for death, which sentence concerning them is doubtful; and dost thou, I ask, dance, sport, and laugh? "Why, we could not endure," says some to meet it with more pleasure than others do one, "to remain without the bath?" O towards principalities and honours. And shameless disposition, sordid and perverted! why, but because they knew, that this is the How many months, I ask, how many years, greatest principality and honour? And they shewed in very deed that he only is blessed out from the bath for twenty days; and thou who lays hold of the wisdom which is from art as much distressed and discontented, as above, that he undergoes no change and sus- if thou hadst continued without washing for a whole year! Tell me, was this thy state, military, when thou wert daily anticipating bring put to death, when thou fleddest to the deserts, and wast hurrying to the mountain tops? If any one had then proposed to thee to remain "a year" without the bath, so that thou mightest be rescued from the impending distress, wouldest thou not readily have accepted the proposal, and submitted to it? When, therefore, it were becoming that thou shouldest give thanks to God, Who hath freed thee from all these things without any loss, dost thou again grow wanton and contemptuous; and when the fear has passed away, turn back afresh to a worse state of negligence? Have these dire events really touched thee, and yet art thou so desirous of the baths? Why, if the bath had been permitted, would not the calamity of those who are yet in confinement have been sufficient to persuade those who are not in the same grievous condition to be forgetful of every luxury? Life Whom, and with Whom, to the Father, with itself is at stake, and dost thou remember the baths, and desire to be luxurious? Dost thou ation, now and ever, and world without end. despise the danger because thou hast now escaped it? Take heed lest thou entangle thyself in the necessity of a greater punishment. when thou wert expecting an attack from the and call back in larger measure the wrath which is removed, and experience the very thing which Christ declared concerning the devils. For He says, that "when the unclean spirit is gone out, and afterwards findeth the house void and swept, he taketh seven other spirits more wicked than himself, and entereth into the soul, and the last state of that man is worse than the first." Therefore let us also fear, lest now we are liberated from our former evils, we afterwards by our listlessness draw upon us those which are greater! I know that ye yourselves 2 are free from this folly; but ye should restrain, punish, and sober those who walk disorderly, that ye may always rejoice even as Paul commanded, that both for our own good works, and for our forethought for others, we may enjoy both here and in the life to come an abundant recompense; through the grace and lovingkindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the Holy Ghost, be glory, honour, and ador-Amen.

4 Luke xi, 24, 26,

2 That is, those present.

HOMILY XIX.

On the Sunday called "Episozomenes," to those who had come to Antioch from the country-also on the subject of avoiding oaths.

your fill of the spiritual feast! Ye have all exulted with honest exultation! Ye have beheld their ribs laid bare, and their loins lacerated; the blood flowing forth all around; ten thousand forms of torture! Ye have seen human nature exhibiting that which is above nature, and crowns woven with blood! Ye have danced a goodly dance throughout the whole city; this, your noble captain 2 leading you on; but sickness compelled me to remain at home, although against my will. But if I did not take a part in the festival, I partook of the pleasure of it. If I could not have the

I. YE have revelled during the last few enjoyment of your public assembly, yet did I days in the Holy Martyrs! Ye have taken share in your gladness. For such is the power of love, that it makes those who are not actually in the enjoyment to rejoice equally with those who are; persuading them to think the good things of their neighbour common to themselves. Therefore even whilst I sat at home, I was rejoicing with you; and now whilst I am not yet entirely freed from my sickness, I have risen up, and run to meet you, that I may see your much desired faces, and take a part in the present festival.

2. For I think the present day to be a very great festival indeed on account of our brethren, who by their presence beautify our city, and adorn the Church; a people foreign to us in language,3 but in harmony with us concerning the faith, a people passing their time in tranquillity, and leading an honest shall hereafter render an account of what we introduced before all others into our life, so splendid. For before the sin of Adam, when he enjoyed beginning.

3 It seems that they spoke not the Greek, but the Syriac language.

¹ Τῆς Ἐπισωζομένης. The Sunday before Ascension Day, which, according to Allatius, was called Episozomene by the Cappadocians; but little seems to be certainly known on the subject. The Homily is placed here on account of the argument continued in it. See Montf. Pref. The philosophers may not have returned, or he may refer to the superiority of the ancients.
² Flavian, who had returned before Easter.

mind. The pagan philosophers are in char-acter no wise better than those who are at the same time they were entirely destitute only with the doctrines, but also with the real from their simplicity in regard to learning, which the pagan philosophers have discoursed is devoid of right thoughts? It were just as accurate reply from his store of wisdom, have their tongue decked out with words and And not only is this to be wondered at, but names, but their understanding is full of mere that they confirm the credibility of these weakness and good for nothing. Not so with doctrines by their actions. For of the fact these philosophers, but quite the reverse. that we have an immortal soul, and that we Their understanding is full of spiritual wis-

and sober life. For among these men there have done here, and stand before a fearful are no spectacles of iniquity-no horse rac- Tribunal, their minds are at once thoroughly ings, nor harlots, nor any of that riot which persuaded, and they have also regulated their pertains to a city, but every kind of licenti- whole course of life by such hopes as these; ousness is banished, and great sobriety flour- and have become superior to all worldly ishes every where. And the reason is, that show, instructed as they have been by the their life is a laborious one; and they have, sacred Scriptures, that "all is vanity, yea, in the culture of the soil, a school of virtue vanity of vanities," and they do not greedily and sobriety, and follow that art which God long for any of those things which seem to be

4. These too know how to philosophize much freedom, a certain tillage of the ground concerning God, even as God hath deterwas enjoined upon him; not indeed a labori- mined; and if, taking one of them, you were ous or a troublesome one, but one which now to bring forward some pagan philosoafforded him much good discipline, for he was pher; -or rather, now you could not find appointed, it is said, "to till the garden, and one ! 3-But if you were to take one of these, to keep it." Each of these men you may and then open the books of their ancient see at one time employed in yoking the philosophers, and go through them, and inlabouring oxen, and guiding the plough, and stitute an enquiry by way of parallel as to cutting the deep furrow; and at another what these now answer, and the others in acsending the sacred pulpit, and cultivating their day philosophically advanced; you the souls of those under their authority; at would see how much wisdom belonged to the one time cutting away the thorns from the former, and how much folly to the latter. soil with a bill-hook, at another purging out For whilst some of those would aver, that the the sins of the soul by the Word. For they things existing were destitute of a providence, are not ashamed of work like the inhabitants and that the creation had not its origin from of our city, but they are ashamed of idleness, God; that virtue was not sufficient for itself, knowing that this has taught every kind of but stood in need of wealth, and nobility. wickedness; and that to those who love it, it and external splendour, and other things still has proved a teacher of iniquity from the more ridiculous; and whilst these, on the other hand, would discourse wisely respecting 3. These are our philosophers, and theirs Providence, respecting the future Tribunals the best philosophy, exhibiting their virtue of judgment, respecting the creative power of not by their outward appearance, but by their God, bringing forth all things out of nothing, engaged on the stage, and in the sports of of worldly schooling; who could but learn actors; and they have nothing to shew beyond from hence the power of Christ, which hath the threadbare cloak, the beard, and the long proved these unlearned and simple persons to robe! But these, quite on the contrary, bid- be as much wiser than those, who make so ding farewell to staff and beard, and the other much boast of their wisdom, as men of disaccoutrements, have their souls adorned with cretion are seen to be in comparison of little the doctrines of the true philosophy, and not children? For what harm can result to them practice. And were you to question any one when their thoughts are full of much wisdom? of these, who live a rustic life at the spade And what advantage have those philosophers and plough, as to the dogmas respecting from this learning, when the understanding an infinite deal, and have expended a multi- if one should have a sword that had its hilt tude of words, without being able to say any of silver, whilst the blade was weaker than thing sound; one of these would give you an the vilest lead. For truly these philosophers το ispor βημα. The whole of the raised part of the Church, entered by none but the clergy, was so called. On the cases in which secular occupations were allowed to the clergy, see Bingham, b. vi. c. iv. sec. 13.

³ St. Chrysostom here satirically alludes to the flight of the philosophers from the city during the panic succeeding the sedition. See Homily XVII.

dom and their mode of life is a transcript of them home; and let us again raise the questheir doctrines. Amongst these there are no tion concerning oaths; that from the minds luxurious women; there are no ornaments of dress, nor colours, nor paints; but all such custom. But first, I desire to put you a little corruption of manners is discountenanced. Hence the population under their charge are the more readily trained to sobriety, and the law which Paul gave, when he directed that food and covering should be had, and nothing more be sought after, they most rigidly observe.2 Amongst them, there are no perfumed unguents to fascinate the senses;3 but the earth bringing forth herbs, prepares for them a varied fragrance of flowers, above all the skill of perfumers. For this reason, their bodies as well as souls enjoy a sound state of health, inasmuch as they have banished all luxury of diet, and driven off all the evil floods of drunkenness; and they eat just as much as suffices for subsistence. Let us then not despise them because of their outward appearance, but let us admire their mind. For of what advantage is the external habit, when the soul is more wretchedly clad than any beggar! The man ought to be was necessary that the perjurer when dead praised and admired, not for dress, nay more, not even for his bodily form, but for his bosom of the earth; in order that his wickedsoul. Lay bare the soul of these men, and you will see its beauty, and the wealth it possesses, in their words, in their doctrines, and in the whole system of their manners!

5. Let the Gentiles then be ashamed, let them hide their heads, and slink away on account of their philosophers, and their wisdom, wretched as it is beyond all folly! For the philosophers that have been amongst them in their lifetime have hardly been able to teach above. For He designed, that the vengeance their doctrines to a very few, who can easily of this sin should permanently remain. be numbered; and when any trifling peril disciples of Christ, the fishermen, the publicans, and the tent-makers, in a few years brought over the whole world to the truth; and when from that time, ten thousand perils of the Gospel was so far from being put down, that it still flourishes and increases; and they taught simple people, tillers of the ground, and occupied with cattle, to be lovers of wisdom. Such are the persons, who beside all the rest having deeply rooted in them that love which is the source of all good things,4 have hastened to us, undertaking so long a their fellow-members.

6. Come then, and in return for these favours, (I speak of their love and kind feeling), let us give them a provision, and so send of all we may pluck up by the roots this evil in mind to-day of the things we spoke of lately.5

When the Jews, having been released from Persia, and set free from that tyranny, were returned back to their own country, "I saw," saith one, "a flying sickle, twenty cubits in length, and ten cubits broad."6 They heard also the Prophet giving them this instruction, "This is the curse, that goeth forth over the face of the whole land, and entereth into the house of him that sweareth falsely; and it shall rest in the midst thereof, and throw down the timber and all the stones." When we had read this passage, we also enquired then why it was, that it should destroy not the swearer only, but also his house, and we stated this to be the reason; that God will have the punishments of the most grievous sins to remain continually visible; that all may afterwards learn prudence. Inasmuch then as it should be buried, and committed to the ness might not be buried along with him, his house was made a heap, so that all who passed by, beholding it, and learning the reason of the overthrow, might avoid imitating the sin.

7. This also happened at Sodom. For when they burned in their lust one towards another, then too the very earth itself was burned up, being kindled by the fire from

And observe the mercy of God! Those overtook them, they lost even these. But the who had sinned, He caused not to continue burning to the present day, but when they had been for once in flames, He buried them; and burning up the face of the ground, He placed it visibly before all who after should have been constantly arising, the preaching desire to look at these things; and now the sight of the land, through all the generations since, hath given an admonition beyond all powers of speech, crying out, as it were, and saying, "Dare not to do the deeds of Sodom, lest ye suffer the lot of Sodom!" For precept commonly makes not so deep an impression upon the mind as a fearful spectacle does, which bears upon it the vestiges of journey, that they might come and embrace calamity through all time. And persons that have visited these places bear witness, who

From the marg. reading, al. "philosophy," 21 Tim. vi. 8. 3 Comp. Georg. ii. 466, 4 Eph. iii. 17.

⁵ Bingham asserts, that this Homily and Homily XV, appear to have been preached on the same day, Antiquities, b. 14, C. 4, sec. 8, vol. 4. The opening of the Homily disproves this. Bingham's mistake is easily accounted for, by the wording of this passage in the Greek.

6 Zech. v. 1, 2.

often, when they hear the Scripture discours- king of the barbarians, that he would remain fire, with soil no where visible, but every ished with the sight, and taking with them a ened to destroy the dwellings of the swearers, in order that by their punishments, they may make others to be more self-controlled.

shall say, Do them no harm." 3 Neverthethat alone had been able to avoid captivity, whilst all the rest were carried away, not once or twice, but very often; was ruined solely by an oath. But how, I proceed to state.

9. One of their kings was Zedekiah. Zedekiah took an oath to Nebuchadnezzar, ing of these things, are not much terrified; in alliance with him. Afterwards he revolted, but when they have gone and stood upon the and went over to the king of Egypt, disdainsite, and see the whole surface of it dis- ing the obligation of his oath, and suffered figured, and have witnessed the effects of the things of which ye shall hear presently. But first, it is necessary to mention the parathing dust and ashes, they come away aston- ble of the prophet, in which he enigmatically represented all these matters: "The word strong lesson of chastity. For truly, the very of the Lord," saith he, "came to me, saying, nature of the punishment was a pattern of Son of man, put forth a riddle, and speak a the nature of the sin! Even as they devised parable, and say, Thus saith the Lord God: a barren intercourse, not having for its end A great eagle, with great wings, and long exthe procreation of children, so did God bring tended, full of claws."4 Here he calls the on them such a punishment, as made the king of the Babylonians an eagle, and speaks womb of the land ever barren, and destitute of him as being "great, and long-winged;" of all fruits! For this reason also He threat-and he calls him long-extended and "full of claws," on account of the multitude of his army, and the greatness of his power, and the swiftness of his invasion. For just as the 8. But I am ready to shew to-day, not the wings and claws of the eagle are his armour, destruction of one, two, or three houses in so are horses and soldiers to kings. This consequence of oaths, but that of a whole eagle, he goes on to say, "hath the leading city and of a people beloved of God; of a to enter into Lebanon." What is meant nation that had always enjoyed much of the by the "leading?" Counsel-design. And divine care; and of a race that had escaped Judæa is called Lebanon, because of its situmany dangers.' For Jerusalem herself, the ation near that mountain. Afterwards, incity of God, which had the holy ark, and all tending to speak of the oaths and treaties, that divine service; -where there were once "He took," saith he, "of the seed of the prophets, and the grace of the Spirit, and the land, and planted it in a fruitful field, that it ark; and the tables of the covenant, and the might take root by great waters. He placed golden pot; -- where angels were frequent vis- it to be looked upon; and it grew, and beitors;—this city, I say, when a multitude of came a weak vine, and of small stature, and wars took place, and many foreign nations it stretched out its branches towards him, and made attacks upon it, as if girt by a wall of its roots were under him."6 Here he calls adamant, ever laughed them all to scorn, and the city of Jerusalem a vine; but in saying whilst the land was utterly destroyed, sustained no injury! And not only is this to be eagle, and that its roots were under him, he wondered at, but that frequently in driving refers to the treaties and alliances made with out its enemies, it inflicted upon them a him; and that it cast itself upon him. Next, heavy blow, and enjoyed so much of the purposing to declare the iniquity of this, he providential care of God, that God Himself saith, "And there was another great eagle," said, "I found Israel as a bunch of grapes in (speaking of the Egyptian king), "with great the desert; and I beheld your fathers as the wings, and having many claws; and the vine earliest fruit on the fig tree."2 And again, did bend itself toward him, and its tendril of the city itself: "As olive berries on the toward him, and shot out its branches, that extremity of the highest bough, and they it might be watered. Therefore, I said, Thus saith the Lord God: Shall it prosless, the city beloved of God; that had es- per?"9 That is to say, "after having broken caped so many perils; that had been favoured the oath, and the treaties, shall it be able to with pardon, amidst the multitude of its sins; remain, or to be safe, or to avoid falling?" Presently, for the purpose of shewing that this is not to happen, but that it is certainly to be destroyed on account of the oath, he discourses concerning its punishment, and This alleges the cause. "For its tender roots and ¹ St. Chrysostom here carries on the argument against the use of oaths, which he had broken off in Homily XIV., after ending the history of Saul and Jonathan.

² Hosea ix, 10.

³ Isa. lxv. 8, not exactly as Lxx.

⁴ Ezek. xvii. 2, 3.
5 το ἡγημα, literally the generalship, as that of an army.
6 Ezek. xvii. 5, 6.
7 Rather the king, who was of the seed (royal) of the land, but made king by Nebuchadnezzar, 2 Kings xxiv. 17.
1 In this expression of many claws, and in some others, the Lax. differs from the Hebrady.

its fruits shall become corrupt, and all which without, or the famine that oppressed the springs therefrom shall be withered." And for the purpose of shewing that it will not be destroyed by human strength, but because it hath made God its enemy by means of these oaths, he subjoins, "Not by a mighty arm, nor by much people, to pluck it up by its roots." Such indeed is the parable, but the prophet again explains it, when he says, "Behold, the king of Babylon cometin against Jerusalem." a And then, after saying some live, and thine house. But if thou wilt not other things between, he mentions the oaths and the treaties. "For," saith he, "he shall make a covenant with him;" and presently, speaking of the departure from it, he goes on to say, "And he will depart from him, by sending messengers into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people." And then he proceeds to shew that it is on mock me. But Jeremiah said, They shall account of the oath that all this destruction not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the is to take place. "Surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, he so shall it be better for thee, and thy soul who hath despised My curse, and hath trans- shall live. But if thou refuse to go forth, this gressed My covenant, in the midst of Baby- is the word that the Lord hath shewed me. lon he shall die; and not by great power nor All the women that are left in the king of by multitude, because he despised the oath Judah's house, shall be brought forth to the in transgressing this My covenant; I will king of Babylon's princes; and those shall surely recompense upon his own head this say, The men who are at peace with thee My oath which he hath dishonoured, and My covenant which he hath broken; and I will thee; they shall prevail when thy feet slip; spread My net upon him." Seest thou, that they are turned away from thee, and they not once, or twice, but repeatedly, it is said shall bring out all thy wives, and thy children that because of the oath he was to suffer all to the Chaldeans, and thou shalt not escape these things. For God is inexorable when out of their hand, for thou shalt be taken by oaths are treated contemptuously. merely from the punishment which was city shall be burned with fire."7 brought upon the city by the oath, but also from the delay, and the postponement, may by this address, but he remained in his sin it be seen how much God is concerned for and transgression, after three years, God dethe inviolability of oaths. "For it came to livered up the city, displaying at once His pass," we are told, "in the ninth year of the reign of Zedekiah, on the tenth day of the king. And entering in with the utmost ease, month, that Nebuchadnezzar the king of they "burnt the house of the Lord, and the Babylon came, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built a wall against it round about, and the city was besieged until the eleventh year of king Zedekiah, and the ninth day of the month,5 and there was no bread for the people to eat, and the city was broken up."6 He might indeed, at once from the first day, have delivered them up, and have given them into the hands of their enemies; but He permitted of three years, and experience a most distressing siege; to the end that during this interval, being humbled by the terror of the forces city within, they might compel the king, however unwillingly, to submit to the barbarian; and some alleviation might be obtained for the sin committed. And to prove that this is true, and no conjecture of my own, hear what He saith to him by the prophet: "If thou shalt go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans; and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand. And the king said, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hands and they word of the Lord, which I speak unto thee; have deceived thee, and have prevailed over Nor the hand of the king of Babylon, and this

10. But when He did not prevail with him own clemency and the ingratitude of that king's house, and the houses of Jerusalem, and every great house, the captain of the guard 8 burnt, and overthrew the wall of Jerusalem;" o and everywhere there was the fire of the barbarian, the oath being the conductor of the conflagration, and carrying about the flame in all directions. "And the captain of the guard carried away the rest of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon." that they should first be wasted for the space And the pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord the Chaldeans brake up, and the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, did the Chaldees break in

² Ezek. xvii. 9. ² Ezek. xvii. 12. 4 Ezek. xvii. 16-20. 3 Ezek. xvii. 14.

⁵ The fourth, Jer. xxxix. 2; lii. 6. 6 2 Kings xxv. 1-4.

⁷ Jer. xxxviii. 17-23.
8 Lxx., ἀρχιμάγειρος, chief of the cooks, the Hebrew is literally

^{9 2} Kings xxv. 9; Jer. xxxix. 8. 10 Jer. xxxix. q.

vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away. And the firepans, and all the golden and silver bowls they took away. Moreover, Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, took away the two pillars, and the bases, and the sea which Solomon had made in the house of the Lord. And they took away Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door; and out of the city one eunuch that was set over the men of war; and five men that were in the king's presence; and Shaphan the chief captain, and the principal scribe, and threescore men. And he took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon, and the king smote them, and slew them." x

11. Be mindful therefore, I pray, now of the "flying sickle," that "resteth in the swearer's house;" and "destroyeth the walls and the timber and the stones." Be mindful. I pray, how this oath entered into the city, and overturned houses, and temple, and walls, and splendid buildings, and made the city an heap; and that neither the Holy of Holies, nor the sacred vessels, nor any thing else could ward off that punishment and vengressed! The city, indeed, was thus miserably destroyed. But the king endured what was still more wretched and deplorable.2 And as the flying sickle overthrew the buildings, so did it also cut him down in his flight. For "the king," it says, "went forth by night, by way of the gate, and the Chaldeans encompassed the city, and the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king and overtook him, and they took the king, and brought him to the king of Babylon, and the king of Babylon gave judgment 2 upon Zedekiah, and slew his sons before his face, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters, and carried him to Babylon." What is meant by the expression, "he spake judgment with him?" He demanded of him an account of his conduct, he pleaded against him; and first he slew his two sons, that he might be a spectator of the calamity of his house, and might behold that deplorable tragedy; and then he put out his own eyes. For what reason, I ask again, did this occur? In order that he might go as a teacher to the barbarians, and to the Jews who dwelt among them; and that they who had eyes might dis-pieces. And the pots, and the flesh-hooks, cern by him who was bereft of sight, how and the bowls, and the censers, and all the great an evil is an oath! Nor only these; but all who dwelt by the way, beholding the man fettered and blinded, might learn by his calamity the greatness of his sin. Therefore one of the prophets declares, "He shall not see Babylon." And another, "He shall be carried away to Babylon." And the prophecy seems, indeed, to be contradictory. But it is not so; for both of these are true. For he saw not Babylon, though he was carried away to Babylon. How then did he not see Babylon? Because it was in Judæa he had his eyes put out; for where the oath had been set at nought, there also was it vindicated, and he himself subjected to punishment. And how was he carried away to Babylon? In a state of captivity. For since the punishment was twofold, deprivation of sight and captivity, the prophets took them severally. The one saith, "He shall not see Babylon," speaking of the loss of his eyes; the other saith, "He shall be carried away to Babylon," signifying his captivity.

12. Knowing these things, then, brethren, and gathering up what has been now advanced, as well as what has been said before; let us at last desist from this evil custom, yea, I pray and beseech you all! For if in geance, for that the oath had been trans- the old dispensation, when the Jews had not the strictest moral wisdom required of them, but much condescension was extended to them, such wrath was the effect of one oath; such capture and captivity; what punishment is it likely that those who swear should now be subjected to, after an express law forbidding the practice, and so large an addition of precepts. Is it, indeed, all that is required, that we come to the assembly, and hear what is spoken? Why truly it is a reason for greater condemnation, and for more inevitable punishment, that we are continually hearing, and yet do not what is bidden! What excuse shall we have, or what pardon, if assembling here from earliest youth to latest old age, and enjoying the advantage of so much instruction, we remain just like them, and do not take pains to correct a single defect. Let no one henceforth allege custom. For this is the very thing at which I am indignant and provoked, that we are not able to get the better of custom. And, pray, if we do not get the better of custom, how can we get the better of concupiscence, which hath its root even in the principles of our nature; for it is natural to feel desire; but to desire wickedly, comes after of choice. But this practice of swearing takes not even its first

^{1 2} Kings xxv. 13-20,

Σ Kings xxv. 4-7.
 Z Kings xxv. 4-7.
 Lit. spake judgment with him, as E. V. mar.
 The last Par. Ed. adopts iδη from Savile, and so M. and three MSS. at Venice. Ben. iδε, N. R. and Lat. είδε.

principle from nature, but from mere negli-

13. And that thou mayest learn that not from the difficulty of the thing, but through our inattention, this sin has advanced to such a pitch, let us call to mind how many things far more difficult than these, men accomplish; and that too without expecting any recompense therefrom. Let us think what services the Devil imposes; how laborious, how troublesome they are; and yet, the difficulty has not become an obstacle to these services. For what can be more difficult, I ask, than when any young person delivering himself up to those, who undertake to make his limbs supple and pliant, uses his most strenuous exertion to bend his whole body into the exact shape of a wheel, and to turn over upon the pavement; his powers being tasked at the same time through the eyes, and through the movement of the hands, as well as other convolutions for the purpose of being transformed into the likeness of woman-kind.2 Yet neither the difficulty of these feats, nor the degradation arising from them, are thought of. And again, those who are dragged upon the dancing-stage, and use the members of the body as though they were wings, who that beholds them can help being struck with wonder? So too they who toss knives aloft in the air one after another, and catch them all by the handle, whom might they not put to shame of those who refuse to undergo any labour for the sake of virtue? And what can any one say of those men, who balancing a pole on the forehead, keep it just as steady as a tree rooted in the ground? And this is not the only marvellous part of the affair; but that they set little children to wrestle with one another on the top of the tree; and neither the hands, nor any other part of the body assisting, the forehead alone sustains the pole unshaken, and with more steadiness than any kind of fastening. Again: another walks on the slenderest rope, with the same fearlessness as men do when they run over level plains. Nevertheless these things, which even in thought seem impracticable, have become possible by art. What like this have we, I ask, to allege concerning oaths? What kind of difficulty? what toil? what art?

what danger? There is only needed on our part a little earnestness, and the whole of our task will be quickly performed.

14. And do not tell me, "I have accomplished the greater part of it;" but if thou hast not accomplished the whole, consider that thou hast not as yet done any thing; for this little, if neglected, is destruction to all the rest. Often indeed when men have built a house, and put on the roof, they have destroyed the whole fabric, by not making any concern of a single tile that has been shaken off from it. And one may see the same thing occur with respect to garments; for there too if a small hole is made, and not repaired, a large rent is the consequence. And this also is frequently the case in regard to floods; for these, if they find but a small entrance, let in the whole torrent. also, then, even if thou hast fortified thyself all around, and but a small part be left still unfortified, yet block up this also against the devil, that thou mayest be made strong on all sides! Thou hast seen the sickle! Thou hast seen the head of John! Thou hast heard the history pertaining to Saul! Thou hast heard the manner of the Jewish captivity! And beside all these, thou hast heard the sentence of Christ declaring, that not only to commit perjury, but to swear in any way, is a diabolical thing, and the whole a device of the evil one.3 Thou hast heard that every where perjuries follow oaths. Putting all these things then together, write them upon thy understanding. Dost thou not see how women and little children suspend Gospels 4 from their necks as a powerful amulet, and carry them about in all places wherever they go. Thus do thou write the commands of the Gospel and its laws upon thy mind. Here there is no need of gold or property, or of buying a book; but of the will only, and the affections of the soul awakened, and the Gospel will be thy surer guardian, carrying it as thou wilt then do, not outside, but treasured up within; yea, in the soul's secret chambers. When thou risest up then from thy bed, and

3 So cometh of evil may be understood. St. Chrysostom scarcely

3 Socometh of evil may be understood. St. Chrysostom scarcely allows an oath in any case, unless perhaps a quoted on Eph. i. 14. His words are sometimes marked as caute legewda. Other Fathers, and the usual practice, allowed them on Just as the second of the second of

^{*} This is the reading in some MSS, adopted by Savile, but the Benedictine reads & rijs wpoaspersus "from moral choice," or "purpose," i. e., aiming at something supposed to be good.

* Xenophon, in his Symposium, describes a dancing girl as performing tricks of this kind, "turning over backwards, bent into the form of a wheel," and "reading and writing while whirled on a potter's wheel," &c. (on which Socrates takes occasion to say how much women might learn). Wilkinson observes, that this bears some resemblance to a feat indicated in Expytian paintings, not less than 1300 years before the age of Socrates. See Manners and Customs of the Ancient Expytians, vol. ii. p. 415. Of the degradation attached to such feats, see Herodotus, b. vi. c. 129.

when thou goest out of thine house, repeat is indeed probable that both the merchants this law: "I say unto you, Swear not at who mix with you, and others who arrive all." And the saying will be to thee a dis-from this place, will report all these matters. cipline; for there is no need of much labour, but only of a moderate degree of attention. And that this is true, may thus be proved. Call thy son, and frighten him, and threaten to lay a few stripes upon him, if he does not duly observe this law; and thou wilt see, how he will forthwith abstain from this custom. children, out of the fear we inspire, should perform this commandment, and that we should not fear God as our sons fear us?

upon him!" This is what the neighbouring dom of heaven, in Christ Jesus our Lord; to cities will certainly hear; nay, not the neighbouring cities only, but even to the ends of be glory and power both now and ever, and the earth will the report be conveyed. For it world without end.

When, therefore, many persons in the way of encomium mention the harbours of other cities, or the markets, or the abundance of wares, enable those who come from hence to say, that there is that at Antioch, which is to be seen in no other city; for that the men who dwell there would sooner have their Is it not therefore truly absurd, that little tongues cut out, than suffer an oath to proceed from their mouths! This will be your ornament and defence, and not only so, but it will bring an abundant reward. For others 15. What then I said before this, I now also will certainly emulate, and imitate you. again repeat. Let us lay down a law for But if, when a person has gained but one or ourselves in this matter; not to meddle either two, he shall receive so great a reward from with public or private affairs until we have God; what recompense shall ye not receive fulfilled this law; and then surely under the when ye are the instructors of the whole pressure of this obligation we shall easily world. It is your duty then to bestir yourconquer, and we shall at once adorn ourselves, selves, to be watchful, and to be sober; knowand decorate our city. For consider what a ing that not only from our own personal thing it would be to have it said every where good works, but from those we have also throughout the world, "A practice becoming wrought in others, shall we receive the best Christians is established at Antioch, and you recompense, and enjoy much favour with will hear no one giving utterance to an oath, God, which may He grant us all continually even though the greatest neeessity is laid to enjoy, and hereafter to obtain the king-

1 Matt. v. 34.

2 Jas. v. 20.

HOMILY XX.

That the fast of Lent is not sufficient to make us competent to partake of the Communion, but that holiness is the first thing required. How it is possible not to entertain resentment, and that God takes much account of this law; and that the entertaining of resentment punishes those who are guilty of it even before they reach the place of torment.—Also concerning abstinence from oaths, and those who have not succeeded in abstaining from swearing.

1. At length the season is verging towards avail if they miss the prize; so neither will the end of the Fast, and therefore we ought any advantage result from these manifold the more earnestly to devote ourselves to labours and toils with regard to the fast, if we holiness. For as in the case of those who are not able to enjoy the sacred Table with a run a race, all their circuits will be of no good conscience. For this end are fasting and Lent appointed, and so many days of solemn assemblies, auditories, prayers, and teachings, in order that by this earnestness? being cleansed in every possible way from the sins which we had contracted during the and never brings it to an end. In the former attained to; what sin he hath cast off, what servant? stain he hath purged away; in what respect the weakness of the body.

¹ Savile places this Homily after those on the Statues, putting here the first Catechesis, as do most Miss. In the new Coll, Mis, this is the toph; its title has been cut out of the list of those on the Statues, and reinserted by another hand. A New College Mis, consisting of select passages, quotes from it as one of them. It is not in any of the Bodleian Miss., but in that at Sion College it is placed as in Savile. Montfaucon placed it here as considering the Catechesis evidently out of place.

² Ben. adds "for the commands of God," but it seems to be a gloss; ² Mss. at Venice omit it.

to you concerning this commandment. For thy knees are lying on the ground, thou sufas it is not to be imagined that the fornicator ferest thy mind to wander every where, in the and the blasphemer can partake of the sacred market, or in the house, babbling the while Table, so it is impossible that he who hath with thy mouth vainly and to no purpose! an enemy, and bears malice, can enjoy the And this we experience, not once or twice, holy Communion. And this with good rea- but frequently! Did God then choose to son. For a man when he has committed scrutinize this alone, do you think that we fornication, or adultery, at the same time that could obtain pardon, or be able to find any he hath accomplished his lust, hath also com- excuse? Truly, I think not! pleted the sin; and should he be willing by watchful living to recover from that fall, he unkindly utter every day one against another, may afterwards, by manifesting great peni- were brought forward against us; as well as tence, obtain some relief. But he who is re- the rash judgments with which we condemn whole year, we may with spiritual boldness case the deed is over, and the sin completed; religiously partake of that unbloody Sacrifice; but here the sin is perpetrated every day, so that should this not be the result, we shall What excuse can we then have, I ask, for have sustained so much labour entirely in delivering ourselves willingly to such an evil vain, and without any profit. Let every one, monster? How canst thou ask thy Lord to therefore, consider with himself what defect be mild and merciful to thee, when thou hast he hath corrected, what good work he hath been so hard and unforgiving to thy fellow-

3. But thy fellow-servant hath treated thee he has become better. And should he dis- with contempt perhaps? Yes! and thou hast cover that in this good traffic he has made treated God with contempt oftentimes. And any gain by the fast, and be conscious in what comparison is there between a fellowhimself of much care taken of his wounds, servant and the Lord? As to the former, let him draw near! But if he hath remained when he was perchance in some way injured, negligent, having nothing to shew but mere he insulted thee, and thou wert exasperated. fasting, and hath done nothing which is right But thou insultest the Lord, when thou art besides, let his remain outside; and then let neither treated with injustice nor ill-will by him enter, when he hath purged out all these diemeter, when he hath purged out all these day. Him, but receiving blessing of Him day by offences. Let no one rest on the fast merely; day. Consider, then, that if God chose to whilst continuing unreformed in evil prac- search out rigorously what is done against tices. For it is probable, that he who omits Him, we should not live a single day. For fasting may obtain pardon, having infirmity the prophet saith, "If Thou wilt be extreme of body to plead; but it is impossible that he to mark iniquity, O Lord, O Lord, who shall can have an excuse who hath not amended his stand?" 3 And, to pass by all those other faults. Thou hast not fasted, it may be, on things, of which the conscience of every account of bodily weakness. Tell me for sinner is aware, and of which he no has no what reason thou art not reconciled to thine human witness, but God only; were we to be enemies? Hast thou, indeed, here to allege called to account for those which are open bodily infirmity? Again; if thou retainest and admitted, what allowance could we exenvy and hatred, what apology hast thou then pect for such sins? What if He were to I ask? For no one in offences of this kind is scrutinize our listlessness and negligence in able to take refuge in the plea of bodily in- our prayers; and how, whilst standing before firmity. And this was a work of Christ's 2 God and supplicating Him, we do not exhibit love toward man, viz. that the chief of the even so much fear and reverence for Him as precepts, and those which maintain our life, servants do toward their masters, as soldiers should not be impaired in any degree through do toward their officers, as friends do toward friends?4 When thou discoursest with a 2. But since we need to practise all the friend, thou givest heed to what thou art divine laws alike, and more especially that doing, but when waiting on God on account which bids us consider no man as an enemy, of thy sins, and asking pardon for so many nor retain resentment long, but forthwith to offences, and thinking that thou shalt obtain be reconciled; suffer us to-day to discourse forgiveness, thou art often listless; and whilst

4. But what if the evil-speakings which we sentful worketh the same iniquity every day, our neighbour; and that for no reason, but because we are fond of blaming, and given to one, or two, or three persons, but by almost distress?

¹ This alludes to the penitential discipline of the primitive Church, which confined penitents of the lowest order to the church porch. Consult Bingham in Antiq. viii. c. 3, and xviii. c, r. ² Sav. God's.

³ Ps. cxxx. 3. 4 Herbert's Poems, No. lxviii., "I would not use a friend as I use Thee."

cannot but know, that often whilst God Him- our neighbour. self is addressing us all by His prophet, we that this offence is a small one, but if thou cept when observed was able to snatch away. how this very thing is regarded among men, and then thou wilt perceive the enormity of is talking to thee, or rather some friend who classes, he will even demand reparation of thyself, and setting up thy rage as an executhee for such an insult. Yet God, whilst He is treated with as great, and still greater contempt than this, every day; and that not by find fault; what, I say, should we be able to all of us; is still forbearing and longsuffering, allege in defence? Again, should He scru- not in regard to this alone, but to other tinize those roving glances of ours, and those things which are far more grievous. For evil desires which we carry in the mind, so these things are what must be admitted, and frequently admitting disgraceful and impure what are obvious to all, and by almost all thoughts from the unlicensed wandering of men they are daringly practised. But there the eyes, what punishment must we not sus- are yet others, which the conscience of those tain? And should He demand a reason for who commit them is privy to. Surely, if we our revilings, (for He saith, "Whosoever were to think of all this; if we were to reason shall say to his brother, Thou fool, shall be with ourselves, supposing even that we were in danger of hell fire,") how could we, for- the cruelest and harshest of men, yet upon sooth, open our mouths, or move our lips at taking a survey of the multitude of our sins, all, or say any thing great or small in reply? we should for very fear and agony be unable Moreover, as to the vainglorious feelings we to remember the injury done by others allow in our prayers, our fastings, our alms- towards ourselves. Bear in mind the river giving, were we to scrutinize them, -I do not of fire; the envenomed worm; the fearful say, were God, but were we ourselves, who Judgment, where all things shall be naked are the sinners, to do this, -should we be and open! Reflect, that what are now hidable to lift up our eyes toward heaven? den things, are then to be brought to light! Then, as to the deceits which we devise one But shouldest thou pardon thy neighbour, all against another, -praising a brother now, these sins which till then await their discloswhilst he is present, and discoursing as with ure are done away with here; and when thou a friend; and when he is absent, reviling shalt depart this life, thou wilt not drag after him; can we endure the punishments of all thee any of that chain of transgressions; so these? Then what of the oaths? or what of that thou receivest greater things than thou the lying? what of the perjuries? what of the givest. For many such transgressions, inunjust anger, and of the envy with which we deed, we have often committed, which no too often regard men when honoured, not other person knoweth; and when we think, enemies only, but also friends? Further- that on That Day these our sins shall lie exmore, what of the fact, that we are pleased posed to the eyes of all, upon the public when others suffer evil, and account the mis- theatre of the universe, we are in pain beyond fortunes of others a consolation for our own any punishment, being choked and strangled by our conscience. Yet this shame, great as 5. But suppose the penalty were exacted it is; these sins, these punishments, great as for our listlessness in our solemn assemblies they are; there is a possibility of purging what would our condition be? For this ye away through forgiveness exercised toward

6. For indeed there is nothing equal to this are holding frequent and long conversations virtue. Wouldest thou learn the power of with those near us, about matters which in this virtue? "Though Moses and Samuel no way concern us. Passing by, then, all the stood before Me," saith God, "my soul rest, should He choose to exact of us the would not regard them." Nevertheless, penalty due for this sin only, what hope of salvation will there be? For do not suppose to snatch away from God's wrath, this prewouldest be aware of its magnitude, examine Hence it is, that He continually exhorts those to whom He had spoken these things, saying, "Let none of you revengefully imagine " evil the sin. Just venture, when some magistrate against his brother in your heart," and "let none of you think of his neighbour's malice."3 is of somewhat superior dignity, to turn from It is not said merely, forego wrath; but rehim, and enter into conversation with thy tain it not in thy mind; think not of it; part servant; and thou wilt then perceive, what with all thy resentment; do away the sore. thou venturest on in dealing thus with God! For thou supposest that thou art paying him For if he be any one of the more distinguished back the injury; but thou art first tormenting tioner within thee in every part, and tearing and were lacerating their ribs, if any one relations, if but his garment, or his dwelling, sandals, their houses, or streets, excite us, by all these things; and the strokes we enfrequent and continual.

a siege, such torment and such punishment? yet for the very torment resulting from the thing itself we ought to forgive the offences of those who have aggrieved us. But when deathless punishments remain behind, what can be more senseless than the man, who both here and there brings punishment upon himself, while he thinks to be revenged upon his enemy! For suppose that we see him still prosperous, then we are ready to die of chagrin; but if in an adverse condition, we are in fear, lest some propitious turn of events should take place. But for both of these there is stored up for us an inevitable punishment. For, "Rejoice not," he saith, "when thine enemy stumbleth." And tell me not of the greatness of the injuries received; for it is not this which maketh thy wrath to be retained; but this, that thou art unmindful of thine own offences; that thou hast not before thine eyes either hell or the fear of God! To convince thee that this is true, I will endeavour to make it manifest from the events which have happened in this city. For when the persons impeached of those flagrant crimes were dragged to the tribunal of justice; -when the fire was kindled within, and the executioners stood around, up thine own bowels. For what can be more standing beside them had proclaimed, "If ye wretched than a man perpetually angry? have any enemies, dismiss your resentment, And just as maniacs, who never enjoy tran- and we shall be able to set you free from this quility, so also he who is resentful, and re punishment;"-would they not have kissed tains an enemy, will never have the enjoyment their very feet?3 And why do I say their of any peace; incessantly raging, as he does, feet? If one had bidden them take them and daily increasing the tempest of his for their masters, they would not then have thoughts calling to mind his words and acts, refused. But if punishment that is human, and detesting the very name of him who has and hath its bounds, would have triumphed aggrieved him. Do you but mention his over all anger, much more would the punishenemy, he becomes furious at once, and sus- ment to come, if it had continual possession tains much inward anguish; and should he of our thoughts, expel from the soul not only chance to get only a bare sight of him, he resentment, but every evil imagination? For fears and trembles, as if encountering the what is easier, I ask, than to get rid of reworst evils. Yea, if he perceives any of his sentment against the injurer? Is there any long journey to be undertaken? Is there any or street, he is tormented by the sight of expenditure of money? Is the aid of others them. For as in the case of those who are to be invoked? It suffices only to resolve, beloved, their faces, their garments, their and the good deed at once reaches the goal. What punishment, then, must we not deserve, the instant we behold them; so also should if on account of worldly affairs we stoop to we observe a servant, or friend, or house, or slavish occupations; and shew a servility unstreet, or any thing else belonging to those worthy of ourselves; and expend money; and we hate and hold our enemies, we are stung enter into conversation with porters, that we may flatter 4 impious men; and do and say all dure from the sight of each one of them are manner of things, so that we may perfectly attain the end we have in view; and yet can-7. What is the need then of sustaining such not endure, for the sake of God's laws, to entreat a brother who hath injured us, but For if hell did not threaten the resentful; consider it a disgrace to be the first to make advances. Art thou ashamed, tell me, when thou art going to be the first to make gain? Rather, on the contrary, you ought to be ashamed of persisting in this passion; and waiting until the person who has committed the injury comes to you to be reconciled; for this is a disgrace, and a reproach, and the greatest loss.

8. For he who comes the first it is, who reaps all the fruit; and when at the entreaty of another thou layest aside thine anger, the good work is to be accounted his; for thou hast discharged the law as doing a favour to him, not as obeying God. But if, when no one entreats, when not even the man who has done the injury approaches, or solicits thee, thou thyself dismissing from thy thoughts all shame, and all delay, runnest forward freely to the injurer, and dost quell anger entirely, the good deed becomes wholly thine own, and thou shalt receive all the reward. If I say, "Practise fasting," thy plea, perchance, is

² From Hom, XIII. 3, we know that the torture was chiefly by scourging, but fire (if literally used, as it had often been in torturing Christians) might be applied in various ways. The allusion favours the insertion of the Homily piaces it unquestionabsing tenders the end of the Homily piaces it unquestionabsing to this place.

Wards All Lent,
3 i.e., the feet of their enemies,
4 κολακεύσωμεν. The acrist implies that the object intended is to get an audience. For a striking picture of such servility, see Tac. Ann. iv. 77.

bodily weakness. If I say, "Give to the to Himself. Never canst thou so avenge scorned." Frigid, as such pretences are, yet themselves are converted, and become better. thing of that kind hast thou to advance; but saying on this subject is not to the point. God be desirous to pardon thy sins, thou thyself dost not suffer Him, while thou retainest that of thy fellow-servant! But suppose that sary; then God will not afterwards prosecute thy cause. it too, inasmuch as thou hast taken thy 10. But if thy concern be, lest thine enemy God is the avenger!

grieved thee, and involved thee in a thousand not pardon, if they are likely to become ills? Be it so, yet do not prosecute ven- worse by our forbearance, I will mention to geance on thine own part, lest thou do despite you an ancient piece of history. Miriam to thy Lord! Yield the matter to God, and once spake against Moses. What then did He will dispose of it much better than thou God do? He sent a leprosy upon her, and canst desire. To thee He has given charge made her unclean; notwithstanding that in simply to pray for the injurer; but how to other respects she had been meek and modest.

poor," it is poverty, and bringing up children. thyself, as He is prepared to avenge thee, if If I say, "Make time for the assemblies of thou givest place to Him alone, and dost not the Church," it is worldly cares. If I say, utter imprecations on him who has aggrieved "Give heed to what is spoken, and consider thee; but sufferest God to be sole arbiter of the power of what is taught," it is want of learning. If I say, "Correct another," you say, "When counsel is given him, he takes may be reconciled; although we may pray for no heed, for I have often spoken, and been them; yet God does not pardon, unless they you have some pretences to allege. But suppose I say, "Dismiss thine anger," which of their own advantage. For He praises thee, these wilt thou then allege?" For neither and approves thee for thy spiritual wisdom; infirmity of body, nor poverty, nor lack of but visits him, in order that he may not grow culture, nor want of leisure, nor any other worse by thy wisdom. So that the common this sin is above all other the most inexcusa. For many there are, who when I reproach ble. How wilt thou be able to stretch thine them because after being exhorted to be hands toward heaven, or how to move thy reconciled to their enemies, they will not be he is cruel, fierce, and savage, and greedy of worse, more ill-tempered, and more disposed revenge and retaliation? Why for this rea- to treat me contemptuously hereafter." Beson thou oughtest especially to grant forgive-sides this, they also make this plea: "Many ness. Hast thou been wronged much, and people," say they, "think it is weakness in robbed, and slandered, and injured in matters me to come first to a reconciliation, and to of the first importance; and dost thou wish to entreat my enemy." All these things are see thine enemy punished? Yet even for foolish; for the Eye that slumbers not has this, it will be of use to thee to pardon him, seen thy good intention; wherefore, it behov-For suppose that thou thyself takest ven- eth thee to make no account of the opinion geance, and prosecutest it, either by words, of thy fellow-servants, when thou hast gained by deeds, or imprecation against the adver- the opinion of the Judge, Who is about to try revenge; and not only will He not prosecute should become worse by thy clemency learn the matter for thee, but will also demand a this,—that it is not thus he is made worse; penalty of thee as a despiser of Himself, but far rather if thou art unreconciled. For For if this same thing takes place amongst although he were the vilest of men; although mankind, viz. that if we beat the servant of he might neither confess nor publish it another, the master is indignant, and calls openly; yet he will silently approve thy the act an insult (for although we be treated Christian wisdom, and in his own conscience injuriously, whether by slaves, or by free- will respect thy gentleness. Should he, howmen, it is fitting that we should await the ever, persist in the same iniquity, whilst legal decisions of magistrates or masters); if thou art endeavouring to soften and concilthen even amongst men, to avenge ourselves late, he will have to abide the heaviest punwould not be safe, how much more so when ishment from God. And that ye may know, that although we should pray for our enemies, 9. Hath thy neighbour wronged and and for those who have injured us, God does deal with him, He hath ordered thee to leave Afterwards, when Moses himself, the party injured, besought that the wrath might be removed, God consented not: but what did

¹ See on Rom. xii. 21, Hom. XXII.

He say? "If her father had but spit in her Hast thou an enemy? Draw not near! Wilt and he had put her away from his presence, I approve thee indeed for thy fraternal piety. and thy meekness and clemency; but I know willing to utter a word, or to make the first when is the due time to remit her punish-advance, that thou mayest be reconciled to yet understand this very plainly, that the hath aught against thee"—He does not say, more he shall slight thee, whilst thou art la-bouring to conciliate, so much the greater with another as mediator," nor "entreat some more he shall slight thee, whilst thou art lapunishment will he draw down upon himself.

not desist from doing God's will in conciliating not been made better by thy clemency. But 2 "it is far more desirable that others should be blamed because of us, than we bereply, of saying, "I am afraid of its being thought that I made an overture to him out of fear; and that he will therefore despise me the more." Such a reply indicates a childish and foolish mind, agitated about human approbation. Let him suppose, that it was out of fear you made the first advance to him; your reward will be so much the greater; since, being aware of this beforehand, you still consented to endure all for the fear of God. For he who is in chase of human approbation, and seeks reconciliation for that end, curtails the recompense of reward; but he who is quite sure of the fact, that many will vilify and ridicule him, and even then does not desist, from the attempt at reconciliation, will have a twofold, yea, a threefold crown. And this is indeed the man who does it for the sake of God. Nor tell me, that the man has wronged thee in this, or in that particular; for if he hath displayed, in his conduct towards thee, every kind of iniquity that is in man, yet even so God hath enjoined thee to forgive him all!

12. Lo! I forewarn, and testify, and proclaim this with a voice that all may hear! "Let no one who hath an enemy draw near the sacred Table, or receive the Lord's Body! Let no one who draws near have an enemy!

face, should she not be ashamed? Let her thou draw near? Be reconciled, and then remain," saith He, "without the camp seven draw near, and touch the Holy Thing!" days." But what He means is to this Nor, indeed, is this my declaration. Rather effect. "If," suith He, "she had a father, it is that of the Lord Himself, Who was crucified for us. That He might reconcile thee would she not have undergone the rebuke? to the Father, He refused not to be sacrificed, and to shed His blood! And art thou unment," Do thou then shew all humanity thy fellow-servant? Hear what the Lord towards thy brother; and do not pardon his saith, concerning those who are in this disoffences in the desire of a greater punishment position; "If thou bring thy gift to the for him, but of thy tenderness and good will; altar, and there rememberest that thy brother other," but "do thou thyself make the ad-II. What sayest thou? tell me, Is he the vance towards him." For the exhortation is, worse for thy attentions? This is blame to "Go thy way, first be reconciled to thy him, but thy praise. Thy praise, that, whilst brother." 3 O transcendent wonder! Does seeing him thus behave himself, thou didst He Himself account it no dishonour, that the gift should be left unoffered, and dost thou him. But to him it is blame, because he has think it a mark of disgrace to go first and be reconciled? And how can such a case, I ask, be deemed worthy of pardon? Were you to see a member of yours cut off, would you cause of them." Make me not this frigid not use every exertion so that it might be reunited to the body? This do with regard to thy brethren; when thou seest them cut off from thy friendship, make all haste to recover them! Do not wait for them to make the first advance, but press onward, that thou mayest be foremost to receive the prize.

13. We are commanded to have only one enemy, the devil. With him be thou never reconciled! But with a brother, never be at enmity in thy heart. And if there should be any narrowness of soul, let it be only an ephemeral thing, and never last beyond a day's space. For, "let not the sun," he saith, "go down upon your wrath." For if, before evening, you are reconciled, you will obtain some pardon from God. But if you remain longer at enmity, that enmity is no longer the result of your being suddenly carried away by anger and resentment, but of wickedness, and of a foul spirit, and one which makes a practice of malice! And this is not the only terrible thing, that you deprive yourself of pardon, but that the right course becomes still more difficult. For when one day is past, the shame becomes greater; and when the second has arrived, it is still further increased; and if it reach a third, and a fourth day, it will add a fifth. Thus the five become ten; the ten, twenty; the twenty an hundred; and thenceforth the wound will breach becomes wider. But do thou, O man, give way to none of these irrational passions; nor be ashamed, nor blush, nor say within yourself, "A short time ago we called each other such names, and said a vast number of things fit or not fit to be spoken; and shall I now hurry at once to a reconciliation? Who then will not blame my excessive easiness?" I answer, no one who has sense will blame thy easiness; but when thou remainest implacable, then, all persons will deride thee, Then thou wilt give to the devil the advantage of this wide breach. For the enmity becomes then more difficult to be got rid of, not by mere lapse of time, but from the circumstances too that take place in the meanwhile. For as "charity covereth a multitude of sins," so enmity gives a being to sins that do not exist, and all persons henceforth, are deemed worthy of credit who turn accusers; who rejoice in the ills of others, and blaze abroad what is disgraceful in their conduct.

¹ Numb, xii, 14.
² Benedictine "Paul saith," but this is not in Savile nor in the Latin, and is omitted in a Venice Ms. and some at Paris; it is accounted for by πολὸ, but Ducœus suggests 1 Peter iii. 17.

14. Knowing all these things then, make the first advance to a brother; lay hold of him before he has entirely shrunk away from thee; and should it be necessary to run through all the city on the same day; should it be necessary to go beyond the walls, or to take a long journey; still leaving all other things that may be in hand, attend only to this one work of reconciling thy brother. For if the work be laborious, reflect that it is for God's sake thou undergoest all this, and thou shalt receive sufficient consolation. Stir backward, and bashful, and ashamed, by perpetually harping on this theme and saying, Why art thou delaying? Why art thou should be secondary to His commands. This matter is a sort of spiritual merchandise. Let us not neglect it, let us not be slothful. again insult, or strike us, or do any other such thing of a still more grievous kind, let us sustain all things courageously, since we are not so much benefitting him thereby, as ourselves. Of all good works, this shall most especially befriend us on That Day. We human wickedness can do? For not to go have sinned and offended in many and great matters, and have provoked our Lord. Through His lovingkindness He hath given become incurable; for as time goes on, the us this way of reconciliation. Let us, then, not betray this good treasure. For had He not power to charge us simply to make reconciliation, and not have any reward assigned to it? for whom hath He to gainsay or rectify His appointment? Nevertheless, through His great lovingkindness, He hath promised us a large and unspeakable reward, and one which we must be especially desirous to obtain, the pardon of our sins; thus also making this our obedience more easy of performance.

15. What allowance then can be made for us, if even when we might receive so great a reward we still do not obey the Lawgiver, but persist in our contempt; for that this is a contempt is plain from hence. If the Emperor had laid down a law, that all those who were enemies should be reconciled to one another, or have their heads cut off, should we not every one make haste to a reconciliation with his neighbour? Yes! truly, I think so! What excuse then have we, in not ascribing the same honour to the Lord, that we should do to those who are our fellow-servants? For this reason we are commanded to say, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." 2 What can be more mild, what more merciful, than this precept! He hath made thee a judge of the pardon of thine own offences! If thou forgivest few things, He forgives thee few! If thou forgivest many things, He forgives thee many! If thou pardonest from the heart, and sincerely, God in like manner also pardons thee! up thy soul also when it is shrinking, and If besides pardoning him thou accountest him a friend, God will also thus deal with thee; so that the more he has sinned, so much the more is it necessary that we should shrinking and holding back? our concern is hasten to a reconciliation; since it becomes a not for money, nor for any other of these cause of greater offences being forgiven us.3 fleeting things, but for our salvation. God Art thou willing to learn that there is no bids us do all these things, and all things pardon for us, if we are mindful of injuries, and that there is no one who can deliver us? I will make what I assert plain by an example. Suppose that a neighbour has done you Let our enemy too understand that we have a certain injury, that he has seized your taken much pains, in order to do what is goods; has confiscated or embezzled them; well-pleasing unto God. And though he may and not to confine myself to such a case, let me add to it more things and worse beside, and whatever you will; he has longed to destroy you; he has exposed you to a thousand perils; he has manifested every sort of malice towards you; and left nothing undone that over every thing separately, suppose that he has injured you to such an extent as no one ever injured any before; -why, even in this case, if you are resentful, you will not be worthy of pardon. And I will explain how it

² Matt, vi. 12.
³ This and similar language of the Fathers, is startling to many, but is hardly more than a transcript of the passages of Holy Scripture they refer to. A general acknowledgment and explanation of them occurs in the "Homily of Alms-deeds."
⁴ Or wouldest thou have proof.

16. If one of your servants owed you an hundred pieces of gold; and some one again was indebted to him in a few pieces of silver; and if the servants' debtor were to come, and entreat and supplicate you that he might obtain indulgence, and you were to call in your own servant, and charge him, saying," Forgive this man the debt, and from the sum thou owest me I will deduct this debt;" should that servant afterwards be wicked and shameless enough to seize on his debtor, could any one then rescue him out of your hands? Would you not most assuredly inflict a thousand stripes upon him, as having been insulted to the last extremity? And very justly too. This also God will do: for He will say to thee on That Day, "O wicked and thou forgavest him? Out of what thou wert ness towards thy neighbours. indebted to Me, thou wert ordered to account to him. For "Remit," He saith, "and I will remit unto thee! although, to speak truly, cated, but I have not effected a reconcilia-if I had not added this condition, it would tion." Never desist till you have reconciled have been even then thy duty to have remitted at the instance of thy Lord. But in this case, I did not command thee as a masand I asked it out of My own property; and treaties, yet you must not desist until you I promised to give greater things in return; have persuaded. God entreats us every the debt is. Thus, for example, suppose the servant owes his master a hundred pieces of gold; and the debtor of the servant owes ten pieces, should the latter remit his debt, the master does not remit him his hundred pieces, but these ten only; and all the rest he pense increased. In proportion as the good still demands. But it is not so with God; if you remit a 2 few things to your fellow-servant, He remits all your debt.

17. Whence does this appear? From the very Prayer 3 itself. "For if," saith He, "ye forgive men their debts, your heavenly Father will forgive your debts."4 And as much as the difference is between "a hundred pence" and "ten thousand talents,"5 so great is it between the debts on the one side, and those on the other!

1 t Ven. adds, the things remitted are not equal.
2 Sav. mar. those.
3 Often called emphatically, "The Prayer," as constantly in the title of Comments on it. Tertullian de Oratione, and the like.
4 Matt, vi. 14.
5 Matt, xviii, 24, 28.

What punishment then must he not deserve, who when he would receive ten thousand talents, in the room of a hundred pence.6 yet will not even so remit this small sum, but offers up the Prayer against himself. For when thou sayest, "Forgive us, as we forgive," and afterwards dost not forgive, thou art supplicating of God nothing else than that He would entirely deprive thee of all excuse or indulgence. "But I do not presume to say," replies some one, "Forgive me as I forgive," but only, "Forgive me." But what matters this? For if thou say it not thyself, yet God so doeth; as thou forgivest, He forgives. And this He hath made quite evident from what follows; for there it is said, "If ye forgive not men, neither doth your heavenly Father forgive you." Think not, therefore, that it is a pious caution, not to repeat the whole sentence; nor offer up the Prayer by halves, but as He bade thee so pray thou, in order that the very obligation of that expression, putting thee daily in fear, villainous servant, yea, was it of thine own may compel thee to the exercise of forgive-

18. Do not tell me, "I have besought him many times, I have intreated, I have supplihim. For He said not, "Leave thy gift, and go thy way." Entreat thy brother. But, "Go thy way. Be reconciled." So that, ter, but I asked it as a favour from a friend; although you may have made many enand yet with all this, thou wert not made a day, and we do not hear; and yet He does better man." Moreover men, when they act not cease entreating. And dost thou then in this manner, put down as much to their disdain to entreat thy fellow-servant. How own servants' accounts, as the measure of is it then possible for thee ever to be saved? Suppose that thou hast often pleaded and been repulsed; for this, however, thou wilt obtain a larger reward. For in proportion as he is contentious, and thou perseverest in entreating, so much the more is thy recomwork is accomplished with greater difficulty, and the reconciliation is one of much labour, so much the greater will be the judgment on him, and so much the brighter will be the crowns of victory for thy forbearance. Let us not merely applaud all this, but exemplify it too in our deeds; and never recede from the work, until we are restored to our former state of friendship. For it is not enough merely to avoid grieving an enemy, or doing him an injury, or being in our minds un-kindly disposed towards him; but it is necessary that we should prepare him to be kindly us; and will easily set us free from our sins; we are willing. and gain us praise with men, as well as great 20. Let us not then be negligent of what is a continual tempest of anxious thoughts.

chastisement and vengeance; and let us shew less, through the grace of God, when ye put our reverence for the present feast, by doing forth but a little effort, ye for the most part this same feast with disdain, and think nothing of it. No one, truly, so pollutes this years; but of fear only, and reverence of holy feast, as he does, who, whilst he is keep-affected towards ourselves. For I hear many food ten days successively. For where there saying, "I have no hostility; I am not an- is enmity and strife, there can be neither fast noyed; neither have I any thing to do with nor festival. Thou wouldest not dare to him." But this is not what God commands, touch the holy Sacrifice with unwashed hands,3 that thou shouldest have nothing to do with however pressing the necessity might be. him; but that thou shouldest have much to Approach not then with an unwashed soul! do with him. For this reason he is thy For this is far worse than the other, and "brother." For this reason He said not, brings a heavier punishment. For 4 nothing "Forgive thy brother what thou hast against so fills the mind with impurity, as anger rehim, But what then? "Go thy way. First be maining constantly within it. The spirit of reconciled to him;" and should he have "any meekness settles not where wrath or passion thing against thee," yet desist not, before exists; and when a man is destitute of the thou hast reunited the member in friendly Holy Spirit, what hope of salvation shall he concord." But thou, who in order that thou have, and how shall he walk aright? Do not mayest obtain a useful servant, tellest out the then, O beloved, whilst thou art desirous to gold, and discoursest with many merchants, be revenged of thine enemy, cast thyself and often undertakest long journeys, tell down headlong; nor cause thyself to be left me, art thou not up and doing to the utmost, alone without the guardianship of God! For, in order that thou mayest convert an enemy in truth, if the duty were a difficult one, yet into a friend? And how then wilt thou be the greatness of the punishment, which reable to call upon God, whilst thou art thus sults from this action of disobedience, were neglecting His laws? Assuredly, the posses- sufficient to arouse the most slothful and sion of a servant will be of no great profit to supine, and to persuade them to undergo us; but the making an enemy a friend, will every degree of labour. But now our argurender God propitious and favourable toward ment has shewn that the duty is most easy, if security in our life; for nothing can be more our life, but let us be in earnest; and do unsafe than he who has even only a single every thing, in order that we may be without enemy. For our earthly reputation is injured, whilst such a man is saying a thousand sacred Table. For nothing,—nothing, I reevil things of us to every body. Our minds peat, of what God commands will be difficult, are also in a state of fermentation, and our if we give heed: and this is evident from the conscience disturbed; and we are exposed to case of those who are already reformed. How many used to be cheated by the habit 19. Now since we are conscious of the of using oaths, and to fancy this practice extruth of all this, let us set ourselves free from tremely difficult of reformation. Nevertheall that has been said; and those same washed yourselves clean of this vice. For favours which we think to obtain from the this reason I beseech you to lay aside also Emperor on account of the feast, let us our- what remains, and to become teachers of selves enable others to enjoy. For I hear, others. And to those who have not yet indeed, many saying, that the Emperor, out achieved it, but allege to us the length of of his reverence for the Holy Passover, will time during which they were before swearers. be reconciled to the city, and will pardon all and say that it is impossible for them to pluck its offences. How absurd then is it, that up in a short time that which has been rooted when we have to depend for our safety upon for many years; I would make this answer, others, we bring forward the feast, and its that where any precept among those comclaims; but that when we are commanded manded by God requires to be put in due to be reconciled one with another, we treat practice, there is no need of length of time, holy feast, as he does, who, whilst he is keeping it, cherishes malignity. Or rather, I might say, that such a person cannot possibly keep it, though he should remain without

1. Literally anything common with him, οὐδὰ ἔχω τι κοινδυ πρός cannot in duties of a higher order. The word here rendered "necessity" may be "compulsion."

2. i. c., is called so in this passage.

soul; and then we shall be sure to accom- of days, or of an interval of time; as likewise, times than he speaks; thand this man over to me for only ten days, and if I do not rid him of all his habit in these few days, pass the severest sentence on me.

21. And that these words are not a vain boast, shall be made manifest to you from could be more stupid than the Ninevites? What more devoid of understanding? Yet, nevertheless, these barbarian, foolish people, who had never yet heard any one teaching them wisdom, who had never received such to-morrow. For we "know not what the precepts from others, when they heard the prophet saying, "Yet three days, and Ninethree days, the whole of their evil customs, come to an end. Wherefore, dismissing that The fornicator became chaste; the bold man excuse, we should say, "If we do not reform erate and kind; the slothful industrious, leave off till we do,9 though ten thousand the whole of their iniquity. But whence does all we have; we will not give the devil the this appear, says some one? From the words of the prophet; for the same who had been delay." Should God perceive thy soul incry of their wickedness hath ascended up also Himself will lend His assistance to thy even to heaven: "3 himself again bears testi-reformation! Yea, I pray and beseech you, before; for when you hear it said, "The cry of their wickedness is come up before me; ' excess of their wickedness. Nevertheless, within three days they were capable of being transformed to a state of complete 6 virtue. For where the fear of God is, there is no need plish it, and that in a short time. But lest on the contrary, days are of no service where you should suppose that I speak these things there is a want of this fear. For just as in at random, take a man whom you think much the case of rusted implements, he that rubs addicted to swearing; one that swears more them only with water, though he spend a long time on them, will not rid them of all that foulness; but he that puts them in a furnace, will make them presently brighter than even those newly fabricated: so too a soul, stained with the rust of sin, if it cleanse itself slightly, and in a negligent way, and be every things that have already happened. What day repenting, will gain no further advantage. But if it cast itself into the furnace, as it were, of the fear of God, it will in a very short time purge all away.

22. Let us not then be procrastinating till next day may bring forth;" nor let us say, "we shall conquer this habit by little and litveh shall be overthrown," a laid aside, within tle;" since this little and little will never meek; the grasping and extortionate mod- the practice of swearing to-day, we will not They did not, indeed, reform one, or two, or things were to press us; though it were necthree, or four vices by way of remedy, but essary to die, or to be punished, or to lose their accuser, and who had said, that "the flamed, and thy diligence quickened, then He mony of an opposite kind, by saying, "God let us be in earnest, lest we also hear it said saw that every one departed from their own of us, "The men of Nineveh shall rise up, evil ways." 4 He does not say, from fornica- and shall condemn this generation;" 10 for tion, or adultery, or theft, but from their these, when they had once heard, reformed "own evil ways." And how did they depart? themselves; but we are not converted after As God knew, not as man judged of the mat-frequent hearing. These were proficients in ter. After this are we not ashamed, must every part of virtue, but we in no part. we not blush, if it turns out that in three days They when they heard that their city would be only the barbarians laid aside all their wicked- overthrown were affrighted; but we, though ness, but that we, who have been urged and we have heard of Hell, are not affrighted: taught during so many days,5 have not got these, men who did not partake of the in-the better of one bad habit? These men had, structions of the prophets; we, enjoying the moreover, gone to the extreme of wickedness advantage of perpetual teaching, and of much grace.

23. These things I now speak to you, not you can understand nothing else than the as if reproving you for your own sins, but for the sake of others; for I know full well that by you (as I have already observed), this law concerning swearing has been accomplished. But this does not suffice for our safety, unless by teaching we amend others, since he who produced the one talent, restoring as he did the whole portion committed to him, was

^{*} i. e., more words than he can articulate. St. Chrysostom supposes here a man who in his wrath loses the power of distinct utterance. (Such may be the meaning, or, that he never speaks without several oaths, or oftener speaks with an oath than without one, makeows byworru pakhov if $\phi \text{Cope}_{\text{per}} \text{even}$.

⁴ Jonah ii. 4.

4 Jonah iii o. St. Chrysostom here of course supposes Jonah to be the author of the book which bears his name.

5 He refers to his own instruction during the strength of the 5 He refers to his own instructions during Lent : see the close of this Homily 6 ολοκληρον, wanting no constituent part.

⁷ Or vessels, τὰ ἰωθέντα τῶν σκευῶν. 'Tôs also means 'venom,' and stains are taken out of rough earthenware in the same manner.

⁸ Prov. xxvii, 1.

⁹ οῦν ἀποστησόμεθα πρότερον. i. e., will not leave off the plan proposed above, of attending to nothing else till this was accomplished.

¹⁰ Luke xi. 32.

punished, because he had not enriched that ing, and that they will remember this same with which he was entrusted. Wherefore, let laugh on That Day whilst they are grinding us not regard this point, that we ourselves and gnashing! Then thou too shalt rememhave been set free from this sin; but until we ber this laugh! How did the rich man laugh have delivered others from it, let us not de- at Lazarus! But afterwards, when he beheld sist; and let every one offer to God ten him in Abraham's bosom, he had nothing left friends whom he has corrected; whether thou hast servants, or apprentices: 1 or if you have oaths for the most part, and we are rarely till the morrow, for this to-morrow never caught in that snare;" but let even this finds an end. Forty days have already rarity of offending be got rid of. If you had passed away. Should the Holy Easter pass lost one piece of gold, would you not go away, I will thenceforward pardon no one, about to all persons, searching and making nor employ further admonition, but a comenquiry, in order to find it? This do also manding authority, and severity not to be with regard to oaths. If you perceive that despised. For this apology drawn from cusyou have been cheated out of one oath, weep, tom is of no force. Why may not the thief lament, as though your whole substance were as well plead custom, and get free from punlost. Again I say what I did before. Shut ishment? Why may not the murderer and up thyself at home; make it a subject of adulterer? Therefore I protest, and give practice and exercise along with thy wife, thy warning to all, that if, when I have met you children, and domestics. Say to thyself in in private, and put the matter to the proof the first instance, "I must not put a finger to (and I will certainly put it to the proof), I private or public matters until I have rectified detect any who have not corrected this vice, this soul of mine." If you will thus school I will inflict punishment upon them, by your own sons, they too will instruct their ordering them to be excluded from the Holy children in turn, and thus this discipline, Mysteries; 5 not that they may remain always reaching even to the consummation and ap-shut out, but that having reformed themreward to those who go to the root of the pure conscience enjoy the Holy Table; for matter. If your son has learnt to say, "Be- this is to be a partaker of the Communion! lieve me;" he will not be able to go up to God grant that through the prayers of those places, it will quickly compel him to retreat.3 the other hand weep for their transgression! world without end. Amen. Many also once laughed at Noah whilst he was preparing the ark; but when the flood came, he laughed at them; or rather, the just man never laughed at them at all, but wept and bewailed! When therefore thou seest persons laughing, reflect that those teeth, that grin now, will one day have to sustain that most dreadful wailing and gnash-

to do but to bewail himself!

24. Being mindful then of all these things, neither servants, nor apprentices, you have be urgent with all, for the speedy fulfilment friends; these do thou reform. Further, do of this precept. And tell me not, that you not make me this reply; "We have banished will do this by little and little; nor put it off pearing of Christ, will bring all that great selves, they may thus enter in, and with a the theatre, or to enter a tavern, or to spend who preside over us,6 as well as of all the his time at dice; for that word, lying upon saints, having corrected these and all other his mouth instead of a bridle, will make him deficiencies, we may obtain the kingdom of however unwilling feel shame and blush, heaven through the grace and lovingkindness But if at any time he should appear in these of our Lord Jesus Christ, with Whom to the Father, together with the Holy Spirit, be Suppose some persons laugh. Do thou on glory, honour, and adoration, now and ever,

⁴ Forty days from Quinquagesima, leaving ten till Easter; see

⁵ St. Ambrose (Life by Paulinus, sec. 34), forbade Theodosius to enter the church at all, after the massacre of Thessalonica. St. Basil refused Communion to Valens, who had joined the Arians, Basil Fetused Communion to valens, who had joined the status, but did not attempt to prevent his entering the church, See St. Greg. Naz. Or. 20 (Ben. 43). He even allowed him to present an offering; but this was an indulgence. Offenders would be liable of course to Feclesiastical censure, if they took a nearer place than was allowed them.

was allowed them.

Tow procleous, at title of bishops. See Bingham, b. 2, c. 2, sec. 5, Flavian was probably not yet returned, but would be always supposed to pray for the people. The plural is sometimes used of a single person, especially one of dignity. Some other persons are called artapes* in Hom. XVI, and in Hom. VI, probably departed saints, where see of the intercession of saints in general.

τ μαθητάς. 3 As one who could not talk like others.

HOMILY XXI.

On the return of Flavian the Bishop, and the reconciliation of the Emperor with the city, and with those who had offended in overthrowing the Statues.

same saying with which I have ever been which is from above! Many indeed, after season of danger, and shall say together with you, "Blessed be God," Who hath granted us this day to celebrate this holy Feast with much joy and gladness; and hath restored the head to the body, the shepherd to the sheep, the master to the disciples, the general to the soldiers, the High Priest to the Priests! Blessed be God, "Who doeth exceeding abundantly above what we ask or think!"2 For to us it would have seemed sufficient, had we been but delivered from the hitherto impending evil; and for this we made all our supplication. But the God who loveth man, and ever in His giving surpasseth our prayers gone, and have had audience with the Emperor, and set us free from the calamity, and able to anticipate the Holy Passover, and to celebrate it with ourselves? Behold, however, this event, which was so contrary to expectation, hath been realized! We have received back our Father; and we enjoy so have received him back now beyond our hopes. For all these things, let us give at the power, the lovingkindness, the wisdom, and the tender care which has been manifested on behalf of the city. For the devil had attempted its entire subversion through the daring crimes committed; but God, by hath made them all more illustrious.

when such a danger had overtaken her, passing by at once all those who were in power, Emperor, it fled for refuge to the Church, and to the Priest of God, and with much

I. To-DAY, I shall begin with that very faith, rested itself entirely upon the hope used to open my address to you during the the departure of the common Father, were ready to terrify those who lay in prison, by saying, "The Emperor does not lay aside3 his wrath, but is still more provoked, and is thinking of the utter ruin of the city." But whilst they were whispering all this, and much more, they who were then in bonds were not the least intimidated, but upon our saying, "These things are false, and they are a device of the devil, who desires to fill you with consternation;" they replied to us," We need no consolation to be addressed to us; for we know where we have taken refuge from the first; and upon what hope we have rested ourselves. We have fixed our safety upon by an excess of bounty, hath brought back the sacred anchor! We have not entrusted our Father too, sooner than we could at all this to man, but to the Almighty God; therehave expected. Who would, indeed, have fore we are most assuredly confident, that the thought that in so few days, he would have result will be favourable; for it is impossible, truly impossible, that this hope can ever be confounded!" To how many crowns, how again come back to us so quickly, as to be many encomiums, is this equivalent for our city? How much of God's favour will it draw down upon us too in our other affairs! For it is not, indeed it is not a thing belonging to a soul of mean order to be watchful against the attack of temptations, and to look much the greater pleasure, inasmuch as we to God; and scorning all that is human, to yearn after that Divine aid.

3. The city then hath thus won renown; thanks to the merciful God, and be amazed and the Priest again not less than the city, for he exposed his life for all; and while there were many things to hinder him, as the winter, his age, the feast, and not less than these, his sister, then at her last breath, he raised himself above all these obstacles, and means of this same calamity, hath adorned did not say to himself, "What a thing is this? the city, the Priest, and the Emperor; and Our only remaining sister, she who hath drawn the yoke of Christ along with me, and 2. The city bath won renown, because who bath been my domestic companion so long, is now at her last breath; and shall we desert her, and go hence, and not behold her those who were surrounded with much wealth, expiring, and uttering her parting words? those who possessed great influence with the But she indeed was praying daily, that we might close her eyes,4 and shut and compose her mouth, and attend to all other things

¹ Benedictine πρὸς, Savile eis, which rather implies a full stop after "city," and that the Homily contained an invective "against ' the offenders. It does contain a very strong one obliquely.
² Eph. iii. 20.

³ Sav. relax.

4 Duceus quotes II. xi. 453, Æn. ix. 486, Stat. Theb. 1. 2.

Alterná clauserunt lumina dextrá. Plin. 22, 37; Varra apud Nonium; Sigil. as illustrating the custom of doing these offices for the dead among heathens.

away, would it not be right to come with purpose of shewing her this kindness? And now when I am near, shall I leave her, and taking my departure abandon her? And how then will she sustain the remainder of her days?"

4. Yet, so far was he from saying any of these things, that he did not even think of them; but esteeming the fear of God above all the ties of kindred, he recognized the fact, that as tempests display the pilot, and dangers the general, so also a time of trial makes the Priest to become manifest. "All men," saith he, "are eagerly looking on us; the Jews as well as the Greeks; let us not conus; let us not overlook so great a shipwreck; but having committed to God all things that pertain to ourselves, let us venture our life itself too!" Consider, moreover, the magnanimity of the Priest, and the lovingkindness of God! All those things which he disand enjoy the greater gladness! He feared all obtained!

pertaining to the burial; but now in this case, to any other; secondly, that he granted the as one deserted, and deprived of a protector, favour without delay, and quelled his resentshe will obtain none of these offices from her ment. But that you may more clearly underbrother; of him whom she especially desired stand the magnanimity of the Emperor, and to obtain them; but when she gives up the the wisdom of the priest, and more than both ghost, she will not see him whom she loved these, the lovingkindness of God; allow me more to have with her than all others? And to relate to you a few particulars of the conwill not this be heavier to her than dying ference which took place. But what I am many times over? Yes, although I were far now about to relate I learnt from one of those who were within the palace; for the Father speed, and do, and suffer any thing, for the has told us neither much nor little on the affair; but ever imitating the magnanimity of Paul, he hides his own good deeds; and to those who on all sides were asking him questions as to what he said to the Emperor; and how he prevailed upon him; and how he turned away his wrath entirely, he replied, "We contributed nothing to the matter, but the Emperor himself (God having softened his heart), even before we had spoken, dismissed his anger, and quelled his resentment; and discoursing of the events that had taken place as if some other person had been insulted, he thus went over all the events that had happened without anger." But those found the expectations which these have of things which he concealed from humility, God hath brought to light.

6. And what were these? I will proceed to relate them to you by going a little farther back in the story. When he went forth from the city, leaving all in such great despondency, he endured what was far more grievous than regarded, all those he enjoyed; in order that we ourselves suffered, who were in the midst he might both receive the reward of his of these calamities. For, in the first place, readiness, and that he might obtain a greater meeting in the midst of his journey with pleasure by enjoying them contrary to ex- those who had been sent by the Emperor to pectation! He preferred to celebrate the make inquisition upon the events which had festival in a foreign place, and far from his happened; and learning from them, on what own people, for the sake of the city's safety. terms they were sent; and reflecting upon the But God restored him to us before the Pas- dreadful events that were in store for the city, chal feast, so as to take a common part with the tumults, the confusion, the flight, the us in the conduct of the festival; in order terror, the agony, the perils, he wept a flood that he might have the reward of his choice, of tears, and his bowels were rent with compassion; for with fathers, it is usual to grieve not the season of the year; and there was much more, when they are not able to be summer during the whole period he was present with their suffering children; which travelling. He took not his age into account; was just what this most tender-hearted man and he dispatched this long journey with just now endured; not only lamenting the calamias much ease as if he had been young and ties which were in reserve for us, but that he sprightly! He thought not of his sister's was far away from us, whilst we were endurdecease nor was enervated by it, and when he ing them. But this was, however, for our returned he found her still alive, and all safety. For as soon as he had learned these things which were disregarded by him, were things from them; more warmly did the fountain of his tears then gush forth, and he 5. Thus, the priest hath indeed won re- betook himself to God with more fervent supnown both with God and man! This trans- plication; and spent his nights without sleep, action hath also adorned the Emperor with a beseeching Him that He would succour the splendour beyond the diadem! First, in that city, while enduring these things, and make it was then made apparent that he would the mind of the Emperor more placable. grant that to the priests which he would not And as soon as he came to that great city, and had entered the royal palace, he stood to spare the dead, who had done them no doer of all the mischief; and this he did, wishing first to incline him to mercy by his posture, and aspect, and tears; and then to begin an apology on our behalf; since there is but one hope of pardon for those who have nothing in defence of what has been done. For he was desirous that one feeling should be got rid of, and that another should take its place; that anger should be expelled, and sadness introduced, in order that he might thus prepare the way for the words of his apology; which indeed actually took place. And just as Moses going up to the mount, when the people had offended, stood speechless himself, until God called him, saying, "Let me alone, and I will blot out this peo-ple;" so also did he now act. The Emperor therefore, when he saw him shedding tears, and bending toward the ground, himself drew near; and what he' really felt on seeing the tears of the priest, he made evident by the words he addressed to him; for they were not those of a person provoked or inflamed, but of one in sorrow; not of one enraged, but rather dejected, and under constraint of extreme pain.

7. And that this is true, ye will understand when ye hear what were his words. For he did not say, "What does this mean? Hast thou come heading an embassy on behalf of impious and abominable men, such as ought not even to live; on behalf of rebels,3 of revolutionists, who deserve the utmost punishment?" But dismissing all words of that they should take such revenge? What comalso?4 Was it not sufficient to wreak their resentment against the living? Yet they thought they were doing nothing grand, unless they insulted those now in their graves. Granting that I had injured them, as they suppose; surely it would have been becoming before the Emperor at a distance, -speech- wrong; for they could not have the same less, -weeping, -with downcast eyes, -cov- complaint against them. Did I not ever ering his face as if he himself had been the esteem this city above every thing, and account it as dearer than my native place? And was it not a matter of my continual prayers to visit this city; and did I not make this my oath 5 to all men?"

8. Upon this, the priest sobbing bitterly, offended, which is to be silent, and to utter and shedding warmer tears, no longer kept silence: for he saw that the defence of the Emperor was raising our crime to a still higher amount; but heaving from the bottom of his heart 6 a deep and bitter sigh, he said, "We must confess, O Emperor, this love which you have shewn towards our country! We cannot deny it! On this account, especially, we mourn, that a city thus beloved has been bewitched by demons; and that we should have appeared ungrateful towards her benefactor, and have provoked her ardent lover. And although you were to overthrow; although you were to burn; although you were to put to death; or whatever else you might do, you would never yet have taken on us the revenge we deserve. We ourselves have, by anticipation, inflicted on ourselves what is worse than a thousand deaths! For what can be more bitter, than when we are found to have unjustly provoked our benefactor, and one who loved us so much, and the whole world knows it, and condemns us for the most monstrous ingratitude! If Barbarians had made an incursion on our city,7 and razed its walls, and burnt its houses, and had taken and carried us away captive, the evil had been less. And why so? but because, whilst you live, and continue such a generous kindness towards us, there might be a hope sort, he composed a defence of himself full that all these evils would be got rid of; and of respectfulness and dignity; and he enum- that we might again be brought back to our erated the benefits, which during the whole former condition, and regain a more illustritime of his reign he had conferred upon the ous liberty. But now, having been deprived city; and at each of these he said, "Was it of your favour, and having quenched your thus I should have been treated in return for love, which was a greater security to us than these things? What injuries had I done, that any wall, whom have we left to fly to? Where else shall we have to look, when we have plaint had they, great or small, that they provoked so benign a lord, so indulgent a must not insult me only, but the deceased father? So that while they seem to have committed offences of the most intolerable kind, they have on the other hand suffered the most terrible evils; not daring to look any man in the face; nor being able to look upon the sun with free eyes; shame everywhere weighing down their eyelids, and compelling them to hide their heads! Deprived of their confidence, they are now in a more ι άθυμίαν here opposed to θυμόν, and meaning especially such sadness as represses violent emotion.

³ Tupάννων.

3 Tupάννων.
4 St. Chrysostom here alludes to the pulling down the statues of his wife and mother, which, together with his own and those of his two sons, were dragged about the streets of Antioch during

⁵ He seems to mean some such expression as "so may I live to have been insulted.

⁷ A kind of event then becoming familiar to the Roman world.

9. But yet, O Emperor, if you are willing, there is a remedy for the wound, and a medicasts from your former love! Nay, though ness! it is a strange thing, I must say, display For if you pull down, and overturn, and raze the city, you will be doing those very things you dismiss your anger, and again avow that the most perfect revenge upon them by shewfor them of their evil designs; but that all hath proved the very opposite of what they wished. And you would be just in acting thus, and in shewing mercy to a city, which the demons envied on account of your affection; for if you had not so exceedingly loved her, they would not have envied her to such a degree! So that even if what I have asserted is extraordinary, it is nevertheless, true, that what the city hath suffered, hath been owing to thee, and thy love! What burning, what devastation, so bitter as those words, which you uttered in your own defence?

miserable condition than any captives, and sulted, and sustained wrongs such as no Emundergo the umost dishonour; and whilst peror ever yet did. But if you will, O most thinking of the magnitude of their evils, and gracious, most wise, and most religious Sovthe height of insolence to which they have creign, this contempt will procure you a rushed, they can scarce draw breath; inas- crown, more honourable and splendid than much as they have drawn on their own heads the diadem you wear! For this diadem is a severer reproaches from all the inhabitants of the world, than even from him who is seen to a token of the munificence of him who gave it; but the crown woven from this your humanity will be entirely your own good work, and that of your own love of wisdom; cine for these evils, mighty as they are! and all men will admire you less for the sake Often, indeed, has it occurred amongst pri- of these precious stones, than they will apvate individuals, that great and insufferable plaud you for your superiority over this wrath. offences have become a foundation for great Were your Statues thrown down? You have affection. Thus also did it happen in the it in your power again to set up others yet case of our human race. For when God more splendid. For if you remit the offences made man, and placed him in Paradise, and of those who have done you injury, and take held him in much honour; the devil could not no revenge upon them, they will erect a bear this his great prosperity, and envied him, statue to you, not one in the forum of brass, and cast him out from that dignity which had nor of gold, nor inlaid with gems; but one been granted. But God was so far from for- arrayed in that robe which is more precious saking him, that He even opened Heaven to than any material, that of humanity and tenus instead of Paradise; and in so doing, both der mercy! Every man will thus set you up shewed His own lovingkindness, and punished in his own soul; and you will have as many the devil the more severely. So do thou too statues, as there are men who now inhabit, now! The demons have lately used all their or shall hereafter inhabit, the whole world! efforts, that they may effectually rend from For not only we, but all those who come after your favour that city which was dearest of all us, and their successors, will hear of these to you. Knowing this then, demand what things, and will admire and love you, just as penalty you will, but let us not become out- if they themselves had experienced this kind-

11. And to shew that I do not speak this in towards us now still greater kindness than a way of flattery, but that it will certainly be ever; and again write this city's name among so, I will relate to you an ancient piece of the foremost in your love;—if you are indeed history, that you may understand that no desirous of being revenged upon the demons armies, nor warlike weapons, nor money, nor who were the instigators of these crimes! multitude of subjects, nor any other such things are wont to make sovereigns so illustrious, as wisdom of soul and gentleness. It which they have long been desiring. But if is related of the blessed Constantine, that on one occasion, when a statue of himself you love it even as you did before, you have had been pelted with stones, and many were given them a deadly blow. You have taken instigating him to proceed against the perpetrators of the outrage; saying, that they had ing, not only that nothing whatever has come disfigured his whole face by battering it with stones, he stroked his face with his hand, and smiling gently, said, "I am quite unable to perceive any wound inflicted upon my face, The head appears sound, and the face also quite sound." Thus these persons, overwhelmed with shame, desisted from their unrighteous counsel.

This saying, even to the present day, all repeat; and length of time hath neither sen owing to thee, and thy love! What burng, what devastation, so bitter as those words, nich you uttered in your own defence?

10. You say now, that you have been in-weakened nor extinguished the memory of had captured, and barbarians overrun it, as such exalted wisdom. How much more in your now sparing it. That, many of the illustrious is such an action, than any number of warlike trophies! Many and great you alone accomplish this, you will be first cities did he build, and many barbarous tribes in doing it, and that beyond all expectation. did he conquer; not one of which we now And the former of these good deeds, the remember; but this saying is repeated over protection of your subjects, is not at all wonand over again, to the present day; and those derful or extraordinary; but is one of those who follow us, as well as those who come events which are of continual occurrence; but after them, will all hear of it. Nor indeed is the latter, the dismissal of wrath after the this the only admirable thing; that they will endurance of such provocations, is something hear of it; but that when men speak of it, which surpasses human nature. they do so with approbation and applause; and those who hear of it, receive it with the consideration is not respecting this city only, like; and there is no one who, when he has but is one that concerns your own glory; or heard it, is able to remain silent, but each at rather, one that affects the cause of Chrisonce cries out, and applauds the man who tianity in general. Even now the Gentiles, uttered it, and prays that innumerable bless- and Jews, and the whole empire as well as ings may be his lot even now deceased. But the barbarians, (for these last have also heard if amongst men, this saying has gained him of these events,) are eagerly looking to you, so much honour, how many crowns will he and waiting to see what sentence you will obtain with the merciful God!

12. And why need I speak of Constantine, ting that I should exhort you by considerations nearer home, and drawn from your own but lately, when this feast was near at hand, you sent an epistle to every part of the world; recal and to restore those who are dead, and constraining force of our nature!" to bring them back to their former state of the season of recalling and restoring the that other cities will become worse, and grow deceased, and bringing them back to former life! For these are indeed already dead, even before the sentence hath been pronounced; and the city hath now taken up its tabernacle at the very gates of Hades! Therefore raise it up again, which you can do sonably enough might such suspicions be enwithout money, without expense, without loss of time or labour! It is sufficient merely for you to open your lips, and you will restore to feet, through me; and expect daily nothing bear an appellation derived from your phi- heaven and calling upon God to come to their lanthropy; for it will not be so much indebted aid, and to favour this our embassy; and have to the kindness of him who first founded it, as it will be to your sentence. And this is as if they were at their last gasp; how can exceedingly reasonable; for he but gave it its beginning, and departed; but you, when it If they had been ordered to be put to death, had grown up and become great; and when they would not have suffered as much as they it was fallen, after all that great prosperity; do now, living as they have done so many

13. Reflect, that the matter now for your pronounce with regard to these transactions. And should you decree a humane and merciand other men's examples, when it were fit-ful one; all will applaud the decision, and glorify God, and say one to another, "Heavens! how great is the power of Chrispraiseworthy actions. You remember how tianity, that it restrains and bridles a man who has no equal upon earth; a sovereign, powerful enough to destroy and devastate all things; giving orders that the inmates of the prisons and teaches him to practice such philosophy should be set free, and their crimes be par- as one in a private station had not been likely doned. And as if this were not sufficient to to display! Great indeed must be the God give proof of your generosity, you said in your of the Christians, who makes angels out of letters, "O that it were possible for me to men, and renders them superior to all the

14. Nor ought you, assuredly, to entertain life!" Remember now these words. Behold that idle fear; nor to bear with those who say more contemptuous of authority, if this city goes unpunished. For if you were unable to take vengeance; and they, after doing these things, had forcibly defied you; and the power on each side was equally matched; then reatertained. But if, terrified and half dead with fear, they run to cast themselves at your life the city which at present lieth in dark- else but the pit of slaughter, and are engaged Grant now, that henceforth it may in common supplications; looking up to each given charge about his private affairs, such a fear be otherwise than superfluous? will have been its restorer. There would days in fear and trembling; and when the has been nothing so wonderful in your have evening approaches, not expecting to behold ing deigered it from danger, when enemies the morning; nor when the day arrives, hoping to reach the evening! Many too have head the same blessings which they pray for more severely than by any punishment!

common, but individual prayers for your lating to you throughout every age. empire; is a work of difficulty. A monarch 16. For consider, what it is for all posterity ble troops in motion, or do what else he had become obnoxions to punishment and fallen in with wild beasts, while pursuing their on behalf of their own children! Ind if you way through desert places, and removing to will receive such a reward from men, how untrodden spots; and not men only, but also much greater will you have from God! And little children and women; free born, and of this, not merely from the events which are good condition; hiding themselves many now taking place, but from those good deeds days and nights in caves, and ravines, and which shall be performed by others in time to holes of the desert! A new mode of captiv- come. For if ever it should be that an event ity hath indeed befallen the city. Whilst the similar to what has now occurred should take buildings and walls are standing, they suffer place, (which God forbid!) and any of those heavier calamities than when cities have been who have been treated with indignity, should set on fire! Whilst no barbarian foe is pres- then be consulting about prosecuting measent, whilst no enemy appears, they are more ures against the rioters; your gentleness and wretchedly situated than if actually taken; moral wisdom will serve them instead of all and the rustling only of a leaf scares them other teaching and admonition; and they will all every day! And these are matters which blush and be ashamed, having such an exare universally known; so that if all men had ample of wisdom, to appear inferior. So seen the city razed to the ground, they would that in this way you will be an instructor to not have been taught such a lesson of all posterity; and you will obtain the palm sobriety, as by hearing of the calamities which amongst them, even although they should have now befallen it. Suppose not, there- attain to the highest point of moral wisdom! fore, that other cities will be made worse in For it is not the same thing for a person to future! Not even if you had overturned set the first example of such meekness himother cities, would you have so effectually self, and by looking at others, to imitate the corrected them, as now, by this suspense good actions they have performed. On this concerning their fate, having chastised them account, whatever philanthropy, or meekness, those who come after you may display, you 15. Do not, then, carry this calamity any will enjoy the reward along with them; for farther; but allow them henceforth to take he who provides the root, must be considered breath again. For to punish the guilty, and the source of the fruits. For this reason, to exact the penalty for these deeds, were easy no one can possibly now share with you the and open to any one; but to spare those who reward that will follow your generosity, since have insulted you, and to pardon those who the good deed hath been entirely your own. have committed offences undeserving of par- But you will share the reward of all those who don, is an act of which only some one or shall come after, if any such persons should two are capable; and especially so, where make their appearance; and it will be in your the person treated with indignity is the Em- power to have an equal share in the merit of peror. It is an easy matter to place the city the good work along with them, and to carry under the subjection of fear; but to dispose off a portion as great as teachers have with all to be loving subjects; and to persuade scholars. And supposing that no such perthem to hold themselves well affected towards son should come into being, the tribute of your government; and to offer not only their commendation and applause will be accumumight expend his treasures, or put innumera- to hear it reported, that when so great a city pleased, but still he would not be able to vengeance, that when all were terrified, when draw the affections of so many men towards its generals, its magistrates and judges, were himself as may now very easily be done, all in horror and alarm, and did not dare to For they who have been kindly dealt with, utter a word on behalf of the wretched peoand those who hear of it too, will be well ple; a single old man, invested with the affected towards you, even as the recipients priesthood of God, came and moved the heart of the benefit. How much money, how many of the Monarch by his mere aspect and interlabours would you not have expended to win course; and that the favour which he beover to yourself the whole world in a short stowed upon no other of his subjects, he space of time; and to be able to persuade all granted to this one old man, being actuated those men who are now in existence, as well by a reverence for God's laws! For in this as all future generations, to invoke upon your very thing, O Emperor, that I have been sent hither on this embassy, the city hath done you no small honour; for they have thus ι αὐτοὺς, "the Antiochenes." Some read αὐτάς, "the cities," which does not make so good sense.

your authority!

17. But at the present time I have come not from these only, but rather from One who is the common Lord of angels and men, to address these words to your most merciful and most gentle soul, "If ye forgive men their debts, your heavenly Father will forgive you your trespasses." Remember then that Day when we shall all give an account of our actions! Consider that if you have sinned in any respect, you will be able to wipe away all offences by this sentence and by this determination, and that without difficulty and without toil. Some when they go on an emwhich you, the most mild and merciful of all I will certainly come myself." men, refuse to admit to peace and reconcilia-

18. Having said this, and much more to the same effect, he so overcame the Emperor, that the same thing occurred which once hap-pened to Joseph. For just as he, when he strength of Christianity, having learned what beheld his brethren, longed to shed tears, but restrained his feeling, in order that he might not spoil the part which he was playing;4 even so did the Emperor mentally weep, but when the Bishop had left the city, and come did not let it be seen, for the sake of those over the sea, he dispatched thither also cerwho were present. He was not, however, able to conceal the feeling at the close of the taking to prevent any waste of time lest the conference; but betrayed himself, though city should be thus deprived of half its against his will. For after this speech was finished, no further words were necessary, but he gave utterance to one only sentiment, pronounced the best and the most honourable which did him much more honour than the judgmen' on you, which is, that you respect diadem. And what was that? "How, said the priests of God, however insignificant they he, "can it be any thing wonderful or great, may be, more than any office placed under that we should remit our anger against those who have treated us with indignity; we, who ourselves are but men; when the Lord of the universe, having come as He did on earth, and having been made a servant for us, and crucified by those who had experienced His kindness, besought the Father on behalf of His crucifiers, saying, "Forgive them, for they know not what they do?" What marvel, then, if we also should forgive our fellowservants! And that these words were not a pretence was proved by all that followed, And not the least, that particular circumstance which I am now about to mention; for this our priest, when he would have remained bassy, bring gold, and silver, and other gifts there, and celebrated the feast together with of that kind. But I am come into your royal himself, he urged, though contrary to what presence with the sacred laws; and instead he would have wished, -to use all speed, and of all other gifts, I present these; and I ex- diligence, to present himself to his fellowhort you to imitate your Lord, who whilst He citizens. "I know," said he, "that their is daily insulted by us, unceasingly ministers souls are still agitated; and that there are His blessings to all! And do not confound many relics of the calamity left. Go, give our hopes, nor defeat our promises.3 For I them consolation! If they see the helmswish you withal to understand, that if it be man, they will no longer remember the storm your resolution to be reconciled, and to re- that has passed away; but all recollection of store your former kindness to the city, and to these sorrowful events will be effaced!" remit this just displeasure, I shall go back And when the Priest was urgent, entreating with great confidence. But if you determine him to send his own son, he, wishing to give to cast off the city, I shall not only never re- the most satisfactory proof of his having enturn to it, nor see its soil again, but I shall tirely blotted out from his soul every wrathin future utterly disown it, and enrol myself ful feeling, answered; "Pray that these hina member of some other city; for God forbid drances may be taken out of the way; that that I should ever belong to that country, these wars may be put an end to;6 and then > 19. What could be gentler than such a soul? Let the Gentiles henceforward be ashamed; or rather, instead of being ashamed, let them be instructed; and leaving their native error, let them come back, to the our philosophy is, from the example of the Emperor and of the Priest! For our most pious Emperor stayed not at this point; but tain persons, being most solicitous and painspleasure, whilst the bishop was celebrating the feast beyond its walls. Where is the gracious father that would have so busied himself on behalf of those who had insulted him? But I must mention another circum-

¹ Matt, vi. 12.
² No one who knows St. Chrysostom will suppose that he means by this to eaclude the other conditions of a sincere repentance, as of course our Lord did not, in the saying just before quoted, which is equally unqualified.
³ Perhaps referring to promises the bishop had made to his flock, of what they might expect from his intercession.
⁴ την υποκρατο, f.e., his counterfeited ignorance of his brethren.

⁵ Luke xxiii. 34,

5 The allusion is to the war with Maximus, who had been acknowledged Emperor of Spain, Gaul and Britain, but was now trying to wrest Italy from the rule of Valentinian II.

7 As being God's creatures, and having departed from Him.

stance that redounds to the praise of the just to give God thanks continually for all these man,' For when he had accomplished this, he did not make it his endeavour, as any one else might have done, who was fond of glory, to deliver those letters himself, which were to set us free from the state of dejection in which we were; but since he was journeying at too slow a rate for this, he thought proper to send forward another person in his stead; one among those who were skilled in horsemanship, to be the bearer of the good news to the city: 2 lest its sadness should be prolonged by the tardiness of his arrival. For the only thing he earnestly coveted was this; not that he might come himself, bringing these favourable tidings, so full of all that is delightful, but that our country might as soon as possible breathe freely again.

20. What therefore ye then did, in decking the forum with garlands; lighting lamps, spreading couches of green leaves before the shops, and keeping high festival, as if the city had just come into being, this do ye, although in another manner, throughout all time;—being crowned, not with flowers, but with virtue;—kindling in your souls the light which comes from good works; rejoicing with a spiritual gladness. And let us never fail things, not only that he hath freed us from these calamities, but that he also permitted them to happen; and let us acknowledge his abundant goodness! for by both these has He adorned our city.4 Now all these things according to the prophetic saying, "Declare ye to your children; and let your children tell their children; and their children again another generation." 5 So that all who shall be hereafter, even to the consummation, learning this act of God's lovingkindness towards the city, may call us blessed, in having enjoyed such a favour;-may marvel at our Sovereign, who raised up the city when it was so grievously falling; and may themselves be profited, being stimulated to piety by means of all which has happened! For the history of what has lately happened to us, will have power to profit not only ourselves, if we constantly remember it, but also those who shall come after us. All these things then being considered, let us always give thanks to God who loveth man; not merely for our deliverance from these fearful evils, but for their being permitted to overtake us,—learning this from the divine Scriptures, as well as from the late events that have befallen us; that He ever disposes all things for our advantage, with that lovingkindness which is His attribute, which God grant, that we may continually enjoy, and so may obtain the kingdom of heaven, in Christ Jesus our Lord; to whom be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

¹ The bishop, ² Comp, what is said of Cæsarius, Lib. Reiske, t, i, p, 691. This may relate to a different occasion, as it seems likely that there were two rescripts, the second of which conveyed the full pardon. ³ στμβάσα, Cave, in his life of St. Chrysostom, has rendered

³ or 18 doc. Cave, in his life of St. Chrysostom, has rendered it, "the doors and shop windows set off with flowers and green branches;" but this seems purely fanciful; the word stibadaium among the Romans meant a couch of particular construction, which allowed seven or eight to recline upon it at supper. These were probably temporary couches, made of, or strewed with, green leaves, for a public feast. (Libanius mentions this feasting, and praises the sympathy and good nature of Hellebichus on the occasion. His mention of a fish may be connected with the fast. Or, ad Helleb, fin.)

⁴ i. e., both by sending the calamity and by delivering from it. 5 Joel i. 3.

INDEXES.

INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

FOR PAGES 1 TO 317.

(EXCLUSIVE OF HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.)

AARON, his office no palliation of his Bishops, unsatisfactory mode of sin, 61.

Abel, unharmed by death, 273. Adam, fall of, due to his slothfulness, 181, 195, 273.

Advent, the second, 180.

Adversity not really terrible, 290 Afflictions, part of God's providential dealings, 182. Ahab, God's mercy in dealing with, 95.

Angels, guard the dying Communicant's soul, 76; present at the Liturgy, 76; their character, 73. Anger, ill effects of in a priest, 51.

Anomorans, heresy of; referred to,

Apostles, unity of their doctrine, 136. Applause in church deprecated by Chrysostom, 223. Aquila, friend of St. Paul, referred to, 150.

Arcadius, Eastern Emperor referred to, 245, 251, 252; embassy on behalf of Chrysostom, 308.

Aristides, referred to, 126. Arius, his heresy, 66, n.

Armenia, severity of winter in, 293. Arsacius, usurper of the See of Constantinople, 288.

Attendance at church, neglect of, rebuked by Chrysostom, 224,

Atticus, usurper of the See of Constantinople, 302.

Ausis, Uz so called in the Septuagint, 165, n.

BABYLAS, ST., removal of his bones ordered by Julian, 142; effect of this on shrine of Apollo, 143

Baptism, clerical described, 165; called a "seal," 171, n.; requirements for right reception of, 167; sins hidden in, 168; different names given to, 160, 161.

Basil, his friendship with Chrysostom, 33, 34; entrapped by Chrysostom into ordination, 35; his remonstrances, 36-44.

Beauty, corporeal and spiritual contrasted, 102-104, 264.

electing, 50, 53, 54, n.; difficult duties of, 58, 59; share the punishment of those on whom they lay hands suddenly, 63.

Bishopric, age at which men were eligible for a, 36, n.

Burial of the dead, a human instinct,

CÆSAREA and Cappadocia, Chrysostom's visit to, 299.

Cain more unhappy than Abel, 274 Canaan, the woman of, referred to, 154, 216.

Childlessness not to be regarded as retribution for sin, 238

Chrysostom, St., his friendship with Basil, 33, 34; his purpose to enter monastic retreat, 34; remonstrances of his mother, 34; entraps Basil into ordination, but avoids it himself, 35, justifies his conduct in so doing, 37, 38, 42-46, 49, 53; his conflict with the passions of the soul, 80; his despondency and alarm at the prospect of ordination, 81, 82; his reasons for adopting a secluded life, 81; protects Eutropius, 247 maintains the Church's right of asylum, 250, 251; his condition in exile, 293, 296, 297, 299, 300; appeals to Innocent Bishop of Rome, 307; his letters to Innocent, 309-313.

Chromatius, Bishop of Aquileia, Chrysostom writes to, 307

Church (as a building) duty of bringing men to the, 225-227; a surgery for souls, 235, 236; (as the Christian body) various names of the, 256.

Circumcision, a name given to baptism, 161.

Communion, holy, the obligations which it lays on the recipient,

Constans, Emperor, 124, n. Constantia, wife of Gratian, 125, n. Constantine, the younger, 124, n. Contradictions, some supposed in the Gospels, how to be explained, 214

Cross, signing oneself with the sign of, 171; the power of, 171; an offence and a blessing, 189; of Christ, prefigured and predicted. 202; in what sense desired by Him, 203, 204; why deprecated by Him, 205.

Custom, the power of, 164.

Cyriacus, deacon, emissary from Chrysostom to Innocent, 309.

DANIEL, in the lion's den referred to, 225.

Daphne, a suburb of Antioch containing shrine of Apollo, 142.

David, his fall and repentance, 112; his treatment of Saul, 230, 231. Deceit, when justifiable, 37, 38.

Demetrius, Bishop of Pesinus, emissary from Chrysostom to Innocent, 309, 310.

Demons, conduct of, at Gadara, and in the case of Job, specimens what their government of the world would be, 183, 184; powerless without God's permission,

Departed, prayers for the, 76, n. Despair, the devil's instrument to work man's ruin, 92, 93, 97, 106, 107

Devil, the, evil by choice and not by nature, 197; existence of the, permitted for the sake of the Christian athlete, 197; only mischievous to the slothful, 198; chevous to the stortful, 195; used by St. Paul as an execu-tioner, 189; why called "apos-tate," 188; why called "the Devil," 188; why called "the wicked one," 188. Dignity, offices of, in God's kingdom entail responsibility, 62.

Diodorus of Tarsus, instructor of Chrysostom, 87.

Diogenes, referred to, 126. Domestic cares described, 115.

EARNEST of the Spirit, meaning of the, 261.

Eli, his inherited office no palliation of his sin, 61.

Elisha, his wonder-working sepulchre, 140, Enemies, St. Paul's advice how to treat, 228; vengeance on, not to be invoked, 241.

Epaninondas, referred to, 126. Eucharist, the Holy, teaching of Chrysostom concerning, 46, 47, n. Eutropius, sketch of his life, 245–247; quits the asylum of the Church, 253.

Eve, her fall, her own fault, 194; the better for her expulsion from Paradise, 180, 181.

Evil, two senses in which the word is to be understood, 188; a form of, peculiar to each thing, 272.

Evils, inward not outward the ruin of man, 279; why permitted by God to come to extremity, 290. Exile, no injury, 274.

FAITH, different degrees of, 215, 216. Festival days, large attendance at Church on, 226.

Flacilla, Empress, wife of Theodosius, 125, n.

Forgiveness of injuries, duty of, 229-232.

GAINAS, Gothic general, demands surrender of Eutropius, 246.

Gallus Cæsar, reference to, 124, n. God, not chargeable with our sins, 61; the patience and loving-kindness of, 93; His merciful dealings with Nebuchadnezzar, 94; Ahab, 95; Hezekiah, 105; the Ninevites, 105; His moral government of the world indicated, 184, 185; His ways past finding out, 186; language descriptive of, accommodated to human mind, 256–258.

Good, a greater power than evil, 191. Goths, incursions of, 119, 125. Gratian, Emperor, 125, n.

Gregory, of Nazianzus, his friendship for Olympias, 287.

HADRIANOPLE, battle of, referred to,

Heaven, the joys of, 99, 100, 102; degrees of glory in, 111.

Hell, not made for man, 97; nature of sufferings in, 98, 99; degrees of punishment in, 111.

Hermione, a young lady beloved by Theodore, 87, 103.

Hezekiah, God's merciful dealing with, 105.

Holy Scripture, consolations of the, under all forms of trial, 219, 220; advantages of studying, 252.

Holy Spirit, invocation of, in the Liturgy, 76, n.; His enlightenment of the soul, 166.

Honorius, Emperor, Innocent appeals to on behalf of Chrysostom, 307; writes to Arcadius on behalf of Chrysostom, 308.

Hope never to be abandoned in this world, 97.

Houses, comparison of the, on a rock and sand referred to, 279. Humility, the benefits of, 148. Hunger, the best sauce, 276.

IGNATIUS, ST., difficulties and dangers of his Episcopate, 137; personifies St. Paul's ideal of the Christian bishop, 136; his last journey to Rome, 139; his last journey to Rome, 139; miracles wrought at his sepulchre, 140; removal of his bones to Antioch, 140 meaning of his name Theophorus, 135, n.

Illumination, a name for baptism, 159, n., 161.

Incarnation, the, predicted, 205; reality of, how proved, 205; figurative descriptions of in Holy Scripture, 258-265.

Indolence, the mother of despair,

Innocent, Bishop of Rome, Chrysostom appeals to, 307; appeal of, to Honorius, 307; Chrysostom's letters to, 309–313; his letters to Chrysostom and the Church of Constantinople, 313, 314.

Isaac, perseverance of in prayer,

Isaurians, a predatory tribe, incursions of, 293, 299.

JESUS CHRIST, desired the Cross, 203; rebuked St. Peter, 203; His will identical with God the Father's, 204; His power equal, 218; the incidents of His passion recounted, 291; His sufferings a stumbling-block to many, 290, 292.

Jews, not saved by reason of their privileges, 280, 283.

Job, his thanksgiving amidst affliction, 183; consideration of his case a consolation in pain and peril, 195, 196; his ignorance of the reason of his afflictions, 195; his saintliness not to be urged as impossible for us, 197; his sufferings in mind, body and estate, 195, 196; his temptation contrasted with that of Adam, 194; the devil unable to injure, 255; unharmed by the devil, 273; his sufferings unmitigated, 294.

John, St., story of his meeting the robber-chief, 109.

John the Baptist, unharmed by death, 274.

Joseph, the removal of his bones, 142, 161; unharmed by afflictions, 294.

Jovian, Emperor, his death referred to, 124, n.

Judas Iscariot, his apostleship no palliation of his sin, 61; ruined by despair, 97; not benefited by privileges, 279. Judgment, why all do not receive it here, 184; the last, observations on, 101, 102. Julian, Emperor, referred to, 141, Julian, Emperor, referred to, 141, 142.

KINGDOM, the heavenly, various ways of entering, 262.

Krates, Cynic philosopher referred to, 126, n.

LAZARUS, parable of Dives and, 98, 236; not injured by poverty, 273, 278; his reward proportioned to his sufferings, 295.

Love, supreme, importance of in a pastor, 39, 40.

Lovingkindness of God, instances of, 94-96; inexpressible, 180.

Lupicinus, Bishop of Appiaria, emissary from Chrysostom to Theophilus, 310.

MAN, his expulsion from Paradise more than redressed by God, 185.

Manasses, his repentance accepted,

Manicheans, their heresy, 65, 205. Marcion, his heresy, 65, 205. Marriage, honourable, 113.

Maruthas, Bishop of Martyropolis in Persia, 302.

Meletius, Bishop of Antioch, his zeal for the sepulchre of St.

Babylas, 143.
Modesty, the true female adornment, 169.

Mopsuestia, Theodore, Bishop of, 87.

Moses, held responsible though he had deprecated his office, 61; referred to, 106.

Mother, of Chrysostom, referred to, 122.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, God's merciful dealings with, 94, 95.

Nero, Emperor, referred to, 149,

Nicæa, Canons of, 314. Nineveh, men of, at the Judgment, 193. Ninevites, their repentance accepted, 95, 105, 281.

OLYMPIAS, deaconess, treatise addressed to her, 269; sketch of her life, 287, 288; letters to and from Chrysostom, 289–303.

Omens, the folly of, 170. Ordinations, compulsory, 35, n.

PANSOPHIUS, a Bishop, emissary from Chrysostom to Innocent, 300.

309.
Pappus, a Bishop, emissary from Chrysostom to Innocent, 309.

Parables, lessons of, 96, 98; of the leaven, 192; of the sheep and the kids, 193; of the Ten Vir-gins, 193; of the unprofitable servant, 192, 193

Paradise, the expulsion from, a mark of Divine love, 180; the loss of, compensated by greater blessings, 180.

Paralytic, the (a) by the pool of Bethesda, 211, 212; the (b) let down through the roof, 214; the latter not to be confused with the former, 215; faith of the latter, 216: reasons why Christ absolved him before healing him, 217.

Paul, St., his zeal and humility, 48; knowledge of the word of God essential to his work, 64; panegyric on his life and labours, 66, 67; what is meant by his being "rude in speech," 67; the power of his epistles, 68; his deference to popular suspicion, 79; his dealings with the Corinthian sinner, 96; his imprisonment at Rome, 149; his care for the Churches, 149; Epistle to the Hebrews quoted as his, 161; on the power of baptism, 161, 162; his imprisonment at Philippi, 225; compared to a training master of wrestlers, 228; his advice concerning treatment of enemies, 229; not injured by afflictions. 279; learned to rejoice in hardship, 295.

Paul of Samosata, his heresy, 66, n. Paulus, a deacon, emissary from Chrysostom to Innocent, 300.

Peter, St., pastoral charge of Christ to, 39, 40; Bishop of Antioch, 138; his martyrdom at Rome, 139; "the leader of the Apos-tles," 167; rebuked by Christ,

Pharetrius, Bishop of Casarea, an enemy to Chrysostom, 200

Pharisee and l'ublican, parable of referred to, 147.

Phineas, referred to, 113.

Phoenician, story of a young, 107,

Plato, his argument to prove immortality of the soul, 269, 270. Poor, the, relish food more than the rich, 276, 277.

Poverty, no bar to piety, 168; good or evil according to the use made of it, 236; unable to injure the good, 274.

Prayer, perseverance in necessary, 153, 154; the power of, 237 slackness in reproved, 240; for vengeance on enemies rebuked, 241.

Preacher, the, his need of fluency, and constant study, 71; of indifference to praise, 70, 73; of indifference to slander and envy, 71, 72; the proper aim of his sermons to please God, 73.

Pride, the evils of, 148.

Priest, the Christian, greater than Sin, the only real object of fear, the Jewish, 48; power of the, greater than that of parents, 48; moral dangers which beset the, 49, 50; sobriety and self-control needful in, 51; his life contrasted with that of the recluses, 75-77; his need of purity, 76; his relations towards God, and his flock, 75; his social intercourse with the women of his flock, 78, 79.

Priesthood, supreme importance of the, 40; difficulties of the, 41; careful scrutiny of character needed for the, 42; sanctity of the, 46, 47; knowledge of the word of God essential for the, 64; not to be undertaken rashly or merely on solicitation, 62, 63; penalties when the office is illdischarged, 64; enemies of the, 65, 66.

Priscilla, wife of Aquilla, referred to. 150.

Prodigal Son, parable of the, 96. Punishment, the remedial discipline of temporal, 186.

RACHEL, wife of Jacob, 238. Readers, their lives contrasted with that of the priest, 75-77.

Rebecca, wife of Isaac, 238. Redemption, our, by the blood of Jesus Christ, 170, Regeneration, laver of, 161, 162. Repentance, instances of, accepted, 94-96, 103-106, 108; ruined by despair, 92, 93, 97, 106, 107; five different ways of: almsgiving; forgiveness; humility; prayer; self-condemnation, 190.

Resurrection of Jesus Christ, evidence for, in the life of St. Ignatius, 139.

Rich, the, often pay less heed than the poor to Holy Scripture, 235.

Riches, good or evil according to the use made of them, 236; of no use in time of danger, 254; the evils of, 275-277

Rufinus, chief minister at the court of Constantinople, 245.

SABELLIUS, his heresy, 66, n. Saints, their presence wholesome for the wicked, 102.

Salvation, not profitable to the careless, 180. Sarah, wife of Abraham, 238, 239, Sardica, the Council of, 314.

Satan, his methods of warfare, 82; "I renounce thee" a Christian watchword, 170, 171.

Saul, accountable for his acts as king, though he had deprecated the throne, 61; king of Israel referred to, 113; his treatment of David, 230.

Seal, a name for baptism, 171. Severus, a presbyter, emissary from Chrysostom to Theophilus, 310. Sheep, parable of the lost, 96, 254; the only real source of misery, 255; the only thing really injurious, 289.

Sinners, not rewarded according to their iniquity and why, 185; why they are left in the world, 191, 192.

Soldiers, secular compared with soldiers of Christ, 168.

Spirit, earnest of the Holy, meaning of, 261.

Stoics, the, referred to, 65, n.

Swearing, custom, sin, and danger of: conquest of habit of, 163, 164.

THEODORE, of Mopsuestia, friend of Chrysostom, 87; letters to, 91-

Theodore, of Sicily, a usurper, 124, n.

Theodosius, Emperor, referred to, 119, 125; tries to force Olympia to marry, 287.

Theophilus, Patriarch of Alexandria, his intrigues against Chrysostom, 307, 309-311.

Therasius, Chrysostom consoles the widow of, 121-128.

Three Children, the, unharmed by trials, 281-283, 290. Timothy, St., infirmities of, 295.

Tongues, confusion of, at Babel, 183; a mark of God's lovingkindness, Transfiguration, the, of Christ, described, 100.

Trials, benefits of, 212; Divine help under, 212, 213.

Tribigild, revolt of, 246.

UNMERCIFUL servant, parable of the, 241, 278.

VAINGLORY, danger of in priests, 49. Valens, Emperor, his defeat of the Goths, 119, 125. Valentinus, his heresy, 205. Venerius, Bishop of Milan, Chrysostom writes to, 307.

Virgin Mary, the, 239. Virgins, of the Church, difficulties in the care of, 56-58

Virtue, the, of anything, what is meant by, 272; of man, what it is, 273.

WEALTH, the snares of, 126. Widows, of the Church, difficulties in the care of, 55; St. Paul's instructions respecting, 122. Women, intrusion of, into ecclesiastical affairs, 49.

World, only mischievous to the careless, 188; order in the natural, forbids our ascribing its government to Demons, 184.

Worldly honours, precarious nature of, 127

Wrestling, illustration from the practice of trainers in, 228.

Wrongs, they who inflict them more injured than they who receive them, 274.

INDEX OF TEXTS.

FOR PAGES I TO 317.

(EXCLUSIVE OF HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.)

PAGE		PAGE	PAGE
Gen. iii. 1, 4 194		Ps. xcv. 8 165	Isa. xl. 6, 7 251
iii. 12 · · . 113		xcv. 9 95	xl. 8 253
iv. 1 180		xcviii. I 256	xl. 12 258
iv. 7 · · · · 192		cii. 4 251	xliii. 26 106, 190
iv. 25 181		civ. 24 188	xlv. 7 182
iv. 12 217	Job i. 1 165	civ. 32 205	1. 7, 8 290
vi. 7 256		cv. 37 280	li. 9 256
vi. 9 191	i. 21,183,220,253,274	cvii. 42 44	li. 10 258
xi. 6 181	ii. 4 294	CX. I 202	liii. 2 205
xviii. 1-8 295		cxii. 9 254	liii. 5-8, 12 203
xxii. 3 38	vi. 7, 8 196	cxiii. 7-9 91	liii. 7, 8 202
xl. 14 159		cxxiii. 2, 3 92	lv. 8 106
xlix. 9 202, 205		cxxix. 3 185	lvii. 17 95
Ex. iv. 13 61	ix. 31 196	cxxxii. I 231	lix. 2 96
xi. 2 38		cxlii. 2, 3 163	lxiv. 4 102
xiii. 19 142		cxlvi. 9 121	lxv. 24 64
xxiii. 10, 11 61		Prov. ix. 12 191	Jer. iii. 2 103
xxiii. 15 227	xlii. 5, 6 196	x. 19 168	iii. 3 41
xxviii. 4 46		xv. I 51	iii. 7 106
xxxiii. II 62	ii. 7, 8, 9 162	xviii. 17 109	viii. 4 96, 114
Lev. iv. 3, 14 80	ii. 9 259	xviii. 19 150	ix. I 91
xxi. 9 80		xviii. 21 163	xv 294
Num. xi. 15 61	iv. 16, 17 227	xxv. 21, 22 230	xix. 11 162
xii. 3 62	vi. 2 259	xxvi. 11 110	xxiii. 23 96
хх. 12 61	vi. 5 93	xxvii. 6 249	xxxviii. 6 225
xxv. 7 38	xvi. 11 202	xxvii. 7 276	Ezek, xvi. 33 103
xxv. 7, 11 113	  * * * * * * * * * * * * * * * *	Eccles, viii. 1 169	xxxiv. 17 80
Deut. v 29 106	xxxii. 5 190	xii. 13 165	xxxvii 142
x. 12 106	xxxvi. 6 66	Isa. i. 14 256	Dan. i. 10 282
xix. 21 231		vi. 5 178	ii 94
I Sam. ix. 21 61		vii. 14 205	iii. 16–18 283
x. 33 40	xli. 9 202	viii. 18 166	iv. 27 94, 190
xv 113	xliv. 23 256	ix. 6 205	vi. 24 225
xix. 12-18 . 37	xlv. 10 257	xi. I 205	vii. 9, 10 101
xx. 11 37	xlv. 12 103	xiii. 9, 13 101	vii. 10 114
xx. 23 230	xlvii. 5 202	xviii. 6 162	vii. 13-15 101
xxvi. 8 230	xlix. 6 113	xxiv. 19-22 101	х. 6 104
xxvi. 11 230	lxviii. 5 122	xxvi. 12 217	Hos. vi. 2 121
I Kings viii. 39 218	lxxii. 6 205	xxxii. 4 92	vi. 6 252
xi. 3, 4 112	lxxviii. 34 182	xxxiii. 2 256	Amos ii. 11 80
xi. 11 105	lxxxi. 16 276	xxxiv. 4 101	iii. 2 80
xi. 12, 13 . 112		xxxv. 10 99	iii. 6 182
xvii. 12 275	lxxxiii. 5 202	xl. 1, 2 217	Jonah i. 2 214, 281
xviii. 34 38	xcv. 2 109	xl. 5 124	iii. 4 105
xxi. 29 95	xcv. 4 205	xl. 6 290	iii. 4, 10 281

PAGE	PAGE	PAGE	PAGE
Jonah iii. 9, 10 106	Matt. xv. 22, 26, 28. 154	Luke xxiii. 43 181, 264	Rom. ii. 6
Micah vii. 18 218
		John i. 5 166	ii. 13, 19, 21 . 227
Haggai ii. 10 103	xvi. 22, 23 203	i. 8, 9 256	v. 3 275
Zech. xii. 10 202	xvi. 26 113	ii. 19 202	v. 3, 4 · · · 303
		11 0	1. 3, 4 303
Mal. iii. 2, 3 101	xvi. 27 193	ii. 25 218, 291	v. 10 204
Wisd. ii. 15 192	xvii. 2 258	iii. 16 39, 214	vi. 4, 6 161
			71. 4, 0 101
xiii. 5 185	xvii. 2, 4 100	iii. 26 291	viii. 7 103
Ecclus. i. 1, 2 212	xvii. 15 216	iv. 14 225	viii. 21 100
ii. 10 126
		iv. 38 137	viii. 24 · · · 92
iv. 8 56	xviii. 18 47	v. 5, 14 185	viii. 27 218
v. 8 114, 190	44.0		viii. 29 166
xi. 5 127	xviii. 28 241	v. 13 216	viii. 32 40, 263
xvi. 3 187	xxii. 13 76	v. 16, 17 218	ix. 3 48, 67 xviii.15-17 . 56	xxiii. 37 103	v. 20 235	xi. 33 186, 258
xviii. 26 127	xxiii, 52 260	v. 22 47	xii. 2 235
xx. 18, 25 . 163	xxiv. 15 42	v. 30 214	xii. 17 79
xxi. I 109, 192	xxiv. 35 142	vi. 56, 57 · . 166	xii. 20 228
		Wii 70
	xxiv. 45 39	vii. 12 291
xxvi. 28 110	xxiv. 47 40	vii. 28 214	xiv. 10 115
xxviii. 22 163	xxiv. 51 . 61, 64		xiv. 14, 20 161
			111. 14, 20 101
xxxiv. 23, 25. 110	xxv 193	vii. 39 203	xiv. 15 150
xlii. 9 56	XXV. 12 213	viii. 12 256	xvii. 10 43
Baruch iii. 35-37 205	xxv. 24 79,192	viii. 48 291	1 Cor. i. 18, 23 189
Song of the Three	xxv. 27 223	viii. 56 214	i. 22 204
Children ve oge oo
Children 15 . 225, 281			ii. 3 48
Matt. i. 13 236	xxv. 33 193	x. 7 256	ii. 9 102, 260
iii. 10 56		х. 11 136
iii. II 259	xxvi. 28 291	x. 11, 12, 17 . 203	ii. 11 41, 256
iv. 19 264	xxvi. 38 205	x. 15, 18 202	iii. 12 262
	205
v. I 50	xxvi. 39 204	xii. 6 62	iv. 6 237
v. 3, 4, 19, 44. 206	xxvi. 39-41 . 206	xii. 47 259	iv. 7 160
3, 1, 7, 11		1111 77
v. II 274	xxvi. 65 292	xiii. 4, 5 206	iv. 11 219
v. II, I2 2I9	xxvii. 4, 19 , 202	xiii. 35 · · · 43	v. 5. 96, 189, 295
v. 12 253	XXVII. 32, 44 . 214
v. 13 76	xxvii. 40, 42 . 292	xiv. 6 256	vii. 4 114
v. 13, 14 224	xxviii, 13 292	xiv. 10 214	vii. 25 170
	AAVIII. 13 292	AIV. 10 214	VII. 25 1/0
v. 16 241	Mark i. 24 171	xv. 5 259	vii. 28, 35 115
v. 20 295	ii. 7 218	xv. 5, 15 166	vii. 40 122

v. 22 · · · 51	ix. 2 258	xv. 22 227	viii. 12 74
v. 22, 28, 37 . 185	xii. 27 163	xv. 22, 24 62	х. 13 213
		xvii. II 214
v. 23 154	xii. 42 190		xi. 19 191
v. 23, 24 232	xv. 31, 32 214	xviii, 6 214	xi. 27, 30-32. 295
v. 24 · · · 154	Luke iii. 8 167	xviii. 23 206	xi. 30, 32 186
	The state of the s
v. 27 154	iv. 23 151	xix. 17 214	xii. 26 53
v. 28 170	v. 8 178	xx. 9 292	xiii. 12 100
v. 35 164	vi. 22, 23 220	xx. 23 47	xv. 8, 9 178
v. 44 · · · 230	vi. 36 274	xxi. 15-17 39	xv. 11 136
vi. 12 252	vii. 7 215	Acts ii. 38 167	xv. 31 111, 262
		111 6
vi. 14 190, 231	vii. 9, 39 216	iii. 6 260	xv. 41 104
vi. 2I 256	vii. 34, 39 291	v. 15 261	2 Cor. i. 3
	vii. 44–48 106	v _: 41 · · · · 137
vii. 6 194	xi, 1, 2-4 206	vi. 4 65	i. 22 259
vii. 7 153	xi. 10 216	ix. 4, 5 264	i. 24 41
vii. 24 · · · 279	xii. 20 255	ix. 22, 29 67	ii. 6 96
viii, 20 206	xii. 46 61	ix. 34 260	ii. 7 58
			ii. 7, 8, 11, 16. 189
	xiii. 4 185
viii. 31 187	xiii. 26 214	xiv. 11 67, 68	ii. 16 261
	xiv. 28, 29 64	xvi. 18 260	iii. 5, 6 261
ix. I, 2 215	xv. 4 255	xvi. 30 261	iii. 10 46
ix. g 264	xv. 4, 5, 29, 30. 96	xvii. 10 68	iv. 7 260
ix. 13 253	xvi. 17 142	xvii. 20 138
ix. 22 217	xvi. 26 97	xvii. 34 67	iv. 17 104
		111	iv. 18 289
ix. 34 291			14. 10 209
х. 3 178	xix. 8 264	xix. 11 261	v. 10 113
x. 9 206	xix. 23 141	xx. 9 67	v. 19, 20 103
x. 28 105	xx. 36 104	xx. 10 67	vi. 2 99
xi. 12 256	xxi. 2-4 169	xx. 31 69	vii. 5, 10 150
			viii. 20, 21 . 79
xii. 36 220	xxi. II 275	xxi. 26 38
xii. 39 204	xxii. 15 204	xxvi. 28 261	ix. 15 180
		xxviii. 3 261	x. 5 68
xii. 41 193
xiii. 33 192, 224	xxiii. 34 206, 251	Rom. i. 13, 14 149	х. 10 68
			xi. 2 68, 166
xv. 22 216	xxiii. 40 214	i. 20, 21, 25 . 188	Al. 2 00, 100

PAGE	PAGE	PAGE	PAGE
2 Cor. xi. 2, 3 149	Gal. iii. 28 135	Phil. iii. 7 38	I Tim. v. 5, 6, 9-11, 122
	iv. 19 97
	v. 2 38
xi. 9 48
xi. 23-28 104		v. 18 153
xi. 24 260		Col. i. 15 260
xi. 29 137
			11. 25 42
xii. 2, 21 109		i. 24 · · · 137, 275
xii. 2-4 67			1v. 10 68
		iv. 6 68, 71
xii. 8 206		1 Thess. ii. 9 48
xii. 9 151			iii. 5 161
xii. 9, 10 207	vi. 16, 17 64	iv. I 115	Philem. 10-18 109
xii. 9, 27 293	vi. 22 151		Heb. i. 3 101
xii, 20 40	Phil. i. 7 149		iv. 12, 13 113
xii. 20, 21 137	i. 12-14 149
xii. 21 237	i. 13, 14 151
xiii. 3 122		1 Tim. i. 13, 15 178
xiv. 34 49	i. 18	ii o 160	xiii. 4 113
Gal. i. 8, 9 149
			xiii. 17 59. 75
ii. 11 161			James v. 14, 15 48
ii. 20 · · · · 75	ii. I 83		1 Pet. ii. 22 256
iii. 4 97			iii. 15 64, 68
iii. 5 96			1 John ii. 2 256
iii. 27 161, 166	iii. I 294	iv. 16 68	iii. 5 256

HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.

INDEX OF SUBJECTS.

ABEL, beloved of God, yet slain, 342; more blessed in his death than Cain, 374; died the first to instruct Adam, 414; his sacrifice good, 422.

Abraham, rich but not covetous: entertaining angels, 349; tent of, stronger than Sodom, 456.

Absolution, 356; at the altar, 443. Accused at Antioch, tortured, 474. Acrobats, 470.

Actions, few, for their own sake, 379; end of, 459. n.; the proof of philosophy, 465.

Adam, fell when idle, 353, 369; wretchedness of his fall, 393; what he merited, 392; fitted, by humiliation, to appear before God, 396; pride of, cast down, 413; his hiding was due to his sense of guilt, 422; his being made to confess, a mercy, 422.

Admonition, repeated, a shame, 379; obligation and advantage of, 425, 437; to be repeated, 452; not like seeing, 467; of others a duty, 481.

Adultery, self-condemned, 429; in desire, 443.

Advantages of nature and art not the dignity of a city, 457.

Alms, given at martyrs' shrines, 340; of less worth than thankfulness, 341; recompensed at the Judgment, 350; riches given for, 351; means of pardon, 351.

Altars, raised by the heathen to men, 338; by Christians only to God, though in memory of men, 338, n.; Christian, for remission of sin, 443. Ambrose, St., obliged Theodosius to do penance, 383, n.; on invocation of Saints and Angels, 390.

Angels, applauded Job's victory, 339; invocation of, 390, n.; visited Jerusalem, 467. Animals, wild, uses of, 395, 417;

400; man dreads from sin, 417 their excellences not of free-will. and invariable, 420; sacrifice of, discussed, 422, n.; refugees of Antioch, destroyed by, 487.

Art, a pattern of industry, 420.

Antioch, old church of, 331, n.; blasphemy prevailing in, 343; hopes of reforming, 344; state of after sedition, 344, 425, 453; compared to Job, 344; disgraced and deserted, 345, 364, 454, 463; a mother of cities, 345, 355; shaken as with an earthquake. 345; fears of the inhabitants, 346, 412, 419, 453; character of, 347, 355; schism at 354, n.; Christians first so named there, 345. n., 355, 438; amended by danger, 382, 383, 418, 439, 455; dealt with tenderly, 383, 419; deliverance from danger, 412, 452; spared on repentance, 418; inhabitants had recourse to God, 427, 439, 482; confiscation and disruption at, 427; again disturbed, 431; submission of the people to the Emperor, 437; cowardice in, 445; distinguished in virtue, 456; exhortation before calamities, 463; accused tortured, 474; prisoners at, their trust in God, 482; the dead insulted, 484; reproached for the sedition, 484; wretched state from terror, 486; public rejoicings at, 389.

Apostles, powerful both living and departed, 333; example of, 342; dwelt in Antioch, 355; words of, like music, 331; would have been too magnified, but for sufferings and infirmities, 337; persecutions of, why permitted, 409; despondent, were dull, 413; victorious by suffering, 449; few natural advantages of, 466.

their fear of man lessened at the Applause, in church, 347, 379, 394.

fall, 395; the vilest worshipped, | Armour, spiritual of the Bishop, 357, n.; of all Christians, 357 Arms, of the righteous, 396; of brutes and men compared, 416. Army, of Saul, wisely abstemious, 433; excessive hunger of, 434.

Art, great in the temple at Jerusalem, 456.

Artificer, finds his work as he left

Ascension Day, Sunday before, how styled, 464.

Ash Wednesday, epistle for, 358, n. Asiarchs, 427, n.

Ass, fondness to its master, 420, Assurance, greater from not exacting oaths, 444. Athanasius, St., strong against oaths, 470, n. Athenian courts, 400, n.

Audience, of the powerful, artifices to obtain, 474.

Augustin, St., on the Sabbath, 422, n.

Avengers, 475.

BAPTISM, called initiation, 342, 354, 355; Lord's Prayer taught with, Barathrum, 361, n.

Basil, St., strong terms on the invocation of saints, 389, n., 390; strong against oaths, 470, n.; kept Valens from communion, 481, n.

Basilides, 413, n.

Baths, closed, 455; highly prized,

Battle, kings lay aside their crowns in, 447.

Beatitudes, 392, n., 428.

Beauty of person not to be cherished, 397, 466; of woman a snare, 442; no criterion of merit, 458.

Bee, labouring for others, 420.

Beginning, a small, great results from, 405, 470. "Believe me," a phrase instead of swearing, 398, n.; as a bridle, 481.

Bema occupied by clergy alone, 465, n.

Benefits of God at the creation twofold, 395; doing, for others a duty, 451; never to be desisted from, 452; from reminding one another of duty, 399.

Birds, 408; finding nests robbed, 427; flying high escape snares, 441; caught, cannot use wings, 441.

Bishop, how regarded, 354, 356, 383; duty of, 355; a Priest, 355; a High Priest, 482; a Ruler and above emperors, 356; armour of, 357. Blasphemy, evil of, 342, 361, 437; adds to trouble, 343; to be sharply corrected in others, 343, 347; a public wrong, 343; Job's wife tempts him to, 366.

Blessed bread given to those who do not communicate, 384, n.; the righteous alone to be held, 385; who called, in Scripture, 462. Blessedness, real, what, 340.

Blessings, the chief, common, 351. Blind, fallen into a pit, 451.

Body, human, frailer than matter, 404; elementary parts of, 407; becomes an earthen vessel, 409; by whom framed, 413; feebleness of, why, 413: as it was framed at first, 413, 417; might have been created better, 414; fineness of, 415; excellent as joined with the soul, 416; sustains injury in spite of prudence, 437; effects upon, of externals, 462.

Boldness of monks, 453, 454. Bones of the skull, a defence, 415; around the heart, 415.

Brain, construction of, 415.

Bread, consecrated, reservation of for sick, 384, n.

Brutes, fasted with the Ninevites, 358.

Burdens, duty of bearing another's, 452.

Burial, pomp of, 358.

Business, worldly, the clergy engaged in, 465.

Butler, Bishop, on "Law of Nature," 428, n.

CAIN, misery of, 345; consciousness of his sin and denial, 423. Camp, place so called, 382, n. Careless, Christian ready to fast, 431.

Carnival, 358, n.

Catechism, Church of England on Real Presence, 354 n.; on remission of sin in the Eucharist, 444, n.

Chains, how got rid of, 403; of St. Paul, 447; a security, 447; effi-cacy of St. Paul's, 450.

Charms, texts of Scripture as, 470; those used by Christians condemned, 470, n.

Chastity learnt from Sodom, 466.

Children, unreasonable in their fears, 374; little ones by whom frightened and quieted, 381; to be taught public deliverances, 419, 489; under instruction from fathers and teachers, 429; pulling at a rotten cord, 432; murder of, prevented by not vowing, 434; fond of sweets, severe training for, 449; virtue of, proved, 453; wrestling at the top of a pole, 470; fear their fathers more than we fear God, 471.

Christ, teaching of, 348; scorned in the poor, 349; keeps for us what we give them, 350; left us His flesh and blood, 354; instructed after feeding, 400; instructs from irrational creatures, 420; taught the law of conscience. 428; instructs us to fear, 440; forbids oaths, 444; set against Himself by swearing on the Gospel, 444, 446; gave warning of sorrow before reward, 449; judgment of, on cities, 457; teaches reconciliation by His Sacrifice, 470.

Christianity, not universal, 401, n.; a stricter law than the Mosaic, 469.

Christians, the saviors of Antioch, 343; bear trials cheerfully, 346; soldiers and wrestlers, 357; all reproached for sins of any, 359; should admonish each other, 425, 451; name diffused worldwide, 438; instructors and comforters of unbelievers, 445; under training like heirs: with heaven in view like the merchant, 450; are citizens of heaven, 456. Chrysostom, St., requests the people to check blasphemy, 343; silent for seven days: as Job's friends, 344; bewails Antioch, 345; hopes to cheer the people, 346; speaks at length, and warns, 347; applauded, 347, 379; made bishop, 354, n.; proposes three precepts for memory, 363; blesses God for comforting, 364; love and anxiety for his people, 380, 399, 443; like a mother for a sick child, 430; watchfulness over his flock, 399; regrets the absence of some, 400; repeats admonitions, 424, 443; rewarded through their obedience, 380, 389, 399; confidence for Antioch's rescue, 382; interpretation of I Cor. iii. 15, 387, n.; intercourse with his people, 389, 481; mode of dealing with the unreformed, 389; success of special preaching, 438; testimony of, as to relics, 396; opinion concerning the earth, 403; shape and motion of the heavens, 419; on the Sabbath, 422; notions about sacrifice, 422; admonitions about theatres ineffectual, 439; on remission in Eucharist, 443, n., 444; indignation over the people's irreverence, 445, 446; teaching, practical not doctrinal, 447; welcome to the country clergy, 465; forbids all oaths, 470, n.; offers to cure the swearer, 480; threatens, 481; gives thanks for Flavian's return, 482; his praises of city, Bishop, Emperor, etc., 482.

Church (building), old at Antioch, 331; not a place of amusement, 347; full in time of distress, 364; then resorted to by the wicked, 366; to be absent from sinful, disgraceful, 400, 406; no other place so good, 406; the fittest place for thanksgiving after deliverance, 419; a place of prayer, 443; feelings in, are not religious attainments, 446; part of, reserved for clergy, 465, n.; common talk in, 473; exclusion from, 481.

Church (community), prayers of, 356; injured by evil speaking, 359; Greek, its lenten observances, 359, n.; mother of the afflicted, 364, 386; influences all ranks, 481; censure of, for familiarity, 481.

Citizens of heaven, none without virtue, 457.

City, strength of, in virtue, 457; by virtue a pattern to the world, 471; contemptuous, infects others, 486.

Clouds, cause different productions, 419.

Commander of troops, 452, n.

Common cause, most injured by fall of the most eminent, 334.

Communication with others during self-discipline, 379, 481; to the absent, of religious instructions, 400; of the Pastor to all his flock, 389; object of, 401; with the wicked in guilt, 331; in suf-ferings marks affiliation, 340; in many things with all men, 343; of good with the disorderly, 464.

Confession, private to a Priest, 360; of sins overcome, 418; an encouragement to others to repent, 419; a condition of pardon, 422. Confusion, prevented by fear of Rulers, 381.

Congregation, number of St. Chrysostom's, 380, n., 406; eager for instruction, 395; obedient to his counsels, 399, 406, 430; one bad member corrupts many, 430. Conjurer's tricks shame our endeavours at virtue, 470. Conscience, roused by fear, 363; a bad makes us suspicious: a scourge, 396; a good makes bold, 396; a natural law, 421; shewn from the case of Adam, 422; adds obligations to the enlightened, 424; proved from sense of shame and reproach, 428; facilitates virtue, 429; disturbed by having enemies, 479.

Consolation in adversity as witnessed by the Saints, 336; effects of, 346; is for the sad, 381; derived from religious communion with others, 383; derived from every part of the Bible, 391; from God's chastising in mercy, 431, 434; mode of, 444; in temporal distress to be sought from God's ministers, 445.

Constantine, instance of mildness, 486.

Constantinople, distance from Antioch, 361.

Contemplation of heavenly things like a view from an height, 441. Conversation, on religious subjects how good, 358; cheering effects how good, 358; cheering effects of, 489; reverted to by Saul's army, 433; in divine service wrong, 473.

Corn, ears of, 415.

Correction of others a means of selfcorrection, 405.

Corruptibility of creation, 409, 411. Covetousness, 348; is poverty, 349; cured by considering the equality of day and night, 402.

Country, one's, how to be advanced,

Cowards realize groundless fear, 445. Cowardice unbecoming men, 446.

Creation, not to be disparaged, 335; dishonors fawners, 386; a proof of God's love for us, 391; when written of, in Scripture, 394; testifies to God, 401, 407; mode of above the power of Nature, 403; consists of contraries harmonized, 404; decay of, without Providence, 408; deified, 408; why subject to decay, 409, 411; like the Apostles under persecution, 409; mutual dependence of parts, 411; neither all at rest nor all in motion, 419; the parts not understood ought to amaze, 421.

Creature, use of word, 411, n. Criminals, wretched appearance of at the bar, 396.

Cross, the, a symbol of salvation, 448; sign of, not a charm, 470, n.

Crown, given for overcoming sin, 438; inferior to chains, 447; humanity gained by Theodosius, 485.

Custom, no match for fear, 437; easier overcome than concupiscence, 469.

cence, 469.
Cyprian, St., on intercession of Saints, 389, n.

DANCING, feats in, 470, n.
Danger of arguing about nature,

403. n.; unconcern of Saints for, 448; of relapsing under prosperity, 452.

Daphne, a suburb of Antioch, 457, n. David, though small, a victor, 458. Davison vindicates the idea of sacrifice, 422, n.

Day, unvarying and equal with night, 402.

Death, proves vanity of riches, 351; no subject of alarm, 372; eagerness of St. Paul for, 372; base if in sin, but not so from violence, 373; evil to sinners only, 373; an unjust brings into special communion with the Saints, 374; unjust permitted by God, 374; what is, 374, 390; having it before our eyes, 370; soldier fearing, ignoble, 376; dreaded for want of self-mortification, 384; full of joy to the godly, 461; courted by the monks of Antioch, 463.

Debtors, treatment of, 362.

Debts, God's remission of to men, and a creditor's compared, 478.

Deer, escaped from a snare, 441.

Degradation, attaching to athletics, 470.

Demosthenes, bad habit of: how cured, 394.
Desertion of the Philosophers in distress, 454.

Dice-playing to be shunned, 442.
Differences, seeming, reconciled, 403, 460.

Difficulties for God's sake, 477; none can stand against the fear of God, 480.

Dignity of a city is its virtue, 456; of no avail at the Judgment, 457. Discipline, course of usual, 334, n; under Christianity a preparation for trials, 366; moral from war, Discontent from going to feasts, 440. Discourse, subjects of, at conventions, 406.

Diseases, their origin, 407. Disposition, makes sad or cheerful, 460, 463. Dog, shameless, 420.

Dog, snameless, 420.

Doubt, Ninevites doubted the consequences of their repentance,

Dove, an example of simplicity, 420. Dress, finery in, how cured, 450; not to be despised or admired, 466. Drunkenness, 335.

EAGLE, under man's dominion, 416; a king so styled, 467.

Ear, fasting of the, 359; to be closed against slander, 360.

Earth, diurnal motion of a type, 402, n.; supported on water, 403; productiveness of, 404.

Farthquake, alluded to, 345, n.; 362. Easter, mercy suited to, 355; act of human mercy at, 383, n.

Eating a meal no reason for staying away from church, 400, 406;

moderation favors attendance,

Edification, mutual of members of a household in religious practice, 379, 480.

Elements, harmony and opposition of, 404; weakness and dependence of, 410.

Elijah, of like passions with us, 340; his poverty, 353; twofold, 353, 396.

Elisha, his inheritance, 353; changed the water, 396, 411.

Emotions, high term for, 386. Emperor, see Theodosius, vengeance expected from, 345; has no equal on earth, 346; inferior to a Bishop, 356; a fellow-servant, 361.

Emulation, in religious practice, 370, 379; in reforming the community advantageous, 389; spirit of, promotes self-restraint, 430.

Enemies, none to be held, 363, 370; not reconciled without a third person, 408; Jews knew righteousness prevailed in Israel, 435; misfortunes of, rejoiced in, 461; the sight of possessions of, disturbs, 474; good and bad fortune alike annoys, 474; the worse, the more reason for forgiving, 475; implacable, how treated by God, 475; the worst softened by gentleness, 475; like a limb cut off, 476; duty of making friends of, 478; are alone enough to cause insecurity, 479.

ity, 479. Ephraim, St., quotations from, 389, n.

Episozomenes, title of a Sunday, 464. Equanimity from true wisdom, 454. Esther, prayer of, saved the Jews, 356.

Ether, consistence of, 409, n.

Eucharist, a greater gift than Elisha's, 354; doctrine of, 354, n.; fasting or sufficiency at, 400; an oblation distinct, 422, n.; efficacy for remitting sin, 444, n.; the prize of fasting during Lent, 471; not to be approached unless healed of sins, 472; prohibited the resentful, 472; and the swearer, 481; hands washed before meceiving, 479; object of exclusion from, 481.

Evils, temporal, of little moment, 372; the worse make the less unfelt, 374, 428; warded off by repentance, 376; cannot touch the righteous, 385; God merciful amidst, 393; past, remembrance of, 426; a source of pain, 444, 457; must run to God under, 448; an occasion of thanksgiving, 452; felt according to the disposition, 459; comfort from, 463.

Evil speaking, mischief of, 359, 370; pleasure of, 360; causes quarrels, 361; hinders pardon: spoils fasting, 361; breaking away from, 363.

Examination of our path necessary,

Example, partakes of our own nature, 340; the irrational animals are, 420; the old referred to the young for, 420; effects of, 405, 429; of pilots in a storm, 446; of one city upon the whole world, 438; the giver of, precedes, 487.

Excellences, natural, liable to fail,

418.

Excuses for not seeking reconciliation, 474, 475, 478; concerning inveterate swearing, 479.

Eye, government of the, 359; a surer organ than the ear, 401; beauty and power of, 414; eyebrows like eaves, 415; of God, 475.

FAITH, shewn by works, 373; like an eagle's wing, 416.

Fall, sin of, 393; the human body changed after, 413, 417; of another bewailed is pleasing to God, 461.

Fame, injured by enemies, 479. Famine, relieved by the people of Antioch, 456.

Fasting of Timothy, 33; easily misjudged, 334; moderation urged, 335; a help to prayer: bodily, not enough, 357. 370, 406, 459; of Ninevites accepted, 358; due honor of, 359; of the eye, ear, and tongue, 359, 406; general practice, 370, 388, 450, n.; together with danger facilitates repentance, 378; made easy by custom, 388; from sin, 406, 472; indulgence before and after, 438; without fresh gains a loss, 459; well used welcomed, 459; omis sion of, may be excused, 472.

Fathers, the view of, about the earth 403, n.: upon oaths, 470, n.; strong statements of, as in the Bible, 477, n.; most such, in punishing their children, 392; first severe then indulgent, 449; grieve more when absent, 483.

Favour, the overcoming bad habits accounted by God a, 412, Divine, bestowed on Jerusalem, 467: the forgiving others a, asked by God, 478.

Fear, needful to holy men, 334; a chastisement for carelessness, 347; of the Lord true riches, 351; a punishment, 355; awakens conscience, 363; of harm from man ignoble, 366; a good man firm against, 369; without the fear of hell death terrible. 374; of hell profitable, 374, 439; prevents magnanimity, 376; of Rulers promotes order, 381; effect of, on public morals, 382, 439; a most powerful motive, 392, 437; God's wrath a cure of bad habits, 394; of scorpions from sin, 417; prevents bad passions, like a soldier on guard, 439; breeds virtue, 439; why Christ broadly taught, 440; groundless made real, 446; an ocean of joy, 460; of God overcomes quickly, masters, 479; purifies like a furnace, 480.

Feasts, evil of frequenting, 440; beget envy, 440.

Festival, of Easter an argument for mercy, 355; in celebration of martyrs, 464.

Festus, how approached by St. Paul, 448.

Fire worshipped by the Persians: then worshipped, 367; rivers of, 386; purgatorial, 387, n.; in a forest, 389; its property of rising, 404; used in torture, 474. Firmament, use of word, 404.

Fish, 408; caught with baits, 449. Flavian, Bishop of Antioch, 354, n.; leaves his sister almost dying, 354, 482; his boldness, 355; prayers of, for his people, 482; return from Constantinople, 482; obstacles to his journey, 483; magnanimity of, 483; absent, grieved for Antioch, 484; silent like Moses, 484; will quit Antioch if unpardoned, 488; proofs of forethought for the people, 488.

Flattery of the great, 474. Flesh, an unruly steed, 334.

Floods, 470.

Flowers, 408; yield a sweeter, than artificial smells, 466. Folly of laboring for worldly things, and not to be reconciled, 479. Food, carried away by guests, 38.

Forgiveness of sin by forgiving others, 473; brings our minds into peace, 474. Fountains, 408,

Fowler, a zealous, 441; enticements of, 449.

Fox, cunning of, 420.

Frailty of the body a cure for pride, 413.

Fraternities for mutual religious help, 417. Freedom, in righteousness, not immunity from punishment, 386. Friend, a, shews dissatisfaction by silence, 436.

Fruits of fasting, remain, 459; from bitter roots, 462. Fund, common, 452.

GAIN, whatever promises, to be suspected, 441; from evils, 444. Games, alluded to, 339, 405; presidents of, 427, n.; participants of, excluded from the Communion, 439, n.

Garment, oiled of wrestlers, 339, n.; miraculous virtue of, 396; a rich, how used, 405.

Gazing at the beauty of a woman a snare, 442.

Gentiles, see Heathen, signifying a worshipper of God, 423. Gifts, Divine, on the temple, 456.

Glory of suffering for Christ, 447; not happiness, 460; in shewing mercy, 485.

Gluttony, 357: inexcusable before prayer: incapacitates, 400; cured by considering St. Paul, 450.

God, His work good, 335; power of shewn in weakness, 337, 409; love of Him, its own reward, 338; challenged Satan to try Job, 339; cares more than we for the poor, 341; not to be called in question, 341, 362; afflicts those He loves, 342; His honour to be vindicated, 343, 347; cares for us more than ourselves, 347; never weary of our prayers, 356; blasphemed for our sins, 359; Ilis mighty longsuffering, 361, 362; tempers prosperity and adversity for our good, 366; overrules Satan's worst efforts to his loss, 367; if our friend, nothing matters, 369; cares less for His repute than our salvation, 378; does not punish when the threats affect, 382; overrules the designs of men, 383, 447; judges sinners by the standard of the good, 388; His love shewn in our punishment, 392, 413, 431; otherwise only half good, 392; deals with fallen man as a father, 392, 449; tenderness of in addressing Adam, 393; His walking was in Adam's perception, 396; His providence shewn in making the cure of the soul easy, 397; instructs by the creation, 401; His ordering of the seasons and the day, 402; uses weak instruments to shew His power, 404; glorified man in the works of creation, 405; needs nothing, 410; the source of all things, 410; skill of in human frame, 414; known by His works. 421; mercy and wisdom of bringing Adam to confession, 422; why He delays punishment, 424; His goodness shewn in man's natural love of virtue, 429; the leader of the Jews in war, 435; silence toward Saul from gentleness, 436; turns causes of evil to good, 448; to believers is the whole fountain of cheerfulness, 460; ordains suffering first, 450; unceasingly gracious, 452; reproaches for insensibility to the ills of others, 462; fear of, the foundation of peace, 463; insulted worse than man ever is, 473: our Avenger, and despised when we avenge, 475; like a friend in requiring forgiveness of others, 478; never ceases to entreat us, 478; assists earnest endeavours, 480; exceeds hopes, 482; takes occasion of offences to shew love, 485; overrules all for good, 489.

Gods, heathen, who, 339; the vilest animals made, 409; the Apostles held to be, 409; ambition of some men to be held, 413.

Good, what is, at one time is not always, 401; temporal, yields pleasure to the reverent, 463; temporal, is mutable and insufficient, 460.

Gospel, the book of the, oaths taken on, 443; preaching of promoted by conflicts, 448; like a sunbeam, not bound, 450; portions of worn by women and children, 470.

Government, two sorts of, natural and elective, 391.

Grave, robbing, 393, n.

Greek Church, usage in fasting, 370, n.; Fathers of, opinions of on Purgatory, 387, n. Gregory, St. Naz, on invocation of the Saints, 390, n.; on Beatitudes, 392, n. Grief, a medicine only profitable when felt for sin, 375, 390; this the end of it, 375, 390; temporal ills, not cured by, 375; produced by sin, 419.

Grief, a wound, how to be treated, 381; for infants as reasonable as for the dead, 385; makes men inattentive to instruction, 413; spreads darkness over every thing, 426; for the ills of others pleasing to God, 458; a refreshment, 461; fruits of, sweet, 463. Guilt shared by those who give power to the sinner, 331.

HABITS, good to be formed, 363; difficult to be overcome, 388; easy, the subject being hard, 388; mastered in a given time, 370; almost mastered require less pains, 405; in man acquired by free will, 420; easily conquered by fear, 437; under severe training, 449; easier to be overcome than nature, 469.

Hades, where, according to the heathen, 403, n.

Hair of eyebrows and head, 415. Hands of God, His power, 403. Happiness in God alone, 460.

Harlot, bad influences of, 435. Harm, none to God's people, 378; limited to the sutures of the bones, 415.

Hares, timidity of, 445.

Hatred, to be forsaken, 363; mark of, to avoid naming the person, 393; disquiets, 473; is unbecoming brothers: increases with time, 476; to cease from is not all enough, 478; cherished corrupts fast or feast, 479; pollutes the mind, 479.

Health, won by labour, 352; bad to be borne with patiently, 332; St, Timothy's, no hindrance to his labours, 334; not happiness, 460; by sobriety, 466; ill, an excuse for not fasting, 472, 475. Hearing without doing of no avail,

Heart, the chief member, well defended, 415.

Heat, properties of, 403, n. Heathenism, designation of, in Scripture, 367, n.

Heathen, the alleged reason for deifying the universe, 408; by their own folly make idols, 409; philosophers were actors, 465; instructed by the example of Theodosius, 488; the laws of, from the conscience, 423; not responsible without a natural law, 423; not fit instructors for Christians, 445.

Heaven, hope of, 350; not won without labour, 449.

Heavens, sight of, proclaims God: effects of, 401; matter and form of, 404; beauty of, 408; fixed, 419, n.

Hell, fear of, is profitable, 439. Heralds in the games, 386.

Heretics, found fault with creation, 335; opinions of about the human body, 413. Hippodrome, 439.

History, design of Scripture viewed as, 410, n.

Honey, water so called, 352; as a feast to Saul's army, resisted,

Honour, bestowed on man in three ways, 391; done to God is rewarded, 446; worldly has no real dignity, 456.

Hope, in God an anchor, 446; makes present ill light, 450.

Horse, inferior to man in the foot,

Hospitality, of Abraham, 349; of Job, 442.

House not to be extravagantly adorned, 349; built on a rock, 365; guarded is not robbed, 439; of mourning and feasting, 440; of the sinner overthrown a witness to all, 259, 466; brought to ruin by neglect of small repairs, 470.

Humility, produced by adversity, 337; scope for in the human frame, 417.

Hunger, gives relish to food, 351. Hunters, 435.

Husbandry, spiritual, 357, 365; the first art, a school of virtue, 465.

Hut, in the vineyards, 408.

IDOLATRY, origin of, 337. Ignorance of men brought out in arguing about nature, 403, n., Ignorant, the, taught by the creation, Illuminations, at Antioch, 489. Image of God, 362; consists of sovereignty, 391.

Implacability, in an enemy, punished by God, 475.

Inattention, at prayers, 394; leaves us without excuse, 473

Incarnation, alluded to in Job, 339,

Indifferent things, to be avoided, 442. Indignation at the wrongs of others, of nature, 429. Inferiority of material calls for greater skill, 414. Inferiors, men are ashamed to sin before, 428.

Inheritance, needs previous training, 450.

Insensibility to the sins of others, 462.

Instincts, 420.

Instruction, spiritual, stored in the mind, 388; like picking a flower, 399; increases obligations, 424; conveyed formerly by things, 401; given in church, 406; to be obeyed on trust, 425; in virtue by temporal ills, 429; requires personal ardor and promptness, 430, 480; like water from a well, for use afterwards, 446; in morals precedes that in revealed truth, 446; inattention to, excused by dullness, 475.

Instruments, weakness of, shews

God's power, 409.

Insult, effect of, our own fault: recoils when slighted, 353; towards aggressors an offence to God, 440; from one under high patronage, 444.

Intemperance, before and after fasting, 439.

Intentions, provided by God are rewarded, 341; known to God, Intercession to be made for Antioch, 346; arguments used in, 383; of the poor, 351, n.; bold, of monks, 453, 454; of saints departed, 389, n.

Invocation of saints and angels, 389,

Iron softened by water, 403. Isaiah commands the sun, 411.

JACOB, his care of Laban's sheep, 354-

Jailor at Philippi, 450.

Jephthah's vow allowed by God, 434. Jerusalem, temple at, 456; wretchedness of, 457; favours of God bestowed on, 467; a vine, 467.

Jesus of Nazareth, the common name of our Lord, 393, n.

Jews in distress could not listen, 346; reproved for not looking to God, 356; saved by Esther's prayer, 356; oppressed in Egypt to in-crease their desire of Canaan, 384; would not name Christ from hatred, 393; gave no heed to Moses, 413.

Jewels, the pride of some women, 449.

Job, his character shewn by affliction, 338, 341; his wrestling with Satan: tried as gold, 339; Antioch compared to him, 344; safest when poor, 353; his trust in God, 366; loved before grace, or the old covenant, 366; rewarded for retaining godliness, 369; dunghill of, in Arabia, 371; consolation to be derived from, 371; his body, preciousness of, 371, 372; an instance of the merit of suffering, 385; silence of his friends, 412; a Gentile, 423, n.; his virtue lofty in prosperity and adversity, 442; losses of, led him to God, 445, 461.

John, St., Baptist, to be followed in reproving sin, 343; his martyrdom a warning against oaths, Jonah's flight of no avail, 378; how taught mercy, 378; forced by God, 382; author of the book of, 480, n.

Jonathan's eating the honey, 434; if slain, a double misery to Saul, 434 Joseph sold, 363; wept, 488.

Joshua commands the sun's motion,

Joy, from temporal good soon ends, 451; continual under misfortune possible, 459; aim of all, 459; aim of all, 459; in God, 460; of the world brings loss, 461.

Judge, unjust, parable of, 412; man made, of his own pardon, 477; does not question or correct the culprit, 393; sympathy of the judges at Antioch, 427; rigour of human, 427; shewed mercy upon the intercession of the monks, 453.

Judgment, the last, proved by the afflictions of the saints, 339; riches of no avail in, 349; alms help us in, 351; and mercy, 355; without benefit of others' intercession, 427; rulers threatened with, 453; harsh over others visited on ourselves, 361; rash on others without excuse, 472: temporal, effectual, 481.

Justice, courts of, originated in the natural moral law, 423.

KIDNAPPERS entice by pleasant things, 449.

Kings excel their subjects in wealth, 421; make unreasonable laws, 447; doff their crowns in battle, 447; have more cause for sadness than any, 460; armour of, 467; made glorious by mercy, 485; may easily conquer, but not win, 487.

Knives, feats performed with, 470. Knowledge of the creation from God, 421: withheld to remove occasion of pride, 421; of God by Ilis works, 421; of good and evil by nature, 428; not for its own sake, 435.

LABOUR brings sleep, 352; our safest state, 353; spiritual reward of, 357; of life ordained by whom, 384.

Laughter often leads to sin, 442; how to be met, 481.

Law, of Nature (see Conscience) the ground of Christ's teaching, 428; against criminal suits in Lent, 383, n.; of God takes precedence of human laws, 398; civil, of the heathen, from conscience, 423; of kings not to be questioned, 447.

Lazarus gained a reward, 340, 385; example of, 342, 373; truly rich, 348. Learning, how long Pambos was learning one verse, 332, n.; without wisdom avails nothing, 465.

Lebanon for Judæa, 467.

Legerdemain, feats of, 470.

Lent, Christian's working time, 357; commencement of, 358, n., 370 n.; precepts to learn in, 363; celebrated with daily sermons, 379, n.; covers sins of the past year, 472. Leprosy of Miriam, 475.

Lessons, Scripture, in worship, order of, 347, n.; from Jonah's history, 378; from the irrational animals, 420.

Letter of the monks to Theodosius, 454-

Libanius, 394, n.

Life, a burden, a cottage here, in heaven a palace, 372; why made laborious, 384; without religion dull and wearisome, 385; a good, honours God, 405; bordering on sin like walking along a precipice, 443; in the country favourable to virtue, 465. Litanies, 362, 11.

Longsuffering of God, 424.

Loss, by doing one's duty versus the gain, 444; of children no grief to the good, 461.

Love, its own reward, 338, n.; shewn in patient endurance, 341, 342; in perseverance, 342; takes interest in everything, 356; of God absent, causes fear of death, 374; glories in suffering, 448; maternal, 453; delights in all that belongs to the object of it, 474; exercised in great offences, 485; delights in the good of others, 464.

Lucifer, consecrates Paulinus, Bishop of Antioch, 354, n. Lungs, position of, 415.

Lust, by looking, 443.

Luxury, tendencies of, 442; unfit for trials, 459; untimely in public troubles, 464.

MADMEN, never at rest. 474. Magee, Archbishop, on Sacrifice, 422, n.

Magistrates, out of office bear the same titles, 447.

Magnanimity of monks at Antioch,

Manichees, alluded to, 335. Manners, purity of, 466.

Marcion, 413, n.

Martyrs, shrines of, places of almsgiving, 340; become mediators, 389, n.

Martyrdom, of Abel, 342; of St. John Baptist. 343; crown of, how to win, 343, 347; has efficacy of Baptism, 376, n.

Masters, approved by their scholars, 455; insulted by injuries done to their servants, 475.

Matter, heretical opinions about, 413, n.

Meal, 399, n.; principal among the Romans was supper, 379, n.

Means effecting opposite ends, 448; all to be adopted to win an enemy, 477. Mediator, the Bishop so employed with the Emperor, 354. Medicine, skill required to apply it, 358; the end of, 375; natural, 395; from animals, 395, n.

Meekness of the monks, 455; does not anger an enemy, 475.

Melchisideck a Gentile, 423, n. Members, the instruments of good and evil according to our choice, 369; each its excellence, 417; one cut off to be reunited, 476.

Membranes, covering the brain, 415. Memorial, perpetual, of sin, 466. Men, all have much in common, 343, a spiritual flock, 355; soon tire of other's affairs, 356; images of God, 362; the race after the fall deserved destruction, 392; command over the creation, 411; gentler than brutes, 416; to be measured by virtue, not natural gifts, 457; self-taught in good and evil, 422, 428; in the Arts and Sciences, 423; naturally at enmity with vice, 429; disinterested in love and hatred, 429; of well regulated minds not distracted by events, 450; pleasure the aim of all, 459.

Merchandise, spiritual, in doing God's bidding, 477. Merchants, labour in hope, 450; cargo not distance their care, 451; labour for enjoyment afterwards, 459.

Mercy, shewn to others, procures mercy for ourselves, 355; of judges at Antioch, 454; makes kings glorious, 485.

Merit, not proved by titles of honour. 477.

Metropolis, avails naught for salvation, 457

Milk, for children a simile, 401. Minister, his people's conduct his glory, 347.

Miracles, by relics, 332, 333, 367;
power of, limited, 333; does not dispense with fasting, 334;

tempt the ignorant to worship men, 338; an extraordinary, 367; of the Apostles, not by their own power, 409.

Miriam's punishment not remitted,

Misfortunes of others open men's hearts, 429, n.; subdue our vanity, 429; light, felt by the rich, 460; without excuse before God, 472.

Monasteries, 455, n.

Monks, services of, 453; effects of their intercession, 454; account of one, 455; undismayed, 463.

Moral and Positive to Laws, difference between, 421; moral teaching, 447.

Mortality, human, for overthrowing pride, 413.

Mortification, spiritual acts of, 379; incumbent on all, 384.

Moses, suffered for doing good, 342; disregarded by the people in extreme distress, 346; wherein he brought honey from the rock, 352; his intercession, 355; rod of, 396; command over created things, 411; his righteousness availed not the Jews, 430.

Mothers miss their children at table, 400; case of a mother at Antioch, 453; grief often relieves, 461.

Mourning, sight of, sobers: reminds of Judgment, 440; calls forth sympathy from enemies, 440.

Mourner, to others like a cloud parted by the sun's rays, 346. Multitude, the, influenced by fear and threats, 392; of inhabitants avails nothing, 457.

Murder, why not reasoned about, where forbidden, 421; by exacting oaths, 443.

Mutability of earthly good, 460.

NAILS, construction of, 416. Name, calling by, a mark of affection, 393, n.; common to our Lord, 393, n.; of God how pronounced in heaven, 394.

National calamities ought to direct us to God, 346; work national amendments, 366.

Nature, overruled by the piety of Saints, 367; what exists by, comforts, 391; gifts of, commend the Giver, 429; course of, not to be maligned, 442; ties of, are a great obligation, 453

Nebuchadnezzar, change wrought in him, 386; herald of his own defeat, 386.

Neighbours, spiritual good of, to be furthered, 452; afflictions of, to be shared, 458; good of, an enjoyment, 464.

Night, as good as day, 395; succeeds day without change, 402.

Ninevites, their fasting accepted, 358; why, 350; teach repentance and hope, 376; forsook their sins, the city saved, 377; their Paul, St., teacher of the Gentiles, 332, disadvantages in comparison with Jews and Christians, 377, 480; complete repentance of, from fear, 480.

Noah, laughed at, 481.

Noise from "spectacles" disturbed divine service, 439.

Number, the, of fellows in sin no profit, 388.

OATHS, testimony of the life instead, 394; how Satan works amidst, 308; only to be taken fasting, 400; have caused the worst evils, 432; binding others more dangerous, 433; at the altar, 443; either superfluous or perjury, 444; caused the ruin of Jerusalem many times, 467; signified in Ezekiel's parable, 467; occasions of admitted by the Fathers, 470, n.

Observances, formal, in religion use of, to good and bad Christians, 479, n. Occasions, passing, used for instructing, 374, 381, 398, 427, 437, 460, 463, 474. Occurrences, incidental, often are of God, 382.

Ocean, earth upon the, 403, n. Offences, of every man against God greater than towards other men, 472; great, an occasion of shewing mercy, 485. Openness of Christ's declaration to

His followers, 449.

Order, in nature and human fellowship proclaims God, 401, 402. Orders, holy, sin of giving to the unworthy, 331.

Origen, on intercession of Saints, 389, n.

Ownership, unreal and real, 350, 351.

Pambos, how he learned Scripture, 332, n. Paradise, St. Paul transported to,

447. Pardon, of others gains our own,

355, 477, 488.

Partners in a shop, 452. l'assion, God free from, 392.

Passover, a time of mercy, 355; reverenced by pardon of offences, 479.

Pastor, bound to suffer for his people, 354; efficacy to his intercessions, 356; how to be regarded by his people, 380; intercourse with each severally, 389; like a husbandman and a pilot, 399; invigorated by success, 399; good of his flock, his good, 412; to be followed trustfully, 425; concern of, for all, 430; living by husbandry: true philosophers, 465.

Patience, 341; of Lazarus, praised by St. Chrysostom, 342, n.; punishes insolence, 353.

n.; care for Timothy, 333; distrusted himself, 334; kept humble by affliction, 337; strong though in bonds, 337; his example 342; hindered by Satan, 342; adapts himself to hearers, 349; his labours and reward, 353; reproved sin, 359, eagerness to die, 373, 385; advantages of Christians over St. Paul, 373; his garments, virtue of, 396; more than a lion, 397; his illustrations from nature, 407; recollection of his sins, 419; proves a natural law, 423; concern about one incestuous person, 430; dangers of, for his mending, 431; counted all things loss, 441; feels paternal anxiety, 443; glories in his sufferings for Christ, 447, 462; attempts to convert his judges, 448; recommends continual joy, 459; greatness of, in hiding good deeds, 483.

Paulinus, Bishop of Antioch, 354, n.

Peacock, 408.

Penalty for swearing, 389, 399. Penitential acts of use, 378. l'enitents, discipline of, 472, n. Pentateuch, 394, n.

Perfection, precepts of, 348, 349; how attained, 370; St. Paul's height within the reach of every one, 373; of art in the temple, 456.

Perfume, spiritual, 406; of flowers the best, 466

Periury from the habit of swearing. in two ways, 432, 438; of both persons swearing the contrary, 432; who forces another to, is guilty himself, 432, 439; the object of Satan, 433; guilt of, shared by those privy to it, 434; manifold from one oath, 436.

Persecutors, benefitted by the virtue of their victims, 387.

Perseverance in prosperity a test of virtue, 452.

Peter, St., the first to preach Christ, 356.

Pharisee, fasted in vain, 357; his evil speaking, 359. Philoponus on the heavens, 419, n.

Philosophers, cowardice of the heathen, 454; the simple made, 466.

Philosophy of this world shrinks from danger, 454; worldly, falsified by deeds, 455; pagan, is but in the garb, 465; like a sword with a silver hilt and leaden blade, 465; heathen, taught a few only, 466.

Physician, spiritual, 360, 394; cures by contraries, 378

Piety, the chief good, 369; abides,

Pilgrimages, 340; to the dunghill of Job, 371; use of, 467. Pilot, 408; his chief concern, 399;

in storms, 446, 483. Place, importance of, for the delivery of the law, 394.

Plato, 402, n.; on the human body, 413, n.; on the motions of heavenly bodies, 419, n.

Players, deprived of the holy Communion, 439, n.

Pleasure depends on relish, 352: present diminished, pain in view, 450. Plural number, use of, 481, n.

Pole, balancing, 470.

Poor, God's care for, 341; represent Christ for us, 349; trust in God, 351; relish food and sleep, 352. Porch, of church for penitents, 472, n. Porphyrio, a bird greatly esteemed,

408, n.

Porters, cajoled for favours, 474. Pot, the golden, of the temple, 467. Poverty, a benefit and protection, 342, 353, 372; of Elijah, 353; of Job, 442; alleged to excuse almsgiving, 475.

Power, of injuring the just, why granted, 386; taken away easily, 451; of judges, 454.

Practice, laxity of, causes death to be feared, 375; a matter of choice and endeavours, 428; right, impossible without fear of God, 439; the season of, is the test of religion, 446; without questioning, 447; of Saints proves Scripture, 455.

Praise, of one another beside the purpose, 380; to be suspected, 441; of men from reconciliation, 479.

Prayer, the only resource in trouble, 346; power of, 351; recommended, 354, 356; united powerful, 356; of women, 356; to be persevered in, 362; inattention at, 394, 472; natural as a way of assisting the distressed, 426; penitential, a special kind, 427, n.; fruit of, never lost, 451; most needful after deliverance, 452; for fellows in affliction, 458; the Lord's, taught in Baptism, 355, n.; how entitled, 478, n.; not to be used by halves, 478.

Preaching, suits not extreme distress, 346; may solace the suffering, 346; to be heard for improvement, 347; of the Gospel not bound as the preacher, 450.

Precepts, three proposed to be learnt, 363; moral without the reason, 421; of the Gospel better carried in heart than on paper, 470. Preservation of the world by God, 403.

Pride, 348; how to check, in the rich, 349; evil of, 350; spiritual, on account of good works, 337; remedied by considering the weakness of the body, 413, 417; preceded by ignorance, 421.

Priest, our wound to be shewn to, 360, n.; consoles the afflicted in adversity, 483.

Prison, likeness to, 345; emptied at Easter, 383, 486; senate of Antioch confined in, 458, n.

"Prisoner," more glorious than any title to St. Paul, 447. Prodigal, the, unfit to manage an inheritance, 450. Promises, of God infinitely excellent,

Prophecy, not false because not accomplished, 376.

Prosperity, no ground for security, 369, 450; present, heightened by contrast, 425; transient, 427.

Proverbial sayings against l'rovi-dence, 341, n.; of contempt for others, 343.

Providence, denied by some, 341; shewn in apparently accidental cases, 382, 383; in the deliverance of His children, 386; in the use of weak means, 404; proved from the human body, 407; in Flavian's journey, 483. Publican, accepted without fasting, 358.

Punishment, a medicine, 375; of the prosperous twofold, 384; inflicted by parents, 392; severest for sins easily avoided, 411; delayed for repentance, 424; inflicted on Antioch beneficial, 455; of an inexorable enemy, 475. Purgatory, doctrine of, 387, n.

Pusillanimity, to be always dwelling on miseries, 391; to look to man for comfort, 445.

QUESTIONS, raised to win attention, 333; on the permission of suffering, 336, 340; on brute animals fasting, 358.

Quinquagesima, 358, n.

RACING, ill effects of, 442.

Rank not to be regarded in rebuking vice, 430.

Reason, appropriates the superior powers of brutes, 416; does not constrain, 428, n.; given to avoid sin, 441.

Reasons, of God's works, a few revealed, 421; of God's laws not to be required, 447.

Recollection of past evils useful, 418. Reconciliation, the one seeking has the whole merit, 474; endeavours after, always acceptable to God, 475; imputed to wrong motives, 476; to God by the Crucifixion, 476; every day makes, more difficult, 476; only to please God, 477; a cause of forgiveness, 477; repulses must not quell, 478; very easy, 479.

Reflection on words of Scripture, 391; from the sight of grief, 440; on being laughed at for doing right, Reformation, spiritual, of the community, rapid when begun, 389; at Antioch, 455.

Relics of Timothy expelled demons,

332; of the Apostles, 333; of Job in great repute, 371; virtue of, 389, n.; of martyrs expelled demons, 396.

Relief from grieving, 462.

Religion, how designated in Scripture, 367. n.; training in, increases obligation, 373; not to left to the clergy, 384.

Reminding one another of duties, 399.

Remission from God, according to our excusing, 477; full, by full,

Repairs, small, neglected, bring ruin, 470.

Repentance, pardon offered to, 362; time given for, 363; procures the removal of evils, 376; speedy, from fear of God, 480; duty of bringing others to, 481.

Reproach felt as a wrong, 428; a spur to amendment, 429.

Reproof to be administered in love, 343, 359; calls forth love, 344; an improvement of our talent, 348.

Repulse, no excuse for not being reconciled, 472, 478.

Resentment is a practice of malice, 476; excludes from the holy Communion, 476; precluded by considering our sins, 472, 473; continually forbidden, 473; madness: punished here and hereafter, 474; merits the worst punishment, 474; the most inexcusable of all sins, 475; gives advantage to Satan: is contempt of God, 477; unjust toward our worst foes, 473.

Reserve, practised by St. Paul and our Lord, 349.

Responsibility from religious instruction, 398, 424.

Rest, must be preceded by tribulation, 366.

Restraint upon vice provided by God, 429; human on our freedom submitted to, 447; tribulation is, 452.

Resurrection, proved by afflictions of the Saints, 339; hope of, removes fear of death, 373.

Revelation by letters would have availed the learned and the rich only, 401; by things is under-stood by all men, 401.

Reward bestowed for pains, not natural gifts, 429; temporal and spiritual contrasted, 451; of grieving over the sins of others. 462.

Rich, the, more miserable than the poor, 460.

Riches, the true, 348, 351, 353; earthly, vanity of, 348; wherein not forbidden, 348; an encum-brance, 349; where to deposit, 349, 350; the use of, only ours, 350; why not given equally, 351; drive men to mean arts, 353; a means of virtue, 442; liability to loss of, 451; not happiness, 460.

Ridicule, for well-doing, how to be met, 481.

Righteous, arms of, 397; overthrow demons, 397; never sad, 461; alone happy, 462.

Robes, rich, look best on ourselves,

Roman Catholic Church on Eucharist, 444, n.

Roots, bitter, sweet fruits from, 462. Rope walking, 470.

Ruin of Jerusalem by breaking oaths, 469.

Rule self-imposed for the cure of faults, 471.

Rulers, God arms, 381; fear of, proper 381; like the supports of a building, 382.

SABBATH, why enjoined in Decalogue, 422; made a type of the Lord's Day, 422, n.

Sacrament, more than Elisha had, 353.

Sacrifice, a dictate of the natural law, 422, n.; unbloody, 472. Sadness, darkens the sight, 346; of the rich, 459.

Saints, especially assailed, 334, 342; eight reasons why afflicted, 336 their power from God, 338; motives of, for serving Him, 338; not to be worshipped, 338, n.; ninth and tenth reason why afflicted, 340; their countenance, 355; a few save their country, 356; effects of their sanctity on nature, 367; daunted by nothing, 368; surmount all natural ills, 375; the more tried, the more glorious, 386; meekness of, when magnified by men, 386; departed, intercession of, 389, n.; unconcern for their own safety, 448; the living, proclaim the virtues of their teachers, 455; joy of, under trouble wonderful, 461.

Salvation, obtained by few without threats, 392; precepts of, not hindered by the body, 472.

Sand, the boundary of the sea, 404; house built on, 446.

Satan aims most at the advanced, 334, 342; messengers of, 337; would have men reckoned gods, 338; called to account by Jehovah, 338; accuses Job, 339; assails him, 339; foiled by Job's patience, 341; man has nothing in common with, 343; his rage against Antioch, 344; how he resisted, 357; his spite at Job, 366; greatest efforts abortive, 367, 386; most defeated by the righteous in adversity, 371; arts of, to keep alive anger, 398; attempts of, thwarted by God, 419, 439; specially flourishes amidst oaths, 433; agency of, in the case of Saul and the honey, 434, 436; reason of, urging Jonathan to eat, 434; a fowler, 441; service of, often hard, 469; author of swearing, 470; our sole enemy, 476; disappointed at the Emperor's elemency, 485.

Saul, would not from hatred name David, 393; his prohibition to eat defeated, 433, 436; rashness of, 433, 436; grief over Jonathan's confession, 436; likely consequences of his oath, 437.

Scene of remarkable events affects us, 467.

School, severity of, 381, 449. Sciences, application to spiritual subjects, 407.

Scripture Holy, as a lyre and a trumpet, 331; flowery meadow, 331; a mine of wisdom, 332; to be alleged in teaching, 336, 337; allegorical sense of, 338, n.; course of reading, 347, 348, 358, ns.; food from, 348; consolation from every part of, 391, 394; an instance, 391; not needed in the first ages, 400; entirely agrees, 403; slowness in explaining, 446; sense of, with the clergy, 447; accounts of the faithful verified in living Saints, 455.

Seal, set on confiscated houses, 427. Seasons, order and harmony of, 402.

Secresy, a sign of guilt, 360.

Sedition, stale of Antioch after, 344, sqq.; raised by a few strangers, 347, 355, 381; offenders in, punished, 362; what befel messengers of, 382; how punished, 455; turned to the honour of the city, Bishop and Emperor, 482. Self-possession, the best defence

Self-possession, the best defence against dangers, 446.

Septuagint, followed by St. Chrysostom, 340, n.

Sermons, daily during Lent, 379, n. Servants, sitting with, 345; consulting with, 363; dare not name their masters, 394; runaway, how they break their chains, 403; their spiritual good, needs attention, 405; have masters to overcome sloth, 420; flogging of, 432; not remitting debts at their master's bidding, 478.

Servility to the powerful, 474, n. Severity before indulgence, 449.

Shame, of sinning before inferiors, 428; of not serving God better after great mercies, 438; to wait for advances to reconciliation, 474.

Sheep, parable of, 430.

Ship without pilot and crew, 408. Shipwreck in retrospect, 426; spectators of, help by their prayers,

426; of the state, 452. Sick, the, glutton a pitiable object,

387. Sickle, flying, seen by the Prophet, 443. Sickness, borne cheerfully, 332; no bar to zeal, 334; proves wealth vain, 351; no great evil, 397; past is pleasant to remember, 420; an instructor, 429; of St. Chrysostom, 464.

Silence, from suspicion, 426. Significant, 480; the only hope of offenders, 484.

Simplicity of the country clergy, 465; of the Apostles, 466.

Sin, most hurtful in good men, 334; comes not of God's work, 335; pardon of, through affliction, 340, 387; shared by indifference, 348; how focused in pride, 348; pardon of, through alms, 351; through forgiving others, 355; by Priests, 356; on repentance, 362; to be reproved, 360; our own to be examined, 360; sure to find us out, 363, 378; removed through tribulation, 365, 385; alone to be dreaded, 372, 374, 387; blotted out by grief, 376, 461; by death, 376, 390; here punished better, 385; is misery punishment aside, 387; strikes dumb, 393; consciousness of makes cowards, 396; makes vulnerable, 397; to abstain from, no labour, 398; those easily avoided most punished, 411; forgiven, not to be forgotten, 418; the skein of our, 433; increased by frequent instruction, 438; remitted in the Eucharist, 444, n.; is dishonour, 456; great witness against, perpetuated, 466; excludes from holy Communion, 472; all, exposed at the Judgment, 430.

Sinner, the, like chaff, 397. Sisters dividing an inheritance in peace, 402. Slander, to be buried, 360; a snare of Satan, 360.

Sleep, sweet to the weary, 352; a medicine, 395.

Sloth, requires chastisement, 431; banished by fear, 439; danger of, under prosperity, 452, 463.

Snares, beset us on all sides, 440; wife, children, etc., may become, 441; same, catch men again, 441.

Sobriety, needful before going to church, 400; of country people, 466.
Socrates, on the faculty of women for learning, 470, n.; opinions on punishment, 375, n.

Sodom, its greatness no defense, 456; a perpetual witness, 466.

Soldiers, Christians are, 357; Christian, incapacitated by dread, 376; employed at the trials at Antioch, 426; intemperate particularly in battle, 433; on guard prevent robbers, 439; alert for conquest, 459; reverence their officers, 472.

Solomon, made trial of luxury, 352;

his thoughts on mirth, 440; learned in Art and Science by God, 456.

Sores, treatment of, 387.

Sorrow, an occasion of joy to Saints, 461.

Soul, the, to be adorned for Christ's dwelling, 350; medicine for, 358; the only proper object of concern, 397; subject to infirmity to prevent pride, 414; wounded by swearing, 438; stedfast, is proof against danger, 446; of unconverted, an old wine-skin, 449; philosophy of the even. in all events, 454; dignity of, in virtue, 457; like the body as affected from without, 462; the seat of philosophy, 465; beauty of, to be admired, 466; under the fear of God like a rusty tool in the furnace, 480; sign of greatness of, looking to God, 482.

Spark, falling on the ocean, 460. Speculations, on the Universe above us, 411; folly of, 421; improper on Divine commands, 447.

Speech, how precious, is certain, 332; how restrained, 397.

Spider, not esteemed because he toils for himself, 420. Spirit Holy, gives matter for discourse, 332, 347; all His gifts munificent, 332; His gold needs His flame, 332; enters not where wrath is, 479.

Stability, type of, 402.

Stadium, 416, n. Stars, like flowers, 408.

State, without Rulers, illustrated, 381; dependence of members on each other in, 417; not saved by multitude, 457.

Statuary's skill on rude materials,

Statues, of the Emperor demolished, 344; a device of Satan, 439; Theodosius's mother and wife, dishonoured, 484, n.; for humaneness, 485; of Constantine, dishonoured, 485. Stibadium, 489, n.

Storm, approaching, 446.

Striving, lawful, what, 357, n. Substance, 362,

Suffering, for Christ, our glory, 447; fellowship in, soothes, 339.

Sun, transcends nature, 404; a bridegroom: not a god, 410; in constant motion, 419.

Superfluous, what seems, may be full of Divine wisdom, 332.

Surfeit, breaks sleep, 352. Suspiciousness from guilt, 396.

Swearer, ought to reflect on martyrdom of St. John B., 432; house of, ruined, 443.

Swearing, 363, 370, 379, 394, 417, 424, 443; easily overcome, 370, 379, 388, 398, 437; methods of overcoming, 370, 379; the excuse answered when imposed by another, 350, 398; no excuse that others swear, 388; insult to God shewn by, 304; substitute for, 308, 481; mode adopted to overcome, 399; the easier the worse, 411; abstaining from a Divine precept, 425; of contraries common in many relations, 432; Satan lies in wait for, 432, 433; doubling of Saul in, 437; to abstain from easier than to obey the Emperor, 437; forbidden by Christ, 444; worse in Christians than in Jews, 469; comes of negligence, 470; all, from Satan, 470; difficulty of curing, imaginary, 479; not to be cured little by little, 480.

Sympathy in the joy of others, 429. Synagogue at Daphne, 457, n.

TABLE of spiritual food from Holy Writ, 348; of the rich not relished, 351.

Talents, parable of, 348; ten thousand, parable of, 355, 478. Tarentines, drunkenness and luxury of, 400, n. Taxes, 363, 398; indignation caused by, 374.

Teacher, the, a title of St. Paul, 332; to take fit seasons, 473; number of natural, 430; differs from the artificer as to consequences, shares in the merit of his scholars, 487.

Temperance, naturally approves itself, 428; practice of severe, 429. Temple, the, honoured by God, dis-honoured by sinners, 456. Thankfulness, in trouble rewarded,

Thanksgiving, contrasted with blasphemy, 342, 343; equals crossbearing, 385; for favours procures others, 412; repeated, 412, 425, 450; in distress, 452; for evils, 480.

evils, 489.
Theatres, forbidden, 359; one opposite the church, 439; cause many evils, 442, 455,

Theodusius, statues of, thrown down, 344, 362; embassy to, 354; hopes from his piety and clemency, 355, 356, 453, 457; baptized, 355; compared to Ahasuerus, 356; tax levied by 361, n.; not present when insulted, 362; his religious character, 383, 487; opposite acts from, 383, n.; closing of the baths, 437; stopped public amusements as a punishment, 455; like a father in demeaning Antioch, 455; reverence of, for Priests, 483; reception of Flavian, 484; his upbraiding, restitution produced, 485; greater in pardoning than in succouring Antioch, 486; by pardoning shews the power of Christianity, 486; reasons for his expecting a reward from ty, 487; bidden to consider the Judgment, 488; pardons Antioch, imitating Jesus, 488; proofs of his entire forgiveness, 488.

Thessalonica, massacre at, 383, n.
Thirst gives relish to drink, 352.
Thoughts, bad, how dispelled, 227

Thoughts, bad, how dispelled, 331; government of, 357.

Three Children, delivered by prayer, 367; song of, in use every where and always, 367, n.; a surpassing miracle variously tried upon, 367; the reverse of the idolaters, 368; example of, 376, 385; they and their executioners like gold and hay, 385; freedom and wisdom of, 386; motives in disobeying the king, 387.

obeying the king, 387.
Times, stated, proper for contending with particular bad habits, 370, 388; different things for different times, 401.

Timothy, St., power of, with God, 332; his labours, 333; shis labstinence, 333; spiritual son and yokefellow to St. Paul, 334; resolution in self-discipline, 335.
Title, the most illustrious of St.

Title, the most illustrious of St.
Paul's, 447; of worldly dignity soon perishes, 447; of metropolis taken from Antioch, 455.

Tongue, a snare, 443. Torture, by scourging, 426, 474, n.

Torture, by scourging, 426, 474, n. Translation of Scriptures, source of error in, 405, n.

Transubstantiation, 354, n. Treason, a subject of fear to kings, 460.

Trees, each kind has its excellence, 417; roots of, bitter, 462.

Trials at Antioch, terrors of, 426, 453; painful instance at, 426.

Tribulation of Saints a means of pardon, 340; increased reward, 340, 342; a sign of God's love, 342, temptation by, 342; permitted for good, 344, 365; a seed time; 364; a rain, 365; strengthens the good, 366; not removed until amendment, 366; exalts men, 369; suffering unjustly like to, 385; comes before joy, 449; present, subdued by bright prospect, 450; to the godly like a spark on the ocean, 460.

Tribunals, secular, closed at midday, why, 160; at Antioch, 426.

Truth, shadows of, attained by the heathen, 386, n.; to be applied variously, 435.

Tutors compel to good conduct, 453.

UNBELIEVERS, how affected by the example of Christians, 405, 486.

Union of men for various purposes, 452.

pardoning shews the power of VALENS excommunicated, 481, n. Christianity, 486; reasons for his expecting a reward from God, 487; an example to posteri- Vanity, being subject to, 411. Vengeance on our enemies defeats its own end, 475; God the Judge for, 475.

Venture, by heathens acting upon Prophecy, 377; its lessons, 401. Verses, division of, in Bible among the ancients, 446, n.

Vessels, earthen, 409. Vice, hatred of, while followed, 429. View, from the top of mountains, 441.

Vine, Jerusalem so called, 467. Virgin, the, Mary, invocation of, 389, n.

Virgins, the ten, parable of, 388 dancing, 402; God's disapproval manifested through, 434.

Virtue, like a fine dress, looks best on the person, 380; applauded by its opponents, 387; a blessing, reward aside, 387; some, natural, 429; promoted by teachers, 429; school of, war, 435; bred by fear, 439; fruit of, rooted above, 451; test by perseverance in prosperity, 452; the defence of a people, 456; easier in country life, 465.

Void, meaning in Gen. i., 391, n. Voyage, length of, no help to the merchant, 451.

Vow, of Jephthah, what resulted, 454.

WAR, a religious matter with the Jews, 435; defeat in from sin, 435.

arriors, great, by their presence secure victory, 454.

Washing of hands before taking the Bible, 394; before receiving the sacred elements, 479.

Watchfulness over those in our charge, 354; needed especially after deliverances, 453.

Water, honey to the thirsty, 352; bearing the earth a marvel, 403 fixed in the heavens unnatural, 404; in constant motion, 419; drawing of, 446.

Wicked, often prosper here, 340. Wilkinson on the dancing represented in hieroglyphics, 470, n. Will, rests with, to cure the soul, 397; in man effects what nature does in brutes, 420.

Wings of zeal, 335; of birds, use of, 441; of the flying sickle, 443. Wine, use of, lawful, 333, 348; to be used for health, 335; perfumed, 352.

Wine-skin, 449.

Winter, good of, felt afterwards, Wisdom, force of, upon the wicked,

386; to be alone sought, 463; among the humble, 465. Wives have husbands as instructors, 430; keeping to, 435. Women, their prayers heard, 356; at Antioch, wretchedness during disorder, 427; case of two, 426; delight in their jewels, 449; eured of finery by the thoughts of St. Paul, 450; daneing, 470.

Woods, rot from immersion, 403.

Word of God never fails, 377; sufficient to effect any thing, 410.

Words, exact use of, 332; not necessary for instruction, 402.

Wordsworth's Vernal Ode, 420, n. Works, good, may breed presumption, 337; to be persevered in, 343; needful with fasting, 359; each man's, the measure of his moral nature, 430; bring joy, 451; laid up in heaven, 451. Workshops closed, 439.

World, its wisdom vain, 332; Christians in, are strangers, 457; converted by simple men, 466.

Worm, undying, 473. Wounds of the soul, 438.

Wrath of God pacified by our forgiveness, 473.

Wrestlers, stripped for contest, 339, 357; give advantage to shew their skill, 339, n.; rules for, 357, n.; must strive, 364, n.; tried in the lists, 446.

XENOPHON, on dancing, 470, n.

YOUTH requires discipline, 334.

ZEAL overcomes infirmity, 335; and difficulties, 342; of one reforms many, 344; of inhabitants of Antioch for the faith, 456.

Zedekiah's oath brought ruin, 468; a witness against breaking oaths, 469.

HOMILIES ON THE STATUES.

INDEX OF TEXTS.

PAGE	PAGE	PAGE	PAGE
Gen. i. 1 390, 395	2 Kings xxv. 1-4 468	Ps. ci. 5 360
i. 12, LXX 391	xxv. 4-7 469	cii. 25, 26 410	xl. 42 419
i. 26 362, 391	xxv. 9 468	ciii. 15 335	xlii. 6, 7
ii. 17 76	xxv. 13-20 . 469	civ. 24 408	xlv. 2 390
iii. 8 396	2 Chron. iii. 3 456	cvi. 2 362	lvii. 17 375
iii. 5 413	Neh. ix. 33 458		lviii. 3, 7 · · · 358
iii. 9, LXX 393	Job i. 9, 10 338	cxii. 1 462	lviii. 4, 5 417
iii. 10-12 422	i. 21 . 339, 366, 385,	cxii. 9 451	lix. 2 387
iv. 9 423	442, 461	cxix. I 462	lxiv. 4 372
iv. 13, LXX 423	ii. 3, LXX. , , 388	cxix. 71 337	lxv. 8 467
ix. 2 395	ii. 5, 6 338	cxxiv. 1 397	Jer. iv. 3 364
	ii. 8, 12 344, 366	cxxv. 5 364	v. 22 404
xxii. 12 434	ii. 9, LXX,	cxxx. 3 472	vii. 11 456
xlii. 21 363	ii. 13 344	cxxxvi. 6 403	viii. 7
Ex. ii 342	xxvi. 7 403	cxxxix. 7 377	ix. 17, 18 346
xvi. 33 456	xxxi, 32 442	cxl. 3 420	xiv. 5 358
xx. 10	xxxvii, 15, 412	cxli. 2 370	xiv. 7 458
xx. 13	xxxviii, 4 403	cxliv. 11-15 340	xv. I 430, 473
xxiii. 1, LXX 359	Ps. i. 1	4 114
			xv. 19 451
xxxii. 10 484	i 5 · · · · 397	Prov. v. 3, 4 · · · 435	xviii. 7, 8 377
xxxii. 31, 32 355	ii. 13	v. 15 435	xxiii. 23 410
xxxiv. 28 456	v. 9, LXX 370	v. 19, LXX 435	xxiii. 24 410
Num. xi. 5 384	xiv. 6 369	vi. 2 443	xxviii. Q 414
xii. 14 476	xvi. 2 410	vi. 6 420	xxix. 9 424
xiv. 4, etc 384	xviii. 42 353	vi. 30, 32, LXX. 411	xxxii. 5 469
Deut. vi. 7 388	xix. 1. 401, 409, 419		xxxviii. 17-23 . 468
vi. 11, 12 452	xix. 3 402	xxiv. 17 474	xxxix. 2 468
xii. 31 434	xix. 6 410	xxvii. I 4So	xxxix. 8 468
xxi. 18 422	xxiv. 2 403	xxvii. 7 352	xxxix. 9 468
Josh. i. 5 382	xxvi. 10 370	xxviii. 1 306	lii. 6
Judges xi. 31 434	xxxiii. 12	xix. 12 356	Ezek, ix. 4 462
xi. 39, 40 434	xxxiv. 21 373	Eccles. i. 2. 427, 440, 465	xii, 13 ' 469
ı Sam. ii. 6 412	xxxix. 6 348	i. 9 384	xvii. 2, 3 467
xiv. 26, LXX. 433
	xlv. 1 369, 370	ii. I 342
xiv. 27 434	xlix. 3 369	v. 12 352	xvii. 7, 8 407
xiv. 28 434	xlix. 4 370	vii. 3 440	xvii. 9 · 468
xiv. 36 435	xlix. 6 348	ix. 8, 3 435	xvii. 12 468
xiv. 36, 37 . 436	lvii. 4 369	Isa, i. 3 420	xvii. 14 468
xiv. 38 436	lviii. 4 370	i. 30 345	xvii. 16-20 468
xiv. 40, LXX. 436		vi. 3 394	xviii. 32 462
xiv. 42, 43 . 436	lxxviii. 15 396	x. 22 457	xxviii. o 414
xiv. 44 436	lxxviii. 24 410		Dan, iii, 2 1 111
xiv. 45 436	lxxviii. 34 452	xiv. 11 414	iii. 4, 6 368
1 Kings iv. 20 456	lxxx. 16, LXX 352	xiv. 13, 14 414	iii. 12 · · · 368
xiv. 24, LXX. 433	lxxxi. 16, LXX. 352	xxii. 4 461	iii. 15 386
xviii. 17, 18. 396	xciv. 12 462	xxvi. 12, LXX 387	iii. 17 342
xx. 27 393	xciv. 19 431	xxx. 1 356	iii. 18 368
2 Kings i. 2 353		xl. 2 391	iii. 25 367
	1 403		-5

	1
PAGE	PAGE	PAGE	2100
Dan, iii. 26 386	Matt. vii. 1 361		Col w Y
			Gal. v. 15 359
iii. 28 387	vii. 12 428	ii. 10 423	vi. 14 334, 441
viii. 10 386	vii. 14 384	ii. 12 423	vi. 17 443
Hos. viii. 4 356	vii. 24-27 365	ii. 14, 15 423	Ephes. iii. 17 466
ix. 10 467	vii. 26, 27 446	ii. 16 423	iii. 20 482
xiii. 14 390	ix. 16, 17 449
		v. 3. 449, 450, 463	iv. I 448
Joel i. 3 489	x. 16 369, 420	v. 3, 4 · · · 366	iv. 26 476
i. 17 358	x. 28 385	v. 3-5 · · · 340	iv. 29 442
ii. 13 364	x. 38 376	viii. 18 340	v. 4 442
ii. 16 358	xv. 17, 18 . , 361	viii. 2I 4II	vi. 12 357
Amos v. 8 412	xviii. 12, 13 . 430	viii. 22, 23 . 372
vi. 6 462
	xviii. 24, 28 . 478	viii. 28 452	i. 14 448
vii. 14 376	xviii. 32, 33 · 355	ix. 2 461	i. 29 449
viii. 9 346	xix, 16 349	ix. 27 457	ii. 19 333
Jonah i. 5 480	xix. 21 349	xii. 7 420	ii. 22 334
_ ii. 4 480	xxiii. 37 457	xii. 14 384	ii. 25 409
iii 376	xxv. 10 388
			iv. 4 458, 459
iii. 7 358	xxv. 2I 425	xiii. I 382	Col. i. I 333
iii. 9 377	xxv. 26, 27 425	I Cor. ii. 9 348, 372	i. 24 · · · 449, 463
iii. 10 358, 480	xxv. 35 388	ii. 15 407	iii. I 416
Micah i. 4 462	Mark ii. 21 449	iii. 6 357	iii. 2 441
Zech, v. 1, 2			CTO 1
v. I, 4 443	Luke v. 36 441	iv. 17 · · . 333	ii. 14 · . 339
vii. 10, LXX. 473	vi. 23 · · · 339	vi. I 445	ii. 18 342
viii. 17 473	xi. 24, 26 464	ix. 21 448	v. 11 347
Tobit iv. 16 428	xi. 32 480	ix. 26 358	v. 18 452
Wisd. vii. 1 340	xii. 33 451	ix. 27 334	2 Thess. iii. 10 420
xiii. 5 401	xvi. 25 340, 385	х. 13 382	I Tim. i. 9 381, 392
Ecclus. ii. 3 340	xviii. 12 357	xi. 6 373	i. 12, 13 · · 418
ii. 4, 5 461	xxiii. 34 488	xi. 7 362	i. 13 373
iii. 21-23 421	John vii. 11 393	xi. 31, 32 376	ii. 7 332
iv. 3 385	x. 11 354	xii. 21 417	v. 6 373, 442
		xiv. 20 374	v. 22 331
iv. 13 438, 440	xvi. 22 451	xv. 31 385	v. 23 331, 409
ix. 20 442	xviii. I 413	xv. 32 339	vi. 7 385
xi. 2, 3 · . 458	Acts iii. 12 338	xv. 38 407	vi. 8 460
xiii. 15 429	v. 15 367	xvi. 10 334	vi. 17 344, 348, 351
xiv. 2 462
xvii. 31 410	xi. 26 355, 456	2 Cor. i. I 333	ii. 9 448, 450
xviii. 25 418	xi. 28, 29 456	i. 8, 9 431	ii. 26 333
xix. 10 360	xiv. 11 409	iv. 7 409	iv. 20 409
xxiii. 10 438	xvi. 22 451	iv. 17, 18 450	Philem. i 445, 447
xliv. 17 387	xvi. 24 · · · 337	vi. 14, 15 417	Heb. ix. 4 450
Matt. v. 3-10 462	xvii. 25 410	vi. 19 412
v. 11, 12 . 339, 461	xix. 12 367	vii. 10 375, 462	xii. 6 340
v. 16 405	xxvi. 28 448, 449	xi. 30 449	xii. 9 392
v. 23, 24 . 476, 478	xxvi. 29 448	xi. 23, 25 449	xiii. 3 458
v. 28 443	xxviii. 20 448	xii. 2, 4 · · 337	xiii. 5 382
110	Rom. i. 13 401	xii. 6 338, 409	Jas. ii. 18 373
v. 36 394	i. 20. 401, 411, 419	xii. 7 337	v. 17 · · · 340
v. 45 419	i. 21, 22 409	xii. 8, 9 337	v. 20 471
vi. 12 355, 477, 488	i. 32 424	xii. 9, 10 449	1 Pet. ii. 19, 20 385
vi. 14 478	ii. 3 424	xii. 21 359	iv. 8 477
vi. 19 451	ii. 4 424	Gal. iii. 24 392	477
vi. 26 420	ii. 5, 6 424	iv. 24 394

DATE DUE

OCT 14'64
NOV 5'64

PRINTED IN CANADA BY RYERSON PRESS

A128 SCHAFF BR 60 A select library of the Nicene and post-Nicene fathers...

1st series. v.9. .S63 ISSUED TO BR 60 .S63 v. 9

