

THEOLOGICAL PROPÆDEUTIC

A GENERAL INTRODUCTION TO THE

STUDY OF THEOLOGY

EXEGETICAL, HISTORICAL, SYSTEMATIC, AND PRACTICAL

INCLUDING

ENCYCLOPÆDIA, METHODOLOGY, AND BIBLIOGRAPHY

A MANUAL FOR STUDENTS

BY

PHILIP SCHAFF, D.D., LL.D.

PROFESSOR OF CHURCH HISTORY IN THE UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
NEW YORK

PART II.

NEW YORK

CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS

1893

Copyright, 1892,
By THE CHRISTIAN LITERATURE Co.

Copyright, 1893,
By PHILIP SCHAFF.

1902
1893

The Carlton Press
171, 173 Macdougall Street, New York

BOOK III.

HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER	PAGE
143. General Conception of Historical Theology	234
144. Biblical and Ecclesiastical History	235
145. Agents of History	236
146. Historical Development	239
147. Central Position of Christ in History	241
148. Auxiliary Sciences: Ecclesiastical Philology, Geography, Chronology, Diplomatic, Secular History	241
149. Branches of Church History	244
150. History of Missions	244
151. History of Persecutions	245
152. History of Religious Liberty	246
153. History of Organization	246
154. History of Councils	247
155. History of Worship	248
156. History of Christian Life	248
157. History of Doctrines and Dogmas	249
158. Sources of Church History	251
159. The Written Sources	251
160. The Unwritten Sources	253
161. Duty of the Historian	254
162. The Mastery of the Sources	255
163. Artistic Composition	256
164. The Christian Spirit	257
165. Uses of Church History	258
166. Periods and Epochs	259
167. Periods of Biblical History	260
168. Periods of Christian Church History	260
169. History of Israel	264
170. History of Biblical Times	267
171. The Life of Christ	268
172. Literature on the Life of Christ	270
173. The Apostolic Age	272
174. Patrology and Patristic	273
175. Patristic Literature	276
176. Christian Archeology	280
177. The Reformation	280
178. American Church History.—Roman Catholic America	285
179. Church History of the United States	289
180. Ecclesiastical Monography	294
181. Literature of General Church History	296
182. Historians before the Reformation	297
183. Historians of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries	298

CHAPTER	PAGE
184. Historians of the Eighteenth Century	300
185. Historians of the Nineteenth Century	301
186. Manuals, Text-books, and Tables of General Church History....	304
187. Hints for the Study of Church History	305

BOOK IV.

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY.

188. General Conception.....	307
189. Departments of Systematic Theology	307

FIRST SECTION: APOLOGETIC.

190. Idea and Aim of Apologetic	309
191. Necessity of Apologetic.....	310
192. Limits of Apologetic	311
193. Value and Use of Apologetic	312
194. Epochs of Apologetic	313
195. Literature of Apologetic	314

SECOND SECTION: BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

196. Nature and Object of Biblical Theology	316
197. Connection of Biblical Theology with other Branches	317
198. Importance of Biblical Theology.....	318
199. Division and Method.....	319
200. The Old and New Testaments	320
201. Theology of the Old Testament.....	321
202. Theology of the New Testament: The Teaching of Jesus.....	325
203. The Teaching of the Apostles	327
204. History of Biblical Theology	328
205. Literature of Biblical Theology.....	330

THIRD SECTION: DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.

206. Definition and Contents of Dogmatic Theology.....	333
207. The Sources of Dogmatic Theology	334
208. Biblical Dogmatic	335
209. Confessional or Churchly Dogmatic	336
210. Dogmatic Theology of the Greek Catholic Church	337
211. Dogmatic Theology of the Roman Catholic Church	338
212. Dogmatic Theology of the Lutheran Church	339
213. Dogmatic Theology of the Reformed and Calvinistic Churches ..	342
214. Dogmatic Theology of the Anglican Church	344
215. Arminian and Methodist Theology.....	346

CONTENTS.

xi

CHAPTER	PAGE
216. Socinian and Unitarian Theology.....	348
217. Rationalistic Theology.....	350
218. Evangelical Union Theology.....	352
219. The Theology of Ritschl.....	355
220. Speculative and Critical Dogmatic.....	360
221. Christocentric Theology.....	362
222. History of Dogmatic Theology.—The Patristic Period.....	364
223. The Scholastic Period.....	368
224. The Theology of the Reformation.....	371
225. American Theology.....	374
226. Calvinistic Theology in America.....	375
227. New England Theology.....	377
228. Channing and Bushnell.....	386
229. Presbyterian Theology.....	388
230. German Theology in America.....	402

FOURTH SECTION: SYMBOLIC, POLEMIC, AND IRENIC.

231. Symbols of Faith, or Creeds and Confessions.....	406
232. Classification of Creeds.....	408
233. Symbolic.....	410
234. Historical Symbolic.....	411
235. Polemical Symbolic.....	411
236. Irenic.....	412
237. Method and Arrangement.....	416
238. History of Symbolic.....	417
239. Symbolical Literature.....	419

FIFTH SECTION: ETHIC.

240. Christian Ethic.....	421
241. Ethic and Dogmatic.....	422
242. Philosophical and Christian Ethic.....	423
243. Pagan and Christian Morality.....	424
244. Ascetic and Evangelical Morality.....	426
245. History of Christian Ethic.....	428
246. Medieval Morals.....	434
247. History of Protestant Ethic.....	436
248. Literature on Ethic.....	440
249. Casuistic.....	441
250. Sociology.....	442

SIXTH SECTION: GEOGRAPHY AND STATISTIC.

251. Ecclesiastical Geography and Statistic.....	444
252. Material for Statistic.....	445
253. Comparative Statistic.—Lessons of Statistic.....	446

BOOK V.

PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER	PAGE
254. General Conception of Practical Theology	448
255. Branches of Practical Theology	449
256. History and Literature of Practical Theology	451
257. Theory of the Christian Ministry	454
258. Different Conceptions of the Ministry	454
259. Ecclesiology	455
260. Church Law	457
261. Collections and Manuals of Church Law	461
262. Church Polity	463
263. Literature on Church Polity	467
264. Church and State	467
265. Toleration and Liberty	469
266. Homiletic or Kerycetic	472
267. Different Kinds of Preaching	474
268. Homiletic Hints	475
269. History of the Pulpit to the Time of the Reformation	477
270. The Protestant Pulpit on the Continent	483
271. The English Pulpit	488
272. The American Pulpit	496
273. Homiletical Literature	499
274. Catechetic	500
275. Typical Catechisms	502
276. Catechetical Literature	504
277. The American Sunday-School	505
278. Poimenic or Pastoral Theology	507
279. Liturgic	508
280. Liturgical Literature	508
281. Worship and Art	509
282. Hymnology	510
283. History of Hymnody	511
284. Hymnological Literature	515
285. Evangelistic	517
286. Epochs of Missions	518
287. Missionary Literature	522
TOPICAL INDEX	525
INDEX OF AUTHORS	532
BIBLIOGRAPHY	537

BOOK III.
HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.

BOOK III.

HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER CXLIII.

GENERAL CONCEPTION OF HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.

For a fuller introduction to Church History see SCHAFF: History of the Apostolic Church (1853), pp. 1-134, and Church History (1889), 3d revision, vol. I. pp. 1-55. C. DE SMEDT (Rom. Cath.): Introductio generalis ad historiam ecclesiasticam critice tractandam. Gandavi (Ghent), 1876 (pp. 533). JOS. NIRSCHL (Rom. Cath.): Propädeutik der Kirchengeschichte, Mainz, 1888 (pp. 352). For a list of works on introduction to history and church history see ED. BRATKE: Wegweiser zur Quellen—und Litteraturkunde der Kirchengeschichte, Gotha, 1890, pp. 86-89.

HISTORICAL THEOLOGY, or CHURCH HISTORY, in the widest sense of the term, exhibits the rise and progress of the kingdom of God from the beginning to the present time.*

We must distinguish between objective and subjective history. They differ as a man differs from his portrait. Objective history is history itself as it occurs. Subjective history is the representation or reproduction of it by the historian. The value of subjective history depends on the degree of its faithfulness to objective history. Subjective history is not the light itself, but a witness to the light. "Historia est testis veritatis."

Church History is the connecting link between Exegetical

* History from ιστορία (ιστορέω, to inquire into, to examine, to know by inquiry, to narrate), means research, knowledge (ἡ περὶ φύσεως ἱστ., ἡ περὶ τὰ ζῶα ἱστ.), also account, narrative; ἱστορικός, historical; ἱστοριογράφω, to write history; ἱστοριογραφία, historiography; ἱστοριογράφος, historian, writer of history. The Greek terms convey the subjective idea of history. The German word Geschichte, from geschehen, to happen, to occur, suggests the objective idea, the sum of what has happened. The writing of history is essential to the preservation of history itself in the memory of man. Mere oral tradition could not secure its integrity and identity. I prefer the term church history (Kirchengeschichte) to the longer and Latinized term ecclesiastical history.

and Systematic theology. It embraces all that is of permanent interest in the past fortunes of Christendom. But in a wider sense it covers also the whole extent of exegesis and runs parallel with it. The revelation of God in the Bible, which is the subject of exegesis, has its own history, and admits of a historical as well as an exegetical treatment. The exegete is the miner who brings to light the Scripture facts and Scripture truths; the historian is the manufacturer or artist who works the gold and gives it shape and form for actual use. Moreover, exegesis itself and all other departments of theology have their history and are constantly furnishing contributions to its material.

Historical Theology is by far the most extensive and copious part of sacred learning, and supplies material to all other departments. If exegesis is the root, church history is the main trunk. We are connected with the Bible through the intervening links of the past and all its educational influences, and cannot safely disregard the wisdom and experience of ages. Christ has never forsaken his Church, nor left himself without witnesses. If our fathers and forefathers have labored in vain, we who are of the same flesh and blood, have a poor prospect of better success.

Church history is a running commentary on Christ's twin parables of the mustard seed and the leaven (Matt. 13: 31-33), and of his parting promise to his disciples, "Behold, I am with you all the days even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28: 20).

CHAPTER CXLIV.

BIBLICAL AND ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Church History in the widest sense embraces both biblical and ecclesiastical history: it begins with the creation and will end with the final judgment.

Biblical History runs parallel with the Bible. It follows the divine revelation and the growth of the kingdom of God in the Jewish dispensation, the life of Christ and the founding of the Christian Church by the Apostles to the close of the first century.

Ecclesiastical History or Church History in the narrower sense is a history of Christianity from the advent of Christ to the present time. Some date it from the day of Pentecost, when the Christian Church first appeared as a distinct and separate organization. But the miracle of Pentecost has no meaning without the preceding miracle of the resurrection and ascension, which is the consummation of the life of the Founder of Christianity.

The relative goal of history is the time of the historian, the absolute goal is the end of time and the beginning of eternity. The historian is a retrospective prophet, but the future is only known to God.

CHAPTER CXLV.

AGENTS OF HISTORY.

History in general is the product of divine, human, and satanic agencies.

1. On the part of God, history is his revelation in time, as nature is his revelation in space. It is his epos. It gradually unfolds an eternal plan of wisdom and goodness for the redemption of the human race and the triumph of his kingdom. Man ought to do all for the glory of God; God does all for the good of man. As nature reveals God's power and wisdom, so history reveals his justice and mercy.

The recognition of God in history is the first principle of all sound philosophy of history. God is no God unless he is almighty, omniscient and omnipresent. "In him we live, and move, and have our being" (Acts 17: 28). He is immanent as well as transcendent in his relation to the world. He made it and he upholds it continually by the all-pervading presence of his power. He rules and overrules even the sins and follies of man for his own glory and the good of his people. "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and not one of them shall fall on the ground without your Father: but the very hairs of your head are all numbered" (Matt. 10: 29, 30). "We know that to them that love God, all things work together for good" (Rom. 8: 29).

This is the cheering and encouraging view of history. It is illustrated on every page. He who denies the hand of Providence in the affairs of the world and the church is intellectually or spiritually blind. The historian has good reason to be an optimist, notwithstanding all the dark and dismal chapters in history.

Atheism denies, Deism ignores, the presence of God in history. Both resolve it into an aimless and hopeless play of human passions. But the atheist is simply a fool (Ps. 14 : 1), and the deist belittles God by making him a mere watchmaker or an idle spectator of the world he has made, and the events which come to pass.

"What were a God who only from without Upon his finger whirled the universe about?
'Tis his, within himself to move the creature,
Nature in him to warm, himself in nature;
So that what in him lives, and moves, and is,
Shall ever feel the living breath of his."

2. On the part of man, history is the biography of the human race. It is the development of all his physical, intellectual and moral faculties, the actualization of his dominion over nature, and the progress and triumph of civilization. Man is a free and responsible agent who must render an account for the part he acts in his public and private life.

God limits the exercise of his own sovereignty to give fair play to human freedom, and yet overrules it for his own holy purposes. "Man proposes, God disposes." All sins and errors in the world must be traced to man's agency, but God in his wisdom brings good out of evil; he makes the fall of Adam the occasion for the plan of redemption, the treason of Judas a means to the crucifixion and the consequent salvation. "He hath shut up all unto disobedience, that he might have mercy upon all. . . . For of him, and through him, and unto him are all things" (Rom. 11 : 32, 36 ; Gal. 3 : 22).

The pantheistic and fatalistic view of history is the direct opposite of the atheistic and deistic view. It is destructive of the freedom and responsibility of man, and substitutes a dark fate or iron necessity for Providence and paternal government. It turns history into a Moloch who devours his own children. It begins and ends in darkness.

3. Satan represents the preternatural or subnatural agency of history, in direct opposition, yet in final subserviency, to the supernatural and providential agency of God. The kingdom of darkness, as well as the kingdom of light, is organized under one head. Otherwise it would fall to pieces; for "a house divided against itself cannot stand." Satan is the personification of all evil influences in the world. He is the everlasting denier, a part of that "power which ever wills the bad and ever works the good." He is the tempter and seducer of the human race and the director-in-chief of all the movements which counteract the plan of redemption and tend to the ruin of man. He brought about the original fall; he controlled Cain, and corrupted the generation before the Flood; he figured in the trial of Job; he attempted to seduce Christ into an abuse of his Messianic powers; he controlled the demoniacal possessions; he nursed the opposition of the Jewish hierarchy to Christ and inspired their bloody counsel as well as the treason of Judas; he is the fiend that scatters tares among the wheat; he has much to do with heresies and schisms, with false doctrines and bad practices, with uncharitable orthodoxy, hypocrisy and spiritual tyranny; he stirs up religious intolerance and persecution; he erects his temples and schools in all Christian lands.

"Wherever God erects a house of prayer,
The devil always builds a chapel there."

Satan is most dangerous in the garb of an angel of light. He finds his way into pews and pulpits, prayer-meetings, synods, general assemblies, and œcumenical councils. More than once he has occupied the chair of St. Peter in Rome and changed the vicar of Christ into an Antichrist. He can speak the language of orthodoxy and piety as well as of heresy and blasphemy. He quotes the Scriptures when it suits his purpose. He is utterly unscrupulous in the use of means, and succeeds best where he is least suspected, and where even his existence is denied.

There are Satanic depths in many a bold, bad man, and in many dark chapters in history, both secular and religious. We may deny the one devil, but we cannot deny the many devils in human shape.*

The incessant activity of Satan and his host imparts a fearful, tragic interest to history, covers it with crime and blood, and turns it into a scene of fierce conflict of light with the powers of darkness.

* As Goethe says of infidels:

"Den Bösen sind sie los, Die Bösen sind geblieben."

4. Relation of these agencies to each other. God rules supreme; he sets all the powers of history in motion; he preserves and directs them, and he will stand at last on the dust as the Judge of all men and angels, giving to every one his due.

Man is the battle-ground of God and Satan. He is under the power of the devil as far as he sins and disbelieves; he is under the power of God as far as he acts rightly and obeys his will. He is to be delivered from the power of the prince of darkness and to become a free child of God and follower of Christ; but his life is a constant conflict, and he daily prays: "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from the evil one."*

Satan has more influence in the world than any man or combination of men, and will keep and exercise it till the judgment-day, but he is again and again defeated by God, and will at last be completely and finally overthrown, that God may be all in all.

In the prologue to the wonderful book of Job, God and Satan appear as the supernatural movers of the history of man on earth, and in the end Satan is defeated, and Job comes out of his trial purified and perfected. Goethe reproduces the same idea in the prologue to the tragedy of Faust.

CHAPTER CXLVI.

HISTORICAL DEVELOPMENT.

PHILIP SCHAFF: What is Church History? A Vindication of the Idea of Historical Development, Philadelphia, 1846.—JOHN HENRY (afterwards Cardinal) NEWMAN: Development of Christian Doctrine, London and New York, 1845.—LYMAN ABBOTT: The Evolution of Christianity, Boston, 1892.

History is a constant motion and progress, but with many obstructions, retrogressions and diseases caused by sin and error. It progresses, like a sailing-vessel, not in a straight but in a zig-zag line on its course to the harbor. Whatever is living is also moving and growing. The dead only is done. Secular history is the progressive development of the idea of humanity, with its "struggle for existence and survival of the fittest"; ecclesiastical history is the progressive development of the idea of Christianity or the history of the origin, growth and triumph of the kingdom of God.

* "Something in us near to hell; something strangely near to God. . . . In our best estate and in our purest moments there is a something of the Devil in us which, if it could be known, would make men shrink from us." F. W. ROBERTSON on 51st Psalm.

Revelation is gradual and progressive, adapted to the capacity of man. It culminates in Christ.

Humanity and the Church as a whole are subject to the same laws of growth with its attendant obstructions and diseases, as the individual man and the individual Christian. Every member of the body and every faculty of the soul exist at first in a potential state and attain their full proportions only by degrees. The believer, too, like Christ himself (Luke 2 : 52 ; Heb. 5 : 8), has to pass through the different stages of life to perfect manhood in Christ (Eph. 2 : 20 ; 3 : 18, 19 ; 4 : 12, 13 ; 1 Pet. 2 : 5). Regeneration by the Spirit is the beginning, the resurrection of the body is the end, of this spiritual growth. So the Church at large goes through a process of outward expansion and inward consolidation till it shall cover the earth and be perfected in unity and holiness.

The law of progress for his kingdom is laid down by our Saviour in the twin parables of the mustard seed and the leaven (Matt. 13 : 31, 32) : the one illustrates chiefly the external growth ; the other, the internal mission of the Church in pervading, transforming and sanctifying humanity.

The true theory of development is that of a constant growth of the Church in Christ the head, or a progressive understanding and application of Christianity, until Christ shall be all in all. The end will only be the complete unfolding of the beginning. All other theories of development which teach a progress of humanity beyond Christ and beyond Christianity are false and pernicious. Christ is the beginning, the middle, and the end of church history.

False theories of development :

1. The Roman Catholic theory : an accumulation of dogmas and institutions without and beyond the Scriptures, under the guidance of an infallible pope. This leaves no room for reformation and revolution, and would exclude the Greek and the Protestant Churches.

Cardinal Newman's essay on Development shows the logical process of transition from Anglo-Catholicism to Romanism by overleaping the Reformation and the development of Protestantism, which fills two-thirds of modern history.

2. The Rationalistic theory : a diminution and destruction of dogmas and institutions which interfere with the supremacy of reason. This negative theory would make the immense labor of centuries as useless as a child's play.

The true theory of development must be both conservative and progressive, and provide for what is good and valuable in all ages and divisions of Christendom,—Greek, Latin and Protestant, ancient, mediæval and modern. No labor in the Lord can ever be lost.

The modern scientific theory of evolution in nature corresponds to the theory of development in history, which was previously discovered by historians and philosophers (like Hegel). But evolution in nature presupposes a creative beginning and God's continued omnipresence and immanence. In the same way, development in history implies a supreme intelligence which endowed man with reason and will, set history in motion and directs it by an omnipotent will. Christ founded the Church, is ever present with it, and his teaching and example are the inspiring force in all true moral and spiritual progress.

CHAPTER CXLVII.

CENTRAL POSITION OF CHRIST IN HISTORY.

Jesus Christ, the God-Man and Saviour of the world, is the center and turning-point of history, and the key which unlocks its mysteries. All history before him was a preparation for his coming, all history after him is the execution of his work.

He appeared in the fullness of the time (Mark 1:15; Gal. 4:4), when everything was ripe for him, and from his birth we justly date our chronology. He is "the desire of all nations." He came "to fulfill the law and the prophets," and all the nobler aspirations and unconscious prophecies of the ancient world.

"All things were created by him, and for him" (Col. 1:16). He is the prophet, priest and king of redeemed humanity. All events must directly or indirectly, positively or negatively, nearly or remotely, advance his kingdom, until he shall reign king of nations as he now rules king of saints in his Church. The great empires of the world are rising and passing away one by one, but his kingdom is constantly advancing and will last forever.

CHAPTER CXLVIII.

AUXILIARY SCIENCES: ECCLESIASTICAL PHILOLOGY, GEOGRAPHY, CHRONOLOGY, DIPLOMATICS, SECULAR HISTORY.

Historical Theology presupposes several preparatory and auxiliary sciences.

I. Ecclesiastical PHILOLOGY. This embraces the knowledge of the languages in which the sources of Church history are written, namely, the Greek and Latin for ancient, the Latin for mediæval, the German, French, English and other European languages for modern times.

The Greek is the official language of the Greek Church, and was used by the apostles and the Eastern Fathers.

The Latin became an ecclesiastical language with Tertullian at the end of the second century, and continues to be the official language of the Roman Church to this day. It was also used largely by the Reformers (Melancthon, Zwingli, Calvin, etc.) and the older Protestant divines down to the end of the seventeenth century. Luther, Cranmer and Knox preferred their vernacular. The Latin is still employed in academic dissertations and festivities.

Modern Church history is mostly written in the popular languages which were developed in the Middle Ages under the influence of Christianity and rose to independence with the Renaissance and the Reformation. Dante exerted a creative influence upon the Italian, Wiclif and Chaucer upon the English, Luther upon the German, Calvin upon the French, language and literature. The German, French, and English languages are now the chief organs of the intellectual and practical activity of Christendom. They are emphatically the languages of religion and civilization. They occupy the position of the Hebrew, Greek and Latin in the ancient Roman empire. No student should neglect to master them sufficiently to use the ever-growing treasures of their literature.

II. Ecclesiastical GEOGRAPHY. It is the basis of history. The use of maps is indispensable for orientation. There is a close correspondence between nations and countries. The East has shaped the Greek; the South, the Latin; the North and West, the Protestant Churches. The organization of the Church—the division into dioceses, bishoprics, parishes, presbyteries, synods, etc.—is usually adapted to the existing political divisions. The territory of ancient Church history is that of the Roman empire, around the Mediterranean Sea. The geography of the middle ages extends farther north and west. The geography of modern history takes in the Western Continent and Australia, and the missionary fields in Asia and Africa.

A comparative historical geography would show the extent of Christianity and the different religions with which it came in contact,—Judaism, Mohammedanism and heathenism.

III. Ecclesiastical CHRONOLOGY. This includes the various systems of determining the dates of events, from the creation, from the year of Rome, from the birth of Christ, from the flight of Mohammed, etc.

IV. Ecclesiastical DIPLOMATICS is the science of diplomas or official documents, such as bulls, briefs, statutes, patents, etc., and teaches their value and right use. Special departments are: Palæography, the science of ancient writings and manuscripts of the Bible, etc.; Sphragistics, the science of seals; Numismatics, of coins; Heraldics, of weapons.

V. Secular History or the GENERAL HISTORY of the world. It is so intimately interwoven with Church History that the one cannot be understood without the other. In the widest sense the former includes the latter as its most important department. The Church is in the world and meets it at every point in friendly or hostile contact. During the middle ages, church and state were united. The history of the papacy is also a history of the German empire, and vice versâ. This union has prevailed under a different form in the history of Europe down to this day, and in America during the colonial period. But even where church and state are separated, as in the United States, they act and react upon each other, and religion enters into all the ramifications of national and social life.

LITERATURE.

I. Helps for Ecclesiastical Greek and Latin: SUICER and DU FRÈSNE, see Chapter LXXX.—KOFFMANN: Geschichte des Kirchenlateins, Breslau, 1879 sqq.—DIEZ: Etymologisches Wörterbuch der roman. Sprachen, Bonn, 4th ed. 1878.

II. The historical atlases of WILTSCH, W. SMITH, SPRUNER, DROYSSEN, FREEMAN, LABBERTON, OORT (Groningen, 1884), WERNER (Freiburg i. B., 1888), GRUNDEMANN: Missionsatlas (Gotha, 1867-70).

III. IDELER: Lehrbuch der Chronologie, Berlin, 1831.—PIPER: Kirchenrechnung, Berlin, 1841.—BRINKMEIER: Handbuch der histor. Chronologie, Leipzig, 2d. ed. 1882.—BROCKMANN: System der Chronologie, Stuttgart, 1883.

IV. MABILLON: De re diplomatica, Paris, 1681, and later edd.—GARDT-HAUSEN: Griech. Palæographie, Leipzig, 2d ed. 1877.—WATTENBACH: Das Schriftwesen im Mittelalter, Leipzig, 2d. ed. 1877.—FICKER: Beiträge zur Urkundenlehre, Innsbruck, 1877, 2 vols.

V. Works on general history are too numerous to be mentioned. Among brief compends, KARL PLOETZ (Berlin, 8th ed. 1884) and GEO. P. FISHER (Outlines of Universal History, New York, 1885, etc., with good maps) are very useful.

CHAPTER CXLIX.

BRANCHES OF CHURCH HISTORY.

The kingdom of God is as comprehensive as humanity. It embodies the redemption, regeneration and sanctification of the race. It aims to consecrate the individual, the family, the state and all the ramifications of society. It penetrates science, art, literature, and makes them subservient to the glory of God till he be all in all. It is the divine leaven which gradually pervades the whole lump of humanity. This is a slow but sure process, passing through many obstructions and apparent defeats, but approaching ever nearer its final goal. A thousand years for God are as one day.

Church history has as many departments as human life and society. The principal topics are: Missions and Persecutions (expansion and contraction); Toleration and Freedom; Organization (Church Polity and Discipline); Worship (including Rites and Ceremonies); Christian Life and Activity; Theology and Dogma.

These departments have an organic relation to each other, and form one living whole. Each period is entitled to a peculiar arrangement, according to its character. The number, order and extent of the different divisions must be determined by their relative prominence and importance at a given time.

CHAPTER CL.

HISTORY OF MISSIONS.

The history of MISSIONS is a history of the extension of Christianity throughout the world. It will go on till the whole race is Christianized.

There are three great missionary ages: the planting of the Church among the Jews, Greeks and Romans by the apostles; the conversion of the barbarians of Europe in the middle ages; the modern missions in all parts of the globe looking to the conquest of all nations to Christ.

1. Foreign Missions, or the spread of the Christian religion among non-Christian nations, civilized, semi-civilized, and barbarian. Heathen Missions, Jewish Missions, Mohammedan Missions (the last still in the future).

2. Domestic Missions follow the tide of emigration to new countries and settlements under the government of Christian nations (as the British Provinces, the United States and Territories, the Asiatic possessions of Russia, the European possessions in Africa).

3. Inner Missions and City Missions, or the revival of vital Christianity in dead or indifferent sections of the Church, especially among the neglected and worse than heathenish populations of large cities, as London, Paris, Berlin, New York.

The Literature on missions is immense, especially in the English language. The most complete list is by Rev. SAMUEL M. JACKSON in The Encyclopædia of Missions, ed. by E. M. Bliss, New York, 1891, vol. I. pp. 575-661.

CHAPTER CLI.

HISTORY OF PERSECUTIONS.

The history of PERSECUTIONS in the widest sense embraces all forms of persecution, from without and from within, of Christians by non-Christians, of Christians by Christians, of heretical Christians by orthodox Christians, and vice versâ, of churches against sects, of state-churches against dissenters and non-conformists, of the Church by the State, of Jews by Christians. There is bloody and unbloody persecution. The former has nearly ceased, the latter still continues and will continue to the end of time.

1. Foreign persecution of the Church by antagonistic religions. Jewish persecution culminated in the crucifixion of the Messiah, expelled the apostles from the synagogue and lasted till the destruction of Jerusalem. Then followed the persecution of the Jews by the Christians down to the present time. Heathen persecution continued for three hundred years and ended in the conversion of the Roman empire. Mohammedan persecution began with the conquest of the Holy Land and reached its climax in the conquest of Constantinople (1453).

2. Domestic persecution of Christians against Christians. Romanists persecuted Protestants, Protestants persecuted Romanists, both persecuted heretics and dissenters. The difference is only one of degree and extent. All Christian sects have persecuted except those which never had a chance. For persecution comes from human nature, its selfishness, narrowness and love of power, and from the alliance of priest-craft and state-craft, or religion with politics. But the Quakers and the Baptists, to their great credit, have made liberty of conscience an article of their creed.

LITERATURE: Closely connected with the Literature on missions. RUINART: Acta Martyrum. The Acta Sanctorum.—JOHN FOXE: Book of Martyrs.—UHLHORN: Kampf des Christenthums mit dem Heidenthum (translated by Smyth and Ropes, New York, 1879).

CHAPTER CLII.

HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

The history of persecution is at the same time a history of RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. The blood of patriots is the seed of civil liberty; the blood of martyrs is the seed of religious liberty. The end of persecution is toleration, and the end of toleration is freedom. Religious freedom is the highest form of freedom; it is a gift of God and an inalienable right of man who is made in the image of God.

This principle is now recognized, in theory at least, by the most enlightened nations, and is becoming more and more a fundamental element of modern civilization and Christianity. "For freedom did Christ set us free" (Gal. 5: 1).

PHILIP SCHAFF: The Progress of Religious Freedom, as shown in the History of Toleration Acts, New York (Scribners), 1889.

CHAPTER CLIII.

HISTORY OF ORGANIZATION.

The history of ORGANIZATION implies the government and discipline of the Church. Christ founded a visible Church (Matt. 16: 18), appointed officers, and instituted the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper, to be perpetually observed by his followers.

On this foundation have been built, in the course of time, various forms of church polity: the Apostolic, the Primitive Episcopal, the Metropolitan and Patriarchal, the Papal, the Anglican, the Presbyterian, the Independent, the Methodist Episcopal, etc.

The relation of church and state has passed through several distinct phases: (1) hostile separation (in the ante-Nicene age); (2) union, (a) the church ruling the state: hierarchy or theocracy (as in the mediæval papacy), (b) the state ruling the church: caesaropapacy or Erastianism (as in the Byzantine empire, the Protestant state-churches, and in Russia); (3) friendly separation and independence (as in the United States of America).

LITERATURE: PLANCK: Geschichte der christlich-kirchlichen Gesellschaftsverfassung (1803-5), 5 vols.—ROTHE: Anfänge der christlichen Kirche und ihrer Verfassung (1837).—RITSCHL: Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche (1887).—HATCH: The Growth of Church Institutions (1887).

The history of the papacy, which is in fact a history of Latin Christianity, has been especially treated in whole or in part by PLATINA, PAGI, BOWER, PLANCK, SPITTLER, BAXMANN, WATTENBACH, GREENWOOD, RANKE, CREIGHTON, PASTOR, and others. Monographs on single popes: LAU, and BARMY on Gregory I.; VOIGT on Gregory VII.; REUTER on Alexander III.; HURTER on Innocent III.; DRUMANN on Boniface VIII.; ROSCOE on Leo X., etc.

CHAPTER CLIV.

HISTORY OF COUNCILS.

The history of COUNCILS, or deliberative church assemblies, from the apostolic conference at Jerusalem (A.D. 50) to modern times, is to a large extent a history of Christian doctrine and discipline.

The most prominent and influential councils are the œcumenical councils, from that of Nicæa (325) to that of the Vatican (1870). They formulated the dogmas and canons of the Greek and Latin Churches.

The most important synods of the Reformed Church are the Synod of Dort (1620), and the Westminster Assembly (1647), which framed Confessions of Faith, and Directories of Worship and Discipline.

The Presbyterian Churches have regular Synods and General Assemblies; the American Episcopal Church holds triennial Conventions; the Methodist Episcopal Church, quadrennial General Conferences; the Congregationalists and Baptists have occasional conventions of a voluntary character without legislative power.

Besides official conventions, there are in modern times Roman Catholic Congresses, General Conferences of the Evangelical Alliance, Pan-Anglican, Pan-Presbyterian, and Pan-Methodist Councils, etc., which have no legislative but great moral power.

LITERATURE: The Acts of Councils, by LABBEUS and COSSART, HARDUIN, and MANSI. The best history of Councils from a liberal Roman Catholic standpoint is the Conciliengeschichte of Professor (afterwards Bishop) HEFELE, continued by Cardinal HERGENRÖTHER (2d ed. revised, 1873-87, 8 vols.). It is a history of Latin Christianity. For the history of Protestant Synods and free Conferences, the official minutes and proceedings must be consulted.

CHAPTER CLV.

HISTORY OF WORSHIP.

The history of WORSHIP includes an account of sacred seasons and places, a history of preaching and catechetical instruction, liturgies, the administration of the sacraments, religious rites and ceremonies, ecclesiastical art (architecture, sculpture and painting), church poetry and church music.

Organization and worship of the ancient Church are often combined under the name of Ecclesiastical Antiquities, which corresponds to Biblical Antiquities or Archæology in Exegetical Theology. An important part of Church Archæology, of recent origin, relates to the catacombs of Rome, which present an interesting view of the manners and customs, of the life and death of the early Christians.

LITERATURE: BINGHAM, AUGUSTI, BINTERIM, SIEGEL, KRAUS.—On Christian Antiquities: SMITH and CHEETHAM: Dictionary of Christian Antiquities (London, 1780, 2 vols.).—DE ROSSI: Roma sotterranea cristiana (Rom. 1864-78, 4 vols. fol.).—On Liturgies: RENAUDOT, PAMELIUS, NEALE, PALMER, HAMMOND.—Numerous works on Church architecture, by BUNSEN, KUGLER, LÜBKE, etc.—The best work on hymnology is JULIAN'S Dictionary of Hymnology, London and New York, 1892, pp. 1616.

CHAPTER CLVI.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN LIFE.

The history of CHRISTIAN LIFE or Christian morality and piety embraces the biographies of martyrs and saints (Martyrology and Hagiology), the history of asceticism and monastieism, the progress of Christian philanthropy and benevolence, and the purifying and ennobling influences of Christianity upon individual, domestic, social and national life.

LITERATURE: Acta Sanctorum, by the Bollandists (a colossal work begun at Antwerp, 1643-1875, 61 vols. fol., with a supplement).—ALBAN BUTLER: Lives of the Saints (1756-59, 4 vols., a popular and abridged reproduction of the Acta Sanctorum).—S. BARING-GOULD: Lives of the Saints (1872-77, 15 vols.).—Numerous histories of Monasticism, and the various Monastic Orders. Biographies of St. Benedict, St. Bernard, St. Francis of Assisi, etc.—The histories of Aseeticism, Mysticism, Pietism, Methodism.—MAX GOEBEL: Geschichte des christlichen Lebens in der rheinisch-westphälischen evangel. Kirche (1860, 3 vols.).—PIPER: Evangelischer Kalender (1873).—UHLHORN: Die christliche Liebesthätigkeit in der alten Kirche (1881), im Mittelalter (1884).—C. L. BRACE: Gesta Christi; or, A History of Humane Progress under Christianity (New York, 1883, 5th ed. 1890).—Histories of hospitals, reformatories, prison discipline, temperance, etc.

CHAPTER CLVII.

HISTORY OF DOCTRINES AND DOGMAS.

1. A history of THEOLOGY in the widest sense embraces the whole intellectual and literary activity of the Church. Every department of theology, exegetical, historical, systematic and practical, has its own history. Christian literature in all civilized languages surpasses in extent and variety all other kinds of literature.

2. History of Christian DOCTRINES or history of dogmatic theology traces the origin and progress of every article of the Christian faith. The doctrines are developed in a certain order: first those of the Trinity and incarnation (in the Nicene age and Post-Nicene age); then those of sin and grace (in the Pelagian and semi-Pelagian controversies); next those of the rule of faith, justification, faith and good works (in the Reformation period).

3. A special and the most important department in Doctrine History is the History of DOGMAS (Dogmengeschichte). Truth comes from God and is revealed in the Bible; doctrine is the conception and comprehension of truth by individuals; dogma is doctrine formulated by the Church and made a law for its members. Dogma involves the element of authority.*

* Dogma is derived from δοκέω, ἔδοξε, placuit, it seemed good, and means a public decree or ordinance; comp. Luke 2:1; Acts 17:7 (imperial

The Greek Church recognizes the dogmatic decisions of the seven œcumenical councils; the Roman Church holds in addition the decisions of Trent (1563) and of the Vatican Council (1870). The dogmatic system of the Lutheran Church was completed with the Formula of Concord (1577), that of the Calvinistic Churches with the standards of the Westminster Assembly (1647).

4. The history of HERESIES or perversions of Christian truths is an important part of the history of doctrines and dogmas. It is usually through conflict with heresies that the knowledge of Christian truth is evolved in the militant Church. Thus Arianism led to the Nicene Creed; Apollinarianism, Nestorianism and Eutychianism prepared the way for the Chalcedonian Christology; Pelagius stimulated the development of the Augustinian anthropology; the Reformation theology was brought out in conflict with the papacy; the Council of Trent formulated the modern Roman Creed in opposition to the Protestant doctrines; the Vatican Council settled the controversy between papal infallibilists and anti-infallibilists, or Ultramontanists and Gallicans, within the Roman Church.

LITERATURE: Histories of Dogmas in German by MÜNSCHER, BAUMGARTEN—CRUSIUS, NEANDER, GIESELER, BAUR, HAGENBACH (6th ed. by Benrath, 1888), THOMASIUS, FR. NITZSCH, HARNACK (1886-90, 3 vols., and Grundriss, 1889, 2d ed. 1892), LOOPS (3d ed. 1893).—Roman Catholics: PETAVIUS (Latin, the father of this science), KLEE, SCHWANE, BACH.

In English: HAGENBACH (translated from an older ed. by Buch, revised and enlarged by H. B. Smith, 1861, 2 vols., new ed., Edinburgh, 1880, 3 vols.), SHEDD (1863, 2 vols.), SHELDON (1886, 2 vols.), SCHAFF (the first vol. of his Creeeds of Christendom, 5th ed. 1890), HARNACK (the Grundriss), Outlines of the History of Dogma, transl. by E. K. Mitchell, 1893, G. P. FISHER (in course of preparation for the series of theological textbooks, edited by Briggs and Salmond).

decree); Eph. 2 : 15; Col. 2 : 14 (the ordinances of Moses); Acts 16 : 4 (the decision of the Council of Jerusalem). The Old Testament puts monotheism in the form of a dogmatic statement, Deut. 6 : 4. The New Testament mentions no dogma, strictly so called; for the "decrees" ordained by the Apostles and Elders, Acts 16 : 4, were not doctrinal, but disciplinary, and not intended to be permanent. From the beginning of the fourth century a closer distinction was made between dogma and canon, and the former confined to doctrinal, the latter to disciplinary, decisions of councils.

CHAPTER CLVIII.

SOURCES OF CHURCH HISTORY.

The sources of Church History furnish authentic information of the facts and dates. They are partly written, partly unwritten. Before the invention of the printing-press the written sources existed in manuscripts, which are still preserved in the old libraries of Europe, especially that of the Vatican, and must be referred to, in doubtful cases, for the verification of the original texts. But since that time nearly all the written sources are printed and published in book form.

CHAPTER CLIX.

THE WRITTEN SOURCES.

For biblical history, we have the books of the Old and New Testaments, with supplementary and illustrative records of contemporary nations.

Ecclesiastical history is embodied in the immense and ever-growing literature of the Christian Church.

The post-biblical sources may be divided into three classes of works :

1. Official documents of ecclesiastical and civil authorities : Acts of councils, creeds, canons, liturgies, laws, monastic rules, briefs and bulls of popes, pastoral letters of patriarchs and bishops, proceedings of synods and other ecclesiastical bodies.

COLLECTIONS : Councils by HARDUIN (12 vols.) and MANSI (31 vols.). Papal Bulls by CHERUBINI (1586), CHEVALIER (1730), COCQUELINES (1740), BARBERI (1856), GAUDE (1857 sqq.). Liturgies by GOAR (1647), RENAUDOT (1716), MURATORI (1748), ASSEMANI (1766), DANIEL (1847), NEALE (1849). Creeds and Confessions of Faith by HAHN, RECHENBERG, NIEMEYER, SCHAFF. Monastic Rules by HOLSTEN and BROCKIE. Imperial Laws, the Theodosian and Justinian codes. The Monumenta Germaniæ for the mediæval history of the papacy and the holy Roman empire. The documentary sources of modern history are increasing with the growth of the Church and the multiplication of denominations and sects.

2. Private writings of prominent actors in history : The church fathers, heretics and heathen, for the first six centuries ; the missionaries, monks, schoolmen and mystics, for the middle ages; the Reformers and their Roman Catholic opponents, for the sixteenth century; and the leading writers of all denominations in more recent times. These works are the richest mines for the historian. They give history in its birth and actual movement. But they must be carefully sifted and weighed, especially the controversial writings, in which fact is generally more or less colored by party spirit, heretical and orthodox.

COLLECTIONS: The works of the Apostolic Fathers by GEBHARDT, HARNACK and ZAHN (1878), HEFELE-FUNK (1887), LIGHTFOOT (1869-90; Greek text ed., 1890). The Apologists by OTTO (3d ed. 1876 sqq.). All the Fathers by MIGNE (1844-66, the Latin Fathers in 222, the Greek in 167 vols.). Select works of the Fathers in English in the Ante-Nicene, Nicene, and Post-Nicene Libraries, ed. by COXE, SCHAFF and WACE.—The Corpus Reformatorum contains so far the works of Melancthon, ed. by BRETSCHNEIDER and BINDSEIL (1834-60, 23 vols.), and the works of Calvin, ed. by BAUM, CUNITZ, REUSS, and ERICHSON (1863 sqq., so far 47 vols.). Separate editions of the works of Luther, Zwingli, Beza, Cranmer, Knox, etc.—The writings of Spener and Francke, for Pietism; Zinzendorf and Spangenberg, for the Moravian community; Wesley (John and Charles) and Whitefield, for Methodism; Pusey, Newman, and Keble, for Anglo-Catholicism; Döllinger, Reinkens, and Von Schulte, for Old Catholicism, etc., etc.

3. Accounts of contemporary historians, whether friends or foes, who were eye-witnesses of the events. Also autobiographies of the actors in history. The value of such works depends on the opportunities, capacity and credibility of the authors, which must be determined by careful criticism.

EXAMPLES: Eusebius on the life of Constantine, and the Palestinian Martyrs. Augustin's Confessions. Eginhard's Life of Charlemagne. Eadmer's Life of Anselm. The correspondence of the Reformers, especially the letters of Luther and Calvin. Melancthon's Life of Luther. Beza's Life of Calvin. Knox's History of the Scotch Reformation. Cromwell's Letters. Clarendon's History of the Rebellion (anti-puritan). Newman's Apologia (for the inner history of Anglo-Catholicism).

4. Historians who lived after the events may be counted among the direct and immediate sources so far only as they have drawn from trustworthy and contemporary records which have either been wholly or partially lost, like many of the authorities of Eusebius for the ante-Nicene period, or are inaccessible to historians generally, as were formerly the papal Regesta and other documents of the Vatican library and papal Archives. Thus Baronius, in his Annales, largely drew from these treasures, to which no Protestant would have been admitted before the liberal policy of Leo XIII. (1885).

Other historians who used documents already published are only secondary and indirect sources, and their value depends upon the degree of accuracy and faithfulness with which they made use of the primary sources.

CHAPTER CLX.

THE UNWRITTEN SOURCES.

1. To the unwritten sources belong churches, convents, works of sculpture, paintings, ruins, relics and other monuments; also the countries in which the history was transacted.

These sources have been largely increased by recent discoveries and excavations in Bible lands. The Egyptian and Assyrian literature is a supplement to the Old Testament. The Sinaitic Peninsula and Mt. Sinai are a commentary on Exodus and the Decalogue. Palestine is "a fifth Gospel." The Roman catacombs with their symbols illustrate the sufferings and trials, the simplicity and humility, the faith and hope of the Christians under heathen persecution. This source of ancient Church History, ignored by Mosheim and Gibbon, by Neander and Gieseler, was not properly opened up till after the middle of the nineteenth century. The basilicas and baptisteries embody the spirit of the Nicene age. The Byzantine churches are characteristic of Byzantine Christianity. The Gothic cathedrals symbolize the genius of mediæval Catholicism. The churches, sculptures and paintings of the Renaissance characterize the transition from the middle ages to modern times and the revival of classical taste.

2. The habits and customs of the Christian nations and their surroundings supplement and illustrate the written and unwritten sources. The historian should be a traveler, and put himself in contact with living and moving history. The present is the outcome of the past, and the tree is known fully by the fruit.

The Græek Church can be studied best in Turkey, Greece and Russia; the Roman Church, in Italy, Spain, France, Austria, Ireland and South America; the Lutheran Church, in Germany and Scandinavia; the Reformed Churches, in Switzerland, France, Holland, Great Britain and North America ; the Episcopal Church, in England, the British Provinces and the United States ; Congregationalism, in England and New England. In the mother countries of the Churches, we find not only the largest collections of written and printed sources, churches, museums, picture-galleries and monumental remains, but also the oral traditions and living representatives of the past, who exhibit the national genius and social condition of their forefathers in a far more instructive manner than ponderous volumes.

CHAPTER CLXI.

DUTY OF THE HISTORIAN.

There are different historical talents : For production and reproduction, for original research and artistic composition, for philosophic comprehension and special investigation. There are historical miners who bring raw material to light ; historical manufacturers who work up the material into readable shape ; and historical retailers who epitomize and popularize scholarly labors for general use. Few are gifted with a deep insight into the secret laws, forces, currents and connections of events. We have several philosophies of general history ; but a philosophy of Church history is still a desideratum. Every man must follow his inclination and taste, and not despise another for doing what he cannot do and does not pretend to do.

The first and last duty of the historian—whether he be a producer or reproducer, a generalist or specialist—is truthfulness. As the exegete has to explain the Scriptures according to their natural sense, without dogmatic bias, and to draw out all that is in them, but to put nothing foreign into them, so it is the business of the historian to reproduce history as God and men made it, without omission or addition, and not to pervert and utilize it for selfish or sectarian purposes. But alas ! many commentaries are impositions rather than expositions, and many histories are caricatures rather than portraits.

The historian is a witness who must tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth ; and he is also a judge who must do strict and full justice to every person and event which comes before his tribunal.

To be thus faithful and just, he needs a threefold qualification: scientific, artistic, and moral; in other words, knowledge of the sources, power of composition, and a Christian spirit.

So far as the historian combines these qualifications, he fulfills his office. We can, at best, only approach perfection in this or in any other branch of study, but we must strive after it. Absolute success would require infallibility; and this is denied to mortal man. The Pope of Rome claims to be officially infallible, but he is mistaken sometimes, and his claim does not extend to matters of history. Even St. Paul knew only in part and saw "in a mirror, darkly." It is the exclusive privilege of the divine mind to see the end from the beginning with the eye of omniscience.

The final solution of the mysteries of history is reserved for that heavenly state when we shall see "face to face," and shall survey the developments of time from the heights of eternity. What St. Augustin so aptly says of the mutual relation of the Old and New Testament, "The New Testament is concealed in the Old, the Old Testament is revealed in the New" ("Novum Testamentum in Vetere latet, Vetus in Novo patet"), may be applied also to the relation of this world and the world to come. The history of the Church militant is, throughout, but a type, and a prophecy which can be perfectly understood only in the light of its fulfillment.

There is a concealed and a revealed God in history as well as in nature: sufficiently concealed to try our faith, sufficiently revealed to strengthen our faith.

CHAPTER CLXII.

THE MASTERY OF THE SOURCES.

The historian must first make himself master of the sources. This is a well-nigh endless task, but no one should attempt to write history without some knowledge of the primary sources of information; as no one should attempt to write a commentary without a knowledge of the original languages of the Bible. He must look the actors in the face, and feel the pulse of events.

The first thing for the historian is to select the sources for the particular period or topic which he wishes to investigate. Then he has to examine the genuineness and integrity of the sources, according to the laws of textual and literary criticism, and to measure the capacity and credibility of the witnesses. Thus only can he separate facts from fiction, truth from error.

As history progresses, the sources multiply beyond the power of any individual to read and digest them. We may do exhaustive work in a special department of limited extent; but for many fields of history even the greatest scholars have to depend upon the labors of others, and avail themselves—with grateful acknowledgment—of collections, digests, indexes, and monographs of specialists. The general historian and the specialist are indispensable to each other. The one looks out for the whole, the other for the parts.

CHAPTER CLXIII.

ARTISTIC COMPOSITION.

The historian is an artist as well as a scholar. He ought to be endowed with historical imagination as well as with critical acumen. Familiarity with poetry and general literature will be of much benefit to him. He is more than an annalist and reporter. History is not a heap of dry bones, but a living organism, filled and ruled by a rational soul. The historian must reproduce the movements of the past, clothe the actors with flesh and blood, and make them live their lives over again. He is not permitted, indeed, to color history or to turn it into a romance, for the purpose of making it more interesting than it really is, but he must set the events in their true light and relation to their age, their antecedents and results, and give them a freshness and interest as if they were occurring before the eyes of the reader.

In this respect the Church historians (especially the Germans) are far behind the secular historians. They have been so much absorbed by the contents as to neglect the graces of style, method and arrangement. Hence Church history is confined to a professional class, and has not yet taken a place in general literature. You may find Gibbon and Macaulay in every gentleman's library, but very rarely Neander and Giese-ler. And yet the history of Christianity is the most interesting, as well as the most profound and most important, part in the annals of the human race.

The first requisite of a readable history is a lucid arrangement and grouping of the material. The best method is to combine judiciously the chronological and topical principles of division, so as to present at once the succession of events and the several parallel departments of history in due proportion. Accordingly, we would first divide the whole history into periods, not arbitrarily, but as determined by the actual course of events; and then present each of these periods in as many sections or chapters as the material itself suggests.

Another requisite, in these days of rapid motion and multiplied studies, is to combine brevity and condensation with completeness. In general Church history condensation becomes more and more a necessity and a virtue as the material increases. Brevity is the soul of wit not only, but also of a good speech and a good book. Life is too short and time too precious to read (except for reference) the thirteen folios (covering so many centuries) of the Magdeburg Centuries, the thirty-eight folios of the Annals of Baronius, the sixteen quartos of Tillemont, the forty volumes of Fleury, the forty-five volumes of Schroeckh, and the twenty-nine volumes of Rohrbacher.

*“Wie die Welt läuft immer weiter,
Wird stets die Geschichte breiter;
Und uns wird je mehr, je länger Nöthig ein Zusammendränger.”*

CHAPTER CLXIV.

THE CHRISTIAN SPIRIT.

The moral qualification of the historian may be comprehended in the Christian spirit, which is the spirit of truth and love. “Malice to none, charity for all.” The secular historian must have a general sympathy with humanity, according to the motto:

“Homo sum: humani nihil a me alienum puto.”

The Church historian must have a general sympathy with Christianity in all its forms and phases, and follow the motto:

“Christianus sum: Christiani nihil a me alienum puto.”

No one can interpret poetry without poetic feeling and taste, or philosophy without speculative talent; so no one can rightly comprehend and exhibit the history of Christianity without the spirit that animates and controls it. An unbeliever could produce only a repulsive caricature, or at best a lifeless statue.

The higher the historian stands on Christian ground, the wider is his horizon, and the clearer and fuller his view of the regions below. Even error can be fairly seen only from the position of truth. "Verum est index sui et falsi."

Christianity is the absolute truth, which, like the sun, both reveals itself and enlightens all that is dark.

CHAPTER CLXV.

USES OF CHURCH HISTORY.

(From SCHAFF's Church History, I. 20 and 21.)

Church history is the most extensive, and, including the history of the Old and New Testaments, the most important branch of theology. It is the storehouse from which theology derives its supplies. It is the best commentary on Christianity itself. The fullness of the stream is the glory of the fountain from which it flows.

1. Church history has a general interest for every cultivated mind, as showing the moral and religious development of our race, and the gradual execution of the divine plan of redemption. A knowledge of it should be an essential part of general culture.

2. It has special value for the theologian and minister of the Gospel, as the key to the present condition of Christendom and the guide to successful labor for the future. The present is the fruit of the past, and the germ of the future. No work can stand unless it grows out of the real wants of the age and strikes firm root in the soil of the past. Those who despise their fathers have no claim upon the respect of their children. Church history is no mere curiosity shop; its facts are not dead men's bones. It embodies living realities, the general principles and laws for our own guidance and action. Who studies Church history studies human nature under the influence of Christianity as it was, as it now is, and as it will be to the end of time.

3. The history of the Church has practical value for every Christian as a storehouse of wisdom and experience, warning and encouragement. It is the philosophy of facts, Christianity in living examples. History in general is described by Cicero as "testis temporum, lux veritatis, et magistra vite," and by Diodorus as "a handmaid of Providence, a priestess of truth, and a mother of wisdom." This is true in the highest degree of Church history. Next to the holy Scriptures, which are themselves a history and depository of divine revelation, there is no stronger proof of the continual presence of Christ with his people, no more thorough vindication of Christianity, no richer source of useful learning, no stronger incentive to virtue and piety, than the history of Christ's kingdom. Every age has a message from God to man, which it is of the greatest importance to understand.

The Epistle to the Hebrews describes in stirring eloquence "the cloud of witnesses" from the old dispensation for the encouragement of the early Christians. But we are "compassed about" with a far greater and brighter cloud of apostles, evangelists, martyrs, confessors, fathers, reformers and saints of all ages and tongues, and this cloud is constantly increasing. In reading the thoughts and prayers, the lives and deaths of those heroes of faith and love, who were living epistles of Christ, the salt of the earth, the benefactors and glory of our race, we are elevated, edified, comforted and encouraged to follow their example that we may at last, by the grace of God, be received into their fellowship to spend with them a blessed eternity in the praise of the same God and Saviour of the world.

CHAPTER CLXVI.

PERIODS AND EPOCHS.

Church history is divided into several ages or periods which represent the various stages of its progress. The dividing line between two periods is called an epoch: it marks the close of one and the beginning of another period, and introduces a new principle or a new phase of development. Thus the birth of Christ, the Day of Pentecost, the conversion of Paul, the council of Nicaea, the fall of Constantinople, the invention of the printing-press, the discovery of America, the outbreak of the Reformation, the Edict of Nantes, the Toleration Act of 1688, the American Declaration of Independence, the French Revolution, the Vatican Council of 1870, are epoch-making facts or events, followed by new periods. The term age is often used also in the limited sense of a generation, as when we speak of the age of Constantine, of Charlemagne, of Hildebrand, of Queen Elizabeth.

The periods of history should not be artificially made after a certain mechanical scheme of equal time-divisions of years or centuries. They must faithfully represent the successive ages of history itself, which in different times and countries moves with very unequal degrees of rapidity, corresponding to the means of communication from the slow pace of the caravan to the speed of the railroad and magnetic telegraph.

CHAPTER CLXVII.

PERIODS OF BIBLICAL HISTORY.

Biblical or sacred history is the development of the divine Revelation and the kingdom of God from the Creation to the close of the Apostolic age. It runs parallel with the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelation.

Here we must distinguish the dispensation of the law and the dispensation of the gospel, or the history of the Old Testament religion and that of the New Testament religion.

I. Under the OLD DISPENSATION: from the Creation down to John the Baptist, or the advent of Christ.

II. Under the NEW DISPENSATION: Christ and the Apostles, or primitive and normative Christianity in its divine-human founder and inspired organs, from the birth of Christ to the death of John at the close of the first century (A.D. 1-100).

CHAPTER CLXVIII.

PERIODS OF CHRISTIAN CHURCH HISTORY.

Church History in the narrow sense, or the History of Christianity, begins with the birth of Christ, and includes the second division of Biblical history, already mentioned.

Main divisions: Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern Christianity.

I. ANCIENT CHRISTIANITY embraces the first six centuries to Gregory I. (590): The Græco-Latin, patristic, old catholic Church, the common stock from which the Greek, the Roman, and the Protestant Churches have sprung.

Ancient Christianity corresponds to the patriarchal period in Jewish history. Its theatre is the Old Roman empire around the Mediterranean, i.e., western Asia, northern Africa, southern Europe; its nationalities, the Jews, the Greeks, and the Romans; the language of its literature is chiefly the Greek, and, after the close of the second century, also the Latin.

Subdivisions:

(a) The Life of Christ, and the Apostolic age, stand by themselves as the culmination of Biblical history and the beginning of Church history.

(b) The Ante-Nicene Age, 100–325. The period of persecution under the Roman empire to the conversion of Constantine the Great and the first œcumenical council of Nicæa.

(c) The Nicene and Post-Nicene Age, 325–600. The period of Græco-Roman State-Christianity, ruled by Christian emperors, patriarchs, and œcumenical councils, from Constantine the Great to Pope Gregory the Great.

II. MÆDIEVAL CHRISTIANITY from the close of the sixth to the beginning of the sixteenth century, or from Gregory I. to the Reformation, A.D. 590–1517. Character: The partial conversion and civilization of the barbarians in Europe, and preparation for modern Christianity and civilization. The Greek and Roman Churches, divided, pursue their independent course; the Latin Church extends west, among the Celtic and Germanic races; the Greek, northeast among the Slavonians (in Russia). The rise and progress of the papacy, monasticism, scholasticism, and mysticism; the crusades; the papal schism and the reformatory councils. The anti-catholic sects. The revival of letters and arts. The invention of printing. The discovery of America. The rise of independent nationalities. The abuses and corruptions of the Church. The forerunners of Protestantism (Wiclif in England, Hus in Bohemia, Savonarola in Italy, Wessel in Holland, Reuchlin and Erasmus in Germany and Switzerland).

Mediæval Christianity corresponds to the Mosaic theocracy in the old dispensation. It moves chiefly on European soil, northward and westward, among the Latin and barbarian (Celtic, Germanic and Slavonic) races, and its literature is chiefly Latin, the official language of the Roman Church.

Subdivisions:

(a) The missionary period of the middle ages from Gregory I. to Gregory VII. (590-1073).

(b) The palmy period of the papacy from Gregory VII. to Boniface VIII. (1073-1294).

(c) The decay of the mediæval papacy and scholasticism, the revival of letters, and preparation for a Reformation, from Boniface VIII. to Leo X. and Martin Luther (1294-1517). The last period has a striking resemblance to the nineteenth century: Old things passing away, all things becoming new.

III. MODERN CHRISTIANITY, from the Reformation of the sixteenth century to the present time. Latin Christianity is divided between conservative Romanism and progressive Protestantism. The founding of the evangelical churches, Lutheran, Reformed, and Anglican, by the labors of Luther, Zwingli and Calvin on the continent, Cranmer in England, and Knox in Scotland. Reaction of Romanism; the Council of Trent; the order of the Jesuits, henceforth the chief support of the revived papacy, and the indefatigable enemy of Protestantism. The disastrous Thirty Years' War in Germany, ending with the legal recognition of the Lutheran Church by the treaty of Westphalia (1648). The heroic war of emancipation of the Hollanders against the tyranny of Spain. The Synod of Dort (1620). The Edict of Nantes by Henry IV. (1598), its revocation by Louis XIV. (1685); the expulsion of the Huguenots from France, who became a blessing to other nations, while a remnant remained at home as a church of the desert, hoping for better times. The Puritan rebellion, or rather the second reformation in England; the Westminster Assembly and Westminster standards of the Presbyterian Churches (1647); the Cromwellian commonwealth; the restoration of episcopacy; the revolution of 1688, the Act of Toleration, and consequent division of English Church history into separate denominational channels. The Pietistic and Moravian movements in Germany. The Methodist revival in England and the American colonies. The rise and progress of Deism and Rationalism all over Europe. The American secession from England, and the peaceful separation of Church and State, with full religious liberty guaranteed by the national Constitution. The French Revolution and the temporary abolition of Christianity, followed by the restoration of the Roman Catholic Church under Napoleon with toleration and government support of other churches (Reformed and Lutheran), and the Jewish synagogue.

Then began the revival of Protestantism and Romanism all over Europe. The centennial celebration of the Reformation and the union of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches in Prussia (1817). The old Lutheran reaction in Germany. Oxford Tractarianism or Anglo-Catholicism in England resulting in a large secession to Rome (1845), headed by Newman and Manning (both subsequently made cardinals), and a ritualistic revival of Christian life within the Church of England. Triumph of Ultramontanism over Gallicanism in the Vatican Council of 1870, which declared the dogma of papal infallibility, thus completing the hierarchical pyramid; but this was followed by the Old Catholic secession under the lead of Döllinger. The Franco-German war, and the establishment of a Protestant empire under the headship of Prussia. The Culturkampf with Rome; the May-laws, and their abrogation. Prince Bismarck and Pope Leo XIII. on the way to Canossa, but at a respectful distance, and asking and granting a quid pro quo. The papacy and the French republic. The school question in connection with religious instruction. Conflict between religion and the various forms of skepticism and infidelity. Growing activity in all departments of theological learning and popular literature, in foreign and domestic missions, in practical works of philanthropy and benevolence. Tendencies towards union among different Churches. Bible Societies; Sunday Schools; Young Men's Christian Associations; Christian Endeavor Societies. Evangelical Alliance; pan-Anglican, pan-Presbyterian, pan-Methodist Councils. Opening up of the heart of Africa. An age of discoveries and inventions, which stimulate and facilitate the conversion and civilization of the whole world.

At the end of the nineteenth century, Christianity stands on the threshold of a glorious past and a more glorious future which no man can forecast.

Subdivisions:

(a) The age of the Protestant Reformation, and the papal counter-Reformation (1517-1648).

(b) The age of scholastic and polemic confessionism in conflict with nonconformity and subjective piety (from the middle of the seventeenth to the middle of the eighteenth century).

(c) The age of revolution, revival and progress in all Churches and upon all continents (down to the close of the nineteenth century).

CHAPTER CLXIX.

HISTORY OF ISRAEL.

We now proceed to a brief survey of the most important branches of Historical Theology.

The Jewish Church History begins with Abraham and closes with John the Baptist.

It is a history of the positive preparation for Christianity by a divinely organized theocracy. "Salvation is from the Jews" (John 4:22). This wonderfully gifted and indestructible people, whose fit symbol is the burning bush, was chosen by God to know and to worship him amidst surrounding idolatry, and to prepare the way for the coming of the Messiah. Theirs are "the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises"; theirs are "the fathers"; and of them is "Christ as concerning the flesh, who is over all, God blessed forever" (Rom. 9:4, 5). Herein lies the universal and permanent interest and value of the Jewish history and the Old Testament literature. It represents two concurrent movements: a descending revelation of God to man, and an ascending moral and spiritual aspiration of man to God, both culminating in the divine-human Messiah and Saviour.

In a wider sense, the History of the Old Covenant includes also the antediluvian history of religion from the creation of man, and the connections of the Jewish nation with the surrounding heathen empires of Egypt, Assyria, Babylonia, Persia, Greece and Rome.

The principal divisions are the following:

1. The primitive or antediluvian period, from the creation of Adam to Noah and the call of Abraham. The creation of man; the state of innocence; the fall; the antediluvians; the flood; Noah and his sons; the dispersion of nations.

2. The patriarchal period, from Abraham to Moses. Abraham; Isaac; Jacob; Joseph; the sojourn in Egypt; the growth into a nation; the oppression by Pharaoh (Rameses II. or Sesos-tris); the preparation and call of Moses.

3. The Mosaic period, from Moses to Samuel. The Exodus from Egypt; the miraculous passage through the Red Sea; the establishment of the theocracy from Mount Sinai; the Decalogue; the Mosaic legislation and worship; the wanderings through "the great and terrible wilderness" of the Sinaitic Peninsula; the conquest of Canaan under Joshua; the anarchical period of the Judges; the peaceful episode of Ruth.

4. The period of the Jewish monarchy and prophecy. The undivided monarchy (B.C. 1095-975): The reigns of Saul (forty years), David (forty), and Solomon (forty). The divided monarchy: The kingdom of Judah from Rehoboam to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Babylonian Captivity (B.C. 588). The kingdom of Israel from Jeroboam to the end of the kingdom (B.C. 722). The older prophets: Elijah and Elisha, Isaiah, Jonah, Amos, Hosea, Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah, Habakkuk, Jeremiah (till B.C. 588).

5. The Babylonian Captivity, B.C. 588 to 536. Contact with foreign nations and ideas. The prophets Daniel and Ezekiel.

6. The period of reconstruction under Ezra, the model priest and scribe, and Nehemiah, the model statesman and patriot, and the post-exilian prophets, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi. Gradual formation of the Hebrew canon. Dispersion of the Jews.

7. The Maccabæan period, or the whole period intervening between Nehemiah and John the Baptist. The invasion of Alexander the Great; Palestine subjected to Macedonian rule. The heroic Maccabæan war of independence against Antiochus Epiphanes (175-164 B.C.). The Jewish Apocrypha. The Greek Version (Septuagint) of the Hebrew Scriptures. The Hebrews and the Hellenists. The sects of the Pharisees, Sadducees and Essenes. The Messianic expectations. John the Baptist, the last of the prophets. Palestine subject to Roman rule since Pompey and Cæsar.

8. The history of the Jewish theocracy closes with the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple (A.D. 70), which was foretold by Christ, and graphically and minutely described by Josephus as an eye-witness.

This part of its history may be embraced in what is called the History of New Testament Times. (See next chapter.)

The history of the Jews after the destruction of the theocracy lies outside of biblical or ecclesiastical history, but the treatment of the Jews by the Christian Church belongs to the history of religious persecution.

LITERATURE: The chief sources for the history of Israel are the books of the Old Covenant, and the Archæology of Josephus. The works of Philo on Moses, etc., are of little historical value, on account of their allegorical interpretation. The Greek and Latin historians depend upon Josephus. The Egyptological and Babylonio-Assyrian discoveries throw side-lights on the Jewish history.

HEINRICH EWALD (d. 1875): History of the People of Israel, Göttingen, 1843, 3d ed. 1864-68, 7 vols.; English translation, London, 1868-76, 5 vols. Marks an epoch as the first critical and yet profoundly religious construction of the history of Israel, as the unique people of divine revelation. Comp. also his Prophets, and Poetical Books of the Old Testament.

DEAN STANLEY (d. 1881): Lectures on the History of the Jewish Church, London and New York, 1863-76, 3 vols. A picturesque popular condensation of Ewald, who once told him, when a student of Oxford, that the little New Testament contained the whole wisdom of the world.

The conservative orthodox school is represented by HENGSTENBERG, in his posthumous History of the Kingdom of God in the Old Covenant (Berlin, 1870); KURTZ, in his unfinished History of the Old Covenant (Berlin, 1848 and 1855); KÖHLER, in his Lehrbuch der biblischen Geschichte (Erlangen, 1875-88); also by VON HOFMANN, in an independent way; and by EDERSHEIM (in several works).

Since Ewald, a new critical reconstruction has gradually been elaborated, which reverses the traditional order of the relation of the law and prophecy. This theory puts the prophetic development before the priestly, and regards the levitical priest-code (based in part on Ez. 40-48), with its stiff, narrow legalism and elaborate ritual, as an exilian and post-exilian contraction and petrification of the grand prophetic ideas, which at last were revived and fulfilled by Christ. It was first suggested by Reuss in lectures (1833), and independently by Vatke (1835) and George (1835), and carried out by Graf (1869) and Kayser (1874)—two pupils of Reuss,—and especially by Wellhausen (1878), who gave to it unity and consistency. Wellhausen starts from the facts that the oldest sources know nothing of a concentration of worship in Jerusalem, nor of a minute sacrificial ritual, nor of a levitical and priestly hierarchy. Kuenen in Holland (1869 and 1875) and Renan in France (1887) have arrived, by independent research, at similar conclusions, and the advanced Hebrew scholars of England (as W. R. Smith, Cheyne, Driver) and of America (as Briggs, Brown, Toy, H. P. Smith, Moore) have substantially adopted the chief results, but with higher views of inspiration. This theory is closely connected with the complicated critical investigations of the sources of the Pentateuch or Hexateuch (including the book of Joshua), which are not yet concluded, and will probably undergo considerable modifications. It can only be superseded by another historical construction which is equally consistent and does justice to all the facts in the case.

WELLHAUSEN (formerly of Marburg, now of Göttingen, originally a disciple of Ewald): History of Israel, Berlin, 1878; 2d ed. under the title Prolegomena to the History of Israel, 1883; 3d ed. 1886; English translation with introduction by W. R. Smith, London, 1885. Comp. the abridgment in the art. "Israel" in the Encycl. Brit., vol. xiii.

STADE (Giessen): Geschichte des Volkes Israel, Berlin, 1881 sqq.

KUENEN (Leiden, d. 1881): The Worship of Israel, Haarlem, 1875; The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel, Leiden, 1875; Historico-Critical Introduction to the Old Testament, Leiden, 1885 sqq. Translated, in part, from the Dutch.

RENAN: History of the People of Israel, Paris, 1887 sqq., 4 vols. Translated. Brilliant, but radical and secular.

ED. KÖNIG: The Chief Problems of the Old Israelitic History, Leipzig, 1884. He adopts the Wellhausen hypothesis, but without surrendering the inspiration and authority of the Old Testament.

KITTEL: History of the Hebrews, Gotha, 1888 sqq. Occupies a middle position and writes from the standpoint of universal history.

JAMES ROBERTSON (University of Glasgow): The Early Religion of Israel, Edinburgh and New York, 1892 (324 pp.). Conservative.

CHAPTER CLXX.

HISTORY OF BIBLICAL TIMES.

The History of Biblical Times is auxiliary to Biblical History, and supplies the frame-work to it. We may treat it as a whole, or divide it into History of Old Testament Times, and History of New Testament Times. The former deals with the heathen nations with whom the Jews came in contact from the time of Moses to the exile, and derives much material from the recent researches in Egyptology and Assyriology. The latter gives an account of the environments of Christ and the Apostles, and facilitates the understanding of the Gospels, Epistles and the Apocalypse. It has been recently raised to the dignity of a separate branch of Church history.

The History of New Testament Times proves that Christ appeared when "the time was fulfilled" (Mark 1:15; Gal. 4:4), that is, when the preparations for the coming of Christ among the Jews, Greeks, and Romans were completed, and when the world had reached the point of the greatest need of a Saviour. It shows that Christianity was fully adapted to the wants of the times in which it appeared, and yet cannot be derived from any of the then existing forces and circumstances. It was a new revelation, towards which all previous revelations of God and aspirations of men were tending. The religion of the Jews, the literature of Greece, and the polity and law of Rome contributed their share, but could not of themselves produce it.

The History of New Testament Times includes three parts :

1. The state of Judaism at the time of Christ and the Apostles.
2. The state of Heathenism in the Roman Empire at the same period.
3. The contact between Judaism and Græco-Roman Heathenism.

The chief sources on the political and moral condition of the Jews from the time of Malachi to the destruction of Jerusalem are the Jewish Apocrypha and the works of Josephus, especially his Archæology. The sources on the condition of the Roman Empire are the Greek and Roman classics, especially Tacitus.

LITERATURE: The History of Biblical Times (Biblische Zeitgeschichte), as a separate department, was founded by SCHNECKENBURGER (Professor in Bern, d. 1848), in his Vorlesungen über die Neutestamentliche Zeitgeschichte (posthumously edited by Löhlein, Frankf. 1862). HAUSRATH of Heidelberg followed with a larger work in four parts, under the same title (1868; 3d ed. 1879). SCHÜRER'S admirable Lehrbuch der Neutestamentlichen Zeitgeschichte (Leipzig, 1874) has been greatly enlarged in a second edition under the new title: History of the Jewish People at the Time of Christ (Leipzig, 1885 and 1890, 2 vols.; English translation, Edinburgh, 1885 sqq.). It is a masterpiece of exact critical learning, but confined to Jewish history. GEORGE P. FISHER (of Yale University, New Haven), in The Beginnings of Christianity (New York, 1877), covers in part the same ground, and enters also into the field of Gospel criticism.

Contributions to this department: WELLHAUSEN: Pharisees and Sadducees (1874). REYNOLDS: John the Baptist (1874). DELITZSCH on Jesus and Hillel (3d ed. 1879); and A Day in Capernaum (1871). WEBER: System of the Palestinian Jewish Theology (1880). PICK: The Life of the Jews at the Time of Christ (1881). LUCIUS: Essenism in its Relation to Judaism (1881). MERRILL: Galilee in the Time of Christ (1885). STAFFER: Palestine at the Time of Christ (3d ed. Paris, 1885, also in English). DRUMMOND: The Jewish Messiah (1877). STANTON: The Jewish and Christian Messiah (1888).

CHAPTER CLXXI.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

Jesus Christ is the founder of Christianity. His life on earth is the fountain-head of its history. His advent marks the turning-point of ages, the end of the past, and the beginning of an endless future. He is the fulfiller of the law and the prophets, and of all the noble aspirations of heathendom, the Redeemer and Saviour of men. His person is the great moral miracle of history, and rises in solitary grandeur above the surrounding plane of a fallen and sinful race—the one only sinless and perfect man, in whom “all the fullness of the Godhead dwelleth bodily” (Col. 2 : 9).

A biography of Christ is the most difficult task of the church historian. It was written by the Evangelists, only in fragments, but with unsurpassed simplicity, frankness, modesty and reverence; and it can never be done any better for the general reader and for practical purposes. All attempts to versify or beautify the gospel story are failures. It is above all poetry. But it must be written and rewritten for scholars as well as for the common people. Every age must renew for itself the picture of Christ, who is the inspiration of all ages and the model for all classes and conditions of men. He is, in the language of a distinguished man of letters, “our divinest symbol, a symbol of quite perennial, infinite character, whose significance will ever demand to be anew inquired into, and anew made manifest.”*

The dogmatic theologian may construct his Christology in a descending line, beginning, like John, with the eternal Logos in the bosom of the Godhead, and coming down to the incarnation. But the historian must follow rather the Synoptical Gospels, which begin with the human genealogy of Jesus, as the son of Abraham and of Adam, thus connecting him with the Jewish race and the whole human family. He must endeavor to construct a truly human history of Jesus of Nazareth, from infancy to manhood, and mark the stages of his Messianic consciousness and his ethical development. Jesus lived, spoke, suffered and died like a man, and became in all things like unto us. “The child grew, and waxed strong, filled with wisdom: and the grace of God was upon him” (Luke 1 : 40). “He was tempted in all points, like as we are, yet without sin” (Heb. 4 : 15). “He was made perfect through sufferings. . . . In that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted” (Heb. 2 : 10, 18).

* Thomas Carlyle: Sartor Resartus, Book III., chapter 3. Neander (in the preface to his Leben Jesu) says: “Das Christusbild ist das, was nicht von gestern und heute, doch immer mit der Menschheit sich verjüngt und mit neuer himmelanstrebender Jugendkraft die alternde Welt durchdringt.”

But we search in vain for any moral defect in his private or public character. All his biographers (even Strauss and Renan) admit that history presents no parallel to him, and that religion has never risen so high, nor is likely ever to rise higher than in the person of the Son of Mary. The perfection of Christ's humanity compels the recognition of his divinity, according to his own claim and the testimony of his disciples. The sinless Son of Man is truly the Son of God, and all his amazing claims become intelligible and consistent only on the basis of his divine origin and character. With this admission, his miraculous works appear to be the natural and necessary manifestations of his miraculous person.

“Deep strike thy roots, O heavenly vine,
 Within our earthly sod!
 Most human and yet most divine,
 The flower of man and God!”

CHAPTER CLXXII.

LITERATURE ON THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

The life of Christ has always been the shining light of the Church, and the richest source of edification, comfort and worship. It has been reproduced, and will continue to be reproduced to the end of time, in countless sermons, books of devotion and works of art.

The “Harmonies” of the Gospels began in 170 with Tatian's Syrian Diatessaron, which has been recently recovered in an Arabic translation (1888). The first biographies of Christ were ascetic or poetic, and largely legendary, for edification.

The critical period was opened by the attacks of infidels in the last century (Reimarus and others), who revived the Jewish lie of the resurrection fraud (Matt. 28: 11-15). They occasioned the noble apologetic works of Hess (1774, 8th ed. 1823), Herder (1796), and Reinhard (Der Plan Jesu, 1781, 5th ed. 1830).

A most powerful impulse to the modern literature on the subject was given by the rationalistic theory of Paulus of Heidelberg (1828), which explains away the miracles of Christ as real but natural events and skillful medical cures; next by the mythical theory of D. F. Strauss (1835), which dissolves them into innocent poems of the religious imagination; and thirty years later by the legendary theory of E. Renan (1863), which lowers them to the level of incredible legends of mediæval hagiology, or an interesting romance, and, in the case of the resurrection of Lazarus, even resorts to the exploded hypothesis of imposture. Paulus, Strauss, and Renan agree only in their opposition to the supernatural, but otherwise refute each other. Indeed, it is a merit of Strauss that he has annihilated the theory of Paulus. Strauss wrote for German scholars, Renan for French novel-readers. Both combined genius and learning, and were masters of style.*

Their works created a great sensation and called forth a vast number of apologetic replies; these again were followed by independent books of more or less permanent value.

The chief biographies of Christ: * HASE (Leben Jesu, 1829, 5th ed. 1865, very valuable for its literature; and his Geschichte Jesu, 1875); SCHLEIERMACHER (1832, posthumously published, 1864, very unsatisfactory); STRAUSS (1835, 4th ed. 1840, 2 vols.; popular ed. 1864, 5th ed. 1889); * NEANDER (1837, 7th ed. 1873); * LANGE (1844-47, 3 vols.); VAN OOSTERZEE (Dutch, 1855-71, 3 vols.); EBRARD (1868); EWALD (1867); RENAN (1863, in many editions and translations); * PRESSENSÉ (1865, 7th ed. 1884); * KEIM (1867-72, 3 vols.); * ANDREWS (1863, revised 1891, unpretending, but very valuable in chronology and topology); * FARRAR (1874, in many edd.); GEIKIE (1878, several edd.); * WEISS (1882, 3d ed. 1888, Engl. trsl. in 3 vols.); * EDERSHEIM (1884, 2 vols.); STALKER (1884); * BEYSCHLAG (1885, 2d ed. 1888, 2 vols.); UHLHORN (Das Leben Jesu in seinen neueren Darstellungen, 4th ed. 1892; a review of the works of Renan, Strauss, Keim, Delff, Weiss, Beyschlag).

On the moral character of Christ, as an evidence of his divinity, ULLMANN: The Sinlessness of Jesus (1828, 7th ed. 1864, Engl. trsl. 1870); BUSHNELL: The Character of Jesus Forbidding His Classification with Men (1861); SEELEY: Ecce Homo (1864, several editions and translations); SCHAFF: The Person of Christ (1865, 12th ed. 1882, in several languages).

* It is noteworthy that these writers outlived the false theories which they represent. Strauss sank from an ideal Hegelian pantheism to a Darwinian materialism. Both he and Renan were pessimists, and lost, with their faith in Christ, all faith in immortality. They substituted a gospel of death for the gospel of resurrection. Strauss declared that the hereafter (das Jenseits) is the last enemy to be conquered by scientific criticism, and called the resurrection of our Saviour "the great world-humbag"; he died

CHAPTER CLXXIII.

THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

The period of the founding of Christianity by the inspired Apostles begins with the Day of Pentecost, A. D. 30, the birthday of the Christian Church, and ends with the death of St. John, about A. D. 100. It may be subdivided into three sections :

1. The founding of Christianity among the Jews, or the Jewish Christian Church, under the lead of St. Peter and with Jerusalem as its centre.

2. The founding of Christianity among the Greeks and Romans, or the Gentile Christian Church, under the lead of St. Paul, with Antioch as the starting-point and Rome as the termination and the place of the martyrdom of Peter and Paul.

3. The amalgamation and consolidation of Jewish and Gentile Christianity into one community, under the presiding genius of St. John, the apostle of love, who survived all the other apostles and continued at the head of the churches of Asia Minor till the reign of Trajan.

The Apostolic Age differs from all subsequent periods of the Church by the supernatural outfit of the Apostles, and the authoritative character of their writings, by which the Church must always be guided and, if necessary, reformed and reconstructed. The Apostolic Church has a prophetic and typical import ; it anticipates, in its three stages of progress and types of doctrine, the whole subsequent development of Christianity. As the Jewish Church is a type of the Christian Church, so the Apostolic Church prefigures and foreshadows the history of Catholicism, Protestantism, and the Church of the future till the second Advent of Christ, who will reconcile all antagonisms and harmonize all discordant creeds.

like a Stoic, and was buried without any religious ceremony (1874). Renan, who was brought up for the priesthood, but ended in agnosticism, said to his wife a few hours before his death (October 2, 1892): "Be calm and resigned. We undergo the laws of that nature whereof we are a manifestation. We perish; we disappear; but heaven and earth remain, and the march of time goes on forever." He was buried in the Pantheon with Voltaire and Rousseau.

LITERATURE: Histories of the Apostolic Age by *NEANDER (1832, 5th ed. 1862; transl.); THIERSCH (1852, 3d ed. 1879); EWALD (1858, 3d ed. 1868); RENAN (Les Apôtres, 1866; St. Paul, 1869; L'Antechrist, 1873); LANGE (1854); *LECHLER (3d ed. revised, 1857); G. P. FISHER (The Beginnings of Christianity, 1877); *WEIZSÄCKER (1886, 2d ed. 1892); PFLEIDERER (Das Urchristenthum, 1887); SCHAFF (separate History of the Apostolic Church, in German, 1851 and 1854; in English, 1853, etc.; also, as a new work, the first vol. of his general Church History, third revis. 1889); MCGIFFERT (in preparation).

Special works on Paul: PIERSON (Annales Paul., 1688); PALEY (Horæ Pauline, 1790); *BAUR (1845, 2d ed. 1867, 2 vols.); *CONYBEARE and HOWSON (1853 and later edd.); *LEWIN (1875); *FARRAR (1879, 2 vols.); PFLEIDERER (1885); SABBATIER (1887); *G. R. STEVENS (1892).

The recent critical reconstruction of the history of the Apostolic Age is represented by two schools, the one headed by Neander in Germany and Lightfoot in England, the other by Baur of Tübingen and Renan of France. See a résumé in Schaff's Church History, Vol. I., pp. 207-217 and 853-863 (third revision, 1889); and Lightfoot's Dissertations on the Apostolic Age, 1892.

CHAPTER CLXXIV.

PATROLOGY AND PATRISTIC.

(Altchristliche Literatur-Geschichte.)

I. Definition. Patrology, or Patristic, is a biographical and literary account of the Christian Fathers and ecclesiastical writers during the Græco-Roman age of Christianity, i. e., during the first six or seven centuries, before the separation of the Eastern and Western Churches. It is a history of ancient Christian literature. It includes also an exposition of the doctrinal and ethical opinions of the Fathers. It begins with the Apostolic Fathers, so called, at the close of the first century, and ends with Gregory I. (d. 604) in the West, and with John of Damascus (d. about 750) in the East.

Sometimes a distinction is made between Patristic and Patrology; in this case the former (patristica doctrina or theologia) is confined to the theological and doctrinal, the latter to the biographical and literary part. But they cannot be separated.

II. Division. Patristic embraces:

1. The APOSTOLIC FATHERS, i. e., the immediate disciples of the Apostles, who flourished at the end of the first and the beginning of the second century and present a faint echo of the age of inspiration. Clement of Rome, Polycarp, Ignatius

(and pseudo-Ignatius), Barnabas, Papias, Hermas, the anonymous author of the beautiful Epistle to Diognetus, and the unknown writer of The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles.

2. The ANTE-NICENE FATHERS, or the apologists and theologians of the second and third centuries, who were chiefly engaged in the defense of Christianity against Jews and Gentiles and the refutation of the Ebionite and Gnostic heresies.

(a) Greek Church: Aristides (under Hadrian), Justin Martyr (d. 166), Irenæus (d. 202), Hippolytus (d. 236), Clement of Alexandria (d. 220), Origen (d. 254), Methodius (d. 311), and others of less importance. Of these, Irenæus is the soundest divine, Origen the greatest thinker and scholar.

(b) Latin Church: Tertullian (d. about 220), Cyprian (d. 258), Minutius Felix, Arnobius. Tertullian is the most vigorous and independent thinker, Cyprian the most churchly character.

3. The NICENE FATHERS of the fourth century, who chiefly developed and defended the doctrines of the Trinity and the Incarnation in the Arian conflict from 325 to 381.

(a) Greek Church: Eusebius (the historian, d. 340), Athanasius ("the father of orthodoxy," d. 373), Gregory Nazianzen ("the theologian," d. 391), Gregory of Nyssa (d. 395), Basil the Great (d. 379), Cyril of Jerusalem (d. 386), Chrysostom (the prince of pulpit orators, d. 407), Epiphanius (the zealot for orthodoxy, d. 403).

(b) Latin Church: Hilary of Poitiers (the "Athanasius of the West," d. 368), Ambrose of Milan (d. 397).

4. The POST-NICENE FATHERS, who developed the orthodox christology and the fundamental doctrines of Christian anthropology and soteriology.

(a) Greek Church: Cyril of Alexandria (d. 444), Theodoret (d. 458), John of Damascus (d. 754).

(b) Latin Church: Jerome (d. 419), Augustin (d. 430), Leo the Great (d. 604), Gregory the Great (d. 604).

III. Value. The Fathers laid the foundations for theological literature. They were the first commentators, the first apologists, the first controversialists, the first homilists. Their position near the source of Christianity gives them a special importance as early witnesses. But they are far inferior to the apostolic grandfathers, and must be judged by the Scriptures, like all other divines. The New Testament alone is worth more than all the patristic and scholastic works put together.

To read all the Fathers is a task which can only be expected from the professional historian, and would be an idle waste of time for the ordinary student. But some knowledge of them is indispensable. Every student ought to read select works, such as the Didache, the Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians, the Epistle of Polycarp, the Epistles of Ignatius, the Epistle to Diognetus, the Apologies of Justin Martyr; the Apologeticus of Tertullian, Cyprian's Unity of the Church, Origen Against Celsus, Eusebius's Church History, Augustin's Confessions and his City of God, and some Homilies of Chrysostom.

NOTES.

1. The title CHURCH FATHER is given to those divines of the early ages who excelled in learning, judgment, piety, and orthodoxy; but in a wider sense it is also extended to other ecclesiastical writers of merit and distinction. The line of the Greek Fathers is closed with John of Damascus (d. 754), the line of the Latin usually with Gregory I. (d. 604); but the latter is sometimes extended so as to embrace the most distinguished schoolmen and mystics, as St. Anselm, St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Bernard, and St. Bonaventura.

2. The Roman Church makes a distinction between PATER ECCLESIE, DOCTOR ECCLESIE, and AUCTOR ECCLESIASTICUS. This distinction is more or less arbitrary, and made without regard to literary merit, in the interest of Roman orthodoxy.

(a) PATRES ECCLESIE are all ancient teachers who combine antiquitas, doctrina orthodoxa, sanctitas vite, and approbatio ecclesie (which may be expressed, or silent). These requisites, however, are only imperfectly combined even in the most eminent of the Fathers. Some excel in learning (Origen, Jerome); some in piety (Polycarp); some in orthodoxy (Irenæus, Athanasius, Leo I.); some in genius, vigor, and depth (Tertullian, Augustin); some in eloquence (Chrysostom); but none could stand the test of Roman orthodoxy of the Tridentine, still less of the Vatican or Ultramontane stamp, and many of them would have to be condemned as heretics. This is especially the case with the Fathers of the ante-Nicene age. See Schaff's Church History, Vol. II., pp. 625 sqq.

(b) DOCTORES ECCLESIE are the most authoritative of the Church Fathers, who in addition to the above requisites excel in learning (eminens eruditio) and have the express approbation of the Church (expressa ecclesie declaratio). See the bull of Benedict XIV., 1754: "Militantis ecclesie."

Greek Church doctors: Athanasius, Basil the Great, Gregory Nazianzen, Chrysostom, Cyril of Alexandria, John of Damascus. Latin Church doctors: Ambrose, Augustin, Jerome, Leo the Great, Gregory the Great, also Hilary of Poitiers, Anselm, Bernard of Clairvaux, Thomas Aquinas, Bonaventura, to whom have been added more recently Alfonso da Liguori (1871), and Francis of Sales (1877).

(c) AUCTORES ECCLESIASTICI: those who are less important for didactic theology, or who held questionable or heterodox opinions, as Tertullian, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Eusebius, Arnobius, Lactantius, Theodoret. Among these are some of the most learned and useful of the Fathers, especially Tertullian, Origen, and Eusebius.

CHAPTER CLXXV.

PATRISTIC LITERATURE.

The patristic literature is exceedingly rich. It began with ST. JEROME'S Catalogue of Illustrious Men (De Viris Illustribus), which comprises, in 135 numbers, brief notices of the biblical and ecclesiastical authors from St. Peter down to Jerome, and was completed in 393. It was continued by GENNADIUS about 490.*

Patristic learning has been cultivated mostly by Roman Catholic and Anglican scholars during the seventeenth century, in the apologetic or polemic interest of using the Fathers as witnesses for or against disputed doctrines and institutions.

The principal older writers on Patristic are:

1. Roman Catholics: BELLARMIN (1613), *TILLEMONT (1693), DUPIN (1715), CEILLIER (1763), LUMPER (1799), MÖHLER (1840), FESSLER (1852).
2. Protestants: SUICER (1682), CAVE (1698), OUDIN (1722), *FABRICIUS (the most learned and most useful of bibliographers, d. 1736), J. G. WALCH (1770), SCHÖNEMANN (1792).

RECENT DISCOVERIES.

Important discoveries have been made since about 1850 in biblical and ecclesiastical literature and antiquities, which supersede in large part older works and require a reconstruction and completion of the Patristic history of ante-Nicene Christianity.

The Codex Sinaiticus of the Greek Bible, with the Greek Barnabas and the Greek Hermas, found by Prof. Tischendorf on Mt. Sinai, 1859, and published 1863. In connection with this discovery may be mentioned the photographic facsimile edition of the Codex Vaticanus at Rome, 1889 (which was imperfectly known before). These two oldest known uncial manuscripts are the chief sources of the latest critical editions of the Greek Testament by Tischendorf, Tregelles, Westcott and Hort, and of the Anglo-American Revision of 1881.

The Philosophumena of HIPPOLYTUS of Rome, edited by Duncker and Schneidewin, 1859. They shed much light on ancient heresies and the commotions in the Roman Church at the beginning of the third century.

The Commentary of HIPPOLYTUS on Daniel has been made better known to us by the fourth book, which was discovered and first published by Prof. Georgiades at Athens, in 1885, and again by J. H. Kennedy in 1888, and last by Prof. Ed. Bratke, in Bonn, in 1891, with introduction and notes. Hippolytus was a millenarian, like most of the Ante-Nicene Fathers, but at the close he warns against fanatical expectations and chronological calculations of a near approach of the millennium, since Christ would not come before the close of the sixth millennium of the world. In this connection he notices incidentally the date of the nativity and crucifixion. He says (in Bratke's edition, p. 19): "The first advent of the Lord in the flesh by his birth in Bethlehem took place on the 25th of December, on a Wednesday, in the 42d year of Augustus, or 5500, dating from Adam. He suffered in his 33d year, on the 25th of March, on a Friday, in the 18th year of Tiberius, under the consuls Rufus and Rubellius." Consequently he put off the second advent to the year 500 after Christ's birth, i. e., to A. M. 6000, when the seventh millennium, or the great world's Sabbath (Rev. 20 : 1-6) will begin.

* Both are translated by E. C. Richardson in Schaff and Wace's Library of Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, Vol. III., pp. 353-402 (1892).

The Tenth Book of the Pseudo-Clementine Homilies, first published by Dressel, 1853. It supplements our knowledge of a curious type of distorted Christianity in the post-apostolic age, and furnishes, by an undoubted quotation, a valuable contribution to the solution of the Johannean problem.

The Greek HERMAS from Mt. Athos (the Codex Lipsiensis), published by Anger and Tischendorf, 1856.

A new and complete Greek manuscript of the First Epistle of the Roman CLEMENT, with several important new chapters, and the oldest written Christian prayer (about one-tenth of the whole). It was found in the Constantinopolitan or Hierosolymitan Codex belonging to the library of the Greek patriarch of Jerusalem (whose chief residence is at Constantinople) by Bryennios, 1873, and first published by him in 1875. The Second (falsely so called) Epistle of CLEMENT in its complete form (twenty chapters instead of twelve), found by the same scholar, in the same Codex. It is a post-Clementine homily, and gives us the first post-apostolic sermon.

A new Greek text of the Epistle of BARNABAS in the same Codex, which has since been transferred to Jerusalem.

A Syriac Version of CLEMENT in the library of Jules Mohl, now at Cambridge (1876).

The Didache, or Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, the most interesting and valuable of the post-apostolic writings, by an unknown author, probably of Syria, at the end of the first or the beginning of the second century, discovered by Bryennios in 1873, and first published in 1884. It created an unusual sensation, and called forth a small library of books (see the literature in Schaff's edition, pp. 140 sqq.).

TATIAN'S Diatessaron (the first Harmony of the Gospels), in an Arabic Version, discovered and published by Ciasca, 1888. Fragments of it, in an Armenian Version, with EPHRAEM'S Commentary on it, had been previously discovered and published in Latin by Mössinger, 1878.

A Syriac translation of the Apology of ARISTIDES, found at Mt. Sinai, by J. R. Harris, 1889. This Apology has been identified with the Greek text in The Lives of Barlaam and Josaphat (edited by J. A. Robinson, 1891).

Fragments of the apocryphal Gospel and Apocalypse of PETER, discovered in Upper Egypt, 1887, published by Bouriant, Paris, 1892, and by Harnack, with notes, Leipzig, 1893. Facsimile ed. by O. v. Gebhardt, 1893.

A palimpsest of a Syriac translation of the Gospels, discovered by Mrs. A. S. Lewis in the Convent of St. Catherine on Mt. Sinai, February, 1892.

The modern researches in the Roman Catacombs by CAVALIER DE ROSSI, GARRUCCI, PARKER, ROLLER, and LANCIANI are important for a knowledge of the humble life and pious death of the ancient Christians in the times of persecution, and for the beginnings of Christian art.

For new discoveries or critical discussions of old Christian literature, see OSCAR VON GEBHARDT and ADOLF HARNACK: Texte und Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Altchristlichen Literatur. Leipzig, 1882 sqq.

SOURCES—THE WORKS OF THE FATHERS.

The Benedictine editions of the Fathers, repeatedly published in Paris and Venice, are the best so far as they go, but need supplementing and correcting from more recent researches and discoveries.

Abbé MIGNE (1800–75): Patrologie Coursus Completus, etc. Petit Montrouge (near Paris), 1844–66, new ed. since 1878. The cheapest and most complete, but not the most critical, patristic library, reaching down to the thirteenth century, the Latin in 222 vols., the Greek in 167 vols., reprinted from the Benedictine and other good editions, with Prolegomena, Vitæ, Dissertations, Supplements, etc. Some of the plates were consumed by fire in 1868, but have been replaced. To be used with caution. The work is continued by Abbé HOROY and is to be brought down to the Council of Trent, in the Medii Ævi Bibliotheca Patristica, ab anno 1216 ad Conc. Trid., Paris, 1879 sqq. But this continuation belongs to mediæval Church history.

Corpus Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Latinorum, published by the Imperial Academy of Vienna and edited by a number of scholars, Vienna, 1866 sqq. More critical than Migne but not complete.

Separate Editions of the Apostolic Fathers.

J. B. LIGHTFOOT (late Lord Bishop of Durham, and the best patristic scholar in the Church of England): The Apostolic Fathers. Edited and completed by J. R. Harmer, London and New York (Macmillan & Co.), 1891. The Greek text with English translations and brief introductions, in 568 pp. It includes the Didache, without which no edition of the Apostolic Fathers, hereafter, can be complete. The most convenient edition for students.—Also the Editio minor of O. von Gebhardt, Harnack and Zahn.

Larger editions, with notes, by BP. HEFELE (R. Cath.), continued by FUNK (5th ed. 1878–81, 2 vols.); O. VON GEBHARDT, HARNACK and ZAHN (2d ed. 1878, 3 vols.); JACOBSON (2 vols.); and especially the monumental editions of the three chief Apostolic Fathers, by BP. LIGHTFOOT, namely: St. Clement of Rome (1869, 2d ed. 1890, 2 vols.); St. Ignatius and St. Polycarp (1885, 2d ed. 1891, 3 vols., a complete Corpus Ignatianum).

Separate editions of The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles (briefly called The Didache), by BRYENNOS (Greek, Constantinople, 1884); HARNACK (German, Leipzig, 1884); SCHAFF (English, New York, 1885; 3d ed. revised, 1889); and JACQUIER (French, Lyons, 1892). A facsimile of the text was published by J. RENDEL HARRIS at Baltimore (Johns Hopkins University), 1887.

The works of the Apologists have been edited by OTTO (3d ed. 1876, 9 vols.); a new edition by O. VON GEBHARDT and E. SCHWARTZ is in course of preparation (Leipzig, 1888 sqq.).

English Translations of the Fathers.

The Oxford Library of the Fathers of the Holy Catholic Church, anterior to the Division of the East and West. Translated by Members of the English Church, Oxford (1837 sqq., 48 vols.). Edited by DRs. PUSEY, NEWMAN, KEBLE, and CHARLES MARRIOTT (chiefly by PUSEY and MARRIOTT) in the interest of the Tractarian or Anglo-Catholic School. Unfinished.

The Ante-Nicene Christian Library, edited by ROBERTS and DONALDSON (Edinburgh, 1866-72, 24 vols.); republished, with additions, by the Christian Literature Co., under the editorship of BISHOP A. CLEVELAND COXE (New York, 1886, 8 vols.).

A Select Library of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers. In two series, published by the Christian Literature Co., New York and Oxford, 1886 sqq. The first series, edited by PHILIP SCHAFF, embraces the works of Augustin in 8 vols., and of Chrysostom in 6 vols. The second series, edited by PHILIP SCHAFF and HENRY WACE, now in course of publication, will embrace in 13 or 14 vols. the works of the other Fathers from Eusebius to John of Damascus (4 vols. were published till 1892, embracing, I., Eusebius; II., Socrates and Sozomenus; III., Theodoret, Jerome, and Rufinus; and IV., Athanasius).

PATRISTIC MANUALS.

ALZOG (R. Cath., d. 1878): Grundriss der Patrologie oder der älteren christl. Literaturgeschichte (Freiburg, 1866; 4th ed. 1888).

NIRSCHL (R. Cath.): Lehrbuch der Patrologie und Patristik (Mainz, 1881-85, 3 vols.).

*ADOLF HARNACK (aided by PREUSCHEN): Geschichte der Altchristlichen Litteratur bis Eusebius (1st Part, Leipzig, 1893, pp. 1020).

PATRISTIC BIOGRAPHIES.

WM. SMITH and HENRY WACE (Anglicans): A Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects and Doctrines during the first eight centuries (London, 1877-87, 4 vols.). By far the best patristic biographical dictionary in the English or any other language. A noble monument of the learning of the Church of England. Indispensable to scholars.

FREDERIC W. FARRAR (Archdeacon, Evangelical Broad-Church): Lives of the Fathers. Sketches of Church History in Biographies (London and New York, 1889, 2 vols.).

The Fathers for English Readers. A series of popular biographies in small volumes, published by the "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge," London and New York, 1879.

PHILIP SCHAFF: St. Chrysostom and St. Augustin (New York, 1891).

CHAPTER CLXXVI.

CHRISTIAN ARCHÆOLOGY.

(Comp. pp. 140 sqq.)

Christian Archæology, or Ecclesiastical Antiquities, embraces an account (fuller than Church History can give) of the institutions, creeds, liturgies, laws, canons, rites, and ceremonies of the ancient undivided Church of the East and the West. It is usually confined to the first six centuries, but sometimes carried down to the age of Charlemagne or even later.

Christian or Ecclesiastical Archæology occupies the same position and answers the same purpose in Church History as Biblical or Jewish Archæology does in exegetical literature. Works of this sort may also be arranged in alphabetical order for more convenient reference.

LITERATURE.

* JOSEPH BINGHAM (Anglican, 1668–1723): Origines Ecclesiasticæ, or The Antiquities of the Christian Church (new ed. by Pitman, London, 1840, 7 vols.). Still very valuable.

BINTERIM (R. Cath.): Denkwürdigkeiten der christl.-kathol. Kirche aus der ersten, mittleren und letzten Zeit (Mainz, 1825 sqq., 7 vols; 2d ed. 1830–40).

K. CH. F. SIEGEL: Handbuch der christlich-kirchlichen Alterthümer in alphabetischer Ordnung (Leipzig, 1835–38, 4 Bände).

J. A. MARTIGNY (R. Cath.): Dictionnaire des antiquités chrétiennes, etc. (Paris, 1848; new ed. 1877). With illustrations.

* WM. SMITH and S. CHEETHAM: Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, being a continuation of the Dictionary of the Bible (London, 1875–80, 2 vols.).

F. X. KRAUS (R. Cath.): Real-Encyclopädie der christlichen Alterthümer. Unter Mitwirkung mehrerer Fachgenossen. With illustrations, mostly taken from Martigny (Freiburg, 1882–86, 2 vols.).

* CHARLES W. BENNETT (Methodist): Christian Archæology. With an introductory notice by Dr. Piper (New York, 1888).

CHAPTER CLXXVII.

THE REFORMATION.

The Reformation of the sixteenth century is, next to the Apostolic Age, by far the most important and interesting part of Church History. It was a revival of primitive Christianity, and an assertion of the freedom and purity of the gospel against the tyranny of ecclesiastical tradition and corruption. It is the turning-point from the Middle Ages to modern times. It is the formative period of the Evangelical denominations, when the principles and institutions of Protestantism were elaborated in opposition to the papacy.

The Reformation extends, on the Continent, from A.D. 1517 to the Peace of Westphalia in 1648, which secured the legal existence of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches in the German Empire. In England, it extends to the Westminster Assembly of 1648, or rather to the Toleration Act in 1689, which gave legal existence to orthodox Dissenters.

The sixteenth century is also the time of the papal counter-Reformation under the lead of Jesuitism and the Council of Trent. It was then that mediæval Catholicism was consolidated and contracted into Romanism in opposition to the evangelical doctrines of the Reformers. In the further course of its development, it eliminated also Jansenism, Gallicanism, and other liberal tendencies, and culminated in the Vatican decree of an absolute and infallible papacy. Hence modern ultramontane Romanism, while far better than at the time of the Reformation, at least in Protestant countries and under the stimulus of Protestant energy, is in principle more opposed to Protestantism than ever before.

Since the Reformation the Christianity of Europe runs in two distinct channels: the Protestant, which represents liberty and progress, and the Roman Catholic, which represents authority and conservatism. This separation is broader and deeper than the separation of the Latin from the Greek Church in the ninth century.

The schism of the sixteenth century became the fruitful mother of other divisions. At first the Reformation resulted in three orthodox evangelical Churches: the Lutheran, the Reformed (Calvinistic), and the Anglican; while the more radical sects of the Anabaptists, Socinians, etc., were persecuted by Protestants and Romanists alike. After the long struggle between Puritanism and Prelacy in England, which was a second Reformation, and after the expulsion of the semi-papish dynasty of the Stuarts through the peaceful Revolution of 1688, the Toleration Act of May 24, 1689, gave partial relief to the Dissenters or Nonconformists and allowed them to form independent and self-governing church organizations.

From that time English Church History is divided into several denominational channels: Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Baptists, Quakers; to whom were afterwards added Methodists, Unitarians, Universalists, and others. The principle of toleration was at first very limited, and denied altogether to Romanists and Socinians; but it gradually developed into the principle of religious freedom and legal equality, which is making steady progress in Europe, and was fully carried out in the United States. Toleration is a grant of the government, and implies disapproval or censure; liberty is a gift of God, and an inalienable right of every man. Turkey and Russia are tolerant towards religions which they despise, but cannot exterminate and must tolerate as a nuisance. England and America respect and protect the freedom of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. This is the legitimate result of the Reformation, though it took three centuries to bring it about.*

The great counter-movements of Romanism and Protestantism, and the rival movements of Protestant denominations are still in progress, with no apparent approach to a reconciliation, but with a multiplication of agencies for the conversion of the whole world to Christ. Providence has great surprises in store for the future. We may hope for a higher, deeper, and broader reformation, and a new pentecostal effusion of the holy spirit of wisdom and love, which will unite what the sin and folly of man have divided. Christ's prophecy of one flock under one shepherd must and will be fulfilled in God's own good time.

LITERATURE.

I. Protestant Works on the Reformation.

The chief sources are the works of the Reformers: LUTHER, MELANCTHON, BUCER, ZWINGLI, BULLINGER, CALVIN, BEZA, CRANMER, KNOX.

GIESELER, in his Church History (Vols. IV. and V. of the English translation) gives a good sketch of the Reformation, with extracts from the sources.

K. R. HAGENBACH (d. 1874): Geschichte der Reformation, vorzüglich in Deutschland und der Schweiz (5th ed. edited by Nippold, 1887). Part of his General Church History. English translation by Miss Eveline Moore (Edinburgh, 1878, 2 vols.).

* Tolerance is a virtue and an element of Christian charity, but toleration is an intolerable insult to the divine right of religious freedom. Lord Stanhope (in a speech in the House of Lords in 1827, on the bill for the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts) said: "The time was when toleration was craved by Dissenters as a boon; it is now demanded as a right; but a time will come when it will be spurned as an insult."

MERLE D'AUBIGNÉ (d. 1872): Histoire de la réformation du 16me siècle (Paris, 1835-53, 5 vols.; 4th ed. 1861 sqq.). Extends to 1531. By the same: Histoire de la réformation en Europe au temps du Calvin (Paris, 1863-78, 8 vols., including a posthumous volume). Extends to 1542. Translated into German by Runkel (Stuttgart, 1848 sqq.). Several English editions (some of them mutilated), the best published by Longmans, Green & Co. (London, 1865 sqq.) and republished by Robert Carter & Bros. (New York, 1870-79), the first work in 5, the second in 8 vols. The first division of Merle's History of the Reformation, owing to its evangelical fervor, intense Protestantism, and dramatic eloquence, has had an enormous circulation in England and America by means of the Tract Societies and private publishers.

LEOPOLD VON RANKE (d. 1886): Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (6th ed. Leipzig, 1881, 6 vols.). A standard work from the standpoint of secular history. English translation in part.

L. HÄUSSER (d. 1867): Geschichte des Zeitalters der Reformation, 1517-1648. Edited by Oncken (Berlin, 1868, 867 pp.). Abridged English translation by Mrs. Sturge (New York, 1874).

GEO. P. FISHER (Prof. of Church History in Yale College): The Reformation (New York, 1873; also in 1891). A comprehensive work, clear, calm, judicial, with a useful bibliographical Appendix (pp. 567-591).

GEORG WEBER: Das Zeitalter der Reformation (new ed., Leipzig, 1886; the 10th vol. of his Weltgeschichte).

CHARLES BEARD (Unitarian, d. 1888): The Reformation in its Relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge, Hibbert Lectures (London, 1883; 2d ed. 1885). Liberal and able. German translation by F. Halverscheid (Berlin, 1884).

G. EGELHAAF: Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation (Halle, 1885). In the spirit of Ranke, with polemical reference to Janssen; it extends from 1517 to the Peace of Augsburg, 1555 (450 pp.).

FR. VON BEZOLD: Geschichte der deutschen Reformation (Berlin, 1886).

L. KELLER: Die Reformation und die älteren Reformparteien (Leipzig, 1885). In sympathy with the Waldenses and Anabaptists.

PHILIP SCHAFF: History of the Christian Church; Vol. VI., the German Reformation (New York and Edinb., 1889); Vol. VII., the Swiss Reformation (1892). Full lists of the Reformation literature in Vol. VI., pp. 89-97 and 99-105; Vol. VII., 12-20 and 223-232.

Biographies of the Reformers:

Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der luther. Kirche, herausgeg. von J. HARTMANN u. A., eingeleitet von K. J. NITZSCH (Elberfeld, 1861-83, 10 vols., including KÖSTLIN'S Luther, which was published last).

Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, herausgeg. von J. W. BAUM, R. CHRISTOFFEL, K. R. HAGENBACH, und A., eingeleitet von K. R. Hagenbach (Elberfeld, 1857-63, 10 vols.).

The best biographies of Luther by JULIUS KÖSTLIN (large ed. in 2 vols., 1883, small ed. in 1 vol., with illustrations; English translation, 1883); of Zwingli by MÖRIKOFER (1869, 2 vols.); of Calvin by P. HENRY (1835-44, 3 vols.); STÄHELIN (1863, 2 vols.) and KAMPSCHULTE (1872, unfinished); of Cranmer by STRYPE (Memorials by Cranmer, new ed. 1840); of Knox by THOS. MCCRIE (1841) and WM. TAYLOR (1885).

II. Roman Catholic Works on the Protestant Reformation.

IGNATIUS DÖLLINGER (Prof. of Church History in Munich, since 1870 Old Catholic, d. 1891): Die Reformation, ihre innere Entwicklung und ihre Wirkung im Umfange des Luther. Bekenntnisses (Regensburg, 1846-48, 3 vols.; 2d ed. 1853). A learned collection of testimonies against the Reformation and its effects from contemporary apostates, humanists, and the Reformers themselves (Luther and Melancthon), and those of their followers who complain bitterly of the decay of morals and the dissensions in the Lutheran Church. The author has, nevertheless, after he seceded from the Roman communion, passed a striking judgment in favor of Luther's greatness (quoted in Schaff's Church History, VI. 742).

JOH. JANSSEN (d. 1892): Geschichte des deutschen Volkes seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (Freiburg i. B. 1876-88, 6 vols.), down to the beginning of the Thirty Years' War, 1618. This masterpiece of ultramontane historiography is a counterpart of Ranke's work, and is written with great learning and ability from a variety of sources (especially the archives of Frankfurt, Mainz, Trier, Zürich, and the Vatican). It soon passed through twelve editions, and called out able defences of the Reformation by Kawerau, Köstlin, Lenz, Schweizer, Ebrard, Baumgarten, and others, to whom Janssen calmly replied in An meine Kritiker (Freiburg i. B., tenth thousand, 1883, 227 pp.), and Ein zweites Wort an meine Kritiker (Freiburg i. B., twelfth thousand, 1883, 144 pp.). He disclaims all "tendency," and professes to aim only at the historical truth. Admitted, but his standpoint is false, because he views the main current of modern history as an apostasy and failure; while it is an onward and progressive movement of Christianity under the guidance of Divine Providence and the ever-present spirit of its Founder. He reads history through the mirror of Vatican Romanism. Pope Leo XIII. has praised Janssen as "a light of historic science and a man of profound learning."

III. The Papal Counter-Reformation.

The chief sources are the polemical writings of ECK, COCHLÆUS, EMSER, PIGHIUS; the Regesta of Leo X., ed. by Hergenröther; the Monumenta Reform. Lutheranae (1821-25), ed. from the papal archives by Balan, 1884; and the Acts of the Council of Trent, collected by Le Plat (Monumenta ad Hist. Conc. Trid., 1781-87, 7 vols.).

L. V. RANKE (Prot.): Die römischen Päpste in den letzten vier Jahrhunderten (1834; 8th ed. Leipzig, 1885, 3 vols.). A standard work on the revival of the papacy among the Romanic nations from the Protestant standpoint.

MANDELL CREIGHTON (Anglican): History of the Papacy during the Period of the Reformation (London, 1882-87, 4 vols.). Includes the earlier period of the Renaissance.

LUDWIG PASTOR (R. Cath.): Geschichte der Päpste seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters (Freiburg i. B., 1886 sqq.; to be completed in 6 vols.). A counterpart of Ranke's Popes, as Janssen is of his Germany in the period of the Reformation; a standard work of modern ultramontane historiography, equal to Janssen's History of Germany. Pastor includes, like Creighton, the popes of the Renaissance.

WILHELM MAURENBRECHER (Prot., d. 1892): Geschichte der katholischen Reformation (Nördlingen, Vol. I., 1880).

The histories of the Council of Trent (Sarpi and Pallavicino), and the literature on the order of the Jesuits.

CHAPTER CLXXVIII.

AMERICAN CHURCH HISTORY.—ROMAN CATHOLIC AMERICA.

“Westward the course of empire takes its way;
The four first acts already past,
A fifth shall close the drama with the day;
Time’s noblest offspring is the last.”

BISHOP BERKELEY.

America is the middle continent, looking eastward to Europe and Africa, and westward to Asia and Australia.

Providence has divided the Western Hemisphere between the Latin and the Teutonic races, and assigned to the former the southern, to the latter the northern half of the continent. The South is almost entirely Roman Catholic, the North predominantly Protestant, as in Europe.

The history of the Roman Church in America may be divided into three periods: Spanish, French, and modern Anglo-American (in the United States).

Spanish America.

American Church History, in the widest sense, begins with the discovery of America at the end of the Middle Ages, a quarter of a century before the Reformation. Christopher Columbus* was an ambitious adventurer, an avaricious gold-hunter, and a cruel despot, but also a great explorer, a devout Catholic, and a religious enthusiast. He believed in the existence of a new world, and he found it in spite of the combined opposition of ignorance, prejudice, and bigotry. All things are possible to faith, and nothing great and good is possible without faith. True to his name, “Christbearer,” he planted the cross on the first island he discovered (October 12, 1492), and called it San Salvador in honor of the Saviour. He hoped to apply the profits of his discovery to a new crusade for the rescue of Jerusalem from the tyranny of the Turks. He concludes his first letter, after his return from the first voyage, addressed to Gabriel Sanchez, Treasurer of the King of Spain, with this eloquent appeal :

* An Italian by birth (Cristoforo Colombo), a Spaniard by adoption (Christóbal Colón), a cosmopolitan by mission and merit. America ought to have been called Columbia.

“Therefore let the king and queen, the princes and their most fortunate kingdoms, and all other countries of Christendom give thanks to our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who has bestowed upon us so great a victory and gift. Let religious processions be solemnized; let sacred festivals be given; let the churches be covered with festive garments. Let Christ rejoice on earth as he rejoices in heaven, when he foresees coming to salvation so many souls of people hitherto lost. Let us be glad also, as well on account of the exaltation of our faith, as on account of the increase of our temporal affairs, of which not only Spain, but universal Christendom, will be partaker. These things that have been done are thus briefly related. Farewell.

“Lisbon, the day before the Ides of March [March 14, 1493].” *

His royal patron, Isabella the Catholic, whom Shakespeare calls “the queen of earthly queens,” pledged her jewels for his enterprise, in the prospect of extending the kingdom of Christ as well as that of Spain, and ordered that the Indians should be treated with the utmost kindness and carefully instructed in religion.

The West India Islands, Mexico and Peru, and all the countries of Central and South America, were discovered and peopled by Spaniards and Portuguese, and were nominally converted to the Roman Catholic faith. Unfortunately, the conversion was darkened by the curse of filthy lucre and by atrocious cruelties to the innocent natives. An Indian chief of Cuba declared before he was burned alive, that gold was the real god of the Christians, and he refused the offer of a place in heaven if Spaniards should be found there. But we must not forget the noble Christian philanthropy of Bartholomeo de las Casas, “the apostle of the Indies,” and the unselfish devotion of the Dominican and Franciscan missionaries who have earned a place among the heroes and martyrs of the Christian Church.

The Spanish missions, radiating from Mexico, extended across the continent from Florida to California. The oldest city in the present (not in the original) territory of the United States is St. Augustine, in Florida, which was founded in 1565,

* See the translation of The Letter of Columbus on the Discovery of America, a facsimile of the Pictorial Edition; printed by order of the Trustees of the Lenox Library (New York, 1892, p. 12).

forty-two years before the settlement of Jamestown, in Virginia (1607); but Florida is spotted with the first Protestant blood shed on American soil. An ominous beginning of sectarian strife.*

The Roman Church thus gained a vastly larger territory in America than she lost in Europe through the Protestant Reformation.

But the conquests of Spain north of Mexico were of short duration. Spain ceded Florida to the United States in 1819; Mexico lost Texas in 1845, and California and New Mexico in 1848.

Alexander VI. (a Spaniard, and the most wicked of popes) made a great mistake when, in the fullness of his apostolic power as the Vicar of Christ, he divided the New World between the crowns of Spain and Portugal (ignoring the French), as a perpetual inheritance. So Columbus was mistaken to the hour of his death in the belief that he had simply discovered a western passage to India. The mistake was perpetuated in the name of the natives.

New France.

In the seventeenth century, Catholic France entered the lists for the possession of the new hemisphere, and extended her magnificent empire from the mouth of the St. Lawrence over the Northwest, and down the Mississippi Valley to the Gulf of Mexico. That empire was not founded by the voluntary immigration of individuals and companies, like the English and Dutch settlements, but by the despotic will of a king for the extension of his power and of the Roman Church, and was kept under his control. It was not based upon political and religious liberty, but upon the feudalism and sacerdotalism of mediæval Europe. It transplanted the principles of the papal counter-Reformation under the lead of the order of the Jesuits.

Quebec, founded by Champlain in 1608, and Montreal, founded

* The Spaniards, in 1564, attacked the Huguenot settlers and hanged them on the trees, "Not as Frenchmen, but as heretics." The Frenchmen soon afterwards avenged this barbarity by hanging the Spanish garrison on the same trees, "Not as Spaniards, but as cut-throats and murderers." The Spaniards held the Fort of St. Augustine till 1586, when it was captured by Sir Francis Drake. In 1763 the whole province of Florida was ceded to Great Britain in exchange for Cuba. By the treaty of 1783 it was retroceded to Spain, and the greater part of the inhabitants moved to the United States. Finally in 1819 Spain ceded the whole province to the United States. Florida was admitted as a State into the Union in 1845.

in 1642, became the strategic centers of New France, and of the Roman Catholic propaganda. All honor to the missionaries of the type of Xavier! The apostolic labors of Isaac Jogues, Brébeuf, Charles Garnier, Gabriel Lalemant, and other Jesuits, in the well-nigh fruitless attempt to convert and civilize the Indian savages, form one of the brightest chapters in the missionary history of Christianity. They combined the bold enterprise of the crusaders with the patience of the early martyrs. They encountered incredible dangers and hardships in the unbroken wilderness and among untamed savages, and met the most cruel death with cheerful composure. The long sufferings of Jogues (1607-46) among the Mohawks, who killed him at last, are almost without a parallel in the annals of martyrdom.

The unrighteous revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1685) was applied also to New France, and Louis XIV. directed the governor of Canada to quarter his troops in the houses of any Huguenots, or to imprison them. The governor informed the king that there was not a heretic in Canada. To this day the French Canadians are stricter Romanists than the French themselves.

But France lost her magnificent empire in Canada and on the Mississippi in the long conflict with England, which culminated in the victory of Wolfe over Montcalm on the Plains of Abraham at Quebec, 1759, and was concluded by the peace of 1763. France took revenge by aiding the American Colonies in the War of Independence. Napoleon sold the territory of Louisiana to the United States in 1803.

The loss of the Latin race was the gain of the Anglo-Saxon race, and led to the supremacy of the United States and of Protestantism on the northern continent.

The present strength and future importance of the Roman Church in America must be sought not in French Canada, nor in Spanish America, but in the United States, where she is enriched by Teutonic and Celtic blood, and stimulated by the progressive spirit of Protestantism. There is good ground for the expectation that in becoming Americanized she will be also liberalized.

LITERATURE.

I. Spanish America:—The principal authorities on the Columbian discovery and the conversion of the Indians are the letters and journals of COLUMBUS; the writings of BART. DE LAS CASAS, BERNALDEZ, OVIEDO, PETER MARTYR, HERRERA; and the invaluable collection of documents by NAVARRETE (d. 1844, Coleccion de viages, etc., Madrid, 1825-37, 5 vols.; French translation, Paris, 1828, 3 vols.; also an Italian version).

Of modern writers we mention ROBERTSON (History of America); WASHINGTON IRVING (Life and Voyages of Columbus, a rose-colored view); PRESCOTT (History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella); HEFELE (Der Cardinal Ximenes, 2d ed. 1851); WINSOR (Columbus, 1891, very unfavorable to Columbus); JOHN FISKE (The Discovery of America, 1892, 2 vols.); CASTELAR (Life of Columbus, 1892); EDWARD JOHN PAYNE (History of the New World called America, London and New York, 1892 sqq.); and the extensive Columbus literature of 1892.

II. French America:—JOHN GILMARY SHEA (R. Cath., d. 1892): History of the Catholic Missions among the Indians of the United States (New York, 1855).—FRANCIS PARKMAN: France and England in North America (Boston, 1865-92, 6 parts in 7 vols.). Especially Part II, under the separate title: The Jesuits in North America in the Seventeenth Century (Boston, 1867, and several later editions). This is the standard work on the conflict between France and England in North America, based upon original documents. Parkman does full justice to the heroic Jesuit missionaries, but distinguishes two periods in their missions, the earlier of which was strictly religious, the later more political and unsuccessful.

CHAPTER CLXXIX.

CHURCH HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

North America was first discovered under the flag of England (by John Cabot, 1497, and his son Sebastian C., 1498). It was settled chiefly by Englishmen, and predestinated for the Teutonic races of northern Europe. It was built up by Protestant genius and enterprise. It has far outstripped Latin America in progress, prosperity, and influence upon the Church and the world, and will soon rival with Europe as a theater of history.

American Church History, in the narrower sense, is therefore chiefly a church history of the United States and of Canada. It begins in the seventeenth century, with the settlements of Virginia (1607), of New York (1609), and of New England (1620). The Puritan colonies of Plymouth, Salem, Boston, Hartford, and New Haven were of a strictly religious character, and have determined and controlled American theology and church life in the colonial period.

No nation, except the Jewish, has such a religious origin. The fathers and founders of this Republic fled from persecution, and made sacrifices for their faith; they were not gold-hunters, like the Spaniards and Portuguese, but sought first of all a home for the free worship of God according to the dictates of their conscience. The blessing of their piety and virtue, their reverence for the Word of God, the Lord's Day, and the Church of God, remain to this day as a safeguard against the influx of modern worldliness, indifference, and infidelity.

The roots of the American Churches are in Europe. New England Congregationalism is directly descended from English Puritanism; the Presbyterian Churches are chiefly derived from Scotland and the north of Ireland; the Protestant Episcopal Church from the Church of England; the Dutch Church from Holland; the Lutheran Church from Germany and Scandinavia; the German Reformed Church from the Palatinate and Switzerland; the Roman Catholic Church is recruited from all countries of Europe, but chiefly from Ireland and Germany. The two largest denominations, however, the Baptist and the Methodist, were from the start Anglo-American, and grew up simultaneously in England and in the American colonies, the one through the labors of Roger Williams in Rhode Island, the other through the evangelistic visits of John Wesley and George Whitefield. Unitarianism, Universalism, and Mormonism are of native American origin; the first, however, was preceded by a similar movement in England.

It is remarkable that the older denominations are more conservative and orthodox in America than in Europe. While Rationalism has revolutionized the Protestant Churches of Germany, Switzerland, France, and Holland, the Churches of the United States hold fast to their traditional creeds. One reason is that the universities of Europe, including the theological faculties, are institutions of the State, which is indifferent to creeds; while American schools of theology are founded, supported, and ruled by the Churches.* But a change is coming on with the immense progress of biblical and historical research in recent times. An increasing number of American scholars complete their studies in European universities and in Bible lands, and on their return take an active share in solving the problems of modern theology.†

* There are exceptions, as the Union Theological Seminary of New York, and some Congregational and Baptist institutions, which were founded by individuals.

† The pioneer of independent theological learning in America is Dr. Edward Robinson, the author of the Biblical Researches, and of a Hebrew American Christianity starts with the invaluable inheritance of the Christian civilization of Europe. It covers an immense field of virgin territory with inexhaustible natural resources. It is rapidly increasing by peaceful emigration from the different nationalities of the Old World, with many of its best as well as its worst elements. It embraces all the Churches and sects, which import their traditions and peculiar gifts as moulding forces of the future, and enjoy full liberty of action on a basis of equality before the law. It furnishes all the material for a final settlement of the controversies of Christendom.

To a superficial observer blinded by papal or infidel preconceptions, the ecclesiastical map of the United States presents a wilderness of warring sects, a bellum omnium contra omnes. But they are nearly all imported from Europe, and only brought into closer proximity. There are as many sects in England, and as many monastic orders in the Roman Church; while there is in America a growing tendency towards practical co-operation in common Christian and philanthropic work and moral reform movements.

American Church History is divided into a colonial and a national period. The colonies were from the beginning refuges for people of different denominations—Puritans, Presbyterians, Huguenots, Baptists, Quakers, Roman Catholics, etc.—and were thus predestined to protect religious freedom on a larger scale than any other country. But this manifest destiny was not fully understood till after the War of Independence, which united the separate colonies with their different sects into one nation under one Constitution, with equal protection to all.

The distinctive character of American Christianity since the adoption of the Federal Constitution is the voluntary principle of self-support and self-government in friendly relation to the State. The Apostolic and ante-Nicene Church was likewise self-supporting and self-governing, but persecuted by the heathen State; while the American government is based upon Christian civilization. There is here no State Church domineering over dissenting sects. No apology is needed for being a Dissenter. The law makes no difference between churches and sects, or churchmen and dissenters, but recognizes a Greek Lexicon (d. 1863). He was in his day almost the only American divine known in Europe. Sidney Smith used to ask: "Who reads an American book?" Now he might ask: "Who does not read American books?"

nizes all Christian denominations alike and treats them with even justice. We have a free Church in a free State. The relation of Church and State is based upon Christ's declaration to "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22 : 21). Each of the two powers is entirely independent in its own sphere, and not allowed to intermeddle with the rights and duties of the other; but the State protects the Church in her property and liberty of action, and the Church strengthens the moral foundations of the State.

The separation of Church and State, therefore, is not owing to religious indifference or disrespect, and must not be understood to be a separation of the nation from the Church; on the contrary, the American people are as Christian as any people in Europe, and do much more for the support of Church and school than any government.* But they have learned from the past that the union of Church and State is a source of religious persecution and civil war, and that religion flourishes best in the atmosphere of freedom. Hence the first Amendment of the Federal Constitution forbids Congress to establish a State Church, or to interfere with the liberty of religion. Similar guarantees are given in the constitutions of the several States.

The voluntary principle has so far worked very successfully, and shown its superiority over State-churchism. It has not diminished the respect for the Church and the clergy, but increased it, and has improved the quality and efficiency of ministers. It has stimulated and developed individual energy and liberality in building churches, supporting pastors, establishing colleges, theological seminaries, and other literary and benevolent institutions, and in promoting the cause of Christianity at home and abroad. There is no good cause which appeals in vain to American generosity.

This freedom of a self-supporting and self-governing Christianity is a new chapter in history, and the strength and glory of America. The spread of the gospel and the future of the human race will largely depend upon the combined energies of the people of Great Britain and the United States.

* In this judgment the most intelligent foreign writers on America who have visited the country, are fully agreed. Alexis de Tocqueville says that "there is no country in the whole world in which the Christian religion retains a greater influence over the souls of men than in America" (Democracy in America, I. 285). The incidental judgment of Prof. James Bryce of Oxford on religion in America is equally favorable (The American Commonwealth, II., 246, 567).

The Church History of the United States has yet to be written, and this is a task worthy of the time and strength of rising scholars; for this is the land of freedom and of the future. Denominational and local histories we have in abundance, and the number is fast increasing, but there is no worthy history of American Christianity which represents it as an organic whole, in its genesis and growth, its connections with the mother Churches in Europe, its characteristic peculiarities, and its great mission for the future.

Special chairs ought to be established in our seminaries for American Church History.

LITERATURE.

ROBERT BAIRD (Presbyt., d. 1863): Religion in America (New York, 1856). Not a history, but a collection of material for history down to that year.

DANIEL DORCHESTER (Methodist): Christianity in the United States from the First Settlement down to the Present Time (New York, 1888, pp. 795). A considerable improvement upon the former, as an industrious collection of facts, statistical tables and maps, but marred by numerous inaccuracies. The author is a sanguine optimist with Methodist sympathies.

PHILIP SCHAFF: Church and State in the United States, or the American Idea of Religious Liberty and its Practical Effects. With Official Documents (New York, 1888).—America; a Sketch of its Political, Social, and Religious Character (New York, 1855. Lectures delivered in Berlin and first published in German).—Der Bürgerkrieg und das christliche Leben in Nord Amerika (Berlin, 1866).—Christianity in the United States (New York, 1879. An address before the Seventh General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Basel).—Art. "Nord Amerika" in *Herzog*², X. (1882), 631–642.

JOHN F. HURST: Short History of the Christian Church (New York, 1893), pp. 431–643.

FRIEDRICH NIPPOLD (Prof. of Church History in Jena): Amerikanische Kirchengeschichte seit der Unabhängigkeitserklärung der Vereinigten Staaten (Berlin, 1892, pp. 270). This is the first part of the 4th vol. of his Handbuch der neuesten Kirchengeschichte seit der Restauration von 1814 (Elberfeld, 1867 sqq.; 4th ed. revised 1889 sqq.). The American history, as may be expected, is inferior in size and importance to any of the first three vols., which are devoted to the modern Church History of Europe, but fuller and more accurate than other German works on the American Churches. Nippold is an admirer of Bunsen and Döllinger, and finds his Church ideal in Anglo-American episcopacy (with lay representation and two houses), and in Old Catholicism. He gives lists of the leading divines of the different denominations, and has used some of the latest sources of information (as the "Papers of the American Society of Church History"). He marks a great advance over the views of Gieseler on America (quoted p. 11), who thought that love of money, cold selfishness, hypocritical piety, overweening conceit, and contempt for everything European are the leading traits (Hauptzüge) of the American character, especially of the Yankees, New Yorkers and Pennsylvanians! (See the posthumous volume of his Kirchengeschichte, V. 372). Such an opinion, which makes the very truth lie, was very common among scholars on the Continent some thirty or fifty years ago. The philosopher Schelling told me that Mormonism seemed to him the only important fact in the Church history of America. Hegel ignores America altogether in his Philosophie der Geschichte, although he teaches (p. 546) that the history of the world is the development of the idea of liberty.

The best foreign works on the political institutions of the United States are ALEXIS DE TOCQUEVILLE'S Democracy in America (1835, translated by Henry Reeve, 1845), and JAMES BRYCE'S American Commonwealth (2 vols., 1889, 3d ed. rev. 1892).

The chief secular historians of America, who must be consulted by the Church historian, especially in the colonial period, are GEORGE BANCROFT (Colonial History down to Adoption of the Federal Constitution, last revision, 1882-85); RICHARD HILDRETH (Colonial History to the End of Sixteenth Congress, 1849-52); JUSTIN WINSOR (Narrative and Critical History; a collection of independent essays by a number of scholars, with a full bibliography; 8 vols., 1889-92); H. VON HOLST (Constitutional and Political History of the United States, from 1750 to 1859, translated by J. J. Lalor and A. B. Mason; 6 vols., 1876-89); J. B. McMASTER (History of the People of the United States, vols. 1-3, 1884-91, to be completed in 5 vols.); JAMES SCHOULER (History of the United States under the Constitution, 1783-1861; 5 vols., 1880-91); HENRY ADAMS (Histories of the Administrations, beginning with Jefferson's; 9 vols. covering period from 1801 to 1817, thus far published, 1889-91); and EDWARD JOHN PAYNE, already noticed in Chapter CLXXVIII.).

"The American Society of Church History," founded in 1888, at its third meeting, held in Washington, December 31, 1890, resolved to undertake the preparation of a critical American Church History, in a series of denominational histories on a uniform plan by a number of competent and unsectarian scholars. It will be published in New York, under the supervision of an editorial committee, consisting of Dr. Schaff, Bishop Potter, Prof. Geo. P. Fisher, Bishop Hurst, Prof. E. J. Wolf, Rev. H. C. Vedder, and Rev. S. M. Jackson, LL.D., in ten or more volumes, to be concluded by a compendious history of American Christianity as a whole.

CHAPTER CLXXX.

ECCLESIASTICAL MONOGRAPHY.

Monography is a most useful department, and indispensable to the general historian. It furnishes him with characteristic details and fills the gaps. In the ever-widening extent of history the monographic treatment is the best way of effectually promoting an accurate general history. Few are called to write a universal history of Christianity, but many may successfully cultivate portions of it.

A monographer views his subject under all its aspects and environments, in its antecedents and consequents, and weaves into it a picture of the whole age to which it belongs. He may select a person, or a doctrine, or any specific topic of history.

1. BIOGRAPHICAL monographs are thorough and exhaustive histories of distinguished persons of more or less representative character. They follow them from the cradle to the grave, into the secrets of their private life as well as into their public labors, and show how they are children of their age, and in turn have influenced and shaped their age.

2. DOCTRINAL monographs follow a particular doctrine from its germ in the New Testament through the successive ages of its development to its ultimate matured shape as it appears in the formulated statements of creeds and confessions of faith.

3. Any other topic of church history may be treated monographically, i. e., with minute reference to all the details and subordinate relations which must necessarily be omitted in a general Church History.

LITERATURE.

I. Biographical monography begins, we may say, with Eusebius' Life of Constantine (d. 337), which, however, is more of a eulogy than impartial and independent history. The most extensive collection of biographies of Saints is the Acta Sanctorum of the BOLLANDISTS, begun in 1643 and not yet completed. TILLEMONT treated the history of the first five centuries monographically (Mémoires, 1693 sqq.).

Among Protestants, NEANDER has given the greatest impulse to this method of historiography, by his Julian the Apostate, Tertullian, St. Chrysostom, St. Bernard. We have now monographs on most of the great church fathers, popes, schoolmen, mystics, monks, reformers and missionaries, too numerous to mention. One of the latest and best is Dr. R. S. STORRS' Bernard of Clairvaux (New York, 1892). FR. BÖHRINGER (assisted by his son, PAUL B.) has written the history of the whole Church, from the second century to the Reformation, in biographies (Die Kirche Christi und ihre Zeugen, new ed. 1873-78, in 12 vols.).

II. Doctrinal and dogmatic-historical monographs are of more recent origin. The ablest specimens are BAUR'S History of the Doctrine of the Trinity and Incarnation (1843, 3 vols.), and his History of the Doctrine of the Atonement (1838); DORNER'S History of Christology (1839, enlarged ed. 1856, 2 vols.); MÜLLER'S Doctrine of Sin (6th ed. 1878, 2 vols.; more dogmatic than historical); RITSCHL'S The Christian Doctrine of Justification and Atonement (3d ed. 1889, 3 vols.; the first vol. is historical); EB-RARD'S History of the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper (1846, 2 vols.); AL-

GER's History of the Doctrine of a Future Life (1863; 12th ed. 1885; with bibliography by Prof. Ezra Abbot, which is a model of accuracy and completeness).

CHAPTER CLXXXI.

LITERATURE OF GENERAL CHURCH HISTORY.

A fuller account in SCHAFF's Introduction to his History of the Apostolic Church (1853), pp. 51-135, and in his History of the Christian Church, vol. i., 27-53 (third revision, 1889).—BAUR: Die Epochen der kirchlichen Geschichtsschreibung (1852).—HASE: Kirchengeschichte auf der Grundlage akademischer Vorlesungen (1885), vol. i., 35-60.

The literature of Church History is the most extensive, next to that of the Bible. The time is coming when a general knowledge of the history of Christianity will be considered an essential part of liberal culture. For the Church of Christ is the central institution in the world, as the Bible is the Book of books. The profoundest theme of history is the problem of religion and the conflict between faith and unbelief.*

But as the Bible, owing to its very importance, has been more frequently misunderstood and misinterpreted than any book, so has Church History been more misrepresented and perverted than secular history, for partisan and sectarian interests. Facts may be obscured, exaggerated, or underestimated under the bias of preconceived notions; and thus the truth itself may be "made void because of tradition" (comp. Matt. 15: 6).

The ancient historians, in their zeal for orthodoxy, rarely do justice to heretics. The historians of the Greek Church are polemical against the Latin, and the historians of the Latin Church against the Greek. Heretical historians are equally unjust to orthodoxy.

The war between Romanists and Protestants is reflected in their historians, and carried on even to our days.

* This was acknowledged even by such a worldly poet as Goethe, who says: "Das eigentliche, einzige und tiefste Thema der Welt—und Menschengeschichte, dem alle übrigen untergeordnet sind, bleibt der Konflikt des Glaubens und des Unglaubens. Alle Epochen, in welchen der Glaube herrscht,—sind glänzend, herzerhebend und fruchtbar für Mit- und Nachwelt. Alle Epochen dagegen, in welchen der Unglaube, in welcher Form es sei, einen kümmerlichen Sieg behauptet, und wenn sie auch einen Augenblick mit einem Scheinglanz prahlen sollten, verschwinden vor der Nachwelt, weil sich niemand gern mit Erkenntniss des Unfruchtbaren abquälen mag."—(Israel in der Wüste, 1797, Westöstl. Divan, p. 313.)

At the end of the last century, rationalism took hold of Church History in the spirit of hostile neutrality and indifference, and turned the most important doctrinal controversies into worthless logomachies, and the whole history into a bedlam.*

But the true historic spirit which aims at the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, is making steady progress and dominates in the great historians of the nineteenth century.

CHAPTER CLXXXII.

CHURCH HISTORIANS BEFORE THE REFORMATION.

EUSEBIUS, "the father of Church History," or the Christian Herodotus, who saw the last persecution and the triumph of the Church (d. 340): 'Εκκλησιαστικὴ Ἱστορία, from the birth of Christ to Constantine the Great (324). A work of permanent value as a source.

His successors in the Greek Church: SOCRATES till 439, SOZOMEN till 423, THEODORET till 428.

Best English translation of the Greek historians, with commentary, in the Second Series of the Nicene and Post-Nicene Library of the Fathers (N. Y. and Oxf., 1890-92, vols. i.-iii.).

The Latin Church contented itself with extracts from Eusebius and his continuators.

CASSIODORUS (d. 562): Historia tripartita.—RUFINUS (d. 410) supplemented Eusebius.—SULPICIOUS SEVERUS (d. 410): Historia Sacra or Chronica.

The Middle Ages produced valuable material for history, especially in the form of annals and biographies of popes, bishops, monks, missionaries, and saints, but no great general Church History.

In the period of the Renaissance, the spirit of historical criticism was awakened by LAURENTIUS VALLA (d. 1457), who may be called a forerunner of Erasmus. He ventured to criticise and correct Jerome's Vulgate, rejected Christ's letter to King Abgar of Edessa as a forgery, threw doubts on the apostolic origin of the Apostles' Creed, and destroyed the hierarchical fiction of the Donation of Constantine as "contradictory, impossible, stupid, barbarous and ridiculous." For these views, which are now universally accepted even by Roman Catholic scholars, he excited the suspicion of the Roman Inquisition, but escaped its punishment by the hypocritical confession that he believed as Mother Church believed.

* Of this kind of Church historiography Goethe said in the Zahme Xenien:

"Mit Kirchengeschichte was hab ich zu schaffen?
Ich sehe weiter nichts als Pfaffen!
Wie's um die Christen steht, die Gemeinen, Davon will mir gar nichts erscheinen."

CHAPTER CLXXXIII.

HISTORIANS OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH CENTURIES.

Church History, as a critical science, began with the Reformation, which emancipated the mind from the tyranny of an infallible traditionalism. It roused the spirit of inquiry which separates facts from fiction and truth from error by proving all things and holding fast to what is good (I. Thess. 5:21). But for a long time history was subordinated to dogmas and carried on in a polemic and sectarian spirit. The Protestant historians saw in the pope the Antichrist, in the mediæval Roman Church the great apostasy predicted in prophecy, and in the Reformation the restoration of the Apostolic Church; while the Roman Catholic historians represented the Reformation as an apostasy from the true historic Church of Christ, and blackened the character of the Reformers as rebels and arch-heretics.

MATTHIAS FLACIUS, a learned and zealous Lutheran and unsparing foe of Papists, Calvinists, and Melancthonians (d. 1575), aided by princes and cities and by several Protestant divines then at Magdeburg (the stronghold of the uncompromising enemies of the Imperial Interim), prepared the Magdeburg Centuries (Ecclesiastica Historia N. Testamenti, Basil., 1559-74), covering thirteen Christian centuries in as many large folio volumes, the first history from a Protestant point of view in opposition to the claims of Romanism. An epoch-making work of herculean labor, but overgrown with polemics.

In the Reformed Church, J. H. Hottinger (1651), Frederic Spanheim (1689), and Sam. Basnagc (1699) wrote with equal learning and zeal, but more sober judgment, against the papal Church.

Their pessimistic view of the "dark" ages, illuminated by a few sporadic witnesses of the truth, controlled and obscured Protestant Church History down to the eighteenth century, and still prevails in popular antipopery literature, though abandoned by the best Protestant historians.

Cardinal CÆSAR BARONIUS (1538-1607), the father of papal historiography, wrote Ecclesiastical Annals, in 12 folio volumes, down to the year 1198 (published at Rome 1588-1607), in rhetorico-polemical style, and in defense of Romanism against the Greek Church and against Protestantism, with occasional reference to Flacius, whose Centuries he called "Centuries of Satan." It is a work of immense learning and unwearied industry, drawn largely from the treasures of the Vatican and still valuable for its material, but to be used with caution on account of the numerous chronological errors, spurious documents and legends. It was continued in the same spirit and style, but with inferior talent by Raynaldi till 1565, by Laderchi till 1571, by Theiner till 1585, and others. Two French Franciscans, Antoine and François Pagi, wrote correcting and supplementary criticisms (Critica hist.-chronologica in Annales Baronii, 1705-27, 4 vols.), which are incorporated in Mansi's ed. of Baronius and his successors, Lucca, 1738-59, 38 vols. fol. ; new ed. by Aug. Theiner, Bar-le-Duc, 1864 sqq. (to be finished in about 50 vols.).*

The monumental works of Flacius and Baronius furnished abundant material for abridgments, with which the two Churches were contented for many years, till, in the middle of the seventeenth century, a new zeal for history was stimulated in the French Catholic Church by the controversy with Protestants and Jansenists. The best work was done by Gallicans and Jansenists. They were aided by the invaluable patristic and archæological labors of the Benedictines of the Congregation of St. Maur, as Mabillon, Massuet, Montfaucon, and others.

NATALIS (NOEL) ALEXANDER, a Dominican at Rouen, professor in Paris (d. 1724, eighty-six years old and blind), wrote an Historia Ecclesiastica, V. et N. Testamenti till 1600, in 26 vols. (Paris, 1676-88). Put on the Index by Innocent XI. (1684) on account of its Gallicanism; hence expurgated editions.

SEBASTIEN LE NAIN DE TILLEMONT (d. 1698), a pupil and friend of the Jansenists, in his still valuable Memoires (Paris, 1693-1712, 16 vols.), prepared in thirty years the history of the first six centuries (till 513) from the words of the original sources, translated into French after the bibliographical model of Plutarch, and in the spirit of liberal Gallican Catholicism.

CLAUDE FLEURY (educated under Bossuet and Fénelon, confessor of Louis XV., d. 1723) carried his Histoire ecclesiastique down to 1414, in 20 vols. (Paris, 1691-1720); continued by CLAUDE FABRE till 1595, in 16 vols. Popular, Gallican, in elegant French. Partly translated under the direction of John H. (Cardinal) Newman before his transition to Rome (Oxford, 1842).

* Hase (i., 36 sq.) thus characterizes the two representative Church historians of the sixteenth century: "Flacius und Baronius im schroffsten Gegensatz stehn doch auf gleichem Standpunkte. Gemeinsam ist ihnen die Anerkennung der apostolischen Kirche als der vollkommenen Gestalt der Kirche, auch der ersten 5 Jahrhunderte, als massgebend für alle Zeit, doch so dass Flacius einzelne NAEVI, Muttermale, bei den grossen Kirchenlehrern findet. Gemeinsam die supernaturale Betrachtung: in alttestamentlicher Anschauung unmittelbar aus Gottes Hand Lohn und Strafe. Beide haben ihre Lust am Wunderbaren, die Centurien haben ein eignes Kapitel für MIRACULA und PRODIGIA, doch weniger zur Verherrlichung der Heiligen, mehr als göttliche Strafgerichte. Gemeinsam endlich die dualistische Weltanschauung: die Welt- und Kirchengeschichte ein Kampf der beiden jenseitigen Mächte, des dreieinigen Gottes und des Satan, wenn auch kein unentschiedner. Ihr Grundunterschied ist: Flacius ist historischer Pessimist, Baronius Optimist. Ihm [Baronius] erscheint die katholische Kirche wesentlich immer als dieselbe siegreich über alle Gegensätze. Er leugnet nicht dunkle Zeiten, das 10te Jahrhundert eine vorübergehende Verdunkelung, um die rettende Wundermacht desto glänzender zu zeigen. Christus im Seesturm ist ihm ein Sinnbild für alle Zeiten: immer bleibe dem Frommen der Trost, auch wenn Christus schlafe, dass er im Schifflein des h. Petrus schläft. Nur die gottlosen Neuerer, die nichts wissen vom Glauben, auf den sie sich berufen, verfallen, wenn sie das Schifflein Petri einmal von den Wogen überfluthet sehn, in die Lästerung, dass Christus nicht mehr darin sei. Flacius dagegen sah nach dem 5ten Jahrhundert eine immer dunklere Verfinsterung, nach dem gemeinsamen Glauben seiner Kirche: Rom Babylonien, das Papstthum das Mysterium Iniquitatis, der Papst der Endechrist, der sich im Tempel Gottes anbeten lässt. Eine revolutionäre Geschichtsanschauung, die nichts Vergangenes zu achten hat."

CHAPTER CLXXXIV.

HISTORIANS OF THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

GOTTFRIED ARNOLD (d. 1714), a learned mystic of the Pietistic school of Spener, took a new departure, in opposition to the intolerant orthodoxy of the Lutheran Church, in his Impartial History of the Church and of Heretics, to A.D. 1688 (Unpartheiſche Kirchen- und Ketzerhistorie, Frankfort, 1699 sqq., 4 vols. fol.). He advocated the interests of practical piety, and the claims of heretics and schismatics, and all those who suffered persecution from an intolerant hierarchy and orthodoxy. His historical pessimism goes farther than that of Flacius, and hands the whole historic Churches—Greek, Roman and Protestant—over to the reign of Antichrist, leaving in each only a little flock that never bowed the knees to Baal. But he boldly broke down the walls of bigotry, and without intending it, prepared the way for a skeptical treatment of history. He first substituted the German for the customary Latin in learned works, but his style is rude and insipid.

The History of the Church of Christ by JOSEPH MILNER (Vicar of Hull, d. 1797; continued by Isaac Milner and Stebbing) is written in the Pietistic spirit of Arnold, but for popular edification, and is free from polemics.

J. LORENZ VON MOSHEIM (Chancellor of the University of Göttingen, d. 1755): Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, in Latin (Helmstädt, 1755). Mosheim marks an epoch. He was a moderate and impartial Lutheran, educated in the school of the classical and French historians, and the first German who raised Church History to the dignity and interest of an art. In this respect he may be compared to Bossuet. He surpassed all his predecessors in skillful construction, clear though mechanical and monotonous arrangement, critical sagacity, pragmatic combination, freedom from polemical passion, almost bordering on cool indifferentism, and in easy elegance of Latin style. He follows the centurial plan of Flacius, but in simpler form, and combines it with the division into four periods (from Christ to Constantine, from Constantine to Luther, from the Reformation to 1700), and with the mechanical division into external and internal history, into prosperous and calamitous events. His Institutes were translated and supplemented by Maclaine and Murdock (5th ed. New York, 1854, 3 vols.; best ed. by W. Stubbs, London, 1863), and continued in use as a text-book much longer in England and America than in Germany.

J. M. SCHRÖCKH, a pupil of Mosheim, but touched with the neological spirit of Semler, and professor of poetry, afterwards of history, at Wittenberg (d. 1808), is the author of the most extensive German work on Christian Church History (Leipzig, 1768–1810, in 45 vols.). It reaches with its continuation by TZSCHIRNER to the end of the eighteenth century, is compiled from the sources in a mild and candid spirit, and written in clear but diffuse style. It adopts the periodic plan instead of the centurial, which was still followed by Mosheim. Very unequal in different parts, but useful for occasional reference. Nobody ever read it through except the author and proof-reader.

The Church History of H. P. C. HENKE (Professor in Helmstädt, d. 1809), continued by VATER (Braunschweig, 1788-1820, 9 vols.), is rationalistic and ignores the divine side of the Church. He derives the chief events from hierarchal ambition, and represents "Athanasius as a stubborn crank, Augustin as an unmasked Manichæan and dialectical babbler, and Catherine of Siena as a silly old woman." (Hase, vol. i., p. 43.)

SPITTLER (d. 1810) of Göttingen wrote a compend (1782, 6th ed. 1827) in the same derogatory spirit, which destroys all real interest in Church History except that of mere literary and antiquarian curiosity.

CHAPTER CLXXXV.

HISTORIANS OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

(1) The Protestant historians take the lead.

AUGUST NEANDER (originally DAVID MENDEL, a convert from Moses and Plato to Christ, a Christian Nathanael without guile, Professor of Church History in Berlin—where he lived like one of those learned Benedictines of Paris, absorbed in patristic studies and in teaching enthusiastic students; d. 1850) marks an epoch in this study, and is called the modern "father of Church History." He rescued it from the icy grasp of rationalism, infused into it the warm love of Christ, the ever-present Head of the Church, and made it a rich fountain of edification as well as instruction. His General History of the Christian Religion and Church (Hamburg, 1825-52, 11 parts; 3d ed. 1856 in 4 large vols., with an introduction by Dr. Ullmann; translated by Torrey, Boston, 1847-52; new ed. with complete index, 1881, 6 vols.) extends to the Council of Basel, 1430. It is characterized by profound learning, impartial judgment, spiritual insight into religious life and the development of Christian doctrines, and by evangelical catholicity and loving sympathy with all types of Christian piety. It is defective in the secular, political and artistic sections, and somewhat diffuse and monotonous in style. Neander's motto was, "Pectus est quod theologum [not disertum] facit." He felt most at home in the invisible church of thought and spiritual life, and in those periods where religion has nothing to do with politics, nor the Church with the State—except to be persecuted, as in the first three centuries. He dictated the last pages, on "the Friends of God," the forerunners of the Reformation, a few hours before his death, and then said to his faithful sister: "I am weary; let us go home."*

Equally valuable, though of an altogether different plan and spirit, is the Church History of J. C. L. GIESELER (Professor in Bonn, afterwards in Göttingen, d. 1854). It was published in Bonn, 1824-56, in 5 vols. (nominally in 3 vols., but in 8 parts); 4th ed. 1844-57; the last two volumes, from 1648 to 1848, were posthumously edited from lectures by Dr. Redepenning (1855 and 1857), and are of inferior merit as they lack the critical notes. English translation by Davidson and Hull in England, revised and completed by

* Comp. Schaff: August Neander. Erinnerungen (Gotha, 1886); and Harneck, Rede auf Neander zur Feier seines 100 jähr.-Geburtstags, 17 Jan. 1889 (Berlin, 1889).

H. B. Smith, and after the death of the latter, 1877, by Lewis French Stearns and Miss Mary Robinson of New York (with preface by Philip Schaff, 1857-80, in 5 vols.).*

Gieseler was an honest, sober, level-headed rationalist of the school of Wegscheider, but with more learning and appreciation of history than his rationalistic predecessors. The first three volumes, edited by himself, extend to the Treaty of Westphalia, 1648 (in the English translation, the first four and a part of the fifth volume). The text (except in the last two volumes) is a dry, meager and unsympathetic, but impartial skeleton of facts and dates; the body of the work consists of carefully selected extracts and proof texts from the sources which furnish the data for an independent judgment. He makes each age speak for itself. He follows the method of Tillemont, but reverses his order by throwing the sources into footnotes. His critical and literary notes are also very valuable. Neander and Gieseler have been the chief feeders of modern manuals. They supplement each other; the one furnishes a subjective reproduction, the other the raw material, of Church History. They are not yet superseded.

The Church History of FERDINAND CHRISTIAN VON BAUR, the founder of the Tübingen School (d. 1860), was partly published after his death (Tübingen, 1863, in 5 vols.). The first two volumes comprising the first five centuries are the best, and contain his original investigations. He was an indefatigable scholar, distinguished for philosophic grasp, critical combination, and bold conjectures in the treatment of the apostolic and post-apostolic ages, and the ancient heresies and systems of doctrine. He revolutionized the history of apostolic and post-apostolic Christianity, and resolved its rich spiritual life of faith and love into an intellectual process of conflicting tendencies, which started from an antagonism of Petrinism and Paulinism, and were ultimately reconciled in the compromise of ancient Catholicism. He applied the Hegelian conception of a dialectical process of thesis, anti-thesis, and synthesis to primitive Christianity; but he overstated the conflict of Peter and Paul, who were agreed in principle, and he put all but four of Paul's epistles into the post-apostolic age of reconciliation. He fully brought to light, by a keen critical analysis, the profound intellectual fermentation of the primitive Church, but eliminated from it the supernatural and miraculous element; yet as an honest and earnest skeptic he admitted at last a psychological miracle in the conversion of St. Paul, and bowed before the greater miracle of the resurrection of Christ, without which the former is an inexplicable enigma. A most important concession. His critical researches and speculations gave a powerful stimulus to a reconsideration and modification of the traditional views on early Christianity; but the Tübingen school had to abandon some of his positions, and is now superseded by the more positive school of Ritschl and Harnack.

The Church History of CARL RUDOLPH HAGENBACH (Professor in Basel, d. 1874; published at Leipzig, 1873, 7 vols.; revised ed. by Nippold, 1885

* The section on American Church History (vol. v., pp. 370 sqq.) is omitted in the translation, as it betrays so much ignorance and prejudice that it would diminish the just respect for his great learning and good judgment in the body of the work. See above, pp. 293 sq.

sqq.) is a well-written, popular, yet scholarly digest for the educated lay reader in the irenic, evangelical, catholic spirit of Neander, and gives also due attention to ecclesiastical poetry and art. His history of the Reformation has been translated into English by Miss Eveline Moore (Edinburgh, 1878, 2 vols.), and his history of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries by Bishop Hurst (New York, 1869, 2 vols.).

KARL HASE (Professor at Jena) began to publish his Lectures on Church History in 1885, when death interrupted him at the age of ninety (Jan. 3, 1890), but the second and third vols. were edited by Dr. Krüger (Leipzig, 1892). They are an expansion of his Manual. Hase was an amiable and most accomplished scholar, a master of elegant, clear, pithy historiography, with kindly sympathy for all that is great, good, and beautiful, and with cultivated taste for the poetry of religion.

To Hase and to Hagenbach belongs the merit of having introduced Church History into general literature and made it interesting to the cultivated laity. Their works should be translated or reproduced in English.

GEORGE WADDINGTON (Dean of Durham, d. 1869) prepared three volumes on the history of the Church before the Reformation (London, 1835), and three volumes on the Continental Reformation (1841), in the spirit of evangelical and liberal Anglicanism.

JAMES CRAIGIE ROBERTSON (Canon of Canterbury and Professor of Church History in King's College, d. 1882) brings his History of the Christian Church from the apostolic age down to the beginning of the Reformation (64-1517). The work was first published in four octavo vols. (1854 sqq.), and then in eight duodecimo vols. (London, 1874), and is the best, as it is the latest, general Church History written by an Episcopalian. It deserves praise for its candor, moderation, and careful indication of authorities.

ETIENNE L. CHASTEL (a descendant of the Huguenots, Professor of Church History in the National Church at Geneva, d. 1886): Histoire du Christianisme depuis son origine jusqu'à nos jours (Paris, 1881-85, 5 vols.). An able work, influenced by Neander.

PHILIP SCHAFF (Professor of Church History in New York): History of the Christian Church (New York and Edinburgh, 1859 sqq., 5th ed. revised and enlarged, 1889-92, 7 vols. Vol. v. is not yet completed. The first three vols. appeared also in German, Leipzig, 1868, but are superseded by the later English revisions). The work so far comes down to the close of the sixteenth century, and will be continued. It is written from the Anglo-German and Anglo-American standpoint, and brings the past in living contact with the present.

(2) Roman Catholic historians.

COUNT STOLBERG (a convert, d. 1819): Geschichte der Religion Jesu Christi, to A.D. 430 (1806-18, 15 vols.); continued by KERZ and BRISCHAR to 1245 (1825-64, 38 vols.). This work is nearly as extensive as the Annals of Baronius, and marks the beginning of the Roman Catholic revival in Germany, but has no critical value.*

* Hase (i., 56) thus happily characterizes Stolberg: "Dem Göttinger Dichterbund angehörig mit Hölty und Foss unter Klopstock's Patronat, dann mit Goethe hat er ein Stück Jugend in übersprudelnder Kraft durchlebt, bis die aristokratische Natur durchbrach, welche im Mittelalter ihre Ideale fand, bei weiblicher Sehnsucht nach Fesseln. Er hat der katholischen Kirche sein

J. ADAM MOEHLER (d. 1838): Kirchengeschichte, published after his death by Gams, Regensburg (1868, 3 vols.). It is very unequal, and lacks the author's own finish.

J. J. DÖLLINGER (since 1870 an Old Catholic, and excommunicated, d. 1891): Manual of Church History till 1517 (2d ed. 1843, 2 vols.). English translation by Dr. Edward Cox, London (1840-42, 4 vols.). Döllinger was regarded in the Roman Church before he opposed the Vatican Council and the dogma of papal infallibility as the most learned Church historian.

ABBÉ ROHRBACHER (Professor of Church History at Nancy, d. 1856) wrote an extensive Histoire universelle de l'Église catholique, including that of the Old Testament, down to 1848 (Nancy and Paris, 1842-49, 29 vols.; 4th ed. by Chantral, 1864 sqq.). A free German translation by Hülskamp, Rump, and others appeared at Münster, 1860 sqq. He is less liberal than the great Gallican writers of the seventeenth century.

DARRAS BAREILLE and FÈVRE: Histoire de l'Église (Paris, 1861-88, 44 vols.). According to Dr. Funk, who is himself a Roman Catholic historian, this extensive work is still more behind the age than Rohrbacher's.

CHAPTER. CLXXXVI.

MANUALS, TEXT-BOOKS, AND TABLES OF GENERAL CHURCH HISTORY.

Most of the recent Manuals of Church History have been written by German Protestants, because Church History is more thoroughly studied in the universities of Germany than elsewhere.

(1) Protestant Manuals:

* HASE (Prof. in Jena, d. 1891), 11th ed. 1886 (a masterly miniature picture).—NIEDNER (Prof. in Berlin, d. 1865), 1866 (very learned and very heavy).—GUERICKE (Prof. in Halle, d. 1878), 9th ed. 1866 (high Lutheran, contracted in spirit and involved in style); freely translated, in part, by Dr. Shedd.—EBRARD (Prof. in Erlangen, d. 1888), 1865-67, 4 vols. (Reformed and polemical).—* KURTZ (Prof. in Dorpat, d. at Marburg, 1889), 13th ed. 1892, 2 vols.; translated from the 9th and partly from the 10th ed. by J. Macpherson, 1888-90, 3 vols. (evangelical Lutheran, more liberal in the later edd.).—HASSE (Prof. in Bonn, d. 1862), 1864 (posthumous).—HERZOG (Prof. in Erlangen, d. 1884), 1880-82, 3 vols., 2d ed. by Koffmane (evangelical Reformed).—H. SCHMID (Prof. in Erlangen, d. 1885), 1881, 2 vols. (Lutheran).—* WILHELM MOELLER (Prof. in Kiel, d. 1891), 1891, 2 vols.

warmes Herz und seine protestantische Bildung gebracht. Als er zu den Füßen des Papstes den Frieden gefunden, hat er mehr mit dem Enthusiasmus des frommen Dichters als mit dem Ernste des besonnenen Geschichtschreibers die alttestamentliche Geschichte, die er nicht verstand, und die Geschichte des kirchlichen Alterthums, die er so eben lernte, geschrieben. Es war doch von grosser Wirkung; ähnlich wie Baronius stand Stolberg einer neuen Weltbildung gegenüber, man erfuhr, dass auch die moderne Bildung zur Verherrlichung der katholischen Kirche zu brauchen sei, und der Katholicismus fasste wieder Vertrauen zu seiner Vorzeit."

(the first vol. translated by A. Rutherford, 1892).—* K. MÜLLER (Prof. in Breslau, School of Ritschl), 1892 sq., 2 vols.

HARDWICK (Anglican, d. 1859), 1853; 3d ed. by Stubbs, 1873, 2 vols.; one on the Middle Ages and one on the Reformation.—PHILIP SMITH, London and New York, 1881 and 1885, 2 vols. to the Reformation, with illustrations (vol. i. largely extracted from Schaff).—* G. P. FISHER (Prof. in Yale University), New York, 1887.—JOHN F. HURST, New York, 1893.

(2) Roman Catholic Manuals:

RITTER, 6th ed. 1862.—* ALZOG (Prof. in Freiburg, d. 1878), 10th ed. by Kraus, 1882, 2 vols.; English translation, Cincinnati, 1874, in 3 vols.—* JOSEPH HERGENRÖTHER (Cardinal, d. in Rome, 1890): Handbuch der allgemeinen Kirchengeschichte, 3d ed. Freiburg, 1884, 3 vols.—BRÜCK, 4th ed., 1888.—* KRAUS (successor of Alzog in Freiburg), 3d ed. 1887.—* FUNK (successor of Hefele in Tübingen), 2d ed. 1890, 1 vol. (liberal but too brief).

(3) Greek Orthodox Manuals:

PHILARET BAPHEIDES (Prof. of Church History in Chalee): Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Ἱστορία. Constantinople, vols. i. and ii., 1884 and 1886. Extends to the fall of Constantinople, 1453. Bapheides is the successor of Bryennios (the discoverer of the Didache), and, like him, is well acquainted with German Protestant literature.

Another compend of Church History in Greek by DIOMEDES KYRIAKOS appeared at Athens, 1881, in 2 vols.

(4) Chronological Tables:

WEINGARTEN: Zeittafeln, Berlin, 3d ed. 1874.—H. B. SMITH: History of the Church of Christ in Sixteen Chronological Tables, New York, 1860 (the best, but too large in size for convenient use).—F. X. KRAUS (Roman Catholic Professor, first in Strassburg, then at Freiburg, i. B.): Synchronistische Tabellen zur Kirchengeschichte, Trier, 1876; and Synchronistische Tabellen zur christlichen Kunstgeschichte, Freiburg, 1880.

(5) Historical Atlases have been mentioned in Chapter CXLVIII., p. 243.

CHAPTER CLXXXVII.

HINTS FOR THE STUDY OF CHURCH HISTORY.

1. The study of Church History, like that of the Bible, should run through the whole course, instead of being made an appendix, as is the case in many theological seminaries.

2. Church History and the Bible are the training-school for forming theological opinions. Facts should control dogmas, and not vice versa.

3. God made history, and not man, and man could not make it any better. Our business is humbly to learn, and to adore Providence even in its darkest chapters. What we cannot understand now we shall understand hereafter.

4. Impress on the memory and imagination a general chronological map of the leading epochs, dates, events, and personalities of history, with the help of the latest and best manuals, tables, and atlases.

5. Study first and last Biblical history, especially the Life of Christ and the Apostolic Age, which are of perennial interest, ever fresh and ever new, and must regulate the Church in all ages.

6. Study next the Reformation history, which is the fountain of modern history.

7. Then the history of your own country and denomination in which you expect to labor.

8. Select one particular period or department for exhaustive study, and cultivate it as your favorite field.

9. Aim always, first and last, at an accurate knowledge of the facts and truth.

10. Study Church History not only for instruction, but also for warning and encouragement to work for the kingdom of God in the sphere to which God has assigned you.

11. The most useful manuals are those of HASE, KURTZ, MÜLLER, and FISHER. The first three give the literature in the respective sections; Fisher is the best guide for recent English and American Church History, which is very imperfectly treated in German works, although there is a steady improvement in the more recent editions. For an advanced study, Gieseler and Neander are recommended, but need supplementing, especially in the Ante-Nicene age.

12. Church History may be profitably introduced into the pulpit and lecture-room by a series of sketches of great and good men, as Abraham and faith; Moses and the law; Isaiah and the promise; Peter the Confessor; Paul the Missionary; John the Seer; Polycarp the Martyr; Justin Martyr the Apologist; Tertullian the Polemic; Origen and Christian scholarship; Athanasius and the divinity of Christ; Augustin and Christian experience; Chrysostom and the pulpit; Hildebrand and the papacy; St. Bernard and monasticism; Columbus and the Discovery of America; Erasmus and the Greek Testament; Luther and justification by faith; Calvin and election by grace; Wesley and revival; Zinzendorf and heathen missions; Livingstone and darkest Africa; the Salvation Army and darkest England.

BOOK IV.

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER CLXXXVIII.

GENERAL CONCEPTION.

Systematic Theology represents the Christian religion as a scientific system. It derives its material from three sources: the Bible, the Church, and Christian experience. It arranges the material so as to form an organic whole, and adjusts it to the prevailing spirit of the Church and the existing state of philosophic and scientific culture. In its method it is often more or less influenced by the current philosophy, but it may and ought to be independent in spirit and aim.

Christianity is not systematic as to outward form, any more than nature is a system of natural science and natural philosophy. It is a divine revelation, a series of supernatural truths and facts; it is spirit and life, and has the freshness and directness of life. But its truths and facts are all consistent with each other and constitute together a beautiful organism. It is the business of the systematic theologian to bring out the unity, harmony and completeness of the revealed religion.

Systematic Theology may also be called Philosophical, or better, Speculative Theology, because it aims to show the reasonableness of the Christian religion and brings it into contact with the scientific thinking of the age.

CHAPTER CLXXXIX.

DEPARTMENTS OF SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY.

Systematic Theology embraces:

1. Christian Apologetic.
2. Biblical Theology.
3. Christian Dogmatic.
4. Christian Symbolic.
5. Christian Polemic and Irenic. 6. Christian Ethic. 7. Ecclesiastical Geography and Statistic. 8. Formal Encyclopædia.

Apologetic is a vindication of Christianity against its opponents. Biblical Theology is a systematic view of the teaching of the Scriptures. Dogmatic is an exposition of the doctrines of Christianity. Symbolic is comparative Dogmatic. Polemic is directed against false conceptions of Christianity and internal controversies. Irenic seeks a higher unity above the dogmatic differences, or the concord in the discord of creeds. Polemic and Irenic may as well be combined with Symbolic. Ethic is the theory of Christian life. Ecclesiastical Geography and Statistic is a description of the social status of the Christian world. Encyclopædia is an outline of all the theological sciences in their unity and mutual relations. This is substantially the same with Propædeutic, but gives also an outline of the contents.

Schleiermacher and Rothe comprise Systematic Theology under Historical Theology, except Apologetic and Polemic, which Schleiermacher assigns to Philosophic Theology, while Rothe assigns Ethic and Apologetic to what he calls Speculative Theology, and Polemic to Practical Theology.

FIRST SECTION: APOLOGETIC, OR EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

CHAPTER CXC.

IDEA AND AIM OF APOLOGETIC.

Apologetic or Apologetic Theology is the proper scientific term for what is popularly called "Evidences of Christianity."

It means a self-vindication of the Christian religion against the attacks of its enemies. It aims to prove the divine origin and character of Christianity, as the perfect religion for the whole human race.

Hence Apologetic must take the first place (in order, though not in importance) among the branches of Systematic Theology. It lays the foundation for all the rest.

It is closely connected with Philosophy of Religion, and forms, together with Dogmatic and Ethic, the connecting link between Philosophy and Theology.

NOTES.

Apologetic is from ἀπολογία, apologia, a defense or a discourse in defense of some person or doctrine or cause which has been assailed or misrepresented. It has the claim of priority over other terms. The earliest defenses of the Christian faith by Justin Martyr, Tertullian, etc., were called Apologia, Apologeticus, and the writers are called Apologists. The theological use of apology must be carefully distinguished from the popular English use of the term, which makes it equivalent to an excuse, and implies weakness and censurableness of the person or thing excused. The existence of apologies of Christianity presupposes simply the fact of its being assailed, and its readiness and ability to defend itself. Some German writers distinguish between Apology, a popular defense, and Apologetic, a scientific or learned defense. So Stirn, who calls his valuable popular work: Apologie des Christenthums für gebildete Leser (Stuttg., 2d. ed. 1856).

Schleiermacher makes Apologetic the first in the order of the theological sciences. But Christianity cannot be defended before it is made known from the Bible and Church History.

CHAPTER CXCI.

NECESSITY OF APOLOGETIC.

Apologetic is chronologically the oldest branch of Christian theology. It was called forth by the attacks of Jews and Gentiles to which Christianity was exposed at its first appearance (comp. Luke 2 : 34). In more recent times it is required by the assaults of skepticism, and infidelity within the Church. Christians should be "ready always to give answer* to every man that asketh them a reason concerning the hope that is in them, yet with meekness and fear, having a good conscience" (I. Peter 3 : 15).

Apologetic has also an inward necessity. It arises from the impulse of the Christian faith to justify itself before the tribunal of our own reason and to arrive at a clear insight into the grounds on which its convictions are based. Even if idolatry and infidelity should entirely disappear, there would still be room for Apologetic to satisfy the mind of believers. It is an integral part of theology as a science.

The attacks upon Christianity may proceed either from rival religions, as Judaism, heathenism, Mohammedanism; or from the various forms of infidelity within the Church, as Deism, Rationalism, Pantheism, Atheism, Materialism, Agnosticism. The former attacks have long since been overcome, or have ceased to be formidable; the latter are still going on and will continue to the end of time. In this world the Church will always be a militant body. Error assumes ever new shapes and forms, and must be met in all its varieties. Every age must produce its own apologies adapted to prevailing tendencies and wants.

The principal objections to Christianity are in substance always the same, and have been often refuted. Celsus, Porphyry and Julian have anticipated the most plausible arguments of modern Deists and Rationalists.

On the other hand, the chief arguments for Christianity are also the same now as they were in the first and second centuries. Justin Martyr, Origen and Tertullian already urged with great freshness and force the arguments from prophecy and types, from miracles, from the rapid spread of Christianity amidst persecution, from its moral fruits, its reasonableness, and its general adaptation to all classes and conditions of man ; in short, all the more important external and internal evidences, which reappear in every modern Apology, and will retain their convincing force to the end of the world.

* Literally: for apology, ἔτοιμοι αἰεὶ πρὸς ἀπολογίαν.

But the evidences change in force and importance according to the wants of the times and modes of attack. At present the internal and moral evidences are of far greater weight than the external evidences of prophecies and miracles. It is now better understood than ever before that the best argument for Christianity is Christ himself.

While error grows weaker with every defeat, truth grows stronger with every victory. If it were not for the obstinacy of the human heart, and the fact that infidelity borrows its best weapons from Christian civilization, it would have disappeared long ago.

CHAPTER CXCII.

LIMITS OF APOLOGETIC.

Apologetic is confined to a discussion of the fundamental claim of Christianity—that is, to the proof that it is the final and perfect religion of God for all men. It does not enter into the several doctrines of Christianity, nor into denominational differences.

In the general defense of Christianity we ask not for the church relations of the apologist, but stand on common ground against the common enemy. Unitarians, like Priestly, Channing and Martineau, as well as Roman Catholics, have written excellent works in defense of Christianity. Apologetic is polemical only against outsiders and unbelievers, and stops at the outer court of the temple. To extend it to internal controversies is to confound it with other branches of Systematic Theology, and to anticipate discussions which properly belong to Dogmatic, Symbolic and Polemic, or to the historical criticism and defense of the Bible.

At the same time there is room for popular apologetic works of a more extended range, as well as for special discussions of particular objections to Christianity. Every doctrine of the gospel may be assailed or misrepresented and is capable of an apologetic or polemical treatment. We only wish to guard the boundary lines of the theological sciences and to prevent interference and repetition.

CHAPTER CXCIII.

VALUE AND USE OF APOLOGETIC.

The value of Apologetic is not so much the conversion of infidels, who seldom read theological books. The Roman emperors and provincial governors to whom the Apologies of Justin Martyr and other fathers were addressed probably never saw a copy of them. Infidelity strikes its roots in the heart and the will rather than in the intellect.*

The Christian system is far more rational than any other religion or system of philosophy, and needs not fear the closest scrutiny. It is the most satisfactory solution of the problems of life. If many difficulties still remain, they are such as can as little be solved by philosophy. Christianity numbers among its adherents the greatest intellects and profoundest thinkers from St. Paul, Origen and Augustin down to Luther, Calvin, Pascal, Bossuet, Dante, Shakespeare, Milton, Bacon, Newton, Kepler, Leibnitz, Schleiermacher, Schelling, Tennyson, Gladstone, and many others, before whom the stars of infidelity dwindle into obscurity.

Conversion begins with a sense of sin and the need of redemption. With the humility and trust of little children must we enter the kingdom of heaven. All honest doubters, like Thomas, who sincerely seek after truth and long for salvation, may be materially aided by apologetic discussions; but proud and self-righteous Pharisees and frivolous Sadducees cannot be converted by any amount of argument.

The chief use of Apologetic is for the Church itself. It strengthens the faith of the believer, it gives him a clearer insight into the immovable foundations of his faith, and shows that Christianity has been equal to any emergency, has outlived

* This is popularly expressed in the well-known lines:

“A man convinced against his will
Is of the same opinion still.”

all attacks, and grows stronger and stronger with every generation. Every assault ends in a defeat of the assailing force and a new triumph of the assailed. Every new form of error leads to a clearer and stronger statement of the correspondent truth; and so it will be to the end of time. The past of Christianity is sure, and insures the future. The gates of hell shall never prevail against the Church. It is the only possible religion for the civilized world, and religion is as necessary to society as the air we breathe.

CHAPTER CXCIV.

EPOCHS OF APOLOGETIC.

The history of Apologetic may be divided into two main periods:

I. Defense of Christianity against rival religions.

1. Against Judaism. 2. Against Paganism (polytheism, idolatry, Græco-Roman mythology). 3. Against Mohammedanism.

These enemies have been defeated by argument long ago, although Judaism and Mohammedanism remain unchanged. Of modern forms of heathenism the only formidable rivals are Brahmanism, Buddhism, and the state religion of Confucius in China. These must be met by learned missionaries.

II. Defense of Christianity against modern infidelity, which is nominally Christian and fights Christianity with the weapons of Christian culture.

1. Against Deism in England. 2. Against Deism and Atheism in France. 3. Against Rationalism and Pantheism in Germany and other countries. 4. Against Materialism and Positivism. 5. Against the objections of the natural sciences (geology, astronomy, biology, etc.). 6. Against Agnosticism.

The former enemies opposed to Christianity another religion and form of worship; the latter would substitute for it the supremacy of reason and science or literary culture and humanitarianism—in one word, modern civilization, which, in its best elements, is itself a product of Christianity.

CHAPTER CXC.

APOLOGETIC LITERATURE.

I. ENGLISH WORKS.

JOSEPH BUTLER (Bishop of Durham, d. 1752): The Analogy of Religion Natural and Revealed to the Constitution and Course of Nature (1736, and very many edd., English and American). The chief philosophical work against English Deism. It exerted and still exerts a great influence among English-speaking people, but is little known on the Continent. Butler vindicates the Christian religion by analogical evidence from the beautiful harmony of the system of nature and the system of revelation. His argument is negative and probable rather than positive and demonstrative, and hence better calculated to silence objections than to establish truth; yet in its total effect it carries strong conviction to the mind.

NATH. LARDNER (a Presbyterian, leaning to Arianism, d. 1768): Credibility of the Gospel History (1727-57) and Collection of Ancient Jewish and Heathen Testimonies (1764-67). The most learned historical work against Deism, and a storehouse of external evidences of the Gospels.

WILLIAM PALEY (Archdeacon of Carlisle, d. 1805): Evidences of Christianity (1794, many edd.); Natural Theology (1802). Against Deism. His Horæ Paulinæ (1790) show the credibility of the Acts from undesigned coincidences in the Acts and the Epistles of Paul.

ADAM STOREY FARRAR (Canon and Professor in the University of Durham): Critical History of Free Thought, Bampton Lectures for 1862.

HORACE BUSHNELL (Congregational minister at Hartford, Conn., d. 1876): Nature and the Supernatural as together Constituting the One System of God (New York, 1858). The work of an original genius.

JAMES MCCOSH (late President of Princeton College): The Supernatural in Relation to the Natural (New York, 1862).

* GEORGE P. FISHER (Professor of Church History in Yale University): The Grounds of Theistic and Christian Belief (New York, 1853).

RICHARD S. STORRS (Congregational minister in Brooklyn): The Divine Origin of Christianity indicated by its Historical Effects, Ely Lectures in Union Theological Seminary (New York, 1884).

LEWIS FRENCH STEARNS (Professor of Theology at Bangor, Me., d. 1892): The Evidences of Christian Experience, Ely Lectures for 1890 (New York, 1890).

* ALEXANDER B. BRUCE (Professor of Apologetics in Glasgow): Apologetics; or, Christianity defensively stated (Edinb. and New York, 1892). He concludes his work (p. 514) as follows: "In the foregoing pages the authority of Christ has been exalted above that of all other claimants. But it has not been set in antagonism to any legitimate authority. Christ's attitude is not one of zealous antagonism, but of grand comprehension. His teaching sums up and crowns the best thought of the wise in all ages and lands. It is throughout in affinity with reason. The just, wholesome authority of the Church depends on the measure in which Christ's spirit dwells in her. 'The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.' Therefore Christianity is the absolute religion. It is indeed, God's final word to men. On the simple principle of the survival of the fittest, it is destined to perpetuity and to ultimate universality."

G. M. MEAD (Professor in Hartford, Conn.): Supernatural Revelation: An Essay concerning the Basis of the Christian Faith (New York, 1889).

Small but useful Manuals of Christian Evidences, by C. A. ROWE (London, 1887), and G. P. FISHER (New York, 1892).

The BAMPTON LECTURES, a series of eight lectures or sermons, annually delivered at the University of Oxford since 1780, instituted by John Bampton, Canon of Salisbury.

The ELY LECTURES, and MORSE LECTURES of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, since 1866.

II. GERMAN WORKS.

CHR. E. LUTHARDT: Apologetische Vorträge über die Grundwahrheiten des Christenthums (Leipzig, 1864; 10th ed. 1883; Engl. transl., The Fundamental Truths of Christianity, Edinb., 1865; 6th ed. 1885). Die modernen Weltanschauungen und ihre praktischen Konsequenzen (Leipzig, 1880; 3d ed. 1892). Against Rationalism, Pantheism, Materialism and Pessimism.

J. H. A. EBRARD (d. at Erlangen, 1888): Apologetik (Gütersloh, 1874 sq., 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1878-81; English translation by W. Stuart and J. Macpherson, Edinburgh, 1887, 2 vols.).

THEODOR CHRISTLIEB (Professor in Bonn, d. 1889): Moderne Zweifel am christlichen Glauben (2d ed. Bonn, 1870; English translation, Edinburgh and New York, 5th ed. 1885). Compare his The Best Methods of Counteracting Modern Infidelity, a paper read before the Sixth General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance, held in New York, 1873 (New York, 1874). This was the most popular paper read in that Conference, and was translated into several languages.

CH. ERNST BAUMSTARK: Christliche Apologetik auf anthropologischer Grundlage (Frankf., 1872-89, 3 vols.).

J. KAFTAN: Die Wahrheit der christlichen Religion (Basel, 1888).

FRANZ HETTINGER (Roman Catholic Professor at Würzburg, d. 1890): Apologie des Christenthums (Freiburg, i. B., 1863-67; 6th ed., in 5 parts, 1886). Lehrbuch der Fundamental-Theologie oder Apologetik (Freiburg, 1879, 2 vols.; 2d. ed. 1888). An able and learned defense both of Christianity and of the Roman Church.

P. SCHANZ (Roman Catholic Professor at Tübingen): Apologie des Christenthums (Freiburg, i. B., 1887-88, 3 vols.).

Der Beweis des Glaubens (Gütersloh, 1864 sqq.). An Apologetic Monthly, edited by Zöckler and Grau.

SECOND SECTION: BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER CXCVI.

NATURE AND OBJECT OF BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

Biblical Theology, in its modern technical sense, is a systematic representation of the revealed or biblical religion in its primitive form, as laid down in the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments, and as distinct from its subsequent development and comprehension in different ages and branches of the Church.

The Bible itself is no more a system of theology than nature is a system of natural philosophy or natural science, but it contains all the facts and truths which make up such a system.

Biblical Theology embraces both Dogmatic and Ethic, which form an organic unit in the Bible, but they may be separately treated.

It must have frequent reference to the history of revelation, especially in the Old Testament, which teaches doctrine mostly in the form of example; yet the history proper should be left to Historical Theology (History of Israel, Life of Christ, History of the Apostolic Church).

Biblical Theology sums up the scattered results of exegesis and arranges them so as to exhibit the organic unity and completeness of revealed religion. Notwithstanding the great variety of its authors, topics, styles of composition and modes of representation, the Bible contains a harmonious, self-consistent system of divine truth. It stands alone in this respect in the entire history of literature.

But we must distinguish different stages in the revelation of this truth, and different types of teaching. God revealed himself, like a wise educator, in condescending adaptation to man's expanding wants and capacities. The germ of salvation lies already in the first promise (Gen. 3 : 15), the rich fruit appeared in the death and resurrection of Christ. Moreover, the same revealed truth reflects itself differently in different minds and is expressed in different styles. Inspiration must not be confounded with dictation. The various talents which God has distributed among men are not abolished or suspended by inspiration, but purified, invigorated, ennobled and elevated to the highest degree of usefulness. Every prophet of the Old Testament has his peculiar style and temperament. In the New Testament every Gospel is aimed at a particular class of readers—Matthew to Jews, Mark to Romans, Luke to Greeks, John to mature Christians—and reflects the same Christ under a special aspect, as the Messiah, or the great Conqueror, or the healing Physician, or the incarnate Son of God. In the Epistles we may discern four distinct types of doctrine, of James, Peter, Paul and John.

CHAPTER CXCVII.

CONNECTION OF BIBLICAL THEOLOGY WITH OTHER BRANCHES.

Biblical Theology is the connecting link between Exegesis, Church History, and Systematic Theology. Inasmuch as it has to do only with the teaching of the Bible and derives all its matter from the Bible, it belongs to the exegetical department; but its comprehensive systematic form and method connect it more naturally with Systematic Divinity, especially with Dogmatic and Ethic. It is also the starting-point of the doctrinal section of Church History; for in the Bible are contained the vital truths which were subsequently discussed, opposed, perverted, defended, defined and reduced to dogmas by the doctors and councils of the Church.

Biblical Theology then is both exegetico-systematic and exegetico-historical. It is the first and fundamental form of Didactic Theology, on which ecclesiastical and philosophical Dogmatic and Ethic must rest throughout.

It is neither apologetic nor polemic, but objective and impartial; yet not on that account cold or indifferent. He who would fairly exhibit the teaching of the Bible, must sympathize with its spirit and aim.

CHAPTER CXCVIII.

IMPORTANCE OF BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

Biblical Theology should be the guiding star in all departments of sacred learning, "a focus of light in theological study." It refreshes, fructifies, directs and rectifies dogmatic and moral theology by leading them back to the fountain-head of revealed truth. It brings us face to face with the divine oracles in all their original power and freshness. It contains the living roots of all sound tendencies and developments in the history of Christianity, and furnishes a standard for the proper estimate of theological schools and parties, as well as for a correction of errors.

In the periods of scholastic theology, during the Middle Ages and in the seventeenth century, the Bible was subjected to dogma, and furnished merely proof-texts for a preconceived system of doctrine, whether Roman Catholic, or Lutheran, or Calvinistic. The proofs were taken from any book without discrimination or regard to the connection and the progressive periods of revelation. A passage from Job or Chronicles was deemed as conclusive as a passage from John or Romans. The Westminster Assembly first sent the Westminster Confession of Faith to Parliament (in 1647) without any Scripture proofs, but added them afterwards, by express direction of Parliament, "that the texts of Scripture be printed with the Articles of Faith."

The normal way is to make the Bible the basis of dogma. It is of far more consequence to know the exact teaching of Christ and the Apostles than that of the Fathers, Reformers and Councils.

In the age of the Reformation the zeal for Biblical Theology asserted its supremacy over mediæval scholasticism, and produced such works as Melancthon's Loci Theologici and Calvin's Institutio Christianæ Religionis. In our age Biblical Theology again claims the supremacy over Confessional and Speculative Theology, and will give rise to new systems of greater depth and wider breadth than those which have preceded them.

NOTE.—The growing sense of the importance of Biblical Theology has led to the establishment of special chairs in two or three of our theological seminaries. One of them has already become famous and, we may say, historic. Dr. Charles Butler, the only surviving founder of the Union Seminary in New York, endowed such a chair in 1890 by the munificent gift of one hundred thousand dollars, in honor of his friend, the late Dr. Edward Robinson, the pioneer of Palestine exploration and biblical scholarship in America, and one of the first professors of that institution. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, as the first incumbent of the "Edward Robinson Chair of Biblical Theology," delivered, on January 20, 1891, an inaugural address on The Authority of Holy Scripture (published by Charles Scribner's Sons), which created an exceptional sensation, and led to the most important heresy trial in America. His transfer to that chair from the chair of Hebrew was vetoed by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church at Detroit, May, 1891, and the Presbytery of New York, the largest in that denomination, tried him for unsound views on the fountains of divine authority (Bible, Church, and Reason), the inspiration and the (imaginary) "inerrancy of the original autographs," the Mosaic origin of the Pentateuch and higher criticism generally, and "progressive sanctification after death." The long trial ended in the full acquittal of Dr. Briggs, January 9, 1893. This was a substantial victory for freedom of investigation beyond the narrow bounds of the creeds of the seventeenth century. But the Committee on Prosecution intends to appeal to the General Assembly, which is to meet in May, 1893, and may reverse the decision of the Presbytery of New York. This would lead to serious consequences in the Presbyterian Church.

CHAPTER CXCIX.

DIVISION AND METHOD.

Biblical Theology may embrace the entire Bible, or treat each Testament separately. In the latter case we have Theology of the Old Testament and Theology of the New Testament. The connected treatment brings out more prominently the harmony of the two Covenants; the separate treatment gives a more complete view of each Covenant in its peculiar character as a whole.

The method of Biblical Theology is historico-genetic, and traces the truths of Revelation from the germ through the various stages of growth to the mature fruit. Revelation is an educational process by which God revealed himself gradually to man according to man's expanding wants and capacities.*

The method, moreover, may differ as to the order under which the subjects are discussed. We may either divide the Old and the New Testament Revelation into distinct periods and treat the doctrines of each in full; or we may run each doctrine continuously through all the periods; or finally, the two methods may be so combined as to present first a general sketch of the distinctive religious character of the several periods, and then a special history of the various doctrines systematically arranged in accordance with their prominence and mutual connection.

* "God having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions (πολυμερῶς) and in divers manners (πολυτρόπως)," etc. (Heb. 1:1; comp. 6:1). See Canon Bernard's Progress of Doctrine in the N. T.

CHAPTER CC.

THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

(Compare Chapter CXXVI., p. 197.)

The two Testaments or Covenants sustain to each other a relation of unity and a relation of difference. They are one in the idea of revelation and the idea of covenant. They emanate from the same God, they record the same plan of salvation, and aim at the same holiness and eternal happiness of men by communion with God. There is not a single doctrine or precept in the New Testament which has not its germ and root in the Old. There is not a doctrine or precept in the Old Testament which is not set in a much clearer light and brought to perfection in the New. But they differ as the Old and the New, as different degrees in the progressive development of Revelation and the history of redemption.

The Old Testament is the preparation for the New, the New is the fulfillment of the Old. Judaism is the cradle of Christianity, and points prophetically and typically to it as its proper meaning and end. The Old Testament is the dispensation of the law, the New Testament is the dispensation of the gospel. The one is the prophecy, the other the accomplishment, of salvation. Yet there is gospel or promise and comfort also in the Old Covenant, as there is law in the New. Even the law implies the promise of divine grace, without which it would be a cruel irony. The New is the key that unlocks all the mysteries of the Old. The one is unintelligible without the other. Both relations are comprehended in the declaration of our Lord that he came, not to destroy, but to fulfill the law and the prophets.

This twofold relation is taught in the Bible itself. The Old Testament, on the one hand, regards the plan of salvation and the kingdom of God revealed therein as embracing all times and nations (Gen. 12:3; 18:18; 26:4; Num. 14:21; Isa. 45:23; 54:10; Ps. 22:27; 86:9; Mal. 1:11); on the other, it acknowledges its own transitory character and prophesies a new covenant of the heart and spirit, as distinct from the covenant of the flesh and letter (Jer. 31:31-33; Ezek. 37:26-28; Heb. 8:6-13; 10:9). The whole religion of the Old Testament culminates in the Messianic hopes and prophecies; and its genius is best represented by John the Baptist, who was willing to decrease that Christ might increase (John 3:30). The New Testament continually refers to the Old as an unbroken testimony to Christ and his salvation (John 5:46, and in many other passages); but just as clearly it asserts its own superiority and represents the law as a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ, as a shadow of the substance of the gospel, as a beggarly religion (Gal. 3:24 sq.; 4:9; Col. 2:17; Heb. 10:1 sq., etc.), so that even the least in the kingdom of Christ occupies a higher position than the greatest saint in the Old Testament (Matt. 11:11). "The law was given by Moses, grace and truth came by Jesus Christ" (John 1:17).

CHAPTER CCI.

THEOLOGY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

The Theology of the Old Covenant exhibits a comprehensive and connected view of the revealed religion in its growth, as contained in the Hebrew Scriptures; or the development of the Jewish theocracy in its doctrinal and ethical features.

The Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, being written after the extinction of genuine prophecy, form no part of the Hebrew or Palestinian canon, but are included in the Septuagint and the Egyptian canon, and must be either ignored, or treated in a separate chapter with a view to show the later development of Jewish theology in the period intervening between the age of Ezra and the coming of Christ. (Oehler excludes the Apocrypha, but Schultz, in the later editions, includes them.)

In the history of Revelation before Christ we may distinguish five periods: the PRIMITIVE, before the flood; the PATRIARCHAL; the MOSAIC; the PROPHETIC; and the POST-EXILIC.

I. The PRIMITIVE or ANTEDILUVIAN age, from Adam to Noah. (Genesis 1–12.) It includes:

(a) The pure, childlike religion of our first parents before the Fall: the belief in one God as the Maker and Preserver of all things, the doctrine of the divine image in which man was created, his original communion with God in a state of innocence and holiness.

(b) The disturbed religion after the Fall: the origin and nature of sin and death, the first promise of redemption (Gen. 3: 15).

We have then here already the fundamental elements of the Old Testament religion.

II. The PATRIARCHAL age, from Abraham to Moses. (Genesis 12 to Exodus 20.) The age of faith and promise. A religion of boundless trust in the only true and living God; the obedience of faith. The evangelic element prevails here over the legalistic. Abraham “the friend of God” and “the father of the faithful” (Isa. 41: 8; James 2: 23; Rom. 4: 16, 17; Gal. 3: 7). He stands at the head of the three monotheistic religions of the world. The covenant of circumcision. The promises given to the patriarchs constitute the prophetic and Messianic element. They include:

(a) The land of Canaan as a perpetual possession to the posterity of Abraham (Gen. 17: 8); while he himself dwelt there as a stranger (Gen. 12: 6) and had to buy even the place of his burial (Gen. 23; comp. Acts 7: 5).

(b) An innumerable posterity, through the son of promise born according to God’s counsel, and not according to the ordinary course of nature (comp. Rom. 4: 16–22; 9: 8). There is a distinction between Jews according to the flesh and Jews according to the spirit; as there is a distinction between circumcision of the flesh and circumcision of the heart (Rom. 2: 25–29; Col. 2: 11). Change of the name Abram into Abraham, that is, the father of nations (Gen. 17: 5).

(c) A blessing to all the nations of the earth through the posterity of Abraham: “In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed” (Gen. 12: 3; comp. Gal. 3: 8, 16). This is the Messianic part of the promise.

The typical character of the patriarchal age: circumcision—baptism; Canaan—the heavenly home; Isaac’s offering—the sacrifice of Christ; Melchisedek, the mysterious outsider, the priest-king (Heb. 7).

III. The MOSAIC age, from Moses to Samuel, the last of the Judges and the first of the Prophets, properly so called. The theocratic legislation began with Moses on Mount Sinai, but was gradually developed, and perhaps not brought into its final shape till the time of Ezra, the second Moses, the restorer of the law (B.C. 458). Israel becomes a nation and a Church on the basis of an act of divine mercy, the deliverance from the bondage of Egypt, which again is a type of the redemption from sin. The Ten Commandments enjoin love to God (first table) and love to man (second table), as the sum and substance of true religion (Ex. 20; comp. Matt. 22:38-40). Pedagogic and typical import of the Mosaic law: it developed the sense of sin and guilt and the need of atonement, and thus served as a schoolmaster to lead men to Christ (Rom. 3:20; 5:20; 7:7, 13; Gal. 3:24). Clearer revelation of God as Jehovah, the covenant God of his people, his justice, holiness, long-suffering, patience and mercy. The training of this people by the long pilgrimage through the desert, where they were alone with their God, away from the contaminating influences of idolatrous nations, and where they had to depend solely on him for temporal and spiritual blessing, for care and protection under all trials and dangers.

Moses was the divinely appointed deliverer and law-giver of Israel and the organ of all the powers of the theocracy. In this view he occupies a unique position and had no successor. Joshua and the Judges merely carried out and defended what he had established. Like Abraham, he is equally revered by the followers of three religions. He controlled the whole history of Israel; he furnished the best elements to Mohammedanism; the Decalogue as explained and fulfilled by Christ is the rule of Christian life and underlies all good government; in the whole history of religion, he is only surpassed by Christ, of whom he wrote (Deut. 18:15; John 5:46) and for whom he prepared the way.*

* Heinrich Heine, an infidel Jew, but a great genius, gives in his Confessions, written 1854 (Werke, vol. iv., p. 45), the following striking description of Moses: "What a gigantic figure! I cannot imagine that Og, King of Bashan, was greater. How small appears Mount Sinai if Moses stands on the top! This mountain is only the base on which stand the feet of a man whose head reaches into heaven, where he speaks with God. . . . He took a tribe of poor shepherds and created them a people which was to defy the centuries, a great, eternal, holy people which was to serve as a model to all other nations: he created Israel!"

IV. The PROPHEPIC age, from Samuel to Malachi. The prophetic office was organized by Samuel. Before there were isolated prophets, Moses himself being one of the greatest of prophets, who stood in constant communication with Jehovah and was the organ of his revelation to his people. Prophetic utterances are scattered through all the historical books and reach back to the beginning of the race (Gen. 3:15). But Samuel gave prophecy an institutional character and established "Schools of Prophets," which flourished two or three hundred years.*

From his time on there was an almost unbroken succession of divinely inspired teachers called "prophets," who in connection with, and often in opposition to, the kings and priests controlled the history of the theocracy during the undivided and the divided monarchy, the exile and the restoration under Ezra and Nehemiah. Sixteen of them left writings.

The prophetic office represented the spiritual part of the theocracy, and the divine presence and power in the forms and ceremonies of religion; it acted upon the kingly and sacerdotal offices; it kept them from stagnation and degeneracy; it stimulated the consciences of rulers and people; it communicated to them the oracles of God; it expounded the law, warned them of sin and danger, urged them to repentance and faith; it announced the judgments, but also the mercies, of God, and unfolded the picture of the suffering and conquering Messiah as the hope of Israel.

The Messianic predictions are the flower of the prophecy. They culminate in Isaiah, the evangelist among the prophets, especially in the second part, called Deutero-Isaiah, written towards the close of the exile by "the Great Unknown."

The powerful influence of the prophets may be seen in Nathan at the court of David, and in Elijah and Elisha in the kingdom of Israel. The prophets speak in the name of God, hence the phrase, "Thus saith the Lord," or "Oracle of God." They challenge obedience to their message as the word of God. Even King David submitted to the rebuke of Nathan (II. Sam. 12: 13 sq.; comp. 24: 11 sq.). The prophets were statesmen as well as teachers and preachers, but both from the theocratic standpoint; their activity referred exclusively to the kingdom of God, and to foreign nations only so far as they were connected with the fortunes of the people of God. They were watchmen on the walls of Zion, and from this their vision extended to the uttermost nations of the earth and the end of time. They were the Reformers and Puritans of the Jewish theocracy.

* I. Sam. 8:7; 9:6, 19-27; 15:16-30; I. Chron. 9:22; 26:28; 29:29. Hence the phrase πάντες οἱ προφῆται ἀπὸ Σαμουὴλ (Acts 3:24). There were prophetic schools and societies at Ramah, Bethel, Gibeah, Gilgal, Mizpah, and the region of Jericho (I. Sam. 7:16, 17; 8:1, 2, etc.; comp. II. Kings 2:3-5; 4:38). The members were called "sons of the prophets" (bene hanephim). (I. Kings 20:35; II. Kings 2:3, 5, 7, 15; 6:1; 9:1.) They were at times very numerous; Obadiah concealed one hundred prophets; from Jericho fifty were sent to seek Elijah (I. Kings 18:4 sq.; 22:6; II. Kings 2:7). Of course not all pupils became really prophets, nor was the training by older prophets sufficient; it required first and last a divine call, and divine inspiration and enthusiasm to be a real messenger of God and an organ of his revelation.

The writings of the prophets constitute a unique body of literature which has no parallel among other nations, and is as remarkable and grand as the epistles of the New Testament.

During the prophetic period was also developed the poetic literature of the Hebrews. Job is very important for the doctrine of God and of his providential government. The Psalms contain Hebrew theology in the form of devotion; the Proverbs and Ecclesiastes furnish a system of ethic in the shape of brief sentences or maxims of practical wisdom and experience.

V. The POST-EXILIAN period, from Ezra to John the Baptist, the last representative of the Old Covenant and immediate forerunner of Christ. The organization of the synagogue; the origin of the religious sects of the Pharisees, Sadducees and Essenes; the hedging of the law by the traditions of the elders; the Greek Version of the Scriptures; the whole literature of the Jewish Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha; contact with Greek thought and Platonic philosophy (Philo of Alexandria).

CHAPTER CCII.

THEOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT: THE TEACHING OF JESUS.

In the Theology of the New Testament, we must first distinguish between the Theology of Christ as derived from his teaching in the Gospels, and the Theology of the Apostles as contained in the Acts and Epistles. The former is the living germ of the latter.

The teaching of Jesus is altogether unique. He was neither self-taught, nor school-taught, nor inspired like the prophets and apostles. He spoke directly out of the fullness of the indwelling God, as his only-begotten Son. He was not simply a witness of the truth, but the Truth itself, and the Light of the world. His teaching is a self-revelation of his divine-human person, as the Son of God and the Son of Man, as the Messiah and Saviour of the world, as the founder of the New Covenant and the Kingdom of Heaven upon the earth. His teaching is a reflection of his life, and is as free from error as his life was free from sin. It is the union of infallible teaching with a sinless life which raises him above the founders of other religions, and above all moral philosophers, ancient and modern.

As Jesus himself wrote nothing, we have to depend upon the reports of his disciples in the canonical Gospels.

The Synoptic teaching relates chiefly to the Kingdom of God and the duties of those who enter therein, and is brief, sententious, parabolic and pictorial. This style was best calculated to impress itself upon the heart and memory of the common people in Galilee.

The Johannean discourses, which were mostly delivered in Jerusalem before the learned Pharisees and Scribes and in the private circle of his disciples, discuss the deepest mysteries of faith and eternal life, of the relation of the Son to the Father, to the world and to believers. They differ also in style, which strikingly agrees with that of the Johannean Epistles. They were evidently reproduced by the congenial mind of the beloved disciple, as understood in the light of the promised illumination of the Holy Spirit, and presented in his own language for the second or third generation of Christians. But no human genius could have invented such heavenly discourses, any more than the miracles of Jesus; no honest writer could have practiced such a deception upon his readers as the hypothesis of invention involves.

On close investigation there is no material contradiction between the Synoptic and the Johannean teaching of Christ. They supplement each other. It is the duty of the biblical theologian to show the harmony as well as the difference.

NOTE.—Weiss acknowledges the Johannean Gospel discourses as genuine throughout, though subjectively colored. Wendt distinguishes in them original sayings (as the λόγια in Matthew) and later additions from the school of John. Beyschlag represents the Synoptic and Johannean teaching separately in the full conviction of the entire genuineness of the fourth Gospel (vol. i., pp. 212 sqq.), but he explains away the passages on the preëxistence of Christ (John 6 : 62 ; 8 : 58 ; 17 : 4, 5, 24, and in the prologue).

If the fourth Gospel in whole or in part were the product of an unknown and unknowable Christian Plato of the second century, it could not be a source for the teaching of Jesus, but only a record of post-apostolic tradition, or a theological romance. This would make the Johannean problem more difficult and absolutely insolvable.

CHAPTER CCIII.

THE TEACHING OF THE APOSTLES.

In the apostolic period three main types of doctrine may be distinguished, which are respectively represented by Peter, Paul and John, with subordinate differences in the Epistle of James, the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the Apocalypse.

The Petrine type, to which also James belongs, may be called the Jewish Christian ; the Pauline type, the Gentile Christian ; the Johannean type, the harmonious adjustment of the two. The first views Christianity predominantly in its harmony with the Old Testament ; the second in its distinction, its newness and independence ; the third rises above the antagonism of Jewish and Gentile Christians and represents a new generation. The first was the gospel for the Jews ; the second the gospel for the Gentiles ; the third harmonizes the national and religious differences in the higher union of Christ.

The Epistle of James, "the brother of the Lord," is probably the oldest of the New Testament writings and also nearest to the Old Testament, like the Gospel of Matthew. It represents the gospel itself as law, but as the "perfect law of liberty" (James 1 : 25), which implies that the Mosaic law was imperfect and a law of bondage.

Peter is the connecting link between James and Paul, as the Gospel of Mark mediates between Matthew and Luke. He first made the confession that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of the living God (Matt. 16 : 16), which is the foundation article of the Christian faith. He agreed with Paul in the principle that Jews and Gentiles alike are saved without the unbearable yoke of the ceremonial law, simply and solely "through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 15 : 11) ; and he rose to the liberal conviction that "in every nation he that fears God and works righteousness is acceptable to him" (Acts 10:35).

Paul's fundamental idea is righteousness in Christ, apprehended by faith and operative in love, in opposition to the legal self-righteousness of the Jews. His doctrinal system turns on the great antithesis of sin and grace. Out of Christ, sin and death reign; in Christ, righteousness and life.

The anonymous Epistle to the Hebrews forms the transition from Paul to John, and gives us the fullest insight into the eternal priesthood and sacrifice of Christ.

John, the mystic seer among the Apostles, penetrates most deeply into the character of Christ, on whose bosom he leaned, and strikes the keynote of the highest type of Theology in the word: "God is love." God's love to all mankind manifested in Jesus Christ, is the central idea of John's Dogmatic; man's love to God and the brethren, is the sum and substance of his Ethic. John and Paul meet in the idea of love, as the highest of the Christian graces, which binds and makes fruitful all the other graces and shall abide forever, when faith shall have passed into sight, and hope into fruition.

The best representations of New Testament Theology enter into all the differences, and give us almost as many apostolic types of teaching as there are books in the New Testament. But there is unity as well as diversity in the teaching of Christ and his Apostles, and we need a work in which this unity is more fully brought out.

CHAPTER CCIV.

HISTORY OF BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

Biblical Theology as to spirit and substance is as old as the Bible, but as to scientific form it dates only from the eighteenth century. It is, we may say, a child of German Rationalism and was born at the same time with higher or literary criticism, but it is perfectly consistent with faith, and is cultivated also by evangelical and orthodox theologians.

As long as the teaching of the Bible was identified with that of the Church or with orthodoxy, there was no motive for the special treatment of the former; but when the two were more or less clearly distinguished, Biblical Theology began to be cultivated, first in a spirit of hostility to Church orthodoxy; then in opposition to the Bible itself, as being a mixture of facts and myths, of truth and error; but at last, in a spirit of impartial historical inquiry. The third phase represents the true standpoint. Supreme regard is due to the teaching of the Bible, subordinate regard to the teaching of the Church derived from it.

Patristic Theology was both biblical and traditional; it derived all its material and arguments from the Bible as interpreted by the rule of faith. Scholastic Theology was traditional and ecclesiastical, and rested on the Fathers rather than the Bible. The theology of the Reformation was a revival of Biblical Theology (in spirit and aim, though not in form), but was soon succeeded by another phase of scholasticism intensely confessional and polemical. Then followed the radical reaction of Rationalism, which broke loose from all restraint of Church authority and viewed the Bible itself as a mere human production to be explained and judged like any other book.

Rationalists made the first attempts to treat the Bible doctrines historically in distinction from and in alleged opposition to all subsequent systems of Church orthodoxy. To this class belong the now antiquated biblical theologies of Ammon (1792), G. L. Bauer (1796-1800), Kayser (1813), De Wette (1st ed. 1813, 2d ed. 1830, the ablest among them), Baumgarten-Crusius (1828), Cramer (1830), Cölln (ed. by D. Schulz, 1836).

The revival of evangelical faith since Schleiermacher and Neander gave a new spirit and character to Biblical Theology. Neander's Planting and Training of the Apostolic Church (1832 and since) marks an epoch and enters into the discussion of the apostolic types of doctrine with deep spiritual sympathy and with an eye to their unity as well as diversity. Since that time Bible Theology of the New Testament has been chiefly cultivated by Schmid, Reuss, Messner, Van Oosterzee, Weiss and Bey-schlag; that of the Old Testament, by Hengstenberg, Häver-nick, Vatke, Steudel, Von Hofmann, Oehler, Ewald, Kuenen and Schultz.

CHAPTER CCV.

LITERATURE OF BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

I. OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

G. F. OEHLER (Ephorus in Tübingen, d. 1872): Prolegomena zur Theologie des Alten Test. (Stuttgart, 1845).

H. A. C. HÄVERNICK (d. 1846): Vorlesungen über die Theologie des A. T.; herausg. von Hahn mit Vorwort von Dorner (Erlangen, 1848; 2d ed., with notes by Herm. Schultz, Frankf.-a-M., 1863). Orthodox and learned, in the spirit of Hengstenberg.

* HEINRICH EWALD (d. 1874): Die Lehre der Bibel von Gott oder Theologie des Alten und Neuen Bundes (Leipzig, 1871-75, 4 vols.). The last work of this great scholar. It comprehends the Old and New Testament theology. Translated in part, by Th. Goadby (Edinb. 1888).

* HERMANN SCHULTZ (Professor in Göttingen, School of Ewald): Alttestamentliche Theologie. Die Offenbarungsreligion auf ihrer vorchristlichen Entwickelungsstufe (1869; 4th ed., entirely revised, Göttingen, 1889, 821 pp.). English translation by J. A. Paterson, Professor of Old Testament theology in the United Presbyterian College, Edinburgh, 1892, 2 vols.).

* G. F. OEHLER (d. 1872): Theologie des A. T. (Tübingen, 1873, 2 vols.; 3d ed. Stuttgart, 1891, 1 vol.). English translation by E. D. Smith and S. Taylor (Edinburgh, 1874), revised by George E. Day, Theology of the Old Testament (New York, 1883, 1 vol.). Very useful for students.

ABR. KUENEN (d. 1891): De Godsdiens van Israel tot den ondergang van den Joodschen Staat (Haarlem, 1869-70, 2 vols.). Hypercritical. English translation by A. W. May: The Religion of Israel to the Fall of the Jewish State (London, 1874-75, 3 vols.).

* CHARLES A. BRIGGS (Professor in Union Seminary, N. Y.): Biblical Study: its Principles, Methods and History (New York and Edinburgh, 1883; 4th ed. 1891). Ch. XI., 367-405.

F. W. SCHULTZ (of Breslau) in Zöckler's Handbuch der Theol. Wissenschaften (1883), vol. i., pp. 289-338.

A. DUFF (United Presbyterian): Old Testament Theology (Edinburgh, 1891).

B. STADE (Professor in Giessen): Alttestamentliche Theologie (in course of preparation, 1893).

A. B. DAVIDSON (Professor of Hebrew, New College, Edinb.): Theology of the Old Testament (in course of preparation for the Briggs-Salmond "International Theological Library," 1893).

The CHRISTOLOGY of the Old Testament, or MESSIANIC PROPHECIES, are treated in special works by HENGSTENBERG (Berlin, 1829-32; 2d ed. 1854-57, 3 vols. transl. by Theod. Meyer, Edinb., 4 vols.); RIEHM (Gotha, 1875; 2d ed. 1885); JAMES DRUMMOND (The Jewish Messiah, London, 1877); P. J. GLOAG (Edinburgh, 1879); ED. BÖHL (Vienna, 1882); C. VON ORELLI (Vienna, 1882; English transl., Edinb. 1885); C. A. BRIGGS (Messianic Prophecy, New York and Edinb., 1886); FRANZ DELITZSCH (Messianische Weissagungen in geschichtlicher Folge, 1890; transl. by Samuel Ives Curtiss of Chicago, Edinburgh, 1891).

II. NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

* NEANDER (d. 1850): History of the Planting and Training of the Church under the Apostles (second part, Hamburg, 1832; 5th ed. 1862; English translation by Ryland, Edinb. 1842, 2 vols.; revised by Ez. G. Robinson, New York, 1864).

CHR. FR. SCHMID (d. 1852 at Tübingen): Biblical Theology of the N. T. (edited by Weizsäcker, Stuttgart, 1853, 2 vols.; 4th ed. 1869). Eminently biblical and sound. The abridged English translation by G. H. VENABLES (Edinburgh, 1870) omits the general statements which are very important.

ED. REUSS (d. at Strassburg, 1891): Histoire de la théologie chrétienne au siècle apostolique (History of the Christian Theology of the Apostolic Age) (Strassburg, 1852, 2 vols.; 3d ed. 1864). Translated into English by Miss A. HARWOOD (London, 1872), also into Dutch and Swedish. Able and critical.

* THOMAS DEHANY BERNARD (Canon and Chancellor of Wells): The Progress of Doctrine in the New Testament (Bampton Lectures, London, 1864; 4th ed. 1878). Compare his more recent work quoted on p. 332.

F. C. BAUR (d. at Tübingen, 1861): Lectures on New Testament Theology (German). Published after his death by his son (1864). Independent, critical, and suggestive, but he makes Paul almost the founder of Christianity.

J. J. VAN OOSTERZEE (Professor at Utrecht, d. 1882): The Theology of the New Testament (Dutch; German transl., Barmen, 1869; English transl. by Maurice J. Evans, London, 1870, and by George E. Day, New York, 1871). A brief manual for students.

A. IMMER: New Testament Theology (Bern, 1878).

* BERNHARD WEISS (Professor in Berlin): Handbook of the Biblical Theology of the New Test. (Berlin, 1868; 5th ed. 1888; transl. from the 3d ed. by Dav. Eaton and J. E. Duguid, Edinb. 1882-83, 2 vols.). The most complete and accurate work, which rests on a thorough exegetical and critical study of all the details.

R. GRAU, in Zöckler's Handbuch der Theol. Wissenschaften (1833 sqq.), vol. i., pp. 549-633.

* WILLIBALD BEYSCHLAG (Professor in Halle): Neutestamentliche Theologie oder geschichtliche Darstellung der Lehren Jesu und des Urchristenthums nach den neutestamentlichen Quellen (Halle-a-S., 1891-92, 2 vols.). The most important work after that of Weiss, and more full on the teaching of Jesus.

Professor SCHÜRER and Professor GRAFE are preparing manuals on New Testament Theology (1893).

(a) The Teaching of Jesus:

JOS. P. THOMPSON (d. 1870): The Theology of Christ (New York, 1870).

W. F. GESS (d. 1891): Christi Person und Werk, nach Christi Selbstzeugniss und der Apostel (Basel, 1870-78).

E. WÖRNER: Die Lehre Jesu (Basel, 1882).

* H. H. WENDT (b. 1853, Professor in Heidelberg, School of Ritschl): Die Lehre Jesu (Göttingen, first part, on the sources, 1886; second part, 1890). The second part was translated by John Wilson: The Teaching of Jesus (New York, 1892, 2 vols.).

THOMAS DEHANY BERNARD: The Central Teaching of Jesus Christ. A Study and Exposition of the Five Chapters of the Gospel according to St. John, 13-17 inclusive (London and New York, 1892). Reverential and devout, but less important, scientifically, than his former work quoted on p. 331.

Compare the literature on the Life of Christ, ch. clxxii., p. 271.

(b) The Teaching of the Apostles (Apostolische Lehrbegriffe):

Discussed by LUTTERBECK (Roman Catholic, 1852, 2 vols.), MESSNER (1856), and also in the respective sections of the works on the Apostolic Age by NEANDER, LECHLER, SCHAFF, WEIZSÄCKER, and PFLEIDERER.

(c) The Teaching of the Several Apostles:

Paul by USTERI (1824; 6th ed. 1851), DÄHNE (1835), STANLEY LEATHES (1869), W. J. IRONS (1876), A. SABATIER (1870; 2d ed. 1881; transl. from the French by J. G. Findlay, with preface by Sabatier, N. Y., 1891), HOLSTEN (1868 and 1880), O. PFLEIDERER (1873; in English, 1885), LORENZ (1884), R. T. KNOWLING (1892), G. B. STEVENS (1892).

The Teaching of Peter by B. WEISS (1855).

The Teaching of the Epistle to the Hebrews by RIEHM (1859; 2d ed. 1866).

The Teaching of John by FROMMANN (1839), K. R. KÖSTLIN (1843), HILGENFELD (1849), B. WEISS (1862).

The Teaching of James by W. SCHMIDT (1869) and KÜBEL (1880).

The Teaching of the Apocalypse by H. GEBHARDT (1873) and WILLIAM MILLIGAN (1886).

Compare the literature on the Apostolic Age, p. 273.

THIRD SECTION: DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER CCVI.

DEFINITION AND CONTENTS OF DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.

Dogmatic or Didactic Theology, usually called Systematic Theology,* is a comprehensive scientific statement of Christian truth contained in the Scriptures and believed and taught in the Church. A dogma in the technical ecclesiastical sense (statutum, decretum) is a doctrine formulated by Church authority or a publicly recognized article of faith.†

Dogmatic Theology formerly embraced also Moral Theology or Christian Ethic; but now they are distinct and separately treated.

Each system of Dogmatic must embrace the following departments (Loci Theologici ‡):

1. BIBLIOLOGY: a discussion of the Bible, viewed as the supreme rule of faith and duty, and its relation to the subordinate rules of tradition and reason.

2. THEOLOGY, in the narrower sense, that is, the doctrine of God: the knowableness or cognoscibility of God (gnosticism and agnosticism); the arguments for his existence; his names and attributes; the unity and trinity of the Godhead (Father, Son and Spirit; the trinity of essence, and the trinity of revelation). Theism in opposition to Deism and Pantheism.

3. COSMOLOGY: God's relation to the world. The doctrine of creation, preservation and providence. The decrees, or the

* Theologia dogmatica, as distinct from Theologia moralis; also Doctrina Christiana; Institutio or Institutiones Christianae Religionis. The term Systematic Theology is customary among English and American writers, but is too wide, and would embrace also Apologetic, Symbolic, Polemic and Ethic.

† On the meaning of dogma and the difference between truth, doctrine and dogma, see above, pp. 249 sq.

‡ Loci Communes means, in philosophical usage, fundamental ideas and self-evident truths. Melancthon gave this title, and also the title Loci Theologici, to his dogmatic work, and later Lutheran divines accepted it in the sense of chief articles of the dogmatic system.

eternal purpose of creating and saving mankind in Christ. The Theodicy. The best system of the moral universe.

4. ANGELOLOGY: the doctrine of good and bad angels. Satanology or Diabolology is a part of it and treats of Satan and the prehistoric fall.

5. ANTHROPOLOGY, or the doctrine of man in his relation to God: the image of God; the rational and moral constitution of man; the origin of souls; free-will; the state of original innocence; the fall and its consequences. The state of redemption (conversion, regeneration, sanctification) is embraced in Soteriology.

6. HAMARTOLOGY, or PONEROLOGY: the doctrine of sin, in all its aspects and consequences. Part of Anthropology and Ethic.

7. CHRISTOLOGY, or the doctrine of Christ's person: his humanity, his divinity, and the relation of the two.

8. SOTERIOLOGY, that is, the doctrine of salvation, or Christ's work and office as Prophet, Priest and King; the atonement, its nature and extent.

9. PNEUMATOLOGY: the doctrine of the Holy Spirit; his person and his relation to the Father and the Son; his office and work in the regeneration, sanctification and glorification of believers.

10. ECCLESIOLOGY: the doctrine of the Church and the kingdom of God; its constitution, attributes, authority and aim.

11. SACRAMENTOLOGY: the doctrine of the sacraments and the means of grace.

12. ESCHATOLOGY, or the doctrine of the last things: death and immortality; hades and the middle state; the second advent; the general resurrection and the judgment; heaven and hell; the beatific vision and life everlasting.

These are the deepest and highest themes which can engage human thought. Hence the great importance and interest of Dogmatic Theology.

CHAPTER CCVII.

THE SOURCES OF DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.

There are three sources of Dogmatic Theology: the Bible, the Church, and the Christian consciousness or experience.

The Bible contains the word of God written by holy men as they were moved by the Holy Spirit (2 Pet. 1: 21). It is, therefore, the infallible rule of faith and practice, and nothing can claim the authority of a dogma or an article of faith which is not founded on the teaching of Christ and the Apostles.

The Church is the keeper and expounder of the Bible, but any particular branch of the Church universal is liable to err, and may be corrected and reformed as it advances in the knowledge of truth.

The Christian consciousness and experience appropriates and digests the matter supplied by the Bible and the creeds of the Church.

Dogmatic Theology, therefore, comprises a biblical, a churchly or confessional, and a personal and experimental element. It is a rational and critical digest of the teaching of the Bible and the Church. These three elements may be combined in one work, or may be separately treated with more fullness.

CHAPTER CCVIII.

BIBLICAL DOGMATIC.

Biblical Dogmatic is a systematic exhibition of the Bible doctrine of faith and duty as an organic whole. It is essentially the same as Biblical Theology, but differs from its genetic historical method. It gives the results systematically arranged, while Biblical Theology traces the revealed religion in its gradual growth and its various stages and types.

Every dogmatic system should begin with a brief statement of the teaching of the Bible as containing the germs of the subsequent confessional developments.

LITERATURE.

K. IM. NITZSCH (d. 1868): System der christlichen Lehre (Bonn, 1829; 6th ed. 1851; Eng. transl. by Robert Montgomery and Hennen, Edinburgh, 1849). Embraces Biblical Dogmatic and Ethic, but with constant reference to modern opinions.

JOHANN TOBIAS BECK (1804-78; Professor in Tübingen since 1843), following in the line of Bengel and Oetinger, endeavored to build up in various writings a purely biblical theology without any regard to historical developments. His theology may be called pneumatic and realistic Biblicalism. He was a colleague of Dr. Baur and his antipode, but in respectful personal relations with him, and exerted a great influence upon the students by his enthusiasm for the depth and sufficiency of the Bible. He wrote, Einleitung in das System der christlichen Lehre (Propædeutik) (Stuttgart, 1838; 2d ed. 1870). Christliche Lehrwissenschaft nach den biblischen Urkunden (Stuttgart, vol. i., 1841; 2d ed. 1875; unfinished). Umriss d. biblischen Seelenlehre (Stuttgart, 1843; 3d ed. 1877; translation, Outlines of Biblical Psychology, Edinburgh, 1877). Christliche Liebeslehre (1875). Leitfaden d. christl. Glaubenslehre für Kirche, Schule, und Haus (1862; 2d ed. 1869). Christliche Ethik (published after his death by Lindenmeyer, 1882-83, 3 vols.). See an article on Beck's theology by Kübel in Herzog², vol. xvii., pp. 693-706.

ROBERT B. KÜBEL (Beck's pupil and successor as Professor in Tübingen): Das christliche Lehrsystem nach der heiligen Schrift (Gütersloh, 1874, 2 vols.). Embraces Ethic and Dôgmatic.

CHAPTER CCIX.

CONFESSIONAL OR CHURCHLY DOGMATIC.

Confessional or Churchly (Ecclesiastical) Dogmatic exhibits the doctrinal system of a particular Church as laid down in the symbolical books or confessions of faith. It is chiefly historical, as Biblical Theology is chiefly exegetical. Its object may be either purely objective and historical, or also personal and denominational (but not necessarily sectarian).

Denominational differences are not always confessional or doctrinal. The Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists are divided into several denominations or independent organizations, which acknowledge the same creeds or confessions, and differ only in minor matters of worship and discipline.*

There are as many kinds of Ecclesiastical Dogmatic as there are creeds or confessions of faith. Each has its own standard of orthodoxy and heterodoxy.

The dogmatic systems of the Greek and Roman Churches are based on the Bible and tradition, as equally authoritative sources and binding rules of faith and public teaching; but with this difference, that the Greek Church confines tradition to the first seven Œcumenical Councils, while the Roman Church extends it to the twentieth Œcumenical Council of

* According to the census of the United States of 1890, there are in the United States over one hundred (145) denominations and sects, and according to Whitaker's Almanack for 1892, there are as many or even more (254) in Great Britain. But they may be reduced to less than a dozen creeds or confessions. See the statistical tables on p. 24, and the Census Bulletins published in numbers by Dr. Henry K. Carroll, Washington, 1892 and 1893.

1870, and lodges it permanently in the official infallibility of the Pope. The Protestant systems of Dogmatic are based upon the Scriptures, as the only infallible rule of faith, use tradition with critical discrimination, and allow larger liberty to reason and private judgment. Rationalism makes reason the judge of both Scripture and tradition.

We shall now give a brief outline of the principal dogmatic systems in their chronological order.

CHAPTER CCX.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY OF THE GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Catholicism, in its technical, ecclesiastical sense, has two branches: the Oriental or Greek, and the Occidental or Roman. They show the influence, one of the Greek, the other of the Roman, spirit. The former is older, more metaphysical, and stationary; the latter is more practical and progressive, and was completed in the Vatican Council of 1870. They are very similar in theory, yet very antagonistic in fact. The Pope of Rome and the Czar-Pope of Russia are the greatest rivals.

The Dogmatic of the Eastern or Greek Church, which claims the monopoly of pure, primitive orthodoxy, is based upon the doctrinal decisions of the first seven Œcumenical Councils (325-787), especially the Nicæno-Constantinopolitan Creed of 381 (without the Filioque). Its chief authorities among the Fathers are Athanasius, Gregory of Nazianzen, Gregory of Nyssa, Cyril of Alexandria, and especially John of Damascus (d. after 750).

The Greek Dogmatic is metaphysical and lays chief stress on the œcumenical doctrines of the Trinity, the Incarnation, and the duo-physitic and dyo-thelitic personality of Christ. It adheres to the older anthropology and soteriology, and has never been affected by the Augustinian doctrine of total depravity and the loss of free-will.

LITERATURE.

ST. JOHN OF DAMASCUS (CHRYSORRHOAS): 'Ἐκδοσις ἀκριβῆς τῆς ὀρθοδόξου πίστεως (De Fide orthodoxa), in Migne's Patrologia Græca, tom. xciv., pp. 789-1228 (Paris, 1864). It is in process of translation by Professor Salmund of Aberdeen for the "Post-Nicene Library of the Fathers."

THE ORTHODOX CONFESSION OF THE EASTERN CHURCH (1643), and THE EIGHTEEN DECREES OF THE SYNOD OF JERUSALEM (1672). Both in Greek and Latin in Schaff's Creeeds of Christendom, vol. ii., pp. 275-444.

PHILARET (b. 1782, d. 1867, Metropolitan of Moscow): The Longer Catechism of the Orthodox Russian Church, revised and published by the Holy Synod of St. Petersburg (Moscow, 1839, in several languages and many editions; English translation by Blackmore, Aberdeen, 1845). The doctrinal part of this catechism is printed in Schaff's Creeeds, vol. ii., pp. 445-542.

LE QUIEN: Oriens Christianus (Paris, 1740, 3 vols.).

W. GASS: Symbolik der Griechischen Kirche (Berlin, 1872).

ARTHUR P. STANLEY: Lectures on the History of the Eastern Church (London and New York, 4th ed. 1869).

For other works on the Greek and Russian Church, see Schaff, Creeeds of Christendom, vol. i., pp. 43, 46, 50, 54, 61, 68; also the "Schaff-Herzog Encycl.," vol. ii., p. 904.

CHAPTER CCXI.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Roman Catholic Dogmatic is founded on the theology of the Fathers, the doctrinal Decrees of the Council of Trent (1563), and of the Council of the Vatican (1870). It is best expounded and defended by Bellarmin, Bossuet, Möhler, and Perrone.

It is essentially the same with Greek orthodoxy, but differs from it in the doctrines of the Papacy, the double Procession of the Holy Spirit, the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary as defined by Pius IX. in 1854, and the Infallibility of the Pope as decreed in 1870. It is also more fully developed in anthropology, soteriology and eschatology.

The Roman Catholic Creed is the most complete and most logical of all dogmatic systems, as the papacy is the most complete and absolute form of government; but it requires the sacrifice of reason and freedom, which God himself has given us, and for the use of which we are individually responsible.

LITERATURE.

The chief builders of the Roman Catholic creed before the Reformation were St. Augustin, Gregory the Great, and Thomas Aquinas. The last is the favorite divine of Pope Leo XIII., who recommended him for study in an encyclical of August 4, 1879, and ordered a magnificent edition of all his works at his own expense.

HENRICUS DENZINGER (Professor at Würzburg, d. 1862): Enchiridion Symbolorum et Definitionum, quæ de Rebus Fidei et Morum a Conciliis Œcu- menicis et summis Pontificibus emanarunt (Wireeburgi, 6th ed. by Stahl, 1888). A very convenient compend.

GIOVANNI PERRONE (b. 1794, Professor in the Jesuit college in Rome, d. 1876) : Prælectiones theologicæ (Rome, 1835 sqq., 9 vols., and often republished at Turin, Paris, Brussels and Ratisbon). The Compend by the same author has appeared in different languages and many editions.

German works on Roman Dogmatic by F. BRENNER (1830, 3 vols.), MÖHLER (Symbolik, several edd.), H. KLEE (4th ed. 1861), F. R. DIERINGER (5th ed. 1865), FR. FRIEDHOFF (1871), J. B. HEINRICH (1874-89, 7 vols.), HETTINGER (1888), and SCHEEBEN (1892, 3 vols.).

French works : BOSSUET : ("The Eagle of Meaux," "The Last of the Fathers," d. 1704) : Exposition de la doctrine de l'église catholique (many edd.).

TH. M. J. GOUSSET : Théologie dogmatique ou exposition des preuves et des dogmes de la relig. cathol. (Paris, 1850, 4 vols.).

English works : Cardinal WISEMAN : Lectures on the Principal Doctrines and Practices of the Catholic Church (London, 1836, several editions).

JOS. BERINGTON and JOHN KIRK : The Faith of Catholics on Certain Points of Controversy, Confirmed by Scripture and Attested by the Fathers of the First Five Centuries of the Church. Third edition, revised and greatly enlarged by JAMES WATERWORTH (London, 1846, 3 vols.).

JAMES GIBBONS (Cardinal, and Archbishop of Baltimore) : The Faith of our Fathers : Being a Plain Exposition and Vindication of the Church founded by our Lord Jesus Christ (Baltimore, 1876, 36th revised ed. 1890). Not scientific, but popular and very plausible, like Cardinal Wiseman's Lectures.

CHAPTER CCXII.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY OF THE LUTHERAN CHURCH.

The Dogmatic of the Lutheran Church is based upon the Augsburg Confession (1530) and the Formula of Concord (1577). It agrees with the Roman Church in the œcumenical doctrines, is Augustinian in anthropology and soteriology, and original in the doctrines of justification by faith alone (which expresses Luther's personal experience) and the eucharistic presence of Christ "in, with, and under" the elements of bread and wine.*

There are, however, two types of Lutheranism : the strict or high Lutheranism of the Formula of Concord, and the moderate, Melancthonian Lutheranism of the altered Augsburg Confession of 1540. The chief champions of the former theology are the Lutheran scholastics from the latter part of the sixteenth to the middle of the eighteenth century: Chemnitz (1591), John Gerhard, Hutter, Calov, Quenstedt, Hafenreffer, König, Baier, and Hollaz. In the nineteenth century, Lutheran orthodoxy was revived in opposition to Rationalism and Unionism, but in a milder form, and with some changes, by the leading theologians of Erlangen (Von Hofmann, Thomasius and Frank), Rostock (Philippi and Dieckhoff), and Leipzig (Kahnis and Luthardt).

* Kahnis (vol. i. 1) : "Die Dogmatik der lutherischen Kirche hat die Glaubenslehren lutherischen Bekenntnisses aus dem Formalprincipe der Schrift zu beweisen und aus dem Materialprincipe der Rechtfertigung aus dem Glauben zu entwickeln." This definition omits the doctrine of the Lord's Supper by which Lutheranism differs from the Roman and the Reformed doctrines ; but Kahnis surrendered the literal interpretation of the words of institution, on which Luther so strongly insisted at Marburg.

Melancthon, the pure and noble scholar, the "Præceptor Germaniæ," the inseparable companion of Luther who wrote to him his last letters, the admiring friend of Calvin, in whose bosom he wished to die, is the author of the Augsburg Confession and the proper founder of Lutheran Theology. He was far less original and productive than Luther, who cut out the stones from the quarry, but more scholarly and methodical. His Loci Theologici (1521), which grew out of his exegetical lectures on the Epistle to the Romans, and which Luther thought worthy of a place in the Canon, are the first attempt at an Evangelical Dogmatic, and, in their improved forms, continued to be the text-book in Lutheran universities till the beginning of the seventeenth century, when they were thrown into contempt by an uncharitable orthodoxy. It seems incredible that Leonhard Hutter, in a public disputation at Wittenberg, tore the likeness of Melancthon from the wall and trod upon it. But the spirit of Melancthon revived in Calixtus, Spener, Mosheim, Bengel, in the modern irenic Lutheranism, and in the evangelical Union Theology of Germany. His memory was celebrated throughout Protestant Christendom in 1860 at the third centennial of his death, and will ever be honored.

LITERATURE.

I. Historical representations of the scholastic Lutheran orthodoxy of the seventeenth century.

KARL HASE: Hutterus Redivivus, Dogmatik der Evangelisch-Lutherischen Kirche (Leipzig, 12th ed. 1883). The amiable author differed widely from the orthodoxy of the seventeenth century, but he knew how to appreciate it as a historian. He says in the preface: "Das dogmatische System des 16 und 17 Jahrhunderts kam mir vor wie einer unsrer alten deutschen Münster mit seinen himmelstrebenden Spitzbogen und wunderlichen sinnvollen Zierathen. Nicht allezeit ist der Herr in solch einem steinernen Hochwalde ver- ehrt worden. Als Er selbst noch auf Erden wandelte, war der Himmel und die Erde seine Kirche, ein Berg seine Kanzel; darnach hielt man das Liebesmahl in Werkstätten und in Katakomben; zu andrer Zeit erschalle das Te Deum laudamus unter den heitern Säulenhallen und Kuppelgewölben des Südens; und überall wo Zwei oder Tausende sich in seinem Namen versammelt hatten, war der Herr mitten unter ihnen. Einen Dom wie unsre Vorfahren kann unsre Zeit nicht wieder bauen, vor einigen Jahrzehnten hielt man's sogar für ein altgothisch barbarisch Bauwerk; es wird einem aber doch ganz besonders wie in einem Gotteshause darin zu Muthe." Hase presents his own dogmatic views in his Evangelische Dogmatik (Leipzig, 1826; 6th ed. 1870); and in his Gnosis, oder protestantisch-evangelische Glaubenslehre, für die Gebildeten in der Gemeinde, wissenschaftlich dargestellt (1827-29, 3 vols.; 2d ed. 1869-70, 2 vols.). This judgment applies to Calvinistic scholasticism as well.

HEINRICH SCHMID (of Erlangen, d. 1885): The Doctrinal Theology of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Translated from the 5th German ed. by Charles A. Hay and Henry E. Jacobs (Philadelphia, 1876).

II. Modern reproductions and modifications.

A. D. C. TWESTEN (successor of Schleiermacher in Berlin, d. 1876): Vorlesungen über die Dogmatik der Evangelisch-Lutherischen Kirche (Hamburg, 1837; 4th ed. 1838, 2 vols.). Represents the movement from Schleiermacher to Lutheranism, but within the United Church of Prussia. Very able and clear, but unfortunately never finished.

H. MARTENSEN: Die christliche Dogmatik (Kiel, 1850; 3d ed. 1855; English translation in Clark's Foreign Theological Library). Very fresh and genial.

F. A. PHILIPPI: Kirchliche Glaubenslehre (Stuttgart, 1854-72; 3d ed. 1864-88, 6 vols.). Strictly Lutheran.

GOTTFRIED THOMASUS (Professor in Erlangen, d. 1875): Christi Person und Werk. Darstellung der evangelisch-lutherischen Dogmatik vom Mittelpunkt der Christologie aus (Erlangen, 1852-61; 3d ed. 1888, 2 vols.). Christocentric. Departs from Lutheran orthodoxy by the theory of kenosis. Compare also his Dogmengeschichte (new ed. by Seeberg, 1888).

CHR. ERNST LUTHARDT (Professor in Leipzig): Kompendium der Dogmatik (Leipzig, 1865; 6th ed. 1882). A very useful manual.

K. FR. A. KAHNIS: Die Lutherische Dogmatik historisch-genetisch dargestellt (Leipzig, 2 vols., 1861 and 1864; new ed. in 2 vols., 1875). Progressive Lutheran orthodoxy in touch with modern thought. Compare his Zeugniss von den Grundwahrheiten des Protestantismus gegen Dr. Hengstenberg (Leipzig, 1862).

F. H. R. FRANK (Professor of Theology in Erlangen): System der christlichen Gewissheit (Erlangen, 1870-73, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1881-84). System der christlichen Wahrheit (Erlangen, 1878-80, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1885-86). Dogmatische Studien (Leipzig, 1892).

American works:

CHARLES B. KRAUTH (of Philadelphia, d. 1883): The Conservative Reformation and its Theology (Philadelphia, 1872). Not a system, but a series of essays in defense of the distinctive doctrines of orthodox Lutheranism, of which the author was the chief representative in America.

SAM. SPRECHER (President of Wittenberg College, Springfield, O.): Groundwork of a System of Evangelical Lutheran Theology (Phila., 1879).

CHAPTER CCXIII.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY OF THE REFORMED AND CALVINISTIC CHURCHES.

The Dogmatic Theology of the Evangelical Reformed Churches agrees with the evangelical Lutheran system, except in the doctrines of predestination, the sacraments and the ubiquity of Christ's body. It is based on the same pessimistic anthropology of St. Augustin, but is more logical and severe, and has gone through similar phases of development, but has been less influenced by Rationalism. It is embodied in the Reformed Confessions of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and is held by the Reformed Churches in Switzerland, Germany, France, Holland, by the Presbyterian Churches of England, Scotland and America, by the Congregational or Independent Churches, and, with the exception of the doctrine of baptism, by the Regular or Calvinistic Baptists. It was developed by Calvin, Bullinger, Danæus, Ursinus, Zanchi, Francis Turretin, Coccejus, Witsius, Heidegger, and all the Puritan divines of England and New England (Jonathan Edwards and his school). In the modern age it has been reproduced, with various modifications, by Alex. Schweizer, Heinrich Heppe, Ed. Böhl, Aug. Ebrard and Van Oosterzee in Europe, and by Dwight, Taylor, Park, Hodge, Shedd, H. B. Smith, and E. V. Gerhart in America.

There are two types of Calvinism, as there are of Lutheranism: the strict, scholastic Calvinism of the Canons of Dort and the Westminster Confession; and the moderate Calvinism of the Heidelberg Catechism, the Second Helvetic Confession, and the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England. Moderate and progressive Calvinism omits or softens the five knotty points of Dort and seeks to reconcile divine sovereignty and human liberty, divine justice and divine love. It is in sympathy with the Melancthonian type of Lutheranism; it enters as an important factor into the evangelical Union Theology of Germany, and is gaining ground in all the Reformed Churches of Europe and America.

LITERATURE.

JOHN CALVIN: Institutio Christianæ Religionis (1st ed. 1536; last revised ed. 1559). A classical masterpiece of permanent value. Many edd. in different languages; see the literary notices in SCHAFF'S Church History, vol. vii., pp. 327 sq.

HEINRICH HEPPE (Professor in Marburg, d. 1879): Die Dogmatik der evang. reform. Kirche (Elberfeld, 1861).—Dogmatik des deutschen Protestantismus im 16ten Jahrh. (Gotha, 1857, 3 vols.). Compare also his Bekenntnisschriften der altprotestantischen Kirche Deutschlands (Cassel, 1855).

ALEXANDER SCHWEIZER (Professor in Zürich, d. 1888): Die Glaubenslehre der Evang. Reform. Kirche, dargestellt und aus den Quellen belegt (Zürich, 1844–47, 2 vols.). Compare his Centraldogmen der Reform. Kirche (Zürich, 1854–56, 2 vols.). Two very important historical works. A. Baur (in his Zwingli's Theologie, ii. Preface) calls Schweizer "the genuine successor of Zwingli in his chair and pulpit." He was the ablest Reformed pupil of Schleiermacher, as Twisten was his ablest Lutheran pupil. He gives his own dogmatic system in his Christliche Glaubenslehre nach protestantischen Grundsätzen dargestellt (Leipzig, 1863–72, 3 parts; 2d ed. 1877).

J. H. A. EBRARD: Christliche Dogmatik (Königsb., 2d ed. 1863, 2 vols.). Moderately Calvinistic (Melancthonian), and polemic against Schweizer.

JOHN PETER LANGE (Professor first at Zürich, then at Bonn, d. 1884): Christliche Dogmatik (Heidelberg, 1849–52; new ed. 1870, 3 vols.). Divided into three parts: 1. Philosophical Dogmatic; 2. Positive Dogmatic; 3. Polemic and Irenic. Full of original thoughts and fancies.

J. J. VAN OOSTERZEE (Professor in Utrecht, d. 1882): Christian Dogmatics: A Textbook for Academic Instruction and Private Study. Translated from the Dutch (London and New York, 1874, 2 vols.).

Scotch Presbyterian works by G. HILL, J. DICK, and THOMAS CHALMERS.

CHARLES HODGE (Professor in Princeton, d. 1878): Systematic Theology (New York and Edinburgh, 1872, 3 vols., with an index vol.). The standard work of the Old School type of American Presbyterianism.

ARCHIBALD A. HODGE (son and successor of the former, d. at Princeton, 1886): Outlines of Theology (New York, 1860; rev. and enlarged, 1879). A popular epitome of his father's work.

HENRY B. SMITH (Professor in Union Theological Seminary, d. 1877): System of Christian Theology (New York, 1st ed. 1884; 4th ed. 1890). A posthumous work, published from lectures by William S. Karr, and therefore incomplete, but very able, acute and philosophical. Progressive Calvinism in transition to Christocentric theology, and in living touch with modern German systems of thought.

WILLIAM G. T. SHEDD (Professor in Union Theological Seminary, resigned 1890): Dogmatic Theology (New York, 2d ed. 1889, 2 vols.). A clear, strong, logical reproduction of the high Calvinism of the Westminster Confession.

AUGUSTUS H. STRONG (Professor in Rochester Theological Seminary, Baptist): Systematic Theology (New York, 1886; 2d ed. 1889). High Calvinistic, except on the baptismal question.

EMANUEL V. GERHART (Professor in the German Reformed Seminary at Lancaster, Pa.): Institutes of the Christian Religion (New York, 1891, to be completed in two more vols.). Christocentric. The fruit of the Mergersburg movement.

LEWIS FRENCH STEARNS (a pupil of Henry B. Smith, Professor in the Theological Seminary at Bangor, Me. ; d. 1892) : Present Day Theology: A Popular Discussion of Leading Doctrines of the Christian Faith (New York, 1893). With a biographical Introduction by Professor George L. Prentiss.

A. M. FAIRBAIRN : The Place of Christ in Modern Theology (New York, 1893).

CHAPTER CCXIV.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY OF THE ANGLICAN CHURCH.

The Church of England and her independent daughter, the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, is the most conservative of the evangelical Churches and nearest the Roman Catholic in organization and worship. She was once intolerant and exclusive, and she still insists upon conformity to episcopacy and the rubrics of her liturgy ; but in theology, she is very liberal and allows almost as much latitude, at least in England, as the Protestant State Churches on the Continent. She nursed at her breast Calvinistic Puritans, Arminian Methodists, liberal Latitudinarians, and Romanizing Tractarians and Ritualists. She has room for divines as Calvinistic as Toplady and as Arminian as Wesley, as high-church and Romanizing as Dr. Pusey and as broad-church and latitudinarian as Dean Stanley. Recent judicial decisions in the cases of Hampden (1836), Gorham (1850), Bennett (1871), and others, have all been decided in favor of the liberty of holding different opinions, even to the denial of baptismal regeneration and the real presence.

This comprehensiveness of the Church as a whole is quite consistent with the narrowness and exclusiveness of parties within her bosom. It repels and attracts ; it caused the large secessions which have occurred at critical junctures, but it explains also the individual accessions which she continually and quietly receives from the clergy and laity of other churches. The English mind is not theorizing and speculative, but eminently practical and conservative ; it follows more the power of habit than the logic of thought ; it takes things as they are, makes haste slowly, mends abuses cautiously, and aims at what is attainable rather than at what is ideal.

The Anglican theology is composite and eclectic, like the English language. It was first moulded by the influence of Melancthonian Lutheranism, afterwards more strongly by Calvinism. The Thirty-nine Articles drawn up by Cranmer in 1553 with the aid of Bucer and Peter Martyr, revised under Queen Elizabeth in 1563 in Latin, and 1571 in English, and again revised by the American Episcopal Church in 1801, must be classed upon the whole with the Reformed or moderately Calvinistic confessions. They accept the three œcumenical creeds (the Athanasian Creed, however, is wisely omitted in the American revision). They are moderately Augustinian in the doctrines of free-will, sin and grace; Lutheran in the articles of justification and the Church; and Reformed or moderately Calvinistic in the doctrines of predestination and the Lord's Supper. They were supplemented by the Nine Lambeth Articles (1595), which go to the full extent of Calvin's doctrine of absolute predestination (with reprobation and preterition). The same rigorous Calvinism was taught in the Irish Articles of Archbishop Ussher (1615), some of which were literally incorporated into the Westminster Confession. In the Elizabethan age, Calvin was the greatest theological authority in England. Even the moderate and judicious Richard Hooker prized him most highly, and says that "the perfectest divines were judged they which were skillfullest in Calvin's writings; his books almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by." The Church of England was represented by five delegates at the Calvinistic Synod of Dort (1619), among them, John Davenant and Joseph Hall.

In the reign of Charles I., chiefly through the influence of Archbishop Laud, Calvinism gave way to Arminianism, but it revived again in the low-church or evangelical party. This was followed by the Oxford or Anglo-Catholic and Ritualistic revival, and later by the broad-church liberalism. The Thirty-nine Articles have lost much of their authority. The Nicene Creed has risen in estimation, and is offered by the Lambeth Conference of Bishops as a sufficient doctrinal basis for the reunion of Christendom.

LITERATURE.

The chief dogmatic works of Anglican divines are expositions of the Apostles' Creed, and of the Thirty-nine Articles.

RICHARD HOOKER (d. 1600): Eight Books of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity (London, 1594 sqq., not completed; best edition by John Keble, Oxford, 1841, 3 vols.).

JAMES USSHER (Archbishop of Armagh and Primate of Ireland, d. 1656): Body of Divinity (1638) and Principles of the Christian Religion (1654). Calvinistic. Complete ed. of his Works (Dublin, 1847 sqq., 16 vols.).

JOHN PEARSON (Bishop of Chester, b. 1612, d. 1686): An Exposition of the Creed. Third ed. by the author, 1669, fol., and very often since. Ed. with notes by Dobson (London, 1840), by Burton (Oxford, 1847), Chevallier (Cambridge, 1849). One of the most valuable works on theology in the English language.

GEORGE BULL (d. 1710): Defensio Fidei Nicænæ (London, 1685; a new translation, Oxford, 1851, 2 vols.).

WILLIAM BEVERIDGE (Bishop of St. Asaph, d. 1708): Thesaurus Theologicus; or, A Complete System of Divinity (London, 1710–11, 4 vols.; new ed. 1828, 2 vols.).

E. HAROLD BROWNE (Bishop of Winchester since 1873, resigned 1890): An Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles (London, 1850–53, in 2 vols., and often since; American ed. by Bishop Williams, New York, 1865, etc.).

Other commentaries on the Articles by THOMAS ROGERS, GILBERT BURNET, RICHARD LAURENCE, THOMAS R. JONES, A. P. FORBES, R. W. JELF, J. MILLER. See the literature and a full discussion of the Anglican standards in Schaff's Creeeds, vol. i., pp. 592–665.

SAM. BUEL (Professor in the General Theological Episcopal Seminary, New York, d. 1892): Treatise of Systematic Theology (New York, 1889, 2 vols.).

NOTE.—The most recent authoritative deliverance of the Episcopal Church of England and America is the four articles of the Pan-Anglican Conference, held at Lambeth Palace, London, 1888, as a basis of union for English-speaking Churches.

“1. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as ‘containing all things necessary to salvation,’ and as being the rule and ultimate standard of Faith.

“2. The Apostles’ Creed, as the Baptismal Symbol; and the Nicene Creed, as the sufficient statement of the Christian Faith. (Nothing is said about the Filioque.)

“3. The two Sacraments ordained by Christ himself,—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord,—ministered with unfailling use of Christ’s words of institution, and of the elements ordained by him.

“4. The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the unity of his Church.”

This is the shortest and most liberal creed ever set forth by any orthodox Church. But the fourth article, which refers to government rather than doctrine, has met with serious objection in the non-episcopal Churches.

CHAPTER CCXV.

ARMINIAN AND METHODIST THEOLOGY.

The Arminian Theology arose in the Reformed Church of Holland in reaction against strict scholastic Calvinism, and is expressed in the Five Articles of the Remonstrants of 1610, which relate to predestination, the extent of the atonement, the nature of faith, the irresistibility of grace, and the perseverance of saints. It teaches that foreordination is conditioned by foreknowledge; that the atonement is universal and sufficient for all men, although efficient only for the elect; that divine grace may be resisted, since man has still a remnant of freedom to accept or reject the offer of salvation; and that regenerate believers may totally and finally fall from grace and be lost.

Arminianism was rejected and banished by the National Synod of Dort (1619); but after the death of Prince Maurice of Nassau (1625), the expelled Arminians were allowed to return with full liberty to establish churches and schools in every town of Holland. Their doctrines were defended with much learning and ability by Hugo Grotius, Episcopius, Limborch, Curcellæus, Clericus (Le Clerc), and Wetstein.

The Arminian system assumed a much wider field and practical power in England and America than in Holland. It has largely influenced the Church of England since the time of Archbishop Laud, and was adopted by John Wesley and his followers.

The Methodist Theology is a modified evangelical Arminianism. It differs from the Dutch Arminianism by a stronger Augustinian view on natural corruption; it lays greater stress on the subjective experience of conversion and regeneration; and adds a few additional doctrines, namely:

1. The doctrine of the universality of divine grace not only in its intention, but in its actual offer. (This was derived from the Quaker doctrine of universal light.)
2. The doctrine of the witness of the Spirit or the assurance of salvation (Rom. 8: 15, 16).
3. The doctrine of perfectionism (also borrowed from the Quakers, and based on such passages as Matt. 5: 48; Phil. 3: 15; Heb. 6: 1; 10: 4; 1 John 3: 6; 5: 18).

LITERATURE.

JAMES ARMINIUS (Professor in Leyden, d. 1609): Works, translated from the Latin by James and William Nichols (London, 1825-75, 3 vols.; Opera Theol., 1631).

PHILIP VAN LIMBORCH (Professor in the Arminian College at Amsterdam, and chief defender of religious toleration in his age; d. 1712): Institutiones Theol. Christianæ (Amsterdam, 1686, 5 edd. till 1735; English translation by William Jones, London, 1702, 2 vols.).

JOHN WESLEY (founder of Methodism, and the most apostolic man that England has produced; d. 1791): Sermons on Several Occasions (London, 1771, 4 vols.; many edd.). Compare his Explanatory Notes upon the New Testament (based upon Bengel's Gnomon).

Methodist Articles of Religion, a liberal and judicious abridgment of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, drawn up by Wesley for the American Methodists, and adopted at a Conference in 1784, and again in 1804. They are printed in the official Manual of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and in Schaff's Creeds of Christendom, vol. iii., pp. 807-813.

RICHARD WATSON (Wesleyan, b. 1781, d. in London, 1833): Theological Institutes; or, A View of the Evidences, Doctrines, Morals, and Institutions of Christianity (London, 1823-24, 3 vols.; many edd.). With a copious Index and Analysis by Dr. John McClintock (New York, 1850, 2 vols.). "The moral and scientific standard of Methodism."

WILLIAM BURT POPE (Professor in Didsbury College, Manchester): A Compendium of Christian Theology (London and New York, 1875-76; revised ed. 1879-81, 3 vols.).

MINER RAYMOND (Professor in Garrett Biblical Institute since 1864, Evanston, Ill.): Systematic Theology (Cincinnati, O., 1877-79, 3 vols.).

JOHN MILEY (Professor of Systematic Theology in Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J.): Systematic Theology (New York and Cincinnati, 1892, pp. xvi., 533, to be continued).

CHAPTER CCXVI.

SOCINIAN AND UNITARIAN THEOLOGY.

Socinianism of the sixteenth century, and Anglo-American Unitarianism of the nineteenth century may be classed together as radical departures from the general orthodoxy of the historic Churches, Greek, Roman, and Evangelical. They are alike opposed to the Nicene Theology and the Augustinian anthropology. They reject the doctrines of the Trinity and the Incarnation, the vicarious atonement of Christ, original sin and total depravity, and materially modify other essential articles of the Catholic creeds.

But, while they are indifferent or hostile to dogmas, they firmly maintain the ethical teaching of Christianity and emphasize the moral perfection of Christ as the highest model for imitation. This accounts for the noble and refined type of Christian character which is often found among Socinians and Unitarians.

Socinianism has produced a meager, but definite system of theology. It is laid down in the Rakow (Racovian) Catechism and the writings of Faustus Socinus and his followers which are collected in the Bibliotheca Fratrum Polonorum (1656, 6 vols. fol.). The Socinian sect flourished awhile in Poland, but was expelled by the Diet of Warsaw under the influence of the Jesuits in 1658, and found a refuge in Transylvania and in Holland. It became the mother of English Unitarianism, and exerted much influence upon the theology of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches.

Servetus, who was burned for heresy at Geneva in 1554, is sometimes called the author and martyr of Unitarianism, but his system is Christopanteistic rather than Unitarian, and was not properly understood in his day, not even fully by Calvin his great antagonist.* The real founder is the younger Socinus (d. 1604) and other Italian refugees who settled in Switzerland, but were repelled by the rigor of the Calvinistic system, and offended by the execution of Servetus. They were among the first advocates of religious toleration.

The Socinian Theology is not a system of pure rationalism, but of rational supernaturalism. It rejects the tri-personality of God and the essential divinity of Christ, and reduces the Holy Spirit to a divine power or influence; but it teaches the absolute necessity of a divine revelation as laid down in the Bible, accepts the New Testament as an infallible guide in matters of faith and duty, and makes Christ an object of divine worship. Christ was conceived without sin, divinely illuminated by a rapture to heaven (raptus in cælum) and deified after his resurrection in reward for his perfect obedience in life and death by being elevated to a participation in the divine majesty and government. Faustus Socinus refused to recognize as Christians those who would not pay divine honors to Christ.

Unitarianism in England and America has no formulated creed or dogmatic system, and allows greater latitude of development, both in the direction of heresy and orthodoxy, between a purely humanitarian and a high Arian Christology, with corresponding freedom in other doctrines. The only article of Unitarian belief is the acceptance of Christ as Lord and Saviour, and as the model of moral conduct. Beyond this it is liberal and elastic. It professes to be "not a fixed dogmatic statement, but a movement of ever-enlarging faith, welcoming inquiry, progress, and diversity of individual thought in the unity of spiritual thought."

* See a full account of the theological system of Servetus from his Restitutio Christianismi, and of the toleration controversies connected with it, in Schaff's Church History, vol. vii., pp. 736-757. Servetus was a theological genius of great originality and speculative power.

The chief Unitarian divines are James Martineau, William E. Channing, Andrews Norton, George E. Ellis, James F. Clarke, Andrew P. Peabody, Joseph H. Allen. The radical or left wing is represented by Theodore Parker, who sympathized with Strauss, but had a higher view of Christ and an enthusiasm for humanity and moral reform.

CHAPTER CCXVII.

RATIONALISTIC THEOLOGY.

Rationalism goes further than Socinianism and the conservative wing of Unitarianism. It makes reason the chief fountain of authority and an arbiter of the Church and the Bible. It rejects or minimizes revelation and inspiration, and treats the Bible like any other book, though assigning it the highest place among works of religious genius. It is not organized as a religious society, but is simply a school or tendency within the Protestant State Churches of Europe. It resembles in this respect the schools of Gnosticism in the ante-Nicene age.

Rationalism arose at the end of the last century in Germany in opposition to Lutheran orthodoxy, and as a reaction against symbololatriy, and has there developed great scientific and literary activity. At one time it had the controlling influence in the universities and Church judicatories. It has spread its influence over the Protestant Churches of the Continent, and is exerting itself of late also in England and America. It is chiefly negative and destructive, but has a critical value in exposing the weak points of traditional orthodoxy and stimulating progress. Thus it serves a similar purpose to modern Protestantism as Gnosticism did to the ancient Church.

In Rationalistic Theology, we must distinguish chiefly two phases, the theistic or Kantian, and the pantheistic or Hegelian.

The older Rationalism, represented by Wegscheider and Bretschneider, retained the fundamental articles of the personality of God, the freedom and moral responsibility of man, and the immortality of the soul.

The later Rationalism, represented by Strauss and Biedermann, begins by denying the personality of God, and ends in the annihilation or absorption of the personality of man.

The Hegelian philosophy originally produced a quasi-orthodox theology, which was represented by Marheineke and Daub, or the right wing. It treated vulgar Rationalism with contempt, and defended the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, especially the Trinity and Incarnation, but gave them a different and speculative meaning. The left or radical wing denies the historicity of the gospel facts, and thus undermines the firm foundation of the eternal truths which those facts are supposed to embody.

The latest phase is more positive and constructive, partly in connection with the revival of Kant's philosophy (Lipsius), partly on the basis of the Hegelian philosophy (Pfleiderer).

LITERATURE.

I. Theistic Rationalism.

J. A. L. WEGSCHEIDER (Professor in Halle, d. 1849): Institutiones Theologicae Christianae Dogmaticae (Halle, 1815; 8th ed. 1844).

K. G. BRETSCHNEIDER (Professor at Wittenberg, 1804, General Superintendent at Gotha, 1816; d. 1848): Handbuch der Dogmatik der evang.-luther. Kirche (Leipzig, 1814 sqq.; 4th ed. 1838, 2 vols.); also, Systemat. Entwicklung aller in der Dogmatik vorkommenden Begriffe (Leipzig, 1805; 4th ed. 1841).

II. Pantheistic Rationalism.

PHIL. MARHEINEKE (Professor in Berlin, d. 1846): Die Grundlehren der christlichen Dogmatik (Berlin, 1819; 2d ed. 1827).—System der christlichen Dogmatik (1847). Orthodox Hegelianism.

D. F. STRAUSS (d. 1874): Die christliche Glaubenslehre in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung und im Kampfe mit der modernen Wissenschaft (Tübingen, 1840–41, 2 vols.). Purely destructive, like his Leben Jesu. His last sad work was Der alte und der neue Glaube (11th ed. 1881), in which he retracts all his former concessions to Christianity and avows the gospel of materialism and pessimism.

A. E. BIEDERMANN (Professor in Zürich, d. 1885): Christliche Dogmatik 1869; 2d ed. Berlin, 1885, 2 vols.). He was an earnest Christian man, and tried to combine practical Christianity with pantheistic theology.

III. R. A. LIPSIVS (Professor in Jena, d. 1892): Lehrbuch der evangelisch-protestantischen Dogmatik (Braunschweig, 1876; 2d ed. 1879). On the basis of Kant and Schleiermacher. He opposes the modern Lutheran orthodoxy, but also the school of Ritschl. He has great respect for Biedermann, but differs from him, as Schleiermacher differed from Hegel.

OTTO PFLEIDERER (Professor in Berlin since 1875): Grundriss der Glaubens- und Sittenlehre (Berlin, 1880; 4th ed. 1888). Comp. his Philosophy of Religion (2d ed. 1884). He belongs to the philosophical school of Hegel and the critical historical school of Baur, and closely approaches Biedermann, but allows more influence to the convictions of the heart (Gemüth). He defines religion to be essentially a matter of the heart (wesentlich Herzenssache, p. 12), and faith as a dedication of the heart to the revelation of divine mercy in the gospel (centraler Herzensakt der Hingabe an die Gnadenoffenbarung Gottes im Evangelium, p. 7).

CHAPTER CCXVIII.

EVANGELICAL UNION THEOLOGY.

The Evangelical Union Theology arose with the revival of evangelical religion after the dreary winter of Rationalism. In Germany, it is connected with the ecclesiastical Union of the Lutheran and Reformed Confessions, which was introduced at the third jubilee of the Reformation in 1817 in Prussia and other German States. But it is quite independent of this governmental Union and has sympathizers in all Protestant countries and churches. It has exerted more influence upon modern English and American thought than any other German school.

This type of Evangelical Theology rests on the consensus of the two leading Protestant Confessions, which is not formulated in a creed, but has practically superseded the exclusive confessionalism, and is allowed to shape itself freely with the progressive march of knowledge.* The doctrinal differences of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches are theological rather than religious, and do not prevent Christian and ecclesiastical communion, but admit of reconciliation in a higher type, and demand a further development. For this reason this theology is sometimes called the Theology of Mediation or Reconciliation.†

It rises also above the antagonism of Rationalism and Supernaturalism, and finds the essence of Christianity not in a body of doctrines, but in a divine fact and a new life, namely, the revelation of God in Christ for the salvation of the world.

The Union Theology was foreshadowed by the genial Herder and men of kindred spirit. It was first advocated and constructed into a scientific system by Schleiermacher, who eman-

* Dr. Julius Müller made an important contribution towards a formulated consensus from the Lutheran and Reformed Confessions in his work, Die evangelische Union, ihr Wesen und göttliches Recht (Berlin, 1854), pp. 170-205, but it has no official character.

† Vermittlungstheologie, also used in the sense of mediating between faith and philosophy, orthodoxy and liberty.

icipated German Theology from the dominion of Rationalism, and, together with Neander, his colleague, introduced a new era. It was modified and developed by Twesten, Schweizer, Nitzsch, Julius Müller, Rothe, Ullmann, Lange, Dorner, and others. Schleiermacher was the son of a Reformed minister and educated among the Moravians, and shows the influence of these connections in his system (the Calvinistic element in his conception of religion as a sense of absolute dependence, and the Moravian influence in his Christocentric principle); but the majority of evangelical Union divines are of Lutheran descent and mode of thinking. They have the conciliatory and liberal spirit of Melancthon. They reject the double predestinarianism (not election by free grace, which is acknowledged by all, but what Calvin called the decretum horribile of eternal reprobation), and emphasize the fatherhood and love of God rather than his sovereignty and justice. But they mostly accept Calvin's doctrine of the spiritual real presence in the Lord's Supper, which was a point of agreement between him and Melancthon in his later phase of development.

The Union Theology of Germany is confined to the Lutheran and German Reformed type. A corresponding theology in Great Britain and America must enlarge its scope and include as far as possible the post-Reformation forms of English-speaking evangelical Protestantism, which in our generation are gradually coming into closer sympathy and fellowship; but an evangelical catholic consensus creed and theology is as yet a matter of the future.

LITERATURE.

FRIEDRICH SCHLEIERMACHER (Professor in Berlin, d. 1834): Der christliche Glaube nach den Grundsätzen der evangelischen Kirche (Berlin, 1830; 3d ed. 1835, 2 vols.). Ritschl ranks this work with the Summa of Thomas Aquinas and the Institutio of Calvin, as one of the three great dogmatic systems. But we would rather compare Schleiermacher with Origen, and his theology with the work De Principiis. It is epoch-making and suggestive even in its errors, but unsatisfactory as a system. It is built upon the Christian consciousness or experience of sin and grace as expressed in the evangelical confessions, and prepares the way for Christocentric Theology. His best pupils have gone beyond him in the direction of positive faith. He himself protested earnestly "against the honor of being the head of a new theological school" (Preface to the second ed., 1830, p. 5).

To the Evangelical Union school of theology as to spirit and aim, but with various modifications, belong the dogmatic works (already mentioned in preceding chapters) of Nitzsch, Twesten, Liebner, Martensen, Hase, J. P. Lange, Schweizer, Ebrard, Heppe, and Van Oosterzee.

JULIUS MÜLLER (Professor in Halle, d. 1878): Die christliche Lehre von der Sünde (Breslau, 1838; 7th ed., Bremen, 1889; English translation by William Urwick, The Christian Doctrine of Sin, from the 5th ed., Edinb. 1868; new ed. 1877, 2 vols.). The best book on hamartology. (In connection with this work may be mentioned Tholuck's popular and very effective book on Sin and Redemption, 1825, in a series of letters between Julius, i.e., Julius Müller, and Guido, i.e., his friend Tholuck. Both were colleagues in Halle.)—Dogmatische Abhandlungen (Bremen, 1870).—Die evang. Union (Berlin, 1854).

Julius Müller was one of the purest, ablest and soundest divines of Germany, and his lectures on Theology (of which I have a good manuscript) would have been welcomed in print, but in his extreme modesty he ordered all his manuscripts to be destroyed. Dr. Henry B. Smith has published Müller's scheme and the collection of his proof-texts.

KARL ULLMANN (Professor of Church History at Heidelberg, d. 1865) was a Church historian, but his Das Wesen des Christenthums (The Essence of Christianity, 1845; 5th Germ. ed. 1865; English translation by John W. Nevin, 1846) and Die Sündlosigkeit Jesu (The Sinlessness of Jesus, 7th ed. 1863; English translation, by Sophia Taylor, 1870) must be mentioned here for their dogmatic contents.

RICHARD ROTHE (Professor in Heidelberg, d. 1867): Dogmatik (published from manuscript, by D. Schenkel, Heidelberg, 1870, 2 vols.).—Zur Dogmatik (Gotha, 1863). Compare also his Theologische Ethik (2d ed. 1867–71, 5 vols.), which contains a great deal of dogmatic theology. Rothe was one of the profoundest speculative divines of the nineteenth century, and worked up some of the best elements of Hegel's philosophy and Schleiermacher's theology into an independent system. He combines strong faith in supernatural revelation with a liberal view on inspiration. He says (in the Preface to his Zur Dogmatik): "Mein strenger Supranaturalismus und Offenbarungsglaube stösst den theologischen Liberalismus vor den Kopf, meine Weise, die heil. Schrift anzusehen, die orthodoxe Richtung." To him may be applied the words of Cardinal Cajetan to Luther: "He has profound eyes and marvelous speculations in his head."

ISAAC A. DORNER (Professor in Berlin, d. 1884): System der christlichen Glaubenslehre (Berlin, 1879–81, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1886; English translation by Cave and Banks, A System of Christian Doctrine, Edinburgh, 1880–82, 4 vols.). A profound work of permanent value, influenced by Schleiermacher and Hegel, but biblical and positive. Compare also his classical history of Christology (2d., 2 vols.), his collection of Theological Essays (1883), his History of Protestant Theology (1867) and his theological correspondence with Martensen from 1839 to 1881 (posthumously published, Berlin, 1888, 2 vols.).

FR. REIFF: Die christliche Glaubenslehre als Grundlage der christl. Weltanschauung (Basel, 1872, 2 vols.; 2d ed. 1876). Popular and biblical.

A. GRETILLAT (Professor of theology in La Faculté Indépendante de Neuchâtel): Exposé de Théologie Systématique (Neuchâtel, 1892).

The "Studien und Kritiken," a theological quarterly, started by Ullmann and Umbreit, 1828, and still published (at present by Köstlin and Kautzsch), and Herzog's "Theol. Real-Encyclopædie" (especially the first ed., 22 vols.) are chiefly, though by no means exclusively, controlled in their doctrinal articles by evangelical Unionists.

CHAPTER CCXIX.

THE THEOLOGY OF RITSCHL.

The latest school of German Theology was founded by Dr. Ritschl (1822-89), and spread rapidly in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. He belonged originally to the critical Tübingen school of Baur, who was a Hegelian in philosophy; but he took a new departure in 1857, first on questions of apostolic and post-apostolic Church history, and then also in philosophy and theology.*

This school is largely influenced by Schleiermacher, but it takes its stand on the objective records of primitive Christianity rather than the subjective experience of the religious consciousness.† It rises, like the Evangelical Union Theology, above the confessional antagonism of Lutheranism and Calvinism, but sympathizes with the spirit of the former; while Schleiermacher's system has an affinity with the latter. His orthodox opponents denounce his theology as a new form of Rationalism, but it differs from the Rationalism of Kant and Hegel by its evangelical spirit and by recognizing the supernatural revelation of God in Christ as its basis.

Ritschl agrees with Schleiermacher in keeping theology free from philosophy. He expels all metaphysical dogmas and arguments from the domain of Christian doctrines. He leaves no room for Natural Theology.‡ He claims to deliver theology from all collision with philosophy, science and biblical criticism, and to simplify the problem of faith by relieving it of foreign matter which has no necessary connection with faith and religious life. He hopes to commend Christianity to educated and thinking people who have lost all confidence in dogmas, which can at best be made only plausible, but cannot compel conviction.

* Ritschl maintained against Baur the originality and priority of the Gospel of Mark, and took a different view on the origin of the old Catholic Church, in the second edition of his work, Die Entstehung der altkatholischen Kirche (1857).

† See Kattenbusch, Von Schleiermacher zu Ritschl, zur Orientirung über den gegenwärtigen Stand der Dogmatik (Giessen, 1892).

‡ He once startled an American student, who in broken German magnified the importance of Natural Theology, by the cool reply: "So ein Ding giebt's ja gar nicht" (There is no such thing)! But it lives and will survive.

But his theology is not unphilosophical, any more than Schleiermacher's. He has a philosophy of his own, which controls his thinking. He admits that every scientific theologian must proceed according to a definite theory of cognition. He adopts Kant's theory of cognition, as modified by Lotze. He distinguishes, with Kant, between the thing-in-itself, which we cannot know, and the thing-for-us, or the phenomenon, which we can know. Religious judgments are judgments of value (Werthurtheile), that is, affirmations as to what persons and things are worth, not in themselves, but to us.* Ritschlianism is connected with the rise of New Kantianism; it is a wholesome reaction of agnosticism, which recognizes the boundaries of human knowledge, against the Hegelian gnosticism, which claims absolute knowledge.†

Here is the philosophical ground of Ritschl's hostility to metaphysical dogmas, and to the modern Lutheran orthodoxy. He assigns to Luther the highest place among theologians, and professes to follow him in his earliest stage, that is, Luther as an evangelical Christian and Reformer, but not Luther as a Catholic dogmatist and reactionist. Luther ought consistently to have made an end of dogma instead of originating new dogmas (like the ubiquity of Christ's body, and the communi-

* "Alle Erkenntnisse religiöser Art sind directe Werthurtheile." Die christl. Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (vol. iii., pp. 195, 376; third ed.).

† The agnosticism of Kant, Sir William Hamilton and Mansel, who believed in the Christian revelation, must not be confounded with the skeptical agnosticism of Darwin, Spencer and Huxley. I quote an interesting passage from Sir William Hamilton's Dissertations, which states his theory in an extreme form:

"There are two sorts of ignorance: we philosophize to escape ignorance, and the consummation of our philosophy is ignorance. We start from the one, we repose in the other; they are the goals from which and to which we tend; and the pursuit of knowledge is but a course between two ignorances, as human life is itself only a traveling from grave to grave. The highest reach of human science is the scientific recognition of human ignorance: Qui nescit ignorare, ignorat scire. This learned ignorance is the rational conviction by the human mind of its inability to transcend certain limits: it is the knowledge of ourselves—the science of man. This is accomplished by a demonstration of the disproportion between what is to be known and our faculties of knowing the disproportion, to wit, between the infinite and the finite. In fact, the recognition of human ignorance is not only the one highest but the one true knowledge, and its first-fruit is humility. Simple nescience is not proud: consummated science is positively humble. The grand result of human wisdom is thus only a consciousness that what we know is as nothing to what we know not—an articulate confession, in fact, by our natural reason, of the truth declared in Revelation, that "now we see through a glass darkly." catio idiomatum), which were afterwards imposed on the Church as articles of faith in the Formula of Concord and developed and vindicated by the scholastics of the seventeenth century. In the controversy with Zwingli he fell back more and more into the subtleties of the schoolmen whom he formerly had despised as sophists and followers of the "accursed heathen Aristotle."*

The historians of Ritschl's school, under the lead of Harnack, regard the Nicene Creed as the product of the Hellenic philosophy working upon Christian material, rather than the product of Christian faith aided by the forms of Hellenic philosophy. The orthodox terminology of "person," "nature," "essence," "coequality," "incarnation," etc., † as applied to the Trinity (three persons in one nature) and to the person of Christ (one person in two natures), served its purpose in the Greek Church, but has lost its meaning and significance for our age. ‡ Even the two clauses of the Apostles' Creed, "Conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary," are ruled out of the essential articles of apostolic teaching. §

This theology is therefore anti-dogmatic and anti-scholastic; it is still more anti-mystic. Herein lies both its strength and its weakness.

Ritschl emphasizes the moral element in the religious life and exalts practice and experience above theory and speculation. He bases theology on the historical person of Christ and

* Comp. here Harnack's Dogmengeschichte, vol. iii., pp. 755 sqq. He confines Dogmengeschichte to the history of dogmas properly so called, and strangely excludes Calvinism and Arminianism, the two leading dogmatic systems of the Reformed Church; while he devotes 73 pages to Lutheranism (691-764) and 38 pages to Socinianism (653-691). German divines have no proper conception of the extent and power of the Reformed Church beyond Germany and Switzerland, and are apt to regard Zwingli and Calvin as mere epigoni of the Reformation.

† These and other terms belong to ecclesiastical Greek, and are not found in the New Testament. See p. 138.

‡ See the Christological section in Ritschl's Die christl. Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (vol. iii., p. 364 sqq.), and the second volume of Harnack's Dogmengeschichte. The same view is carried out more fully in the posthumous work of Edwin Hatch (a friend of Harnack), The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages upon the Christian World (The Hibbert Lectures for 1888), ed. by Fairbairn, London, 1890. Hatch regards the elevation of dogma over conduct as the damnosa hereditas bequeathed by Greek thought to Christendom.

§ Schleiermacher, also, denied the supernatural conception, but held strictly to the sinlessness of Christ and assumed that the Holy Spirit kept him free from all contact with sin from the beginning (vol. ii., p. 64 sqq.).

the facts of primitive Christianity as ascertained by critical and historical research, with the fullest liberty of dissent from traditional opinions on the authorship and canonicity of the books of the Bible (as exercised by Luther in his early stage).

Dogmatic Theology is essentially Christological and Christocentric.* Christ is the first and only sinless man, and the supreme revelation of the love of God. He founded the kingdom of heaven, which is the aim of divine revelation. The divinity of the risen and exalted Lord is admitted, but his personal pre-existence is declared to be unessential and of little practical consequence.† It is left an open question, like the apostolicity of the fourth Gospel, on which the Ritschlians are divided. Justification, or the pardon of sin, is the foundation of personal piety. The Church is the medium of the experience of justification. We must exercise individual faith, but the object of faith is presented to us through the religious community with which we are connected. Mysticism, which rests on the pretense of a direct personal revelation in communication with Christ, is discarded as a fanatical delusion.‡

In a private letter to me, Dr. Ritschl, shortly before his death, condensed his theological system into the following summary: "Strictest recognition of the revelation of God through Christ; most accurate use of the Holy Scripture as the fountain of knowledge of the Christian religion; view of Jesus Christ as the ground of knowledge for all parts of the theological system; in accord with the original documents of the Lutheran Reformation respecting those peculiarities which differentiate its type of doctrine from that of the middle ages."§

Among the chief dogmatic followers of Ritschl are Kaftan in Berlin, Herrmann in Marburg, Hæring and Schultz in Göt-

* With this I fully agree. See chapter cxxi., p. 362.

† But preëxistence is closely connected with the fact of the incarnation, and is clearly taught by John and Paul and by Christ himself (John 6 : 62; 8 : 58; 17 : 4, 24). On this point, also, Ritschl followed Schleiermacher.

‡ Ritschl shows his inability to appreciate mysticism and pietism in his very able Geschichte des Pietismus (Bonn, 1880-86, 3 vols.). Mysticism as represented by Bernard of Clairvaux, Tauler, Thomas à Kempis, and some of the Pietists and Moravians, introduces us into the holy of holies of religious life.

§ "Strengste Anerkennung der Offenbarung Gottes durch Christus; genaueste Benützung der heiligen Schrift als Erkenntnisgrund der christlichen Religion; Verwendung Jesu Christi als des Erkenntnisgrundes für alle Glieder des Systems; im Einklang mit den Urkunden der lutherischen Reformation in Hinsicht des eigenthümlichen von der Theologie des Mittelalters abweichenden Lehrtypus." tingen, Gottschick in Tübingen, Kattenbusch and Reischle in Giessen, Lobstein in Strassburg, and G. von Schulthess-Rechberg in Zürich. His views have affected the recent researches in ancient Church history, and especially the conception and treatment of the history of dogmas by Harnack and Loofs. His school is opposed on the one hand by orthodox Lutherans (Frank of Erlangen, Luthardt of Leipzig, and Dieckhoff of Rostock), as a new phase of Rationalism; and on the other, by speculative rationalists (Lipsius and Pfeiderer) on account of its hostility to philosophy.

LITERATURE.

ALBRECHT RITSCHL (Professor in Göttingen, d. 1889): Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung (Bonn, 1870-74, 3 vols.; 3d ed. 1888-89). The first vol. is historical, the second exegetical, the third dogmatic, and gives the author's views on two of the important doctrines,—justification and atonement. It is his chief work. He has not left a full system, but only a brief popular outline in his Unterricht in der christlichen Religion (Bonn, 1875; 3d ed. 1886, 84 pp.). Compare also his Theologie und Metaphysik (Bonn, 1881). Ritschl is an original and vigorous thinker, but not a clear writer. His biography was written by his son, Otto Ritschl (1891).

J. W. M. KAFTAN (Professor in Berlin since 1883): Das Wesen der christl. Religion (Basel, 1881; 2d ed. 1888).—Die Wahrheit der christl. Religion (Basel, 1889).—Glaube und Dogma (Bielefeld, 1889).

J. G. HERRMANN (Professor in Marburg since 1879): Die Religion im Verhältniss zum Welterkennen und zur Sittlichkeit (Halle, 1879).—Die Gewissheit des Glaubens und die Freiheit der Theologie (Freiburg, 1887; 2d ed. 1889).

FRIEDRICH NITZSCH (Professor in Kiel since 1872, son of K. I. Nitzsch): Lehrbuch der evangelischen Dogmatik (Freiburg, 1892). Mediates between Schleiermacher and Ritschl.

MAX REISCHLE: Das Wesen der Religion (Freiburg, 1891).

To the school of Ritschl belong, as regards their historico-dogmatic standpoint, the Dogmengeschichte of HARNACK (1886-90, 3 vols.), the Dogmengeschichte of Loofs (2d ed. 1890, 1 vol.), and the Symbolic of KATTENBUSCH (Lehrbuch der vergleichenden Religionskunde, Freiburg i. B., 1891 sqq.; dedicated to the memory of Tholuck and Ritschl; to be completed in 3 vols.).

The periodical organ of the school is the Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, ed. by J. Gottschick (Freiburg i. B., 1891 sqq.).

The series of text-books now in course of publication by Mohr in Freiburg is largely under the influence of the same school.

Against Ritschl: F. H. R. FRANK: Die kirchliche Bedeutung der Theologie A. Ritschl's (Erlangen, 1888).—R. A. LIPSIVS: Die Ritschl'sche Theologie (Leipzig, 1888).—W. SCHMIDT: Die Gefahren der Ritschl'schen Theologie für die Kirche (Berlin, 1888).—O. PFLEIDERER: Die Ritschl'sche Theologie (1893).

NOTE.—An important incident in the history of the Ritschl school is the recent agitation about the Apostles' Creed, which brought it into serious conflict with Lutheran orthodoxy and the Church authorities. Mr. Schrenpf, a clergyman in Württemberg, was deposed for refusing the customary recital of that creed in the services of baptism and confirmation. This case induced some students of theology to ask Professor Harnack's opinion on the expediency of petitioning the Oberkirchenrath (the highest Protestant Church tribunal in Prussia) to abolish or to relax the obligatory use of the Creed in public worship. Harnack, who sits in Neander's chair and is the chief representative of the Ritschl school among Church historians, counseled against the petition, but wrote a pamphlet, Das Apostolische Glaubensbekenntniss (Berlin, 1892, pp. 44), in which he showed the comparatively late origin of the Creed (as a Gallican enlargement of the older and simpler Roman form dating from the third century), and objected to the clause on the supernatural conception by the Holy Ghost, as not belonging to the original preaching of the Gospel, since it is not contained in the Gospels of Mark and John or any of the Epistles (but it is taught in the first chapters of Matthew and Luke). He also objects to the articles on the communion of saints and the resurrection of the flesh (carnis) in their original sense. The Creed, he holds, is venerable and permanently valuable as a confession of God, the almighty Father, and Jesus Christ, his Son our Lord, through whom we have the remission of sin and eternal life; but it fails to point to the teaching of Christ and his saving personality (?). "The symbol," says Harnack (p. 34), "contains only titles. In this sense it is imperfect; for no confession is perfect which does not paint the Saviour before the eyes and impress him upon the heart."

This pamphlet passed in a few weeks through more than a dozen editions, and provoked a widespread orthodox opposition all over Germany. The Ritschlians, in a conference at Eisenach, beneath the Wartburg, protested against the legally binding force of the Apostles' Creed, but not against its practical use. The Oberkirchenrath in Berlin tried to satisfy both parties and counseled tolerance and moderation. The chief pamphlets called forth by this controversy on the Apostles' Creed are by Kattenbusch in Giessen, Cremer in Greifswald, and Zahn in Erlangen (the last two against Harnack, who answered Cremer in the "Hefte zur Christlichen Welt," No. III.).

CHAPTER CCXX.

SPECULATIVE AND CRITICAL DOGMATIC.

Speculative Dogmatic is a scientific exposition and rational vindication of the Christian faith. It rests on the conviction that revelation and reason, faith and knowledge, are not opposed in principle and aim, but that they proceed from the same God of truth and must harmonize. Speculative theology reproduces, criticises and advances the exegetical and historical material, and adjusts it to the religious thought of the times. No Confession of Faith, however elaborate, can legislate for all future generations and supersede independent thinking. If it does, it becomes a yoke of bondage and a symbol of stagnation. Every age must produce its own theology adapted to its specific wants.

Speculative theology is akin to the philosophy of religion, and has often been more or less influenced by philosophy; in the patristic age by Plato, in the scholastic period by Aristotle, in modern times by Descartes, Locke, Leibnitz, Wolff, Kant, Schelling, Hegel, Lotze. But theology derives its material from the Bible and the Church, and ought to be independent of any particular system of philosophy. For this reason we call it speculative, rather than philosophical. Schleiermacher and Ritschl disconnect theology from philosophy; but their theology is nevertheless the product of speculative thought. Speculation and criticism are necessary to progress. Without them we would not have any dogmatic systems.

From time to time there arises a great genius who by deeper views, bold combinations, or original methods marks an epoch and opens new avenues in the history of Dogmatic Theology. This was done by Origen, Athanasius, John of Damascus, among the Greek Fathers; Augustin among the Latin fathers; Anselm and Thomas Aquinas among the schoolmen; Luther and Calvin among the Reformers; Jonathan Edwards in New England; Schleiermacher, Rothe and Ritschl among the modern divines of Germany. Such men usually dissent from the prevailing traditions and are heterodox, if judged by an earlier or later standard of orthodoxy. But they cannot be counted heretics; they are rooted in the Christian faith, and have the mission to present it under new aspects, to rouse investigation, to keep theology in motion and to adapt it to the wants of the age.

Systems pass away, but their influence continues. In the New Testament blooms the eternal spring.

“Our little systems have their day;
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they.”—TENNYSON.

CHAPTER CCXXI.

CHRISTOCENTRIC THEOLOGY.

A dogmatic system, whether biblical, confessional or speculative, ought to have a central idea which dominates the several parts and sheds light upon them. We may distinguish three fundamental principles and methods of arrangement.

1. THEOCENTRIC Theology. The absolute sovereignty and glory of God. The history of the world is suspended on eternal decrees of election and reprobation. Scholastic Calvinism. The Westminster Confession, chapter iii. 1: "God from all eternity did by the most wise and holy counsel of his own will freely and unchangeably ordain whatsoever comes to pass." Calvin, however, in his Institutes, follows the trinitarian and historical scheme of the Apostles' Creed, and discusses election in the third Book (iii. 21).

2. ANTHROPOCENTRIC Theology. The doctrine of sin and redemption. Paul in the Epistle to the Romans. St. Augustin, Luther, Melancthon (law and gospel). The Heidelberg Catechism, Quest. 2, lays down as the essential articles of knowledge, "first, the greatness of my sin and misery, second, how I am redeemed from all my sins and misery, third, how I am to be thankful to God for such redemption." The later Epistles of Paul (Colossians and Philippians) and the anonymous Epistle to the Hebrews are Christological, and mark the transition to John.

3. CHRISTOCENTRIC Theology. John's Gospel and Epistles. The divine-human person of Christ, the highest manifestation of the love of God for the salvation of man, the sum and substance of Christianity, the article of the standing or falling Church. This system affords a common ground of agreement for all evangelical catholic divines. God is known to us only in Christ. "No man cometh to the Father but by the Son" (John 14: 6-10; Matt. 11: 27). Christ is the first and fundamental article of faith. It is the burden of Peter's confession (Matt. 16: 16). Paul's preaching was summed up in "Jesus Christ, and him crucified" (1 Cor. 2: 2), "delivered for our trespasses, and raised for our justification" (Rom. 4: 25). In Christ are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"

(Col. 2: 3). When Paul was asked by the jailer of Philippi, "What must I do to be saved?" he did not say, "Believe in the Bible," or "in the Church," or "in divine sovereignty," or "in justification and election," or in any other particular dogma, but simply, "Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved" (Acts 16: 31). The test of orthodoxy and heresy is the assertion or denial of Jesus Christ come in the flesh for our salvation (John 1: 14; 1 John 4: 2). All other doctrines derive their significance from their connection with it. Christian life starts with living faith in Christ, and its progress is growth in Christ. What is the foundation of Christian experience should also be the ground of Christian theology.

The Christocentric method does not require that Dogmatic should begin with Christology. The center is not the beginning, but it throws light on the beginning and the end. Christology furnishes the key for theology and anthropology. It illuminates the doctrine of eternal election "in Christ" (Eph. 1: 4-6), and the doctrine of the future life when "we shall be like him" and "see him as he is" (1 John 3: 2). It determines the doctrine of inspiration and the authority of the Bible, which reflects the mystery of his personality all human and yet all divine. We believe in the Bible because we believe in Christ who is the light and life of the Bible.

The Christocentric method may be combined with the trinitarian method (adopted by Calvin and Martensen), which is based upon the Apostles' Creed, as the Apostles' Creed is only an expansion of Peter's confession with Christ in the center. The Creed follows the historical order of God's revelation as Father in creation, as Son in redemption, and as Holy Spirit in sanctification. The holy Trinity is the most comprehensive dogma, and is revealed to us fully in Christ, who explained the Father and sent the Spirit. The best theology is the theology of God's saving love in Christ to the world; as the best Christian ethic is that which enjoins, as the sum and substance of duty, supreme love to God and love to our neighbor.

The best modern systems of evangelical theology in Europe and America are tending more and more toward the Christocentric theology.

NOTE.—Henry B. Smith struck the keynote of Christocentric theology in America, but did not live to carry it out. "The central idea," he says, "to which all the parts of theology are to be referred, and by which the system is to be made a system, or to be constructed, is what we have termed the Christological or Mediatorial idea, viz., that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. This idea is central not in the sense that all the other parts of theology are logically deduced from it, but rather that they center in it. The idea is that of an Incarnation in order to Redemption. This is the central idea of Christianity, as distinguished, or distinguishable, from all other religions, and from all sorts of philosophy; and by this, and this alone, are we able to construct the whole system of the Christian faith on its proper grounds. This idea is the proper center of unity to the whole Christian system, as the soul is the center of unity to the body, as the North Pole is to all the magnetic needles. It is so really the center of unity that when we analyze and grasp and apply it, we find that the whole of Christian theology is in it" (System of Christian Theology, p. 341). Among Smith's papers was found this remarkable passage, which shows that he had virtually surmounted Calvinistic Predestinarianism: "What Reformed theology has got to do is to christologize predestination and decrees, regeneration and sanctification, the doctrine of the Church, and the whole of eschatology."

Schleiermacher, Liebner, Lange, Thomasius, Gess, Ritschl, Godet, Nevin, Smith, Stearns, and Gerhart may be called, as to their spirit and tendency, Christocentric theologians. Comp. Schaff's Introduction to Gerhart's Institutes of the Christian Religion (1891).

CHAPTER CCXXII.

HISTORY OF DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.—THE PATRISTIC PERIOD.

In the history of Dogmatic Theology we may distinguish six principal periods: the Patristic, the Mediæval-Scholastic, the Reformatory, the Protestant-Scholastic, the Rationalistic, and the modern Evangelical. Each period makes some contribution to the knowledge of revealed truth. The Christian doctrines are first produced or evolved by the aid of reason out of the Scriptures, the faith of the Church, and the religious experience; then analyzed and systematized; then criticised and dissolved, but only to be revived and reconstructed in new and better forms. Thus the process of Christian thought will go on to the end of time and present the Christian truth in all its aspects, without being able to exhaust its depth in this imperfect world of limited knowledge. For we shall always have to confess, with the inspired Apostle, that we here see in a mirror darkly and know only in part till we shall see face to face (1 Cor. 13: 12).

The Patristic period, embracing the first eight centuries, developed, in a natural order, the several doctrines of the Bible: first, theology proper (the Divine unity and tripersonality), and Christology (the divine-human personality of Christ); then anthropology and soteriology (sin and redemption). The former was the work of the Greek, the latter the work of the Latin Church.

1. The first attempt at a systematic representation of the whole body of Christian truth was made by Origen (185–254), the greatest genius and scholar of his age. He was a Christian Platonist, the father of speculative theology, and also the father of exegesis and of the allegorical interpretation and misinterpretation of the Scriptures. He exerted a commanding influence on all the Greek divines, but his Platonic ideas provoked opposition during his life-time and were at last condemned by a local council of Constantinople in 543 (not, as is often falsely stated, by the fifth œcumenical council of 553). The Roman Church never admitted him to the rank of the saints and the orthodox Fathers.

His dogmatic work De Principiis (Περὶ Ἀρχῶν)* is built upon the freedom of the will and the prehistoric fall of each individual soul, and ends in the final restoration of all rational creatures, men and angels (ἀποκατάστασις τῶν πάντων). He assumed a succession of worlds before and after the present one, since God reveals himself from eternity to eternity.

His ablest and most faithful follower was Gregory of Nyssa, a profound thinker of the Nicene age (331–394).†

The great Athanasius is “the father of orthodoxy.”‡

The last dogmatic work of the Greek Fathers is the Exposition of the Orthodox Faith, by St. John of Damascus, the champion of image worship (d. after 750). He summed up the results of the doctrinal controversies of the Nicene and post-Nicene ages from the works of Athanasius, Basil, Gregory Nazianzen, Gregory of Nyssa, Cyril of Alexandria, and Maximus; he constructed them into a scholastic system with the help of Aristotle and the mystic Pseudo-Dionysius, and furnished a classical standard work which enjoys the same authority in the orthodox Greek and Russian Church as the "Summa" of Thomas Aquinas in the Latin. (See chapter cex.)

* Preserved in the paraphrastic and inaccurate Latin translation of Rufinus (and some Greek fragments); English translation by Dr. Crombie in the “Ante-Nicene Library” (New York ed., vol. iv.).

† Translated for the first time by W. Moore and H. A. Wilson in the second series of the “Nicene and Post-Nicene Library,” vol. v. (1893).

‡ English translation of his chief works in the 4th vol. of the “Library” just quoted (1892). He is the defender of the Nicene dogma of the Trinity.

2. By far the greatest and most influential divine among the Latin Fathers is St. Augustin, bishop of Hippo in North Africa (353-430). He meditated and speculated profoundly and devoutly on almost every topic of faith and philosophy, especially on the dark problem of sin, the eternal purpose of God, and the final outcome of history. He ascended the highest heights and sounded the deepest depths of divine and human knowledge and of Christian experience.

His chief dogmatic works are the Enchiridion, a handbook on faith, hope and love; Four Books De Doctrina Christiana, a compendium of instruction in the development of Christian doctrine from the Holy Scripture; Fifteen Books on the Holy Trinity, against the Arians; and the comprehensive apologetic work on the City of God, which is the first attempt at a philosophy of history viewed under the aspect of two antagonistic kingdoms. His doctrines of sin and grace are developed in his anti-Pelagian writings and constitute what is usually called "the Augustinian system," which was substantially adopted by the Reformers. In Christology he was less productive.*

Augustin's system is the very reverse of that of Origen. Both battle with the problems of sin and redemption; but Origen starts from the freedom of the will and the prehistoric fall of every soul, Augustin, from the single sin of a single man and the slavery of the will. Origen ends with the final salvation of all men; Augustin with the eternal salvation of an elect minority and the eternal damnation of the vast majority of the human race, including all unbaptized infants. Sin was permissively decreed from eternity and overruled for the redemption of the elect, in whom God reveals the glory of his grace, and for the damnation of the reprobate, in whom he shows the glory of his terrible justice. The freedom of will was lost after its first exercise, and gave way to the slavery of sin or the necessity of sinning, from which we can only be delivered by the regenerative grace of Christ. Augustin suspends the temporal and eternal destiny of mankind upon the fall of Adam, viewed as the fall of the whole race. He assumes an unconscious yet responsible preëxistence of all men in their first parent, and derives from it their consequent participation in his sin and guilt. This hypothesis of a generic preëxistence at the beginning of history transcends our experience as much as Origen's Platonic hypothesis of a prehistoric individual preëxistence, and is less reconcilable with personal responsibility. It is based on a false interpretation of Rom. 5:12.*

* English translation of his works by several writers in Schaff's "Nicene and Post-Nicene Library," first series (New York, 1886-88, in 8 vols.).

The unity and solidarity of the race in sin and redemption is indeed taught in Rom. 5:12-21; 1 Cor. 15:21, 22, and is sustained by philosophy and history. But so is also the equally important doctrine of individual responsibility. Moreover, the consequences of the sin of the first Adam are more than counterbalanced by the righteousness of the second Adam. Paul teaches that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound." We are born into a dispensation of saving grace as well as of sin and death. Christ welcomes children as belonging to the kingdom of heaven. To send them to hell in consequence of a sin they never heard of, is a doctrine which shocks the reason and all the moral sensibilities of man, and is inconsistent with divine justice. God is a loving Father as well as a Sovereign, and has made superabundant provision for the salvation of all his rational creatures on the sole condition of repentance and faith.

Augustin's anthropology is pessimistic and only partially relieved by a limited plan of salvation, however glorious. He ignores the general love of God to all mankind (John 3:16), his sincere will to save all men (1 Tim. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9), and the universality of the atonement (1 John 2:2). His doctrine of an absolute double predestination which immutably fixes all human events and actions, and his total denial of human freedom, seem, logically, destructive of moral responsibility; and yet, by a happy inconsistency, Augustinians and

* Following the wrong translation of the Vulgate, Augustin misunderstands the neutral phrase, ἐφ' ᾧ (for that), in the masculine sense, in quo (in whom), and refers it to Adam. De Pecc. Mer. et Rem., iii. 7: "In Adamo omnes tunc peccaverunt, quando in ejus natura, illa insita vi qua eos gignere poterat, adhuc omnes ille unus fuerunt." Contra Jul., v. 12: "Fuerunt omnes ratione seminis in lumbis Adami quando damnatus est . . . quemadmodum fuerunt Israelite in lumbis Abrahe, quando decimatus est" (Heb. 7:9, 10). Opus imperf. i. 47: "Fuit Adam, et in illo fuimus omnes; periit Adam, et in illo omnes perierunt." Comp. on this exegetical question and the doctrinal inferences, my annotations to Lange's Comm. on Romans, pp. 178 sqq. and 191 sqq.

Jansenists, Calvinists and Puritans have always been the strictest moralists; and Calvinists have also been the chief promoters of civil and religious liberty in Holland, England and America; their fear of God made them fearless of man.

Augustin controlled the Christian thinking of the Latin Church during the Middle Ages; but he was entirely ignored by the Greek Church, which adheres to the doctrine of the freedom of the will. He is still justly revered by the Roman Church as the greatest among the Fathers, but she has never sanctioned his doctrines of absolute predestination and the slavery of the human will, and has, indirectly, condemned them by condemning Jansenism. The Evangelical Churches, on the contrary, have adopted his anti-Pelagian anthropology, but ignored his opinions which gave aid and comfort to the Roman theology.

Augustin may be quoted on both sides of the Protestant controversy with Rome. He is the author of the theory which sanctions the right and duty of religious persecution, and based it upon a false interpretation of the words, "Compel them to come in" (Luke 14 : 23, which would lead to a compulsory salvation rather than persecution). He suggested some of the most objectionable doctrines of the Roman Church, as purgatory (on the ground of Matt. 12 : 31, 32 ; 1 Cor. 3 : 15), the sinlessness of the Virgin Mary,* and even papal infallibility.† He furnishes the most remarkable example, in history, of a man of the greatest genius and deepest piety, who blessed the Church with his truths and hindered its progress by his errors.

CHAPTER CCXXIII.

THE SCHOLASTIC PERIOD.

The second period of Dogmatic Theology extends from the twelfth to the close of the fifteenth century.

Scholastic theology is the theology of the Schoolmen as dis-

* Speaking of universal depravity (De Nat. et Gratia, chapter lxii.), he excepts the Virgin Mary, "concerning whom" (he says) "I wish to raise no question concerning sin, out of honor to the Lord."

† The sentence often quoted by Romanists, "Roma locuta est, causa finita est." though not literally found in Augustin's works, is substantially his. Sermo, cxxxi., cap. 10, § 10 : "Jam enim de hac causa duo concilia missa sunt ad sedem apostolicam : inde etiam scripta venerunt. Causa finita est, utinam aliquando error finiatur." But he had reference to the single case of the condemnation of Pelagius, not to a general principle. He himself protinct from the Fathers, and reduces their doctrines to a scientific system. It is an attempt or series of attempts to reconcile revelation and reason, faith and philosophy. It is built upon the Bible and the Fathers. Its principle is that faith precedes knowledge (fides præcedit intellectum), but that it also leads to knowledge and is confirmed by knowledge (credo ut intelligam). Some trace Scholasticism back to Scotus Erigena, the first distinguished Irish divine, who lived in France in the middle of the ninth century. He was a transcendental, pantheistic philosopher, and was not understood by his age; else he would have been burnt as a heretic. He taught, in his Division of Nature, the identity of philosophy and theology, and introduced into the Latin Church a translation of the mystic writings of Pseudo-Dionysius, which exerted great influence on the Schoolmen and Mystics of the Middle Ages.*

Anselm of Canterbury (d. 1109), "the second Augustin," gave the first splendid specimens of the scholastic method by proving the existence of God (Monologion and Proslogion) and the necessity of the incarnation and the vicarious atonement (in answer to the question Cur Deus homo?). He was a Realist and refuted the Nominalism of Roscellin.

Peter Abelard (1079–1142), who is as well known by his erotic tragedy in the history of romance as of philosophy and theology, represents the skeptical and rationalistic type of scholasticism. He applied his dialectic skill and audacity to the doctrine of the Trinity, and was condemned for heresy by the Council of Sens (1141) under the influence of St. Bernard, the champion of orthodox mysticism and the greatest saint of his age. But after this conflict, Scholasticism became a pillar of orthodoxy.

Peter the Lombard, "Magister Sententiarum" (d. 1164), and his commentators, called Sententiarum, covered the whole ground of doctrinal theology and constructed from the sentences of the Fathers coherent systems, illuminating every nook and corner and answering every question. The dialectical method was further developed with the aid of the Aristotelian philosophy tested against the decision of Pope Zosimus. Comp. the learned discussion of Reuter, in Augustinische Studien, pp. 322 sqq.

* He was not only a profound thinker, but also a bright wit. When asked by King Charles the Bald of France at the dinner-table, "What is the difference between a Scot and a sot?" (Quid distat inter Scotum et sottum?) the Scotch-Irishman quickly replied: "The table (tabula), your Majesty."

which became known, during the crusades, in translations from the Arabic, and afterwards in the original Greek. Aristotle was first suspected and opposed, but soon took the place of Plato, as a forerunner of Christ, or as a philosophical John the Baptist. He kept his authority as the master-thinker till he was dethroned by Luther, who denounced him as an "accursed heathen," but he was soon reinstated by Melancthon and the Protestant Scholastics.

Scholasticism reached its height in Thomas Aquinas, "Doctor Angelicus" (d. 1274), of the Dominican order, who is to this day the standard divine of the Roman Church (specially commended by Leo XIII.), and in his contemporary, Bonaventura, "Doctor Seraphicus" (d. 1274), of the Franciscan order, who combined mysticism with scholasticism. The later Schoolmen were divided into two rival schools: the followers of Thomas Aquinas, who were Dominicans, and were called "Thomists" or "Summists" (Summistæ, from Summa Theologiæ), and the followers of Duns Scotus, "Doctor Subtilis" (d. 1308), who were Franciscans, and were called "Scotists."

The decline of Scholasticism began with the skeptical William Occam (d. 1347), who dared to renew the philosophical heresy of Nominalism, hence called "venerabilis inceptor," also "Doctor singularis et invincibilis." The last eminent Schoolmen were Gabriel Biel of Tübingen, a Nominalist (d. 1495), and Cardinal Cajetan, a standard commentator of the Summa of Thomas Aquinas, who confronted Luther at Augsburg in 1518 and judged of this arch-heretic that he had "profundos oculos et mirabiles speculationes in capite suo."*

The scholastic systems are majestic cathedrals of thought, and furnish a parallel to the contemporary papal hierarchy and to the structures of Gothic architecture. The Schoolmen mirrored all the learning and wisdom of the times. They solved the highest problems of speculation to the satisfaction of the mediæval Church, but they attempted too much and lost themselves at last in the labyrinth of empty speculations and hair-splitting distinctions. They turned theology into a logical skeleton. They squeezed the soul out of it and left it a mere corpse (corpus divinitatis). They neglected the study of the Scriptures,

* Cajetan's commentaries on Thomas Aquinas are reprinted in the magnificent edition of the Opera S. Thomæ Aquinatis, published under the patronage of Leo XIII. (1882 sqq.).

but discussed with great seriousness such silly questions as how many angels could dance on the eye of a needle, and what effect the sacrament would have upon a mouse. Some answered that the sacred wafer would sanctify the mouse; others, that it would kill it; still others answered more wisely, because less foolishly, that it would have no effect at all, because the wafer could be eaten by an animal only accidentaliter, not sacramentaliter.

Thus Scholasticism by the abuse and excess of speculation dug its own grave, and provoked the double opposition of mysticism, which cultivated spiritual piety, and the skepticism of the Renaissance, which undermined traditional beliefs and superstitions.

The best scholars of the fifteenth century called for a biblical theology and a return to the living waters of the original Scriptures. Reuchlin and Erasmus promoted the study of the original languages. Melancthon and Zwingli carried the best elements of the humanistic culture into the service of the Reformation.

But the Roman Church, after recovering from the shock of the Reformation, revived the patristic and scholastic theology, sanctioned it in the Council of Trent (1563), defended and further developed it in opposition to Protestantism, Jansenism, and Gallicanism, until it was completed in 1870 by the Vatican dogma of papal infallibility. (See chapter cxi.)

CHAPTER CCXXIV.

THE THEOLOGY OF THE REFORMATION.

The evangelical theology of the Reformers of the sixteenth century is a revival of biblical theology in opposition to Roman Scholasticism. It is built upon an infallible Bible, as Scholasticism was built upon an infallible Church.

Luther, the first and greatest among the Reformers, was a prophet rather than a systematic thinker and theologian. He passed in the convent at Erfurt through a severe personal experience of sin and justification, which shaped his theological views, and he developed them gradually, in constant conflict with papists and "sacramentarians," under the inspiration of the moment, without regard to their coherence; leaving the systematic and scholarly statement to his more learned and moderate friend and colleague, Melancthon, whose Loci Theologici (1521; last revised ed. 1559) was used for nearly a century as a textbook in Lutheran universities.

Zwingli laid down his dogmatic system in the Commentarius de Vera et Falsa Religione (1525), in Fidei Ratio ad Carolum V. (1530), and in Christianæ Fidei brevis et clara Expositio ad Franciscum I. (1531), and his view on predestination in the tract De Providentia (1530). They were far surpassed in depth, completeness and literary finish by the Institutio of Calvin (Basel, 1536; 5th revised edition, Geneva, 1559).

Calvin is beyond question the greatest commentator and dogmatic theologian among the Reformers. He has been called the Aristotle and Thomas Aquinas of the Reformed Church.* He fortified and intensified the Augustinian system by his severe logic and unrivaled knowledge of the Scripture, but he liberalized it also by making the electing and saving grace of God independent of the visible means, and extending it beyond the limits of baptized members of the Church. The Spirit of God is not bound, and "worketh when, and where, and how he pleaseth," as the Westminster Confession (ch. x. 3) expresses the Calvinistic view. A most important advance beyond the Augustinian and Roman Catholic exclusiveness. It is not inconsistent with John 3: 5, which seems to make water-baptism a necessary condition of salvation; for this applies only to the ordinary method for those who are brought to a knowledge of the gospel, and must be supplemented by our Lord's blessing of unbaptized children as members of the kingdom of heaven, and by the fact that the penitent thief and all the Old Testament saints were saved without baptism.

Zwingli, the most liberal among the Reformers, had ventured a step further, and positively asserted the salvation of all children dying before the age of responsibility, and of the virtuous heathen who live up to the light of nature. This view was a natural result of his enthusiasm for the classics, in which Erasmus had preceded him. He was also the only Reformer who departed from the Augustinian hamartology and taught that natural depravity, inherited from Adam, was a disease and misfortune, rather than a sin and guilt. His view on the Lord's Supper was a still greater departure from the traditional belief in the real presence, but fails to appreciate the deep mystical element of the sacrament. He was a rational supernaturalist, and anticipated modern opinions.

* See the judgments in Schaff's Church History, vol. vii., pp. 270-295.

On two fundamental doctrines all the Reformers agreed: first, that the word of God contained in the Bible is the only infallible rule of faith and duty; second, that we are saved by the free grace of God in Christ without any merit of our own. These are the two vital and fundamental principles of evangelical Protestantism in opposition both to Romanism and Rationalism.

The fresh productive theology of the Reformation was followed by the scholastic Lutheranism and Calvinism of the seventeenth century, which corresponds to the Catholic Scholasticism of the Middle Ages, and shares its virtues and defects, but adheres more closely to the Bible under a rigid theory of inspiration by mechanical dictation of every letter. It degenerated into bibliolatry and symbololatry, and a dead orthodoxy. This provoked various reactions—Arminianism in Holland, Pietism in Germany, Methodism in England, and at last the destructive critique of Rationalism which swept over the whole Continent. But as the mediæval Renaissance prepared the way for the Reformation, so Rationalism was succeeded by the revival of evangelical theology.

These modern schools have been sufficiently characterized in the preceding chapters. There remains only the American development of Protestant theology, which is little known, and yet deserves our special attention.

LITERATURE.

G. J. PLANCK: Geschichte der Entstehung, der Veränderungen und der Bildung unsers Protestantischen Lehrbegriffs (Leipzig, 1791–1800, 6 vols.). The most learned work on the doctrinal controversies in the Lutheran Church till the Formula of Concord.

W. GASS: Geschichte der Protestantischen Dogmatik in ihrem Zusammenhang mit der Theologie überhaupt (Berlin, 1854–67, 4 vols.).

K. F. A. KAHNIS: Der innere Gang des deutschen Protestantismus (Leipzig, 3d. rev. ed. 1874).

G. W. FRANK: Geschichte der Protestantischen Theologie (Leipzig, 1862–75, 3 parts).

IS. A. DORNER: Geschichte der Protestantischen Theologie (München, 1867; English translation, Edinburgh, 1871, 2 vols.).

OTTO PFLEIDERER: Die Entwicklung der Protestantischen Theologie in Deutschland seit Kant und in Grossbritannien seit 1825 (Freiburg i.B., 1891; also in English).

CHAPTER CCXXV.

AMERICAN THEOLOGY.

[American Theology is ignored by German historians except Dörner, who devotes to it a few remarks at the end of his work. Even Dr. Shedd, in his History of Christian Doctrine (1863, 2 vols.), barely alludes to it. Contributions: HENRY B. SMITH, additions to Hagenbach's History of Doctrines, vol. ii., pp. 435-452 (New York, 1862); and Chronological Tables (New York, 1860). EDWARDS A. PARK: New England Theology, in "Schaff-Herzog," vol. iii., 1634-38; and separate articles on New England divines in the same Encyclopædia. GEO. P. FISHER: Discussions in History and Theology (New York, 1880, pp. 227 sqq.). Other works are quoted below.]

America welcomes all nationalities and creeds of Europe and gives them equal freedom before the law. It knows no distinction between Church and Sects, between Churchmen and Dissenters.

Nevertheless it adheres very closely to the inherited and imported creeds. It may be strange, but it is true, that "the westward course of empire" is a course of orthodoxy rather than heresy. England is more orthodox than the Continent, New England is more orthodox than Old England, the Western and Southern States are more orthodox than the Eastern States. The Roman Catholic, the Protestant Episcopal, the Presbyterian, the Congregational, the Lutheran, the Dutch and German Reformed, and other Churches are more conservative in theology, while they are more progressive in every other department of Christian life and activity than their mother Churches in Europe. Professors of rationalistic tendency and champions of radical biblical criticism, who enjoy the full freedom of academic teaching in German, Swiss and Dutch universities, could not be elected to a chair in any of our theological seminaries, not even in the Divinity School of Harvard University. Church and theology are much more closely identified in a free Church which supports and governs itself, than in a State Church which is supported and governed by the civil power. Heresy trials have ceased in Protestant Europe, but not in America.

Calvinism and Arminianism have been so far the ruling theological systems in American Theology. Unitarianism or modern Socinianism is a native growth of New England, but is confined to a limited circle among the cultured classes of Boston and other large cities. Universalism, as an organized denomination, is also an American product. More recently German Theology, as developed since Schleiermacher, is exerting a growing influence, especially in exegesis and Church history.

Out of these different forces will grow new systems of theology adapted to the cosmopolitan and pan-Christian composition and destiny of the United States.

NOTES.

"Christian Theology in America," says Henry B. Smith, "has received some peculiar modifications adapting it to the new position and relations of the Church. Its most marked and original growth has been in the line of the Reformed or Calvinistic system. The separation of the Church from the State, the unexampled immigration, and the rapid growth of the country, made the pressure to come upon the practical rather than the theoretical aspects of Christian truth. Hence, the most thorough discussions and controversies have been chiefly upon questions of anthropology and soteriology. Systems of theology have all been preached. Controversy, too, has been sharpened by the fact that in the New World are representatives of all the ecclesiastical divisions of the Old World, with many sectarian subdivisions. The minor sects in Europe have had the sway in America."—Hagenbach's History of Doctrines (Am. edition, vol. ii., p. 435).

Dr. Dorner concludes his History of Protestant Theology (p. 918) with the following judicious remarks: "Amerika steht noch in seinen theologischen Anfängen, aber die Zukunft des Protestantismus hängt grossentheils von der weiteren Entwicklung dieses kräftigen, nunmehr auch von dem Banne der Sklaverei befreiten Volkes ab; daher die Erhaltung und Mehrung des Verkehrs mit dem deutschen Protestantismus und seinen Gütern von unberechenbarer Bedeutung ist. Jetzt ist die Zersplitterung noch gross und der Gegensatz der Parteien oft mehr ein Spiel der Willkür und äusserer Interessen, als dass er zu ernstem wissenschaftlichem Kampf gediehe. Aber je mehr der Sinn für Wissenschaft zunimmt und mit ihr die Kraft des Gedankens, dem eine einigende Macht bewohnt, weil er auf das Allgemeine und an sich Wahre gerichtet ist, desto mehr müssen von den dortigen Denominationen viele von selbst verschwinden, andere aber in einen Process der Verständigung eintreten, der ihnen eine gemeinsame Geschichte auch des geistigen und religiösen Lebens sichert, welche wie Grossbritannien ebenbürtig und fruchtbar mit deutscher Wissenschaft wetteifern wird."

CHAPTER CCXXVI.

THE CALVINISTIC THEOLOGY IN AMERICA.

The Reformed or Calvinistic Theology is the most potent and prolific in North America. It is not confined to a single denomination ; it rules, with various modifications, the Congregationalist, the Baptist, the Presbyterian, the Dutch and German Reformed Churches. Nearly all the advances have been made on this line. Calvinism was imported into this country by the early settlers of English-Puritan, Dutch, Huguenot, Scotch and Scotch-Irish descent. It regulated the religious life and shaped the character of the people of New England during the Colonial period (1620-1776), when the church and schoolhouse were the center of the town, the Bible the statute-book of the community, the pastor the watchman of public morals, the sermon the intellectual food and topic of conversation, and church membership the condition of citizenship. The theology and theocracy of Geneva were transplanted into the unbroken wilderness of Massachusetts and Connecticut, and became the training-school of the Fathers of the Anglo-Saxon Republic.

The history of American Calvinism from the middle of the seventeenth to the close of the nineteenth century, first in provincial isolation, then in national expansion, with its changes and "improvements" from extreme supralapsarianism to the verge of semi-Pelagianism, forms an interesting and as yet unwritten chapter in the history of scholastic theology. Compared with older forms of scholasticism, it shows the same power of logical distinction and minute analysis, but also the same danger of running into barren abstractions. Its first advocates were not secluded monks or learned professors, as in Europe, but pastors and preachers. Their sermons were theological lectures. Hence the close connection of theology with practical religion. Theology and the Church, the clergy and the people, are inseparable in America.

We must distinguish between PURITAN CALVINISM, or NEW ENGLAND THEOLOGY properly so called, and PRESBYTERIAN CALVINISM which prevails in the middle, southern and western States. The former is of English-Puritan, the latter chiefly of Scotch and Scotch-Irish origin. Both are based upon the Westminster standards of 1647, which present the Scotch-English development of the Calvinism of Geneva and Dort. Both are divided into a conservative Old School and a progressive New School.

CHAPTER CCXXVII.

NEW ENGLAND THEOLOGY.

The New England divines paid chief attention to anthropology and soteriology, but neglected Christology and eschatology. They discussed with great acuteness the freedom and slavery of the will, the difference between the will and the sensibilities, between native and natural depravity, between natural and moral ability and inability, the doctrine of mediate and immediate imputation, the nature of sin and holiness, the problem of sin in a moral universe and its necessity in the best system (Optimism), the character and extent of the atonement and its relation to divine justice. The eternal decrees, efficient and permissive, election and reprobation, foreordination and foreknowledge, supralapsarianism and sublapsarianism, also occupied the devout attention of the Puritan Calvinists. Like Milton's fallen angels,

"Sitting apart on a hill retired, they reasoned high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate,
Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute;
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost." *

But the leading New England divines were by no means slavish followers of Dort and Westminster. They soften the Calvinistic system and endeavor to reconcile it with the principle of freedom and moral responsibility by a metaphysical distinction between natural and moral ability, and by affirming the former and denying the latter. They maintain that man has the natural ability to repent, to believe, and to keep the law, but that he will never use this power without the grace of God; that he does not choose the wrong inevitably, but certainly; that he may fall away totally and finally, but that he will not fall away because the grace of God will infallibly keep him. By asserting the natural ability or faculty, they approach the Pelagian system.† By asserting with equal emphasis the moral inability (a mild term for total depravity) they agree with the Augustinian system. But a natural ability which is never exercised seems to be a mere abstraction.*

* Paradise Lost, Bk. II., 555.

† Pelagius distinguished between posse (natural ability), velle, and esse (bonum), the power, the will, and the act: the first comes from God, the other two depend upon man's free choice (liberum arbitrium).

The first and ablest theologian of New England, and the greatest metaphysician of America, was JONATHAN EDWARDS (1703-58), first pastor at Northampton, then missionary at Stockbridge, and at last for a few weeks president of the Presbyterian College at Princeton. He may be called the American Calvin.† He was equally distinguished for metaphysical subtlety and devout piety. He had a vein of ardent mysticism (like other profound thinkers, as Augustin, Anselm, Thomas Aquinas, Bonaventura). Though far removed from the rich libraries of Europe, and often threatened by wild beasts and savage Indians, he meditated and wrote on some of the deepest problems of thought, and left 1400 manuscripts neatly written and arranged by his own hand. While engaged in metaphysical speculations he preached powerful sermons and led, with Whitefield, "the Great Awakening" of 1740.

He out-calvined Calvin in his awful descriptions of the sinfulness and guilt of sin, and the endless torments of the impenitent. His imprecatory sermons (bearing such titles as "Wicked Men Useful in their Destruction Only," "The Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God") have scarcely a parallel in homiletical literature and would not now be tolerated by any Christian congregation even in New England, but in his day they produced tears and outcries and sincere conversions. He believed in the corporeal roasting-theory of hell, and made it as hot as Dante's "Inferno." He describes God as holding the damned "over the pit of hell much as one holds a spider or some loathsome insect over the fire."‡ He repeatedly avows his belief that the great majority of mankind, including the whole heathen world, and large masses of Christendom with many members of his own congregation, were or will be lost

* This distinction was first made by John Cameron of Glasgow, Professor at Saumur (d. 1625), the teacher of Amyrault, whose hypothetical universalism was disapproved in the Helvetic Consensus Formula (1675). Shedd rejects the distinction and charges Edwards with self-contradiction (Dogm. Theol., vol. ii., p. 219). But he substitutes for it another distinction which amounts to the same thing, namely, between capability and ability, and asserts that the natural man "is capable of loving God supremely, but not able to love him supremely."

† He died, like Calvin, in the prime of manhood, in his fifty-fifth year.

‡ When at college he made original and minute observations on the habits of spiders.

forever.* The saints in glory are callous to the sufferings of the damned, though they be their fathers, mothers and children. They are absorbed in adoring wonder at the terrible justice of God toward the reprobate as well as at his mercy toward the elect. "Divine justice in the destruction of the wicked will appear as light without darkness and will shine as the sun without the clouds." But the prevailing severity of his preaching is broken somewhat by sweet tenderness and affecting appeals to emotion. "He had," says his best biographer, who is not in sympathy with his theology, "the power of inspired appeal and exhortation. Refinement, dignity and strength, and always and everywhere a fresh and intense interest in his theme, make his sermons not only readable, but still forcible and impressive, as if the preacher were even yet standing in our midst. . . . Above the preacher, above the thinker, there towered also the majestic purity of the man entirely sincere and devoted—a character that seems well-nigh flawless; so that in his own age he was, if possible, more deeply revered as a Christian man than as the dauntless, unwearied champion of the Puritan theology."†

Edwards defended Calvinism against Arminianism, which had crept into the New England churches during the time of the "Half-Way Covenant," through the writings of Daniel Whitby and John Taylor. His chief works in this line are on the Free-

* "The bigger part of men," he says, "who have died heretofore have gone to hell" (see Allen, p. 124). This was the prevailing belief in Christendom till recent times, and is still the doctrine of the Roman Church, which makes water-baptism and Catholic Church membership a necessary condition of salvation. (Extra ecclesiam nulla salus is understood to mean extra ecclesiam Romanam.) The horrible doctrine of infant damnation was held in New England and incorporated in a popular poem, The Poem of the Day of Doom, by the Rev. Michael Wigglesworth, of Malden, Mass., a graduate and tutor of Harvard College (d. 1705). It was published in 1662, passed through six editions till 1715, and was reprinted as a curiosity by the American News Company, New York, 1867. God is represented there on the judgment day as reasoning with reprobate infants, who "from the womb unto the tomb were straightway carried," about the justice of their eternal damnation; and in consideration of their lesser guilt, he assigns to them (like St. Augustin) "the easiest room in hell." A change began with the younger Edwards (Against Chauncy, xiv.), who denied that it is an article of his faith that "only a small part of the human race will finally be saved." Hopkins (Future State, v.) asserts that "there is reason to believe that many more of mankind will be saved than lost; yea, it may be many thousands to one." Drs. Hodge and Shedd go still farther (see next chapter). On the subject of infant salvation there is probably now absolute unanimity among Protestant divines of America.

† Allen (Episcopalian), pp. 104, 105.

dom of the Will (1754) and on Original Sin (1758). He starts from the absolute sovereignty of God, and finds the last end of creation in the revelation of his glory, not, as the Arminians, in the happiness of his creatures, which he makes only a subordinate aim. He vindicates with subtle logic Locke's determinism and the prior certainty of all choices by antecedent causes or motives. Herein he differs from Augustin and Calvin, who gave to Adam the liberty of choice, which was lost by the fall. He makes every man responsible for Adam's sin, not by the federal theory of representation, but by the theory of identity. We are identical with Adam in his nature and constitution, and therefore identified with him in sin and guilt. Adam is not the federal head, but the generic type and root of humanity. Every man comes into this world with the nature of Adam and falls like him by a permissive decree of God. And this is called original sin. Adam's sin is not imputed to us until we consent to it by voluntary sinning. All sin is voluntary and so far a free act, and yet inevitable. It is difficult to evade the logical conclusion that God is the author of sin, and that sin is necessary.

Edwards makes the metaphysical distinction between natural ability and moral inability, by which he tried to maintain a certain kind of freedom of the will with the denial of it. Hence his constant pathetic appeals to the will to repent and to escape the impending danger by accepting Christ. He urged his hearers to take the kingdom of heaven by violence. But this freedom is "a deus ex machina ready to relieve the theological situation when the stress became unendurable."

The central idea of his Ethic (On the Nature of Virtue) is holy love, as the gift of irresistible divine grace. He defines the nature of virtue as "love to Being in general," or disinterested benevolence. What he calls "Being" is God, as the most sacred and awful of realities, like "the Substance" of Spinoza. God should be loved first of all for his infinite existence and intrinsic excellence, without regard to what he has done for us. Spinoza says, "He who loves God must not demand that God should love him in turn." But love is the very essence of God (1 John 4:16). "In making the motive of true virtue consist in devotion to an Infinite Being, Edwards marks the beginning of a transition in the Calvinistic churches to a theology in which love is the central principle of the creation, and the law of all created existence."*

Another great work of Edwards is the History of Redemption (posthumously published, 1774). It was intended to be an introduction to a comprehensive system of theology which he did not finish.

His intention was to strengthen Calvinism by his metaphysical and ethical speculations, but in effect he weakened it as a theological system.†

The Followers of Edwards.

The writings of Edwards created a school of divines called "Edwardeans," or "New Theology Men" or "New Lights." They emphatically asserted the Calvinistic doctrine of divine sovereignty and election, but generally discarded the imputation of Adam's sin and guilt to his posterity, and advocated a universal, instead of a limited atonement.

* Allen, p. 314.

† Editions of his Works, published at Worcester, Mass., 1809, 8 vols. (republished in New York, 1847, in 4 vols.), and by Dwight, New York, 1830, 10 vols. (also a London ed., 1817, and an Edinburgh ed., 1847). See his biography in Dwight's ed.; Alex. V. G. Allen, Jonathan Edwards, Boston, 1889 (in the series of "American Religious Leaders"); and Dr. Park, in the Schaff-Herzog Encycl. (vol. ii., pp. 697 sqq.). Park says: "Edwards did more, perhaps, than any other American divine in promoting the doctrinal purity, and at the same time quickening the zeal, of the churches; in restraining them from fanaticism, and at the same time stimulating them to a healthy enthusiasm. His writings were in his own day, and are in our day, a kind of classic authority for discriminating between the warmth of sound health and the heat of a fever. He did not remain stationary, like the center of a circle; he moved in an orbit not eccentric, but well-rounded and complete." Robert Hall considered Edwards "the greatest of the sons of men." Dr. Chalmers recommended his treatise on the Will as the best defense of Calvinism. Allen, a liberal Episcopalian, discriminates between Edwards, who "asserted God at the expense of humanity," and Edwards the seer, who beheld by direct vision what others knew only by report. "Among the great names," he says, "in America of the last century, the only other which competes in celebrity with his own is that of Benjamin Franklin, who labored for this world as assiduously as Edwards for another world" (p. 385).

Edwards was well known through his writings in his age by British divines who called American theology "Edwardean Theology," but was almost unknown on the Continent till quite recently. I learned his name first from Dr. Park when he studied at Berlin in 1843, and I suggested to Dr. Herzog, who had never heard of him, to secure a contribution from Dr. Park or Dr. Stowe in Andover for his "Real-Encyclopædie." This is the origin of the article "Edwards," by Stowe, which appeared in the first edition of that great work (1854), and passed unaltered into the second edition (vol. iv., pp. 44-50), retaining a reference to Leonard Woods and Lyman Beecher as the living representatives of the two wings of the Edwardean School, although they had died years before.

The principal phases through which Edwardeanism passed may be designated as Hopkinsianism, Emmonsism, Taylorism and Parkism.

The younger JONATHAN EDWARDS* (1745–1801, president of Union College, Schenectady, N. Y.) edited his father's works and credits him with "ten improvements" on the older Calvinism. He modified the Anselmic view of the atonement, and elaborated what is called after him "the Edwardean theory," which substantially agrees with the governmental theory of Grotius, that the atonement is a satisfaction to the public justice of God as a moral governor.†

SAMUEL HOPKINS (1721–1803), a student of Jonathan Edwards, pastor at Newport, R. I., and one of the earliest advocates of the abolition of slavery and the slave-trade, matured a complete system of theology called "Hopkinsianism."‡ It does not materially differ from that of Edwards. He equally enforced the divine sovereignty and the obligation of immediate repentance. He held that sin is the necessary means to the greatest good and is overruled for the advantage of the universe.§ He resolved all sin into selfishness, and taught that all actions, even the prayers, of impenitent men are sinful, repentance being a prior duty. Hence it is wrong to exhort men to pray for their own conversion.

He is best known by his theory of virtue. He carried Edwards's view of love, as disinterested benevolence, to the extent

* Called Doctor Edwards, in distinction from his father, President Edwards. The College of New Jersey, at Princeton, where he was graduated in 1765, conferred on him the degree of D.D. See Park, in the Schaff-Herzog Encycl., vol. ii., pp. 699–701. Emmons said of the two Edwardses: "The father had more reason than his son, but the son was a greater reasoner than his father."

† See E. A. Park, The Atonement: Discourses and Treatises, by Edwards, Smalley, Emmons, etc., with an Introductory Essay (of 80 pp.), Boston, 1860; also the introduction of Frank H. Foster (a pupil of Park) to his edition of the famous essay of Grotius, On the Satisfaction of Christ (Andover, 1889, pp. xlv. sqq.).

‡ System of Doctrines contained in Divine Revelation (1793, 3 vols.; 2d ed., Boston, 1811, 2 vols.). Best edition of his Works, with a Biographical Memoir by Dr. Park (Boston, 1852, 3 vols.). See also Park's article, "Hopkinsianism," in Schaff-Herzog, vol. ii., p. 102. Hopkins is the hero of The Minister's Wooing, a theological novel by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, who, herself a daughter of the Puritans, describes the lights and shades of Puritan theology and piety, and contrasts them with the infidelity and immorality of Aaron Burr, the unworthy grandson of Jonathan Edwards.

§ The title of his first work is Sin through the Divine Interposition an Advantage to the Universe.

of unconditional submission and willingness to be damned forever for the glory of God. A similar view was held by Fénelon and Madame Guyon. It is a noble error, which rests on a literal misinterpretation of the wish of Paul (Rom. 9:3), and ignores the inseparable connection of love and happiness.

NATHANIEL EMMONS (1745-1840), for fifty-four years pastor of a Congregational Church at Franklin, Mass. (which he made a parish of theologians), and teacher of a hundred candidates for the ministry, was one of the chief advocates of Hopkinsianism, and one of the most original divines of Puritan New England. He held to verbal inspiration and literal interpretation. He strongly believed in the Trinity and the divinity of Christ, but irreverently called the Nicene doctrine of the eternal generation of the Son "eternal nonsense." He said: "Strict Calvinism brings God near to us; all opposing systems put him far away." He made the "five points" of this system, with the exception of limited atonement, the staple of his sermons, and even declared belief in the decree of reprobation to be necessary to salvation. He pressed the doctrine of divine sovereignty to the revolting extent of making God the efficient cause of all sinful, as well as holy, acts ("exercises") of the will; yet with happy inconsistency he maintained the responsibility of the sinner on the ground of his natural power to thwart the divine decrees, and earnestly enforced the claims of disinterested benevolence. Under his advice the severe creed of Andover Seminary was adopted.*

* His Works were edited by Dr. Jacob Ide, and published by the Congregational Board (Boston, 1861, in 6 vols.). Dr. Park has written an admirable sympathetic Memoir of Nathaniel Emmons, with Sketches of his Friends and Pupils (Boston, 1861, 468 pp., with a portrait). With this should be compared an elaborate essay on The Theological System of Emmons, by Henry B. Smith, written in 1862, and republished in his Faith and Philosophy (New York, 1877, pp. 215-263). Smith sums up the scheme of Emmons in the formula: "God, by direct efficiency, produces all events and exercises for his own glory." It is reported that an eminent preacher said to him, "You and I agree that all sin and holiness consist in exercises;" and that Emmons replied, "Yes, but we differ as to where the exercises come from." Presbyterians generally opposed Emmons for opposite reasons: as a hyper-Calvinist on account of his supralapsarianism, and as an Arminian on account of his views on sin, ability, and the atonement. Emmons was a typical Puritan of the old style, known for sharp and quick repartees, and attracted attention by his three-cornered hat, small-clothes, and knee-breeches. In church polity he was an extreme Independent, and is credited with the saying: "Association leads to consociation, consociation to presbytery, presbytery to prelacy, prelacy to popery, popery to the devil."

The New Haven theologians, TIMOTHY DWIGHT (1752-1817) and NATHANIEL W. TAYLOR (1786-1858), represent a semi-Arminian form of Calvinism which is called the "New School."

President Dwight of Yale College, a grandson of Jonathan Edwards and a preacher and instructor of great influence, humanized the Edwardean system and relieved it of its extreme severity. He preached a system of theology and published it in a series of sermons.* He rejected the doctrines of the imputation of Adam's sin, of natural inability (total depravity), and of limited atonement, also the Hopkinsian view of the sinfulness of the prayers of impenitent men, and other Hopkinsian extravagances. He is best known in the churches by his classical hymn, "I love thy kingdom, Lord."

Dr. Taylor, his pupil, introduced further variations of the New England theology in the direction of semi-Pelagianism. He was, next to Jonathan Edwards, the most metaphysical of the New England divines, but apparently not familiar with the development of German philosophy from Kant to Hegel. He made theology subservient to the practical work of persuading men to turn to God by rousing their sense of personal responsibility. He taught, in opposition to the Old School, that election is founded in benevolence, guided by wisdom, and so dispenses grace as to insure the best results; that sin is not "the necessary means of the greatest good," but may not be preventable in the best system of the universe; that "natural ability" involves a continued "power of contrary choice," but is checked by moral inability; that self-love is the spring of all moral action; that the atonement is to be vindicated not as a vicarious scheme, but (with Grotius) as an essential part of the moral government of God.†

* Theology Explained and Defended (1818, 5 vols.; several editions, American and English).

† His most elaborate work is The Moral Government of God (New York, 1859, 2 vols.). See G. P. FISHER, The System of Dr. N. W. Taylor in its Connection with Prior New England Theology, in his Discussions in History and Theology (New York, 1888, pp. 285-354). He vindicates Taylor against the charge of Pelagianism raised by Hodge and other Old School divines. "It is a curious fact," he says (pp. 351 sq.), "that men who are loud in their denunciation of Dr. Taylor's system profess themselves willing to tolerate the extreme Hopkinsians. They are shocked at the assertion of a power of contrary choice, but they can put up with the doctrine that God is the creator of sin! They can freely tolerate propositions which are not only denounced by all the creeds of Christendom, but, if logically carried out, would banish all religion from the earth."

Against this New Haven School, Dr. BENNET TYLER (1783–1858) reasserted strict Calvinism,* and founded a theological seminary at East Windsor, Conn. (1834), which was afterwards removed to Hartford. It has lately received liberal endowments and taken a much broader position in the direction of progress.

The last Old School divine in New England was Dr. LEONARD WOODS (1774–1854), professor in the theological seminary at Andover, which was founded in 1808 by the coöperation of the strict Calvinists (Hopkinsians) and the moderate Calvinists. It is the oldest theological school in America next to that of the Dutch Reformed Church in New Brunswick, which dates from the year 1784.† Dr. Woods took a leading part in the Unitarian controversy, and published his Theological Lectures and other essays at Andover (1849–50, 5 vols.). His son, LEONARD WOODS, Jr. (1807–78), translated Knapp's Christian Theology (1831–33, 2 vols.), which has been widely used as a text-book.

Dr. EDWARDS A. PARK (b. 1808, resigned 1881), a descendant of Edwards, succeeded and opposed Dr. Woods in the theological chair at Andover. He was a brilliant and magnetic lecturer and preacher, and had the singular faculty of making abstruse, logical definitions and distinctions interesting by illustrative anecdotes. His system essentially agrees with the modern New Haven divinity.‡

Since about 1880 Andover theology, under the lead of Dr. Egbert C. Smyth (professor of Church History), has taken a new departure, which differs as widely from Dr. Park as Dr. Park differed from Dr. Woods. It has become an advocate of "progressive orthodoxy" beyond the strict sense of the "Andover Creed." The best known tenet of this newer New School is the modern German hypothesis of future (not second) probation for all who have not heard the gospel in this life. This hypothesis, though not professionally taught in the Seminary, created a great commotion in connection with the policy of the American Board of Foreign Missions, and led to a lawsuit for alleged violation of the creed of the seminary. The court has decided in favor of a liberal construction (1892).

* In several controversial pamphlets, and in his Lectures on Theology, published after his death (Boston, 1859), with a memoir by Nahum Gale.

† Dr. Livingston was chosen professor by the Dutch Reformed Church in 1784, and inaugurated at New York, May 19, 1785.

‡ See his Discourses on some Theological Doctrines as related to the Religious Character (Andover, 1885). His lectures on Systematic Theology have not yet been published.

The Congregational Creed of 1883.

New England Puritanism has gradually drifted away from the Westminster Confession without falling out of the line of Reformed theology in its legitimate development. At the fourth session of the National Council of the Congregational Churches of the United States, convened at St. Louis, Mo., November, 1880, it was resolved to prepare a summary of the doctrines held by them. Accordingly, a committee of twenty-five able divines matured a new "statement of doctrine" in 1883, without imposing it upon the churches. It consists of twelve articles, and presents all the essential truths of evangelical Protestantism, but omits the offensive points of the Calvinism of Dort and Westminster. The first article states the orthodox doctrine of the Trinity with a skillful avoidance of the vexed difference about the double procession of the Holy Ghost by substituting "is sent" for "proceeds" (from the Father and Son). The second article treats of the difficult subject of divine sovereignty and human responsibility as follows:

"We believe that the Providence of God, by which he executes his eternal purposes in the government of the world, is in and over all events; yet so that the freedom and responsibility of man are not impaired, and sin is the act of the creature alone."*

CHAPTER CCXXVIII.

CHANNING AND BUSHNELL.

An account of New England theology would not be complete without a reference to two most eminent divines, who were of genuine Puritan stock, but departed considerably from Puritan orthodoxy.

Unitarianism is an important factor in the history of Puritan New England. It rose from the early Arminianism, which never died out, in spite of Edwards and his School, but increased in the later part of the eighteenth century. It is a radical reaction against dogmatic Calvinism, and substitutes an optimistic for a pessimistic view of human nature. It denies original sin, and believes in the native dignity and nobility of man. It lacks that sense of sin and guilt which terrified the conscience of Paul, Augustin, Luther, Calvin, and Edwards, and which made them feel all the more the power of forgiving and saving grace. It forms an American parallel to German Rationalism in its milder types.

* The creed is printed, with a historical introduction, in the 5th edition of Schaff's Creeeds of Christendom, vol. iii., pp. 910 sqq.

The ablest and noblest representative of American Unitarianism is WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING (1780-1842), a man of high literary culture, moral purity, devout and fervent piety. He was not so much a scholar and theologian as a preacher, philanthropist and practical reformer.*

Unitarianism took possession of the cultivated society of Boston and Cambridge, the classical headquarters of Puritanism, and was connected with a literary and æsthetic renaissance. It turned theology from a metaphysical and dogmatic into an ethic and philanthropic channel, and produced a rich literature in poetry (Bryant, Longfellow, Lowell) and in history (Prescott, Bancroft, Motley).†

HORACE BUSHNELL of Hartford (1802-76), an original genius and great preacher, stands between Calvinism and Unitarianism, but nearer the former. He occupies an isolated position, yet has left a permanent impression on New England theology.

He renewed the Unitarian controversy in a milder form by his advocacy of the Sabellian view of the Trinity (God in Christ, 1849), and of the moral theory of the atonement (The Vicarious Sacrifice, Grounded in Principles of Universal Obligation, 1866). In his Nature and the Supernatural (1858), he showed the harmony of the two "as together constituting the one system of

* In Europe he is better known, perhaps, than most of American authors. A French Catholic writer calls him the American Fénelon. Coleridge said that he "had the love of wisdom and the wisdom of love." Dr. Döllinger regarded Channing and Nevin (very different in their tendency) as the two greatest American divines. His Works were published in Boston, 1848 (6 vols.), and in 1880; in London, 1865; German translation, Berlin, 1850; French translation, 1857 and 1861. See his Memoir, by his nephew (London and Boston, 1848; 10th ed. 1874, 3 vols.); George P. Fisher: Channing as a Philosopher and Theologian, in his Discussions in History and Theology, pp. 253-284; and Schaff, art. "Channing" in the Schaff-Herzog Encycl., vol. i., pp. 430 sqq.

† See ch. cexvi., p. 349. It is characteristic that a number of distinguished Unitarian ministers, as Sparks, Everett, Bancroft, Emerson, Ripley, Palfrey, and Upham, left the pulpit to devote themselves to literature.

God," and inserted a chapter on "the Moral Character of Jesus forbidding his possible classification with men," which is one of the noblest tributes of genius to the superhuman perfection of our Saviour, and superior to Channing's admirable essay on the same subject.*

CHAPTER CCXXIX.

PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGY.†

The history of Presbyterian theology in America is synchronous with the history of New England theology and passed through a similar conflict between a conservative and a progressive tendency, respectively called "Old Lights" and "New Lights," or "Old School" and "New School." Owing to the closer ecclesiastical organization of Presbyterianism this conflict resulted more than once in a split, but also in a reunion. The Old and New School are two rival sisters which cannot live without each other. The one preserves the good in the past and moderates the rate of speed; the other pushes hopefully forward into new fields of discovery and research. A ship requires heavy ballast to keep it steady, and steam and wind to drive it ahead.

JONATHAN DICKINSON (1688-1747) is the first notable theologian of the American Presbyterian Church. He was of Puritan stock, the grandson of one of the first settlers of Connecticut, and educated at Yale College. In 1706 he became pastor at Elizabethtown. In connection with his ministry he practiced medicine. He joined the Philadelphia Presbytery in 1717 and helped to frame the Adopting Act of 1729, which made the Westminster Confession of Faith the standard of Presbyterian orthodoxy, but with an important limitation to its "essential and necessary articles." He took a leading part in the controversy between the "Old Side," or "Old Lights," and the "New Side," or "New Lights," which led to a division into the Synod of Philadelphia and the Synod of New York in 1741, lasting till 1758, when the schism was healed. He sided with the

* Life and Letters of Horace Bushnell, edited by his daughter (New York, 1880).

† The chief dogmatic works of Presbyterian divines have been mentioned in ch. cexiii., p. 343.

“New Lights.” He was one of the founders and the first president of Nassau Hall, or the College of New Jersey, which was opened at Elizabethtown in 1747, and removed to Princeton in 1757.

Dickinson was a contemporary of Jonathan Edwards, his second successor in the presidency of the College of New Jersey, and, like him, took a leading part in the great revival conducted by Whitefield and Gilbert Tennent. He was less metaphysical but equally earnest and practical, and made Calvinistic theology a converting agency.

His chief theological work is a defense of the five knotty points of Calvinism, in five discourses, on Election, Original Sin, Irresistible Grace, Justification by Faith, and Perseverance of Saints.* He regarded the five points indorsed by the Synod of Dort against Arminianism as a “golden chain, which extends from everlasting to everlasting and connects a past and future eternity, which takes its rise in God’s foreknowledge and eternal purpose of grace to the elect and reaches through their vocation and justification on earth into their eternal glorification in heaven.”

At a joint meeting of the Synods of New York and Philadelphia, held in Philadelphia, May, 1788—the year after the framing of the Federal Constitution of the United States—the ecclesiastico-political articles of the Westminster Confession were changed and conformed to the separation of Church and State. This was a most important departure from original Calvinism, and the Synods of Dort and Westminster, which held to a union of ecclesiastical and civil government and the implied principle of religious persecution.†

I. The Old School Theology.

The founding of the theological seminary at Princeton by the General Assembly in 1812 (four years after the founding of the seminary at Andover) marks a new epoch in the history of

* The Scripture Doctrine Concerning Some Important Points of Christian Faith, first published in Boston, 1741, and often reprinted since (also by the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, 1841, pp. 292).

† See the changes in chapters xx., xxiii., and xxxi., with original statements placed in parallel columns in Schaff’s Creeeds of Christendom, vol. i., pp. 806 sqq. The American Episcopal Church, at the general Convention in Trenton, 1801, made a similar alteration in the Thirty-nine Articles, and omitted the Athanasian Creed (Creeeds, vol. i., p. 653).

Presbyterian Calvinism. This seminary was singularly favored for two generations by two illustrious divines who, with their sons and successors, determined its character for a long period, and by their writings, as well as their pure and noble lives, made a lasting impression upon the Presbyterian Churches, and, we may say, upon American Christianity at large.

Dr. ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER (1772-1851), a Virginian by birth, was the first professor of systematic theology and the father of what, since about 1832, has been called "Princeton Theology," which was developed into a system by his colleague and successor, Dr. CHARLES HODGE (1797-1878), and popularized by the latter's son and successor, ARCHIBALD ALEXANDER HODGE (1823-86).

The elder Hodge studied in Germany at the time when Rationalism was still prevailing in the universities, but was not affected by it. He notices modern German opinions mostly to oppose them.*

The Princeton Theology is a scholarly, logical, luminous and warm-hearted reproduction of the Calvinism of the seventeenth century as laid down in the Westminster standards of 1647, and revised in America, 1788.† On the questions of inspiration

* Dr. Hodge, after his election to a professorship in Princeton (1826), spent two years in Halle to study oriental philology with Gesenius, and became intimately acquainted with Tholuck, who was just then beginning to turn the tide in favor of the evangelical revival. Hodge often spoke with great affection of Tholuck, and told me that he found as pious and godly men in Halle and Berlin as anywhere in America. Tholuck said to me once: "Charles Hodge, Henry B. Smith and George L. Prentiss are my American pets." Dr. Hodge's place during his absence was filled "with eminent ability" by John W. Nevin, who never visited Germany, but was much more influenced by its theology and afterwards, at Mercersburg, developed a very different theology. See The Life of Charles Hodge, p. 103, and Nevin's controversy with Hodge on the doctrine of the Lord's Supper, in the "Mercersburg Review" for 1850, pp. 421-549.

† The Princeton professors are sworn to the Westminster standards by a rigid subscription formula, which is as follows: "In the presence of God and of the directors of this seminary, I do solemnly and ex animo adopt, receive and subscribe the Confession of Faith and Catechisms of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America as the confession of my faith, or as a summary and just exhibition of that system of doctrine and religious belief which is contained in Holy Scripture, and therein revealed by God to man for his salvation; and I do solemnly ex animo profess to receive the Form of Government of said Church as agreeable to the inspired oracles. And I do solemnly promise and engage not to inculcate, teach or insinuate anything which shall appear to me to contradict or contravene, either directly or impliedly, anything taught in the said Confession of Faith or Catechisms, nor to oppose any of the fundamental principles of Presbyterian Church government, while I shall continue a professor and imputation, which were not finally decided by the Westminster Assembly, Princeton follows the teaching of the elder Turretin of Geneva (1623-1687),* and of the Helvetic Consensus Formula (1675).†

The Helvetic Formula is the latest and most orthodox of the Calvinistic confessions, but its authority was confined to Switzerland, and of short duration. It was prepared in 1675 by Johann Heinrich Heidegger of Zürich (1633-98) in connection with François Turretin of Geneva (1623-87) and Lucas Gernler of Basel (1625-75), and signed by the clergy of Zürich, Bern, Basel and Schaffhausen, but not printed till 1714, and soon afterwards subscription to it was abolished in Switzerland, chiefly through the influence of the younger Turretin. ‡

This document deals with theological questions which were raised after the death of Calvin and Beza. It is directed against the liberal Reformed School of the Academy of Saumur in France, which flourished from 1598 till the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685. It teaches verbal inspiration against Louis Cappel (Capellus, d. 1658), particular election, in opposition to the hypothetical universalism of Amyraut (Amyraldus, d. 1664), and immediate imputation of Adam's sin, against mediate imputation, taught by Joshua de la Place (Placæus, d. 1655). § in this seminary." This formula was adopted by the General Assembly in 1811, and is still in force (see Baird's Digest, p. 436; Moore's Digest, p. 377). Under such restriction it is difficult to teach Church History, and almost impossible to make any doctrinal progress "directly or impliedly."

* François Turretin was the third descendant of the distinguished Turretini (Turretin) family which emigrated from Lucca and settled at Geneva in 1593. His Institutio Theologiæ Elencticae, etc. (1679, ed. nova, Genev., 1688, 3 vols.; neatly republished in Edinburgh, and reprinted by Robert Carter in New York, 1847-48, in 4 vols. 8vo.), was made the theological text-book at Princeton by Dr. Alexander. He was one of the ablest of the numerous dogmatists of the seventeenth century, and a veritable malleus hæreticorum, who approved the burning of Servetus as most just ("justissimas impietatis execrandæ pœnas tulit," vol. i., ch. xvii.).

† "Formula Consensus Ecclesiarum Helveticarum Reformatarum circa doctrinam de gratia universali et connexa alia nonnulla capita," in Niemeyer's Collectio Conf., pp. 729-739. An English translation in A. A. Hodge's Outlines of Theology, pp. 651-663.

‡ Jean Alphonse Turretin (1674-1733), a son of François, but a much more liberal divine and a hearty promoter of Christian union, exerted all his influence for the abolition of the subscription to the Consensus Formula in Geneva in 1725. There the venerable document lay decently buried, till it rose to new life in the American town of Princeton. See E. de Budé, Vie de François et J. Alphonse Turretini (Lausanne, 1871 and 1880, 2 vols.).

§ Schweizer, Centraldogmen, vol. ii., pp. 439 sqq., 784 sqq.; and Schaff, Creeks of Christendom, vol. i., p. 477 sqq.

The Swiss Formula extends verbal inspiration even to the Hebrew vowel-points, or at least their force and significance (potestas), and meant to assert also the divine preservation of the Bible text so as to supersede the necessity of biblical criticism, which was feared as a dangerous science, undermining the authority of an infallible Bible against an infallible pope.*

Dr. HODGE does not go quite so far; he knows well enough that the Hebrew vowels cannot be traced beyond the sixth century after Christ; he allows more room for the human agency in the composition of Scripture; he even admits a few minor defects, as (to use his illustration) "here and there a speck of sandstone may be found in the marble of the Parthenon." But he asserts, nevertheless, the plenary inspiration of words as well as thoughts, and says that "inspiration is not confined to moral and religious truths, but extends to the statements of facts, whether scientific, historical or geographical." †

The theory of a literal inspiration and inerrancy was not held by the Reformers, is not taught by any other symbolical book, has no foundation in the Bible itself, is disproved by the free quotations from the Old Testament (ad sensum rather than ad literam), and is exposed to unanswerable objections. It is inconsistent with known facts which are truths. It cannot be

* "II. In specie autem Hebraicus Veteris Testamenti Codex, quem ex traditione Ecclesie Judaicae, cui olim Oracula Dei commissa sunt, accepimus hodieque retinemus, tum quoad consonas, tum quoad vocalia, sive puncta ipsa, sive punctorum saltem potestatem, et tum quoad res, tum quoad verba θεόπνευστος, ut fidei et vitæ nostræ, una cum Codice Novi Testamenti sit Canon unicus et illibatus, ad cuius normam, ceu Lydium lapidem, universæ, quæ extant, Versiones, sive orientales, sive occidentales exigenda, et sicubi deflectunt, revocandæ sunt."—(Niemeier's Collectio, p. 731.) In the translation of Dr. A. A. Hodge: "But, in particular, the Hebrew Original of the Old Testament, which we have received and to this day do retain as handed down by the Jewish Church, unto whom formerly 'were committed the oracles of God' (Rom. 3: 2), is, not only in its consonants, but in its vowels—either the vowel points themselves, or at least the power of the points—not only in its matter, but in its words, inspired of God, thus forming, together with the Original of the New Testament, the sole and complete rule of our faith and life; and to its standard, as to a Lydian stone, all extant versions, oriental and occidental, ought to be applied, and wherever they differ, be conformed." Compare Turretin, Locus Secundus, Questio 10 (vol. i., pp. 96 sq.). He vindicates verbal inspiration for the existing original text as a faithful copy of the autographs. "Textum Originalium nomine, non intelligimus ipsa AUTOGRAPHIA manu Mosis, Prophetarum et Apostolorum exarata, quæ desiderari hodie constat, sed eorum APOGRAPHA, quæ eo nomine veniunt, quia exprimentur nobis Verbum illud Dei illis ipsis verbis quibus Scriptores sacri id consignarunt sub immediata inspiratione Spiritus S." claimed for any of the numerous translations of the Bible, which are confessedly imperfect and yet convey to the reader the word of God for all practical purposes; nor for the Hebrew text, which in its present form is of late rabbinical origin and presents many variations; nor for the Septuagint, which often differs from the Hebrew text, and yet is usually quoted by our Lord and the Apostles; nor for the Greek Testament with its many thousands of discordant readings, which have come to light since the seventeenth century by the discovery and examination of MSS., versions, and patristic quotations. It could therefore only apply to "the original autographs" (which nobody has seen since the days of the Apostles).*

† Syst. Theology, vol. i., p. 163.

Since God has made no provision for infallible transcribers and infallible translators of the Bible, we must infer that verbal inspiration was not necessary. Inspiration must not be confounded with dictation; the former is a free spiritual, the latter a mechanical, process. God acts upon men as free and responsible agents, and so inspired the organs of revelation that they became his faithful witnesses in preaching and acting as well as in writing, but always in accordance with their education, their mode of thought and speech, and without superseding the use of the ordinary means of information (as is very evident in the case even of the Gospels; comp. Luke 1: 1-4). The fact of inspiration is manifest, the mode of inspiration is as mysterious as the influence of the mind upon the body.

Our faith in the Bible, as containing the very word of the living God and as the infallible guide in all matters of faith and practice, rests on its intrinsic value, and is independent of

* Drs. A. A. Hodge and B. B. Warfield, the successors of Charles Hodge in the theological chair at Princeton, confine inerrancy to these non-existing original autographs. See "Princeton Review" for 1881, p. 238. "The historical faith of the Church has always [?] been that all the affirmations of Scripture of all kinds, whether of spiritual doctrine or duty, or of physical or historical fact, or of psychological or philosophical principle, are without any error, when the ipsissima verba of the original autographs are ascertained, and interpreted in a natural and intended sense." Comp. Dr. Warfield's article on inspiration in "The Presbyterian and Reformed Review" for April, 1893, pp. 177-221.

The distinction between "inerrant autographs" and errant copies seems to have been first made by Richard Simon (1638-1712), the father of biblical isagogic, to prove the necessity of textual criticism and to silence the attacks of Protestant and Roman Catholic champions for the inerrancy of the existing text of the Bible. He also intended to show "que les protestants n'avait aucun principe assuré de leur religion, en rejetant la tradition de l'Église" (Preface to his L'histoire critique du V. T.).

any human theory of inspiration. As Dr. Hodge well says, "theories are of men, truth is of God."

In some important respects, the Princeton theology marks an advance and improvement upon the polemic orthodoxy of the seventeenth century. Dr. Hodge is free from narrow and uncharitable bigotry. He claims that his theology is "distinctly Christological," and quotes with approbation the words which Neander wrote in his album in Greek: "Nothing in ourself, all things in the Lord, whom alone to serve is a glory and a joy;"—adding, "These words our old professors would have inscribed in letters of gold over the portals of this seminary, there to remain in undiminished brightness as long as the name of Princeton lingers in the memory of man."*

He dissented from the traditional prejudice against Romanism, and had the courage to oppose by convincing arguments the decision of the Old School General Assembly held at Cincinnati in 1845, which out-poped the pope by unchurching the oldest and largest Church of Christendom, and declaring, by a vote of 169 to 8, Roman Catholic baptism invalid.†

The most important change refers to the number of the saved. Hodge holds the liberal views first advocated by Zwingli, and adopted by Arminians, Quakers, Baptists and Methodists, that all infants dying in infancy are saved, and closes his dogmatic work with the sentence that the number of those who are ultimately lost "is very inconsiderable as compared with the whole number of the saved."‡

The Southern theologians, JAMES H. THORNWELL (1812–62), ROBERT J. BRECKINRIDGE (1800–71) and ROBERT L. DABNEY (b. 1820), represent, independently, the same system of Calvinism, but dissent from the federal scheme and the doctrine of imputation, and are more opposed to popery.

* See his Semi-centennial Address in The Life of Charles Hodge, by his son, A. A. Hodge (New York, 1880, p. 521).

† See his article in "The Princeton Review" for April, 1846, and his Life, pp. 340 sq. A similar action was attempted in the New School Assembly, 1853, but defeated by Dr. Henry B. Smith. In the united General Assembly, held at Cincinnati in 1885, a resolution was offered to confirm the action of 1845, but was fortunately rejected. Among the proposed changes in the Westminster Confession are those in ch. xxv., p. 6, which declares the pope of Rome to be the Antichrist predicted by Paul (2 Thess. 2: 3, 4), and in ch. xxiv. 3, which by implication classes papists with "idolaters."

‡ Syst. Theology, vol. i., p. 26; vol. iii., p. 879. A. A. Hodge was even more liberal than his father. Comp. Schaff, Creeds, vol. i., p. 795.

• Dr. WILLIAM G. T. SHEDD, professor at Andover, and afterwards at Union Seminary, New York (b. 1820, resigned 1890), elaborated, in classical English, a different type of Old School Calvinism, with great ability and logical severity. He adheres strictly to the Augustinian anthropology, and the Westminster Confession. He is a Calvinist pure and simple, and makes no concessions to Arminianism or modern theology.* He advocates the infralapsarian scheme; the decree of reprobation, as the necessary corollary of the decree of election; the distinction between the secret and the revealed will of God in his offering salvation to all men, while he really means to make it effectual only for the elect. He teaches (herein differing from Augustin, but in harmony with the Westminster Standards) the perfect sanctification of believers at their death and their immediate passage into glory, and thus obliterates or at least minimizes the distinction between the middle state before, and the final state after, the resurrection.†

So far there is no difference between Shedd and Hodge. They also agree in mitigating the older Protestant eschatology by "the larger hope" for the salvation of the vast majority of men, including all infants dying in infancy. This is a triumph of the Christian heart over the cold logic of the intellect.‡

But there is a material difference in the philosophy and anthropology of these two distinguished divines. Dr. Hodge is a nominalist and a creationist. Dr. Shedd is a realist and a traducianist. Dr. Shedd makes, with Augustin, a real distinction between the generic human nature and the individual man, and assumes that the whole race pre-existed and fell in Adam, and actually participated in his sin and guilt; while Dr. Hodge defends the federal view of Cocejus, that Adam by divine appointment acted as the representative head in behalf of his posterity, which did not yet exist except in the divine purpose. Dr. Shedd accounts for the propagation of sin by Tertullian's

* See his Dogmatic Theology (1888, 2 vols.), and his Calvinism, Pure and Mixed: A Defence of the Westminster Standards (New York, 1893).

† He denies the distinction between Hades and Gehenna, in opposition to the unanimous opinion of the ancient Fathers, modern commentators and the Anglo-American Bible Revisers. He always quotes King James's version, which renders both words by "hell."

‡ Dr. Shedd emphasizes the countless "multitude" of the saved, and reduces hell to "a narrow pit" (Dogmatic Theology, vol. ii., p. 747, and Calvinism, Pure and Mixed, pp. 121 sqq.). Yet he devotes only 3 pages to Heaven (vol. ii., pp. 664-666) and 87 pages to Hell (pp. 667-754)!

theory of traducianism, or the transmission of body and soul⁹ by natural generation, instead of ascribing the origin of each human soul to a creative act of God. His view furnishes a more rational ground for personal responsibility and for what he calls "the sinfulness of original sin," but it involves all the insuperable difficulties of the Augustinian theory.

II. The New School Theology.

The New School is nearer the Congregational Calvinism than the Old School, and keeps progress with modern thought.* The chief differences referred originally to the extent of the atonement—whether general or limited—and the nature of imputation—whether mediate or immediate. With these were connected conflicting views on the authority of the General Assembly, the "Plan of Union" with the Congregationalists (1801), the slavery question and moral reforms. In more recent times, other and more important differences in bibliology and eschatology have come to the front.

The earlier representatives of the New School before the separation were JAMES RICHARDS (1767–1843), BAXTER DICKINSON (1794–1876), ALBERT BARNES (1798–1870), LYMAN BEECHER (1775–1863), and THOMAS H. SKINNER (1791–1871). Richards wrote a system of theology, and presided over the Auburn Convention of the exscinded synods which adopted, in August, 1837, "the Auburn Declaration," setting forth, in sixteen articles, the true doctrines of the New School.† Barnes was the most popular commentator of his day; Beecher was one of the most powerful preachers, though surpassed afterwards by his son, Henry Ward Beecher; Skinner was chiefly distinguished as a preacher and saintly character. Barnes and Beecher were tried for heresy, but were acquitted. Nevertheless the friction between the two parties increased, until in 1837 the Old School obtained the majority in the General Assembly, abrogated the "Plan of Union," and cut off four entire synods (Western Reserve, Utica, Geneva and Genesee) without a trial. The split

* A number of distinguished New School Presbyterian divines (as Lyman Beecher, Wm. Adams, H. B. Smith, R. D. Hitchcock, G. L. Prentiss) were of New England origin.

† The Auburn Declaration was written by Dr. Baxter Dickinson (then professor in Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, afterwards in Auburn) as a protest against the sixteen articles condemned by the General Assembly of 1837. It was declared sound and orthodox by the Old School Assembly of 1869. It is printed in Schaff's Creeds of Christendom, vol. iii., pp. 777–780.

was completed by the General Assembly of 1838, which refused to recognize the commissioners of the four excised synods.

For more than thirty years the two Schools kept up their separate organizations at a respectful distance and in honorable rivalry, until in 1869 they were reunited into one Church on the basis of the Westminster Standards, without a surrender either of orthodoxy or of liberty, and pursued the common work of propagating Christianity at home and abroad with great energy and success.*

The reunion was a general and spontaneous movement, and was strongly promoted by the faculty of the Union Theological Seminary of New York, consistently with its name. This institution was founded in 1836, shortly before the separation, on liberal principles, and as a protest against extreme views on either side, and against "practical radicalism and ecclesiastical domination." It afforded ample room for different tendencies of Presbyterian theology (having among its professors Smith of the New School and Shedd of the Old School), on the basis of the fullest and freest investigation of the Scriptures and the history of the Church.†

The first exegetical professor in this seminary was EDWARD ROBINSON (1794-1863), the pioneer of Palestine exploration and of biblical philology in America.

Its first distinguished dogmatist was Dr. HENRY B. SMITH (1815-77), who passed from the historical to the dogmatic chair. He mediated between Old and New School and was the chief leader in the reunion. He was a keen metaphysician as well as a historically trained theologian, a favorite pupil of Tholuck, and in living sympathy with the best ideas of the modern evangelical theology of Germany. He marks the transition from Theocentric to Christocentric theology. His leading idea was "incarnation in order to redemption." Unfortunately, he did not live to elaborate his system for publication, but left behind him a strong influence over numerous pupils.*

* See Presbyterian Reunion: A Memorial Volume, 1837-1871 (New York, 1870).

† See George L. Prentiss: The Union Theological Seminary in the City of New York (New York, 1889, 294 pp.). An authentic history of the institution during its first fifty years, with biographical sketches of its founders and first professors. Dr. Prentiss wrote also an Appendix: The Agreement between Union Seminary and the General Assembly (New York, 1891). The Union Seminary was originally free from ecclesiastical control, but voluntarily sacrificed a part of its independence at the reunion in 1870 by giving the General Assembly the veto power over appointments of new professors (but not over transfers of professors from one chair to another). As this agreement led to unpleasant collisions instead of promoting peace, it was terminated on legal and constitutional grounds by the Board of Directors in 1892.

Among these was LEWIS FRENCH STEARNS, his biographer, who was called to Smith's chair in 1890, but preferred to remain professor in the Congregational Seminary at Bangor, where he died in his forty-fifth year (1892). He carried out more consistently the Christocentric principle in his Present Day Theology.† This is not a complete scientific work, but a fresh popular discussion of the leading doctrines of the Christian faith by a devout and thoughtful American, who had studied with Hodge in Princeton, with Smith in New York, with Dorner in Berlin, and with Kahnis and Luthardt in Leipzig, and mediated between Presbyterian and Congregational Calvinism. He presents the most recent movements of evangelical thought on inspiration, creation, the providence of God, the Christological problem (the theories of kenosis and of progressive incarnation), election and predestination, and the future life. He reveres Augustin and Calvin as the greatest divines, "whose names should never be mentioned without reverence, and who have been most reviled by those who have known them the least" (p. 223); but he finds two defects in

* His System of Christian Theology was posthumously published from imperfect lectures by Karr (1884, 4th ed. 1890). Comp. the collection of his essays edited by Dr. George L. Prentiss, with an Introduction, under the title Faith and Philosophy (New York, 1877). The oration which he delivered on this subject before the "Porter Rhetorical Society" of the seminary at Andover in 1849, struck the keynote of his theology. Dorner called Smith "one of the first, if not the very first American divine of his time, deeply rooted in the Christian faith, large-hearted, far-sighted, of philosophical spirit, and unusually gifted for systematic theology." Godet, his friend and fellow-student under Neander, said: "Il dominait chaque sujet, et me dominait en en parlant." Conversing with me once, Godet remarked: "Dr. Smith speaks from the heights." See Henry Boynton Smith: His Life and Work, ed. by his wife (New York, 1881), and Henry Boynton Smith, by Lewis F. Stearns (Boston and New York, 1892). Smith anticipated the central thought of his theology even in his twenty-first year, before he went to Germany, when he wrote to his Episcopal friend, Dr. Goodwin, from Bowdoin College at Brunswick, Me., Nov. 21, 1836: "My object is to make and harmonize a system which shall make Christ the central point of all important religious truth and doctrine. Such, I am convinced, is the biblical scheme. Such a system, too, would be a practical system; it would, at any rate, require that all preaching should be made in reference to Christ, of course in reference to redemption and sanctification, and Christ as the cause of both."

† Published by Charles Scribner's Sons (New York, 1893, pp. 508). Comp. his lectures before the Union Theological Seminary on Evidences of Christian Experience (New York, 1890), and his paper read before the International Congregational Council in London, July 15, 1891, which made a very marked impression.

their system—the limitation of the love of God, and the denial of freedom. Instead of vindicating Calvinism in antagonism to Arminianism, he aims at a reconciliation of the two, and subordinates both to Christology.*

The deep problem of divine sovereignty and human freedom, of particular election and the universal love of God, is still unsolved, and may never be satisfactorily solved in this world of imperfect knowledge. - But far better to acknowledge the defect, than to deny the one or the other of these equally important truths. Practically, however, the problem is solved in our Christian experience. Augustinians and Calvinists preach and work as if all depended on man; Semi-Pelagians and Arminians pray and worship as if everything depended on God. Both can unite with equal fervor in Wesley's hymn, "A charge to keep I have," and in Toplady's "Rock of Ages, cleft for me." Paul himself, who first opened this controversy among Christian divines and is confidently quoted by both parties, calls upon Christians: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling"—that is, with the utmost diligence, as if you could not do enough; and adds, as the strongest encouragement, the Calvinistic reason: "For it is God who worketh in you both to will [by prevenient grace] and to work [by co-operative grace] for his good pleasure" [in fulfillment of his gracious purpose].

* "Calvinism," he says (p.431), "has had one great and most praiseworthy object, to exalt God. It has aimed to bring men to the realization of their utter dependence upon God for all things here and hereafter. Believers owe their faith not to themselves or anything in them, but to God alone, working through Christ and the Holy Spirit. The practical effect of this doctrine has been to make strong Christians. The men who had come to believe that they were nothing and God everything, and yet that God was working in them and through them, could do their work in the world, since God gave it to them to do, without fear of men or the devil. The Protestants of Geneva, the Huguenots of France, the Covenanters of Scotland, the Puritans of the English Civil War, and our own Pilgrim Fathers, got the iron in their blood from their Calvinism.

"But there is another side to this doctrine. It reduces human freedom to a mere name, so far as spiritual things are concerned. Faith, instead of being the free personal surrender of man's will to God, is a divine act, wrought in the soul by overmastering power. Moreover, the doctrine throws a baleful light upon the divine righteousness. The non-elect never have the opportunity for salvation. It is to no purpose to say that they are justly condemned for their sins; for the sin is not really theirs but Adam's, and they are condemned for that which they have absolutely no power to help. If the arrangement by which Adam stood probation for the race was of God's appointment, then the sin and guilt and misery which resulted to the race were also of his appointment. Undoubtedly

The Revision Movement and the Briggs Controversy.

In 1890, the General Assembly held at Saratoga inaugurated a doctrinal revision of the Westminster Confession with a view to relieve it of its hard metaphysical and polemical features, and to adapt it to the present belief of the Presbyterian Church. The same Assembly appointed also a committee for the preparation of a brief, popular creed, which should express the consensus of the English-speaking Reformed Churches embraced in the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance.

This movement marks a new epoch of development. It reopened the old conflict between the conservative and progressive tendencies under a new form. It was followed and complicated since 1891 by the Briggs controversy about "the higher criticism," which involves the broader question of the academic liberty of teaching within the Presbyterian Church. This conflict has already led to two heresy trials in the presbyteries of New York and Cincinnati, with opposite results (1892). The Presbytery of New York (the largest in the country) acquitted Dr. Briggs on all the charges of heresy, but the General Assembly at Washington, June 1, 1893, by a large majority, many who profess to hold the genuine Calvinistic doctrine find some way to evade its ethical difficulties at the expense of their logic. But the doctrine itself is open to insuperable objection. It stands the test neither of Scripture nor of reason.

"The most important rival theory bears the name of the Dutch theologian Arminius, but it was known long before his day, and is now held by multitudes who do not call themselves Arminians. The doctrine has been presented in two forms, which are at bottom the same. According to the first form, God's decree of predestination or election concerns the class of believers. God from eternity determined to save all who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and to condemn all who reject his grace. But when the Arminians are pressed to explain the relation in which individuals stand to the divine plan, they state the doctrine in a second form: God from eternity determined to save those individuals whom he foreknew would exercise faith and obedience; or the divine decree, so far as it relates to the destiny of individuals, is conditioned upon the foreknowledge.

"One cannot but feel respect for the moral earnestness of Arminianism. If human responsibility is to be maintained and the divine righteousness vindicated, the reality of human freedom must be admitted. Only upon this condition can the Gospel be offered freely to men, and the call be given to all who will to drink the water of life. Between a theory of election which shuts a large fraction of mankind helplessly and irremediably out from salvation, and the Arminianism which opens wide the gates of Christ's redemption to all who will enter, whether Christian or Jew or heathen, it seems as if there could be no question what our choice should be.

"Still, when all is said, Arminianism also has its difficulties. Its weak-reversed the verdict and suspended him from the Presbyterian ministry. The minority entered a vigorous protest. What will be the consequences God only knows.

The existence of two or more schools in one Church is a sign of strength rather than weakness: it shows vitality, encourages a noble rivalry, and insures progress. Controversy is preferable to stagnation, if it is conducted for the victory of truth.

The Revision Committee after two years of labor reported a large number of emendations, omissions and additions, but as these proved unsatisfactory to both parties, they failed to receive the sanction of the necessary two-thirds majority of the two hundred and twenty presbyteries. This failure will stimulate the preparation of a new creed. The Westminster Assembly at first attempted only a revision of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England, with a view to make them more explicitly Calvinistic, but after having revised the first fifteen Articles, it was directed by Parliament (Oct. 12, 1643) to frame a new confession of faith "for the three kingdoms according to the Solemn League and Covenant." The present condition of the Church demands a short popular creed which is less Calvinistic, but more evangelical and catholic than the Westminster Standards, and which, instead of perpetuating sectarian division, will serve as a bond of union with other branches of Christ's kingdom.

ness lies in the direction of the strength of Calvinism. It lays the emphasis too strongly upon the human factor in conversion and the Christian life. It does not bring into sufficient prominence the believer's dependence upon God. It is commonly connected with a doctrine of possible sinless perfection, which does harm by lowering the standard of the divine law to the level of human infirmity. Arminianism, likewise, fails to justify itself philosophically. To say that the divine decree of predestination is based upon the divine foreknowledge is to state the matter altogether superficially. How could God have any foreknowledge until he had formed his plan? If he foreknew that certain men would accept his grace if it was offered to them, and that certain others would reject it, and then decreed to create them and to put them in the circumstances in which he foresaw they would make these choices, then there must have been some real sense in which he foreordained these acts and their consequences. So strongly have some of the more thoughtful advocates of this theory felt the embarrassment of their position that they have withdrawn to the position that God predestinates only the class of believers, and have denied his foreknowledge with respect to the choices of individuals, thus maintaining their doctrine at the expense of the divine absoluteness.

"The question therefore arises, Is it possible to formulate a consistent doctrine of predestination, which shall combine the elements of truth to be found in both the great theories and avoid the mistakes of both—a doctrine which shall be Calvinistic in its assertion of the divine sovereignty and yet do justice to real truth to which Arminianism bears witness? I think it is possible."

CHAPTER CCXXX.

GERMAN THEOLOGY IN AMERICA.

Germans, Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Anglo-Americans are branches of the same Teutonic stock, and acted and reacted upon each other in different epochs of their history. Germany gave to England in the fifth century her Anglo-Saxon population and language, upon which was grafted in the eleventh century the Norman French. England gave to Germany the Christian religion through St. Boniface, an Anglo-Saxon, who organized the feeble churches planted by himself and by Irish missionaries, and subjected them to the jurisdiction of the bishop of Rome. Germany repaid the debt by the Reformation and consequent emancipation from the tyranny of popery. The movement of Protestant skepticism and unbelief started with English Deism and found its scientific development in German Rationalism. The Pietistic movement of Spener, and the Moravian revival of Zinzendorf had a marked effect upon the greater Anglo-American revival of the Wesleys and Whitefield, who did more for the evangelization of the masses and the promotion of practical Christianity than any evangelists since the days of the apostles.

The revival of evangelical theology in Germany, which may be dated from the third centennial of the Reformation, could not be fruitless in England and America. It is becoming more and more an important factor in American theology, but cannot replace our systems of thought. German ideas cannot take root in English, Scotch or American soil unless they are freely reproduced in the English language and adapted to the practical wants of a free Church in a free State.

The Christian religion has a stronger hold on the English-speaking race than on any nation of the continent of Europe, and as far as practical theology and practical Christianity are concerned, Germany may learn much from England and America. State churches have the tendency to make the people slavishly dependent upon the civil government for support; while free churches develop individual liberality and the capacity for self-government.

But in the development of theology as a science in all its branches, Germany unquestionably occupies the first rank in the nineteenth century. Her universities are the busy workshops of progressive exegesis, Church history, biblical and speculative theology, and will retain the leadership for some time to come. A theological education can hardly be complete without a knowledge of these achievements.

The recent developments of German theology, since the days of Schleiermacher and Neander, have been made known to us first through translations, more or less imperfect, of the most important works by Scotch, English, and American scholars. Not content with indirect acquaintance, American students, following the example of Edward Robinson, Charles Hodge, Henry B. Smith, George L. Prentiss, Edwards A. Park, and George P. Fisher, attend, in increasing numbers, German universities, to drink at the fountain new ideas and fresh inspiration for independent work. They find a hospitable reception in the lecture-rooms and homes of German professors, and learn to admire their plain living and high thinking, while they return the benefit by giving them a higher idea of American institutions and churches.*

The influence of Germany is both negative and positive; it tends to undermine old foundations, and aids in building up new constructions. It has been felt so far mainly in biblical and historical theology, but these are the foundation of systematic theology. The proper way is to proceed from the Bible to dogma, and not from dogma to the Bible.

On the other hand, English and American divines are beginning to influence German theology by their published works, which attract the favorable notice of the leading periodicals. "In reality," says Harnack, "there no longer exists any distinction between German and English theological science. The exchange is now so brisk that scientific theologians of all evangelical lands form already one concilium."

The future progress of evangelical theology is intrusted by

* Tholuck, Neander, Delitzsch, Dörner, Weiss, Harnack, and others will long be gratefully remembered for their kind attentions to American students. And these will appreciate the generous tribute given to them by the theological faculty of the University of Berlin: "The number of your pupils who cross the ocean to continue their studies with us is growing from year to year. We desire here to give expression to the special pleasure with which we welcome American fellow-students; for they form among our hearers a special group, which in lively interest and devoted zeal is not surpassed by any other." (From the semi-centennial Epistola congratulatoria to Dr. Schaff, Nov. 16, 1892.)

Providence chiefly to the combined efforts of German and Anglo-American scholars.

LITERATURE.

Clark's "Foreign Theological Library," published at Edinburgh since 1864 and republished in New York, embraces: (1) commentaries of Tholuck, Hengstenberg, Stier, Keil and Delitzsch, Olshausen, Meyer, Lange, Ebrard; Cremer's Theological Dictionary of the Greek Testament; Lange's Life of Jesus; Weiss's Life of Christ, his Theology of the New Testament, and Introduction to the New Testament; Gode't's commentaries on John, Luke, Romans, and Corinthians, and his Introduction to the New Testament; Schürer's History of the Jewish People at the Time of Christ; (2) the Church histories of Neander, Gieseler, Kurtz, Hagenbach (in part); (3) Ullmann's Reformers before the Reformation, and his Sinlessness of Jesus; Dorner's History of Christology, his History of German Theology, and his Dogmatic, and Ethic; Müller's Doctrine of Sin; Martensen's Dogmatic and Ethic; Luthardt's, and Ebrard's Apologetic, etc. These translations were prepared mostly by Scotch Presbyterians, some by English Episcopalians and Independents, and belong to the evangelical school.

In 1873, a company of liberal scholars, including Principal John Tulloch, Professor Jowett, Dean Stanley, Prof. Samuel Davidson, Dr. James Martineau, John Caird, Henry Sidgwick, Prof. T. K. Cheyne, and others, formed a "Theological Translation Fund" for the publication of a theological literature of an independent character which should present the "best results of recent theological investigations . . . conducted without reference to doctrinal considerations, and with the sole purpose of arriving at truth." This company furnished and published through Williams & Norgate, London, translations of Keim's History of Jesus of Nazara; Baur's Paul, the Apostle of Jesus Christ, and his Church History of the First Three Centuries; Kuenen's Religion of Israel to the Fall of the Jewish State; Bleek's Lectures on the Apocalypse; Zeller's Acts of the Apostles; Ewald's Prophets of the Old Testament, and his Psalms and Job; Hausrath's History of the New Testament Times; Schrader's Old Testament and the Cuneiform Inscriptions; Pfeleiderer's Paulinism, and his Philosophy of Religion; Reville's Prolegomena of the History of Religions; A Protestant Commentary on the New Testament, by Lipsius, Holtzmann and others.

American scholars have done their share in translations, and have added the results of original work. Prof. Edward Robinson, of the Union Theological Seminary in New York, laid the foundation for American biblical learning by his translation of Gesenius' Hebrew Lexicon (1836; 5th ed. 1854) and Wahl's Clavis Philologica Novi Testamenti (1825), which he superseded by his own superior Greek and English Lexicon of the New Testament (1836; thoroughly revised, 1850). Prof. Joseph H. Thayer, of Andover Theological Seminary (since 1884 professor in the theological department of Harvard University), followed in the same line with a translation of Winer's Grammar of the New Testament Greek (1869), A. Buttman's Grammar of the New Testament Greek (1873), and Grimm's Clavis Novi Testamenti (1886, with valuable additions and references to the Anglo-American Revision). Neander was translated by an American Congregationalist (Prof. Joseph Torrey). Gieseler was completed by an American Presbyterian (Prof. Henry B. Smith), and Hagenbach's Dogmengeschichte was enlarged by the same. Meyer's commentary on the New Testament, and Godet's commentaries were republished from the Edinburgh edition with considerable improvements. Mitchell translated Harnack's Outlines of the History of Dogma (1893). Lange's voluminous Bible-Work was (by authorization) reproduced and enlarged by forty American divines of different denominations, published in New York, and republished in Edinburgh, in 25 vols. The Schaff-Herzog "Encyclopædia" (3d revised ed. in 4 vols., 4to, 1891) is a condensed translation of the best articles of the second edition of Herzog (18 vols.), by arrangement with the German editors and publishers, with numerous bibliographical additions; while more than one-third of the work, embracing the articles on English and American and other topics, and the whole Supplement on Living Divines are original. The translated articles were submitted in proof to the German authors for revision.

In this connection we may remark that some of the best private libraries of Germany have been bought by liberal friends of American institutions. The invaluable library of Leander van Ess, which originally belonged to a Benedictine monastery in the diocese of Paderborn, and numbers 13,000 volumes, including 430 incunabula and the controversial literature of the Reformation period, is now in possession of the Union Theological Seminary at New York (Presbyterian). Neander's library belongs to the Theological Seminary of Rochester, N. Y. (Baptist). The library of Leopold von Ranke is the property of the University of Syracuse, N. Y. (Methodist). The Beck collection of the Luther literature, embracing over 1200 works, was bought by the Theological Seminary at Hartford (Congregationalist). The library of Paul de Lagarde, which is very rich in Orientalia, was recently acquired by the University of the City of New York (1893).

FOURTH SECTION: SYMBOLIC, POLEMIC AND IRENIC.

CHAPTER CCXXXI.

SYMBOLS OF FAITH, OR CREEDS AND CONFESSIONS.

Christendom is divided into a number of Churches and Confessions. All acknowledge the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as divinely inspired and as an infallible rule of faith and practice, but they derive from them different systems of doctrine, government, and worship.

The various doctrinal systems are expressed in the symbolical books or confessions of faith. A symbol in the theological sense is a creed which holds the members of a church together and distinguishes them from other religious bodies. The earliest creeds were brief baptismal confessions. The later creeds are much fuller, and some embody a whole system of divinity (as the Lutheran Formula of Concord, and the Calvinistic Confession of Westminster). They profess to be a summary of the teaching of the Bible as understood by those who adhere to them. But they differ from the Bible in form. A string of Bible passages, systematically arranged according to topics, would have no distinctive character, and could not be called a symbolical book. A creed is the human answer to God's word, and the Church's interpretation of his revelation. The same may be said of a hymn, which is a devotional creed, as the Apostles' and the Nicene creeds are doctrinal hymns.

All creeds are more or less imperfect and fallible. The Bible alone is the rule of faith (regula credendi), the norma normans, and claims divine and therefore absolute authority; the creed is a rule of public teaching (regula docendi), the norma normata, and has only ecclesiastical and therefore relative authority, which depends on the measure of its agreement with the Bible. Confessions may be improved (as the Apostles' Creed is a gradual growth from the baptismal formula), or may be superseded by better ones with the increasing knowledge of the truth.

NOTES.

1. CONFESSIONS is the name used on the continent of Europe for the three leading Churches which differ in their creed, namely, the Roman and Greek Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Reformed. Other religious societies are usually termed sects, and were, until recently, excluded from civil rights. The Roman Church identifies herself with the Church Catholic, and regards all others as mere sects. In England the distinction is made between the Church (i.e., the Episcopal Church of England) and the Dissenting or Nonconformist bodies, and the members of the former call themselves Churchmen. In the United States, where all churches and sects are on a basis of equality before the law, the inoffensive term Denomination has come into use. There are, however, many more denominations than confessions, inasmuch as the leading Protestant denominations agree in their doctrinal standards, and differ only on minor matters of church polity and ceremonies.

2. SYMBOL, from the Greek σύμβολον (συμβάλλειν, to throw together, to compare) and the Latin symbolum, means a sign or emblem; in theological language, a doctrinal sign, token, creed, confession of faith. It was first so applied in the third century to the "Apostles' Creed," which the Christians professed at baptism to distinguish them from Jews, heathen and heretics. It was also used in the sense of a watchword, military parole (tessera militis Christiani), with which the baptized entered upon their spiritual warfare against the flesh, the world and the devil, under the banner of Christ. The term "symbolical books" (libri symbolici) originated in the Lutheran Church, as also the term theologia symbolica. On the different meanings of symbolum, see Suicer, Thesaurus, sub σύμβολον; Bingham, Antiq., bk. x., ch. 3; Schaff, Bibl. Symbol., vol. i., p. 3.

3. The AUTHORITY of creeds is absolute in the Roman Church, which co-ordinates the Bible and tradition, and claims infallibility. It is relative and limited in the Protestant churches, which subordinate tradition to the Bible, and deny infallibility and perfection to any particular or visible church. Symbololatry is a species of idolatry. Article 19 of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England says: "As the Church of Jerusalem, Alexandria, and Antioch have erred, so also the Church of Rome hath erred, not only in their living and manner of ceremonies, but also in matters of faith." Papal infallibility was declared a dogma by the Vatican Council in 1870, contrary to the clear case of Pope Honorius I., who officially indorsed the Monotheletic heresy, and at the expense of the infallibility of the sixth and seventh œcumenical councils, and Pope Leo II., who officially condemned him as a heretic (see Schaff's Church History, vol. iv., pp. 500 sqq., and the literature there quoted).

CHAPTER CCXXXII.

CLASSIFICATION OF CREEDS.

The creeds may be divided into the following classes :

I. The three ŒCUMENICAL Creeds of the ancient Church, acknowledged, at least in substance, by all branches of orthodox Christendom : (1) The Apostles' Creed, so called, begun in the second century, and completed in the fifth ; (2) the Nicene Creed, begun at the first œcumenical council in Nicæa, 325, completed at the second in Constantinople, 381 (or at Chalcedon, 451) ; (3) the Athanasian Creed, which is not from Athanasius, but of much later Gallican origin, in the sixth or seventh century. To these should be added the Chalcedonian symbol on the person of Christ, adopted by the fourth œcumenical council (451).

Strictly speaking, the Nicene Creed without the Filioque is the only one which is adopted by the Greek Church, and she protests against the later and unauthorized insertion of the clause Filioque by the Latin Church. She ignores the Apostles' and the Athanasian Creeds. The Apostles' Creed is used by Protestants and Roman Catholics more than the Nicene, and the Athanasian much less than either.

All these creeds, however, agree in the doctrine of the Trinity and Incarnation. They profess faith in one God the Father Almighty, maker of all things ; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God and Son of man in one person, who assumed human nature, suffered, died, and rose again for our salvation ; and in the Holy Ghost, the regenerator and sanctifier ; and in the holy Catholic Church, the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting.

II. The distinctive Creeds of the ORTHODOX ORIENTAL or GREEK Church : (1) The Orthodox Confession (1643), drawn up by Peter Mogila and indorsed by the Eastern patriarchs and the Synod of Jerusalem ; (2) the Decrees of the Synod of Jerusalem or the Confession Dositheus (1672) ; (3) the Russian Catechisms of Philaret sanctioned by the Holy Synod of Russia (1829).

III. The distinctive creeds of the ROMAN CATHOLIC Church : (1) The Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent (1564) ; (2) the Confession of the Tridentine Faith, also called the Creed of Pius IV. (1564); (3) the Roman Catechism (1566); (4) the Decree of the Immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mary (1854); (5) the Decrees of the Vatican Council of 1870 (the dogma of papal absolutism and papal infallibility).

IV. The LUTHERAN Confessions: the Augsburg Confession and the Apology of the Augsburg Confession, both by Melancthon (1530); Luther's Catechisms, the large and small (1529); the Smalcald Articles (1537); and the Formula of Concord (1577).

V. The REFORMED (mostly Calvinistic) Confessions: the Second Helvetic Confession (1566); the Heidelberg Catechism (1563); the Gallican Confession (1559); the Belgic Confession (1560); the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England (1562); the First and Second Scotch Confessions (1560 and 1581); the Canons of the Synod of Dort (1619); the Westminster Confession, and Larger and Shorter Catechisms (1647). The term Reformed is wider than the term Calvinistic and embraces several modifications. Calvinism is not the name of a Church, like Lutheranism, but of a theological school.

VI. Creeds of EVANGELICAL Churches organized since the Reformation, as the Arminians, Congregationalists, Quakers, Baptists, Methodists, Moravians, etc. They differ from older Protestant Confessions in some minor points of doctrine, which are embodied in separate standards, or held traditionally. The Congregationalists or Independents originally adopted the Westminster Confession and Catechisms with trifling variations (1658), but have recently prepared a briefer and more popular statement of doctrine (1883). The Arminians differ from the Calvinists in five articles, chiefly on predestination and the extent of the atonement. The Moravians accept the consensus of the Lutheran and Reformed Confessions. The Twenty-five Articles of Wesley are an abridgment of the Thirty-nine Articles of the Church of England. But the Wesleyan Methodists hold in addition the five Arminian Articles. The Regular Baptists are Calvinists with the exception of the doctrine of infant baptism and immersion. The Free-Will or Arminian Baptists are a small minority. The Quakers depart farthest from the Augustinian anthropology, and from the catholic views on the ministry and the sacraments, but are otherwise evangelical.

VII. Those denominations which radically dissent from the evangelical doctrines of the Reformation as well as from Romanism, either substitute a new revelation for the old, like the Swedenborgians, or are opposed to all creeds. Their creed is no-creed or unlimited liberty of private judgment.

COLLECTIONS OF CREEDS.

PHILIP SCHAFF: Bibliotheca Symbolica Ecclesie Universalis. The Creeds of Christendom with a History and Critical Notes (New York, 1877; 4th ed. revised, 1884; 5th ed. 1890, 3 vols.). The only collection which contains all creeds and confessions. The fifth edition is enlarged in vol. ii. by Encyclical letters of Leo XIII. of 1885 and 1888 on Church and State; in vol. iii., by the Congregational Creed of 1883. The first volume contains a history of the creeds; the second, the Greek and Roman Catholic creeds in Greek, Latin and English; the third, the Protestant creeds down to 1883, in the original, with translations.

The PRIMITIVE CATHOLIC symbols by H. A. HAHN: Bibliothek der Symbole und Glaubensregeln der apostolisch-katholischen Kirche (Breslau, 1842; 2d ed. by G. L. Hahn, 1877).

The Confessions of the GREEK Church are collected by KIMMEL and WEISSENBORN: Monumenta Fidei Ecclesie Orientalis (Jen. 1843-50, 2 vols.).

The ROMAN CATHOLIC Confessions by DENZIGER: Enchiridion symbolorum et definitionum, etc. (Würzburg, 1856; 6th ed. by Ign. Stahl, 1888).

The LUTHERAN Confessions, which as a collection are called Liber Concordiæ, Book of Concord, have been edited in Latin by RECHBERG, HASE, *MÜLLER (Latin and German, 6th ed. 1886), and in English by HENRY E. JACOBS (Philadelphia, 1882 and 1883, 2 vols.).

The Confessions of the REFORMED Church in Latin by AUGUSTI (1828), NIEMEYER (1840), and in German by MESS (1828-46), BÖCKEL (1847), HEPPE (1860), and BODEMANN (1867).

CHAPTER CCXXXIII.

SYMBOLIC.

Symbolic, from σύμβολον (see notes in chapter cexxxi.) is a new name for an old thing, called Controversial or Polemic Theology, but is an enlargement and improvement on it. In German it might be called Confessionskunde. Robertson and Shedd use for it the term Symbolism; but this has no analogy in theological nomenclature, and would, etymologically, designate the system of symbols rather than the science of symbols.

The number and variety of creeds and confessions necessitates a special branch of theology called Symbolic or Comparative Dogmatic. It deals with the doctrinal differences of the Christian Churches as far as they are publicly expressed and acknowledged in their doctrinal standards.

Symbolic lies on the boundary line between the History of Dogma and Dogmatic Theology. It agrees with both in the contents, but it differs from the former as the result differs from the process, and from the latter as comparative philology differs from philology. It represents the creeds not in their gradual historic growth, but as living and completed systems of faith. It covers not the whole field of Dogmatic, but only the controverted articles, and discusses them more fully.

Symbolic in its fullest extent implies a historical, polemical and irenic element. Some writers, however, exclude the second and third elements, and make it purely historical.*

CHAPTER CCXXXIV.

HISTORICAL SYMBOLIC.

Historical Symbolic is an objective exposition of the various Christian creeds, either in chronological order, or according to their importance. It may cover the whole ground of dogmatic teaching, or omit the parts in which the Churches are agreed. In either case the method may be purely historical, or comparative.†

The information must always be drawn from the symbolical books; but standard writers may be used for explanation and illustration.

CHAPTER CCXXXV.

POLEMICAL SYMBOLIC.

Theologia Polemica, from πόλεμος, war, πολεμικός, warlike. Theologia Elenctica, from ἐλεγχος, proof, ἐλέγγω, to convict, to refute (Tit. 1:9, 13; 2:15). Synopsis Controversiarum (Calov). Streittheologie (Mosheim). Polemik (Schleiermacher and others).

Polemic, or controversial theology, in the wider sense, discusses the conflict of orthodoxy with the various forms of heresy as well as the differences between the orthodox creeds. In the narrower sense, it is confined to denominational controversies and is identical with Symbolic.

The polemical element consists in the argument for or against the doctrines in dispute. They must be subjected to the three-

* So Winer, Köllner, Baier, Kattenbusch.

† Winer follows the comparative method and exhibits the controverted doctrines in parallel columns representing as many churches and sects, for convenient use.

fold test of Scripture, tradition or church teaching, and reason; in other words, to an exegetical, historical, and dogmatic or philosophical examination.

The standpoint and the result vary according to the confessional conviction and aim of the writer. But justice and truth should be the supreme consideration.

CHAPTER CCXXXVI.

IRENIC.

From εἰρήνη, peace; εἰρηνικός, pacific. Theologica irenica, pacifica, or henotica (from ἑνωσις, ἑνωτικός). Irenicon or Henoticon is a formula of union, a device for securing peace. Irenic is the science of the harmony of confessions or the reunion of Christendom.

Controversy is or ought to be carried on for the triumph of truth. The end of war is peace. Paul, the most polemic of the apostles, always ready to fight for "sound doctrine," and "to convict the gainsayers" (Tit. 1:9), exhorts the Christians to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace"; adding, "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all" (Eph. 4:3-6).

Symbolic fulfills its highest mission in Irenic. We can hardly call Irenic a distinct and separate discipline, but an irenic spirit should pervade and direct Symbolic and Polemic. This is the spirit of Christian liberality and comprehension, in opposition to narrowness, bigotry, and exclusiveness. The irenic temper is free from malice and full of charity even to an enemy. It does not minimize or compromise the doctrinal differences, but it never loses sight of the points of contact and the underlying unity, and endeavors to promote a better understanding and ultimate reconciliation of the doctrinal antagonisms of the Church. This irenic spirit is of comparatively recent growth, but there have always been advocates of peace, even in the most polemic ages of the Church, as Melancthon, Baxter, Spener.

True catholicity and liberality are as far removed from indifferentism and latitudinarianism as from sectarian bigotry and exclusiveness. They are born of a larger Christian charity and a deeper insight into the vastness of the truth and the incapacity of any single mind or sect to comprehend it in all its various aspects. Those who are firmly rooted and grounded in the faith can best afford to be liberal toward those who honestly and earnestly differ. The higher the position, the broader the horizon of vision. Our theology should be as broad and comprehensive as God's truth and God's love, and as narrow and strict as God's justice. Denominational Christianity should be subservient to catholic Christianity. Loyalty toward a particular church is perfectly compatible with a catholic spirit of respect and love for all other branches of the same kingdom of our common Lord and Saviour. The one eternal truth of God reflects itself in each human mind in a peculiar form. The Holy Spirit speaks in ten thousand tongues.

Between truth and error, indeed, there can be no compromise, as little as between holiness and sin, God and Belial, Christ and Antichrist. As far as two parties teach contradictory doctrines, either one or both must be wrong; both cannot be right. But there are doctrinal differences which are simply opposite, not contradictory, and which on closer inspection appear to be only different aspects of one and the same truth. In such cases both parties may be right so far as they go in their positive statement, and wrong only so far as they exclude and deny the other side of the truth.

Of such character are the historical discrepancies among the Evangelists, and even the doctrinal differences among the apostles, e.g., Paul and James in the article on justification by faith or works. There are undoubtedly various types of apostolic theology represented by James, Peter, Paul and John, and we behold in them the manifold wisdom of God, the depth and height and breadth of Christian truth, its variety, fullness, universality and adaptability to all classes of mind and spheres of labor.

So we must to a large extent admit the historical necessity and usefulness of doctrinal as well as disciplinary and ritual distinctions in Christendom. We should cheerfully recognize all that is good, beautiful and useful in them. We should bless all whom God blesses and wish them success, no matter to what branch of his kingdom they belong. Protestants should thank God for the progress of Catholicism, and Catholics for the progress of Protestantism, as a progress of Christianity. If only Christ is proclaimed and souls are converted, "I rejoice," says

Paul, "yea, and I will rejoice" (Phil. 1: 18). Such a spirit must be educated and disciplined; for human nature is selfish and contracted, and inclined to bigotry and exclusiveness rather than to catholicity and charity.

It is the noblest mission of Symbolic to promote Christian union and harmony, not by ignoring or underrating the doctrinal differences, but by tracing them to their roots, showing their connections, pointing out the errors and defects, and opening new avenues for broader and higher conceptions. We can, of course, not attain to perfect knowledge in this world. Now we know the truth in fragments; in the other world we shall know it in its fullness and harmony.

In this way Symbolic and Polemic become Irenic. Honest and earnest controversy is the road to an honorable and lasting peace between the contending Churches of Christendom. All the discords of human creeds will be solved at last in the concord of divine truth.

NOTES.

I. The famous motto of Irenic: "In necessariis unitas, in dubiis libertas, in omnibus caritas." Not from St. Augustin in the fifth century, but from irenic divines of the polemic seventeenth century, Rupertus Meldenius in Germany (1627), and Richard Baxter of England (1679). For the origin and meaning of this sentence, see Schaff, Church History, vol. vi., pp. 650-653.

"Christianus sum: Christiani nihil a me alienum puto." A Christian application of the sentence of Terence: "Humo sum: humani nihil a me alienum puto." Christianity is the perfection of humanity.

II. Christian union and Christian freedom are inseparable. Compulsory union can only end in greater separation.

III. Christian union exists and has always existed as a spirit and principle, but is struggling for fuller manifestation, especially since the middle of the nineteenth century, in English-speaking Christendom, where the divisions are most numerous. Christian believers are one in Christ, and members of his mystical body. The nearer they approach to Christ in acts of worship and charity, the nearer they come to each other and forget their differences.

IV. Various kinds of union: voluntary, federal, organic.

1. Voluntary union and co-operation of individual Christians of different denominations without representative character or legislative power:

The Evangelical Alliance, a voluntary society of evangelical Christians of different denominations and countries, founded in London, 1846, for the promotion of Christian union and the defense of religious liberty. General Conferences held in London, 1851; Paris, 1855; Berlin, 1857; Geneva, 1861; Amsterdam, 1867; New York, 1873 (the largest and most successful of all); Basel, 1879; Copenhagen, 1884; Florence, 1891; Chicago, 1893.

The German Church Diet (Kirchentag), founded in 1848, confined to German Christians of the Lutheran, Reformed, Evangelical United, and Moravian Churches.

Bible Societies; Tract Societies; Sunday-school Unions; Young Men's Christian Associations; Christian Endeavor Societies.

2. Confederation of Churches, resembling the United States and the German Empire, but without a central government and without legislative power:

The Greek and Latin Churches before the great schism in the ninth century.

The Pan-Reformed or Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, organized in London, July, 1875, embracing most of the Reformed Churches of both hemispheres and meeting from time to time in common council for co-operation, especially in mission fields and for the support of weak churches. The first council was held in Edinburgh, 1877; the second in Philadelphia, 1880; the third in Belfast, 1884; the fourth in London, 1888; the fifth in Toronto, Canada, 1892; the sixth will be held in Glasgow, 1896.

The Pan-Anglican Council, composed of bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Churches of Great Britain, the British colonies, and the United States, convened at Lambeth Palace, London, 1866, 1868, and 1888.

The Pan-Methodist Conference, held first in London, 1881, and the second in Washington, 1892.

The Old Catholic Union Conferences, held at Bonn, 1874 and 1875, under the lead of Dr. Döllinger, aimed at a confederation and intercommunion of the Old Catholic, the orthodox Oriental, and the Anglican Churches, on the basis of the œcumenical consensus of the ancient Græco-Latin Churches and the episcopal succession. They agreed on a consensus creed, but it has not received official recognition. (See Schaff, Creeeds, vol. ii., pp. 545 sqq.)

3. Organic or corporate union under one government:

The Evangelical Union of the Lutheran and German Reformed Churches in Prussia and other German States, founded after the tercentennial of the German Reformation in 1817. (See NITZSCH: Urkundenbuch der Evangelischen Union, Bonn, 1853.)

The Reunion of the Old and New School Presbyterian Churches in the United States under one General Assembly, completed at Pittsburg, November, 1869. (See Presbyterian Reunion, New York, 1870.)

The Pan-Anglican Council of the Church of England (at the suggestion of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, convened, at Chicago, 1886) issued from Lambeth Palace, 1888, a liberal basis for an organic union of English-speaking, evangelical Churches, consisting of four articles: the Holy Scriptures, the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed, the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's Supper, and the "historic episcopate." The proposal has not as yet led to practical results. (See RANDALL T. DAVIDSON: The Lambeth Conferences of 1867, 1878, and 1888; London, 1889, pp. 280 sq.)

Organic union must embrace ultimately all Christendom, Greek, Roman, and Evangelical, under one head, Jesus Christ. It will not destroy, but preserve, the distinctive individualities of denominations as far as they are rooted in God's peculiar gifts, in different mental constitutions, and special missions. Unity is not uniformity, but implies the beauty of variety, like all the works of God. The labors of history cannot be in vain. The wood, hay and stubble of man's invention will be burned, but the gold, silver and costly stones will be preserved, and each builder on the foundation of Christ will receive a reward. An act of humiliation in which all Churches will confess their sins against God and against each other, and give all glory to Christ, will precede the feast of reconciliation. That union may not be realized before the glorious advent of Christ at the end of the present order of things; but it will surely come in a form much better than we can dream of; and it is the duty and privilege of all Christians to pray and labor for it.

CHAPTER CCXXXVII.

METHOD AND ARRANGEMENT.

The topical order adjusts the material of Symbolic to the dogmatic system, beginning with God and the creation and ending with the resurrection and life everlasting, and states under each topic the views of all the Churches. This is the method of Winer, who arranges the whole under twenty-one heads.

The historical order presents the doctrinal controversies as they appear in successive ages.

Both methods have their advantages. I would propose the following arrangement:

I. The Creeds of Christendom, that is, a brief account of the symbolical books or doctrinal standards of the different Churches (Confessionskunde).

II. The controversies between the Greek and Roman Churches. The procession of the Spirit; the supremacy of the pope.

III. Romanism and Protestantism. The rule of faith; the primitive state; the fall and its effects; justification; the Church and the sacraments; the papacy; purgatory; the worship of Mary and the saints, etc.

IV. Protestant controversies.

1. Lutheranism and Reform.
2. Calvinism and Arminianism (Methodism).
3. The Baptist controversy.
4. The Socinian and Unitarian controversy.
5. The Quakers.
6. Swedenborgianism.
7. Universalism.

CHAPTER CCXXXVIII.

HISTORY OF SYMBOLIC.

Symbolic was first treated in an exclusively controversial and sectarian spirit down to the middle of the eighteenth century. Then followed a period of confessional indifferentism, which ignored or underrated doctrinal distinctions. In the nineteenth century Symbolic was revived and raised to the dignity of a theological science, partly in a purely historical interest, partly in the interest of confessionalism.

I. The oldest dogmatic works of Irenæus, Hippolytus, Tertullian, and of the Nicene and post-Nicene Fathers are directed against heresies, and are purely polemical.

Augustin (d. 430) made an approach to Symbolic in his treatise De Fide et Symbolo (393); but it is simply an exposition of the Catholic faith for popular instruction.

II. The antagonism of the creeds of rival Churches began in the ninth century with the Greek schism, which is not healed to this day. The two main points of difference between the Greek and Latin Churches are the eternal procession of the Holy Spirit from the Father and the Son, and the supremacy of the pope. The chief champion of the Greek dogma was Photius, patriarch of Constantinople (d. 891); his great opponent was Pope Nicholas I. (d. 867).

The controversy was carried on with great bitterness for centuries, and was occasionally interrupted by unsuccessful efforts for union.

III. The Reformation of the sixteenth century introduced the more comprehensive controversy between Romanism and Protestantism, which lasts to this day. Cardinal Robert Bellarmine (1542-1621), a Jesuit professor of controversial theology in the Collegium Romanum, was by far the most learned opponent of Protestantism. His Disputationes de controversiis Christianæ fidei adv. hujus temporis hæreticos (Rome, 1587-90, 3 vols., and often reprinted, e.g. Rome, 1832-40, 4 vols. 4to) furnished a rich arsenal for Roman Catholic polemics. Against him wrote Martin Chemnitz: Examen Concilii Tridentini (1565-73, 3 vols. fol., several edd.; abridged German translation by Bendixen, Leipzig, 1885).

IV. The Reformation gave rise to a number of Protestant denominations with special creeds and confessions, which largely increased the material of Symbolic. The war between these rival Churches and sects—the Lutherans and Calvinists, the Calvinists and Arminians, the Baptists and Pedobaptists, etc.—was conducted almost with the same bigotry and bitterness as that between Romanists and Protestants. The rabies theologorum, from which Melancthon prayed to be delivered, reached its height in the seventeenth century before, during, and after the Thirty Years' War. A Lutheran wrote a book to prove that "the damned Calvinistic heretics" hold six hundred and sixty-six theses (the apocalyptic number) in common with the Turks! When Calixtus of Helmstädt (1586–1656), a learned Lutheran of the Melancthonian spirit, raised his voice in favor of moderation and peace, he was fiercely attacked from all sides as a Crypto-papist, Crypto-Calvinist, and dangerous syncretist.

The reaction of Rationalism went to the opposite extreme of disregarding all creeds.

V. The modern works on Symbolic were written by Planck, Marheineke, Winer, Neander, Köllner, Oehler, Hase, Kattenbusch and other scholars in a scientific and moderate spirit, and with better historical knowledge and appreciation of the different creeds. The Roman controversy was revived by Möhler and stimulated by the aggressive movements of ultramontaniam. The antagonism between Lutheranism and Calvinism has been superseded by the tendency toward union and co-operation among evangelical Churches.

VI. In England, and especially in North America, where all denominations of Christendom meet in daily intercourse, the study of Symbolic and Irenic is more needed and more important than in any other country, and requires a considerable extension of the field and a modification of terminology. Though strangely neglected heretofore, it will no doubt be duly cultivated and incorporated in the regular course of instruction in our theological seminaries. English and American literature abounds in popular books and pamphlets on the Roman, the Arminian, the Baptist, the Unitarian, and minor doctrinal controversies, but has as yet not produced a single original scientific work on Symbolic. Two German works, by Möhler and Winer, have been translated.

CHAPTER CCXXXIX.

SYMBOLICAL LITERATURE.

PHIL. K. MARHEINEKE (1780-1846): Christl. Symbolik oder histor.-kritische und dogmatisch-comparative Darstellung des kathol., luther., reform. und socinianischen Lehrbegriffs (Heidelberg, 1810-13, 3 vols.; 1st Part, Katholicismus).—Institutiones symbolice doctrinarum Catholicorum, Protestantium, Socinianorum, ecclesie Græcæ minorumque societ. christ. summan et discrimina exhibentes (Berol. 1812; 3d ed. 1830).

* G. B. WINEY (Lutheran, 1789-1858): Comparative Darstellung des Lehrbegriffs der verschied. christl. Kirchenparteien, nebst vollständ. Belegen aus den symbol. Schriften derselben (Leipzig, 1824, 4to; 4th ed. by P. Ewald, Leipzig, 1882; English translation by W. B. Pope: A Comparative View of the Doctrines and Confessions of the various Communities of Christendom, Edinb., 1873). A very useful and impartial book.

* J. A. MÖHLER (R. Cath., 1796-1838): Symbolik oder Darstellung der dogm. Gegensätze der Katholiken und Protestanten, nach ihren öffentl. Bekenntnisschriften (Mainz, 1832; 10th ed. 1889, with supplements by Kihn and Raich; English translation by J. R. Robertson, under the misleading title Symbolism, London, 1843, 2 vols.). This masterly defense of Romanism created a great sensation in Germany, and called forth several able replies, especially from his colleague, F. C. BAUR, Gegensatz des Protestantismus und Catholicismus (Tübingen, 1834; revised and enlarged, 1836), from C. IM. NITZSCH, Protestantische Beantwortung der Symbolik Möhler's (Hamburg, 1835), and MARHEINEKE (Berlin, 1833). Möhler replied to Baur (1834), and Baur replied to Möhler (1834) with equal learning and ability. It was a battle of giants. Möhler was a devout and orthodox Catholic, but not an ultramontanist and infallibilist; Baur, a liberal Protestant, and founder of the Tübingen school of critics.

* ED. KÖLLNER (Lutheran): Symbolik aller christl. Confessionen (Hamburg, 1837-44, 2 vols.). The Roman and the Lutheran systems. Purely historical, and full of accurate information, but unfinished.

H. C. F. GUERICKE: Allgemeine christl. Symbolik, vom luth.-kirchl. Standpunkte (Leipzig, 1839; 3d ed. 1860 sq.). High-church Lutheran.

B. J. HILGERS (Roman Catholic): Symbolische Theologie (Bonn, 1841).

H. W. I. THIERSCH (Irvingite): Vorlesungen über Catholicismus und Protestantismus (Erlangen, 1845, 2 Parts; 2d ed. 1848). Irenical.

A. H. BAIER: Symbolik der christl. Confessionen und Religionspartheien. First vol., Symbolik der röm.-kath. Kirche (Greifswald, 1853 sq., 2 Parts).

F. R. MATTHES: Comparative Symbolik aller christl. Confessionen vom Standpunkt der evang.-luth. Confession (Leipzig, 1854).

RUD. HOFMANN: Symbolik oder systemat. Darstellung des symbol. Lehrbegriffs der verschied. christl. Kirchen und namhaften Secten (Leipzig, 1857).

* A. NEANDER: Katholicismus und Protestantismus, herausgeg. von H. Messner (Berlin, 1863). Posthumous.

F. W. BODEMANN: Vergleichende Darstellung der Unterscheidungslehren der vier christl. Hauptconfessionen (Göttingen, 1842; 2d ed. 1869).

KARL GRAUL (d. 1864): Die Unterscheidungslehren der verschiedenen christl. Bekenntnisse im Lichte des göttlichen Wortes (Leipzig, 1845; 9th ed. by Theod. Harnack, 1872).

* G. F. OEHLER (Evang.): Lehrbuch der Symbolik, herausg. von J. Delitzsch (Tübingen, 1876; 2d ed. by Theod. Hermann, Stuttgart, 1891).

G. PLITT: Grundriss der Symbolik (Erlangen, 1875; 2d ed. by Wiegand, 1888).

K. H. GEZ. VON SCHÉELE (Lutheran Bishop of Gotland): Teologisk Symbolik (Upsala, 1877, 2 vols.; German translation, with introduction, by O. Zöckler, Leipzig, 1881, 3 Parts). Schéele wrote also the Symbolik for Zöckler's Handbuch der theol. Wissenschaften (1883). He visited America in 1893 as delegate from Sweden to celebrate the third centenary of the Swedish Reformation in Minneapolis.

F. A. PHILIPPI (Lutheran): Symbolik. Akad. Vorlesungen, herausg. von F. Philippi (Gütersloh, 1883). Posthumous.

* K. HASE: Handbuch der protestantischen Polemik gegen die römisch-katholische Kirche (Leipzig, 1862; 5th ed. 1890).

P. TSCHACKERT: Evang. Polemik gegen die röm. Kirche (Gotha, 1885).

HEM. SCHMIDT: Handbuch der Symbolik (Berlin, 1890).

* FERD. KATTENBUSCH: Lehrbuch der vergleichenden Confessionskunde (Freiburg i. B., 1892 sq.; vol. i., the Greek Church; vols. ii. and iii. will be devoted to the Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches). He extends the limits of Symbolic and includes worship, discipline and statistic.

M. SCHNECKENBURGER (Professor in Bern; d. 1848): Vergleichende Darstellung des luther. und reformirten Lehrbegriffs (ed. by Güder, Stuttgart, 1855). This is confined to the differences between the Lutheran and Reformed Churches, but is remarkably acute and discriminating. The lectures of the same author on the doctrinal systems of the smaller Protestant Church parties, edited by Hundeshagen (Frankfurt, 1863) are less important.

I. E. ΜΕΣΟΛΩΠΑΣ: Συμβολικὴ τῆς ὀρθοδόξου ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας. Τὰ συμβολικὰ βιβλία, τόμος Α'. (Ἐν Ἀθήναις, 1883, 494 pp.).

IRENICAL LITERATURE.

JUL. MÜLLER: Die Evangelische Union; ihr Wesen und ihr göttliches Recht (Berlin, 1854).

H. G. HASSE: Grundlinien christl. Irenik (Leipzig, 1882).

J. DÖLLINGER (d. 1891): Kirche und Kirchen (München, 1861).—Die Wiedervereinigung der christlichen Kirchen (The Reunion of the Christian Churches).—Seven lectures delivered in Munich, 1872, after his excommunication from Rome, published in German, 1888, and previously translated from MS. into English by Oxenham (1872), and into French by Mrs. Loyson.

P. SCHAFF: The Discord and Concord of Christendom, or Denominational Variety and Christian Unity. An address delivered before the eighth General Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Copenhagen, 1884, reprinted in his Christ and Christianity, pp. 293 sqq.—The Reunion of Christendom. An address prepared for the Parliament of Religions in Chicago, September, 1893.

W. R. HUNTINGTON (Episcopalian): The Peace of the Church (New York, 1891).

FIFTH SECTION: ETHIC AND STATISTIC.

CHAPTER CCXL.

CHRISTIAN ETHIC.

Ethic, ἠθική (sc., τέχνη, ἐπιστήμη, or φιλοσοφία), and Ethics, τὰ ἠθικά, are from ἔθος or ἦθος, custom, habit, usage, disposition, character. Aristotle, the founder of moral science (in his ἠθικὰ Νικομάχεια), gives this derivation, for the reason that virtue or moral habit is formed by repeated acts. Habit becomes a second nature. But he subordinates Ethic to Politic, and finds the realization of the moral ideal in the state.

Morals is from mos, mores.

Theologia Moralis.—Ethica Christiana.—Moral Theology, or Moraltheologie (Kihn and other Roman Catholic moralists).—Christliche Moral (Marheineke and Daub).—Christliche Sittenlehre (De Wette, Schmid, and Dörner).—Theologische Ethik (Rothe).—Christliche Ethik (Neander, Harless, and Martensen).—Christian Ethics (Newman Smyth).

Christian Ethic or Moral Theology is the science of Christian life. It is related to Dogmatic as works (ἔργα, ἀγάπη, agenda) are related to faith (πίστις, credenda), or as practice is to theory, or as morality is to religion.

It is usually divided into a general and a special part. The first discusses the fundamental principles on which morality rests: the moral character of God; the moral government of the world; the natural and revealed law of God; the moral constitution of man; the conscience; the freedom of the will; sin and evil; ability and inability; regeneration; and Christian life. The special part is subdivided into three sections: the doctrine of the highest good—the kingdom of God; the doctrine of duty—to God, to our neighbor, and to ourselves; the doctrine of virtue, which culminates in Christlike holiness or complete conformity to the will of God.

Several of these topics are treated also in Dogmatic, but under different aspects. Christ is viewed in Dogmatic as the God-man and Redeemer from sin; in Ethic, as model and exemplar to follow. The kingdom of God appears in the former as an established institution, in the latter as an ideal to be actualized. Sanctification is, dogmatically, the fruit of the grace of God, who "works in us both to will and to work"; ethically, it is the duty of man, who must "work out his own salvation with fear and trembling" (Phil. 2: 13).

Definitions of Ethic.—Schleiermacher: The representation of the communion of the redeemed man with God through Christ, or of that mode of life which arises from the dominion of the Christian self-consciousness. Neander: Christian Ethic is the science which deduces from Christianity the laws of human action. C. F. Schmid: The part of systematic theology which has for its object the Christian life. Wuttke: The science of Christian morals. Harless: The theory of the normal Christian life. Martensen: The science of moral life determined by Christianity. Rothe: The science of the moral (die theologische Wissenschaft von dem Moralischen). He regards it as a branch of speculative theology. Kihn (R. Cath.): The scientific representation of those revealed truths which are the rules of our will and action. Sidgwick: The study of what ought to be. Martineau: The doctrine of human character. Newman Smyth: The science of living according to Christianity.

CHAPTER CCXLI.

ETHIC AND DOGMATIC.

Ethic has its roots in Dogmatic. Piety is the mother of virtue; love to God begets love to man. The first table of the Decalogue treats of duties to God; the second of duties to our neighbor; and the tenth commandment, in forbidding evil desire, points back to the secret springs of the heart, out of which are the issues of life. James says, "Faith without works is dead;" Paul says, "Works without faith are dead;" both demand a living faith in living works. "Faith working through love" (Gal. 5: 6) is the irenicon between the apostle of faith and the apostle of works. In catechetical instruction, Dogmatic is usually taught on the basis of the Apostles' Creed; Ethic, on the basis of the Decalogue.

Before the seventeenth century, Ethic was treated as an integral part of Dogmatic, either under a separate section on law and an exposition of the Decalogue,* or in connection with regeneration and the new life in Christ.* But the dignity and importance of morality require a separate treatment, which is now almost generally adopted. It was first introduced in the Reformed Church by Lambert Daneau (Danæus, 1530-95), a learned professor at Geneva and afterwards at Leyden, and a voluminous writer.† It was followed by Moses Amyraut of the school of Saumur, ‡ and, in the Lutheran Church, by G. Calixtus (1586-1656). §

* So Thomas Aquinas and the scholastics who overrated Dogmatic and underrated Ethic. Among Protestant divines Charles Hodge (Syst. Theol., vol. iii., chap. xix., pp. 259 sqq.) follows this inadequate method.

CHAPTER CCXLII.

PHILOSOPHICAL AND CHRISTIAN ETHIC.

Ethic may be treated philosophically or theologically. Philosophical Ethic, or Moral Philosophy, is based upon the conscience or the inborn moral sense; Theological or Christian Ethic, upon the revealed will of God and the example of Christ. The former follows the unwritten law of nature and the light of reason; the latter, the law of Moses and the gospel of Christ. The one sees the highest good in the state, the other in the kingdom of God.

The relation of the two is the same as the general relation of philosophy and theology, reason and faith, natural virtue and supernatural grace. It is a relation of friendly independence. They often come into collision, but this is due to the imperfection of human knowledge. Each has its own mission. Starting from different premises and pursuing different methods, they yet mutually illustrate and strengthen each other, and arrive at the same end. The God of nature and of grace, of reason and of revelation, is one and the same. "The moral law within us," which filled the philosopher Kant with ever-growing reverence and awe, even more than "the starry heavens above us," points prophetically to the gospel, and finds its own subjective ideal (moral perfection, that is, conformity to the will of God) fully realized in the moral perfection of Christ. And the ideal state

* So Calvin, Inst., bk. ii., ch. 8. (legis moralis explicatio); bk. iii., chs. 6-8 (de vita hominis Christiani, etc.).

† In his Ethices Christianæ libri tres (Geneva, 1577, and often). He tried to reconcile the Calvinistic doctrine of absolute predestination with severe morality. See a list of his works in La France Protestante, vol. v., pp. 62-91 (2d ed.).

‡ In his Morale chrétienne, 6 vols. (1652-60).

§ In his Eptome Theologie Moralís (Helmstädt, 1634, 1662).

of the philosopher coincides with the ideal Church of the theologian, that is, in the kingdom of God.

CHAPTER CCXLIII.

PAGAN AND CHRISTIAN MORALITY.

ED. ZELLER (Hegelian, afterwards eclectic): Grundriss der Geschichte der griechischen Philosophie (3d ed. 1889; trsl. by S. F. Alleyne and E. Abbot, Outlines of Greek Phil., London, 1886). His larger work: Die Philosophie der Griechen (4th ed. 1876-88, 5 vols.).—WUTTKE: Handbuch der christlichen Sittenlehre, vol. i., pp. 18-94 (Leipzig, 3d ed. 1874).—THEOBALD ZIEGLER: Die Ethik der Griechen und Römer (Bonn, 1881).—LUTHARDT: Die antike Ethik (Leipzig, 1887).—HENRY SIDGWICK: History of Ethics (3d ed. London, 1892).—Comp. SCHAFF'S Church History, vol. ii., pp. 311-421 (5th ed. 1889).

Moral science, like all sciences and arts, was born in Greece, as Christianity was born in Palestine. Plato, in his Dialogues, represents Socrates as an ideal sage and moral hero in contrast with the sophists of his time. He almost prophesied the suffering Christ when he described the righteous man as one who without doing any injustice, yet suffers the greatest injustice, and proves his own justice by perseverance against all calumny unto death; adding that, if such a righteous man should ever appear on earth, "he would be scourged, tortured, bound, deprived of his sight, and, after having suffered all possible injury, be nailed to a post." Aristotle, who was less poetical and idealistic, but more sober and realistic, than Plato, came very near the Christian standpoint when he said: "It is the divine principle in us (τὸ ἐν ἡμῖν Θεῖον) which in some way sets everything in motion. Reason has its origin in something better than itself. What is there, then, which you may call better than rational cognition except God (Θεός)?" His definition of virtue as a happy medium between extremes or avoidance of contrasted errors,* as also his fourfold division of virtue,† have been accepted by the Fathers, but supplemented by the Christian graces of faith, hope and charity.

No wonder that the two greatest thinkers of the ancient world have exercised such a commanding influence on Christian theology, and were regarded as the intellectual forerunners of Christ.

* Μεσότης ἡ ἀρετή, ὑπερβολὴ κακία. Μηδὲν ἄγαν. Ne quid nimis.

† Σοφία, ἀνδρία, σωφροσύνη, δικαιοσύνη.

Nevertheless, there is a fundamental difference between heathen and Christian Ethic. Pagan morality is based upon selfishness and pride; Christian morality, upon love and humility. Love, the gift of gifts, the fulfilling of the law, the bond of perfectness, is not one of the four cardinal virtues of Greek philosophy—wisdom, manliness (or fortitude), temperance (or self-restraint), and justice. The last comes nearest to it, as the virtue which harmonizes the other three, gives to every one his due, even to an enemy, and includes piety to the gods (δσιότης), gratitude to benefactors, and mercy to the helpless. But how far is this from the incomparable description of love by Paul (1 Cor. 13)! Humility, the crown of saintly character, denotes in classical Greek a servile, mean, abject spirit. Chastity, which lies at the base of personal purity and of family life, was unknown among the heathen, and the commendation of sensual love in its unnatural forms is a dark spot in Greek poetry and philosophy. Greek philosophy sees the greatest evil in guilt; Christianity, in sin. The former has no conception of sin, and therefore no conception of grace, which is the basis of higher morality.

Stoicism is the best type of Roman virtue, as Platonism is the highest form of Greek philosophy. Seneca, in his moral maxims, almost echoes Paul, though, in practice, he contradicted them, anticipating Francis Bacon, "the wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind." Epictetus, the slave, and Marcus Aurelius, the philosopher on the throne, representing the extremes of society, are the saints of classical paganism, and resemble Christian saints as the shadow resembles the substance. They shine like lone stars in the midnight darkness of prevailing corruption. We must admire their purity and superiority over the animal passions, their self-control, their disregard of pain, and their passive resignation to inevitable fate. But the stoic virtue of apathy which consigns wife and children to the grave without a tear, and hopelessly resorts to suicide when the house begins to smoke, is unnatural, and contrasts most unfavorably with the cheerful and hopeful submission of the Christian to the will of his heavenly Father, who doeth all things well. We are not to kill, but only to moderate and to purify the feelings of joy and sorrow, of pleasure and pain. We may rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep. Our Saviour was in sympathy with all the sufferings of humanity: he shed tears of friendship at the grave of Lazarus, tears of sorrow over unbelieving Jerusalem, tears of agony in Gethsemane, and under the weight of a world of sin and guilt he cried on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Yet in all this he submitted his own will to the will of his heavenly Father, and having drunk the cup of suffering to its dregs, he commended his soul to him, with the shout of triumph, "It is finished!" He was most human, and yet most divine.

Christ presents the first and highest example of the purest teaching and the holiest life in perfect harmony. His advent was a new moral creation. The extent and depth of his influence upon all future ages is beyond calculation. "The simple record of his three short years of active life," says a liberal historian, "has done more to regenerate and soften mankind than all the disquisitions of philosophers and all the exhortations of moralists."*

From this pure fountain, the Christian Church in all its branches is continually drawing its highest inspirations and recuperative energies. By the influence of the teaching and example of the ever-present Christ we see, in unbroken succession, from age to age, sinners converted into saints, and savages into civilized beings, women emancipated from degrading slavery, and children from the tyrannical authority of parents, happy homes created, society regenerated, cruel laws and customs abolished, legislation reformed by the spirit of justice and humanity, the lower and unfortunate classes elevated, institutions of charity and philanthropy founded, missionaries going to the ends of the earth to dispel heathen darkness with the light of the gospel, and steady progress making to transform this sinful world into a kingdom of righteousness and peace.

CHAPTER CCXLIV.

ASCETIC AND EVANGELICAL MORALITY.

The difference of creeds is reflected in the sphere of Ethic. We must distinguish two main types of Christian morality: ascetic and evangelical. The former is represented by the

* Leeke, History of European Morals, vol. ii., p. 10.

Catholic Church, both Greek and Roman; the latter by the Protestant Churches. The one predominated in the Middle Ages, the other in modern times.

The Græco-Roman theory makes a distinction between a common morality for all, which consists in keeping the Ten Commandments, and an uncommon morality for a spiritual aristocracy or nobility of monks and priests, which in addition obeys "the evangelical counsels," so called, of voluntary poverty, voluntary celibacy, and absolute obedience. The Protestant theory enjoins the same obligations upon all, and teaches the right use of property and marriage rather than poverty and celibacy, temperance rather than abstinence. The Catholic finds the moral ideal in the ascetic and monastic life, which tends to raise exceptional saints, but to lower the morals of the people. The Protestant seeks the moral ideal in the faithful performance of the social duties in the family, the state, and the church. Flight from the world is the perfection of Catholic piety and virtue; transformation of the world which God has made is the perfection of Protestant piety and virtue.

Asceticism is found in all religions, but reached its noblest form in the Christian Church. It appeared first within the congregation; then in the isolation of hermit life; and last in the convent, as a pure church of the elect, outside of the mixed Church of the world.*

Monasticism was a wholesome reaction against the corruptions of heathenism and against the worldliness which crept into the Church after Constantine. It became a powerful missionary agency in christianizing and civilizing the barbarians of Europe.

The saints of the Greek and Roman Church are monks and nuns and priests who led a life of ascetic self-denial and consecration, and performed miracles in their lives, or by the touch of their dead bones. The Acta Sanctorum record their extraordinary deeds. Laymen, and fathers and mothers of children, are not found in the Roman calendar.

Protestantism has few exceptional ascetic saints, but it has created the pastoral family and raised the standard of general morality for laymen as well as clergymen.

The results of the two systems are apparent when we com-

* On the development of asceticism and monasticism, see Schaff's Church History, vol. iii., pp. 147 sqq.

pare the intellectual and moral condition of Roman Catholic with that of Protestant countries and nations: Italy with Scandinavia, Spain with England and Scotland, Austria with Prussia, Belgium with Holland, the Roman Catholic cantons with the Protestant cantons in Switzerland, southern with northern Ireland, French Canada with English Canada, Mexico or Brazil with the United States.

This fundamental difference affects also the standard of the common morality. Romanists emphasize meritorious works and measure their value by quantity rather than by quality. Protestants lay stress on the spirit and motive of works and measure their value by quality rather than by quantity. The former, following the Epistle of James, make works as well as faith a condition of justification; the latter, with Paul, demand works as fruits of faith and evidence of justification. The Catholic is legalistic, can never do enough, and seldom attains to a serene assurance of faith and peace of conscience; the Protestant relies on the full satisfaction of Christ, disclaims any merit of his own, moves in the sphere of Christian liberty and cheerful gratitude. The one is governed by absolute obedience to the Church, and by self-imposed mortifications; the other by conformity to the law and example of Christ as an all-sufficient, living and ever-present Saviour, with whom it is the privilege of every believer to commune directly without human mediators.

CHAPTER CCXLV.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN ETHIC.—THE PATRISTIC PERIOD.

NEANDER: Geschichte der christlichen Ethik (posthumous, 1864).—WUTTKE: Christliche Sittenlehre, vol. i., pp. 108–242 (3d ed.).—H. J. BESTMANN: Geschichte der christlichen Sitte (Theil I.: Die sittl. Stadien, Nördl. 1880; Theil II.: Die kathol. Sitte; 1 Lief.: Die judenchristl. Sitte, 1882).—W. GASS: Geschichte der christlichen Ethik (Berlin, 1881–87, 2 vols.).—TH. ZIEGLER: Geschichte der Ethik (1881; Part II., Strasburg, 1892; also under the title, Geschichte der christlichen Ethik).—F. JODL: Geschichte der Ethik in der neueren Philosophie (Stuttgart, 1882).—CH. E. LUTHARDT: Geschichte der christlichen Ethik (Leipzig, vol. i., 1888, vol. ii., 1893).—W. E. H. LECKY: History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne (London and New York, 1869, 2 vols.).—SIDGWICK: Outlines of the History of Ethics (London, 3d ed., 1892).

The history of Christian Ethic runs parallel with the history of Christian life, but the practice preceded the theory, and the science of moral theology followed the science of dogmatic theology.

The Ante-Nicene Period.

Ancient Christianity in the Roman Empire presents a striking contrast to the moral corruption and putrefaction of the Roman Empire. The doctrines of a common creation, common redemption and common destination of man for immortality and glory gradually wrought a peaceful moral revolution in society. Christianity recognized the divine image in every man; raised the humble and lowly; enjoined love to God and man, even an enemy, as the supreme duty; made chastity a fundamental virtue; elevated woman to dignity and equality with man; upheld the sanctity and inviolability of the marriage tie, and thus laid the foundation for a well-regulated family life and a happy home, from which the state is built up. It moderated the evils and undermined the foundations of slavery; it emancipated children from the tyrannical control of parents; denounced the exposure of children as murder; made relentless war upon the bloody games of the arena and the shocking indecencies of the theater, upon cruelty and oppression; infused into a heartless and a loveless world the spirit of love and brotherhood, and into legislation the spirit of justice and humanity, and established the first institutions of benevolence and charity, which have since been multiplied from generation to generation.

The oldest Church manual, called The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, from the close of the apostolic age, begins with a Jewish-Christian catechism which is built upon the Sermon on the Mount, and presents the Christian life as the way of life, contrasted with the life of sin as the way of death. It rises far above the heathen moralists, and shows the predominant ethical character of early Christianity. It condenses man's duty into the sentence: "The Way of Life is this: first, Thou shalt love God who made thee; secondly, thy neighbor as thyself; and all things whatsoever thou wouldst not have done to thee, neither do thou to another." This is the negative form of the golden rule. The Gospels (Matt. 7: 12; Luke 6: 31) give the positive form, which is much stronger, since there is a great difference between doing no harm and doing good. The Didache directs that the Lord's Prayer be repeated thrice a day, lays much stress upon fasting, and seems to contain the germ of the ascetic doctrine of perfection or a higher morality when it says (ch. vi. 2), "If thou art able to bear the whole yoke of the Lord, thou shalt be perfect (comp. Matt. 19: 21); but if thou art not able (comp. Matt. 19: 11; 1 Cor. 7: 7), do what thou canst."

The anonymous Epistle to Diognetus, the Apologies of Justin Martyr, the practical treatises of Tertullian, the Epistles of Cyprian, give us a full view of the holy lives and heroic deaths of the Christians in times of persecution, but with a decided leaning to ascetic morality, which began to be organized in the beginning of the fourth century.

The Post-Nicene Period.

With the union of church and state in the fourth century, the world, by a wholesale water-baptism, rushed into the Church and swept into it all the vices of heathen Rome. In opposition to this mixed and worldly Christianity the monastic system was developed and spread with great rapidity. It was strongly favored by all the Greek and Latin Fathers, though not without protest. The patristic and mediæval Church is ascetic in theory and so far unprotestant.

Athanasius, "the father of orthodoxy," wrote the life of St. Anthony of Egypt, "the father of monks," and made monasticism known in the West. St. Chrysostom, the greatest preacher of the Greek Church, was himself a monk, and reluctantly left the solitude of his cell for the pulpit in Antioch and Constantinople.

Ambrose of Milan (d. 397), an ethical character, and, like Cyprian, a model bishop of the old Roman type, describes the moral duties of clergymen in his work De Officiis Ministrorum, which is a pendant to Cicero's well-known work of the same name. He makes piety the foundation of all virtues, and lays stress on the grace of humility, which was unknown to the ancients. He places the highest aim of man's life in likeness to God. He christianizes the principal or cardinal virtues, sapientia—in reference to God, justitia—towards our fellow-men, fortitudo—in the trials of life, temperantia—towards our own person. The Christian realizes the ancient ideal of a vir justus et sapiens. In special tracts on virgins and widows, and in his epistles, he glorifies virginity as the perfection of Christian virtue. He praises the virgins who committed suicide to save their chastity under persecution, as holy martyrs. He makes no allowance for a second marriage of widows. He opposes resistance to violence in self-defense, and is averse to war and the death penalty. He raised a righteous protest against the first bloody execution of heretics (the Priscillianists in Spain). He commends charity and almsgiving as the chief virtues and as a second baptism, which has the power of covering a multitude of sins, not only once, but as often as these virtues are exercised.

Jerome (d. 419), the mediator between the East and the West, the translator of the Latin Bible, the Catholic ideal of a learned monk, exerted an incalculable influence upon his and future generations, inferior only to that of his younger contemporary, Augustin. He far surpassed all the Fathers as an enthusiastic and eloquent advocate of ascetic piety. He commended it in his epistles and legendary biographies of the earliest monks, and defended it against the objections of Jovinian, Helvidius, and Vigilantius. He induced the descendants of the proud patrician families of Rome to turn their sumptuous villas into monastic retreats. He himself labored hard, though not quite successfully, to gain absolute control over the animal passions, and fought many a battle with the devil in the Syrian wilderness. He praises "the desert where the flowers of Christ are blooming, the solitude where the stones of the New Jerusalem are prepared, the retreat which rejoices in the friendship of God." He exalts celibacy far above marriage, whose chief use consists in giving birth to brides of Christ.* "Since I am about," he says in his work against Helvidius, "to draw a comparison between virginity and marriage, I beseech you, my readers, not to think that I have disparaged marriage in praising virginity or made any severance between the saints of the Old and New Testaments. . . . The former were under a dispensation suited to their days, but we under another upon whom the ends of the world are come. Whilst that law remained, 'Increase and multiply and replenish the earth' (Gen. 1: 28), and 'Cursed is the barren who does not bear children in Israel,' all married and were given in marriage, and, leaving father and mother, became one flesh. But when that voice sounded, 'The time is short,' it goes on, 'Let them that have wives be as though they had none' (1 Cor. 7: 29)." He then draws a vivid contrast between the distracting cares and trials of a married wife with the single devotion of a virgin to God; without considering that trials are a wholesome discipline for the development of Christian manhood and womanhood, and that celibacy also has its dangers and temptations. St. Anthony reminded the anchorites: "Woe to him that stands alone, for if he falls he has no one to raise him up." Jerome himself informs us how in the midst of his self-imposed ascetic mortifications his fancy tormented him with obscene images of Roman banquets and dances.

* "Laudo nuptias, laudo conjugium, sed quia mihi virgines generant."—Ep. xxii., 20.

On the supreme duty of truthfulness he shared the loose notions inherited from the Greek sophists. He explained away the collision between Paul and Peter at Antioch (Gal. 2: 11) as a mere stroke of pastoral policy, or an accommodation of both apostles to the weakness of the Jewish Christians, at the expense of truth—an interpretation against which Augustin rightly protested. In his controversial writings Jerome shows such vanity, intolerance and bitterness of temper that we are alternately attracted and repelled, and vacillating between admiration for his greatness and pity for his weakness.*

Augustin (d. 430) passed through the deepest experience of sin and grace, and left us in his Confessions an abiding monument of a holy life. He wrote valuable treatises on several moral topics, and a book, De Moribus Ecclesie Catholicae. In these and in his life-work, De Civitate Dei, which was written in view of the approaching collapse of the Roman Empire, he scattered moral ideas which exerted almost as much influence as his dogmatic views. His pessimistic anthropology depreciated the value of the natural virtues, which, however praiseworthy and useful in civil life, he regards rather as vices, because they are inflated with pride.* He appeals to Rom. 14: 23: "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" but "faith" has in this connection a wider sense of moral conviction of duty or "the informing and confirming conscience" (as Bengel explains); moreover, the apostle speaks only of Christians, and not of the heathen, who have a guide of action in their conscience, as he asserts elsewhere (Rom. 2: 14). According to Augustin, it is the grace of God alone which creates a new spiritual and moral life in man, and this grace works irresistibly in the elect according to an eternal and unchangeable purpose. His denial of human freedom and his doctrine of absolute predestination seem to leave no room, logically, for a vindication of divine justice, and for human guilt. If man is only free to sin or if he must sin, how can God justly condemn him? But Augustin and Calvin escape the ethical difficulty at the expense of logic, and enjoin the strictest morality; for their sense of God's holiness is stronger than their sense of man's sinfulness, and they connect election inseparably with sanctification and perseverance to the end.

* While Erasmus admired Jerome as "theologorum princeps," Luther hated him, and called his book against Jovinian "ein schändlich Buch" (a shameful book). Cardinal Newman, before his transition from Anglo-Catholicism to Romanism, exhibited the conflict of sound moral feeling with Church authority in his judgment on Jerome: "I do not scruple to say, that, were he not a saint, there are things in his writings and views from which I should shrink; but as the case stands, I shrink rather from putting myself in opposition to something like a judgment of the catholic (?) world in favor of his saintly perfection." The first English translation of the principal works of Jerome has just been published by Canon Fremantle, and forms vol. vi. of Schaff and Wace's "Nicene and Post-Nicene Library," Second Series, New York and Oxford, 1893.

Augustin defended, in his treatises on Marriage, Virginity, and Widowhood, the monastic ideal, though with more moderation than Jerome. Herein he agreed with his opponent Pelagius, who advocated the freedom of choice and moral ability in the interest of monastic morality. He was influenced in his conversion by reading the life of St. Anthony, the pattern saint of the desert; he dismissed after his baptism his faithful mistress, the mother of his only son, and devoted himself to single life. He praised marriage as a sacrament, but placed virginity above it as more holy, and appealed to the example of Paul, who permits but does not recommend marriage. He finds, after all, the earthly perfection of a Christian in retreating from public life and in ascetic imitation of the example of Christ. He introduced monasticism into North Africa, but confessed that he had found some of the worst, as well as some of the best men and women in convents. He wrote a special work against the idleness and spiritual pride of monks.*

* "Vitia sunt potius quam virtutes."—De Civitate Dei, xix., 25. Another saying of Augustin (which I cannot just verify) is, "Omnis infidelium vita peccatum est." The Lutheran Formula of Concord expresses nearly the same view (p. 700), and declares all good works of the natural man, "revera coram Deo peccata, hoc est, peccatis contaminata, et a Deo pro peccatis et immunditio reputantur propter naturæ humanæ corruptionem." How different is Christ's merciful sentence on those who knew him not, in the parable of the judgment (of the heathen world)! (Matt. 25: 35-40.)

God is to Augustin the only true and highest good, and union with God is the end of man. Love to God is the virtue of virtues, which gives true value to all other virtues. In the present world the Christians are only pilgrims towards the heavenly home, but by hope and love they anticipate the future life of the vision of God and rise above the misery of the present existence.

CHAPTER CCXLVI.

MEDIEVAL MORALS.

The pope and the monk ruled the Latin Church in the Middle Ages. Hierarchical domination and ascetic self-renunciation co-operated with each other for the conversion of the barbarians and the supremacy of the spiritual over the secular power. Gregory VII., the greatest of popes, was a monk bearing the triple crown; St. Bernard, the greatest of monks, was the arbiter of rival popes. The monks were the standing army of the popes in fighting against disobedient kings and emperors and in enforcing celibacy upon the clergy.

The morality of the Middle Ages presents startling contrasts of a sublime faith and degrading superstition, of angelic purity and gross sensuality, of self-denying charity to suffering Christians, and barbarous cruelty to infidels, Jews and heretics. When the crusaders, under the lead of Godfrey de Bouillon, who refused to wear a crown of gold where his Saviour had worn a crown of thorns, came in sight of Jerusalem, they fell on their knees, kissed the earth, laid aside their armor, and advanced as pilgrims with prayers and penitential hymns; but after the capture of the holy city they massacred the Mohammedan population to the extent of more than 70,000, burned the Jews in their synagogues, and waded in blood to the Holy Sepulchre to offer up their prayers and thanks. The Acts of Councils and the Penitential Books reveal a low state of morals, even among the clergy, who were charged with vulgar vices, and were tempted by celibacy to unnatural sins. The discipline of the Church was often perverted for the extortion of money, and the Roman curia, with its insatiable greed of gold, reaped the chief benefit, but finally also met the punishment of the Reformation.

* De Opere Monachorum, written after 401.

Pope Gregory the Great (d. 604), a moderate Augustinian in theology, and a Benedictine, united the monastic ideal with the hierarchical interest, and thus fairly introduced the spirit of mediæval morality. He wrote Magna Moralia, a sort of compend of Christian Ethic, in the form of a threefold exposition of the Book of Job, whom he represents as the type of Christ. His Regula Pastoralis was the favorite text-book for pastors during the Middle Ages.

Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274) represents the height of the mediæval Ethic as well as Dogmatic. He treats the ethical material in the second part of his Summa Theologiæ.* He combined the views of Augustin and Aristotle and worked them up into a system. He makes, with Aristotle, happiness the end of human life, but finds happiness, with Augustin, in the vision of God and assimilation to God, who is the source and goal of all existence, and the supreme good. He divides the virtues into three classes, moral, intellectual and theological. The first two were known to Aristotle. The moral virtues are the four cardinal virtues. The three theological and highest virtues are faith, hope and charity; they are infused by divine grace and have a supernatural aim. Charity is the crown of all. Sins are divided into carnal and spiritual, and into venial (pardonable) and mortal. The three monastic vows of voluntary poverty (Matt. 19:21), celibacy (Luke 14:26; 1 Cor. 7:32), and obedience are the way to perfection (Matt. 6:44).

St. Thomas defends the papal power over the state to the extent of deposing princes and absolving subjects from the oath of allegiance. He gives to the people the right to depose a tyrannical ruler. He justifies the punishment of heretics by death, because murderers of the immortal soul are more dangerous and guilty than murderers of the mortal body. He teaches the doctrine of a treasury of hyper-meritorious works from which the pope can dispense indulgences for the release from the temporal punishments of sin. The abuse of indulgences occasioned the reformation of Luther, who hated Thomas Aquinas as the abettor of all the heresies of popery.

* In the Prima Secundæ, and Secunda Secundæ. They occupy about one half of the Summa, which is divided into three parts.

The teaching of the "angelic doctor," as Thomas is called, rules the Roman Church to this day.

The discipline of the Church and auricular confession produced a number of penitential books which regulate the order of penitence and prescribe specific punishments for certain sins, as drunkenness, fornication, avarice, perjury, homicide, heresy, adultery. They were the first books of casuistry (see below, ch. cexlix).*

The Mystics advocated a more inward and spiritual piety in connection with ascetic practices. Some lost themselves in the maze of pantheism; others, like Tauler, Thomas à Kempis and Staupitz, preached and practiced a simple, fervent and practical piety in imitation of the humble life of Christ. The ripest fruit of this devotional mysticism is the well-known work of Thomas à Kempis (d. 1471), which has been published in all European languages and is to this day the most popular book of devotion for Catholics and Protestants. But the moral ideal even of this book is monastic. Staupitz, the fatherly friend of Luther, connects the mediæval piety with the Reformation, but he could not accept Luther's doctrine of justification by faith alone, nor the separation from the Catholic Church.

The imitation of Christ is the moral ideal of the best writers in the Greek, Latin and Evangelical Churches and forms a connecting link between them; but it is differently understood and carried out, by the Catholics in a literal and external sense, by the Protestants in a spiritual and internal sense.

CHAPTER CCXLVII.

HISTORY OF PROTESTANT ETHIC.

The Reformation introduced the evangelical and social, as distinct from the ascetic and monastic, ideal of morality (see ch. cexliv.). Luther renewed the battle of Paul for Christian liberty against Jewish legalism and self-righteousness. His strongest weapon was the Epistle to the Galatians, which he called "my wife." He broke the bondage of papal tyranny and achieved at Worms the first decisive victory for liberty of conscience. He magnified the importance of personal responsibility over passive obedience to absolute authority. He found in the doctrine of justification by faith peace of conscience, which he had failed to obtain by the self-imposed mortifications of the cloister. He emphasized solifidian justification at the expense of progressive sanctification, and faith at the expense of good works. But he meant by faith a living power which, far from being idle, must do and always will do good works, as a good tree will produce good fruit. He rejected the anti-nomianism of Agricola, and deplored with Melanchthon the abuse of evangelical liberty which was the temporary consequence of the overthrow of Catholic discipline. In political life the Lutheran Church has always been an obedient handmaid of the State.

* The penitential literature has recently been enriched by an American historian, Henry Charles Lea: A Formulary of the Papal Penitentiary in the Thirteenth Century (Philadelphia, 1892).

Melanchthon, the humanist among the Reformers, began the science of Protestant Ethic in his Epitome of Moral Philosophy (1538; thoroughly revised, 1550) on the basis of Aristotle, whom Luther hated; but he distinguished sharply between natural morality and Christian morality.*

The Lutheran Church, after the conflict with popery, was involved in internal dogmatic feuds, which were unfavorable to the cultivation of the theory and practice of Christian Ethic, and excited the worst passions. Melanchthon prayed to be delivered from "the fury of theologians." The champions of an intolerant orthodoxy forgot that charity is the chief of virtues, and uncharitableness the worst of heresies.

In opposition to dead orthodoxy, John Arndt (d. 1621) defended the claims of practical piety in his True Christianity, one of the most popular books of devotion. Spener (d. 1705), the founder of Pietism, labored in the same spirit and introduced wholesome reforms. Pietism produced many benevolent institutions and societies; it was the salt in the Lutheran state-churches during the rationalistic period, and is so largely even to this day, especially in Württemberg. It bears some resemblance to asceticism in the Roman Church, and still more to Methodism.

The ethical factor was much stronger in the Swiss than in the

* On his merits as a moral teacher, see Gass, Geschichte der christlichen Ethik, vol. ii., pp. 92-105; and Ziegler, vol. ii., pp. 454 sqq.

German Reformers. Zwingli and Calvin opposed the paganism of papal Rome, and aimed at a complete moral renovation of Church and State. Calvin was a legislator and disciplinarian as well as a theologian. Himself a Christian stoic, fearing God, but fearless of men, he succeeded, after a long conflict with pseudo-Protestant libertinism, in establishing a model church in Geneva, which John Knox, the Scotch reformer, from personal observation declared to be "the most perfect school of Christ that ever was in the earth since the days of the Apostles," and which Dr. Valentin Andreae, a bright and shining light of the Lutheran Church of Germany, fifty years after Calvin's death, characterized as "the perfect institute of a perfect republic and moral discipline"; adding, "What a glorious ornament of the Christian religion is such a purity of morals! We must lament with tears that it is wanting with us, and almost totally neglected. If it were not for the difference of religion, I would forever have been chained to that place [Geneva] by the agreement in morals, and I have ever since tried to introduce something like it into our churches. No less distinguished than the public discipline was the domestic discipline of my landlord, Scarron, with its daily devotions, reading of the Scriptures, the fear of God in word and in deed, temperance in meat and drink and dress. I have not found greater purity of morals even in my father's home." His father was the chief author of the Formula of Concord, the last of the symbolical books of the Lutheran Church.

Calvinism produced the severest, the most energetic and most aggressive morality of Protestantism. It is muscular Christianity, which bows before no earthly despot. It educated God-fearing, manly, independent characters, like the Huguenots of France, the defenders of liberty and independence in Holland, the Puritans of England, the Covenanters of Scotland, and the Fathers of New England, who were willing to sacrifice life for their conscientious convictions. It fortified statesmen and soldiers, like Coligny, Knox, William of Orange, and Oliver Cromwell, in their struggle with despotic power. The Reformed Churches, including the Waldenses, have suffered more persecutions from the Roman Church, and produced more martyrs during the single reigns of Mary Tudor of England, Philip II. of Spain, and Louis XIV. of France, than the whole Christian Church during the first three centuries under heathen emperors. The blood of these martyrs was the seed of political and religious liberty in modern Europe.

The separation of Ethic from Dogmatic, which was first made in the Reformed Church, promoted its scientific treatment.

Independent of the Church, the science of philosophical Ethic was cultivated by Spinoza (Ethica, 1677), Leibnitz (Theodicy, 1710), Wolff (Philosophia Moralis, 1750), and Kant (Metaphysik der Sitten, 1785, and Kritik der Praktischen Vernunft, 1788). Kant was a rationalist, but by his doctrine of the "categorical imperative" of practical reason, and of the "radical evil," made a near approach to Christian Ethic. Fries influenced De Wette.

Socinianism of the sixteenth and Rationalism of the eighteenth century departed from the Augustinian basis of the Reformation and developed a Pelagian morality, but without its ascetic and monastic features. The Unitarianism of England and America follows in the same line, and exalts the ethical above the dogmatic features of Christianity.

The revival of evangelical theology in the nineteenth century had a wholesome effect upon Christian life. Schleiermacher (d. 1834) marks an epoch in ethical as well as dogmatic theology. He broke the power of Rationalism. He was a master both of philosophical and theological Ethic, and derived the latter, like Dogmatic, from the Christian consciousness or experience, which comes down in an unbroken stream from the person and work of the Redeemer.

Since Schleiermacher the science of Christian Ethic has been greatly advanced by Rothe, Schmid, Martensen, Dorner, Gass, Harless, Wuttke, Luthardt, Frank, and Hermann Weiss.

English and American literature is very rich in works on Moral Philosophy, but very poor in works on Christian Ethic. This is surprising, if we consider that the Anglo-Saxon race has produced the finest type of Christian civilization and Christian character, and develops the greatest activity for the improvement of society and the spread of Christianity at home and abroad.

CHAPTER CCXLVIII.

LITERATURE ON ETHIC.

I. Roman Catholic writers. See a large list in KIHN, Encyklop. und Method., pp. 444-447.

ALFONSO MARIA DA LIGUORI (1696-1787; founder of the order of Liguorians, a canonized saint, and created a doctor of the Church by Pius IX., 1871): Theologia Moralis, based upon Busenbaum's Medulla; first published at Naples, 1748, and since in a great many editions; also, in his Works, ed. by Hugues, Regensb. 1842-47, 38 vols.

P. JOH. PETRUS GURY (S.J., 1821-66): Compendium Theologiæ Moralis; first published 1850, and very often since; for the use of priests at the confessional, highly commended by Roman authorities for brevity and precision, but condemned by Protestants and moderate Catholics as jesuitical and dangerously minute in the description of the mysteries of married life.

German Catholic works on Ethic (Sittenlehre) by SAILER (1818), HIRSCHER (5th ed. 1851), PROBST (1877), WERNER (1888).

DÖLLINGER and REUSCH (Old Catholics): Geschichte der Moralstreitigkeiten in der röm. katholischen Kirche seit dem 16ten Jahrhundert (Nördlingen, 1889, 2 vols.).

II. Protestant works. English:

W. WHEWELL (1794-1866, Cambridge): Elements of Morality, including Polity (London and New York, 1845), and Lectures on Systematic Morality (1846).

ALEXANDER BAIN (Aberdeen): Mental and Moral Science: A Compendium of Psychology and Ethics (London, 1868; new ed. 1872). The second Part (pp. 460-751) treats of the Ethical Systems from Socrates to Cousin and Jouffrey.

PAUL JANET: Elements of Morals (Éléments de Morale, Paris, 1869; transl. by Mrs. Corson, New York, 1884); and his Theory of Morals (La Morale; Paris, 1874; transl. by Mary Chapman, Edinburgh and New York, 1884).

L. P. HICKOK: A System of Moral Science (Boston, 1880).

NOAH PORTER: Elements of Moral Science (New York, 1885).

* JAMES MARTINEAU: Types of Ethical Theory (Oxford, 1885; 3d ed. rev., 1889, 2 vols.).

HENRY SIDGWICK (Professor of Moral Philosophy, Cambridge): The Methods of Ethics (London, 4th ed. rev., 1890).

H. HUGHES: Principles of Natural and Supernatural Morals (London, 1890-91, 2 vols.). On the empirical basis.

BORDEN P. BOWNE (Boston): The Principles of Ethics (New York, 1892).

* NEWMAN SMYTH (New Haven): Christian Ethics (New York, 1892).

Popular Manuals on Moral Science by A. ALEXANDER (New York, 1852), F. WAYLAND (77th ed., Boston, 1865), M. HOPKINS (The Law of Love and Love as Law, 1869), A. P. PEABODY (New York, 1873), H. CALDERWOOD (London, 7th ed. 1881), J. BASCOM (New York, 1879).

III. German works by SCHLEIERMACHER (Die Christliche Sitte, ed. by Jonas, Berlin, 1843), * RICHARD ROTHE (Theologische Ethik, Wittenberg, 1845-48, 3 vols.; 2d ed. 1867-71, 5 vols.), HARLESS (Stuttgart, 1872; 7th ed. 1875; translated by Morrison and Findlay, Edinb. 1868), * CHR. FR. SCHMID (Stuttgart, 1861; Engl. transl. of the first Part by W. J. Mann, Philadelphia, 1872), * WUTTKE (Berlin, 1861; 3d ed. Leipzig, 1874-75, 2 vols.; abridged transl. by J. P. Lacroix, Edinburgh, 1873, 2 vols.), * MARTENSEN (first in Danish, then in German, 1871; 6th ed. Berlin 1893; Engl. transl. of vol. i. from the Danish by C. Spence, vol. ii. from the German by Sophia Taylor, 1873-82), LANGE (Heidelberg, 1878), * LUTHARDT (The Moral Truths of Christianity, Leipzig, 1872; 4th ed. 1889; transl. by Sophia Taylor, Edinb., 1873), BECK (1882, 3 vols.), FRANK (Erlangen, 1883 and 1887), * DORNER (Berlin, 1885; transl. by Mead and Cunningham, New York, 1887), GASS (Berlin, 1881-87, historical), HERMANN WEISS (Freiburg i.B., 1889; so far only the general introduction, to be followed by a systematic treatise).

CHAPTER CCXLIX.

CASUISTRY (CASUISTIK).

Casuistry is a branch of moral theology, and is also closely connected with pastoral theology (cura animarum). It deals with the cases of conscience (casus conscientie) which arise from the conflict of duties. It is a directory and method rather than a science. Kant calls it "the dialectic of conscience."

Casuistry has been cultivated as a separate science with great fullness by Roman Catholic moralists, especially by Jesuits, for the use of priests at the confessional. It discusses the permissibility of acts which are sinful in themselves, but may be justified, or at least pardoned, under extenuating circumstances, such as suicide to escape disgrace, tyrannicide to free the people from oppression, dueling (which is forbidden by civil law, but upheld by the military code of honor), homicide in self-defense, pious fraud or lying for a good purpose, sacrifice of chastity as an alternative for denial of faith. Casuists give general rules of conduct in such doubtful and embarrassing cases, which must ultimately be decided by the individual conscience.

Casuistry grew up during the Middle Ages in connection with the doctrine of penance and absolution, and for the use of confessors, who must know the degrees of guilt. The numerous Libri Pœnitentiales determine the ecclesiastical punishments for the different sins and offenses. A summary of penitential regulations passed into the canon law.

The first systematic work of the kind was prepared by the Dominican Raymond of Pennaforte (d. 1275) under the title, Summa de Casibus Pœnitentialibus, which came into general use in the thirteenth century. After the Reformation, the Jesuits cultivated casuistry in opposition to the rigor of the Jansenists, and brought it into disrepute by the minute anatomy of vices and indelicate discussion of immodest topics, on the plea of the requirements of the confessional, and by their lax theory of "Probabilism."* Pascal, in his Provincial Letters (1656), has severely chastised this jesuitical casuistry, which was corrupting in its effect, though not in design. The Popes Alexander VII. and Innocent XI. condemned several propositions of the Probabilists.

The Reformation was unfavorable to casuistry and the whole penitential system. Protestantism leaves the regulation of each man's conduct to his own conscience, as enlightened and strengthened by a study of the law of God. But most persons require some guidance in doubtful cases; hence in the seventeenth century casuistry was cultivated also by Protestant divines. In the University of Cambridge, England, there is a special professorship of Moral Theology or Casuistical Divinity.

LITERATURE.

The chief Roman Catholic Works on Casuistry are by PUSENBAUM (S.J., d. 1668), Medulla Theologiæ Moralis; ALFONSO MARIA DA LIGUORI (d. 1787): Praxis Confessarii; and GURY (S.J., d. 1866): Casus Conscientiæ in Præcipuas Questiones Theologiæ Moralis. See chapter cexlviii. and a list in Kihn's Encyklop., pp. 453 sq.

The chief Protestant casuists are PERKINS (1602), BISHOP HALL (1649), BISHOP SANDERSON (1678), JEREMY TAYLOR (Ductor Dubitantium, 1660), RICHARD BAXTER (Christian Directory, 1673), and SPENER (Consilia et Judicia Theologica, 1709).

CHAPTER CCL.

SOCIOLOGY.

Sociology, or the science of human society, its constitution, phenomena and development, is closely related to Ethic and

* The principle of Probabilism is: "Si est opinio probabilis, licitum est eam sequi, licet opposita sit probabilior."

Political Economy, but it is narrower in one respect and wider in another. It falls within the line of duties to our neighbor, and embraces the question of the highest good (which is the kingdom of God). It may be treated philosophically and theologically. Sociology is the theory of society; socialism is a practical movement which aims at the reconstruction of society and an improvement of the condition of the laboring classes. There are different kinds of socialism, peaceful and anarchistic, Christian and atheistic, with modifications between the extremes.

Socialism is a symptom of the present age in Europe and America. The burning questions of the relations between the rich and the poor, the employer and the laborer, the master and the servant, the right use and distribution of wealth, and the best methods of elevating the lower classes are of such practical importance as to demand a Christian Sociology which should treat these questions from the standpoint of the gospel. The best and only effective remedy of the social evils so much complained of is the consistent application of the Christian spirit of justice and charity to legislation and to individual and social life.

SOCIOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

ALEX. VON OETTINGEN: Die Moralstatistik und die christliche Sittenlehre. Versuch einer Sociaethik auf empirischer Grundlage (Erlangen, 1868-74, 2 Parts; Theil I. in 2d ed. 1874). By the same: Die Moralstatistik in ihrer Bedeutung für eine Sociaethik (3d. ed. Erlangen, 1882).

HERBERT SPENCER: The Study of Sociology (London and New York, 1873; 11th ed. 1885); Principles of Sociology (London, 1876; 3d. ed. 1885); The Data of Ethics (1879, 5th ed. 1888); Descriptive Sociology (1872-81, in 8 Parts). The last is a compilation by different writers, in which facts illustrating Spencer's doctrines are culled from the works of travelers and ethnologists.

ELISHA MULFORD (1833-85): The Nation: The Foundation of Civil Order and Political Life in the United States (New York, 1870; 9th ed. 1884).

R. D. HITCHCOCK (d. 1887): Socialism (New York, 1879).

J. H. W. STUCKENBERG (Berlin): Christian Sociology (New York, 1880). Compare the chapter on "Church and Socialism" in his The Age and the Church (Hartford, Conn., 1893, pp. 273 sqq.).

ROBERT ELLIS THOMPSON (Philadelphia): De Civitate Dei. The Divine Order of Human Society (Philadelphia, 1891).

CHAPTER CCLI.

ECCLESIASTICAL GEOGRAPHY AND STATISTIC.

Ecclesiastical Geography and Statistic is a systematic view of the present condition of Christendom. It exhibits history at rest.* But the Statistic of to-day becomes history to-morrow. This is true especially of numerical Statistic in a new and rapidly growing country like the United States, while in the Orient things are more stationary.

This branch of theological science includes the following divisions:

I. GEOGRAPHICAL STATISTIC. A description of the territorial extent of Christendom and the boundary lines of the different Churches. The Greek or Oriental Church has its home in the Turkish Empire, Russia and Greece; the Latin Church, in southern Europe, and Central and South America, with a very large representation in nearly all Protestant countries; the Protestant Churches, in western and northern Europe, and in North America, with mission fields in all heathen lands. The Greek Church is the Christianity of the East, the Latin is the Christianity of the South, the Protestant is the Christianity of the North and West. The first embraces the Greek and Slavonic, the second chiefly the Latin, the third the Teutonic races. The missionary geography extends to all heathen countries.

II. NUMERICAL STATISTIC. An account of the numerical strength of Christendom as a unit versus heathenism, Moham-medanism and Judaism, and of the various churches and denominations. This is Statistic in the narrow sense of the term. Figures are facts, but they often deceive. Numerical strength is no index of moral strength and influence. The handful of apostles and primitive disciples was a match for the whole Roman Empire. The same applies to countries: little Palestine did more for religion and morals, and little Greece more for philosophy and art, than the huge Assyrian, Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Roman and Russian empires. In modern times, Switzerland, Holland, England and Scotland have a historical importance far beyond their size as compared with much larger countries.

* Schlözer, "Eine stillstehende Geschichte."

III. SOCIAL STATISTIC. A description of the moral status of Christendom and its branches and ramifications, as the result of its past history and the basis of its future development. It includes the creed, polity, administration, cultus, rites and ceremonies of the different churches, their relation to the civil power, their institutions, and organized activities and charities.

CHAPTER CCLII.

MATERIAL FOR STATISTIC.

The material for this science is found in the official census reports of governments and churches, in ecclesiastical almanacs or year-books, in reports of travelers, and in religious periodicals. Travel in different countries and personal intercourse with representative men are necessary for lively and accurate accounts. The adage of Goethe applies here :

“ Wer den Dichter will verstehn, Muss in Dichter's Lande gehn.”

In old countries and churches, little reliable information on numerical Statistic can be obtained, least of all in the Greek Church and the Oriental sects, more in the Roman Church, most in the Protestant Churches. In Great Britain and the United States almost every denomination publishes the proceedings of its synods or conferences or conventions, and year-books with lists more or less complete of its ministers, churches, membership, sabbath-schools, contributions, etc. Much information can be gathered from the proceedings of the General Conferences of the Evangelical Alliance (nine were held between 1851 and 1891), the Pan-Presbyterian, the Pan-Anglican Councils, the Pan-Methodist Conferences, the Catholic and Protestant Church Congresses, and similar collective assemblies which convene regularly or occasionally in the large capitals from all parts of the world.

CHAPTER CCLIII.

COMPARATIVE STATISTIC.—LESSONS OF STATISTIC.

This statistical material should be so worked up as to show the comparative strength of the various sections of Christendom, and its progress over false religions.

The results are upon the whole encouraging. What Christianity may lose in one direction is more than made up in another. It moves with steady march with the sun from East to West, from Asia to Europe, from Europe to America and Australia, and acts back again from West to East. It gradually conquered the paganism in the old Roman Empire; it converted and civilized the barbarian races of the Middle Ages; it colonized America and Australia, and spreads the nets of missions over all the countries of the globe. It increases more rapidly than the population of the world, while nearly all other religions are declining. Protestantism is gaining over Romanism; evangelical religion is gaining over infidelity; the moral and spiritual condition of Christianity is upon the whole in advance of former ages, though it may be behind in some specific virtues; the final triumph of Christianity is secured by its past history. No other religion is possible for the civilized world. The only alternative is between the Christianity of Christ as exhibited in the New Testament, and agnosticism and unbelief which can never satisfy the human heart.

Nevertheless the parables and eschatological discourses of Christ do not warrant the hope of a universal conversion in the present dispensation; on the contrary, they predict a great apostasy and terrible conflict before the second Advent and the final consummation when "the kingdom of the world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever" (Rev. 11: 15).

LITERATURE.

Statistic is as yet in its rudiments, and a comprehensive scientific work is a desideratum.

WILTSCH: Handbuch der kirchlichen Geographie und Statistik (Berlin, 1846, 2 vols.; with an Atlas; English trsl. by John Leitsch, London, 1859, 2 vols.).

JULIUS WIGGERS: Kirchliche Statistik (Hamburg and Gotha, 1842-43, 2 vols.).

EDWARD A. FREEMAN: The Historical Geography of Europe (London, 1881, 2 vols.).

A large number of periodicals and special works on different countries. See a list in Hagenbach (12th ed.), pp. 386-390, but it needs to be supplemented by American periodicals, whose number is legion.

For American Statistic:

DANIEL DORCHESTER: The Problem of Religious Progress (New York, 1881, 603 pp.); Christianity in the United States (New York, 1888; chapters vii. and viii., pp. 750 sqq.). The author tries to show that during the nineteenth century evangelical Protestantism in the United States has steadily progressed in a greater ratio than the population.

The Census Bulletin, giving the results of the census of 1890, published in numbers, under the direction of Dr. Carroll, 1893. The fullest statistical information of any country, preceded by brief sketches of the different denominations and sects into which American Christianity is divided.

BOOK V.

PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

CHAPTER CCLIV.

GENERAL CONCEPTION OF PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

The term Theologia Practica for a special department of theological study was first introduced by Gisbert Voëtius (1588-1676; Professor of Theology at Utrecht), in his Selecte Disputationes (1667), and adopted by Witsius, Vitringa, and other Dutch divines. (See Achelis, Praktische Theologie, 1890, vol. i., p. 2.) Kihn and other Roman Catholic and some English scholars (e.g., A. Cave) prefer the title Pastoral Theology; but this is only a branch (Poimenic). Rübiger calls it Ecclesiastic, but this also is only a branch (the theory of the Church).

Practical Theology is the science and art of the various functions of the Christian ministry for the preservation and propagation of the Christian religion at home and abroad. It is the crowning consummation of sacred learning to which all other departments look, and by which they become useful for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God in the world. It forms the connecting link between the theological seminary or university and the Church, between the professor's chair and the pastor's pulpit. It shows how to utilize and popularize the results of biblical, historical and systematic theology for the general benefit of the Christian community. It makes the experience and wisdom of the past available for the present and the future.

Theology in all its branches is not a barren study for the satisfaction of intellectual curiosity; it is eminently practical and fruitful in its spirit and aim. But some parts of it are more directly practical than others, and constitute what is technically called Practical Theology.

Heretofore this department has been exclusively confined to clerical duties and functions. But the recent development of the lay energies in Protestant Churches, especially in England and America, requires an additional branch, or a corresponding enlargement of the other branches. The Protestant doctrine of the general priesthood of believers implies the co-operation of the members of the congregation with the pastor in all departments of Christian activity, especially in church government, in the Sunday-school, and in mission work.

NOTES.

I. Practical Theology is itself a theory (Homiletic=theory of preaching; Catechetic=theory of teaching); and on the other hand all other branches of theology are practical in their bearing. Practical theology is an art (τέχνη) as well as a science (ἐπιστήμη). Preaching especially is the art of eloquence applied to the pulpit.

II. Definition: Vinet (Théol. past., p. 1) defines Practical Theology: "C'est l'art après la science, ou la science se résolvant en art. C'est l'art d'appliquer utilement dans le ministère les connaissances acquises dans les trois autres domaines, purement scientifiques, de la théologie." Ebrard: "Practical Theology is not a science [?], but an art by which the acquired knowledge becomes practical." Schleiermacher calls it "the crown of the theological study." Hagenbach: "Practical Theology embraces the theory of the ecclesiastical activities and functions as they proceed either from the Church as a whole, or from its individual members and representatives in the name of the Church." Similarly Nitzsch, Schweizer, Gaupp. Nitzsch: "Die Theorie der kirchlichen Ausübung des Christenthums." M'Clintock: "It is an art and science. As an art, it seeks to employ usefully in the Church the scientific knowledge acquired in the three other departments of Theology which naturally precede it." Van Oosterzee: "The science of labor for the kingdom of God as called into exercise by the pastor and teacher of the Christian Church." Achelis: "The doctrine of the self-actualization (Selbstbethätigung) of the Church for its edification." Zezschwitz: "The theory of the continuous self-realization (Selbstverwirklichung) of the Church in the world." Cave: "Pastoral Theology is the science of the functions of the Christian Church." HEINRICI: "Theorie des kirchlichen Handelns."

CHAPTER CCLV.

BRANCHES OF PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

We divide Practical Theology into the following branches:

1. Theory of the Christian Ministry: The Minister an Ambassador of Christ (prophet, priest, and king).
2. Ecclesiology or Ecclesiastic (Church Law and Church Polity): The Minister as Ruler.
3. Liturgic: The Minister in Worship (as priest).

4. Homiletic: The Minister as Preacher.
 5. Catechetical: The Minister as Teacher.
 6. Poimonic: The Minister as Pastor.
 7. Evangelistic: The Minister as Evangelist and Missionary.
- The duties of the laity should be considered in each department. These branches necessarily interlap each other more or less at various points. Liturgic, in the wider sense, includes Homiletic and Catechetical; in the narrower sense, only the acts of worship proper and the administration of the sacraments.

OTHER DIVISIONS.

Schleiermacher, Schweizer, Hagenbach, and Rothe: 1. Ministerial functions relating to Church service (Kirchendienst). 2. Church government (Kirchenregiment). Schleiermacher puts Church service first, Schweizer and Rothe reverse the order. An unequal division, which overloads the first. Moreover, Church government is also Church service, and Church service is Church government; the minister rules chiefly from the pulpit, and serves as a ruler, as Christ came not to be ministered unto, but to minister (Matt. 20: 26-28).

Schweizer subdivides the theory of Church service as follows:

1. Theory of Worship: (a) Liturgic; (b) Homiletic. 2. Pastoral Theology: (a) Official; (b) Free. 3. Haliutic: (a) Catechetical; (b) Theory of Missions.

Hagenbach: 1. The gathering of a Christian congregation: (a) Haliutic; (b) Catechetical. 2. The guiding and furthering of Christian life in the congregation: (a) Liturgic; (b) Homiletic; (c) Pastoral Theology. 3. Organization and administration of the Church at large: (a) Church Polity; (b) Church Law.

Nitzsch arranges the ministerial functions into edifying (erbauende) and organizing (ordnende) functions.

Claus Harms: 1. The Preacher; 2. The Priest; 3. The Pastor.

Rothe: 1. Church Government: (a) Church Law; (b) Polemic. 2. Church Service: (a) Liturgic; (b) Homiletic; (c) Catechetical; (d) Poimonic.

Rothe, who first followed Schleiermacher's twofold division, proposed in his last lectures on Encycl. (p. 136) this arrangement: 1. Church Polity; 2. Liturgic; 3. Homiletic; 4. Catechetical; 5. Pastoral Doctrine; 6. The Person of the evangelical clergyman.

Räbiger: 1. Theory of Church organization: (a) Church Polity; (b) Church Law. 2. Theory of Worship: (a) Liturgic; (b) Homiletic; (c) Catechetical; (d) Pastoral Care. 3. The Science of Christian Culture: (a) Theory of Missions; (b) Ecclesiastical Sociology. 4. Ecclesiastical Didactic: (a) Symbolic; (b) Theory of the Ministerial Office.

Van Oosterzee: 1. Homiletic; 2. Liturgic; 3. Catechetical; 4. Poimonic.

Gretillat (1885): 1. Oicodominique: the theory of the edification of the Church. 2. Alientique: theory of the extension of the Church. 3. Polemique: theory of the defense of the Church.

McClintock: 1. Functions of the Church. (a) Conservative Functions: Catechetical, Homiletic, Pastoral Care, Duties of the Laity. (b) Aggressive Functions: Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Civilization. 2. Organization and Government of the Church.

Cave: 1. The Theory of the Church. 2. The Theory of Worship (Liturgic). 3. The Theory of Preaching (Homiletic). 4. The Theory of the Training of the Young (Catechetical). 5. The Theory of the Training of Pastors and Church Workers (Pedagogic). 6. The Theory of the Care of Souls. 7. The Theory of Christian Charities. 8. The Theory of Missions.

HEINRICI: 1. Liturgic. 2. Homiletic. 3. Catechetical. 4. Pastoral Theology. 5. Church Law. 6. Church Polity. 7. Theory of Missions.

CHAPTER CCLVI.

HISTORY AND LITERATURE OF PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

1. The roots of Practical Theology are in the Pastoral Epistles of Paul to Timothy and Titus, which contain directions for founding, training and governing churches, and for the proper treatment of individual members, old and young, widows and virgins, backsliders and factious persons, with parting counsels of the Apostle to his beloved disciples and fellow-workers. They exhibit the transition from the simplicity of the apostolic age to the more definite Church polity and discipline of the second century. They are rich in practical wisdom and full of encouragement to every pastor. The Epistles to the Corinthians, the Epistle to Philemon, and the Epistles to the Seven Churches in the Apocalypse contain also important hints for practical theology.

2. The post-apostolic literature on the duties of the ministry and Church polity is closely interwoven with the ethical and casuistic literature which has been previously noticed. The first works of the kind are Church Manuals or Directories of worship and discipline, and Collections of laws and customs which claim, directly or indirectly, apostolic origin and authority. Such are the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles, the Apostolic Canons, and Apostolic Constitutions.

3. Chrysostom (347-407), the first pulpit orator among the Fathers, described in his work On the Priesthood, written before 381 with youthful fervor and eloquence, the importance, duties and trials of the Christian ministry on the basis of the then prevailing conception of a real priesthood and sacrifice.* He holds up Paul as a model for imitation, and requires whole-souled consecration to Christ and unselfish devotion to the Church. The book is marred by the justification of pious fraud under the name of economy or good management, which was shielded by the examples of Abraham, Jacob, David, and Paul (Acts 16:3; 21:26). The maxim that the end sanctifies the means is much older than Jesuitism. Origen and St. Jerome perverted the contention of Peter and Paul at Antioch (Gal. 2:11) into a hypocritical farce, for the purpose of convincing the Jewish Christians that circumcision was not necessary, and thus involved both Apostles in hypocrisy.

* Περὶ ἱερωσύνης, De Sacerdotio, often translated, best by W. R. W. Stephens, in Schaff's edition of Chrysostom's Works (1889).

The Greek Church furnished the first works on Catechetical. Cyril of Jerusalem and Gregory of Nyssa.

Among the Latin Fathers, Ambrose takes the lead with his De Officiis Ministrorum, which belongs also to the literature on Ethic.

Augustin gives useful hints on homiletic in the fourth book of his De Doctrina Christiana (426), and on Catechetical in his De Catechizandis Rudibus (400).

The Regula Pastoralis of Pope Gregory I. was the chief manual of the clergy during the Middle Ages.

Isidor of Seville, Walafrid Strabo, and Rabanus Maurus wrote similar works for the instruction of the clergy. St. Bernard addressed to Archbishop Henry of Sens his De Moribus et Officiis Episcoporum. Duranti (d. 1292) wrote Rationale Divinorum Officiorum (8 books).

The Penitential books (Libri Pœnitentiales) belong both to pastoral and ethical literature.

Among the forerunners of the Reformation, Wiclif wrote a tract, De Officio Pastoralis, which has been published by Lechler (1863).

4. After the Reformation the education for the priesthood became an education for the duties of the preacher and pastor.

Zwingli described his ideal of an evangelical minister in his "Shepherd" (Der Hirt).

The divines of the seventeenth century discussed the pastoral duties in connection with Dogmatic (locus de ministerio) and Ethic (casus conscientie). Valuable contributions by Hyperius (1562), Porta (1585), Kortholdt (1698), Spener (Pia Desideria, 1675), Baxter (The Reformed Pastor, and Christian Directory, 1673), Pierre Roques (Le pasteur évangélique, 1723), Mosheim (1754).

Special chairs for Practical Theology were first established at Helmstädt and Tübingen.

5. The scientific treatment of Practical Theology as an organism dates from Schleiermacher, who was pastor (of Trinity Church, Berlin) as well as professor. In his Outlines of Theological Study (1811) he connected Practical Theology closely with the Church and assigned it the last and most important place in the course of theological study, calling it "the crown." He made the first attempt to organize the various branches under the two chief divisions of Church service and Church government. His brief hints have been fruitful. He delivered also special lectures on Pastoral Theology, which were published long after his death.

The field of Practical Theology as a systematic whole has since been cultivated by L. Hüffell (Giessen, 1822; 4th ed. 1843, 2 vols.), Claus Harms (Kiel, 1830; 3d ed., with notes, 1878), Ph. Marheineke (Berlin, 1837), * C. J. Nitzsch (Bonn, 1847-67; 2d ed. 1859-68, 3 vols.), K. F. Gaupp (Berlin, 1848-52), Schleiermacher (posthumous ed. by Frerichs, Berlin, 1850; Works, vol. xiii.), * A. Vinet (Paris, 1850; German translation from the French by Hasse, 1852), C. B. Moll (Halle, 1853), J. H. A. Ebrard (Königsberg, 1854), F. Ehrenfeuchter (Göttingen, 1859), W. Otto (Dillenburg, 1867; Gotha, 1869, 2 vols.), F. L. Steinmeyer (Berlin, 1874-79, 5 Parts), G. von Zezschwitz (Leipzig, 1876-78, 3 Parts), Theodosius Harnack (Erlangen, 1877, 2 Parts), * J. J. van Oosterzee (translated from the Dutch into German by Matthiä and Petry (Heilbr., 1878 sq., 2 vols.), * E. Chr. Achelis (Freiburg i.B., 1890-91, 2 vols.), Alfred Krauss (Freiburg i.B., 1890-93, 2 vols.), K. Knoke (1892).

Roman Catholic writers: J. M. Säiler (München, 1788 sq.; 5th ed. Sulzbach, 1853, 3 vols.), J. Widmer (Augsburg, 1840), A. Graf (Tübingen, 1841), F. Vogl (7th ed. of Gollowitz, Regensburg, 1855, 2 vols.), J. Amberger (Regensburg, 1851 sq., 2 vols.; 4th ed. 1883 sq.), J. Schüch (6th ed. Linz, 1882).

In the English language we have no original work which embraces all the branches of Practical Theology, but numerous special treatises on Preaching and Pastoral Care, by Fairbairn, Kidder, Phelps, Hopkins, Shedd, Broadus and others. The Practical Theology of J. J. van Oosterzee, who was professor and preacher at Utrecht, is of all foreign manuals best adapted for English students, and has been translated from the Dutch by Maurice J. Evans.*

* In H. B. Smith and Schaff, "Theological and Philosophical Library" (New York and London, 1878).

CHAPTER CCLVII.

THEORY OF THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY.

The Theory of the Christian Ministry discusses the general questions which underlie the other departments of Practical Theology, such as the origin, nature and aim of the Christian ministry; the difference between clergy and laity; the internal and external call to the ministry; preparation; examination; licensure; ordination; installation; support; personal character and conduct.

Our Saviour appointed twelve Apostles and endowed them with the Holy Spirit for the founding of the Christian Church among Jews and Gentiles. They were the first of an unbroken succession of ministers who should make disciples of all nations by baptizing and teaching them to observe all things whatsoever Christ commanded them; and for this purpose he promised to abide with them "all the days, even to the consummation of the world" (Matt. 28: 20).

The apostolic office contains the germ of the various ministerial offices which gradually were developed according to the needs of the Church. The primitive officers are:

1. For the Church at large: Apostles, Prophets, and Evangelists.
2. For local congregations: Presbyters or Bishops for ruling and teaching, and Deacons (and Deaconesses) for the care of the poor and the sick, and the temporalities of the congregation.

The topics of this branch are usually discussed in Homiletic and Poimenic. The most important modern writers on the apostolic and post-apostolic ministry are Rothe, Ritschl, Lightfoot, Hatch, Harnack, Weizsäcker, Loening, and Ch. de Smedt. See the literature in Schaff, Church History, vol i., pp. 481-484.

CHAPTER CCLVIII.

DIFFERENT CONCEPTIONS OF THE MINISTRY.

The Christian minister is a servant and ambassador of Christ, acting in his name and by his authority, and carrying forward his work in the world. As Christ is prophet, priest, and king, so the minister unites, in a restricted sense, these three offices. As prophet, he teaches the people from the pulpit and the lecture-room the way of salvation in Christ. As priest, he offers the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, and administers the sacraments and religious rites. As king, he rules his flock and takes part in the general government of the Church.

In the Greek and Roman Churches, the minister is lost in the priest and separated from the people. He offers sacrifice at the altar, and dispenses absolution at the confessional. His personal character is overshadowed and shielded by his official character.

In the Protestant minister the preaching and teaching function is the most prominent; the pulpit is his throne. Hence a higher order of education is required, and his official authority must be sustained by personal purity and dignity. He stands not aloof from the people as a member of a distinct class, like the priest in the Jewish dispensation, but is associated and interwoven with the life of the congregation.

CHAPTER CCLIX.

ECCLESIOLOGY.

Ecclesiology treats of the Church as a visible organization, its constitution, offices, administration, and relation to civil society.

The word church is derived from κυριακόν, what belongs to the Lord, and is used in four senses: (1) a particular congregation; (2) the Church universal; (3) a denomination or confession (as the Greek Church, the Roman Church, the Episcopal Church, the Lutheran Church, the Presbyterian Church, etc.); (4) a church building.* (The last two senses are extra-biblical.)

In the New Testament the corresponding term is ἐκκλησία, which means a congregation or assembly.† It occurs only twice in the Gospels, once in the local sense of a particular congregation (Matt. 18:17), and once in the general sense of the Church of Christ or the whole body of believers (Matt. 16:18); but in the Acts, Epistles and Revelation it occurs 111 times, mostly in the particular or local sense.

* Κυριακὸν δῶμα, or κυριακὴ οἰκία, as Basilica from βασιλεύς, Regia from rex.

† From ἐκκαλέω, to call out. The word is used of any gathering of the people for deliberation (Acts 19:32, 41). In the Septuagint it is often equivalent to kahal, the assembly of the Israelites.

On the other hand, our Lord uses the term "kingdom of heaven" or "kingdom of God" 123 times in the Gospels (counting the parallel passages); while in all other books from the Acts to Revelation it occurs only 33 times.

This suggests a difference as well as a resemblance. The Church of Christ and the kingdom of God are intimately related, but not identical. The Church dates from the day of Pentecost after the Ascension. Christ speaks of it as future: "Upon this rock I will build my Church."* The kingdom is older and will last forever. It is a wider, deeper and more spiritual conception: the kingdom embraces heaven and earth, eternity and time, the whole moral government of God, all the spiritual forces and energies of his people, the saints of the Old and New Dispensation, the Church militant and the Church triumphant. It is chiefly, but not exclusively, manifest and embodied in the Church and operative through the Church as its organ. The Church on earth is the training-school for the kingdom of heaven. Hence it is so often spoken of by the Apostles, the builders of the Church.

The difference between the two ideas is apparent in many passages where we could not with propriety substitute the Church for the kingdom; as, "Thy kingdom come" (Matt. 6: 10); "Seek ye first the kingdom of God" (6: 33); "Theirs," or "of such" (the poor in spirit, and the children) "is the kingdom of heaven" (5: 3; 19: 4); "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation, . . . it is within you" (or "in the midst of you," Luke 17: 20, 21).† These words were spoken before the Church was founded. In other passages the kingdom is spoken of as future, to be fully realized only at the second advent (Matt. 25: 34; 26: 29; Luke 1: 33; Acts 14: 22; 1 Cor. 15: 24; 2 Pet. 1: 11; Rev. 11: 15).

The Roman Church identifies herself with the Church, and the Church with the kingdom of God. She confines the Church to the dominion of the papacy, and excludes the Greek Church as a schism, the Protestant Churches as heretical sects. Protestants distinguish between the invisible Church, which is one and universal and includes all who believe in Christ as their

* Οικοδομήσω μου τὴν ἐκκλησίαν.

† Comp. also such passages as Rom. 14: 17; 1 Cor. 4: 20; 15: 50.

Lord and Saviour, and the visible Churches, Greek, Roman and Protestant, which embrace all nominal and baptized Christians, good and bad. Distinct from both conceptions, but more nearly identical with the invisible Church, is the kingdom of God.

Ecclesiology is divided into two parts: Church Law (Kirchenrecht) and Church Polity (Kirchenverfassung).

LITERATURE.

J. McELHINNEY: The Doctrine of the Church: An Historical Monograph, with a Full Bibliography of the Subject (Philadelphia, 1871).

JULIUS MÜLLER: On the Visible and Invisible Church (in his Dogmatische Abhandlungen).

A. B. BRUCE: The Kingdom of God; or, Christ's Teaching according to the Synoptical Gospels (Edinburgh, 4th ed. 1893).

On the development of the idea of the Church since St. Augustin, see SCHAFF, Church History, vol. vi., pp. 520-536, and the literature there quoted.

CHAPTER CCLX.

CHURCH LAW.

The Church Law or Ecclesiastical Law (Kirchenrecht), as distinct from State Law or Civil Law, comprehends all the canons and regulations which the Church from time to time has adopted for its government, administration, worship and discipline. It embodies the governmental experience and wisdom of many ages, as the creeds of the Church embody its doctrinal belief. The disciplinary rules of the Church are called canons (κανόνες), in distinction from the doctrinal decrees (decreta) or dogmas of the Church, and from the laws (νόμοι, leges) of the State.

I. The oldest collections of ecclesiastical law pretend to be directly or indirectly of apostolic origin and sanction, but are clearly post-apostolic. They originated in the Orient, and make no reference to the Roman Church, though some claim a fictitious sanction from Bishop Clement of Rome. They exist in various forms, in Greek, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic MSS. The chief are the following:

(1) The DIDACHE, or TEACHING OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, probably of Syrian origin, from the end of the first or the beginning of the second century. It forms in language and spirit the bridge from the apostolic to the episcopal age, or between the Pastoral and the Ignatian Epistles. It contains a summary of moral instruction based on the Decalogue and the Sermon on the Mount; directions for the celebration of baptism and the eucharist, and concerning discipline and church offices; and concludes with an exhortation to watchfulness in view of the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the saints. This remarkable book was much used in the early Church, and then disappeared till it was rediscovered by Bryennios in 1873, in a convent of Constantinople, and first printed in 1884. The substance of it survived in the seventh book of the "Apostolical Constitutions."*

(2) The (pseudo-) APOSTOLICAL CONSTITUTIONS are the most important and complete clergyman's manual of the ancient Church. This work is in its literary form a pious fraud, and professes to be a bequest by all the Apostles dictated to the Roman Bishop Clement, but it is a gradual growth and was not completed till the middle of the fourth century in Syria. It is based upon the Bible, oral tradition, the Didache, just mentioned, and the Didascalía, or The Catholic Doctrine of the Twelve Apostles and Holy Disciples of Our Redeemer (which dates from the middle of the third century and is extant in a Syriac version in twenty-six chapters). It embodies also the decrees of early councils at Antioch, Neo-Cæsarea, Nicæa, Gangra, and Laodicea. The "Constitutions" contain, in eight books, moral exhortations, ecclesiastical laws and usages, and liturgical formularies. The compiler shows some sympathy with Semi-Arianism and Apollinarianism. Later interpolations were rejected as heretical by the second Trullan Council in 692. The Latin Church has only adopted the fifty canons appended to the eighth book.†

(3) The (pseudo-) APOSTOLICAL CANONS (fifty, afterwards eighty-five), drawn up, according to tradition, by Clement of Rome, are brief rules and prescriptions for the clergy, appended to the "Apostolic Constitutions," and are probably from the same author or compiler; for he refers to them in the 85th canon as among the sacred Scriptures. The Greek Church adopted the whole collection of eighty-five canons as authentic

* The MS. is now in the library of the Greek patriarch of Jerusalem. Editions and monographs by Schaff (The Teaching of the Twelve Apostles; or, The Oldest Church Manual; New York and Edinburgh, 3d revised ed. 1889), by Bryennios (in Greek), Harnack (in German), Jacquier (in French), and Savi (in Italian).

† Editions by Turrianus, Mansi, Harduin, Ueltzen (1853), Paul de Lagarde (1854 and 1862), Pitra (1864). Comp. Fr. Xav. Funk, Die Apostolischen Konstitutionen (Rottenburg, 1891).

and binding, but the Latin Church only the smaller collection of fifty canons.*

II. The CANON LAW, or CORPUS JURIS CANONICI, is the code of laws and usages of the Latin Church in the Middle Ages, and rules the Roman Church in great part to this day. It forms a parallel to the Justinian Corpus Juris Civilis. The material is derived from the Bible, the old Roman law, the writings of the Fathers, the decrees of the general councils, the decretal epistles and bulls of the popes. It is based on older collections, including the pseudo-Isidorian decretals. The foundation of this codification is the Decretum Gratiani, published at Bologna, 1150, which arranged, systematized and harmonized the discordant canons, and became a useful text-book of lectures in the universities.† This Decretum, or Liber Decretorum, is divided into three parts. The first part treats, in 101 Distinctiones, of the sources of the canon law, the clergy, ordination, consecration, the papal power. The second discusses, in 36 Causæ, different legal questions, church property and the marriage laws. The third, called Liber de Sacramentis, is devoted to the sacraments, feasts and fasts. The expounders of the canon law are called canonists or decretists, in distinction from the legalists or expounders of the Roman civil law.

* Editions by Mansi, Harduin, in most collections of church laws, and by Paul de Lagarde in Greek and Syriac (Lips., 1856). The following are specimens:

“CANON I.

“Let a Bishop be ordained by two or three Bishops.

“CANON II.

“Let a Presbyter, or Deacon, and the other clergy be ordained by one Bishop.

“CANON V.

“No Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon shall put away his wife, under pretext of religion; but if he put her away, let him be suspended; and, if he persist, let him be deposed.

“CANON VI.

“No Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon shall engage in worldly business; and, if he do, let him be deposed.

“CANON VII.

“If any Bishop, Presbyter, or Deacon shall celebrate the holy day of Easter before the vernal Equinox, as the Jews do, let him be deposed.”

† Gratian called it, Discordantium Canonum Concordia. He was a Camaldolensian monk, and taught church law in a convent at Bologna about the same time with Irnerius, the restorer of Roman jurisprudence, and teacher of the civil law. These two may be called the founders of the University of Bologna, which became for several centuries the nurse of civil and ecclesiastical law, with the proud device: “Bononia docet.”

The Decretum Gratiani was enlarged by the collections of several popes, Gregory IX. (1230), Boniface VIII. (1298), Clement V. (1313), John XXII. (1317), to which were added, in 1500, the Extravagantes communes (i.e., extra Decretum vagantes). These six collections make up the full Corpus juris canonici, and were officially edited under this title by a papal commission of Gregory XIII., in Rome, 1582, in 5 vols.

The Canon Law of Christian Rome and the Civil Law of heathen Rome have exerted an incalculable influence on the civilization of Europe. Rome, conquered by the barbarians, reconquered their children, and, by substituting the law for the sword, ruled the Christian world for many centuries. The Canon Law shares the virtues and faults of the papacy with which it rose and declined. It fortified the hierarchical theocracy of the Middle Ages. It attempted to regulate human life from the cradle to the grave by the sacramental acts of the priesthood. It protected the sanctity of marriage. It was a wholesome check upon the wild passions of the barbarians and the brutal force of despotic princes. It is animated by a spirit of justice and humanity; it acknowledges the brotherhood of men, and prepared the way for the modern science of international law. But it sanctions the persecution of heretics by fire and sword, and put a restraint upon the progress of thought. This overgrown code became at last a burden too heavy to be borne, like the traditions of the Jewish Elders which made void the Word of God (Matt. 15: 6), and like the yoke of the ceremonial law against which Peter protested at the Council of Jerusalem (Acts 15: 10).*

Luther burned the Canon Law together with the papal bull, Dec. 20, 1520. Calvin called it a barbarous code and a tyranny of conscience; he maintained that the laws of the Church must be subject to the law of Christ.† But the Canon Law survived

* "Customs and laws in every place,
Like a disease, an heirloom dread,
Still trail their curse from race to race,
And furtively abroad they spread.
To nonsense, reason's self they turn;
Beneficence becomes a pest;
Woe unto thee, that thou'rt a grandson born!
As for the law born with us, unexpressed,—
That law, alas! none careth to discern."

(From Goethe's Faust.)

† Instit., Book IV., ch. x., § 9: "Constitutiones quas vocant ecclesiasticas quibus Papa cum suis onerat ecclesiam, dicimus perniciosas esse et impias;

the Reformation. It has a permanent historical value, and many of its provisions on Church property, benefices, ordination, marriage, etc., were revised and re-enacted in Protestant State Churches, especially in Germany and England; while others were abrogated even in the Roman Church by the Council of Trent, and by later papal decretals, and papal concordats with modern States which have outgrown the hierarchical supremacy, demand independence in civil legislation, and protect freedom and progress.

III. The various Protestant Churches have their own constitutions and directories of Church polity and worship. The best organized Protestant Churches are the Episcopal Church of England and the United States, the Presbyterian Churches, and the Methodist Episcopal Church. While the Canon Law is the product of the Catholic Church independent of the State, the ecclesiastical legislation of Protestant State Churches is the joint product of Church and State and recognizes the equal or superior authority of the State. The constitutions of the Churches in the United States are purely ecclesiastical and denominational.

CHAPTER CCLXI.

COLLECTIONS AND MANUALS OF CHURCH LAW.

I. Collections:

Corpus Juris Canonici, first published in Rome, 1582, 5 vols. fol.; best critical edition by Æmilius (Emil) L. Richter, Leipzig, 1839; new ed. (ed. Lipsiensis secunda) by Æmilius Friedberg (Leipzig, B. Tauchnitz, 1879, 1881, 2 vols. fol.).

JOHN FULTON (Episcopalian): Index Canonum. The Greek Text. An English Translation and a Complete Digest of the Entire Code of Canon Law of the Undivided Primitive Church (New York, 1872; 3d ed. 1892, 393 pp.). A useful collection.

WILLIAM BRIGHT: Notes on the Canons of the First Four General Councils (Oxford, 1882). A good commentary on the œcumenical canons.

W. ANDREW HAMMOND: Definitions of Faith, and Canons of Discipline of the Six Œcumenical Councils (Oxford, 1843); an American reprint with adversarii nostri sanctas esse et salutare defendunt." § 11: "Sunt alia quoque duo non levia vitia, quæ in iisdem constitutionibus improbamus. Primum quod magna ex parte inutiles, interdum etiam ineptas observationes præscribunt: deinde quod immensa earum multitudine opprimuntur piæ conscientia, et in Judæismum quandam revolutæ umbris sic adhærescunt ut ad Christum nequeant pervenire." the addition of the constitutions and canons of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States (New York, 1850).

JOHN HENRY BLUNT: The Book of Church Law (London, 1872; 4th ed. revised by Sir W. G. T. Phillimore, 1885).

SIR ROBERT PHILLIMORE: Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (London, 1873-76, 2 vols.).

A Summary of the Laws and Regulations of the Church of Scotland (Edinburgh 1840, and more recent editions). Contains the Acts of the Scotch Parliament relating to the Church, the First and Second Books of Discipline, the Form of Process, Pardowan's Collections, etc.

II. Books on the theory of Church Law. See full lists in Friedberg, pp. 4-6, and in Kihn, pp. 520-531.

(a) Roman Catholic authors:

FERD. WALTER: Lehrbuch des Kirchenrechts aller christlichen Confessionen (Bonn, 1822; 14th ed. 1871).

H. GERLACH: Lehrbuch des katholischen Kirchenrechts (1869; 5th ed. by Fr. Xav. Schulte, Paderborn, 1890). A brief but convenient manual.

G. PHILLIPS: Kirchenrecht (Regensburg, 1845; 3d ed. 1855 sqq., 7 vols.).

F. H. VERING: Lehrbuch des katholischen, orientalischen, und protestantischen Kirchenrechts, mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Deutschland, Oesterreich und die Schweiz (Freiburg i.B., 1876; 3d ed. 1893).

For the history of the Canon Law, see FR. VON SCHULTE (Old Cath. Prof. in Bonn): Die Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des kanonischen Rechts von Gratian bis auf die Gegenwart (Stuttgart, 1875-80, 3 vols.).

(b) Protestant authors:

J. H. BÖHMER: Jus Ecclesiasticum Protestantium (Halle, 1714; 5th ed. 1756 sqq., 5 vols. 4to). The first great Protestant work on Church Law.

EMIL L. RICHTER: Lehrbuch des kathol. und evangel. Kirchenrechts (Leipzig, 1841; 8th ed. 1877-86, 2 vols.).

PAUL HINSCHIUS: Das Kirchenrecht der Katholiken und Protestanten in Deutschland (Berlin, 1869-88, 4 vols.).

EMIL FRIEDBERG: Lehrbuch des katholischen und evangelischen Kirchenrechts (Leipzig, 1879; 3d ed. 1889).—R. SOHM: Kirchenrecht, 1892.

(c) American works:

MURRAY HOFFMAN (Episcopalian): Law of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States (New York, 1850); Ecclesiastical Law in the State of New York (New York, 1868); Ritual Law of the Church (New York, 1872).

J. W. ANDREWS (Episcopalian): Church Law of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States (New York, 1883).

CHARLES HODGE (Presbyterian): Discussions in Church Polity (New York, 1878).

J. A. HODGE: What is Presbyterian Church Law? (Philadelphia.)

WILLIAM STRONG (Presbyterian): Two Lectures upon the Relation of Civil Law to Ecclesiastical Polity, Property, and Discipline (New York, 1875).

The Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (new ed. Philadelphia, 1893, with the amendments adopted in 1891).

SAMUEL J. BAIRD (Presbyterian): A Collection of the Acts, Deliverances, and Testimonies of the Supreme Judicatory of the Presbyterian Church in America to 1858 (1856; 2d ed., Philadelphia, 1858; Old School from 1837-58).

WILLIAM E. MOORE (Presbyterian): The Presbyterian Digest of 1886: A Compend of the Acts and Deliverances of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America (Philadelphia, 1886).

W. A. ALEXANDER (Southern Presbyterian Church): A Digest of the Acts and Proceedings of the General Assembly, etc. (Richmond, Va., 1888).

CHAPTER CCLXII.

CHURCH POLITY.

We may distinguish the following forms of church polity in the order of historical development:

I. The APOSTOLIC Church government from the day of Pentecost to the death of St. John (A.D. 30–100). Christ undoubtedly founded a visible Church on earth (Matt. 16:18), which appeared as a distinct society on the day of Pentecost, and appointed officers (Apostles) and two sacraments (Baptism and the Lord's Supper).

Out of the apostolate grew gradually the following officers: Apostles proper, Prophets, Evangelists, for the Church at large; Presbyters or Bishops, and Deacons (with female Deaconesses), for the local congregations. The former are extraordinary officers, necessary for the founding of the Church; the latter are ordinary officers, necessary for its preservation. The original identity of Presbyters or Elders, and Bishops or Superintendents, is very evident from a number of passages of the New Testament, the Didache, and the Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians, and is acknowledged by all scholars.

II. CONGREGATIONAL EPISCOPACY, with a bishop at the head of each local church, and a number of presbyters and deacons under him. The Episcopate was raised above the primitive Presbyterate as a permanent presidency. The Ignatian Epistles (Shorter Greek recension), between 107 and 118, first distinguish between the Presbyter and the Bishop. Christ is the one universal Bishop of all the churches; the human bishop is the vicar of Christ and center of unity for each congregation; while the college of presbyters and deacons around him are the successors of the Apostles. No distinction of order is made between the bishops, nor is there a trace of a primacy. Ignatius is the first to use the term "Catholic Church," as if episcopacy and catholicity sprung up simultaneously.

III. DIOCESAN EPISCOPACY makes the bishop the head of several congregations. It appears towards the end of the second century in the writings of Irenæus and Tertullian, and more fully in Cyprian, who is the typical high-churchman of the ante-Nicene age, and represents the solidarity of the Episcopate, in connection with, and yet independent of, the Roman see, as the center of ecclesiastical unity. The dioceses, however, were very small as to the number of congregations; for Cyprian could assemble, in 258, a synod of 87 bishops in proconsular Africa, and the schismatical Donatists held, in 308, a council of 270 bishops at Carthage. Some were only congregational bishops over single churches. In larger cities there was even more than one bishop; for Epiphanius says that "Alexandria never had two bishops, as the other cities had."*

IV. The METROPOLITAN and PATRIARCHAL system was developed after Constantine, when Christianity became the religion of the Roman Empire. It was to a large extent conformed to the political divisions into pretorian prefectures, dioceses, provinces, cities and parishes. The apostolic mother churches (sedes apostolicæ, matrices ecclesiæ), such as those at Jerusalem, Antioch, Alexandria, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome, were always held in special reverence as the chief bearers of the pure Church tradition, but acquired now also a political importance (with the exception of Jerusalem). The bishops of the chief cities were called Metropolitans in the East, or Archbishops in the West, and presided over the bishops of a province as primi inter pares. Over the Metropolitans and Archbishops rose the Patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch, Rome, Jerusalem, and Constantinople. The title "Patriarch" was originally an honorary title for all bishops, but after the Council of Constantinople (381) it was restricted to the five mentioned. They had the oversight of two or more provinces or eparchies; they ordained the metropolitans; conducted the œcumenical councils, and united in themselves the supreme legislative and executive power of the hierarchy. They were equal in rights and jurisdiction, but differed in the extent of their diocese and in influence. Rome was first, Alexandria second, and Antioch third in rank. After the founding of Constantinople (330), the Bishop of this city, as the second capital of the empire, competed with Rome for the primacy of honor. The fourth œcumenical council at Chal-

* Hæres. lxxviii., c. 7. Compare Hatch, The Growth of Church Institutions, p. 17.

cedon (451) ordained in its 28th canon that the bishop of New Rome, where the emperor and the senate resided, should enjoy the same privileges as ancient imperial Rome, and be the second after her (in honor, not in jurisdiction, which was equal).

From this dates the conflict between the Patriarch and the Pope. The Bishop of Rome protested against that canon and refused to be put on a par with the eastern Patriarchs. Constantinople owed its ecclesiastical power to its political significance; while the Roman see goes back to the apostolic age and claimed to derive its authority from Peter.

The Greek Church adheres to the Patriarchal oligarchy of the œcumenical councils, and added to the four Patriarchs of the East the Patriarch of Moscow, who was succeeded by the holy synod of St. Petersburg under the presidency of the Czar of Russia.

V. The PAPAL MONARCHY, ruled by the Bishop of Rome, who claims to be the successor of Peter and the Vicar of Christ, and as such the head of the Church universal. The Papacy is the most complete and imposing organization which the world has ever seen. It rests on the double significance of the city of Rome as the political metropolis of the old Roman Empire, and as the mother-church of western Christendom consecrated by the martyrdom of Peter and Paul. It gradually grew with the conversion of the barbarians, and controlled the history of Europe during the Middle Ages. It lost by the Reformation the most vigorous and progressive nations, but it still commands from the Vatican with infallible authority the largest portion of Christendom. After a long conflict between the episcopal or the Gallican and the curial or ultramontane Schools—that is, between a constitutional and an absolute monarchy—the Roman hierarchy was completed by the Vatican Council of 1870, which declared the pope to be the Bishop of bishops and the infallible and final judge in all matters of faith and discipline.

VI. ANGLICAN EPISCOPACY, with two archbishops (Canterbury and York), and the royal supremacy (which Henry VIII. substituted for the authority of the pope). It is modified and improved in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, which has no political headship, is independent of the State, self-supporting and self-governing, and admits the laity to a share in the legislative functions of the lower house of representatives.

VII. The EPISCOPAL GOVERNMENT of the Swedish and Danish Lutheran Churches, of the Moravians, and of the Episcopal Methodists, is equivalent to a general superintendency, and claims no divine right or essential distinction of function from the presbyterate.

VIII. The PRESBYTERIAN POLITY dates from Calvin, and was more fully developed in the Reformed Churches of France, Holland and Scotland. It is based upon the equality of ministers or presbyter-bishops under the sole headship of Christ, and the co-operation of the laity. It distinguishes several judicatories, congregational, presbyterial, and synodical. The Church Session consists of the pastor and ruling elders of a particular congregation, and attends to the maintenance of the local government. The Presbytery consists of all the ministers and one ruling elder from each congregation within a certain district, and exercises jurisdiction over that district. The Synod consists of ministers and lay delegates from the Presbyteries. The General Assembly is the highest judicatory in all matters of doctrine, worship and discipline, but does not claim infallibility for any of its decisions, and must submit all constitutional changes to the Presbyteries for ratification.

IX. The Lutheran Church in the United States unites the Presbyterian and Synodical government with Congregational independency; but some divines are in favor of restoring the episcopal superintendency, after the model of Sweden.

X. CONGREGATIONAL or INDEPENDENT POLITY lodges the government of the Church in each congregation or society of believers, who voluntarily, by mutual agreement and by covenant with God, confederate or unite for purposes of worship and Christian activity. It maintains two offices, that of bishop or pastor, who guides the Church by instruction and counsel, and that of deacons or helpers, who have charge of the secularities of the congregation and the relief of the poor. The churches and ministers associate in councils, conferences, associations and consociations, which have moral but not legislative authority. This form of Church government dates from the reign of Elizabeth and is adopted by the Independents of England, the Congregationalists of America, the Baptists, the Quakers, a branch of the Methodists, the Disciples of Christ, the Unitarians, and the Universalists.

CHAPTER CCLXIII.

LITERATURE ON CHURCH POLITY.

1. On the apostolic Church government and the origin of episcopacy, see ROTHE (1837), ZAHN, LIGHTFOOT, RITSCHL, HATCH, RENAN, HARNACK, JACOB, and GORE.

2. Older works by RICHARD HOOKER (Ecclesiastical Polity, 1594), JOSEPH BINGHAM (Antiquities of the Christian Church, 1710 sqq.), etc. See lists in SCHAFF, Church History, vol. i., pp. 481-484.

3. ARTHUR P. STANLEY: Christian Institutions (London and New York, 1881).

EDWIN HATCH: The Growth of Church Institutions (London and New York, 1881; 2d ed. 1888).

4. Denominational Church Manuals: Episcopalian by FRANCIS VINTON (New York, 1870); Presbyterian by SAMUEL MILLER, JOEL PARKER, T. RALSTON SMITH, J. A. HODGE; Methodist by ROBERT EMORY (New York, 1864), W. PIERCE (London, 1873); Congregational by H. M. DEXTER (Boston, 1865, 5th ed. 1879), and J. E. ROY (Chicago, 1869, and often since); Baptist by FRANCIS WAYLAND (New York, 1857).

CHAPTER CCLXIV.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The relation of Church and State belongs to the outward condition of the Church in this world, and materially affects the interests of both. It is a part of the theory of Church Polity.

According to the Bible, the two powers, like the family from which they spring, are divinely appointed, the Church for the spiritual welfare, the State for the temporal welfare—that is, for the protection of life and property and all the natural rights of man. Hence the civil magistrate, as well as the clergyman, is a servant of God (Rom. 13: 1-4). The State belongs to the kingdom of nature; the Church, to the kingdom of grace; but nature prepares for grace, and both work together for the same end. The law is the weapon of the one; the gospel, the weapon of the other. Offenses against the State deserve temporal punishment; offenses against the Church deserve spiritual punishment (admonition, suspension, excommunication).

Christ draws a clear line of distinction between the two powers, and requires us to render to God and to Cæsar what is due to each. But in history, the two have often been confounded or brought into hostile collision. A faithful observance of Christ's wise words in answer to the Pharisees on the question of tribute (Matt. 22 : 21) would have prevented religious wars and saved rivers of blood.

There are four different relations which have been heretofore developed :

I. The State hostile to the Church. In the Roman Empire during the first three centuries. The age of persecution. But while the Church was oppressed from without by the heathen government, she was independent within in building up her creed and polity.

II. The State ruling over the Church. Cæsaropapism, Erastianism. The old Byzantine, and the modern Russian, Empire, where the Czar is pope ; also the national Protestant Churches of Europe, where the secular ruler is the highest ecclesiastical authority ("summus episcopus" in Germany ; "supreme governor" in England).

III. The Church ruling the State. The hierarchy, copied from the Old Testament theocracy. It was (and is still) the theory of the Roman Catholic Church, and led to the conflicts between the pope and the emperor and kings. It was most fully carried out in the States of the Church (Kirchenstaat), with Rome as the capital and the pope as the temporal and spiritual sovereign ; but it came to an end in 1870, when Rome was made the capital of the united kingdom of Italy, and the pope was confined to the possession of the Vatican, though with undiminished spiritual power.

IV. Independence of Church and State on a footing of friendly recognition. This is the condition in the United States, where all Christian Churches and sects are on the same footing before the law, equally protected by the law, but equally independent of State control in the management of their affairs, and are thrown upon the voluntary principle and the duty and privilege of self-support and self-government. This separation secures entire religious freedom and is most favorable for the development of the energies of the Church. It is the best, though not the final, status.*

* Cardinal Gibbons, at a banquet of the Catholic Club in Philadelphia, Feb. 6, 1893, made the following sensible speech in response to the toast "Church and State" :

"I am firmly persuaded, both by study and observation, that the Church

V. The ultimate relation of Church and State will be the perfect kingdom of God on the new earth, or a universal Christocracy of righteousness and peace.

LITERATURE.

EMIL FRIEDBERG: Die Grenzen zwischen Staat und Kirche und die Garantien gegen deren Verletzung (Tübingen, 1872).

MARCO MINGHETTI: Stato e chiesa (Milan, 2d ed. 1878; German translation by the Empress Frederick, Staat und Kirche, Gotha, 1881). Defends Cavour's principle of l'église libre dans l'état libre.

ATTILIO BRUNIALTI: Biblioteca di Scienze Politiche (Torino, 1892, vol. viii.). The eighth volume contains a number of essays by various authors in different countries on Church and State.

PHILIP SCHAFF: Church and State in the United States; or, The American Idea of Religious Liberty and its Practical Effects. With Official Documents (New York, 1888). Translated into Italian by Brunialti, 1892.

A. TAYLOR INNES: Church and State: A Historical Handbook (Edinburgh and New York, 1893).

On the relation of Protestantism to religious liberty, compare SCHAFF'S Church History, vol. vi., pp. 50-86; and vol. vii., pp. 693-712.

CHAPTER CCLXV.

TOLERATION AND LIBERTY.

The relation of Church and State is closely connected with religious liberty. The union of the spiritual and secular power is always more or less a restraint on liberty, and in its extreme form leads to persecution by fire and sword; while the peaceful separation of the two allows the full exercise of liberty within the limits of public order and peace.

State-churchism may be, and has in modern times become, is more sturdy in her growth, and is more prosperous in her career, when she is free to pursue her divine mission without any interference on the part of the State. Here, thank God, the Church is free and therefore she is prosperous. Here the Church and the State run in parallel lines, each assisting the other, and neither of them unwarrantably intruding on the domain of the other. Here the Constitution holds over the Church its protecting arm without interfering in ecclesiastical affairs.

"We have no State religion or official Church in the United States. But it would be a great mistake to draw as an inference from this fact that therefore our Government is anti-Christian or anti-religious. I venture to say, on the contrary, that there is no commonwealth under the sun more strongly permeated by Christian and religious principles than the Government of the United States.

"For my part, I believe the relations between the Church and State are as close and cordial as we should desire. All we ask is a fair field and no special favor. I do not wish to see the day when the State will be called on to build our churches and subsidize our clergy. For it were to tolerant towards dissenting sects, but to the same extent has the bond of union been relaxed. Toleration may proceed from necessity, or from prudence, or from indifference, or from liberality and enlarged views of truth and right.*

But there is a wide difference between toleration and liberty. Toleration is the gift of man; liberty is the gift of God. The one is a concession and an expedient; the other a right and a principle. Toleration implies, more or less, censure and disapproval; it may be extended or withdrawn by the power which grants it. The most despotic governments tolerate or endure what they dislike but cannot prevent. Russia and Turkey are tolerant towards subjects too numerous or too useful to be killed off or to be exiled, but they strictly forbid propagandism and punish apostates from the State religion with exile and death. In a free country, no self-respecting man asks to be tolerated for his religious opinions or sacred convictions. "Toleration is first sought and granted as a favor, then demanded and conceded as a right, and at last spurned as an insult."

Liberty is the greatest gift of God to man.† It is a natural, fundamental and inalienable right of every man created in the image of God. The most precious of all liberties is religious liberty. It is rooted in the sacredness of conscience, which is the voice of God in man, and above the reach and control of human authority. It is a law above all human laws that "we ought to obey God rather than man." Liberty of conscience requires liberty of worship. Despots allow the one because they cannot help it, but deny the other. Religion in its nature is voluntary, and ceases to be religion in proportion as it is forced. God desires free worshippers and hates hypocrites.

The principle of religious liberty is proclaimed in the New be feared that, as soon as the Government began to support the Church, it would dictate to us what doctrines we ought to preach. And in proportion as State patronage would increase, the devotion and patronage of the faithful would wax cold. If it is a great wrong to muzzle the press, it would be a great wrong to muzzle the pulpit."

But the same Cardinal defends the restoration of the temporal power of the pope. The Roman Catholics demand and enjoy all the liberty they can get in Protestant countries, on Protestant principles, but they deny liberty to Protestants in Roman Catholic countries, on Roman Catholic principles.

* In the last sense, toleration or tolerance, as freedom from bigotry and forbearance towards the dissenting opinions of others, may be a positive virtue.

† So says even Pope Leo XIII. in his Encyclical, Libertas præstantissimum naturæ donum, issued June 20, 1888.

Testament, and was defended by the ante-Nicene Fathers, such as Justin Martyr, Tertullian and Lactantius, against heathen persecution, and by the Nicene Fathers, as Athanasius and Hilary, during the Arian persecution. It was acknowledged in the Toleration Edict of Constantine (313), but soon forgotten by his successors, the Christian emperors, who persecuted the heathen religion and Christian heretics and schismatics, as their heathen predecessors had persecuted the Christian religion. The Catholic Church, although holding the principle, "Ecclesia non sinit sanguinem," admitted and defended the right and duty of the civil power to punish heresy, as a crime and murder of the soul, with fire and sword.

The greatest divines, under the lead of Augustin and Thon as Aquinas, sanctioned the principle of persecution which condemned thousands of heretics to a cruel death, and made the annals of the Spanish Inquisition the most infamous in the history of cruelty.

The Reformation was the first breach in the external unity and exclusiveness of the Roman Church. But the reign of intolerance continued for a long time even among Protestants. Romanism and Protestantism fought for supremacy and excluded each other from their respective territories; and both persecuted heretics and dissenters, like Anabaptists and Unitarians. The burning of Servetus under the eye of Calvin was approved as a righteous act of the Christian magistrate by all the surviving reformers, even the gentle Melancthon. The Lutherans and Episcopalians practiced intolerance and exclusion against all dissenters, Protestant as well as Catholic, as far as they had the power.

The principle of parity for Catholics and Protestants in one country and under the same civil government was first recognized in Switzerland (1531), and, after the terrible Thirty Years' War, in Germany by the Westphalia Treaty (1648), but confined to three parties (Romanists, Lutherans, and German Reformed). In France Henry IV. secured a legal status to the Huguenots, his former associates, by the famous Edict of Nantes (1598); but it was revoked by his grandson, Louis XIV., in 1685, who aimed at the complete annihilation of the Reformed Church. The government of Holland condemned and expelled the Arminians, at the Synod of Dort (1619), but recalled them after the death of Prince Maurice of Nassau (1625), and has since that time been a protector of religious liberty. In England, the conflict between prelacy and puritanism for exclusive dominion lasted till the fall of the Stuarts and the peaceful revolution of 1688, when William of Orange was called to the throne, and issued the Act of Toleration, which secured to orthodox Protestant dissenters, under certain restrictions, a legal existence and the right of public worship and self-government. The same right, with full civil privileges, was in the nineteenth century extended to Unitarians and Roman Catholics. The United States of America went a step further in the federal constitution of 1787 by abolishing "religious tests as a qualification to any office or public trust," and in the first amendment to the constitution (1789), by forbidding Congress "to make any law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

This principle of religious freedom and separation of Church and State is slowly, but irresistibly, making progress in Europe, and is becoming more and more an essential part of modern civilization. It develops the power of self-government which is inherent in the Christian Church. It favors, indeed, the multiplication of sects; but honest division is preferable to an enforced uniformity which breeds hypocrisy and infidelity. The principle of liberty secures also the possibility of a reunion of Christendom on the solid basis of freedom and voluntary consent.

LITERATURE.

Compare the literature in the preceding chapter.

ALEX. RUD. VINET (Professor of Theology in Lausanne, the modern Calvin, and the pioneer of the doctrine of religious liberty and the separation of Church and State as a guarantee for it; b. 1797, d. 1847): De la liberté des cultes (1826); and Sur la manifestation des convictions religieuses et sur la séparation de l'église et de l'état (Paris, 1842).

PHILIP SCHAFF: The Progress of Religious Freedom as shown in the History of Toleration Acts (New York, 1889, pp. 126). With the texts of the principal toleration Acts.

CHAPTER CCLXVI.

HOMILETIC OR KERYCTIC.

Homiletic is derived from ὁμιλία, intercourse, communion; instruction, lecture (from ὁμός, joint, common, or ὁμοῦ, together, and ἵλη or εἵλη, a crowd, a band). A homily designates usually only one kind of sermon, viz., a familiar discourse on a Scripture text, as distinct from an elaborate artistic oration (λόγος) on a theme.

Keryctic is from κήρυγμα, κηρύσσω, the Scripture terms for proclaiming the gospel as a herald of God or Christ (κήρυξ, præco), Matt. 11 : 1; 12 : 41; Mark 1 : 38; Luke 11 : 32; Rom. 10 : 15; 1 Cor. 1 : 21; Titus 1 : 3; 2 Tim. 4 : 17; 1 Pet. 3 : 19; etc.

Homiletic is the theory of pulpit eloquence, or of preaching. It is rhetoric applied to the pulpit, or sacred rhetoric as distinguished from general rhetoric. It deals with the composition and delivery of sermons. The general laws of speech and delivery are the same, and have their origin in the constitution of our intellectual and moral nature, but they are modified by the subject and purpose.

Eloquence is the art of persuasion and conviction by means of speech. It is practical in its aim. Science acts upon the intellect, art upon the imagination, eloquence upon the will. Eloquence uses argument, illustration and appeal, with a view to influence the mind and produce action. It is logic set on fire. Hence the secret of its power lies in the intense earnestness of conviction, in the magnetism and electricity, of the speaker. Action, action, action is the first and last virtue of eloquence. Only a heart full of fire can kindle fire.

Of all kinds of eloquence, religious eloquence is the highest, both for its matter and aim. Preaching is a divinely appointed means of persuading, instructing, converting and saving men. A good and effective sermon is a communication of spiritual life. It is the testimony of truth in the name and by the authority of God. It goes to the quick of the conscience and to the mysterious point where finite man is connected with the infinite God. A preacher is a prophet who reveals the secrets of God's will and of man's heart. There is no greater work in this world than that of the preacher. It was the work of the Son of God himself.

Homiletic must deal first with the matter, and then with the manner, of preaching. The matter is taken from the Bible and Christian experience; the manner must adjust itself to the general laws of literary composition and effective delivery.

The word of God is the chief instrumentality for saving men. "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth" (John 17 : 17). "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God" (1 Peter 1 : 23). "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth" (James 1 : 18). This Word must be preached and heard. "How shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" (Rom. 10: 15.) Conversions by the mere reading of the Scriptures are very rare exceptions. It is living Christianity proclaimed by living preachers that always has been, and will be to the end of time, the great missionary agency.

Preaching has a powerful rival in the daily press, but it keeps pace with it, and will continue with increasing power as long as men are born in time and for eternity, as long as they marry and are given in marriage, as long as they require nourishment for their spiritual hunger and encouragement in the struggle with temptation and sin, as long as they suffer in body and mind, and need comfort and an assured hope of immortality and glory in the face of death and the lonely journey to the other world.

CHAPTER CCLXVII.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF PREACHING.

Different wants and circumstances necessitate different kinds of preaching.

1. A plain testimony of divine facts and saving truths, with a personal application to the hearers. Such was the missionary discourse in the apostolic age. Peter's pentecostal sermon, simple, devoid of dogma and ornamentation, but earnest, pointed, forcible and most effective.

2. A homily, or expository and hortatory discourse on some portion of Scripture.

3. A regularly constructed oration with introduction, theme, parts and peroration, for public worship on the Lord's Day, and for special occasions. This is subject to all the rules of rhetoric, but its efficacy depends not so much on the observance of these rules as upon the vital truth and the vital force in its exposition and application.

French rhetoricians make nice distinctions between homilies, conferences, discourses, and sermons.

CHAPTER CCLXVIII.

HOMILETICAL HINTS.

1. A good sermon grows out of the secret communion of the soul with God, the study of the Bible and other good books, knowledge of human nature, and living intercourse with the people.

2. Prepare your sermon on your knees as well as at your study-desk, and reproduce it in the pulpit under the fresh inspiration of the audience.

3. Write out your sermons in full, or at least the leading thoughts. The Lord always rewards industry and faithfulness, but idleness and neglect have no promise.

4. A natural, clear, logical arrangement is half the sermon.

5. Commit the thought, if not the words, to memory, so as to be master of the manuscript, whether you read it or not.

6. The Bible supplies suitable themes and texts for all occasions. Like a laden tree, the more it is shaken the more abundant the fall of fruit.

7. The pulpit style is popular, direct, forcible and practical; not vulgar or superficial, but noble, chaste, dignified, and modeled after the discourses and parables of Christ.

8. Avoid all display of learning, and make your reading directly subservient to the practical aim. Think not of the few scholars and critics, but of the common people hungry for spiritual nourishment.

9. Aim at the conversion of sinners and the edification of believers.

10. Preach first to yourself before you preach to others, and your sermons will have double weight with your hearers.

11. Avoid personalities in the pulpit, and attacks on infidels, who are seldom present.

12. Make no apologies for Christianity, but take for granted that it is the truth and the power unto salvation. Suggest no doubts which might disturb devotion.

13. Preach Christ and his gospel, not dogma and theology.

14. Preach from the heart to the heart.

“Nothing which does not burn itself can kindle a flame in anything else.” (Gregory I.)

15. Address your hearers as if it were the last occasion for you and them.

“I preached as never sure to preach again,
And as a dying man to dying men.”—RICHARD BAXTER.

16. Honesty and earnestness rather than genius and eloquence are the secret of success in the pulpit.

17. Learn from all good preachers, but do not imitate any; be yourself, and work out your own individuality.

18. Aim to please God, and not men.

19. Be brief, and stop when the interest is at its height. The Sermon on the Mount, the parables, and Peter's pentecostal sermon were short. Brevity is the soul of a good speech as well as of wit. Long sermons must be justified by special occasions.

20. “Get up freshly;
Open your mouth widely;
Be done quickly.”*

21. “Begin low:
Proceed slow:
Aim higher,—
Take fire;
When most impressed
Be self-possessed.”

22. After the sermon ask no one for his opinion; shut your ears against praise, but be open to censure from friend or foe; keep the blame to yourself, and give the glory to God.

23. Preachers whose sermons are worth studying: Chrysostom, Augustin.—St. Bernard.—Baxter, Jeremy Taylor, South, John Wesley, Robert Hall, Chalmers, Guthrie, F. W. Robertson, J. H. Newman, Liddon, Spurgeon, Alex. McLaren.—E. D. Griffin, John M. Mason, H. Bushnell, H. W. Beecher, R. D. Hitchcock, Phillips Brooks.—F. W. Krummacher, Theremin, Tholuck, Ahlfeld, Kögel, Gerok.—Bossuet, Massillon, Saurin, Adolphe Monod, Bersier.

* “*Tritt frisch auf;
Mach's Maul auf;
Hör bald auf.*”—LUTHER.

CHAPTER CCLXIX.

HISTORY OF THE PULPIT TO THE TIME OF THE REFORMATION.

PANIEL: Geschichte der christlichen Beredtsamkeit (1839, only till Chrysostom and Augustin).—HOPPIN: Homiletics (1881), pp. 13–242.—BROADUS: History of Preaching (1876).—CHRISTLIEB: Geschichte der Predigt (1888), in Herzog,² vol. xviii., pp. 466–653 (disproportionately long for an encyclopædia, but very valuable).—For the French pulpit: VINET: Histoire de la prédication parmi les Réformés de France au xvii. siècle (1860); VINCENT: Histoire de la prédication protestante de langue française au xix. siècle (1871); A. HUREL: Les orateurs sacrés à la cour de Louis XIV. (Paris, 1873, 2 vols.).—For the English pulpit: KEMPE: The Classic Preachers of the English Church (1878, 2 vols.).—For American preachers: SPRAGUE: Annals of the American Pulpit (New York, 1866–69, 9 vols.; a 10th vol. remains unpublished).

The history of preaching runs parallel with the history of Christian worship and Christian life. Every age and every Christian nation has its own style of preaching. Chief among them are the Greek, Roman, French, German, English, Scotch, and American styles. Italy and Spain have few great preachers.

I. Apostolic preaching. Its theme: Christ the Messiah and Saviour from sin and death, crucified, raised up, and ever-living. The gift of teaching (διδασκαλία) and the gift of prophesying (προφητεία). The extraordinary gift of tongues (γλωσσολαλία) on the day of Pentecost and in the church of Corinth was an act of worship addressed to God rather than to the people.*

The birthday of the Church was also the birthday of the Christian sermon under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit.

The sermons of Peter and Paul, in the Acts, are models for simplicity, spiritual force and wise adaptation to circumstances. Peter, addressing Jews, showed the fulfillment of prophecy in which they believed, and his pentecostal sermon resulted in the conversion of three thousand souls. Stephen's apology before the Sanhedrin is a good specimen of an historical sermon with a practical application. Paul, addressing the Greeks on the Areopagus, appealed to the religious consciousness and took his text from a heathen poet. He required of every presbyter or bishop that he should be apt to teach (διδασκτικός). But preaching was not confined to ordained ministers. Every disciple who had the gift of speech was an evangelist and told the story of Jesus as the mariner tells of his rescue from shipwreck, and the soldier of his escape from death on the battle-field.

* See Schaff, Church History, vol. i., pp. 230–243 and 436–439.

II. The ante-Nicene age. The oldest extant homily after the apostolic age is the so-called Second Epistle of Clement of Rome, from the middle of the second century, which has been recently recovered in full (1875). It is far inferior to the apostolic sermons and has no literary value, but is inspired by moral earnestness and strong faith. The unknown author, probably a Roman Christian, addressed the hearers as "brothers and sisters," and closes with this doxology: "To the only God invisible, the Father of truth, who sent forth unto us the Saviour and Prince of immortality, through whom also He made manifest unto us the truth and the heavenly life, to Him be the glory forever and ever. Amen."

Origen, the father of exegesis, is also the father of the biblical homily, as a running exposition and application of a Scripture text. He shows an extraordinary familiarity with the Bible, and introduced the ingenious but arbitrary method of allegorizing. He was invited, even before his ordination, by friendly bishops in Jerusalem and Cæsarea "to expound the sacred Scriptures publicly in the church," but his enemy, Bishop Alexander of Alexandria, disapproved of it; and preaching was afterwards forbidden to the laity and regarded as an exclusive privilege of the clergy, especially of the bishop. Even the deacons lost the right of preaching in the course of the third century.

From Justin Martyr we learn that the leading officer of the congregation read every Sunday a portion of the apostolic and prophetic writings and added in a free speech an exhortation and practical conclusion. Tertullian's moral essays on Prayer, Penitence, Patience, etc., closely resemble sermons, and are original, fresh, forcible and sententious, but often obscure. Cyprian was an elegant and popular preacher, but his sermons are lost.

III. The Greek Pulpit. The regular sermon as a work of rhetorical art dates from the Nicene age, and was modeled after the heathen orators, from Demosthenes down to Libanius. Basil the Great, bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia (d. 379), Gregory Nazianzen (d. 390), Gregory of Nyssa (d. 394), John Chrysostom (d. 407). Add Ephraem (d. 378), the most fertile theological author, poet and preacher of the Syrian Church. The sermons of this period are more eloquent, theological and polemical than those of the ante-Nicene age, and partake of the virtues and vices of the heathen rhetoric in its declining stage. They abound in extravagant eulogies of martyrs and saints and the ascetic life.

John of the Golden Mouth (Chrysostomos), as posterity called him, is by far the greatest orator of the Greek Church, and the model of a fearless court preacher. He was a pupil of Libanius, but took Paul for his model. The sermons which he preached as presbyter at Antioch and as bishop at Constantinople are expository homilies on Genesis, the Psalms, the Gospels of Matthew and John, the Acts, and the Epistles of Paul. He delivered also discourses on separate texts of Scripture, on Church festivals, eulogies of apostles and martyrs, and twenty-one orations on the statues of the Emperor Theodosius and Flacilla, his wife (which in a popular revolt against the excess of taxation were thrown down and dragged through the streets of Antioch so as to enrage the emperor and endanger the destruction of the city). Chrysostom was not free from the defects of the artificial rhetoric of Libanius, and indulges in fulsome glorification of dead martyrs and living men; but he was mighty in the Scriptures, intensely in earnest, fruitful in thought, illustration and application, and fearless in rebuking vice in high and low places. He held his hearers spellbound to the close. They manifested their admiration sometimes by noisy applause, as in a theater, and when he protested against it they applauded all the more his eloquent rebuke. He was a martyr of the pulpit. When Eudoxia, the ambitious, intriguing and vicious empress, ordered the erection of her own statue in silver for public adoration, Chrysostom publicly rebuked the act on the commemoration day of John the Baptist, and let the imprudent words escape his lips: "Again Herodias is raging! Again she is dancing! Again she demands the head of John on a platter!" He was sent into exile, and died, as he had lived, giving "glory to God for all things." Dante assigns to him a place in Paradise at the side of Nathan the prophet, who roused the conscience of David to a sense of his great sin, but he did it by indirect preaching through a parable.

IV. The Latin Pulpit. Hilary (d. 366), Ambrose (d. 397), Augustin (d. 430), Peter Chrysologus (d. 450), Maximus of Turin (d. 465), Pope Leo I. (d. 461), and Gregory I. (d. 604). Augustin, who was helped in his conversion by the sermons of Ambrose and the singing of hymns, preached often daily, especially during Lent, without much preparation but never without prayer, on the Psalms, on the Gospel of John, on sacred seasons, and on different texts of the Old and New Testaments, from a profound knowledge of the Bible, and an equally profound experience of sin and grace.

Pope Leo is the first Roman bishop whose Latin sermons (ninety-eight in number) have come down to us. They are inferior to Augustin's homilies in originality and depth, but surpass them in elegance of diction. He celebrated annually his elevation to the chair of Peter by a memorial sermon in the full consciousness of the dignity and importance of his office.

Gregory I. followed Augustin, but moderated his theology in a semi-Pelagianizing spirit. His homilies on the Gospels, twenty-two on Ezekiel, and his allegorical, practical commentary on Job, together with his Pastoral Theology, were much used in the Middle Ages.

V. The Pulpit of the Middle Ages. This is comparatively meager, as the Church was engaged chiefly in the conversion of the barbarians, who had to be treated like children. Hence the sermons or homilies were mostly brief missionary addresses, or expositions of the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer and the Ten Commandments. Alcuin and Paulus Diaconus and others, by direction of Charles the Great, made collections of sermons (Homilaria) from Ambrose, Augustin, Leo, Gregory and others for priests, very few of whom were capable of preparing original sermons.*

The rarer the preachers, even among bishops, the greater was their power. Pope Urban II. roused the chivalry of Europe to the first crusade at the Council of Clermont (1095) by a sermon, after which the crowd unanimously broke out in the cry: "God wills it! God wills it!"

St. Bernard of Clairvaux (d. 1153) was the most eloquent and effective preacher of the Middle Ages. He preached to monks in the convent, to bishops and cardinals in the cathedral, to miscellaneous assemblies in the open air. We have nearly three hundred and fifty imperfect reports of his extemporaneous Latin discourses. His eighty-six sermons on the Song of Solomon, which to his mystic mind had peculiar attraction, read into this poem of love, by allegorical interpretation, the mysteries of Christian experience. The secret of his power lay in his holy personality, his pathos and solemnity, and the intensity of his conviction of the truth of the gospel. This humble monk with delicate and emaciated but graceful frame, pale face, fiery eyes, melodious voice, vivacious gestures, glowing love to God and man, exerted an irresistible influence over his hearers. Even the Germans, who could not understand his Latin or Romance language, felt the heavenly impulses vibrating on his lips. He spared neither emperor nor pope. He stirred up the half of Europe to the second crusade, which, however, turned out a disastrous failure which hastened his death. He glorified monasticism as the perfection of Christian life, mysticism as the true theology, the Virgin Mary as the mother of grace (though he denied the immaculate conception). He found Christ everywhere in the Old Testament as well as the New, and expressed his love for him in his passion hymns, and in his "Jesu, dulcis memoria," the sweetest hymn of Latin poetry, which has been reproduced again and again in different languages. Dante, in his description of the heavenly Paradise, represents Bernard as a fatherly old man, clothed in light, sent by Beatrice to explain to him the Rose of the Blessed and to lead him to the beatific vision—the vision of the Holy Trinity, with which the Divina Commedia closes. For that consummation of bliss, Bernard prepares the poet by a fervent prayer to the "Virgin Mother, the daughter of her Son." Luther found in Bernard his favorite doctrine of justification by faith, and declared him the best preacher among the Doctors of the Church.

* Such sermons on the pericopes or Scripture lessons were read post illa verba sacre scripture, and hence called Postilla.

The most eccentric and naïve preacher of the Middle Ages was St. Francis of Assisi (1182–1226), a seraphic stranger in this world who was intoxicated with the love of God and man, and died of the wounds of Christ. He preached to the poor and the rich, before kings and popes, before the Sultan of Egypt at the head of the Mohammedan army, and sent forth his companions, two by two, in rough clothing, barefoot, without money, as messengers of the gospel. He loved all the creatures of God, and preached even to the sun and the moon, to birds and fishes, as his brothers and sisters. He was the first to use the common Italian speech, instead of the Latin, for sermons and religious poetry.

His pupil, St. Anthony of Padua (1195–1231), preached with equal success, converted thousands, and is said to have been listened to attentively by fishes, as a Christian Orpheus.

The mendicant orders of the Franciscans (Fratres Minores) and the Dominicans (Fratres Prædicatores), in the thirteenth century, as also the order of the Augustinians, were founded especially for preaching the gospel to the neglected people in their popular tongue, and to counteract the heresies which had spread in Italy and France. The greatest popular preacher of the Franciscans was Berthold of Ratisbon (d. 1272), who traveled on foot as an evangelist in southern Germany, Switzerland and Austria, and addressed at times as many as 60,000 to 100,000 hearers in the open air. The Spanish Dominican, Vincentius Ferrer (1357–1419), preached often twice a day to great crowds in Spain, Italy and France, with marvelous success.

VI. The reformers before the Reformation preached in the vernacular tongues: Wiclif in English, Hus in Bohemian (Czech), Tauler in German, Savonarola in Italian.

Wiclif (d. 1384), the translator of the Bible and founder of English prose, opposed the biblical to the scholastic style of preaching, attacked popery and monkery, and established a society of poor traveling preachers, called Lollards, to counteract the mendicant friars. He died in peace, but his bones were dug up and burnt to ashes by order of the orthodox reformatory Council of Constance.

Hus accepted the doctrines of Wiclif and preached against the corruptions of the Church and the clergy, for which he was condemned to the stake by the Council of Constance (1415). His pupil, Jerome of Prague, shared the same fate (1416).

John Tauler (d. 1361) was the most edifying and effective of the mystic preachers of the Middle Ages, and was highly esteemed by Luther. His theme was the imitation of the lowly and humble life of Jesus.

Savonarola, an ascetic monk of extraordinary eloquence, aimed at a moral reform, in opposition to the heathen Renaissance of the Medici, without attacking the doctrines of the Roman Church. By his flaming sermons at San Marco he shook the whole republic of Florence, and converted it into a short-lived republic of Christ; but he fell a victim to the wicked Pope Alexander VI. and was burnt to death (1498).

CHAPTER CCLXX.

THE PROTESTANT PULPIT ON THE CONTINENT.

The Reformation placed the pulpit above the altar, and gave rise to an unbroken and ever swelling stream of sacred eloquence which it would require volumes to describe, from Luther and Zwingli, Calvin and Knox, down to Monod and Bersier, Spurgeon and Liddon, Beecher and Brooks. The Catholic pulpit also received a new impulse from the Reformation, especially in Germany and France. We can only sketch the most prominent names.

I. The Reformers were preachers as well as scholars and writers, and their sermons were reforming agencies.

Luther (1483-1546), the creator of the modern German book language and German translator of the Bible, is also the founder of modern German pulpit eloquence. Many of his sermons, like his tracts, were deeds and bugle sounds in the battle with the pope and the devil; others are simple expositions of the Gospels and Epistles for the common people, who heard him gladly. Their chief theme is Christ as the only and sufficient Saviour, to be apprehended by a living faith which justifies, gives peace to the conscience, and overcomes the world. He had the rare gift of expressing deep thought in popular language, and of striking the nail on the head. He departed more and more from the domination of the allegorizing method which had prevailed since the days of Origen. His Kirchenpostille (1522, 1525) is still much read in Germany.

Melanchthon was not an ordained minister, but preached to students in the lecture-room and in his house in Latin (Postilla, 1549), and wrote three works on rhetoric (1519, 1535, and 1561).

Zwingli had acquired, before he became a reformer, a great reputation as preacher in Glarus and Einsiedeln, and was appointed papal chaplain, 1518. His sermons at the great Minister in Zurich, from 1519 to his death, in 1531, were biblical, plain, solid, sober, practical, impressive, more ethical than doctrinal. His object was "to preach Christ from the fountain," and "to insert the pure Christ into the hearts of the people." His method was to explain entire books, beginning with the Gospel of Matthew, so as to give his congregation a connected and complete idea of the life of Christ and the way of salvation. The people said, "Such preaching was never heard before," and, "This is a genuine preacher of the truth, a Moses, who will deliver the people from bondage." At Marburg he preached before a learned audience of Lutherans who could not understand his Swiss dialect a Latin sermon on Providence which he elaborated into a theological essay. Zwingli was also the model of a Swiss pastor and patriot, frank, manly, cheerful, kind and hospitable, took great interest in the education of young men and in all the affairs of the Swiss republic, and aimed at a political and moral as well as a religious reformation of his fatherland. His freedom in the choice of texts was followed in the Reformed Churches, while Luther adhered to the traditional pericopes, or prescribed Scripture lessons.

His fellow-reformers in German Switzerland, Leo Judæ and Bullinger in Zurich, Œcolampadius in Basel, Haller in Bern, Blaurer in Constance, Commander in Coire, were likewise useful, popular preachers.

The Reformers of French Switzerland were the first distinguished preachers in the French language. Viret was the most persuasive, Farel the most fiery, Calvin the most instructive among them. Amidst the incredible labors of Calvin in Geneva were his almost daily lectures and sermons. "During the week," says Beza, "he preached every alternate and lectured every third day." His sermons cannot be called popular, but they were thoughtful and didactic, and reveal his unsurpassed familiarity with the Bible. His friend and successor, Beza, a scholar of classical culture and poetic talent, was likewise an indefatigable preacher, but few of his sermons have been published.

Latimer was the principal preacher among the three English Reformers and martyrs, and kindled at the stake in Oxford, 1555, "with God's help, a torch in England which shall never be extinguished." Cranmer prepared, with Ridley and Latimer, the first Book of Homilies, 1547, to which Parker and Jewell added a second in 1563, to be read in the churches as substitutes for original sermons; but Cranmer's chief merit in the history of worship is the Anglican liturgy, which next to the Bible is still the richest feeder of devotion in Episcopal churches.

John Knox, the Reformer of Scotland, "who never feared the face of man," preached with such vehemence and force that he seemed "likely to ding the pulpit in blads [to beat it in pieces], and to flie out of it." The English ambassador wrote to Lord Burleigh that "Knox put more life into his hearers in an hour than six hundred trumpets." He found a worthy successor in the more learned Andrew Melville (d. 1622).

II. The orthodox Lutheran Pulpit of the seventeenth century introduced a dry, scholastic, artificial and polemical style of preaching. But it was counteracted by the Pietists and Mystics, and afterwards succeeded by the insipid moralizing preaching of the Rationalists. Mosheim (d. 1755), called the "German Bourdaloue," studied French and English models, and marks a new epoch in preaching, as well as in Church History.

III. The French Pulpit reached its golden age in the seventeenth century, both in the Roman and Reformed Churches.

(1) The restoration of classical eloquence was a part of the papal Counter-Reformation, and is represented by Bossuet (1627-1704), "the brilliant eagle of Meaux," equally distinguished as historian, controversialist and orator. He followed Chrysostom and Augustin, and surpassed them, not in depth but in grandeur and splendor of diction, especially in his funeral orations, which belong to the immortal masterpieces of French style.

The other luminaries of French pulpit eloquence are Bourdaloue (d. 1704), Fléchier (d. 1710), and Massillon (d. 1742). The last is distinguished for profound knowledge of the human heart, moral earnestness and rare boldness, which made even Louis XIV. "dissatisfied with himself." Fénelon (d. 1715), the gentlest, humblest and most amiable among the bishops of the age of Louis XIV., published few sermons, but expressed sound principles on preaching in his Dialogues sur l'éloquence.

(2) The Huguenot Pulpit was not far behind the Catholic in eloquence, and superior to it in biblical simplicity and depth.

Its flourishing period extends from the Edict of Nantes (1598) to its Revocation (1685). The latter almost annihilated Protestantism in France, but sent hundreds of its professors to other countries to bless them by their industry and piety.

The principal Huguenot preachers were Pierre du Moulin (1568–1658), Michel Le Faucheur (1585–1657), Jean Mestrezat (1592–1657), Jean Daillé (1594–1670), Moïse Amyraut (1596–1664), Raymond Gaches (1615–68), Jean Claude (1619–87), Pierre du Bosc (1623–92), Daniel de Superville (1657–1728), and especially Jacques Saurin (1677–1730). The last was preacher to the refugees in The Hague, where he addressed crowded audiences and commanded the admiration even of Roman Catholics.

The French preachers have been admirably characterized by Vinet in the work above mentioned.

(3) Modern Protestant preachers in France and French Switzerland :

Vinet of Lausanne (1797–1847) marks a revival of the theory and practice of pulpit eloquence and its literature in the French language. Adolphe Monod (d. 1856), minister at the Oratoire in Paris, was the greatest French Protestant preacher of the nineteenth century, full of faith and the Holy Ghost, and of captivating beauty of style, equal to the pulpit lights of the seventeenth century. Next to him should be mentioned Malan, Merle d'Aubigné, Coulin, all of Geneva; Coquerel, Ed. de Pressensé, Eugene Bersier, and Theodore Monod (nephew of Adolphe), all of Paris.

IV. The modern German Pulpit begins with the genial Herder (1744–1803), poet, historian, theologian, and court preacher at Bückeberg, and last general superintendent at Weimar, the contemporary of Goethe and Schiller. He emancipated preaching from the jejune, moralizing monotony of rationalism and infused into it his enthusiasm for universal humanity.

Lavater (1741–1801), the physiognomist, poet and preacher at St. Peter's in Zurich, represents Christianity as a matter of feeling and experience and living communion with Christ, which he has well expressed in his hymn :

"O Jesus Christ, grow thou in me,
And all things else recede."

Reinhard (d. 1812), court-chaplain at Dresden, "the inexhaustible," surpassed all German preachers of his age. His sermons fill forty volumes (1819-37).

Schleiermacher (d. 1834), a master of dialectical analysis of religious feeling, a preacher to the educated, the Plato of Germany.

Menken (d. 1831), Reformed pastor in Bremen, a master of expository sermons.

Claus Harms of Kiel (d. 1855), Lutheran, original, quaint, witty and fresh.

Dräseke (d. 1849), preacher in Bremen, and, last, bishop in Magdeburg, highly polished, and admired by cultivated audiences.

Theremin (d. 1846), court-chaplain in Berlin, the most polished preacher of Germany, faultless in style and thoroughly evangelical in sentiment.

Ludwig Hofacker (d. 1828), the most popular revival preacher of Württemberg, and his brother Wilhelm Hofacker of Stuttgart (d. 1848), less popular but more learned and accomplished.

Gottfried Daniel Krummacher (d. 1837), pastor of the Reformed Church in Elberfeld, Calvinistic, severe, strictly biblical, but at times given to arbitrary typical allegorizing. His nephew, Friederich Wilhelm Krummacher (d. 1868), pastor at Elberfeld, then in Berlin, at last court-chaplain at Potsdam, the most eloquent pulpit orator of Germany, a painter in words, highly imaginative, dramatic, fruitful and suggestive. His Elijah the Tishbite has been translated into nearly all the languages of Europe and found a larger circulation in England and America than in Germany.

Tholuck (d. 1877), a model preacher for theological students, noble, thoughtful, spirited, polished, combining deep earnestness with warm feeling.

We can only mention in addition, Mallet of Bremen (d. 1865), Kohlbrügge of Elberfeld (d. 1875), Löhe of Bavaria (d. 1872), Nitzsch of Berlin (d. 1868), Wilhelm Hoffmann, general superintendent and court preacher at Berlin (d. 1873), Beck of Tübingen (d. 1878), Julius Müller of Halle (d. 1878), Arndt of Berlin (d. 1881), Ahlfeld of Leipzig (d. 1884), Gerok of Stuttgart (d. 1890), and Christlieb of Bonn (d. 1889), the author of a brief but comprehensive history of pulpit eloquence. Kögel, Stoecker, Dryander, all of Berlin, and Beyschlag of Halle, are among the best living preachers of Germany.

CHAPTER CCLXXI.

THE BRITISH PULPIT.

The English and American Pulpit is the richest of all, commands the largest audiences, and exerts the greatest influence.

The Reformation lasted longer in England than on the Continent, and extends from the breach of Henry VIII. with the pope and the appointment of Cranmer as Archbishop of Canterbury in 1532 until the Toleration Act under William and Mary, 1688. It may be divided into two great acts: the first was a conflict with popery till its final overthrow under Queen Elizabeth; the second was a conflict of Puritanism with semi-popery and despotism, and ended with the expulsion of the Stuarts, the re-establishment of the Episcopal Church, and a limited toleration for orthodox Dissenters. The second Reformation is the most stirring and interesting period in English history, and the golden age of the British Pulpit.

The Puritan Pulpit.

Baxter, Bunyan, and Howe are the chief heroes and also martyrs of the Puritan Pulpit, who after the Restoration of the Stuarts were ejected, exposed to poverty, fines, insult and imprisonment for no other crime than obeying their conscience, but who are still living forces in English theology and ascetic literature.

Richard Baxter (1615-92), the model pastor of Kidderminster, a promoter of peace between Prelatists and Puritans, Presbyterians and Independents, in an age of intense controversy, was the most learned and fertile author and most saintly character among the Puritans. He wrote one hundred and sixty books and tracts; the best are: Call to the Unconverted (of which 20,000 copies were sold in one year, 1657), The Reformed Pastor, and The Saints' Everlasting Rest. His sermons are solemn, searching and impressive; his style is clear and simple, but negligent and prolix. In his old age he dwelt more on the love of God and Christian charity, and "his sermons became hymns of praise." "His practical writings," says Isaac Barrow, "were never mended, and his controversial seldom refuted." He was in advance of his times in the principles of toleration and Church union. The notorious Chief-Justice Jeffries sentenced him to prison in 1685; but he was released after eighteen months through the exertions of a Roman Catholic nobleman, and lived to enjoy the Toleration Act of 1688, universally respected for his learning, courage and piety. Churchmen and Dissenters united in raising his monument at Kidderminster in 1875, and Dean Stanley of Westminster pronounced the dedicatory oration.

John Bunyan (1628-88), the unschooled tinker, preached in a Baptist chapel at Bedford, was silenced and imprisoned in Bedford jail for twelve years, and after his release continued to preach till his death. He was taught by the Holy Ghost through the Scriptures, a prophet in the apostolic sense of the term, bent upon the one aim—to save the souls of men by the simple power of the gospel. His most powerful sermon, however, is a religious novel or an extended allegory, The Pilgrim's Progress, which he composed in his prison cell. It has been called by Longfellow "the English Divina Commedia," and is one of the most popular books, if not the most popular, next to the Bible.

John Howe (1630-1706), called the "Platonic Puritan," the favorite chaplain of Cromwell, was a theological preacher, scholastic in form, abounding in learned and Latin phrases, but thoughtful, spiritual and broad.

Stephen Marshall, lecturer at St. Margaret's, Westminster, was the best preacher among the members of the Westminster Assembly, "the trumpet by whom they sounded their solemn fasts" (Fuller). He preached often before the Long Parliament, the Lord Mayor, and the Assembly. At the solemn fast, May 17, 1644, he prayed a sermon of two hours' length before the Parliament and Assembly. The religious exercises of that day, which the Scotch commissioner Baillie called "the sweetest day" he saw in England, lasted eight hours. Marshall was buried in Westminster Abbey, 1655, but shamefully disinterred with Cromwell and other Puritans after the Restoration.

The devotional fervor and endurance of the Puritan divines is almost without a parallel in the history of devotion. And yet if we consider the length of their prayers and sermons, their moral austerity, their peculiar phraseology and cant, their aversion to art and the innocent amusements of life, we need not wonder at the popular rebound to the opposite extreme under the frivolous and licentious Charles II., "who never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one."

The Episcopal Pulpit.

The Anglican Pulpit, or the Pulpit of the Established Church, which is still called national, but now represents only half of the nation, reached its height after the fall of Puritanism, in the latter half of the seventeenth century. It was in full sympathy with episcopacy and royalty, but had the benefit of Puritan training, and rebuked the immorality and vice which characterized the reigns of the last two Stuarts and which occasioned their final overthrow.

Jeremy Taylor (1613-67), the son of a Cambridge barber, chaplain to Archbishop Laud and King Charles I., appointed bishop of Down and Connor in 1660, has been called the Shakespeare of the British pulpit, and the Homer of divines, and his sermons "a garden of spices." He was gifted with a gorgeous imagination, not always controlled by reason and judgment, and was the most learned and brilliant preacher of his age, and as pious as any Puritan. His sermons are studded with classical quotations and allusions. During his exile under the Long Parliament, he advocated religious toleration in The Liberty of Prophesying, but changed his views after the restoration of the Stuarts.

Isaac Barrow (1630-77) preached profound and lengthy treatises on Christian doctrines and virtues, which are better fitted for reading in the study than for delivery from the pulpit.

Robert South (1633-1716), chaplain to Charles II., was a staunch royalist and prelatist, but at the same time a rigorous Calvinist and severe moralist, full of genius, wit and sarcasm, an unmerciful polemic, a master of trenchant English style. He had more grit than grace.

John Tillotson (1630-94), Archbishop of Canterbury, represents the Latitudinarian Pulpit. He was the son of a zealous Puritan, but under the influence of the Cambridge Platonists he became the most liberal churchman of the reign of William of Orange, who made him primate, against his inclination, and head of a commission for the reconciliation of Dissenters and the reform of abuses. Bishop Burnet says of him: "He was not only the best preacher of the age, but seemed to have brought preaching to perfection." He preached a mild, tolerant, undogmatic, yet evangelical Christianity, in easy, clear, almost colloquial style, and with the tact of a man of the world. His sermons are free from learned quotations, artificial arrangement, endless subdivisions, and the whole pedantry of scholastic sermonizing. They were collected by his chaplain, Dr. Barker, and published in 1694, in fourteen volumes (3d ed. 1704), often reprinted, and translated by Mosheim into German.

The Methodist Pulpit.

The Methodist revival of the eighteenth century was the greatest religious movement in England after Puritanism, and produced a new line of great preachers, of whom Wesley and Whitefield are the chief. Their aim was the conversion and regeneration of sinners, and God crowned their labors with marvelous success. They differed in theology, but were one in heart and equally consecrated to their common Master. Wesley made the truth of Arminianism, Whitefield the truth of Calvinism, a converting agency. It was largely due to their labors that England was saved from the destructive wave of infidelity which swept over the Continent in the eighteenth century.

John Wesley (1703-91), of Puritan ancestry, a student of Oxford, and a preacher, organizer and spiritual reformer, lived, labored, and died in the communion of the Church of England, of which he was a presbyter, but became the founder of a new denomination which mediates between the Episcopal and the Nonconformist bodies, and has grown more rapidly than any Church, not only in England, but still more in the United States, where it outnumbers every other Protestant denomination. His sermons are short, plain, well arranged, pointed, doctrinal and practical. They preach a free and full salvation, sincerely offered to all. They are the chief theological and homiletical text-book of Methodist ministers.

George Whitefield (1714-70), a fellow-student and coworker of Wesley till 1740, when they separated on doctrinal grounds, was the greatest Calvinistic, as Wesley was the greatest Arminian, revival preacher of the last century. He had all the spiritual and physical qualities of a popular orator and dramatic actor. He was a genuine apostolic evangelist, who led thousands of hearers in Old England and New England to repentance and faith in Christ. He crossed the Atlantic seven times, and turned even the ship into a pulpit. His power was not in wealth or profundity of thought or in logical reasoning, but in the intense earnestness, pathos and solemnity, graceful and impressive delivery, and the vivid presentation of spiritual truth. It is said that "persons were driven mad with fear under his impassioned oratory." Even the sober, philosophic Franklin could not resist Whitefield's appeal for charity.

*The English Pulpit of the Nineteenth Century.

England has produced a large number of distinguished preachers during this century. We mention, among Episcopalians (low-church, high-church, and broad-church): Melvill, Stowell, MacNeil; Pusey, Newman, Keble, Manning, Bishop Wilberforce, Canon Liddon; Whately, Arnold, Maurice, Hare, Trench, Kingsley, Stanley, Robertson, Farrar. Among Baptists: Robert Hall, Andrew Fuller, John Foster, Spurgeon, Alex. McLaren. Among Independents: John Angel James, Thomas Binney, Alex. Raleigh, W. L. Alexander, John Stoughton, Robert William Dale, Henry Allon, Newman Hall, Joseph Parker. Among Methodists: Joseph Beaumont, Jabez Bunting, William Morley Punshon. Among Presbyterians: J. Oswald Dykes, Donald Fraser, W. G. Elmslie, Adolf Saphir (a converted Israelite). Among Unitarians: James Martineau, Stopford Augustus Brooke (who was formerly chaplain to the Queen, but left the Established Church in 1880).

We can only describe a few representative preachers in their leading characteristics.

(1) Episcopalians:

Henry Melvill (1798–1871), canon of St. Paul's Cathedral and Golden Lecturer on Tuesdays at St. Margaret's, was called "the evangelical Chrysostom." He confirmed the faith and ravished the ears of his hearers coming from the mart and the exchange, by the rich melody of his voice, sentence following sentence harmoniously, like wave upon wave. He selected unusual texts and handled them with great ingenuity. Christ shone out as the diamond in all his sermons.

John Henry Newman (1801–90), the master of poetic prose, and intellectual leader of the Anglo-Catholic movement towards Rome, preached his parochial sermons at St. Mary's in Oxford, before his secession to Rome, but they are still studied by Protestants, and his hymn, "Lead, kindly Light," will retain a favorite place in all English hymn-books.

* George J. Davies, Successful Preachers (mostly Episcopalian), London, 1884. Also Kempe mentioned above.

Frederick William Robertson (1816-53) represents the evangelical Broad-Church School by his sermons, which combine intellectual strength with æsthetic beauty, the highest culture with deep spirituality and love of humanity, and are well calculated to gain over thoughtful and honest skeptics.

Canon Henry Parry Liddon (1829-90) was the favorite preacher of the Ritualistic and Sacramentarian School which has grown out of the Oxford Tractarian movement. His university sermons are models.

Archdeacon Farrar (b. 1831) is the most fertile and exuberant living preacher of the evangelical Broad-Church School.

(2) Dissenters:

Robert Hall (1764-1831), minister of a Baptist chapel in Cambridge, though an intense sufferer from an acute disease, was one of the most powerful preachers of his day, full of thought, wit, and fancy expressed in racy English. His discourse on "Modern Infidelity" is a brilliant apology for Christianity and a masterpiece of English style. In theology he was a moderate Calvinist. When one of his hearers rebuked him for not preaching the five points of Calvinism, emphatically adding, "I believe in predestination," Robert Hall replied: "So do I. I believe you are predestinated to be a fool, and you have made your calling and election sure." When asked how many discourses a minister could write in a week, he gave this answer: "If he is a deep thinker and condenser, one; if he is an ordinary average man, two; if he is an ass, he will produce half a dozen."

Charles H. Spurgeon (1834-92), a strict Calvinist and liberal Baptist, was the most popular and successful preacher of his age in England, who for many years addressed from Sunday to Sunday five thousand hearers at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in London, and millions of readers in all parts of the world, pouring forth an inexhaustible stream of biblical and evangelical instruction and edification in homely, pithy and forcible Anglo-Saxon. He also founded and successfully conducted an orphanage, a theological seminary, and a missionary society. His influence for good far exceeded the limits of his Calvinistic creed, and of the English language.

*The Scotch Pulpit.

The Presbyterian Church of Scotland in its three branches, the Established or National, the United Presbyterian, and the Free Church, abounds in solid, instructive and fervent preachers. In no country is preaching better appreciated, and religious intelligence more general among the people, than in Scotland. The Presbyterian churches in London also and in the British provinces are well provided with preachers. Beginning with the Reformation, we may mention Knox, Melville, Craig, Bruce, Henderson, Rutherford, Dickson, John Livingstone, Gray, Gillespie, Leighton, Robert Douglas, Renwick, Ebenezer Erskine, Ralph Erskine, Hugh Blair, John Erskine, Thomas MacCrie, John Brown, Ralph Wardlaw, Irving, Chalmers, MacCheyne, Guthrie, Candlish, Norman Macleod, Marshall Lang, Principals Tulloch, Caird, and Cairns, James Hamilton, Donald Fraser, J. Oswald Dykes, John Ker, MacNeil, Alex. Whyte, Stalker, etc.

Edward Irving (1792-1834) was a friend of Thomas Carlyle, an assistant of Dr. Chalmers in Glasgow, and wound up his brilliant but erratic career at the Caledonian Church in London, where, by his commanding form, prophetic mien, musical voice, and flaming eloquence, he attracted men of the highest standing in Church and State, who listened with wonder to his orations on the oracles of God, till he was condemned by the presbytery of London for his views on the humanity of Christ (1830). He fell in with the voices of prophecy and the speaking in an unknown tongue, which gave rise to "the Catholic Apostolic Church," usually called after his name. To hear him repeat the Lord's Prayer was like listening to an exquisite piece of music. Thomas Carlyle regarded him as the victim of hallucination, but called him "the best man I have found in this world, or hope to find."

Thomas Chalmers (1780-1847), the leader of the heroic band who in 1843 sacrificed their livings for the great principle of the sole headship of Christ, and founded by a liberality without example the Free Church of Scotland, one of the most flourishing in Christendom, was a man of large heart, full of the perfervidum ingenium Scotorum. His sermons contained generally a single thought, which he richly unfolded from center to circumference. They remind one of Ezekiel's vision of wheels within wheels of living creatures. The tendency to amplification and verbosity is overshadowed by the merits which made his pulpit at Glasgow and Edinburgh an inspiration to all English-speaking Christendom. He was a truly great and good man sent from God to revive and to re-establish Christianity in Scotland. He widened the sphere of the pulpit and brought it into contact with the culture and humanities of the age. He used science and philosophy as allies of the Christian faith and duty, and made the stars in heaven and the flowers on earth preach the gospel. He covered the Calvinistic theology with flesh and blood, extended the love of God to all mankind, and blended Christianity and philanthropy in inseparable union.

* For fuller information see Wm. Garden Blaikie, The Preachers of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1888); and William M. Taylor, The Scottish Pulpit (New York, 1887).

Thomas Guthrie (1803-73), who next to Chalmers did most in laying the foundations of the Free Church, and collected in one year £116,370 for the manse fund, was not the most intellectual, but the most poetic and pictorial speaker of Scotland, both in the pulpit and on the platform. His power of illustration was inexhaustible. He was also full of genial mirth and humor, but suppressed it in the house of God. He could have extemporized a sermon at any time, but he always carefully prepared himself. He minded the three P's—Proving, Painting, Persuading—that is, he addressed the reason, the fancy, and the heart. A Scottish elder thus described him: "Maister Guthrie! He never had to rummage long for a word. Lots of illustrations, frae the sea and the earth and the air and onything that cam handy. Illustrations—thousands—extraordinary—a ready wittit mon—I will say that—tall of stature—wi' a voice like thunder." Guthrie brought sunshine and fresh air, the spirit of the poetry of Walter Scott and Burns, into the Scottish pulpit, and showed that the gospel, as he used to say, is unfriendly to nothing in human nature except its corruptions. Like Chalmers, he was an ardent philanthropist, and took the liveliest interest in the neglected classes and "ragged schools."

Norman Macleod (1812-72), minister of the Barony Church, Glasgow, and a favorite chaplain of the Queen, was in his day the most eloquent preacher of the Established Kirk, and the shrewdest man in Scotland. He was a friendly and congenial rival of Chalmers, warm-hearted, broad and catholic in his sympathies, liberal yet thoroughly evangelical in his theology, and an enthusiastic advocate of missions. On his return from India he delivered, as Moderator of the Church of Scotland (1869), one of the most eloquent addresses on Missions which I ever heard. Dr. Blaikie, one of the last survivors of the Fathers of the Free Church, thus characterizes him: "Norman Macleod furnished a great contrast to the old moderates, in the intense fervor, the boundless sympathy, and the missionary enthusiasm of his character. A man of genius, and of great literary and dramatic power, it was his heart that made him a preacher, and the heart would hardly submit to the guidance of the head. Not seeing a way of reconciling the doctrines of the standards with that conception of the full and ever-diffusive love of God in which he delighted, he made the standards go to the wall. Neither Chalmers nor Guthrie, whose hearts were as large as his, had had to make any such surrender. But nothing could have been more admirable than the effect he gave in his latter years to his conviction that the gospel was good news for every creature. His visit to India and his ceaseless endeavors to rouse the home Church to a sense of missionary obligation form one of the noblest chapters of Christian biography, and claim the warmest admiration of every evangelical soul."*

CHAPTER CCLXXII.

THE AMERICAN PULPIT.

Sprague's Annals of the American Pulpit, above quoted (p. 477), contain about 1500 sketches of Congregational (vols. i. and ii.), Presbyterian (vols. iii. and iv.), Episcopalian (vol. v.), Baptist (vol. vi.), Methodist (vol. vii.), Unitarian (vol. viii.), Lutheran, Reformed, and other preachers (vol. ix.), from the earliest settlements down to 1855.

As all Christian denominations are represented in America, so also are all styles of preaching, in different languages, though prevailing in English. The American Pulpit is untrammelled, aggressive, popular and practical. The gift of speech is very common in this free republic, and is early cultivated and stimulated by public life. The divinity which hedges the Greek and

* The Preachers of Scotland, p. 292.

Roman priest does not protect the Protestant preacher, who stands or falls with his personal character. No minister is respected who does not believe and practice what he preaches. Yet the clergy occupy a higher social position, are more respected and beloved, and better supported by the people in the United States than in the State Churches of Europe. No public men, except a few statesmen like Lincoln, and generals like Grant, have received such popular ovations as Henry Ward Beecher and Phillips Brooks, whose deaths were lamented as a national loss.

The press is a rival but also an ally of the pulpit, by publishing in the Monday issues the most popular discourses of Sunday, and thus multiplying their influence a thousandfold. This is not done by newspapers in Europe.

Puritanism and Presbyterianism take the lead in preaching as well as in theology, and are essentially Calvinistic and doctrinal. The Methodist and Baptist pulpits come next: less learned and intellectual, but more simple, emotional and popular. The pulpit of the Protestant Episcopal Church dates from its first two bishops, White of Pennsylvania, and Seabury of Connecticut, and the organization of that Church on an independent basis. The German churches, since the days of Mühlenberg and Schlatter, follow German models, but are becoming more and more Americanized and Anglicized.

The first generation of ministers in New England were mostly bred in English universities and had a scholastic style. The distinctive American preaching, however, began a century after the settlement of New England, with Jonathan Edwards (1703-58), who, together with Whitefield, led the great awakening of 1740. He thus united Calvinistic theology with evangelistic, Methodist revival preaching. His sermons were hard and rugged in style, but carefully elaborated, full of deep and solemn thought, sustained by the purity and dignity of his character. They startled the conscience like the judgment trump of God, and resulted in many lasting conversions.

He was followed by a race of theological preachers, as the younger Edwards, Hopkins, Bellamy, Emmons, Dwight, Griffin, Charles G. Finney, Lyman Beecher, and many others. Their sermons are highly intellectual, doctrinal and instructive, like theological lectures, addressed to the head and conscience rather than the heart and affections.

Lyman Beecher (1775–1863), who labored as a Congregational pastor in Boston and afterwards as Professor of the New-School Presbyterian Seminary in Cincinnati, was a born orator, full of fire, and his discourses against intemperance and other moral evils produced a powerful effect. He was tried for heretical views on the doctrine of the atonement, but was acquitted (1835).

His more celebrated son, Henry Ward Beecher (1813–87), preached for forty years as an apostle of humanity, to an independent congregation in Brooklyn, “the city of churches,” and we may say, to the whole reading world—ever fresh and ever new.* He was the most original, fertile and popular orator that America has produced, and shared with Spurgeon of London a world-wide fame and influence. He swayed an audience from the pulpit and the platform like a king, by enthusiasm, passion, argument, illustration, wit and humor. A perpetual spring of flowers seemed to bloom in his mind. He was a true poet in prose, but never quoted poetry. His preaching, like that of his father, was devoted to moral reform, and, like his sister’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin, prepared the public conscience for the abolition of slavery. His oratory reaped during the Civil War its greatest triumph in England, where he converted hostile audiences against their will. All his instincts were for freedom and progress. In theology, as far as he had any, he was independent of all systems.† He preached humanity and Christian morality rather than doctrine, but he was a firm believer in the divinity of Christ, who was to him the only God he knew. He belonged to no sect, but loved all who love Christ.

Horace Bushnell of Hartford (1802–76) published Sermons for the New Life, which are among the most original, brilliant and polished in the English language.

The same may be said of the Discourses of Professor Edwards A. Park (published in 1885). When he preached at Andover or Boston, it was a sort of event.

These were all Congregationalists of New England origin.

Next to the Puritan Pulpit is the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Baptist, the Unitarian, and the Episcopal.

* He humorously said on his seventieth birthday: “My father gave me a healthy stomach, my mother dedicated me to foreign missions; but God had mercy upon the heathen and sent me to the Christians in Brooklyn.”

† I heard him say in the pulpit: “Theology is nothing but logic stiffened and sanctified.”

The most distinguished Unitarian preachers of New England are Channing, Theodore Parker, and Andrew P. Peabody.

Among the numerous Presbyterian preachers should be mentioned Samuel Davies, John M. Mason, Erskine Mason, Archibald Alexander and his two sons, James W. and Joseph Addison, Charles and A. A. Hodge, Albert Barnes of Philadelphia, William Adams, Thomas Skinner, Roswell D. Hitchcock, and W. G. T. Shedd. Professor Hitchcock (d. 1887) left but few sermons in print, but was a consummate orator, unsurpassed in rich thought, terse, epigrammatic expression, and impressive delivery.

Among Methodist preachers we mention John P. Durbin, John McClintock, Bishop Simpson; among Baptists, Francis Wayland and Richard Fuller.

Phillips Brooks (1835-93) was by far the greatest pulpit orator of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and commanded the respect and affection of all other Churches by his evangelical catholicity and enthusiasm for humanity.

Among the preachers still living, we may mention the scholarly and accomplished Dr. Richard S. Storrs, who adorns a Congregational pulpit in Brooklyn, and is called "the American Chrysostom"; Lyman Abbott, the liberal successor of Beecher, and editor of "The Outlook"; and Thomas De Witt Talmage (b. 1832), a Presbyterian minister in Brooklyn, whose original, pithy and entertaining sermons are more widely circulated than any since the deaths of Beecher and Spurgeon.

Dwight Lyman Moody (b. 1837), a layman ordained by the Holy Ghost, deserves to be called the greatest evangelist since the days of Whitefield. Originally a Congregationalist and Calvinist, he belongs to no sect and to all sects, and unselfishly labors only for Christ and his kingdom. His truly Christian influence extends as far as the English language, and the fruits of his plain, direct, earnest and rousing sermons, full of Bible knowledge, wisdom, common sense and mother-wit, benefit all Churches.

CHAPTER CCLXXIII.

HOMILETICAL LITERATURE.

1. English works on the theory of preaching, by JAMES M. HOPPIN (New York, 1869), SHEDD (New York, 1869), JOHN A. BROADUS (Philadelphia, 5th ed. 1876), KIDDER (1864), R. S. STORRS (1875), HENRY BURGESS (1881), AUSTIN PHELPS (New York, 1882).

The Yale Lectures on Preaching, delivered in the Divinity School in New Haven by HENRY WARD BEECHER, PHILLIPS BROOKS, JOHN HALL, R. W. DALE, MATTHEW SIMPSON, WM. M. TAYLOR, HOWARD CROSBY, JAMES STALKER, R. F. HORTON, and others.

2. French works : A. VINET : Homilétique ou Théorie de la Prédication (Paris, 1853; English translation, Edinburgh, 1853).—M. BAUTAIN : The Art of Extempore Speaking (4th ed. New York, 1867).

3. German works on Homiletic by SCHOTT (Leipzig, 2d ed. 1828–49, 3 vols.), THEREMIN (1837), PALMER (6th ed. 1887), SCHWEIZER (1848), KRAUSS (1883), BASSERMANN (1885), CHRISTLIEB (posthumous, 1893, to be translated into English).

NOTE.—It has been my privilege during the last fifty or sixty years to hear some of the most eminent preachers of the age, who have deeply impressed me with a sense of the sublime mission of the Christian pulpit, and the variety in the unity as well as the unity in the variety of spiritual gifts in the service of the same divine Lord and Saviour. I may mention : Dann, W. Hofacker, and Gerok at Stuttgart ; Tholuck and Julius Müller at Halle ; Theremin, Gossner, Arndt, and Kögel at Berlin ; Ahlfeld at Leipzig ; Claus Harms at Kiel ; Mallet at Bremen ; F. W. Krummacher and Sander at Elberfeld ; Gaussen, Malan, Merle D'Aubigné, and Coulin at Geneva ; Adolphe Monod, Bersier, and Père Hyacinthe at Paris ; Van Oosterzee at Utrecht ; Hugh Stowell, Hugh MacNeil, Professor Maurice, Archbishop Trench, Dean Stanley, Canon Liddon, Archdeacon Farrar, James Hamilton, J. Oswald Dykes, and Spurgeon at London ; Guthrie, Candlish, and Norman Macleod at Edinburgh ; William Adams, James W. Alexander, Roswell D. Hitchcock, W. G. T. Shedd, G. L. Prentiss, Thomas S. Hastings, William M. Taylor, John Hall, C. H. Parkhurst, R. S. McArthur, J. R. Paxton, and Bishop Potter at New York ; H. W. Beecher, Richard S. Storrs, Theodore L. Cuyler, and Thomas DeWitt Talmage at Brooklyn ; H. Bushnell at Hartford ; Edwards A. Park at Andover ; and Bishop Brooks at Boston.

CHAPTER CCLXXIV.

CATECHETIC.

Catechetic is from κατηχεῖν or κατηχίζειν (κατά and ἦχος), to resound, to instruct orally ; κατηχητής, teacher, catechist ; κατηχούμενος, novice, catechumen, an applicant for church-membership in process of instruction. Luke 1 : 4 ; Acts 18 : 25 ; 21 : 22–24 ; Rom. 2 : 18 ; 1 Cor. 14 : 19 ; Gal. 6 : 6.

Catechetic is the science and art of religious instruction, preparatory to church-membership. It is based upon Pædagogic (Pedagogy), or the science of education, and applies it to religion. It embraces the elementary knowledge necessary for an intelligent profession of faith and obedience. It is usually confined to an exposition of the Lord's Prayer, the Apostles' Creed, and the Ten Commandments, or to an instruction how to pray, what to believe, and what to practice, in order to be useful on earth and to be saved in heaven.

The subjects of Catechetic are baptized children or unbaptized adults, proselytes and converts from other religions.

The first converts of Christianity were Jews, who by their knowledge of the Old Testament were already sufficiently prepared (Rom. 2 : 18), and needed only to be convinced of the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth. Hence the penitent hearers of the pentecostal sermon of Peter were at once baptized. The heathen were usually very ignorant. Even the educated and learned among them required more or less instruction in the fundamentals of religion. In large cities, special schools were founded for this purpose. The catechetical school of Alexandria became the first theological seminary, in which Clement and Origen taught.

In the early Church, catechetical instruction preceded baptism, and the same is still the case in all missionary fields. Where infant baptism is introduced, catechetical instruction succeeds baptism and looks to confirmation or some solemn act by which children, having grown up to the age of responsibility, ratify their baptismal vow made in their behalf by parents or sponsors, and are introduced to the rights and privileges of full communion.

Christ commands his disciples to teach all nations (Matt. 28 : 19). This includes children as well as adults. The importance of catechetical instruction was always admitted in the Christian Church. Ignorance is death to religion. Archbishop Ussher says: "The neglect of catechizing is the frustrating of the whole work of the ministry."

But catechizing is not the exclusive duty of the ministry, nor sufficient of itself to qualify for confirmation and the communion. The catechumen must give satisfactory evidence of repentance and faith. The compulsory system which requires all children to be catechized and confirmed is an abuse of State churches, and has created an unreasonable prejudice against catechetical instruction in the United States.

CHAPTER CCLXXV.

TYPICAL CATECHISMS.

The necessity of catechetical instruction gave rise to catechisms, especially at the time of the Reformation. Nearly all the Reformers, — Luther, Brenz, Justus Jonas, Œcolampadius, Bullinger, Leo Judæ, Calvin, Zacharias Ursinus and Caspar Olevianus, prepared such works.

We shall mention the chief catechisms, which have acquired symbolical authority and are still in use.

I. Luther's Catechisms, a large one for teachers, and a small one for children, were prepared in 1529 to meet the lamentable ignorance which then prevailed in Saxony and throughout Germany. The small catechism appeals directly to the heart, and is a model of childlike simplicity. It begins with the Ten Commandments (retaining the Roman division and abridging it); then follows an explanation of the Apostles' Creed, and the Lord's Prayer; to these three divisions are added two sections on Baptism, the Lord's Supper, and in later editions (since 1654) a sixth section on Confession and Absolution, or the Power of the Keys.*

II. The Heidelberg Catechism, prepared by Ursinus (a pupil of Melancthon), and Olevianus (a pupil of Calvin), in 1563, for the Reformed Church of the Palatinate, hence also called the Palatinate Catechism, acquired great popularity among the Reformed Churches of the Continent, and has symbolical authority in the Dutch and German Reformed Churches in America. It represents a moderate, evangelical and irenical Calvinism. It is divided into three parts, following the order of the Epistle to the Romans: first, of man's sin; second, of Christ's redemption; third, of man's gratitude for redemption. It puts the Ten Commandments, as a rule of Christian life, in the third part, after the Apostles' Creed; while Luther reverses this order, and treats the law as a schoolmaster unto Christ. The answers express the knowledge and experience of a mature Christian. The admirable answer to the first question, "What is thy only comfort in life and in death?" strikes the keynote of this catechism. It is less childlike, but fuller and richer and intended for a more mature age than that of Luther.

* See Schaff, Church History, vol. vi., pp. 550-557.

III. The Anglican Catechism (1549, enlarged 1604, revised 1661) is the standard catechism of the Episcopal Church of England and her daughters in the British colonies and the United States. It is the shortest and the most churchly of the leading Protestant catechisms. It begins with the questions, "What is your name?" and "Who gave you this name?" to which the answer is returned, "My godfathers and godmothers (sponsors) in my baptism; wherein I was made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven." Then follows a simple exposition of the Creed, the Decalogue, the Lord's Prayer, and the sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper.

IV. The Westminster Catechisms, Longer and Shorter, prepared by the Westminster Assembly, 1647, are used in English-speaking Presbyterian and Independent Churches. The Shorter Catechism is a model of clear, precise, logical definitions, but lacks the glow of feeling, is more addressed to the head than the heart, and departs from the traditional order which makes the Apostles' Creed the basis of doctrinal exposition.* It begins characteristically with the question, "What is the chief end of man?" and the answer, "To glorify God and to enjoy him forever." It is impersonal, and gives the answers in the form of a theological definition embodying the question; while the other catechisms are addressed to the catechumen as a baptized church-member, who answers the questions of the catechist from his present or prospective religious experience.

V. The Catechism of the Council of Trent (1564) is intended for teachers rather than pupils. It is a compendium of Roman Catholic theology. It contains a full exposition of the Apostles' Creed (Part I.), of the seven Sacraments (Part II.), of the Decalogue (Part III.), and of the Lord's Prayer (Part IV.). It was prepared by three learned Dominicans, Leonardo Marini, Francesco Foreiro, and Ægidius Foscarari, with the aid of other theologians, and published by authority of Pope Pius V. It is the mother of a large number of shorter, popular catechisms in all languages.

* The Creed is added as an appendix, with a comment on the clause "he descended into hell," which is made to mean "he continued in the state of the dead and under the power of death until the third day." But "hell" in the Creed means "Hades," the spirit-world, the realm of the dead.

VI. The standard catechisms of the Orthodox Greek and Russian Church, Longer and Shorter, were prepared by Philaret (1782-1867), Metropolitan of Moscow, revised and sanctioned by the Holy Synod of St. Petersburg, 1839, and published in all the languages of the Russian Empire. The Longer Catechism, called "A Full Catechism," is an able and clear summary of Eastern orthodoxy, and is divided into three parts: (1) on Faith—an exposition of the Nicene Creed arranged in twelve articles; (2) on Hope—an exposition of the Lord's Prayer in seven petitions, and of the nine Beatitudes of the Sermon on the Mount; (3) on Love or Charity—an exposition of the Decalogue, as teaching, in two tables, love to God and love to our neighbor.

If we compare these catechisms of the leading Churches of Christendom, it is remarkable how much more they agree than they differ in all the essential articles of the Christian faith and duty.

CHAPTER CCLXXVI.

CATECHETICAL LITERATURE.

I. CYRIL OF JERUSALEM: Catechetical Lectures, addressed to catechumens in Jerusalem in 347 and 348 (κατηχήσεις φωτιζομένων, translated by Church, with preface by J. H. Newman, in the Oxford "Library of the Fathers").

GREGORY OF NYSSA (d. 395): The Great Catechism (λόγος κατηχητικός ὁ μέγας, translated by William Moore in Schaff and Wace's "Post-Nicene Library," Series II., vol. v., 1893).

AUGUSTIN: De Catechezandis Rudibus, and De Doctrina Christiana.

II. BISHOP CHARLES WORDSWORTH: Catechesis, or Christian Instruction Preparatory to Confirmation and First Communion (London, 1868; 2d ed. 1880).

A. J. C. ALLEN: The Church Catechism: Its History and Contents. A Manual for Teachers and Students (London and New York, 1892).

ALEXANDER WHYTE: The Shorter Catechism (Edinburgh, 1883).

ROBERT STEEL: The Shorter Catechism, with Proofs, Analysis, and Illustrative Anecdotes (London, 1884).

III. German works on Catechetical by PALMER (Stuttgart, 1844; 6th ed. 1875), ZEJSCHWITZ (Leipzig, 1872-74), KÜBEL (Stuttgart, 1877), PESTALOZZI (Zurich, 1884), PROBST (R. Cath., Geschichte der katholischen Katechese, Breslau, 1886).

A rich popular literature on Luther's and the Heidelberg Catechism.

CHAPTER CCLXXVII.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

Catechetical instruction is the work of the pastor, and trains for church-membership. It ought to be supplemented but not superseded by lay instruction in the Sunday-school.

The American Sunday-school is a necessary addition to every well-organized church. It is the church for children, who are little benefited by public worship and require such praying, singing, teaching and preaching as is adapted to their childlike capacity. It forms the connection between the family and the church. From home to school, from school to church, from church to heaven. The Sunday-school scholars are divided into groups and instructed in the Bible and the Catechism by members of the congregation. The exercises are opened and closed by singing, prayer, and short addresses. This system gives an excellent opportunity to young men and women of the church for the exercise of their gifts for the benefit of the rising generation.

Robert Raikes, a pious and benevolent layman of Gloucester, England (1735-1811), a printer by trade, was the founder of the modern Anglo-American Sunday-school. Impressed by the need of the children in a manufacturing quarter of his city, he engaged in July, 1780, "four decent, well-disposed women," at a shilling a day each, to collect and teach children on Sunday in the A B C and the church catechism. He was assisted by Rev. Thomas Stock, the parish clergyman. In 1783 he called public attention to this movement in his newspaper The Gloucester Journal. This charity school became the fruitful mother of similar schools in England, but volunteers took the place of paid teachers. John Wesley incorporated the plan of Raikes in his religious reform movement. A Sunday-school society was organized in London, and multiplied schools throughout Great Britain in spite of the opposition of the Archbishop of Canterbury. A Sunday-school was organized in America in 1786 by the Methodist Bishop Asbury, and a Sunday-school society was formed at Philadelphia in 1791, out of which grew the national American Sunday-School Union in 1824.

In this country the Sunday-school is a vital part of the church itself, and is also the forerunner of the church in new settlements and neglected districts of large cities. It is a necessary supplement to the public schools, which make no provision for religious instruction. It is the main instrumentality for the religious education of the children of the vast host of immigrants. From America and England the institution has extended to the continent of Europe and foreign mission fields, and given fresh impulse to every kind of Christian work. It is supposed that about twenty millions of scholars were under the instruction of some two millions of Sunday-school teachers in 1890. This most benevolent and useful institution has created an immense juvenile literature of books and periodicals. Every denomination has, or ought to have, a Sunday-School Society and periodical, and every congregation a library for the young. The kingdom of God is built up out of the family, the catechetical class and the Sunday-school.

LITERATURE.

L. G. PRAY: The History of Sunday-schools and of Religious Education, from the Earliest Times (Boston, 1847).

W. H. WATSON: The History of the Sunday-school Union (London, 1853); The First Fifty Years of the Sunday-school (1873).

ALFRED GREGORY: Robert Raikes, Journalist and Philanthropist (London and New York, 1877).

JOHN H. VINCENT: The Modern Sunday-school (New York, 1877); The Church, School, and the Normal Guide (1889).

H. CLAY TRUMBULL: Teaching and Teachers; or, The Sunday-school Teacher's Teaching Work (Philadelphia, 1884); Yale Lectures on the Sunday-school (Philadelphia, 1888).

JAMES A. WORDEN: The Bible-teacher's Guide; or, Methods of Work in the Sabbath-school (Philadelphia, 1892).

Among the periodicals which have the largest circulation among all denominations we mention the Sunday-school World, and the Sunday-school Times, both published in Philadelphia.

NOTE.—The spread of Sunday-schools in Germany is due chiefly to the untiring activity of an American layman, Albert Woodruff (died 1891), who, without knowing a word of German, but aided by Mr. Broeckelmann, a retired merchant, traveled from city to city, and tried to persuade ministers and church dignitaries of the importance of introducing Sunday-schools. In the following year I had occasion to follow up his labors in company with Mr. Broeckelmann in the chief cities of Germany and to establish a flourishing Sunday-school in Stuttgart. On his return he founded in Brooklyn "The Foreign Sunday-School Association," and devoted the rest of his useful life to the spread and support of Sunday-schools all over Europe and in mission fields. He furnishes a striking example how useful a plain layman may make himself in the Church by single and unselfish devotion to one idea. In Germany, where catechetical instruction by the pastor is universal, the Sunday-school has assumed predominantly the character of a children's service (Kinder-Gottesdienst).

CHAPTER CCLXXXVIII.

POIMENIC (PASTORAL THEOLOGY).

Poimenic (adopted by Van Oosterzee, Von Zezschwitz and Achelis) is derived from ποιμήν, pastor, shepherd, ποιμαίνω, to tend a flock, to rule, to nourish. The term "shepherd" is applied to God, to Christ, and to his ministers (Ps. 23: 1; Ez. 37: 24; John 10: 16; 21: 15-17; 1 Peter 2: 25; Eph. 4: 11, etc.). Pastoral Theology.—Théologie Pastorale.—Pastoraltheologie; Theorie der kirchlichen Seelsorge.

Poimenic or Pastoral Theology embraced originally the whole field of Practical Theology, but in the narrower modern sense it means the theory of pastoral care. It deals with the duties of the minister in his personal relations to the members of his parish as their spiritual guide. Pastoral visitation is, next to preaching, the greatest means of the usefulness of a minister. As preacher he instructs, exhorts and comforts from the pulpit; as pastor he meets them at home and in their daily occupations, administers to them spiritual counsel and comfort in time of need, especially in seasons of affliction.

Poimenic gives directions to the minister in dealing with different classes, the young and the old, the rich and poor, the sick and the dying, and his duty to the masses outside of the church.

LITERATURE.

The Poimenic literature is closely connected with Homiletic, which has been mentioned in chapter cclxxiii.

Special works by Gregory I. (Regula Pastoralis), Burgon, Patrick Fairbairn, W. G. Blaikie, Vinet (Théologie pastorale, 1854, translated by Thos. H. Skinner), Kidder, Shedd (in connection with his Homiletics, 1864; 8th ed. 1884), Hoppin (1885).

German works by Palmer (1860), Kübel (1874), Schweizer (1875), Steinmeyer (1878), Walther (St. Louis, 1885).

One of the most useful treatises is Richard Baxter's Gildas Sylvanus; or, The Reformed Pastor (1656). John Wesley made the reading of it one of the duties of his lay preachers.

It is very helpful for ministers to study the biographies of model pastors, such as Baxter, Spener, Francke, John Wesley, Oberlin, Claus Harms of Kiel, Louis Harms of Hermannsburg, Löhe, John H. Wichern, Chalmers, MacCheyne, Barnes, Lyman Beecher, Spurgeon.

For a list of Roman Catholic works on Pastoral Theology see Kihn, pp. 469 sq.

CHAPTER CCLXXIX.

LITURGIC.

Λειτουργία (from λείτος, λήιτος, λαός, λεώς, and ἔργον) means public service (munus publicum); in the New Testament a sacred ministration, Luke 1: 23; Phil. 2: 19; Heb. 8: 6; 9: 21; λειτουργός, an administrant or servant, Rom. 13: 6; λειτουργέω, to officiate as priest, Heb. 10: 11; to minister in the Christian Church, Acts 13: 2.

The derivation from λήτή, λαταί, preces, whence the word litany, is erroneous.

Liturgic is the theory of public worship (λατρεία, cultus).

Worship is the highest spiritual act of man and the nearest approach he can make to the Deity. It embraces prayer with its various forms of adoration, petition, intercession, thanksgiving and praise; singing; reading of the Scriptures; preaching of the gospel; confession of sin and of faith; benediction; and the administration of the sacraments. The holy communion is the culmination of worship.

A complete system of Liturgic comprehends all these acts of devotion, discusses their nature, aim and proper order, and includes an account of sacred places and sacred seasons, especially the Church year. It describes the different modes of worship: the Greek, Latin, Anglican, Lutheran, and Reformed.

Homiletic and Catechetical are usually omitted from Liturgic, and separately treated.

CHAPTER CCLXXX.

LITURGICAL LITERATURE.

I. Collections:

H. A. DANIEL (d. 1871; the most learned Lutheran liturgist): Codex Liturgicus Ecclesie Universæ in Epitomen Redactus (Leipzig, 1847-53, 4 vols.; vol. i. contains the Roman, vol. ii. the Lutheran, vol. iii. the Reformed, vol. iv. the Oriental Liturgies).

FR. J. MONE (Roman Catholic): Lateinische und Griechische Messen aus dem 2ten bis 6ten Jahrhundert (Frankfurt-a-M., 1850; with valuable treatises on the Gallican, African, and Roman Mass).

J. M. NEALE (d. 1866; the most learned Anglican ritualist and liturgist, who studied the Eastern liturgies daily for thirty years, and almost knew them by heart): Tetralogia Liturgica; sive S. Chrysostomi, S. Jacobi, S. Marci Divinae Missæ; quibus accedit ordo Mozarabicus (London, 1849). The same: The Liturgies of S. Mark, S. James, S. Clement, S. Chrysostom, S. Basil, or according to the use of the Churches of Alexandria, Jerusalem, Constantinople (London, 1859; in the Greek with an English translation and an introduction and appendices).

C. E. HAMMOND: Ancient Liturgies (Oxford and London, 1878).

C. A. SWAINSON: The Greek Liturgies (Cambridge, 1884).

The Greek Menæa in 12 vols.

The Missale Romanum in many Latin editions.—The Pontificale Rom. in 3 vols.—The Breviarium Romanum, Eng. translation by John Marquis of Bute (Edinburgh and London, 1879, 2 vols.).

Older liturgical collections by Goar, 1647, Assemani, 1749–66 (13 vols.), Muratori, 1748 (2 vols.).

II. Works on the theory of worship:

H. A. KÖSTLIN: Geschichte des christlichen Gottesdienstes (Freiburg i. B., 1887).

The Christian Antiquities of BINGHAM, BINTERIM, SIEGEL, SMITH and CHEETHAM, BENNETT, quoted on p. 280.

On the Anglican Liturgy, see the works of PROCTER, BLUNT, BUTLER, LUCKOCK, and W. R. HUNTINGTON (1893). For the American changes see Bishop White's Memoirs, and the Proceedings of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, held at Baltimore, 1892.

CHAPTER CCLXXXI.

WORSHIP AND ART.

Worship is closely related to art and calls it into the service of religion. There is a sacred architecture, sacred sculpture, sacred painting, sacred poetry, and sacred music, and all have a history full of deep interest.

God is the author of beauty, as well as of truth and goodness. There can be no more essential antagonism between religion and art than between religion and science. All emanate alike from God and must return to God in harmony.

It is true that religion is independent of art. It can even dispense with church buildings and chapels. God may be worshiped anywhere and at all times. Christ prayed and preached on the mountain, under the canopy of heaven, as well as in the synagogue and in the temple. And for three hundred years, and often since, in times of persecution, the Christians held their services in the humblest places. But the regular public worship requires certain fixed seasons and buildings.

With the progress of the Church and civilization, all the fine arts were drawn into the service of devotion. Poetry and music were from the beginning intimately connected with worship, and form an important part of Liturgic.

CHAPTER CCLXXXII.

HYMNOLOGY.

Hymnology is the theory of sacred poetry as a part of public worship. In close connection with it is the theory of sacred music. Both are sanctioned in the Bible. "Sing unto the Lord a new song: sing unto the Lord, all the earth" (Ps. 96:1). "Admonish one another with psalms and hymns and spiritual songs" (Col. 3:16; Eph. 5:19).

Poetry and Music are twin sisters of heavenly descent, and the highest and most spiritual of the fine arts. They are handmaids of religion, and give wings to devotion. More than one third of the Old Testament is poetry: the Psalter, the Book of Job, the Proverbs, the Song of Songs, and the greater part of the prophetic literature, besides a number of lyric songs scattered through the historical books. The Psalter was the hymn- and tune-book of Israel; it passed into the worship of the Christian Church and assumed a new and deeper meaning in the light of the gospel salvation. The advent of Christ was preceded and accompanied by sacred poetry. The Magnificat of the Virgin Mary, the Benedictus of Zacharias, the Gloria in Excelsis of the angelic host, and the Nunc Dimittis of Simeon are the last of Hebrew psalms and the first of Christian hymns. They struck the keynote for the history of Christian hymnody.

A hymn is a popular lyric poem on a religious theme adapted for singing. It is prayer and praise in the Sunday language of poetry. It differs from other forms of lyric poetry, as the ode, the elegy, the ballad, and the sonnet, by its simple, pure and melodious language, and its adaptation to music. It is to the church what the folk-song (Volkslied) is to the nation. It is the highest flower of Christian life arrayed in a festal garb of beauty. It gives expression to the deepest feelings and highest aspirations of the human heart, and is one of the most powerful helps to private and public devotion. A genuine hymn never grows old. The Gloria in Excelsis and the Te Deum will be sung to the end of time with undiminished fervor and delight.

Hymns, like the Bible, are not sectarian, but truly Christian and catholic. They belong to the whole Church. They represent the unity of the faith and the communion of saints. This is especially true of the hymns on Christ, the common object of worship to all Christians, before whom the discords of rival theologies and rival Churches are hushed into silence.

A student for the ministry, and every Christian as well, should store the memory with the choicest hymns and Bible passages. They will be to them an un failing source of comfort, especially in lonely hours, in the night watches, on journeys, and in seasons of affliction. Hymns drive away melancholy and evil spirits. They are angels or ministering spirits "sent forth to do service for the sake of them that shall inherit salvation" (Heb. 1:14).

CHAPTER CCLXXXIII.

HISTORY OF HYMNODY.

The history of hymnody is one of the most interesting branches of Church History, and equally important for the development of worship and Christian life, but has only of late begun to be cultivated. It is like a garden filled with fragrant flowers. It exhibits piety in its purest forms. Many hymns have a rich history of their own, which is written in the biographies of saints.

I. Greek hymnody. It began with an amplified Gloria in Excelsis (Luke 2:14), and reached its classical period during the Iconoclastic Controversy between 650 and 820. Pliny wrote to Trajan, at the beginning of the second century, that the Christians were in the habit on Sunday, early in the morning, of singing songs to Christ as their God. Clement of Alexandria wrote a poem of praise to Christ as the Shepherd of children. The hymns of the post-Nicene age celebrate the Holy Trinity, the Incarnation, and the great Church festivals, but also the worship of the Virgin Mary, the martyrs and saints, and the sacred icons, in a manner that offends Protestant taste. They are incorporated in the ritual books, especially the twelve volumes of Menæa, which contain the daily devotions and correspond to the Latin Breviary. The Greek hymns, like the Psalms, are written in rhythmical prose for chanting. The chief hymnists are Gregory Nazianzen (d. 390), Anatolius (d. 458), St. John of Damascus (d. after 750), his friend and fellow-monk St. Cosmas of Jerusalem, called "the Melodist" (d. 760), St. Theophanes (d. 820), Andrew of Crete (d. 732), Stephen of Marsaba (d. 794). The last is well known to English readers by Neale's free reproduction of his touching expansion of the Saviour's invitation, "Come unto me":

"Art thou weary, art thou languid."

Ephraem Syrus (d. 378) is the father of Syriac hymnody.

II. Latin hymnody may be divided into three periods:

(1) The patristic period extends from Hilary (d. 368) and Ambrose (d. 397) to Venantius Fortunatus (d. 609) and Pope Gregory I. (d. 604). Its most precious legacy to the Church universal is the Te Deum Laudamus, popularly ascribed to Ambrose of Milan, but of later date. Augustin informs us how deeply he was moved by the hymns and canticles in the church of Milan: "Those strains flowed into mine ears, and the truth distilled into my heart. My feelings of piety were enkindled, and tears fell from my eyes." Prudentius (d. 409) was the best hymn writer of Spain. Fortunatus of Poitiers in France is the author of the famous musical passion hymns: Vexilla Regis prodeunt, and Pange, lingua, gloriosi praelium certaminis.

(2) From the second period, extending to the twelfth century, we have two famous pentecostal hymns, of uncertain authorship, addressed to the Holy Spirit: Veni, Creator Spiritus, and Veni, Sancte Spiritus. Notker Balbulus of St. Gall (840-912) is the father of the sequences in rhythmic prose (e.g., Media in vita in morte sumus, "In the midst of life we are in death").

(3) The third period embraces the greatest Latin hymnists, as Bernard of Morlaix (monk of Cluny, about 1150), Bernard of Clairvaux (d. 1153), Adam of St. Victor (d. 1192), Bonaventura (d. 1274), Thomas Aquinas (d. 1274), Thomas à Celano (about 1250), Jacopone (d. 1306). It produced the best Catholic hymns, some of which have been received into the Breviary and the daily devotions of the priests. The Jesu, dulcis memoria is the sweetest, the Stabat Mater the most pathetic, the Dies Iræ the most sublime, hymn in the Latin or any language. They have been often translated and imitated, but never equaled. It must be added, however, that the mediæval hymnody of the Latin, as well as of the Greek Church, abounds in Mariolatry and hagiolatry. Some hymns virtually put the Virgin in the place of Christ as the fountain of all grace.

III. German hymnody is the richest of all, and numbers more than a hundred thousand hymns, of which more than one thousand have outlived their generation. The German hymns before the Reformation were translations from the Latin. Luther struck the keynote of evangelical hymnody with his triumphant pæan of the Reformation,

“Ein’ feste Burg ist unser Gott.”

For a sketch of German hymnody I must refer to my article in Julian’s Dictionary of Hymnology (pp. 412–419).

IV. English hymnody. The Churches of England and Scotland, like the Reformed Churches on the Continent, for nearly two hundred years used metrical versions of the Psalms and Scripture Paraphrases in public worship. Sternhold and Hopkins (1551), Rouse (1646), Tate and Brady (1696).

The fathers of English hymnody are Bishop Ken (d. 1711), the author of a morning and evening hymn, with the classical doxology, “Praise God from whom all blessings flow”; Isaac Watts, an Independent minister (1674–1748), who furnished the richest supply for English hymnals; and Charles Wesley (1708–88), who wrote over five thousand lyric pieces, of which the most popular is “Jesus, Lover of my soul.” His brother, John (1703–91), was also no mean poet, and a translator of German hymns. Methodism was sung into the hearts of the people. But the Calvinistic Toplady (1740–78) equaled any of the Methodist hymns by his immortal

“Rock of Ages, cleft for me.”

The second period of English hymnody dates from the “Olney Hymns,” the joint production of John Newton and William Cowper (a genuine poet), first published in 1779, and ends with Bishop Heber’s missionary hymn, “From Greenland’s icy mountains” (1827).

The third period dates from the Oxford revival of Anglo-Catholicism, and is marked by John Keble, the author of the “Christian Year” (1827); J. H. Newman, who wrote his exquisite “Lead, kindly Light” in an orange boat sailing from Palermo to Marseilles (1833), twelve years before his secession to Rome; F. W. Faber ("O gift of gifts! O grace of faith!"); and by John Mason Neale, the most successful reproducer of Greek and Latin hymns. Miss Winkworth, Miss Cox, Arthur J. Russell, and Massie have added translations of many German hymns, from Luther down to Spitta.

Churchmen and Dissenters of all schools, from Calvinism and Anglo-Catholicism to Unitarianism, have contributed to this treasury of devotion.

The Scotch have longest adhered to the exclusive use of the Psalms in divine worship. Horatius Bonar (1808-89) is a most prolific and popular Scottish hymnist, although he would not permit any of his hymns to be sung in his church. He wrote, "I heard the voice of Jesus say," "I was a wandering sheep," and "Beyond the smiling and the weeping." Miss Jane Bothwick and her sister Sarah Findlater, of the Free Church, who published Hymns from the Land of Luther, have enriched English hymnody by choice reproductions of German hymns, among which Schmolke's "My Jesus, as Thou wilt" has become a universal favorite in America.

V. American hymnody follows closely that of England and Scotland, and has added hymns which will live, such as, "I love thy kingdom, Lord" by Dr. Timothy Dwight (d. 1817); "My faith looks up to thee," and "Jesus, thou joy of loving hearts" by Ray Palmer (d. 1887); "Softly now the light of day" by George W. Doane (d. 1859); "Trembling before thine awful throne" by Augustus L. Hillhouse (d. 1859); "Gently, Lord, O gently lead us," and "Saviour, I look to thee" by Thomas Hastings (d. 1872); "I would not live away," and "Like Noah's weary dove" by William Augustus Muhlenberg (d. 1877); "One sweetly solemn thought" by Phœbe Cary (d. 1871); "O where are kings and empires now?" and "When o'er Judea's vales and hills" by Arthur C. Coxe (b. 1818); "Stand up, stand up for Jesus" by George Duffield (d. 1888); "More love to thee, O Christ" by Mrs. Elizabeth Prentiss (d. 1878); "Jesus, I live to thee" by Henry Harbaugh (d. 1867); "At the door of mercy sighing" by Thomas McKellar (b. 1812); "O deem not, they are blessed alone" by W. C. Bryant (d. 1878); "Jesus, Saviour, pilot me" by E. Hopper (d. 1890); "Immortal Love! forever full" by John G. Whittier, the Quaker poet (d. 1892); "O Love Divine that stooped to share" by Oliver Wendell Holmes; and the patriotic hymn of Samuel F. Smith, "My country, 'tis of thee," written in 1832. James W. Alexander (d. 1859) deserves a place among the best translators of German hymns, especially of Paul Gerhardt's "O sacred Head, now wounded." The same is true of Dr. Thomas C. Porter.

The English and American hymnody now numbers nearly 50,000 hymns, and is likely to increase faster in the future than the German hymnody.

VI. We have no space for the French, Dutch, Scandinavian, and Bohemian hymnody. The French Protestants still use Clément Marot's psalter, finished by Beza (1541, 1562, etc.), with Goudimel's sweet music. Modern French hymnody dates from César Malan of Geneva (1787-1864), who wrote about one thousand hymns and composed several popular tunes. He was followed by Alexander Vinet, Adolphe Monod, Ami Bost, H. Empaytaz, Merle d'Aubigné, Felix Neff, Henri Lutteroth.

CHAPTER CCLXXXIV.

HYMNOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

I. Collections:

WILHELM CHRIST and M. PARANIKAS: Anthologia Græca Carminum Christianorum (Lips. 1871). The Greek text with Latin Prolegomena.

H. A. DANIEL (d. 1871): Thesaurus Hymnologicus (Lips. 1841-56, 5 tom.; vols. i., ii., iv., and v. contain Latin, vol. iii. Greek and Syrian hymns).

F. J. MONE: Lateinische Hymnen (Freiburg i.B., 1853, 3 vols.).

J. M. NEALE: Hymns of the Eastern Church (London, 1862; new ed. 1876); Mediæval Hymns and Sequences (London, 1862; 3d ed. 1867). Several of these free versions have passed into all modern English hymn-books.

EDWARD CASWALL (Anglican; joined the Roman Church in 1847; d. 1878): Lyra Catholica, containing all the Breviary and Missal Hymns, together with Some Other Hymns (London, 1849; New York, 1851; admirable translations).

PHILIP WACKERNAGEL (d. 1877): Das deutsche Kirchenlied von der ältesten Zeit bis zum Anfang des xvii. Jahrhunderts (Leipzig, 1864-77, 5 vols.; the last vol. edited by his two sons). A monumental collection of older German hymns; the first volume contains Latin hymns and sequences from the fourth to the sixteenth century.

ALBERT KNAPP: Evangelischer Liederschatz (Stuttgart, 3d ed. 1885).

PHILIP SCHAFF: Christ in Song; Hymns of Immanuel Selected from All Ages, with Notes (New York, 1868; London, 1879). SCHAFF and GILMAN: A Library of Religious Poetry (New York and London, 1884).

Of the numerous German hymn-books in use may be mentioned that of PHILIP SCHAFF: Deutsches Gesang- und Choralbuch, with notes on the authors, value and history of the hymns (Philadelphia and Cleveland, 1859; revised and enlarged, 1874, etc.).

II. Historical works on hymnology:

JOHN JULIAN: A Dictionary of Hymnology, setting forth the Origin and History of Christian Hymns of all Ages and Nations (London and New York, 1892, 616 pp.). The best general work on hymnology in the English or any other language, with contributions from a large number of specialists.

1. The Poetry of the Bible by PHILIP SCHAFF in his Literature and Poetry (New York, 1890, pp. 63-133). The literature is given on pp. 131-133. The principal writers on Hebrew poetry are Lowth, Herder, and Ewald.

2. On Greek hymnology: PHILIP SCHAFF: Church History, vol. iii., pp. 575 sqq.; vol. iv., pp. 402 sqq., and the literature there quoted.

3. On Latin hymnology: TRENCH: Sacred Latin Poetry (London, 2d ed. 1864). SCHAFF, Church Hist., vol. iii., pp. 585 sqq., and vol. iv., pp. 416 sqq. Special discussions of the Dies Iræ, Stabat Mater, and St. Bernard's Hymns, in his Literature and Poetry (New York, 1890), pp. 134-255.

S. W. DUFFIELD: The Latin Hymn-Writers and Their Hymns (New York, 1889).

4. On German hymnology: ED. EMIL KOCH: Geschichte des Kirchenlieds und Kirchengesangs in der christlichen, insbesondere der deutschen evangelischen Kirche (Stuttgart, 3d ed. revised and enlarged, 1866-76, 8 vols.; vol. viii. by R. Lauxmann).

C. A. BECK: Geschichte des katholischen Kirchenliedes von seinen ersten Anfängen bis auf die Gegenwart (Köln, 1878).

A. F. W. FISCHER: Kirchenlieder-Lexicon (Gotha, 1878-79, 2 vols.; supplement, 1886, contains an alphabetical list of 4500 hymns with literary notes).

5. On English hymnology:

JOSIAH MILLER: Singers and Songs of the Church (London, 1869).

E. F. HATFIELD (d. 1883): The Poets of the Church (New York, 1884).

S. W. DUFFIELD: English Hymns; Their Authors and History (New York, 1884).

Also JULIAN, above quoted, and H. S. BURRAGE: Baptist Hymn-Writers; HUTTER: The Annotated Methodist Hymnal; JAMES KING: Anglican Hymnology.

The Union Theological Seminary in New York has a rich hymnological library, especially of English and American hymn-books, including over three hundred volumes purchased from Daniel Sedwick in London, and the collections of Hatfield (presented) and Bird (bought).

CHAPTER CCLXXXV.

EVANGELISTIC.

Evangelistic is a new term for a new science, from εὐαγγελίζω, or εὐαγγελίζομαι, evangelizo (Vulg.), to evangelize, to bring glad tidings (of the Messianic blessings, of the Christian salvation), often used in the Septuagint and the Greek Testament. The term εὐαγγελιστής, evangelista (Vulg.), a bringer of good tidings, is given to the heralds of salvation through Christ, or itinerant preachers who were not apostles, but acted under their direction in different places, such as Philip, Timothy, Titus, Silas, Luke (Acts 21 : 8 ; Eph. 4 : 11 ; 2 Tim. 4 : 5). Every apostle is an evangelist, but not every evangelist is an apostle. The same term was used afterwards for the writers of the four canonical Gospels.

Evangelistic is the science of Missions (Missionswissenschaft), that is, of the propagation of Christianity at home and abroad. It is a new branch of theological learning, demanded by the growing zeal in missions.

Christianity is a missionary religion and looks to the conversion of the world. Christ commanded his disciples to preach the gospel to every creature and to make disciples of all nations.* In connection with this command he said: "All authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth." He illustrates the progress of the kingdom of heaven by the twin parables of the mustard-seed and the leaven.†

The missionary activity of the Church embraces the following divisions :

I. Missions among the heathen or idolaters : barbarian, semi-civilized and civilized.

II. Missions among the Jews.

III. Missions among the Mohammedans.

IV. Home Missions in neglected parts of Christian countries and among immigrants. Especially important in America.

V. Inner Mission. In Germany (since Wichern) it includes the revival of dead Christianity, and philanthropic and benevolent institutions. Young Men's Christian Associations, Christian Endeavor Societies, etc. The labors of Moody, and other evangelists.

* Mark 16 : 15 ; Matt. 28 : 19, comp. Matt. 24 : 14 ; Luke 24 : 47 ; Rom. 11 : 25.

† Matt. 13 : 31-33.

VI. City Missions. A special branch of Home and Inner Missions among the modern heathen and barbarians of large cities, as London, New York and Berlin. Here belongs also the remarkable work of the Salvation Army, founded by William Booth and his noble wife in 1865, a sort of aggressive military Christianity, impelled by a truly apostolic spirit, and followed with rich results in the English-speaking world.

There is a reciprocal influence between these different mission fields. Zeal for one stirs up zeal for another. One of the greatest blessings of foreign Missions is their inspiring effect upon the Churches at home.

CHAPTER CCLXXXVI.

EPOCHS OF MISSIONS.

I. Apostolic Missions. The planting of Christianity from Jerusalem to Rome among Jews, Greeks and Romans. Peter, the apostle of the Jews; Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles.

II. Ante-Nicene period. Spread of Christianity amid persecution in the Roman Empire, especially in Syria, Egypt, Italy and southern Europe. Hindrances: hostility of the Jews and Gentiles; slanderous reports; novelty; poverty and obscurity; a crucified founder; apparent want of patriotism. Helps: the perfect teaching and example of Christ; moral and spiritual power; regenerating and sanctifying influence; rationality of doctrines; the universality and adaptability of Christianity; compact church organization; the testimony of miracles and prophecy; the order and unity of the Roman Empire, and the prevalence of the Greek language and culture; the destruction of Jerusalem; the moral corruption and hopeless decay of the heathen religion. "Christ appeared," says Augustin, "to the men of a decrepit, decaying world, that while all around them was withering away, they might through him receive new, youthful life."

The total number of Christians in the Roman Empire at the beginning of the fourth century was, perhaps, nearly ten millions—that is, about one tenth or one twelfth of the estimated population of the empire. According to Chrysostom, the Christian population of Antioch in the year 380 was about 100,000, or one half of the whole.

III. Post-Nicene period. After the conversion of Constantine, the emperors aided the Church in the overthrow of paganism, which was completed in the fifth and sixth centuries. This triumph, however, was not achieved without great sacrifice of the purity of the Church. The conversion was to a large extent merely nominal, while heathen corruptions and practices continued.

IV. Missions in the Middle Ages. Conversion and civilization of the barbarians of central and western Europe, Celtic, Germanic, and Slavonic, by monks and priests mostly under the direction of the Bishop of Rome and with the aid of the civil and military power. The Irish missionaries were distinguished for zeal and independence. Ireland was called "the island of saints."

St. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, Columba, the apostle of Scotland, Augustin, the apostle of England, Columbanus and Boniface, the apostles of Germany, Ansgar, the apostle of Denmark, Cyril and Methodius, the apostles of the Bulgarians. The conversion of Catholic France was determined by King Clovis after the victory of Tolbiac (496). Charles Martel gave effectual aid to Boniface (750). Charles the Great converted the rebellious Saxons by force (785). His example was the beginning of a crusade for the overthrow of heathenism, contrary to the spirit of the gospel and against the protest of Aleuin, who with all his admiration for the great emperor maintained that instruction, persuasion and love were the only proper means for converting the heathen. The crusaders tried to convert or to subdue the Mohammedans by the sword, but failed. The Sultan still holds the key to the Holy Sepulchre, and rules and ruins the once flourishing lands of the Bible.

Russia received her Christianity from the Greek Church by military command of Grand-Duke Vladimir, called "Isapostolos" (980-1015), who sent his subjects into the river Dnieper, while the priests read prayers from the cliffs on the shore. The greatest wholesale water baptism in history, "wonderfully curious and beautiful to behold," says Nestor, the Russian monk and annalist.

V. Spain and Portugal, which had the supreme command at sea in the fifteenth century, discovered and settled Central and South America, and added them to the domain of the papacy. The conversion of the Indians was brought about by Dominican, Franciscan, and Jesuit monks, with the aid of the civil power and in the same spirit which prevailed in the Middle Ages towards the barbarians. The sword was more powerful than the cross. The work was darkened by fearful cruelty against the natives; but the noble spirit of Las Casas, the friend and emancipator of the Indians, rises far above his gold-seeking contemporaries.

The French Canadians are likewise Roman Catholics, descended from the settlers in the seventeenth century. The labors of the French Jesuits among the Indians are distinguished for heroic self-denial, but had little success.

These American conquests made up, numerically, for the losses in Europe which the Roman Church sustained by the Reformation.

VI. Rome has carried on her missionary operations without interruption, and in the same spirit, to this day in all heathen lands. They are under the direction of the Congregatio de Propaganda Fide, which was founded by Gregory XV., a pupil of the Jesuits (1622), and has its seat in Rome. Its chief organ is the Annales de la Propagation de la Foi, published at Lyons, and elsewhere in different languages. The greatest missionary of the Roman Church is the Jesuit Francis Xavier, "the apostle of the Indians," and patron of Catholic missions (1506-52), who with the authority of the Pope and the King of Portugal carried on a most successful mission in East India and Japan, and was only prevented by his death from entering into China. Among the latest missionaries of the Roman faith is Cardinal Lavigerie (d. 1893), the benefactor of dark Africa, who figures most prominently in the suppression of the African slave-trade.

The Greek Church follows in the van of the military power of Russia in her conquering march eastward across the northern continent of Asia.

VII. Protestantism was for a long time culpably indifferent to the missionary duty of the Church. The Reformers were so absorbed in the conflict with popery that they hardly thought of the heathen. Luther preached war against the Turks, and thought that the end of the world was near at hand. Calvin gave his aid to unsuccessful settlements in Brazil and Florida, but they were intended more for a refuge for persecuted Huguenots than for the conversion of the natives.

The door for Protestant missions was opened by the rise of Holland and Britain, which first disputed, then shared, and at last surpassed the exclusive dominion of Spain and Portugal over the seas, and acquired large possessions in Asia and America. The Dutch East India Company was chartered in 1602, with an avowed subordinate purpose of converting the heathen, and Protestantism was forced upon the natives of Ceylon in 1636.

The earliest missionary efforts of England were connected with the colonies of North America. John Eliot (1604-90) was the first great missionary to the Indians in New England. He translated the whole Bible into an Indian dialect. The Mayhews, Sargent, David Brainerd, and the Moravian Zeisberger labored in the same spirit. A corporation for "Promoting the Gospel of Jesus Christ in New England" was chartered in 1662, the "Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge" in 1698, and the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" in 1701.

The British East India Company was at first hostile to missions, but the steady progress of conquest in the eighteenth century resulted in the vast Indian empire under the control of English Christianity and civilization.

In Germany, the missionary spirit was first awakened by the pietistic movement of Spener and Francke, and by the Unitas Fratrum, or Moravians. The latter are the pioneer mission Church, and have sent since 1732 to all parts of the world over 2300 missionaries of a truly apostolic spirit, even to the most degraded among the heathen. The Lutheran Church followed very slowly in the course pointed out by Count Zinzendorf. Her earliest missionaries were Ziegenbalg and Schwartz (d. 1798), who studied in Halle and were sent by the Danish Missionary Society of Copenhagen to Tranquebar, in India, where they labored with great success.

VIII. A new missionary era may be dated from 1792, when, under the inspiration of William Carey, the Baptist Missionary Society was formed. It was followed by the London Missionary Society, 1795, the Church Missionary Society, 1799, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, 1810, the American Baptist Missionary Union, 1814, the Basel Missionary Society, 1815, the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, 1816; also the several Presbyterian, the Protestant Episcopal, the Baptist, the Dutch and German Reformed, the Episcopal Methodist, the Protestant Methodist, the Lutheran, and many other missionary societies in the United States and Canada. The total number of these societies to-day exceeds one hundred, mostly English, Scotch, Irish, and American.

In the providence of God, India, China, Corea, Japan, and, since the explorations of Livingstone and Stanley, even the interior of Africa, in fact the whole heathen world, is now open to missions. The work in Japan, though scarcely begun, is most encouraging, and may at no distant day result in the conversion of that empire which has already adopted many of the results of Christian civilization.

The English, Scotch, and Anglo-Americans are the richest, the most energetic and most successful missionary nations of modern times; indeed they control the commerce of the world by sea and land. The extraordinary progress of missionary zeal and enterprise is phenomenal, and one of the greatest evidences for the vitality of Christianity, and an assurance of its ultimate triumph to the ends of the earth, in obedience to Christ's command and in fulfillment of his promise.

CHAPTER CCLXXXVII.

MISSIONARY LITERATURE.

The Encyclopædia of Missions: Descriptive, Historical, Biographical, Statistical. Edited by EDWIN MUNSELL BLISS (New York, 1891, 2 vols.). A full bibliography of Foreign Missions by Samuel Macauley Jackson is added, vol. i., pp. 557-661.

G. WARNECK: Evangelische Missionstehre (Gotha, 1892 sqq.).

R. GRUNDEMAN: Missionsatlas (Gotha, 1867-70).

I. General History of Foreign Missions:

THEODOR CHRISTLIEB: Protestant Foreign Missions, Their Present State (Eng. translation, London and Boston, 3d ed. 1881; also in German, French, Swedish and Norwegian).—GEO. SMITH: Short History of Christian Missions (Edinburgh, 1884; 2d ed. 1886).—W. FLEMING STEVENSON: The Dawn of Modern Missions (Edinburgh, 1887).—GUSTAV WARNECK: Outline of the History of Protestant Missions (English translation, Edinburgh, 1884).—EDWIN HODDER: Conquests of the Cross: A Record of Missionary Work throughout the World (London, 1890-91, 3 vols.).—J. LOWE: Medical Missions (London, 1886; 3d ed. 1891).—G. F. MACLEAR: History of Christian Missions in the Middle Ages (London, 1860).

In German: C. G. BLUMHARDT: Versuch einer allgemeinen Missionsgeschichte der Kirche Christi (Basel, 1828-37, 5 parts).—H. GUNDEBT: Die evangelische Mission, ihre Länder, Völker und Arbeiter (Calw, 1881; 2d ed.

1886).—C. H. KALKAR: Geschichte der christlichen Mission unter den Heiden (Gütersloh, 1879).—G. E. BURCKHARDT: Kleine Missionsbibliothek (Bielefeld, 2d ed. by Grundemann, 1876 sqq.).

II. Special Histories of Foreign Missions:

American Board, by R. Anderson (Boston, 1870–74, 4 vols.); Baptist (Northern), S. F. Smith (Boston, 1879; 2d ed. 1883); (Southern), H. A. Tupper (Phila., 1880, continued to 1890; Richmond, Va., 1891); Methodist, J. M. Reid (New York, 1879, 2 vols.); Moravian, A. C. Thompson (New York, 1882); Presbyterian, J. C. Lowrie (New York, 1855; 2d ed. 1868); Reformed Dutch, Mrs. M. E. Sangster (New York, 1887); The New Hebrides Mission of John G. Paton (Presbyterian), or, Thirty Years among South Sea Cannibals (New York, 1892).

III. Biographies of Foreign Missionaries. Collections:

C. D. YONGE: Pioneers and Founders (London, 1872).—W. P. WALSH: Modern Heroes of the Mission Field (London and New York, 1882; 3d ed. 1892).—A. H. JAPP: Master Missionaries (London, 1880; 3d ed. 1883).—MRS. E. R. PITMAN: Heroines of the Mission Field (London and New York, 1881).—MRS. F. E. ARNOLD-FORSTER: Heralds of the Cross (London, 1882; 2d ed. 1885).

IV. Individual Biographies of Foreign Missionaries:

W. C. Burns (China), by Islay Burns (Edinburgh and New York, 1870; 6th ed. 1871).—William Carey (India), by Geo. Smith (London, 1885; 2d ed. 1887).—Alexander Duff (India), by Geo. Smith (1879; 2d ed. 1881).—William Ellis (Polynesia), by J. E. Ellis (London, 1873).—William Goodell (Turkey), by E. D. G. Prime (New York, 1876).—James Hannington (Uganda), by E. C. Dawson (London and New York, 1887).—Adoniram Judson (Burmah), by E. Judson (New York, 1883).—Robert and Mary Moffat (Africa), by J. S. Moffat (London and New York, 1885; 6th ed. 1887).—David Livingstone (Africa), by Samuel Smiles (London and New York, 1885).—Henry Martyn (Persia), by Geo. Smith (London, 1893).—John Coleridge Patteson (Polynesia), by Charlotte M. Yonge (London, 1874, 2 vols.).—John Williams (Polynesia), by John Campbell (London, 1842; 2d ed. 1843).—Samuel Wells Williams (China), by F. W. Williams (New York, 1889).—John Wilson (India), by Geo. Smith (London, 1878; 2d ed. 1879).—David Zeisberger (North American Indians), by Edmund de Schweinitz (Philadelphia, 1870).

V. Revivals and Inner Mission:

TRACY: The Great Awakening (of 1740).—MACFARLANE: Revivals of the Eighteenth Century.—FINNEY: Lectures on Revivals. Biographies of Whitefield, John Wesley, Jonathan Edwards, Lyman Beecher, Charles G. Finney, Wichern.

VI. The work of "the Salvation Army," and missions among the heathen in Christian lands:

General WILLIAM BOOTH (founder of the Army): Aggressive Christianity (London, 1882; 5th ed. 1890); In Darkest England and the Way Out (1890).—BALLINGTON BOOTH: New York's Inferno (New York, 1893).—Also Mrs. CATHERINE BOOTH (wife of General W. Booth, and one of the most remarkable and useful women of the nineteenth century, d. 1892): Popular Christianity (1890); and her biography, by BOOTH-TUCKER (1893, 2 vols.). The Salvation Army publishes the weekly "War Cry" and the monthly "Conqueror," which have obtained in a short time an enormous circulation.

I recommend the study of biographies of great missionaries, as Columba, Boniface, Ansgar, Xavier; Eliot, Brainerd, Zeisberger, Carey, Henry Martyn, Judson, Moffat, Livingstone, Duff, Patteson, Hannington, Paton.

The greatest missionary is Paul, and the most inspiring history of missions is the Book of The Acts—the record of a spiritual conquest of souls and their redemption from the slavery of sin to freedom in Christ.

TOPICAL INDEX.

- Abelard, as rationalist, 65, 369.
 Æthiopic, 122.
 Alexander, A., 390.
 Allen, A. V. G., quoted, 381.
 America, Spanish, 285.
 sects in early, 291.
 American Church history, 285.
 American Church History Society
 literature, 294.
 Anselm, St., as to faith, 66; 369.
 Anthony of Padua, 482.
 Antiquities, 145.
 ecclesiastical, 248.
 Apocrypha, Jewish, 142.
 Apologetic, 309.
 necessity, 310.
 epochs, 313.
 Apostles' teachings, literature on,
 332.
 Apostolic age, 272.
 Apostolical Canons, 458.
 Constitutions, 458.
 Aquinas, T., 370.
 Arabic, 121.
 Aramaic, 108, 115, 128.
 biblical, 116.
Arcana Cœlestia, 227.
 Archæology, 280.
 biblical, 140.
 classified, 141, 145.
 sources, 142.
 history, 146.
 Christian, 280.
 Aristides' "Apology," 277.
 Aristotle, as to theology, 77.
 Arminianism, 374, 399.
 Arnold, E., quoted, 47, 48.
 Arnold, G., 300.
 Aryan religion, 34.
 Asceticism of St. Jerome, 431.
 Assyrian, 118.
 Athanasius, 365.
 "Auburn Declaration," 396.
 Augustin, quoted, 197, 199, 255. influence, 366.
 as to morals, 432.
- Bacon, quoted, 84, 91.
 Balder, 54.
 Bampton Lectures, 315.
 Baptism, validity, 394.
 Barnabas's Epistle, 277.
 Barnes, A., 396.
 Baur, F. C. von, 228, 302.
 Baxter, quoted, 476, 488.
 Beecher, H. W., 498.
 Beecher, L., 396, 498.
 Bellarmin, R., 222.
 Bengel, quoted, 158, 233.
 Berkeley, quoted, 285.
 Bernard, St., quoted, 233, 480.
 Berthold, 482.
 Beyschlag, as to John, 327.
 Beza, 214.
 Bible, the, 94.
 inspiration, 95.
 tributes, 97, 158.
 natural history, 144.
 various readings, 156.
 transcriptions, 158.
 in original, and the Septuagint, 160, 161.
 authorship, 179.
 defects in Authorized Version,
 191, 193.
 Biblical criticism, 153.
 Biblical history, periods, 260, 267.
 Biblical theology, 316.
 bearings, 317.
 method, 319.
 history, 328.
 Bibliography, i., 6, 10.
 Biel, G., 370.
 Books, Milton on, 91.
 American, 291.
 Brahminism, 43.
 Breckinridge, R. J., 394.
Breviarium Romanum, 509.
 Briggs, C. A., 400.
 Broad-church, 344.
 Brooks, Phillips, 499.
 Buddhism, 45, 49.
 Buddhists, number, 45.

- Bunyan, 489.
 Bushnell, H., 387.
 Cajetan, Cardinal, 370.
 Calixtus, 216.
 Calvin, 484.
 as commentator, 214, 372.
 on canon law, 460.
 Calvinism, 373.
 scholastic, 374.
 five points, 389.
 Cameron, J., 378.
 Canon, theory of the, 168.
 Hebrew, 171.
 Hellenistic, 171.
 New Testament, history, 172.
 and Protestantism, 175.
 Canon law, the, 459.
 Catechetic, 500.
 Catechisms, typical, 502.
 Chalmers, T., 494.
 Channing, W. E., 387.
 Carlyle, T., quoted, 269.
 Casuistical divinity, 442.
 Casuistry, 441.
Catenæ Patrum, 207.
 Catholicity, 412.
 Cave, A., as to knowledge and religion, 65.
 Census, eleventh, 28.
 Chaldee, 116.
 Christ, life of, 268.
 Christian life, history, 248.
 Christian union, 414.
 Christianity, 21, 129.
 fullness, 59.
 in U. S. A., origin and orthodoxy, 290.
 distinctive feature, 291.
 among the English, 522.
 Christocentric, 241, 358, 364, 398.
 Chronology, ecclesiastical, 243.
 Chrysostom, 479.
 Church, 130, 455. organization, 246.
 law, 457.
 polity, 463.
 Church and State as related, 467, 469.
 Church ethic, history, 428, 439.
 Church history, 244.
 written sources, 251.
 unwritten sources, 253.
 uses, 258.
 periods, 259.
 Christian, periods, 261.
 Church's development, the, 240.
 Cicero, on relegere, 18.
 quoted, 259.
 Classics, study of, 123.
 Clement's Epistles and Syriac version, 277.
 Codex, Vatican, 162.
 Sinaiticus, 276.
 Lipsiensis, 277.
 Codices of New Testament, 164, 172.
 Coleridge, on Channing, 387.
 Columbus, 285.
 Commentaries, exhaustive, 196.
 popular, 197.
 Roman Catholic of 17th century, 222.
 by the English, 229.
 American, 229.
 Confessions, 406.
 Confucianism, 41.
 Congregational Creed of 1883, 386.
 Conversion, 312.
 Co-operative societies of to-day, 415.
Corpus Juris Canonici, 459, 461.
 Council of Trent, 175.
 Councils, history, 247.
 Cranmer, 485.
 Creationism, 395.
 Creeds, revision, politically, 389.
 nature of, 406.
 authority, 407.
 classified, 408.
 historically, 410.
Critici Sacri, 216, 220.
 Criticism, literary, 153.
 Culture, mental and moral, 3.
 Cyprian and sacerdotalism, 86.
 Dabney, R. L., 394.
De Civitate Dei, 432.
De Officiis Ministrorum, 430.
 Denominations, number, 336.
 Denominationalism, useful, 413.
 Descartes, 81.
Diatessaron, Tatian's, 270, 277.
 Dickinson, B., 396.
 Dickinson, J., 388.
Didache, the, 278.
 Diplomatic, ecclesiastical, 243.
 Divine sovereignty, 399.
 Dogma, history, 249.
 Dogmatic, content, 333.
 sources, 334.
 biblical, 335.
 confessional, 336.
 Greek, 337.
 Roman Catholic, 338.
 Lutheran, 339.
 Reformed and Calvinistic, 342.
 Anglican, 344.
 Arminian, 346.
 Socinian, 348.
 rationalistic, 350.

- Dogmatic, Evangelical Union, 352.
 Ritschl, 355, 360. speculative, 360.
 Christocentric, 362.
 Patristic, 364.
 Augustinian, 368.
 Scholastic, 368.
 Reformation, 371.
 Calvinistic, in America, 376.
 New England, 377.
 Presbyterian, 388.
 Old School, 389.
 New School, 396.
 German, in America, 402.
 Dörner, on American theology, 375.
 Dualism, 31.
 Dwight, T., 384.
 "Ecclesia non sinit sanguinem," 471.
Ecclesiae. patres, doctores, auctores, 275.
 Ecclesiology, 455.
 Education, object, 3.
 kinds, 3.
 religious, 4.
 value, 4.
 means, 4.
 degrees, 5.
 Edwardeans, 381.
 Edwards, Jon., 378, 381.
 Edwards, Dr., 382.
 Egypt's religion, 50.
 Eloquence, 473.
 Emmons, N., 383.
 Encyclical, 7.
 Encyclopædia, formal, i., 8.
 meaning, 6.
 theological, 9.
 divisions, 11.
 history, 11.
 "Encyclopædia," Schaff-Herzog, 338.
 English, roots in, 106.
 Episcopacy, congregational, 463. diocesan, 463.
 metropolitan, 464.
 Anglican, 465.
 papal, 465.
 Lutheran, 466.
 Episcopal Prayer-Book, 509.
 Erasmus, quoted, 134; 211.
 Erigena, S., 369.
 Ethic, definitions, 422.
 Christian, 421, 423.
 contrasted with dogmatic, 422.
 philosophical, 423.
 pagan, 424.
 Protestant, history, 436.
 Eusebius, on the canon, 174.
 Evangelical Churches, confessions, 409.
 Evangelistic, branches, 517.
 Ewald, H., on Bible, 97; 141, 228.
 on ὁ λόγος, 189.
 Exegesis, divisions, 189, 202.
 of Old and New Testaments, 197.
 history, 199.
 Jewish, 200, 203.
 before Christ, 201.
 rabbinical, 202.
 allegorizing, 202.
 after Christ, 203.
 Christian, 204.
 patristic, 205.
 mediæval, 207.
 of the Reformers, 212.
 Protestant, of 17th century, 215.
 Rationalistic, of 19th century, 223.
 Swedenborgian, 226.
 evangelical, 227.
 as to history and theology, 232.
 Exegete, qualifications, 188.
 Exegetes, Greek, 205.
 Latin, 206.
 Exegetic, departments, 94.
 Exegetical sense, fourfold, 208.
 mystic, 208.
 Ezra, 201.
 legend of, 170.
 Faber, on English of the Bible, 190.
 "Faith precedes understanding," 66.
 Farel, W., 484.
 Farrar, F. W., 493.
 Fathers, the, estimated, 206.
 Feeling and piety, 71.
 Ferrer, 482.
 Feticism, 41.
 Francis of Assisi, 481.
 Franklin, Benj., on pride, 70.
 Free-will, 380, 399.
 Fundamental theology, 93.
 Gautama, 46.
 Geibel, quoted, 85.
 Gemara, 201.
 General Assembly of Presbyterian Church, 394.
Geschichte, 234.
 Geography, biblical, 143.
 ecclesiastical, 241, 444.
 Gibbons, Cardinal, on church and state, 468.
 Goethe, as to the Bible, 97.
 quoted, 188, 238.
 as to the Christian struggle, 269.
 as to Church history, 297.
 as to rules, 460.
 Greek, 123.
 dialects, 125.
 Hellenistic, 126, 128, 135.

- Greek, apostolic, 127.
 sub-apostolic, 137.
 ecclesiastical, 138.
- Greek Church Creed, 408.
- Gregory I., 480.
 as exegete, 206.
 quoted, 475.
- Gregory of Nyssa, 365.
- Guthrie, Thomas, 495.
- Hades, 395, 503.
- Haggada, 201.
- Hagiographa, 171.
- Halakha, 201.
- Hall, Robert, 493.
- Hamilton, Wm., as to knowledge, 356.
- Harnack, on community in theology, 403.
- Harper, A. P., quoted, 45.
- Harper, W. R., 114.
- Hase, on earlier historians, 299.
- Heathen, Bible view, 38.
- Heathenism, 36.
- Hebrew, 105, 106, 107, 128.
 rabbinical, 116.
- Hebrew learning, history, 111.
- Hcine, H., on Moses, 323.
- Helvetic Formula, 391.
- Hell, extent, 395.
- Herder, J. G., 486.
- Heresies, 250.
- Hermeneutic, definition, 186.
 aim, 187.
 philological, 194.
 theological, 195.
 homiletical, 196.
- Higher criticism, 153, 177, 184, 400.
 as to the New Testament, 181.
 as to the Old Testament, 183.
- Hippolytus, on Daniel, 276.
- Historian, duty, 254.
- History, biblical, 235.
 ecclesiastical, 235.
 agents, 236.
 progress, 239.
 secular, 243.
 art in, 257.
 spirit for, 257.
- Hodge, C., 390.
- Hofacker, L., 487.
- Homiletic, 472.
- Homiletical hints, 475.
- Hopkins, S., 382.
- Hopkinsianism, 382.
- Horus, 51.
- Humility, 130.
- Hymnody, Greek, 511.
 Latin, 512
 German, 513.
- Hymnody, English, 513.
 American, 514.
 French, 515.
- Hymnology, 510.
- Idolatry, 36.
 origin, 37.
- "Independent, The," 23.
- Indo-Germanic, 103.
- Inerrancy of the Bible, 392, 393.
- Infant damnation, 379.
- Inspiration, verbal, 392.
- Irenic, 412.
- Isagogic defined, 149.
 value, 150.
 classified, 151.
 history, 152.
 special, 177.
- Islâm, 59.
- Israel, history, 264.
- 'Isropia, 234.
- Itala, 165.
- Jerome, St., quoted, 97, 110.
- Jesus' teaching, 325.
- John of Damascus, St., 337, 365.
- John's style, 134.
- Jonah, 40.
- Josephus, in Greek and Hebrew, 124.
 as to canon, 171.
- Judaism, 55.
- Kahnis, as to eucharist, 339.
- Kant, as to religion, 69.
- Karaites, the, 203.
- Keryetic, 473.
- Kingdom of God, 456.
- Knowledge, and humility, 4.
 and piety, 65.
- Knox, 485.
- Krummacker, F. W., 487.
- Lactantius, as to religare, 18.
- Lambeth Palace articles, 346.
- Languages, classification, 103.
- Latimer, 484.
- Latinisms, 190.
- Latitudinarianism, 220, 412.
- Le Fèvre, J. 211.
- Leo I., 480.
- Lightfoot, J. B., as to Muratori, 174.
- Liturgic, 508.
- Lombard, Peter, 369.
- Luke's style, 132.
- Luther, 371, 476, 483.
 as commentator, 213.
 as theologian, 356.
 quoted, 476.
- Lutheran Church Confessions, 409.
- Lutheranism, scholastic, 373.
- Lyra, N., quoted, 207.
- Macleod, N., 495.
- Man, religious constitution, 63.

- Manichæism, 35.
 Mark's style, 132.
 Marshall, S., 489.
 Masora, 110, 159.
 Massillon, 485.
 Matthew's style, 131.
 Melanchthon, 483.
 as exegete, 213, 340.
 Melvill, H., 492.
 Methodism, 347.
 Methodology, i., 6, 10.
 Midrash, 201.
 Milton, quoted, 91, 377.
 Ministerial call, 87.
 Ministers, indispensable, 86.
 Ministry, Christian, theory, 454. different offices, 454.
 Miranda, P. à, quoted, 82.
 Mishna, 201.
Missale Romanum, 509.
 Missions, 518.
 history of, 244.
 ante-Nicene, 518.
 Middle Ages, 519.
 Roman, 520.
 Protestant, 521.
 modern, 521.
 histories, 523.
 biographies, 523.
 revivals, 523.
 Moabite stone, 109, 147.
 Moody, D. L., 499.
 Mohammed, 57, 58.
 Mohammedanism, 33, 57.
 Monod, A., 486.
 Monography, ecclesiastical, 294.
 Monotheism, 31, 37, 55.
 Morality, and piety, 69.
 heathen and Christian, 424, 430.
 evangelical, 426.
 ascetic, 427.
 Morals, 421.
 mediæval, 434.
 Moses, 323.
 Mosheim, J. L. von, 485.
 Müller, M., quoted, 65.
 Music, 510.
 Mysticism, 358.
 Mythology, Roman, 53.
 Teutonic, 54.
 Natural ability, 378.
 Neander, on Christ, 269.
 to Hodge, 394.
 Nevin, J. W., 387, 390.
 New France, 287.
 "New Lights," 388.
 New School, 388.
 New Testament, writers' peculiarities, 130.
 New Testament MSS., 156.
 text sources, 163.
 cursives, 165.
 ancient translations, 165.
 received, and true text, 167.
 higher criticism, 181.
 and the Old, 320.
 theology, 325.
 Newman, J. H., on Jerome, 432.
 as preacher, 492.
 Nirvâna, 47.
 Occam, W., 370.
 Œcolampadius, J., 214.
 "Old Lights," 388.
 Old School, 388.
 Old Testament, sources of text, 159.
 origin of, 170.
 higher criticism, 183.
 and the New, 320. periods of theology, 321.
 Origen, quoted, 95.
 as to "Hebrews," 180.
 as exegete, 205.
 Orthodoxy among peoples, 374.
 Pædagogic, 500.
 Paganism, 36.
 classical, 52.
 Pantheism, 31.
 Paraphrase, 190.
 Park, E. A., 385, 498.
 Pascal, quoted, 66.
 Patristic, 273.
 late discoveries in, 276.
 libraries of, 279.
 Paul's style, 133, 134.
 Pelagius, on freedom, 377.
 Persecutions, 245, 471.
 Peshitta, 165, 174.
 Peter's "Gospel" and "Apocalypse," 277.
 Piety, and orthodoxy, 67.
 five forms of, 75.
 Philo, quoted, 161.
 as allegorizer, 202.
 Philology, biblical, 101.
 ecclesiastical, 241.
Philosophumena, 276.
 Philosophy and theology, 82.
Physica Sacra, 144.
 "Plan of Union," 396.
 Poetry, 510.
 Poimenic, 507.
 Polity, apostolical, 463.
 papal, 465.
 presbyterian, 466.
 congregational, 466.
 denominational, literature for, 467.
 Polytheism, 31.

- Postilla*, 480.
 Preaching, 474, 477.
 where strongest, 497.
 Presbyterian, 86.
 Presbyterian new creed, 401.
 "Present Day Theology," 398.
 Press, influence of the, 474.
 Princeton, professors' declaration, 390. theology, 394.
 Probabilism, 442.
 Propædeutic, iv., 6.
 Prophets, the, 324.
 Pseudo-Clementine homilies, 277.
 Pulpit, history of, 477.
 Greek, 478.
 Latin, 480.
 Middle Ages, 480.
 Reformation, 483.
 Lutheran, 485.
 French, 485.
 Huguenot, 486.
 modern German, 486.
 English, 488.
 American, 496.
 Puritanism, 438.
 Raikes, Robert, 505.
 Rationalism, 350.
 Reformation, the, 281.
 Reformed Church confessions, 409.
 Religion, defined, 17.
 science, 18.
 history, 18.
 philosophy, 20.
 its value, 20.
 psychologically, 33, 65.
 intellectually, 65.
 practically, 69.
 emotionally, 71.
 experimentally, 73.
 and theology, 81.
 among the English, 402.
 Religions, classification, 29.
 natural, 29.
 revealed, 30.
 civilized, 32.
 barbarian, 32.
 sensual, 33.
 ascetic, 33.
 ethical, 33.
 by ideas and aims, 35.
 tribal, 35.
 national, 36.
 universal, 36.
 Religious liberty, 246, 470.
 Religious tests, 472.
 Renaissance, 209, 297.
 Reuchlin, J., 211.
 Reunion of Presbyterians, 397.
 Revision of English Version of 1870, sqq., 190.
 Ritschl, A., as to John, 183.
 in theology, 229, 355.
 Robertson, F. W., quoted, 97.
 on man, 239.
 as preacher, 493.
 Roman Church Creed, 408.
 Rosetta stone, 119.
 Samaritan, 117.
 Savonarola, 482.
 Schaff, quoted, 99.
 Schiller, quoted, 66.
 Schleiermacher, F., 487.
 on dependence, 71.
 Scholasticism, 370, 373.
 Schoolmen, the, 369.
 Scotch Church laws, 462.
 Scott, W., quoted, 97.
 "Self-love," 384.
 Semitic, 103, 104, 115.
 Semitic religion, 34.
 Semler, J. L., 224.
 Septuagint, the, 127.
 editions, 162.
 concordance, 163.
 Servetus, 471.
 Shedd, W. G. T., theology of, 395.
 Siloam inscription, 109.
 Simon, R., on "inerrancy," 393.
 Smith, H. B., quoted, 98.
 as to Christocentric, 363.
 on American theology, 375.
 on Emmons, 383.
 Smyth, E. C., 385.
 Socinianism, 439.
 Sociology, 442.
 South, R., 490.
 Spinoza, quoted, 380.
 Spurgeon, C. H., 494.
 Statistic, religious, 21.
 universal, 23.
 by nations, 24.
 English denominations, 25.
 United States, 25, 28.
 by sects in U. S. A., 26.
 of Roman Catholics in U. S., 27. geographical and numerical,
 441.
 social, 445.
 how composed, 445.
 lessons of, 446.
 Stoicism, 425.
 Storrs, R. S., 499.
 Stoughton, J., quoted, 220.
 Straus, D. F., last words, 271.
 Students' library, 91.
 Study, of theology, hints for, 87.

- Study, of the Bible, 96.
 exegetical, 232.
 of Church history, 305.
 in German universities, 403.
Summa de Casibus Penitentialibus, 442.
Summa Theologiae, 435.
 Sunday-school, American, 505.
 Symbolic, historical, 410.
 polemical, 410.
 history, 417.
 Symbols of faith, 406, 407.
 Syriac, 117.
 Syriac translations of the Gospels,
 277.
 Systematic theology, 307.
 Talmud, 142, 171, 201, 203.
 Targum, 201.
 Tauler, 482.
 Taylor, J., 490.
 Taylor, N. W., 384.
 "Teaching of the Twelve Apostles," 137, 277, 327, 429.
 Tennyson, quoted, 361.
 Textual criticism, 154.
 variations, 155.
 of Old Testament, 158.
 Theodosius I., penal laws, 39.
 Theological definitions, 308.
 Theology, defined, 77, 449.
 natural and revealed, 79.
 and religion, 80.
 and philosophy, 82.
 and the clergy, 85.
 its divisions, 92.
 Exegetical, 93.
 Jewish, 146.
 Historical, 234.
 spirit for, 257.
 Systematic, 307.
 use of apologetic, 312.
 Biblical, 316.
 patristic, 329.
 Dogmatic, 333.
 evangelical union, 352.
 anthropocentric, 362.
 christocentric, 362.
 theocentric, 362.
 in Germany, 402.
 Theology, Practical, 448.
 how divided, 449.
 history of, 451.
 writers on, 452.
 Pastoral, 507.
 Tholuck, 487.
 and American scholars, 390.
 Thornwell, J. H., 394.
 Tillotson, J., 490.
 Tocqueville, A., de, on America,
 292.
 Toleration, 59, 282.
 and liberty, 469.
 Traducianism, 395.
 Trimurti, 44.
 "True Christianity," 437.
 Turanian, 104.
 religion, 34.
 Turretin, J. H., 391.
 Tyler, B., 385.
 Tyndale, Wm., 215.
 Union Seminary, 319, 397, 516.
 Unitarianism, 349, 374, 386, 387.
 United States of America, 289.
 Church history, 289.
 separation of church and state,
 292.
 Urban II., 480.
 Viret, P., 484.
 Waddington, G., 303.
 Weiss, B., on John, 326.
 Wesley, J., 491, 505.
 Westminster Confession on the Bible, 97.
 its revision, 394, 400.
 Whitaker's "Almanack," 24.
 Whitefield, G., 491.
 Wiclif, J., 209, 482.
 Williams, M., on Buddhists, 45.
 Woodruff, A., 506.
 Woods, L., 385.
 Wordsworth, Chr., as to the Fathers, 206.
 Worship, history of, 248.
 æsthetic, 509.
 Young, B., as polygamist, 58.
 Zoölatry, 50.
 Zoroastrianism, 49.
 Zwingly, 102, 214, 371, 483.

INDEX OF AUTHORS.

- Abbot, Ez., 137.
 Abbott, Lyman, 239.
 Achelis, E. C., 453.
 Alexander, W. A., 463.
 Alford, H., 231.
 Alger, W. R., 296.
 Allen, A. J. C., 504.
 Alzog, J., 279.
 Ambrose, 12.
 Andrews, J. W., 462.
 —, S. J., 271.
 Aquinas, T., 209.
 Arminius, J., 347.
 Arnold, G., 300.
 Athanasius, 365.
 Augustin, 12, 366.
 Bacuez, et Vigouroux, 230.
 Baier, A. H., 419.
 Bain, Alex., 440.
 Baird, R., 293.
 —, S. J., 462.
 Bapheides, Phil., 305.
 Bareille, et Fèvre, 304.
 Baring-Gould, S., 249.
 Barnaby, J., 247.
 Baronius, C., 298.
 Baumstark, C. E., 315.
 Baur, F. C. v., 295, 331, 404.
 Bautain, 500.
 Baxter, R., 442, 488, 507.
 Beard, C., 283.
 Beauvais, V. de, 12.
 Beck, C. A., 516.
 —, J. T., 335.
 Bengel, J. A., 218.
 Bennett, C. W., 280.
 Berington, and Kirk, 339.
 Bernard, T. D., 331, 332.
 Bestmann, H. J., 428.
 Beveridge, W., 346.
 Beyschlag, W., 271, 331.
 Bezold, Fr. v., 283.
 Biedermann, A. E., 351.
 Biel, G., 370.
 Bingham, J., 280.
 Binterim, 280.
 Blaikie, W. G., 494.
 Bleek, F., 404.
 Bliss, E. M., 522.
 Blunt, J. H., 462.
 Bochart, 146.
 Bodemann, F. W., 419.
 Böhmer, J. H., 462.
 Böhrringer, Fr., 295.
 Booth, B., 523.
 Bopp, F., 103.
 Bossuet, 339.
 Bowne, B. P., 440.
 Brace, C. L., 249.
 Bratke, Ed., 234.
 Bretschneider, K. G., 351.
 Briggs, C. A., 330.
 Bright, Wm., 461.
 Brinkmeier, 243.
 Brockmann, 243.
 Brown, Francis, 121.
 Browne, E. H., 346.
 Buel, S., 346.
 Buhl, F., 169.
 Bull, G., 346.
 Bullinger, 13.
 Bunsen, C. K. J., 230.
 Burrage, H. S., 516.
 Busenbaum, H., 442.
 Bushnell, H., 271, 314, 498.
 Butler, Alban, 249.
 —, J., 314.
 —, J. G., 230.
 Bruce, A. B., 314, 457.
 Brunialti, A., 469.
 Bryce, J., 294.
 Calixtus, 216.
 Calmet, A., 223.
 Calov, Abr., 217.
 Calvin, J., 342.
 Carpzov, J. G., 149.
 Caryl, Jos., 221.
 Cassiodorus, 12, 297.
 Castelar, 289.
 Caswall, E., 515.
 Cave, A., 16.
 Chalmers, T., 343.
 Chambers, T. W., 194.
 Charteris, A. H., 169.
 Chastel, E. L., 303.
 Christ, and Paranikas, 515.

- Christlieb, Theod., 315, 477, 522.
 Chrysostom, 12.
 Clarisse, Jo., 14.
 Clarke, A., 222.
 —, J. F., 29.
 Coccejus, J., 218.
 Cook, T. C., 230.
 Cornill, 160.
 Cramer, J. A., 209.
 Creighton, M., 284.
 Cremer, H., 136, 404.
 Crooks, and Hurst, 15.
 Cyril of Jerusalem, 504.
 Daniel, H. A., 508, 515.
 Davidson, A. B., 113, 330.
 —, G., 169.
 Davies, G. J., 492.
 Delitzsch, Franz, 268, 330.
 —, Fr., 120.
 Denziger, H., 338.
 De Rossi, 248.
 De Wette, 225.
 Dick, J., 343.
 Diestel, L., 186.
 Diez, 243.
 Dillmann, Bertheau, and others, 231.
 Doddridge, Philip, 221.
 Dœdes, I. T., 14.
 Döllinger, I., 284, 304.
 —, and Reusch, 440.
 Dorchester, D., 293, 447.
 Dörner, I. A., 295, 354, 373, 441.
 Drey, J. Seb., 13.
 Driver, S. R., 160.
 Drumann, 247.
 Drummond, J., 15, 268.
 Duff, A., 330.
 Duffield, S. W., 516.
 Ebrard, J. H. A., 295, 315, 343.
 Edersheim, A., 271.
 Edwards, Jon., 380.
 Egelhaaf, G., 283.
 Eichhorn, J. G., 225.
 Ellicott, C. J., 230.
 Erasmus, 12.
 Ernesti, J. A., 224.
 Estius, W., 223.
 Eusebius, 297.
 Ewald, H., 112, 266, 330, 404.
 Fairbairn, A. M., 344.
 Farrar, A. S., 314.
 —, F. W., 271, 279.
 Fénelon, 485.
 Fick, 103.
 Ficker, 243.
 Finney, C. G., 523.
 Fischer, A. F. W., 516.
 Fisher, G. P., 243, 268, 283, 314, 315, 374, 384.
 Fiske, J., 289.
 Flacius, M., 298.
 Fleury, C., 299.
 Foxe, J., 246.
 Francke, A. H., 218.
 Frank, F. H. R., 341, 359, 441.
 —, G. W., 373.
 Freeman, E. A., 447.
 Frèsne, C. du, 139.
 Friedberg, E., 462, 469.
 Fritzsche, C. F. A., 225.
 Fulton, J., 461.
 Gardthausen, 243.
 Gass, W., 338, 373, 428.
 Gebhardt, v., Harnack, and Zahn,
 278.
 Geier, W., 217.
 Gerhart, E. V., 343.
 Gerlach, H., 462.
 Gesenius, F. H. W., 225.
 Gess, W. F., 331.
 Gibbons, J., 339.
 Gieseler, J. C. L., 301.
 Gill, J., 221.
 Ginsburg, C. D., 159.
 Glass, Sal., 217.
 Glassius, S., 112.
 Godet, F., 230, 404.
 Goebel, M., 249.
 Gousset, T. M. J., 339.
 Graul, K., 420.
 Gray, J. C., 230.
 Gregory I., 12.
 — of Nyssa, 504.
 —, A., 506.
 —, C. R., 163.
 Gretillat, A., 16, 354.
 Groot, de, and Pareau, 14.
 Grotius, H., 219.
 Grundemann, P. R., 243, 522.
 Guericke, H. C. F., 419.
 Gundert, H., 522.
 Gury, P. J. P., 440, 442.
 Guyon, Mme. de, 223.
 Haering, 358.
 Hagenbach, C. R., 302.
 —, K. R., 14, 282, 283.
 Hahn, H. A., 410.
 Hall, Jos., 220.
 Hammond, H., 220.
 —, C. E., 509.
 —, W. A., 461.
 Hardouin, J., 248.
 Hardwick, C., 305.
 Harless, G. C. A., 14, 441.
 Harnack, Ad., 169, 250, 278, 301, 357, 360.
 Harris, J. R., 277.
 Hartmann, J., 283.

- Hase, K., 271, 296, 303, 340, 420.
 Hasse, H. G., 420.
 Hatch, Ed., 136, 357, 467.
 —, and Redpath, 163.
 Hatfield, E. F., 516.
 Hausrath, A., 404.
 Häusser, L., 283.
 Häverník, H. A. C., 330.
 Hefele, C. J. v., 248, 289.
 Heidegger, J. H., 152, 219.
 Heinrich, K. F. G., 16.
 Hengstenberg, E. W., 266.
 Henke, H. P. C., 301.
 Henry, Matt., 221.
 Heppe, H., 343.
 Herder, J. G., 13, 225.
 Hergenröther, Jos., 305.
 Herrmann, J. G., 359.
 Hettinger, F., 315.
 Hickok, L. P., 440.
 Hilgers, B. J., 419.
 Hill, G., 343.
 Hinschius, P., 462.
 Hitchcock, R. D., 443.
 Hitzig, F., 225.
 Hodder, E., 522.
 Hodge, A. A., 343, 392, 394.
 —, C., 343, 462.
 Hoffman, M., 462.
 Hofmann, J. K. v., 15.
 —, Rud., 419.
 Holst, H. v., 294.
 Holtzmann, Lipsius, Schmiedel, von
 Soden, 231.
 Hooker, R., 345.
 Hopkins, M., 440.
 Horoy, Abbé, 278.
 Hottinger, J. H., 152.
 Hughes, H., 440.
 Hugo de St. Caro, 209.
 — of St. Victor, 12.
 Huntington, W. R., 420.
 Hurel, A., 477.
 Hurst, J. F., 305.
 Hurter, F. E. v., 247.
 Ideler, 243.
 Immer, A., 331.
 Irving, W., 289.
 Isidor of Seville, 12.
 Jackson, S. M., 121, 245.
 Jameson, Fausset, and Brown, 230.
 Janet, P., 440.
 Janssen, Joh., 284.
 Jerome, 276.
 Jodl, F., 428.
 John of Damascus, 337, 365.
 Josephus, 142.
 Julian, J., 516.
 Kaftan, J. W. M., 356.
 Kahnis, K. F. A., 341, 373.
 Kalkar, C. H., 522.
 Kattenbusch, F., 243, 355, 420.
 Keil, and Delitzsch, 231.
 Keim, T., 404.
 Kempe, 477.
 Kienlen, H. G., 14.
 Kihn, H., 16.
 King, J., 516.
 Kittel, 267.
 Knapp, A., 515.
 Koch, E. E., 516.
 Labbeus, and Cossart, 248.
 Lagarde, P. de, 146, 163.
 Lampe, F. A., 219.
 Lange, J., 218.
 —, J. P., 14, 229, 343, 404.
 Lapede, C. à, 223.
 Lardner, N., 314.
 Lau, 247.
 Lecky, W. E. H., 427.
 Le Clerc, 219.
 Le Quien, 338.
 Levita, Elias, 159.
 Lightfoot, J. B., 221, 273, 278.
 Liguori, A. M. da, 440, 442.
 Limboreh, P. v., 347.
 Lipsius, R. A., 351, 359.
 Lombard, Peter, 369.
 Lowe, J., 522.
 Lowth, R., 222.
 Lucius, P. E., 268.
 Luthardt, C. E., 315, 341, 404, 424,
 428, 441.
 Luther, 213.
 Lyra, N., 110, 210.
 Mabillon, 243.
 McClintock, J., 14.
 McCosh, J., 314.
 Maclear, G. F., 523.
 McElhinney, J., 457.
 McMaster, J. B., 294.
 Maldonado, J., 222.
 Mansi, G. D., 248.
 Marheineke, P. K., 351, 419.
 Martensen, H., 341, 404, 441.
 Martigny, J. A., 280.
 Martin, E., 16.
 Martineau, J., 440.
 Matthes, F. R., 419.
 Maurenbrecher, W., 285.
 Mead, G. M., 315.
 Melancthon, 12.
 Merle D'Aubigne, 283.
 Μεσολώπας, I. E., 420.
 Meyer, H. A. W., 231.
 Michaelis, J. D., 224.
 Migne, Abbé, 278.
 Miley, J., 348.

- Miller, J., 516.
 Milner, J., 300.
 Minghetti, M., 469.
 Möhler, J. A., 304, 419.
 Mone, F. J., 508, 515.
 Moore, W. E., 463.
 Mosheim, J. L. v., 300.
 Mulford, E., 443.
 Müller, J., 295, 354, 420, 457.
 Natalis, A., 299.
 Navarrete, 289.
 Neale, J. M., 508, 515.
 Neander, A., 295, 301, 331, 419, 428.
 Nestle, E., 117, 163.
 Newman, J. H., 239.
 Nicoll, W. R., 231.
 Nippold, F., 293.
 Nirrschl, Jos., 234, 279.
 Nitzsch, C. J., 453.
 —, F., 359.
 —, K. Im., 335.
 Oberthür, 13.
 Ocolampadius, J., 214.
 Oehler, G. F., 330, 420.
 Oettingen, A. v., 443.
 Olshausen, H., 231.
 Oosterzee, J. J. v., 331, 343, 453.
 Origen, 365.
 Pagninus, S., 152.
 Paley, W., 314.
 Paniel, 477.
 Park, E. A., 374, 382.
 Parkman, F., 289.
 Pastor, L., 284.
 Paton, J. G., 523.
 Patrick, Lowth, Whitby, and Lowman, 220.
 Paulus, H. E. G., 225.
 Payne, E. J., 289.
 Pearson, J., 345.
 Pelt, A. F. L., 14.
 Perowne, J. J. S., 230, 231.
 Perrone, G., 339.
 Pestalozzi, J. H., 504.
 Petermann, J. H., 104.
 Pfeleiderer, O., 273, 352, 359, 373, 404.
 Philaret, 338.
 Philippi, F. A., 341, 420.
 Phillemore, 462.
 Phillips, G., 462.
 Pick, B., 268.
 Pin, L. E. du, 13.
 Piper, K. W. F., 249.
 Planck, G. J., 247, 373.
 Plitt, G., 420.
 Poole, M., 220.
 Pope, W. B., 348.
 Porter, N., 440.
 Possevinus, A., 13.
 Prætorius, F., 122.
 Pray, L. G., 506.
 Prentiss, G. L., 397.
 Prescott, 289.
 Pressensé, E. de, 271.
 Quesnell, P., 223.
 Rabanus Maurus, 12.
 Rübiger, J. F., 15.
 Ranke, L. v., 283, 284.
 Rawlinson, H. C., 121.
 Raymond, M., 348.
 Reiff, Fr., 354.
 Reinhard, 270.
 Reischle, M., 359.
 Reland, 146.
 Renan, E., 267, 273.
 Reuchlin, J., 111.
 Reuss, E., 169, 230, 331.
 Reuter, H. F., 247.
 Réville, A., 404.
 Reynòlds, H. R., 268.
 Richter, E. L., 462.
 Ritschl, A., 247, 295, 359.
 Ritter, C., 147.
 Rivetus, A., 152.
 Robertson, J., 267.
 —, J. C., 303.
 Robinson, E., 113, 147.
 Rohrbacher, Abbé, 304.
 Roscoe, W., 247.
 Rosenkrantz, K., 13.
 Rosenmüller, 224.
 Rothe, R., 15, 247, 354, 441.
 Rowe, C. A., 318.
 Ruinart, T., 246.
 Ryle, H. E., 169.
 Sa, Em. de, 222.
 Sabunde, R. de, 79.
 Salmon, G., 177.
 Sanday, W., 183.
 Scaliger, J., 218.
 Schaff, P., 127, 137, 194, 205, 231,
 239, 246, 250, 271, 279, 293,
 301, 303, 364, 420, 515.
 Schanz, P., 315.
 Schéele, K. H. G. v., 420.
 Schleiermacher, F., 13, 353, 441.
 Schmid, C. F., 331, 441.
 —, H., 341.
 Schmidt, H., 420.
 —, S., 217.
 —, W., 359.
 Schneckenburger, M., 268, 420.
 Schöttgen, Chr., 217.
 Schouler, J., 294.
 Schrader, E., 404.
 Schröckh, J. M., 300.
 Schulte, Fr. v., 462.
 Schultz, F. W., 330.

- Schultz, H., 330.
 Schürer, E., 148, 268, 404.
 Schweizer, A., 343.
 Scott, T., 221.
 Scrivener, F. H. A., 163.
 Seeley, J. R., 271.
 Shea, J. G., 289.
 Shedd, W. G. T., 343.
 Sidgwick, H., 424, 440.
 Siegel, K. C. F., 280.
 Siegfried, C., 203.
 Simon, R., 152.
 Smedt, C. de, 234.
 Smith, H. B., 305, 343, 397.
 —, G., 522.
 —, W. R., 184.
 —, and Cheetham, 248, 280.
 —, and Wace, 279.
 Smyth, N., 440.
 Sophocles, E. A., 139.
 Spence, and Exell, 230.
 Spencer, H., 443.
 Spener, P. J., 442.
 Sprague, W. B., 496.
 Sprecher, S., 341.
 Spurgeon, C. H., 221.
 Stade, B., 267, 330.
 Stanley, A. P., 266, 338, 467.
 Stanton, V. H., 268.
 Stapfer, E., 268.
 Starke, Chr., 217.
 Staudenmeier, F. A., 13.
 Stearns, L. F., 314, 343, 398.
 Steel, R., 504.
 Stevenson, W. F., 522.
 Stolberg, F. L., 303.
 Storrs, R. S., 295, 314.
 Strack, H. L., 104, 160.
 —, and Zöckler, 230.
 Strauss, D. F., 351.
 Strong, A. H., 343.
 Strong, W., 462.
 Stuckenberg, J. H. W., 443.
 Suicer, C., 139.
 Swainson, C. A., 509.
 Swedenborg, E., 226.
 Taylor, J., 442.
 —, W. M., 494.
 Terry, M. S., 186.
 —, and Newhall, 231.
 Thayer, J. H., 404.
 Thiersch, H. W. I., 419.
 Thomasius, G., 341.
 Thompson, J. P., 331.
 —, R. E., 443.
 Tillemont, de, 299.
 Tischendorf, 163.
 Tobler, T., 148.
 Tocqueville, A. de, 294.
 Trapp, J., 220.
 Trench, R. C., 516.
 Trumbull, H. C., 506.
 Tschackert, P., 420.
 Turretin, F., 391.
 Twesten, A. D. C., 341.
 Uhlhorn, G., 246, 249, 271.
 Ullmann, K., 354, 404.
 Ussher, J., 345.
 Valla, L., 210.
 Vering, F. H., 462.
 Vincent, 477.
 —, J. H., 506.
 Vinet, A., 453, 500.
 —, A. R., 472.
 Vitringa, C., 146.
 Voigt, J., 247.
 Wace, Henry, 279.
 Wackernagel, P., 515.
 Walter, F., 462.
 Warfield, B. B., 393.
 Warneck, G., 522.
 Watson, R., 348.
 —, W. H., 506.
 Weber, F., 268.
 —, Georg, 283.
 Wegscheider, J. H. L., 351.
 Weidner, R. F., 15.
 Weingarten, H., 305.
 Weiss, B., 157, 271, 331, 404.
 —, H., 441.
 Wellhausen, J., 160, 266, 268.
 Wendt, H. H., 331.
 Wesley, J., 347.
 Westcott, B. F., 169.
 Wetstein, J. J., 219.
 Whedon, D. D., 230.
 Whewell, W., 440.
 Whyte, A., 504.
 Wiggers, J., 447.
 Wildeboer, G., 169.
 Williams, Monier, 45.
 Wiltsch, J. E. T., 446.
 Winer, G. B., 136, 419.
 Winsor, J. D., 289, 294.
 Wirthmüller, J. B., 14.
 Wiseman, Cardinal, 339.
 Worden, J. A., 506.
 Wordsworth, C., 504.
 —, Christ., 230.
 Wörner, E., 331.
 Wright, Ch. H. H., 153.
 —, Wm., 104.
 Wuttke, A., 424.
 Wyss, C., 136.
 Zahn, T., 169.
 Zeller, E., 404, 424.
 Ziegler, Th., 424, 428.
 Zöckler, O., 16.

A MINISTERIAL LIBRARY

COMPILED BY

REV. SAMUEL MACAULEY JACKSON, M.A.,

D.D. (UNIVERSITY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK, 1893).
LL.D. (WASHINGTON AND LEE UNIVERSITY, VA., 1892).

A MINISTERIAL LIBRARY.

Being a selected list of the best books in all departments of a theological education which have appeared in English, together with a few books in other languages.

COMPILED BY

REV. SAMUEL MACAULEY JACKSON, M.A.

HINTS FOR THE PURCHASE OF BOOKS.

1. Buy the latest edition, even although an earlier one can be obtained for much less money.

2. Buy the work in the original language, save in those exceptional cases where either the translator has presented his author in more intelligible form than the author does himself, or the author or translator has incorporated in the translation matter correcting or supplementing the original.

3. Buy the work in the edition published in the country of its origin, if the work has gone into a revised edition, e.g., buy English books in English editions, because scholarly authors commonly alter, enlarge, or correct their matter in the subsequent editions, whereas the reprint is generally of the first edition unaltered.

4. Bogus reprints can be detected by the absence of an American copyright notice.

5. The new books will be found authoritatively reviewed, to mention only foreign journals, in Schürer's Theologische Literaturzeitung (Leipzig); Luthardt's Theologisches Literaturblatt (Leipzig); Salmond's Critical Review of Theological and Philosophical Literature (Edinburgh), and in The Church Quarterly Review (London).

INTRODUCTION.

BOOKS OF REFERENCE.*

A. General.

ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.

The Century Dictionary. New York. The Century Company, 1889-91, 6 vols., fol., $60.

A combination of dictionary and encyclopædia. Edited by William Dwight Whitney.

Standard Dictionary. New York: Funk & Wagnalls' Co., 1894, fol., $12.

* Stormonth's Dictionary. London: Blackwood; New York: Harpers, 1884, imp. 8vo, cloth, 31s. 6d., $6.

Webster's International Dictionary. Springfield: G. & C. Merriam, 1890, fol., sheep, $10.

A revision of Webster's Unabridged. Edited by Noah Porter.

ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIAS.

The Encyclopædia Britannica. Ninth ed. Edinburgh: A. & C. Black; New York: Scribners, 1875-89, 25 vols., 8vo, cloth, each, 30s., $5.

Edited by T. S. Baynes and W. Robertson Smith.

* Johnson's Universal Encyclopædia. Third revised ed. New York: A. J. Johnson Company, 1893-95, 8 vols., 8vo, each $6.

Edited by Charles Kendall Adams.

Chambers's Encyclopædia. New ed. Edinburgh: W. & R. Chambers; Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company, 1888-93, 10 vols., 8vo, each 10s., $3.

Dates on the American title-pages may be later than above; excellent work with limited vocabulary.

International Cyclopædia. New edition. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., 1891, 15 vols., 8vo. $45.

BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARIES.

Appleton's Cyclopædia of American Biography. New York: Appleton, 1886-88, 6 vols., 8vo, each, $5.

Edited by James Grant Wilson and John Fiske. Very comprehensive and accurate; includes living characters.

Thompson Cooper: Biographical Dictionary, to the end of the year 1882. London: Bell & Son, 1890. 2 vols., 12mo, 10s.

Takes in all times and nations: a scholarly work.

* In this and the following lists the books preferred by the compiler are starred. Pagination is given only in the case of books issued within the past two years. The order of topics is that in Schaff's Propædeutic, for which this list was specially compiled. In most cases the prices of the original and of the American reprint are given.

Dictionary of National Biography. London: Smith, Elder & Co.; New York: Macmillan, 1885 sqq. 8vo, each, 15s. or $3.75.

Vv. 1-21, edited by Leslie Stephen; vv. 22-26, by Leslie Stephen and Sidney Lee; v. 27 sqq. by Sidney Lee; 4 vols. a year, vol. 35, July, 1893. Scholarly, corrects many traditional errors, includes no living characters, but persons in every walk of life.

Lippincott's Pronouncing Biographical Dictionary. Second ed. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co., 1885, roy. 8vo, $12.

Edited by J. Thomas. Comprehensive; the pronouncing feature is useful.

Men and Women of the Time. Thirteenth ed. London and New York: Routledge, 1891. 8vo, $3.

Edited by Geo. Washington Moon; derived largely from material furnished by the subjects themselves.

Vapereau, G.: Dictionnaire universel des contemporaines. Sixth ed. Paris: Hachette et Cie., 1893. 8vo, $10.

A famous book, much more comprehensive than "Men and Women of the Time."

DICTIONARIES OF CHRONOLOGY.

Woodward, B. B., and Cates, W. L. R.: Encyclopædia of Chronology, historical and biographical. London and New York: Longmans, 1872. 8vo, 42s., $15.

Haydn, J.: Dictionary of Dates and Universal Information relating to all ages and nations. Twentieth ed. New York: Putnams, 1893. 8vo. $5.

Edited by Benjamin Vincent.

CLASSICAL DICTIONARIES.

Smith, Wm.: Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology. London: Murray, 1843-48, 3 vols., 8vo, 63s.

Same: Dictionary of Greek and Roman Geography. Same, 1854-57, 2 vols., 8vo, 56s.

Same: Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. Same, 1890-91, 2 vols., 8vo, 63s. (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., $14.)

CLASSICAL AND BIBLICAL ATLAS.

Smith, Wm., and Grove, Geo.: Atlas of Ancient Geography, biblical and classical; Same, 1875, fol. £6 6s.

B. Religious.

RELIGIOUS ENCYCLOPÆDIAS (Biblical matter included).

Herzog, J. J.: Real-Encyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche. Second ed. Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1877-88, 18 vols., 8vo, 219 marks.

The great thesaurus of German Protestant learning; edited by J. J. Herzog (d. 1882), G. L. Plitt (d. 1880) and A. Hauck. Third edition in preparation.

Wetzer and Welte: Kirchenlexikon oder Encyklopädie der katholischen Theologie und ihrer Hilfswissenschaften. Second ed. Freiburg im Br.: Herder, 1882 sqq. 8vo, each, 11 marks.

Edited by Cardinal Hergenröther (d. 1890) and F. Kaulen (vol. 10, 1893). The standard Roman Catholic thesaurus of ecclesiastical learning.

McClintock and Strong: Cyclopædia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical Literature. New York: Harpers, 1869-81, 10 vols., supplement, 1885-87, 2 vols, 8vo, each $5.

An avowed compilation, on the whole well done, with the most copious vocabulary of any religious encyclopædia.

The Schaff-Herzog Encyclopædia of Religious Knowledge. New York: Funk & Wagnalls' Co. Third rev. ed. 1891, 4 vols., 8vo, $20.

Incorporates the "Encyclopædia of Living Divines," prepared by Philip Schaff and Samuel Macauley Jackson, 1887, brought down to end of 1890.

- Concise Dictionary of Religious Knowledge. Third and thoroughly revised edition. New York: Maynard, Merrill & Co., 1893, 8vo, $3.50.
 Edited by Samuel Macauley Jackson, with two associate editors and forty special contributors.
- RELIGIOUS ENCYCLOPÆDIAS (without matter relating to the Bible).
- Addis, W. E., and Arnold, T.: A Catholic Dictionary containing some account of the doctrine, discipline, rites, ceremonies, councils, and religious orders of the Catholic Church. Fourth ed. London: Kegan Paul, 1893, 8vo, 21s.
 Revised and enlarged with the assistance of Rev. P. B. Scannell.
- Blunt, J. H.: Dictionary of Doctrinal and Theological Theology. Third ed. London: Longmans, 1891, roy. 8vo, 42s.
- Same: Dictionary of Sects, Heresies, Parties, and Schools of Religious Thought. Second ed. London: Rivington, 1886, roy. 8vo, 36s.
- Hook, W. F.: A Church Dictionary. Fourteenth ed. London: Murray, 1887, 8vo, 21s.
 Edited by Walter Hook and W. R. Stephens. The standard for the Anglican Church.
- Smith, W., and Wace, H.: A Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects, and Doctrines, During the First Eight Centuries. London: Murray, 1877-87, 4 vols., 8vo, £6 16s. 6d.
- Smith, W., and Cheetham, S.: A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities; Same, 1875-80, 2 vols., 8vo, £3 13s. 6d.
 The two works just mentioned are indispensable for patristic study.
- Bliss, E. M.: The Encyclopædia of Missions, Descriptive, Historical, Biographical, Statistical. New York: Funk & Wagnalls' Co., 1891. 2 vols., 8vo, $12.
 The only work of the kind on the market; contains a full bibliography of the subject.
- Julian, J.: Dictionary of Hymnology. London: Murray, 1892. 8vo, 42s.
 New York: Scribners, $10 net.
 Ten years in preparation, quite complete; the only work of its kind published.
- BIBLE DICTIONARIES.
- Ayre, J.: A Treasury of Bible Knowledge. Third ed. London: Longmans, 1872. 12mo, 6s.
- Fausset, A. R.: The Englishman's Critical and Expository Bible Cyclopædia, Fifth ed. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1893. 4to, 7s. 6d.
- Kitto, J.: A Cyclopædia of Biblical Literature. Third ed. Edinburgh: A. & C. Black, 1862-70. 4 vols., 8vo, 70s.
 Edited by W. L. Alexander.
- Schaff, Philip: A Dictionary of the Bible. Fifth ed. Philadelphia: Am. S. S. Union, 1890. 8vo, $2.
 The best one-vol. Bible Dictionary.
- Smith, W.: Dictionary of the Bible, comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography, and Natural History. Second ed. London: Murray, 1893. 3 vols., 8vo. (Vol. i. in 2 parts, extending through J. 42s.)
 Edited by J. M. Fuller; simply invaluable.
- THEOLOGICAL ENCYCLOPÆDIA.
- Cave, A.: An Introduction to Theology, its Principles, its Branches, its Results, and its Literature. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1886. 8vo, 12s.
 New edition announced 1893.

Crooks, G. R., and Hurst, J. F.: Theological Encyclopædia and Methodology. On the basis of Hagenbach. N. Y. Methodist Book Concern, 1884. 8vo, $3.50.

New edition announced 1893.

Drummond, J.: Introduction to the Study of Theology. London & New York: Macmillan, 1884. 8vo, 5s., $2.00.

Hagenbach, K. R.: Encyklopädie and Methodologie der theologischen Wissenschaften. Twelfth ed. Leipzig: Hirzel, 1889. 8vo, 7 mks.

Edited by Max Reischle.

Heinrici, G.: Theologische Encyklopädie. Freiburg im Br.: Mohr, 1893, 8vo, 7 mks.

Räbiger, J. F.: Encyclopædia of Theology. Translated. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1884-85. 2 vols., 21s. Ger. orig., Leipzig: Fries, 1880. 8vo, 7 mks.

* Schaff, Philip: Theological Propædætic. New York: Scribners, 1893. 8vo, $3.00.

Spurgeon, C. H.: Lectures to My Students. London: Passmore; New York: American Tract Soc., 1877. 12mo, 2s. 6d., $1.00.

Weidner, R. F.: Theological Encyclopædia and Methodology. Rock Island: Augustana Book Concern (now Revell: Chicago and New York), 1885-91. 3 vols., 12mo, $3.75.

Avowedly based upon Hagenbach (see above), with the use of C. P. Krauth's unpublished lectures on the subject.

Zöckler, O.: Handbuch der theologischen Wissenschaften in encyklopädischer Darstellung. Third ed. Nördlingen: Beck, 1889-90. 4 vols., 8vo, 50 mks. Supplement, 1889-90, 7 mks.

A collection of brief treatises on all departments of theology, written by conservative scholars.

 The following sets of books are designed to cover all departments of theology [those not dated have not yet appeared]:

1. GRUNDRISS DER THEOLOGISCHEN WISSENSCHAFTEN. Published by J. C. B. Mohr, Freiburg im Br., in 8vo, comprising Old Testament Introduction, by C. H. Cornill, second ed., 1892, pp. xvi. 324, 5 mks.; Church History, by K. Müller, vol. 1, 1892, pp. xx. 636, 9.50 mks.; Outlines of the History of Dogma, by A. Harnack, 1889, trans. by Edwin Knox Mitchell. New York: Funk & Wagnalls' Co., 1893, pp. x. 567, $2.50; Encyclopædia, by G. Heinrici, 1893; Philosophy and History of Religion, by M. Reischle; Old Testament Theology, by B. Stade; History of Israel, by H. Guthe; New Testament Introduction, by A. Jülicher; New Testament Theology, by E. Grafe; Symbolic, by F. Loofs; Dogmatic, by J. W. M. Kaftan; Ethics, by W. Herrmann; Practical Theology, by E. A. Achelis; Christian Archæology, by J. Ficker; Patristic, by G. Krüger; History of Protestant Theology, by E. Tröltzsch; History of Missions, by C. Mirbt.
2. SAMMLUNG THEOLOGISCHER LEHRBÜCHER. Published by the same, in 8vo, comprising History of Doctrine, by A. Harnack, second ed., 1888-90, 3 vols., 40 mks.; N. T. Introduction, by H. J. Holtzman, third ed., 1892, 9 mks.; Symbolic, by F. Kattenbusch, vol. 1, 1893, 12 mks.; Practical Theology, by A. Krauss, 1890-93, 2 vols., 16 mks.; Church History, by W. Moeller, English trans., vol. 1, London, 1892, vol. 2, 1893, vol. 3 of orig., ed. by G. Kawerau, in press; Dogmatic, by F. Nitsch, 1891; Comparative Religion, by P. D. de la Saussaye, 1887-89, 2 vols., 18 mks., Eng. trans. of vol. 1, Manual of the Science of Religion, London, 1891, 12s. 6d.; Ethics, by H. Weiss, 1889, 5 mks.; Philosophy of - Religion, by H. Siebeck, 1893; Old Testament Theology, by R. Smend, 1893, 12 mks.; Old Testament Introduction, by K. Budde; New Testament Theology, by E. Schürer.

3. THEOLOGISCHE BIBLIOTHEK (Roman Catholic). Published by Herder, Freiburg im Br., in 8vo, comprising Patrology, by J. Alzog, fourth ed. 1888, pp. xii. 590, 8 mks.; Church History, by J. Hergenröther, third ed. 1886, 3 vols., xxxii. 2872, 34 mks.; Apologia for the Christian Religion, by F. Hettinger, Eng. trans. N. Y., Vol. 1, 1890, $2, orig. second ed., pp. xvi. 926, 1888; Old and New Testament Introduction by F. Kaulen, third ed., 1892, pp. vi. 664, 8 mks.; Encyclopædia, by H. Kihn, 1892, pp. xii. 574, 8 mks.; Moral Theology, by J. E. Pruner, second ed., 1883, pp. xx. 800, 10 mks.; Dogmatic, by M. J. Scheeben, 1875-1887, 3 vols., pp. viii. 916, 10.80 mks., xii. 952, 12 mks., xii. 1,014, 12.40 mks.; Biblical Archæology, by P. Schegg, 1888, pp. xxviii. 716, 9 mks.; History of Doctrine, by J. Schwane, second ed., 1892, 4 vols., pp. x. 572, 7.50 mks., xii. 1,128, 9 mks., xii. 702, 10.75 mks., x. 416, 5 mks.; Liturgic, by B. Thalhofer, 1887-91, I. pp. xiv. 918, 10 mks., II. viii. 344, 4 mks., Church Law, by F. H. Vering, second ed., 1881, pp. xx. 1,002, 14 mks. Second series: The Mass, by N. Gühr, fifth ed., 1892, pp. xvi. 734, 7 mks.; The Sequences, by N. Gühr, 1887, pp. viii. 548; Homiletic, by J. Jungmann, second ed., 1883-84, 2 vols., pp. xvi. 1,192, 12 mks.; Pastoral Medical Advice, by A. Stöhr, third ed., 1887, pp. viii. 468.
4. THE INTERNATIONAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY. Edited by Rev. Professors Charles A. Briggs, D.D., and Stewart D. F. Salmond, D.D. Published by T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh, and Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, in 8vo, at $2.50 net, each; comprising An Introduction to the Old Testament, by S. R. Driver, 1891; Christian Ethics, by Newman Smyth, 1892; Apologetics, by A. B. Bruce, 1893; Theology of the Old Testament, by A. B. Davidson; An Introduction to the Literature of the New Testament, by S. D. F. Salmond; Contemporary History of the Old Testament, by Francis Brown; History of Christian Doctrine, by G. P. Fisher; Comparative Religion, by A. M. Fairbairn; Symbolics, by Philip Schaff; Philosophy of Religion, by Robert Flint; Christian Institutions, by A. V. G. Allen; The Apostolic Church, by A. C. McGiffert.

BOOK I.—RELIGION AND THEOLOGY.

RELIGION : ITS DEFINITION, SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

Baring-Gould, S. : The Origin and Development of Religious Belief. Pt. 1, Polytheism and Monotheism ; Pt. 2, Christianity. London and New York : Longmans, 1870-71. 2 vols., 3d ed. 1892. Pp. xvi. 422 ; xx. 388. 7s., $2.50.

Butler, Bp. J. : The Analogy of Religion to the Constitution and Course of Nature. London: 1736.

Many Editions and Reprints. E.g. in Bohn's Library, 1886. $1.40.

Caird, E. : The Evolution of Religion. Glasgow: Maclehose, 1893. 2 vols., pp. 730, 8vo, 14s. net.

Caird, J. : An Introduction to the Philosophy of Religion. Glasgow : Maclehose, 1880. 4th ed., 1891, p. 8vo, 6s. New York : Macmillan. $1.50.

Carpenter, W. B. : Permanent Elements of Religion. London and New York : Macmillan, 1889. 2d ed., 1891, p. 8vo, 6s.

Bampton Lectures for 1887 by the Bishop of Ripon.

Harris, S. : The Philosophic Basis of Theism. New York : Scribner, 1883. 8vo, $3.50.

Same : The Self-revelation of God. New York : Scribner, 1887. Cr. 8vo, $3.50.

Liddon, H. P. : Some Elements of Religion. London : Rivington, 1871. 5th ed., 1885, cr. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Eminently practical and helpful.

Lotze, H. : Outlines of the Philosophy of Religion. Boston : Ginn & Co., 1887. 8vo, $1.00. London : Dickinson, 2s. 6d.

Tr. by Prof. G. T. Ladd, of Yale College. Another tr. by Mrs. Conybeare (daughter of Max Müller) edited by her husband, F. C. Conybeare, London : Sonnenschein, 1892. 12mo, 2s. 6d. New York : Macmillan, 90 cts.

Macdonald, J. : Religion and Myth. London : Nutt, 1893. Pp. 248, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Facts connected with the religious observance and social customs of the African tribes.

Mansel, H. L. The Limits of Religious Thought (Bampton Lectures for 1858). London : Murray, 1858. 4th ed., 1859, 8vo, 7s. 6d. New York : Pott, 12mo, $1.50.

Martineau, J. The Study of Religion : Its Sources and Contents. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1888. 2d ed., 1888, 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 15s.

Same : The Seat of Authority in Religion. London : Longmans, 1890. 8vo, 14s.

Mill, J. S. : Three Essays on Religion, viz., Nature, the Utility of Religion and Theism. London : Longmans, 1874. 8vo, 10s. 6d. New York : Holt, 8vo, $2.50.

Remarkable because showing the approach a reverent unbeliever made towards revealed truth.

Müller, F. Max: Introduction to the Science of Religion. London: Longmans. 1873. 3d ed., 1893. Pp. 342, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Same: Physical Religion. London and New York: Longmans, 1891. Pp. 422, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d., $3.00.

Same: Anthropological Religion. Same, 1892. Pp. xxvii. 464, p. 8vo. 10s. 6d., $3.00.

Same: Theosophy; or, Psychological Religion. Same, 1893. Pp. 600, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d., $3.00.

The above-mentioned three are the Gifford Lectures for 1890, 1891, 1892.

Pfeiderer, O.: The Philosophy of Religion on the Basis of its History. Eng. trans. London: Williams & Norgate, 1886-88. 4 vols., 8vo, 42s.

Schleiermacher, F.: On Religion: speeches to its cultured despisers. Translated, with Introduction, by John Oman. London: Paul, 1893. Pp. 310, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NATURAL AND REVEALED RELIGION; DEISM, MATERIALISM, PANTHEISM, PESSIMISM, AND AGNOSTICISM.

D'Alviella, Count G.: Contemporary Evolution of Religious Thought in England, America, and India. London: Williams & Norgate, 1886. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Cairns, J.: Unbelief in the Eighteenth Century. London: Longmans, 1881. 8vo, 10s. 6d. New York: Harpers, 1881, 12mo, 60 cts.

Collins, F. H.: Epitome of the Synthetic Philosophy. London: Williams, 1889. 8vo, 15s. New York: Appleton, 12mo, $2.50.

Authorized exposition of Spencer's Philosophy.

Farrar, A. S.: Critical History of Free Thought in Reference to the Christian Religion. Bampton Lectures for 1862. London: Murray, 1862. 8vo, 16s. N. Y.: Appleton, 1863. 12mo, $2.00.

Hunt, J.: History of Religious Thought in England [from the Reformation to 1800]. London: Isbister, 1870-73. 3 vols., 8vo, 2d ed., 1884, 31s. 6d. New York: Routledge. $15.00.

Same: An Essay on Pantheism. London: Longmans, 1866. 8vo. Second ed. styled, Pantheism and Christianity. London: Isbister, 1884. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Learned and elaborate.

Hurst, J. F.: History of Rationalism. New York: Scribner, 1865. 9th ed., rev., 1875. 8vo, $3.50.

Lange, F. A.: The History of Materialism. London: Trübner, 1878-81, 3 vols., 8vo, each, 10s. 6d. Boston: Osgood, $10.00.

From the German. The best book on the subject.

Lecky, W. E. H.: History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. London: Longmans, 1865. 2 vols., cr. 8vo, 7th ed., 1875. 16s. New York: Appleton, $4.00.

Plumptre, C. E.: A General Sketch of the History of Pantheism. London: Trübner, 1881. 2 vols., 8vo, 18s.

Vol. I. History: Oriental, Greek, and Modern to Spinoza. Vol. II. to present day.

Spencer, H.: First Principles. London: Williams, 1862. New York: Appleton, 1873. 12mo, $2.50.

"The Bible of Agnosticism," Cave. For Analysis of Spencer's Teaching, see Collins, F. H.

Stephen, Leslie : History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century. London : Smith & Elder, 1876. 2 vols., 8vo, 2d ed., 1880, 28s. New York : Putnam, $8.00.

Well-written from the agnostic stand-point.

Sully, J. : Pessimism ; a History and Criticism. London : Paul, 1877. 2d ed., 1882, 8vo, 14s.

COMPARATIVE RELIGION: GENERAL WORKS ON.

Bettany, G. T. : The World's Religions. London : Ward, Locke & Co. New York : The Christian Literature Company, 1891. 8vo, $2.50.

Very comprehensive, carefully written from good sources.

Brace, Ch. : The Unknown God, or Inspiration Among Pre-Christian Races. New York : Armstrong, 1890. 8vo, $2.50.

Clarke, J. F. : The Ten Great Religions. Boston : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1870-83. 2 vols., 8vo. Vol. 1, 22d ed., 1886. Vol. 2, 5th ed., 1886. Each, $2.00.

Excellent ; popular, but scholarly in style. The Ten Religions are Confucianism, Buddhism, Brahmanism, and the ancient religions of Persia, Egypt, Greece, Rome, Scandinavia, Palestine, and Arabia.

Dods, M. : Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ. London : Hodder, 1877. 4th ed., 1887. Cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Ellinwood, F. F. : Oriental Religions and Christianity. New York : Scribner, 1892. 8vo, $1.75.

Contains a bibliography.

Frazer, J. G. : The Golden Bough, a Study in Comparative Religion. London and New York : Macmillan, 1890. 2 vols., 8vo, 28s., $6.50.

Hardwick, C. : Christ and Other Masters ; an Historical Inquiry into some of the Chief Parallelisms and Contrasts between Christianity and the Religious Systems of the Ancient World. London : Bell & Daldy, 1855-57, 3 parts : pt. 4, Macmillan, 1858. 3d ed. by Proctor. Macmillan, 1874. 1 vol., p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

A standard work from the religious side on the religions of India, China, America, Oceanica, Egypt, and Medo-Persia.

Hibbert Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion. London : Williams & Norgate, 1878 sqq. 8vo, each, 10s. 6d.

1. The Religions of India, by Max Müller, 1878.
2. The Religion of Ancient Egypt, by Renouf, 1879.
3. The Influence of the Institutions, Thought, and Culture of Rome on Christianity, and the Development of the Catholic Church, by Renan, 1880.
4. Some Points in the History of Indian Buddhism, by Rhys Davids, 1881.
5. National Religions and Universal Religions, by Kuenen, 1882.
6. Reformation of the Sixteenth Century in its Relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge, by Chas. Beard, 1883.
7. The Native Religions of Mexico and Peru, by Reville, 1884.
8. The Influence of the Apostle Paul on the Development of Christianity, by Pfeleiderer, 1885.
9. Celtic Heathendom, by J. Rhys, 1886.
10. The Religion of Ancient Assyria and Babylonia, by Sayce, 1887.
11. The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages upon the Christian Church, by Hatch, edited by Fairbairn, 1888.

12. The Philosophic Basis of Belief, by Upton, 1889.
13. The Religion of the Parsis, by Darmesteter, 1890.
14. The Origin of the Conception of God, by Count D'Alviella, 1891.
15. The Religion of the Ancient Hebrews, by C. G. Montefiore, 1892.
- Matheson, G.: The Distinctive Messages of the Old Religions. Edinburgh: W. Blackwood & Son, 1892. Pp. xiii. 342, p. 8vo, 5s.
- Perrot, G., et Chipiez, C.: Histoire de l'art dans antiquité, Paris: Hachette et Cie., 1881 sqq., each vol. 30 fr. Eng. tr., History of Art in Antiquity. Vol. I., Egypte (Eng. trans. Egypt. London: Chapman, 1883. 2 vols., 8vo, 42s. New York: Armstrong, 1892. 2 vols., 8vo, $15.00). Vol. II., La Chaldée et l'Assyrie (Chaldea and Assyria, 1883. 2 vols., 8vo, 42s., $15.50). Vol. III., Phénice, Cypre (Phœnicia and Cyprus, 1885. 2 vols., 8vo, 42s., $15.50). Vol. IV., Asie Mineure (Sardinia, Judæa, Syria, and Asia Minor, 1890. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s., $14.50). Vol. V., Phrygie, Lydie et Carie, Lucie, Perse, 1889 (Phrygia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia, 1892. 8vo, 15s., $7.25). Persia. 1892, 8vo, $7.25).
- Records of the Past, being English translations of the Assyrian and Egyptian Monuments. London: Bagster, 1874-81. 12 vols., 16mo, each, 3s. 6d. The 12th vol. has index to the whole set. (Complete sets scarce, $19.00.) Second series, 1889-1893, 6 vols., each 4s. 6d. Reprints in revised form several of the First Series Translations.
- Contents of 2d series (ed. by A. H. Sayce):
- Vol. I. 1. The Dynastic Tablets and Chronicles of the Babylonians. 2. The Inscriptions of Telloh. 3. Sin Gashid's Endowment of the Temple E.-Ana. 4. An Erechite's Lament. 5. Inscription of Tiglath-Pileser I. King of Assyria. 6. The Assyrian Story of the Creation. 7. The Babylonian Story of the Creation According to the Tradition of Cutha. 8. Babylonian Lawsuits and Judgments. 9. Inscription of Menuas, King of Ararat, in the Vannic Language. 10. The Ancient Hebrew Inscription of Siloam.
- Vol. II. 1. Inscription of Uni (of the Sixth Dynasty). 2. The Adventures of Sinuhit (of the 12th Dynasty). 3. The Legend of the Expulsion of the Hyksos. 4. The Stele of Thothmes IV. (of the 18th Dynasty). 5. Tablets of Tel-El-Amarna Relating to Palestine in the Century before the Exodus. 6. The Inscriptions of Telloh (continued). 7. The Assyrian Chronological Canon. 8. The Standard Inscriptions of Assur-natsir-pal. 9. Specimens of Assyrian Correspondence. 10. Akkadian Hymn to the Setting Sun. 11. The Moabite Stone. 12. Table of the Egyptian Dynasties. 13. List of Kings of Assyria. 14. Egyptian Calendar.
- Vol. III. 1. The precepts of Ptah-Hosep: The Oldest Book in the World. 2. The Daughter of the Prince of Bakhtan, and the Spirit that Possessed Her. 3. Hymn to the Nile. 4. Letters to Egypt from Babylonia, Assyria, and Syria, in the Fifteenth Century B.C. 5. Ancient Babylonian Agricultural Precepts. 6. The India House Inscription of Nebuchad-nezzar the Great. 7. Contract Tablets Relating to Belshazzar.
- Vol. IV. 1. The Official Life of an Egyptian Officer, from the Tomb of Amen-em-heb at Thebes. 2. Hymn to Osiris on the Stele of Amon-em-ha. 3. The Synchronous History of Assyria and Babylonia. 4. Inscriptions of Shalmaneser II. (on the Black Obelisk, the Kurkh Monolith, and the Gate of Balawát). 5. A Votive Inscription of Assur-natsir-pal. 6. Inscription of Rimmonr-nivari III. 7. Votive Inscriptions. 8. Babylonian Contract Tablets with Historical References. 9. The Dedication of Three Babylonians to the Service of the Sun-God at Sippara. 10. The Great Rock-Inscription of Argistis on the Rock of Van. 11. Monolith Inscription of Argistis, King of Van.

Vol. V. The Stele of Kuban. 2. A Stele of King Smendes. 3. The List of the Places in Northern Syria and Palestine Conquered by Thotmes III. 4. Correspondence between Palestine and Egypt in the Fifteenth Century B.C. 5. Text of Ammisatana, King of Babylon, from about 2115 to 2090 B.C. 6. An Early Tablet of the Babylonian Chronicle. 7. The Nimrud Inscription of Tiglath-Pileser III. 8. The Oracle of Istar of Arbela. 9. Three Documents Relating to the Sons of Nebuchadnezzar. 10. The Inscriptions Relating to the Rise of Cyrus and his Conquest of Babylonia.

Vol. VI. (and last). 1. Historical Inscriptions of Ramses II. 2. The List of Places in Northern Syria and Palestine Conquered by Ramses II. and Ramses III. 3. Letters from Phœnicia to the King of Egypt in the Fifteenth Century B.C. 4. The Inscription of Assur-bêl-kala. 5. Inscriptions of Sennacherib. 6. A prayer of Assur-banipal. 7. The Non-Semitic Version of the Creation Story. 8. The Cuneiform Tablets of Kappadokia. 9. The Kings of Egypt. 10. Contents of the New Series. 11. Index of Proper Names in the six volumes.

Religious Systems of the World, by Various Authors. London: Sonnenschein. 1889. 3d ed., 1893, 8vo, pp. 820, 10s. 6d.

Réville, A.: Prolegomena to the History of Religion. Eng. trans. with an introduction by Max Müller. London: Williams & Norgate, 1885. 8vo, 10s. 6d. French Orig., Prolégomènes de l'histoire de Religion. Paris: Fischbacher, 1880. 3d ed., 1881, 8vo, 6 fr.

Robson, J.: Hinduism and its Relations to Christianity. Edinburgh and London: Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier, 1874. 2d ed., 1893. Pp. xi. 269, sm. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Sacred Books of the East. Translated by various Oriental Scholars and Edited by F. Max Müller. Oxford Clarendon Press, 8vo. 1st Series, 1879-85, 24 vols. 2d Series, 1886 sqq., 24 vols. Each, 10s. 6d. or 12s. 6d. New York: Macmillan, each, $2.75 or $3.25. Complete Set of the Series $65.50.

The following are the volumes in the two Series:

Vol. I. The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Müller. Part I. The Khândogya-upanishad, The Talavakâra-upanishad, The Aitareya-âraṇyaka, The Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad, and The Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ-upanishad, 1879. 8vo, $2.75. [See also Vol. XV.]

Vol. II. The Sacred Laws of the Ārya. As taught in the Schools of Āpastamba, Gautama, Vasiṣṭha, and Baudhāyana. Translated by George Bühler, 1879. Part I. Āpastamba and Gautama, 1879. $2.75. [See also Vol. XIV.]

Vol. III. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part I. The Shū King, The Religious portions of the Shih King, and The Hsiāo King, 1879. $3.25. [See also Vols. XVI., XXVII., and XXVIII.]

Vol. IV. The Zend-Avesta. Translated by James Darmesteter. Part I. The Vendidad, 1880. $2.75. [See also Vols. XXIII. and XXXI.]

Vol. V. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part I. The Bundahis, Bahman Yast, and Shâyast lâ-shâyast, 1880. $3.25.

Vol. VI. and IX. The Qur'an. Parts I. and II. Translated by E. H. Palmer, 1880. $5.25.

Vol. VII. The Institutes of Vishnu, 1880. Translated by Julius Jolly, 1880. $2.75.

- Vol. VIII. The Bhagavadgītā with The Sanatsungatiya, and the Anugītā. Translated by Kāshināth Trimbak Telang, 1882. $2.75.
- Vol. X. The Dharmapada. Translated from Pāli by F. Max Müller; and the Sutta-Nipāta, translated from Pāli by V. Fausbøll; being Canonical Books of the Buddhists, 1881. $2.75.
- Vol. XI. Buddhist Suttas. Translated from Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids. 1. The Mahā-parinibbāna Suttanta; 2. The Dhammaṅkka-ppavattana Sutta; 3. The Teṭṭiga Suttanta; 4. The Ākankheyya Sutta; 5. The Ketokhila Sutta; 6. The Mahāsudassana Suttanta; 7. The Sabbāsava Sutta, 1881. $2.75.
- Vol. XII. The Satapatha-Brāhmana, according to the Text of the Mādhyandina School. Translated by Julius Eggeling. Part I. Books I. and II., 1882. $3.25.
- Vol. XIII. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part I. The Pātimokkha, The Mahāvagga, I.-IV., 1881. $2.75.
- Vol. XIV. The Sacred Laws of the Āryas, as taught in the Schools of Apastamba, Gautama, Vāśiṣṭhā, and Baudhāyana. Translated by George Bühler. Part II. Vāśiṣṭhā and Baudhāyana, 1882. $2.75.
- Vol. XV. The Upanishads. Translated by F. Max Müller. Part II. The Katha-upanishad, the Mūṇḍaka-upanishad, The Taittirīyaka-upanishad, The Brhadāraṇyaka-upanishad. The Svetasvatara-upanishad, The Prasṇa-upanishad, and The Maitrāyaṇa-Brāhmana-upanishad, 1884. $2.75.
- Vol. XVI. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Part II. The Yi King, 1882. $2.75.
- Vol. XVII. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part II. The Mahāvagga, V.-X. The Kullavagga, I.-III. 1883. $2.75.
- Vol. XVIII. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part II. The Dādīstānī Dinik and The Epistles of Mānūskīhar, 1882. $3.25.
- Vol. XIX. The Fo-sho-hing-tsan-king. A Life of Buddha by Asvaghosha Bodhisattva, translated from Sanskrit into Chinese by Dharmaraksha, A.D. 420, and from Chinese into English by Samuel Beal, 1883. $2.75.
- Vol. XX. Vinaya Texts. Translated from the Pāli by T. W. Rhys Davids and Hermann Oldenberg. Part III. The Kullavagga, IV.-XII., 1885. $2.75.
- Vol. XXI. The Saddharma-pundarīka; or, The Lotus of the True Law. Translated by H. Kern, 1884. $3.25.
- Vol. XXII. Gāna-Sūtras. Translated from Prakrit by Hermann Jacobi. Part I. The Ākāraṅga-Sūtra, The Kalpa-Sūtra, 1884. $2.75.
- Vol. XXIII. The Zend-Avesta. Translated by James Darmesteter. Part II. The Sīrōzahs, Yaṣts, and Nyāyis, 1883. $2.75.
- Vol. XXIV. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part III. Dinā-i Mainōg-i Khird, Sīkand-gūmānik, and Sad Dar, 1885. $2.75.
- * Uniform sets of the First Series may be had complete in 24 volumes, 8vo, price, $65.50. Second Series by the Same Editor. To be completed in 24 volumes. 8vo.
- Vol. XXV. Manu. Translated by Geo. Bühler, 1886. $5.25.
- Vol. XXVI. The Satapatha-Brāhmana. Translated by Julius Eggeling. Part II. 1886. $3.25.
- Vols. XXVII. and XXVIII. The Sacred Books of China. The Texts of Confucianism. Translated by James Legge. Parts III. and IV. The Li Ki, or Collection of Treatises on the Rules of Propriety or Ceremonial Usages, 1886. Each, $3.25.
- Vols. XXIX. and XXX. The Gṛhyasūtras. Rules of Vedic Domestic Ceremonies. Translated by Hermann Oldenberg, 1890, 1892. Each, $3.25.
- Vol. XXXI. The Zend-Avesta. Part III. The Yazna, Visparad, Āfrīgān, and Gāhs. Translated by L. H. Mills, 1887. $3.25.
- Vol. XXXII. Vedic Hymns. Part I. Hymns to the Maruts, Rudra, Vayu, and Vātā. Translated by F. Max Müller, 1891. $3.25.
- Vol. XXXIII. Minor Law Books. Part I. Narada, Brihaspati. Translated by J. Jolly, 1890. $2.75.
- Vol. XXXIV. The Vedānta Sūtras, with the Commentary by Sankarakarya. Translated by George Thibaut. Part I. 1890. $3.25.
- Vol. XXXV. The Questions of King Milinda. Translated by T. W. Rhys Davids. Part I., 1892. $2.75.
- Vol. XXXVI. Same. Part II. 1893.
- Vol. XXXVII. Pahlavi Texts. Translated by E. W. West. Part IV. Contents of the Nasks, 1892. $3.75.
- Vol. XXXVIII. Vedānta-Sūtras. Translated by G. Thibaut. Part II., 1893.
- Vol. XXXIX. The Texts of Taoism. Translated by James Legge. Part I. The Tāo Teh King. The Writings of Kwang-Zze. Books i.-xvii., 1891.
- Vol. XL. Part II. Books xviii.-xxxiii. The Thāi-Shang. Tractate of Actions and their Retribution. Appendixes i.-viii., 1891. Vols. XXXIX. and XL. $5.25.
- Vol. XLI. The Satapatha Brahmana. Translated by J. Eggeling. Part. III., 1893.
- Vol. XLII. The Buddha Karita. Translated by E. B. Cowell, 1893.
- Saussaye, P. D. Chantepie de la : Lehrbuch der Religionsgeschichte. Freiburg im Br. J. C. B. Mohr, 1887-89. 2 vols., 8vo. 18 marks. Eng. Trans. of Vol. I. Manual of the Science of Religion. By Beatrice S.

Colyer Fergusson (née Max Müller). London : Longmans, 1891. 8vo, $3.50.

RELIGION IN CHINA (CONFUCIANISM AND TAOISM).

Beal, S.: Buddhism in China. London : S. P. C. K., 1884. 16mo, 2s. 6d.

Same: A Catena of Buddhist Scriptures from the Chinese. London : Trübner, 1871.

Cf. Sacred Books of the East.

Same: Buddhist Literature in China. London : Trübner, 1882. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Chalmers, J.: The Speculations on Metaphysics, Polity, and Morality of the "Old Philosopher" Lau-Tsze. London : Trübner, 1868. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

Douglas, R. K.: Confucianism and Taoism. London : S. P. C. K., 1879. 8vo, 2s. 6d. New York : Pott. $1.25.

Edkins, J.: Religion in China. London : Trübner, 1859. 3d ed., 1884, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Same: Chinese Buddhism. London : Trübner. Boston : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1880. 8vo, 18s. $4.50.

Faber, E.: The Mind of Mencius. London : Trübner, 1882. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Same: A Systematical Digest of the Doctrines of Confucius, according to the Analects, Great Learning, and Doctrine of the Mean, with an Introduction on the Authorities upon Confucius and Confucianism. London : Trübner, 1875. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Same: Introduction to the Science of Chinese Religion. A Critique of Max Müller and other Authors. London : Trübner, 1880. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Henry, B. C.: The Cross and the Dragon, or Light in the Broad East. New York : Randolph [1886]. 12mo, $2.00.

Legge, J.: See Sacred Books of the East. Vols. III., XVI., XXVII., XXVIII., XXXIX.

Same: The Religions of China: Confucianism and Taoism Described and Compared with Christianity. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1880. 8vo, 6s. (New York : Scribner, 1881. $1.50.)

Williams, S. Wells: The Middle Kingdom. New York : Scribner, 1848. 2 vols., 8vo, 5th ed., rev., 1883, $9.00.

RELIGION IN INDIA (BRAHMANISM, HINDUISM).

Barth, A.: The Religions of India. New York : Houghton, 1882. 8vo, $5.00.

Bose, S. C.: The Hindoos as They Are. London : Stanford, 1881. 8vo, 2d ed., Thacker, 1884, 7s. 6d.

By a Hindu.

Hunter, W. W.: A Brief History of the Indian People. London : Trübner, 1882, 20th ed. Oxford Warehouse, 1893, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Slater, T. E.: Life of Keshab Chandra Sen, and the Brahma Samaj. London : J. Clarke, 1884. Cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Müller, Max: Chips from a German Workshop. London : Longmans, 1867-75. 4 vols., 36s. New York : Scribner. Each, $2.50.

Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion.

Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs.

Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.

Vol. IV. Essays on Comparative Philosophy, Mythology, etc.

- Whitney, W. D. : Oriental and Linguistic Studies. New York : Scribner, 1872-74. 2 Series (later ed.). Each, $2.50.
- Wilkins, W. J. : Modern Hinduism, being an Account of the Religion and Life of the Hindus in Northern India. London : Unwin, 1887. 8vo, 16s.
- Same : Daily Life and Work in India. London : Unwin, 1887. 8vo, 5s.
- Same : Hindu Mythology, Vedic and Puranic. London : Thacker, 1882. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- Williams, Monier : Religious Thought and Life in India, an Account of the Religions of the Indian Peoples, based on a Life's Study of their Literature and on Personal Investigations in their own Country. Part I. Vedism, Brahmanism, and Hinduism. London : Murray, 1883. 3d ed., 1887 (title changed to Brahmanism and Hinduism), 4th ed., 1891, 8vo, 18s. $4.50. Part II. Buddhism. With a Chapter on Jainism. The same, 1889, 8vo, 21s.
Authoritative.
- Same : Hinduism. London : S. P. C. K., 1877. 16mo, 2s. 6d. New York : Pott. $1.25.
- Same : The Holy Bible and the Sacred Books of the East. London : Seeley, 1887. 8vo, 1s.

BUDDHISM.

- Beal, S. : Buddhism in China. London : S. P. C. K., 1884. 16mo, 2s. 6d.
- Copleston, R. S. : Buddhism, Primitive and Present, in Magadha and in Ceylon. London and New York : Longmans, 1892. Pp. xv., 502, p. 8vo, 16s. $5.00.
- Dods, M. : See under Mohammedanism.
- Hardy, R. Spence : A Manual of Buddhism in its Modern Development, translated from Singhalese MSS. London : Williams & Norgate, 1853. 2d ed., 1880, 8vo, 21s.
- Same : The Legends and Theories of the Buddhists compared with History and Science. London : Williams & Norgate, 1866. 2d ed., 1881, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Oldenberg, H. : Buddha; his Life, Doctrine, and Order. Eng. trans. London : Williams & Norgate, 1881. 8vo, 18s.
- Rhys, Davids T. W. : Buddhism, being a Sketch of the Life and Teachings of Gautama, the Buddha. London : S. P. C. K., 1877. 16mo, 10th 1,000, 1882, 2s. 6d. New York : Pott. $1.25.
- Same : Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, Illustrated by some Points in the History of Indian Buddhism. London : Williams & Norgate, 1881. 8vo, 10s. 6d. New York : Putnam. $2.50.
- Schlagintweit, E. : Buddhism in Thibet, Illustrated by Literary Documents and Objects of Religious Worship, with an Account of the Buddhist Systems preceding it in India. London : Trübner, 1860. Fol., 42s.
The standard book on Thibetan Buddhism.
- Scott, A. : Buddhism and Christianity : A Parallel and a Contrast. Edinburgh : Douglas, 1890. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Thomas, E. : Jainism, or the Early Faith of Asoka. London : Trübner, 1877. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Titcomb, Bp. : Short Chapters on Buddhism, Past and Present. London : Religious Tract Soc., 1883. P. 8vo, 3s.

ZOROASTRIANISM (PARSEEISM).

Geiger, W. : Civilization of Eastern Iranians. London : Oxford Warehouse, 1885-87. 2 vols., 8vo, 24s.

Geiger, W., and Spiegel, F. : The Age of Avesta. London : Oxford Warehouse, 1887. P. 8vo, 5s.

Both the above are translated from the German.

Haug, M. : Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsees. Bombay, 1862. 3d ed., by E. W. West. London : Trübner, 1884. 8vo, 16s.

Karaka, Doshabai Framji : History of the Parsis. London : Macmillan, 1884. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.

Zend-Avesta : In "Sacred Books of the East." Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1880-89. 3 vols., 8vo, 33s. 6d. New York : Macmillan. (Parts 1 and 2 trans. by James Darmesteter, $5.25 ; Part 3 by L. H. Mills, $3.25.)

RELIGION OF ANCIENT EGYPT.

Baedeker, F. : Lower Egypt. Leipzig and London : Baedeker. New York : Scribner, 1878. 2d ed., 1885. 16mo, 16s. $4.80.

Same : Upper Egypt. 1892. 16mo, 10s. $3.00, pp. 390.

These guide-books are scholarly productions.

Brugsch, H. : Religion und Mythologie der alten Aegypter. Leipzig : Hinrich's Verlag, 1884-88. 2 parts, 8vo, 16 marks.

Same : A History of Egypt under the Pharaohs. Translated from the German. London : Murray, 1879. 2 vols., 8vo. 3d ed., condensed and thoroughly revised by (Miss) Mary Brodrick, 1891. 18s.

Ebers, G. : Egypt, Historical and Picturesque. (Trans. from the German by Clara Bell.) London : Cassell, 1881-82. 2d ed., 1887. 2 vols., 4to, 42s.

Erman, A. : Aegypten und ägyptisches Leben im Alterthum. Tübingen : Laupp, 1885-87. 2 vols., 8vo, 18 marks. Eng. trans. announced, 1892.

This is the best book on the subject.

Maspero, G. : Egyptian Archæology. Trans. from the French ed. by Miss A. B. Edwards. London : Grevel, 1887. 2d ed., 1889. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Highly recommended.

Same : Histoire ancienne des peuples d'Orient. Paris : Hachette et Cie., 1875. 2d ed., 1876, 12mo, 5 fr.

Same : Lectures historiques. Histoire ancienne—Égypte, Assyrie. Paris : Hachette et Cie., 1891. 12mo, 2.50 fr.

Mariette, A. : Outlines of Ancient Egyptian History. Trans. by Miss Mary Brodrick. London : Murray. New York : Scribners, 1892. Pp. xxxi., 155, 12mo, 5s. $1.00.

Murray's Handbook for Travellers in Egypt. London : Murray. 8th ed., revised 1891. 12mo, 15s.

Originally by J. G. Wilkinson ; a scholarly work.

Perrot, G., and Chipiez, C. : History of Art in Ancient Egypt. London : Chapman, 1883. 2 vols., 8vo, 42s. New York : Armstrong, 1882. 2 vols., 8vo, $15.00.

Renouf, P. le Page : Religion of Ancient Egypt. London : 1880. 2d ed., 1884. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

The Hibbert Lectures of 1880.

Tiele, C. P. : History of the Egyptian Religion. London : Trübner, 1882. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The Religion of Thinis-Abydos, Heliopolis, the Old Middle and New Kingdoms, and from the Fall of the Ramessides to the Persian Conquest. From the Dutch by Z. Balingal.

Wilkinson, J. G. : The Manners and Customs of the Ancient Egyptians. London : Murray, 1837-41. 6 vols., 4th ed., revised by S. Birch, 1878. 3 vols., 8vo, 84s. Boston : Cassino, 1883. 3 vols., each $6.00.

CLASSICAL PAGANISM.

Boissier, G. : La Religion romaine d'Auguste aux Antonins. Paris : Hachette et Cie., 1874. 3d ed., 1884. 2 vols., 8vo, 7 fr.

Cox, G. W. : The Mythology of the Aryan Nations. London : Paul, 1870. 2d ed., 1887, 8vo, 16s.

Döllinger, J. J. I. v. : Heidenthum und Judenthum, Vorhalle zur Geschichte des Christenthums. Regensburg : Manz, 1857. 8vo, 4 thalers. [2d-hand, $2.55.] Eng. trans. by N. Darnell : The Gentile and Jew in the Courts of the Temple of Christ. London : Longmans, 1862. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

[Practically inaccessible Eng. trans., as copies are seldom offered for sale.] A masterpiece of learning; a remarkable picture of the world at the Advent.

Friedländer, L. : Darstellungen aus der Sittengeschichte Roms in d. Zeit von August bis zum Ausgang der Antonine. Leipzig : Hirzel, 1862-71. 6th ed., 1889-90. 3 parts, 38 marks.

Fustel de Coulanges : La Cité antique : Étude sur le Culte, le Droit, les Institutions de la Grèce et de Rome. Paris : Durand, 1864. 5th ed. Hachette et Cie.; 1874. 3 fr. 50c. Eng. trans. The Ancient City : Study in the Religion, Laws, and Institutions of Greece and Rome. Boston : Lee & Shepard, 1874. 8vo, $2.50.

Gladstone, W. E. : Juventus Mundi, the Gods and Men of the Heroic Age. London : Macmillan, 1869. 2d ed., 1870. P. 8vo. 10s. 6d. $2.50.

Keim, Th. : Rom und das Christenthum. Eine Darstellung des Kampfes zwischen dem alten und dem neuen Glauben im römischen Reiche während der beiden ersten Jahrhunderte unsrer Zeitrechnung. Hsg. v. H. Ziegler. Berlin : G. Reimer, 1881. 8vo, 10 marks.

Authoritative work by the author of the great life of Christ from the moderately rationalistic side.

Lanciani, R. : Pagan and Christian Rome. Boston : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1892. Pp. viii. 374, 8vo, $6.00.

Mahaffy, P. J. : Social Life in Greece from Homer to Menander. London and New York : Macmillan, 1874. Cr. 8vo, 4th ed., 1890, 7s. 6d. $2.50.

Same : Greek Life and Thought from the Age of Alexander to the Roman Conquest. London and New York : Macmillan, 1887. P. 8vo, 12s. 6d. $3.50.

Marquard und Mommsen : Handbuch der römischen Alterthümer. Leipzig : Hirzel, 1870-82. 7 vols. in 9 parts, 8vo, 114 marks. Band vi. Das Sacralwesen. 2d ed. by G. Wissowa, 1885. 11 marks.

Petiscus, N. H. : The Gods of Olympus, or Mythology of the Greeks and Romans. Trans. by Katharine A. Raleigh from the 20th orig. German ed. London : Unwin, 1892. New York : Cassell, 1893. Pp. xiv., 271. 8vo, 7s. 6d. $2.00.

- Preller, L. : Römische Mythologie. Berlin : Weidmann, 1863. 3d ed. by H. Jordan, 1881-83. 2 vols., 8vo, 10 marks.
- Réville, J. : La Religion à Rome sous les Sévères. Paris : Leroux, 1886. 8vo, 7.50 fr.
- Roscher, W. H. : Ausführliches Lexikon der griechischen und römischen Mythologie. Leipzig : Teubner, 1884, sqq. 19th part, 1891.
- Seyffert, O. : Dictionary of Classical Antiquities, Mythology, Religion, Literature, and Art. London : Sonnenschein. New York : Macmillan, 1891. 2d ed., 1892, 4to, 21s. $6.00.
- Smith, W., Wayte, W., and Marindin, G. E. : A Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. London : Murray, 1890-91. 2 vols., 8vo, each 31s. 6d. Boston : Little, Brown & Co. Each $7.00.
- Smith, W. : Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography and Mythology. London : Murray, 1843-48. 3 vols., r. 8vo, £4 4s.
- Wells, J. ; Christ and the Heroes of Heathendom. London : Relig. Tract Soc., 1891. P. 8vo, 1s.
- Zeller, Ed. : Religion und Philosophie bei den Römern. Berlin : Lüde-ritz, 1867. 8vo, 2d ed., 1872, 1 mark.
- SCANDINAVIAN, CELTIC, AND TEUTONIC MYTHOLOGY.
- Anderson, R. B. : Norse Mythology, or the Religion of our Forefathers : containing all the Myths of the Eddas Systematized and Interpreted, with Introduction, Vocabulary, and Index. Chicago : Griggs, 1875. 2d ed., 1875. 8vo, $2.50.
- Burton, J. H. : The History of Scotland from Agricola's Invasion to 1748. Edinburgh : Blackwoods, 1853-70. 9 vols., 8vo, 2d ed., 1873, 8 vols., each 7s. 6d. Index vol., 3s.
See first vol. for Religion of the Ancient Celts.
- Grimm, J. L. C. : Deutsche Mythologie. Göttingen, 1835. 4th ed., E. H. Meyer. Berlin : Dümmler, 1875-78. 3 vols., 8vo. Each 12 marks. Eng. Trans. Teutonic Mythology, from the 4th ed., by J. S. Stallybrass. London : Sonnenschein, 1879-88. 4 vols., 8vo. Vol. I. 15s. Vols. II.-IV. each 18s.
The standard work.
- Kalevala. The national Epic Poem of Finland. Translated into English verse by J. M. Crawford. New York : Alden, 1888. 2 vols., 12mo, $2.00.
- Mallet, P. H. : Northern Antiquities. London : Bohn, 1847. (In Bohn's Antiquarian Library, in print.)
Contains trans. of the Prose Edda, by J. A. Blackwell.
- Rhys, J. : Lectures on Religion in Celtic Heathendom. London : Williams & Norgate, 1888. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- Same : Celtic Britain. London : S. P. C. K., 1882, 3s.
- JEWISH RELIGION. Cf. section on Biblical Theology.
- Döllinger, J. J. I. v. : Genile and Jew in the Courts of the Temple of Christ. London : Longmans, 1862. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.
See above.
- Duff, A. : Old Testament Theology : or the History of Hebrew Religion, from the Year 800 B.C. to Josiah, 640 B.C. Edinburgh : A. & C. Black, 1891. Pp. 350, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

- Edersheim, A. : Rites and Worship of the Jews. London : Relig. Tract Soc., n. e., 1890. P. 8vo, 2s. 6d. New York and Chicago : F. H. Revell Co., 1891. Pp. 176, 12mo, $1.00.
- Ewald, G. H. A. : The Antiquities of Israel. Eng. trans. London : Longmans. Boston : Lockwood, Brook & Co., 1876. 8vo, 12s. 6d., $5.00.
- Hausrath, A. : Neutestamentliche Zeitgeschichte. Heidelberg : Basser-mann, 1868-73. 4 parts, 8vo. 2d ed., 1873-77, 39 marks. 3d ed., vol.
i., 1879, 10 marks.
- Montefiore, C. G. : The Religion of the Ancient Hebrews. London (New York : Scribner), 1893. 2d ed., 1893. Pp. 598, 8vo, 10s. 6d. $3.00.
Hibbert Lectures for 1892. Critical school.
- Robertson, J. : Early Religion of Israel, as set forth by Biblical Writers and by Modern Critical Historians. Edinburgh : Blackwoods, 1892 (Feb.). 2d ed. (Oct.), 1892. Pp. xii., 524, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
Baird Lectures for 1889. Able presentation of the conservative side.
- Schürer, E. : History of the Jewish People. Eng. tr. Edinburgh : T. &
T. Clark, 1886-90. 5 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d. (New York : Scribner.
$8.00 net.)
- Smith, W. Robertson : Lectures on the Religion of the Semites. 1st series :
The Fundamental Institutions. Edinburgh : A. & C. Black, 1889.
New York : Appleton, 1890. Pp. xi., 488, p. 8vo, 15s. $4.00.

MOHAMMEDANISM.

- Arnold, J. M. : Islam : Its History, Character, and Relation to Christianity. London : Longmans, 1874. 8vo, 4s.
This is the 3d ed. of Ishmael, or a Natural History of Islamism, and its Relation to Christianity (1859) ; the 2d ed. being entitled, The Koran and the Bible, or Islam and Christianity (1866).
- Brown, J. P. : The Dervishes. Philadelphia : Lippincott, 1867, 8vo, $3.50.
- Burton, R. F. : Personal Narrative of a Pilgrimage to Al-Madinah and Meccah. London : Longmans, 1855-56. 3 vols., 8vo. 4th (memorial ed. London : Tylston, 1893. 2 vols., 8vo. Pp. 952, 12s. net. New York : Duprat (agent for Tauchnitz Series). 3 vols., $1.50 (unbound).
- Darmesteter, J. : The Mahdi, Past and Present. (Eng. trans. fr. French.)
London : Unwin, 1885. P. 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- Dods, M. : Mohammed, Buddha, and Christ : Four Lectures on Natural and Revealed Religion. London : Hodder, 1877 ; 7th ed., 1893. Pp.
236, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- Hughes, T. P. : Dictionary of Islam. London : W. H. Allen, 1885. Roy.
8vo, 42s.
- Koran, The : Translated by George Sale (1734). Many ed., e.g. Philadelphia : Lippincott. 8vo, $2.75. London : Routledge, 1892. P. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- Tr. by J. M. Rodwell. London : Williams & Norgate, 1861. Cr. 8vo. 2d
ed. Quaritch, 1876. 8vo, 12s.
- Tr. by E. H. Palmer (in the Sacred Books of the East). Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1880. 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. New York : Macmillan, $5.25.
- Lane, E. W. : An Account of the Manners and Customs of the Modern Egyptians. London : Knight, 1836. 2 vols., roy. 18mo. 5th ed. by E. Stanley Poole. Pub. Murray. 1 vol., med. 8vo, 1860. 2 Reprints, 1871 and 1882, 12s.

- Muir, W. : The Coran : its Composition and Teaching, and the Testimony it bears to the Holy Scriptures. London : Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1878. 12mo, 2s. 6d.
- Poole, Stanley Lane : Studies in a Mosque. London : W. H. Allen, 1883. 8vo, 12s.
- Same : The Speeches and Table Talk of the Prophet Mohammed. London : Macmillan, 1882. 18mo, 4s. 6d.
- Smith, R. Bosworth : Mohammed and Mohammedanism. London : Smith & Elder, 1874. 3d ed., 1889, p. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Stobart, J. W. H. : Islam and its Founder. London : S. P. C. K., 1877. 16mo, 2s. 6d.
- Wherry, G. M. : A Comprehensive Commentary on the Qurán. To which is prefixed Sale's Preliminary Discourse, with additional notes and emendations. London : Trübner, 1882-86. 4 vols., 8vo, 48s.
- NATURAL THEOLOGY.
- Argyll, Duke of : The Reign of Law. London : Strahan, 1866. 18th ed., 1884. Cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d. New York : Lovell, 1888. 12mo, 25c.
- Barry, A. : Some Lights of Science on the Faith. London : Longmans, 1893. Pp. 356, 8vo, 12s. 6d.
Bampton Lectures for 1892.
- Bushnell, H. : Nature and the Supernatural, as together constituting the One System of God. New York : Scribner, 1858. (Several later editions.) 12mo, $1.50.
The object is to find a legitimate place for the supernatural, as included in the system of God, with ultimate reference to the authentication of the supernatural history. A brilliant book.
- Dawson, J. W. : The Story of the Earth and Man. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1873. 10th ed., 1890. P. 8vo, 7s. 6d. New York : Harpers. 12mo, $1.50.
- Same : Nature and the Bible. New York : Carter, 1875. 12mo, $1.75.
- Same : The Origin of the World according to Revelation and Science. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1877. 4th ed., 1886. P. 8vo, 7s. 6d. New York : Harper, 1877. 12mo, $2.00.
- Same : Modern Ideas of Evolution as related to Revelation and Science. London : Relig. Tract Soc. New York : Revell, 1890, 12mo. London : 6th ed., 1891, 5s. $1.50.
Principal Dawson is a believing, reverent Scientist.
- Drummond, H. : Natural Law in the Spiritual World. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1883. 29th ed., 1890. Cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d. New York : Pott. 12mo, $1.00.
Numerous editions. Very able and suggestive, though probably the analogy is too much pressed.
- Fisher, G. P. : Manual of Natural Theology. New York : Scribner, 1893. Pp. ix., 94, 12mo, 75c.
- Hettinger, Fr. : Natural Religion. Eng. trans. London : Burns & Oates, 1890. Cr. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- Janet, P. : Final Causes. Eng. trans. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1878. 2d ed., 1883, 8vo, 12s.
- Le Conte, J. : Religion and Science : a Series of Sunday Lectures on the Relations of Natural and Revealed Religion, or the Truths revealed in Nature and Scripture. New York : Appleton, 1874. 12mo, $1.50.

- McCosh, J. : The Religious Aspect of Evolution. New York: Putnam, 1888. Enlarged edition, 1890, pub. by Scribner. 12mo, $1.00.
- Macmillan, H. : Bible Teachings in Nature. London : Macmillan, 1866. 24th ed., 1886, 8vo, 6s. $1.50.
- Same : The Ministry of Nature. Same, 1872. 6th ed., 1889, 6s. $1.50.
- Same : The Sabbath of the Field. Same, 1875. 5th ed., 1886. $1.50.
- Same : Two Worlds are Ours. Same, 1880. 4th ed., 1880, 6s. $1.50.
- Müller, F. Max : Natural Religion. London and New York : Longmans, 1889. 12mo, paper, 50c.
- Same : Physical Religion. London and New York : Longmans, 1891. P. 8vo, 10s. 6d. $3.00.
- Same : Anthropological Religion. London : Longmans, 1892. Cr. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- Paley, W. : Natural Theology. (Revised to harmonize with modern science, by F. Le G. Clark.) New York : Pott, 1875. 12mo, $1.75.
Another ed. by Bartlett. New York : Harpers. 2 vols., 12mo, $3.00.
- Stokes, G. G. : Natural Theology. Edinburgh : A. & C. Black. New York : Macmillan, 1891. Pp. viii., 272, 12mo, 3s. 6d. $1.50.
- Valentine, M. : Natural Theology, or Rational Theism. Boston : Silver, Burdett & Co., 1890. 12mo, $1.25.
- CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY AND PHILOSOPHY.
- Butler, Bp. Jos. : Three Sermons on Human Nature, or Man considered as a Moral Agent. London : 1726. Many editions since, e. g., with other works in Bohn's Library :
1. Upon the Social Nature of Man.
2-3. Upon the Natural Supremacy of Conscience.
By common consent accepted masterpieces of cogent reasoning.
- Fisher, G. P. : The Grounds of Theistic and Christian Belief. New York : Scribner, 1883. 12mo, $2.50.
- Same : Faith and Rationalism. New York : Scribner, 1879. 12mo, $1.25. Highly recommended.
- Flint, R. : Theism. Edinburgh and London : Blackwood, 1877. 8th ed., 1893, p. 8vo, 7s. 6d. New York : Scribner. $1.50.
- Same : Anti-Theistic Theories. The same, 1879. 3d ed., 1889, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- Lotze, H. : Microcosmos : Man and his Relations to the World. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1886. 2 vols., 8vo, 36s.
Important, as Lotze was one of the most prominent philosophers of the century.
- McCosh, Jas. : Christianity and Positivism : Lectures on Natural Theology and Apologetics. New York : Carter, 1875. 12mo, $1.75.
- Stirling, J. H. : Philosophy and Theology. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1890. P. 8vo, 9s.
- Wace, H. : The Foundations of Faith. London : Pickering, 1880. 2d ed., 1881, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
Bampton Lectures, 1879.

BOOK II.—EXEGETICAL THEOLOGY.*

PHILOLOGY OF THE OLD TESTAMENT.

For the grammar of the Shemitic languages in general, see the "Porta Linguarum Orientalium," a series of manuals noted for brevity, comprehensiveness, and clearness, instituted by J. H. PETERMANN in 1840, now conducted by H. L. STRACK, published in Berlin by Reuther. It embraces: Hebrew, by H. L. STRACK, 4th ed., 1891, 4 marks (Eng. trans. by R. S. Kennedy. London: Williams & Norgate, 1885; 2d ed., 1889, 8vo, 4s. 6d.); Chaldee, by J. H. PETERMANN, 2d ed., 1872, 4 marks; Samaritan, by J. H. PETERMANN, 2d ed., 1873, 4 marks; Arabic, by A. SOCIN, 2d ed., 1889, 6 marks; Syriac, by E. NESTLE, 2d ed., 1888, 7 marks (Eng. trans. by R. S. Kennedy. London: Williams & Norgate, 1888, 2d ed., 1889, 9s.); Armenian, by J. H. PETERMANN, 2d ed., 1872, 4 marks; Æthiopic, by F. PRÆTORIUS, 1886, 6 marks; Persian, by C. SALEMANN, 1889, 7 marks; Turkish, by A. MÜLLER, 1889, 8 marks; Assyrian, by F. DELITZSCH, 1889, 12 marks (Eng. trans. by R. S. Kennedy. London: Williams & Norgate, 1889, 15s.); Egyptian, by A. ERMAN, 1893; Coptic, by G. STEINDORFF, 1893.

Also, E. RENAN: Histoire générale et système comparé des langues sémitiques. 1st part: Histoire générale. Paris: Imprimerie impériale, 1855. 4th ed. (Levy frères), 1864, 8vo, 12 francs. (2d part announced.) WILLIAM WRIGHT: Lectures on the Comparative Grammar of the Semitic Languages. Cambridge: Cambridge Warehouse, 1890, 8vo, 14s.

The great Hebrew grammars are by WILHELM GESENIUS, 25th ed., by E. Kautzsch, Leipzig: Vogel, 1889, 6 marks (best ed. in English by Edward C. Mitchell. London: Bagster, 1874; 2d ed., 1880, 8vo, 7s. 6d.); and HEINRICH EWALD, 8th ed., Göttingen: Dieterich, 1870, 3 thaler 20 gr. (only the Syntax has been translated, by James Kennedy. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1879, 8vo, 8s. 6d.). Of great merit are the grammars by WILLIAM HENRY GREEN (5th revised and enlarged ed. New York: J. Wiley & Son, 1889, 8vo, $3); F. BÖTTCHER (Leipzig: Bart, 1866-68, 2 vols., 8vo, 10 thaler 20 gr. Designs to give an account of every anomalous case in the Hebrew Old Testament). A. B. DAVIDSON (4th ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1881, 8vo, 7s. 6d.); and W. R. HARPER (8th ed. New York: Scribners, 1888, 8vo, $2). The last two are introductory.

The best Hebrew lexicons are (1) that now preparing by FRANCIS BROWN (aided by C. A. Briggs and S. R. Driver), A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament, based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by Edward Robinson. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1891, sqq. (2 parts out, 1893, ea. 50c.); (2) that of GESENIUS (11th ed. of the orig. by Mühlau u. Volck. Leipzig: Vogel, 1890, 8vo, 15 marks), as translated by

* In the following list where no book title follows the author's name it is understood that the book bears the same general title as the section under which it is placed.

S. P. Tregelles (n. e. London : Bagster, 1852, 4to, 28s. 6d.) ; and by Edward Robinson (24th ed. Boston and New York : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1889, 8vo, $6) ; and (3) that of JULIUS FÜRST (3d ed. of the orig., by V. Ryssel. Leipzig : Tauchnitz, 1876, 8vo, 13.50 marks), as translated by S. Davidson (5th ed. Leipzig : Tauchnitz, 1885, 8vo, 21s.). Those who have no knowledge of Hebrew beyond the alphabet can use the copious and scholarly Analytical Hebrew and Chaldee Lexicon (prepared by B. DAVIDSON) (London : Bagster. New York : John Wiley & Sons, 12s., $4), in which every word in the Hebrew Bible is parsed and referred to its root or primary form. A good minor lexicon is that by BENJAMIN DAVIES, rev. by E. C. Mitchell, with English-Hebrew index. London : Asher, 3d ed., 1880, 8vo, 12s. There is an excellent Hebrew and German lexicon prepared by SIEGFRIED und STADE : Hebräisches Wörterbuch zum Alten Testamente. Leipzig : Veit, 1893, 8vo, 18 marks. (It has a German-Hebrew Index.) J. L. Potter published an English-Hebrew Index to the Robinson trans. of Gesenius (English-Hebrew Lexicon. Boston : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1872, 8vo, $2).

Of special helpfulness is S. R. DRIVER'S Treatise on the Use of Tenses in Hebrew. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 3d ed., 1874, 1892, 16mo, 7s. 6d. $1.90.

The best edition of the Hebrew Masoretic text is by S. BAER, published in parts (Leipzig, 1869, sqq.), with brief explanatory notes, not quite complete. Very much used is HAHN'S edition, complete (Leipzig, 1867, $3).

The standard Hebrew Concordance is in Latin, by J. FÜRST, aided by F. Delitzsch. Leipzig : Tauchnitz, 1840, fol., 18 thaler. Cheaper, but good, is S. P. TREGELLES'S Englishman's Hebrew and Chaldee Concordance to the Old Testament (London : Bagster, 4th ed., 1880, 2 vols., 8vo, £2 2s.).

For Chaldee or Aramaic grammar see those by E. KAUTZSCH (Leipzig : Vogel, 1884, 8vo, 4 marks), ELIAS RIGGS (rev. ed., New York : Randolph, 8vo, $2), D. M. TURPIE (London : Williams & Norgate, 1879, 8vo, 7s. 6d.), and G. B. WINER (3d ed., by B. Fischer. Leipzig : Barth, 1882, 4.50 marks).

The Massorah has been compiled by CHRISTIAN D. GINSBURG. London : 1880-86, 4 vols., fol. Delivered originally only to subscribers ; now to be had for about £25.

For the study of the Talmud and the Targums see J. LEVY : Neuhebräisches und Chaldäisches Wörterbuch über die Talmudim und Midraschim. Leipzig : Brockhaus, 1875-89, 4 vols., 4to, 140 marks.

JASTROW, M. : A Dictionary of the Targumim, the Talmud Babli and Yerushalmi, and the Midrashic literature. London : Trübner, 1880, sqq. To be in 12 parts. (New York : Putnam.) Part IX., 1893, 4to, ea. $2.

Le Talmud de Jérusalem, traduit pour la première fois par MOÏSE SCHWAB.

Paris : Maissonneuve, 1871-89, 11 vols., 8vo ; each, 10 fr. Eng. trans. London : Williams & Norgate, Vol. I., 1885, fcap 4to, 9s.

There is an English trans. of the Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel on the Pentateuch, by J. W. Etheridge. London : Longman, 1862-65, 8vo, 17s.

POLYGLOTT BIBLE.

STIER u. THEILE : Biblia Polyglotta. Bielefeld : Velhagen, 1855 ; 4th ed., 1875, 36 marks.

Gives Hebrew (O. T.), Greek (Septuagint and N. T.), Latin (Vulgate), German, and in N. T. vol. textual notes. Very convenient and accurate.

NEW TESTAMENT GREEK.*

GRAMMARS.

- BUTTMANN, ALEXANDER: Trans. by J. H. Thayer. Andover: W. T. Draper, 1873; latest ed., 1883, 8vo, pp. 474, $2.75.
- GREEN, SAMUEL G.: London: Relig. Tract Soc., 1870; 4th rev. ed., 1885, pp. xl. 564, p. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- GREEN, THOMAS SHELDON: London: Bagster, 1842; 4th ed., 1877, pp. 244, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- WINER, G. B.: Trans. by J. H. Thayer from the 7th ed., by Lünemann. Andover: W. F. Draper, 1869; latest ed., 1883, pp. 744, 8vo, $4.
- Same: Trans. by W. F. Moulton, from the 6th ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1870; 9th ed., 1892, pp. 848, 8vo, 15s.

GREEK TEXT.

- SCRIVENER, F. H. A.: Cambridge and London: 1887, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- TISCHENDORF, C.: Editio octava critica maior. Leipzig: B. Tauchnitz. Vol. I., 1869. Vol. II., 1872 (these contain the text). Vol. III. Prolegomena, by C. R. Gregory (in Latin), with additions by Ezra Abbot. Part I., 1884. Part II., 1890. 56.50 marks. Part III. (announced). Editio stereotypa minor (ed. by Gebhardt). Leipzig: B. Tauchnitz, 1887, 16mo, 2 marks.
- WESTCOTT and HORT: London: Macmillan, 1881, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. (Vol. I., text; Vol. II., introd. and appendix.) Text separately, with summary of the 2d vol., 1889, 5s. An edition for schools, with lexicon by W. J. Hickie, 1893, same, $1.90. Am. ed. with an Introduction by Schaff. New York: Harper (from duplicate plates), 1882; 3d ed., 1893, 8vo, $1. Also a diglott ed. with the Greek text and the Revised Version. New York: Harpers, 1882, 8vo, $2.50.
- WEYMOUTH, R. F.: The Resultant Greek Testament. London: Stock, 1886; 2d ed., 1892, 8vo, 5s. New York: Funk & Wagnalls Co., 1892, $3.

DICTIONARIES.

- CREMER, H.: Biblico-Theological Lexicon of the N. T. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1872; 3d ed. w. suppl., 1886, 4to, 38s. (Orig. 7th ed., Gotha: Perthes, 1893.)

Not a complete lexicon, but limited to words of theological bearing.

- HICKIE, W. J.: London and New York: Macmillan, 1893, pp. 212, 18mo, 3s. $1.
- ROBINSON, ED.: Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., n. e., 8vo, $4.
- THAYER, J. H.: Trans. of Grimm's ed. of Wilke. New York: Harpers, 1886; 2d ed. corrected, 1889, 4to, $5.

3. CONCORDANCE.

- BRUDER, C. H. (in Latin): Leipzig: Bredt, 1853; 4th ed., 1888, 4to, 25 marks.
- Englishman's Greek Concordance* (by Geo. V. Wigram). 8th ed. London: 1883, £1 1s.

* On all that relates to the study of the New Testament the student will find exceptional aid in the annotated bibliography appended by the Rev. Prof. J. H. Thayer, to his Books and their Use (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1893, pp. 43-88), which appeared after the present lists were substantially prepared.

- HUDSON, C. F. (ed. by EZRA ABBOT): Boston: Hastings, 1885, pp. 746, 8vo, $2.50.
- HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS (Greek text).
ROBINSON, E. (ed. by M. B. Riddle): Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1885, 8vo, $2.
- NEW TESTAMENT SYNONYMS.
TRENCH, R. C.: London and New York: Macmillan, 10th ed., 1888, 8vo, 12s. $3.50.
WEBSTER, W.: Syntax and Synonyms of the Greek Testament. London: Rivington, 1864, 8vo, 9s.
- NEW TESTAMENT.—THE LANGUAGE.
HATCH, EDWIN: Essays in Biblical Greek. Oxford: Clarendon Press, New York: Macmillan, 1889, 10s. 6d. $2.75.
His lectures on the Septuagint.
SIMCOX, W. H.: The Language of the New Testament. London: Hodder, 1889, 12mo, 2s. 6d.
Same: The Writers of the New Testament. Same, 1890, 12mo, 2s. 6d.
- SEPTUAGINT.—TEXT.
BAGSTER'S The Greek LXX. w. Eng. Trans. London: Bagster, 1851. New York: Wiley, 4to, 12s. $4.
SWETE, H. B.: Vol. I., Genesis—IV. Kings. Cambridge: University Press, 1887, pp. xxvii, 827. Vol. II., 1 Chron.—Tobit, 1891, pp. xvi, 879. Vol. III. and last announced. Ea. vol. $2.
TISCHENDORF, C.: Leipzig: Brockhaus, 1850; 6th ed., by E. Nestle, 1880, 8vo, 15 marks.
- CONCORDANCES.
HATCH, EDWIN, and HENRY A. REDPATH. Oxford: Clarendon Press. New York: Macmillan. Part I., 1892. Part II., 1893 (unfinished; to have 6 parts), ea. $5.
Includes the Apocrypha.
Handy Concordance. London: Bagster (1887), 8vo, 15s.
Gives references, no quotations, and does not include the Apocrypha.
TROMMIUS, A.: Amsterdam: 1718, fol., 2 vols.
Will be superseded by Hatch.
- BIBLICAL ARCHAEOLOGY.
BISSELL, E. C.: Biblical Antiquities. Philadelphia: Am. S. S. Union, 1888; 2d ed., 1892, 12mo, $1.50.
EWALD, H.: The Antiquities of Israel. Trans. from the 3d Ger. ed. by H. S. Solly. London: Longmans, 1876, 8vo, 12s. 6d.
The translation was revised by Dillmann, and much posthumous matter of Ewald's inserted.
KEIL, C. F.: 2d ed. Frankfurt a. M. Bertelsmann, 1875, 8vo, 14 marks. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1887-88, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. $6.
- BIBLICAL GEOGRAPHY.
Maps. HURLBUT, J. L.: Manual of Biblical Geography. Chicago: Rand, McNally & Co. (2d ed., 1887), pp. 158, royal 4to, $2.75.
MENKE, THEODOR: Bibelatlas in acht Blättern. Gotha: Perthes, 1868, fol., 3 thaler 10 gr.
Treatises. BAEDEKER'S (by Socin) Palestine and Syria. Eng. trans.

- Leipzig : Baedeker, 1872, 8vo, $7.50 ; 3d Ger. orig. (edited by I. Benziger), 1891, 12 marks.
- MURRAY'S (by J. L. Porter) Syria and Palestine. London : Murray, rev. ed., 1892, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s.
- ROBINSON, E.: Biblical Researches in Palestine and Adjacent Regions. 3d ed. Boston : Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1867, 3 vols., 8vo, $10. Supplement : Physical Geography of the Holy Land. Same, 1865, 8vo.
- SCHAFF, P.: Through Bible Lands. 2d ed., 1889. New York : Am. Tract Soc. ; London : Nisbet & Co., $2.50.
- STANLEY, A. P.: Sinai and Palestine in Connection with their History. London : Murray, 1856 ; 4th ed., 1892, 8vo, 12s.
- THOMSON, W. M.: The Land and the Book. New York : Harpers, 1859, 2 vols. ; n. e., richly illustrated, 1880-86, 3 vols., 8vo, $9.

BIBLICAL NATURAL HISTORY.

- TRISTRAM, H. B.: The Natural History of the Bible. London : Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 1867 ; 5th ed., 1880, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- WOOD, J. G.: Bible Animals. London : Longmans, n. e., 1883, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

BIBLICAL ISAGOGIC (Historico-Introduction to the Bible).

In general.

- BRIGGS, C. A.: Biblical Study. 3d ed. New York : Scribners, 1892, 8vo, $2.50.
- HORNE, T. H.: 14th ed., by Ayre and Tregelles. London : Longmans, 1877, 4 vols., 8vo, 42s.
- LADD, G. T.: The Doctrine of Sacred Scripture. New York : Scribners, 1883, 2 vols., 8vo, $7.
- Same: What is the Bible? Same, 1888, 12mo, $2.

Old Testament.

- BLEEK, FR.: 5th ed., by Wellhausen Berlin: G. Reimer, 1886, 8vo, 10.50 marks. Eng. trans. from 2d ed., by G. H. Venables. London: Bell & Daldy, 1869, 2 vols., 8vo, 18s.
- CORNILL, C. H.: Freiburg i. B.: Mohr, 2d ed., 1893, 8vo, 5 marks.
- DRIVER, S. R.: Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribners, 1891 ; 3d ed., 1892, 8vo, 12s. $2.50.
- KEIL, C. F.: 3d ed. Frankfort: Heyder. 1873, 6 marks. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1865, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. $6.
- KIRKPATRICK, A. F.: The Divine Library of the Old Testament. London and New York: Macmillan, 1893, p. 8vo, 3s. $1.
- REUSS, E.: 2d ed. Braunschweig: Schwetschke u. Sohn, 1890, 8vo, 15 marks.
- WRIGHT, C. H. H.: London: Hodder & Stoughton ; New York : Whittaker, 1891, 12mo, 2s. 6d. 75c.

New Testament.

- BLEEK, FR.: 4th ed., by Mangold. Berlin: G. Reimer, 1886, 8vo, 13.50 marks. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1870, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.
- DODS, M.: London: Hodder ; New York: Whittaker, 1888, 12mo, 2s. 6d. 75c.
- FARRAR, F. W.: The Messages of the Books. London: Cassell. New York: Dutton, 1884, 8vo, 14s., $3.50. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1893.
- GODET, FR.: Les Épîtres de S. Paul. Paris: Fischbacher, 1893, 8vo, 12 fr. Eng. trans. announced. To be followed by vol. ii. on the Gospels.

- HOLTZMANN, H. J.: 3d ed. Freiburg: Mohr, 1893, 8vo, 9 marks.
Chief work on the critical side.
- KERR, J. H.: Chicago and New York: Revell, 1892, 12mo, $1.50.
- REUSS, ED.: 6th ed., Braunschweig: Schwetschke u. Sohn, 1887, 8vo, 12 marks. Eng. trans., History of the Sacred Scriptures of the New Testament, by E. L. Houghton. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1884, 2 vols., 12mo, $5.

A good translation from the 5th ed., with bibliographical additions.

- SALMON, G.: 5th ed. London: Murray, 1891, 8vo, 9s.
- WEISS, B.: 2d ed. Berlin: Hertz, 1889, 8vo, 11 marks. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1887-88, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.
Special Introduction and Treatment of Special Points.
- GLOAG, P. J.: Introduction to the Pauline Epistles. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1876, 8vo, 10s. 6d.; Introduction to the Catholic Epistles. Same, 1887, 8vo, 10s. 6d.; Introduction to the Johannine Writings. London: Jas. Nisbet, 1891, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- GREEN, W. H.: Moses and the Prophets. New York: Carter, 1883, 12mo, $1; The Hebrew Feasts. Same, 1885, 12mo, $1.50.
- TRENCH, R. C.: Notes on the Parables of our Lord. 15th ed. London: Kegan Paul, 1886, p. 8vo, 7s. 6d.
Same: Notes on the Miracles of our Lord. 12th ed. London: Macmillan, 1884, 8vo, 12s.

BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

New Testament Text.

- * SCHAFF, PHILIP: Companion to the Greek Testament. 4th rev. ed. New York: Harpers, 1892, 12mo, $2.75.
- SCRIVENER, F. H. A.: 3d ed. Cambridge: Bell, 1883, 8vo, 16s. (4th ed. announced.)
- WARFIELD, B. B.: 3d ed. London: Hodder, New York: Whittaker, 1892. 16mo, 2s. 6d. 75c.

CANONIC.

Old Testament.

- BUHL, FRANTZ: Leipzig: Akad. Buchhandlung, 1891, 8vo, 6 marks.
There is an Eng. trans. (Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1892, 8vo, 7s. 6d.)
- DAVIDSON, S.: 3d ed. London: Kegan Paul, 1880, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
Rationalistic, but very learned.
- FUERST, J.: Leipzig: Dörffling, 1868, 8vo, 24 gr.
From the Jewish standpoint.
- GREEN, W. H.: New York: C. S. Robinson, 1889, 12mo, $1.
Anti-Kuenen.
- RYLE, H. E.: London and New York: Macmillan, 1892, 12mo, 6s., $1.75.
New Testament.
- CHARTERIS, A. H.: Canonicity. Edinburgh: Blackwood, 1880, 8vo, 18s.
Same: The New Testament Scriptures. London: Nisbet, 1882, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
The first named book is based upon Kirchofer's Quellensammlung (Zürich, 1844), but is an improvement on it; the second is a popular working over of the first.
- REUSS, E.: Eng. trans. from 2d ed., by David Hunter, Edinburgh: Gemmell, New York: Dutton, 1884, 8vo, 9s. $3.
The trans. embodies Reuss's corrections and revisions; so it is more desirable than the original.

- * WESTCOTT, B. F.: 6th ed. London and New York: Macmillan, 1889, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d. $3.
- ZAHN, T.: Leipzig: Deichert, 1888 sqq., 2 vols., 8vo.
A masterpiece of German learning.
- HERMENEUTIC.
History.
- DIESTEL, L.: Geschichte des alten Testaments in der christlichen Kirche. Jena: Mauke, 1869, 8vo, 4 marks 20 pf.
The standard book on the subject.
- FARRAR, F. W.: History of Interpretation. London: Macmillan, New York: Dutton, 1886, 8vo, 16s. $3.50.
- SMITH, W. ROBERTSON: The Old Testament in the Jewish Church. 2d ed. rev. Edinburgh: A. & C. Black, 1892, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- WESTCOTT, B. F.: The Bible in the Church. 10th ed. London and New York: Macmillan, 1889, 4s. 6d.
Treatises.
- CELLÉRIER, J. E.: Paris: Cherbuliez, 1852. Abridged Eng. trans., by Chas. Elliott and W. J. Harsha. New York: Randolph, 1881, 12mo, $1.50.
Very conservative.
- FAIRBAIRN, P.: Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1858, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
Still much esteemed; limited to N. T.
- Same: The Typology of Scripture. 6th ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1880, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.
- GIRDLESTONE, R. B.: The Foundation of the Bible, Studies in Old Testament Criticism. 4th ed. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode, 1892, 8vo, 3s. 6d.
A forcible presentation of the conservative position.
- IMMER, A.: Eng. trans., by A. H. Newman. Andover: W. F. Draper, 1877, 12mo, $2.25.
One of the best manuals; limited to N. T.
- LIAS, J. J.: Principles of Biblical Criticism. London: Eyre & Spottiswoode, 1893, pp. ix, 262, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
Treats whole Bible; very conservative.
- TERRY, M. S.: 2d ed. New York: Methodist Book Concern, 1885, 8vo, $3.
The fullest treatise on the subject in the language; covers the whole Bible.
- THE ENGLISH BIBLE.—Text of the Authorized Version.
- The Holy Bible.* London: British and Foreign Bible Society. New York: American Bible Society.
Models of typographical accuracy; various prices.
- The Cambridge Paragraph Bible.* London: Rivington, 1873, 4to, 21s.
Edited by F. H. A. Scrivener; the most scholarly reprint of the Authorized Version.
- The Teacher's Bible.* Pub. by the London, Oxford, and Cambridge presses.
Various prices.
These Bibles contain excellent aids, imparting an immense amount of information, written by leading English scholars.
- The Variorum Bible.* London: Eyre & Spottiswoode (New York: E. & J. B. Young), 3d ed., 1888; with Apocrypha, 1892; with new aids to the study of the Bible, 1893—thus completing the book. Prices from $4.50 to $16; with Apocrypha, $2 more.
The fruit of prodigious labor on the part of Cheyne, Driver, Sanday, R. L. Clarke, A. Goodwin, and C. J. Ball (editor of the Apocrypha part), who present at the bottom of each page the corrections of the text and improved readings and translations which have been suggested by the great historic translations, critical scholars, and commentaries.

The Variorum Bible. Text of the Revised Version.

The Holy Bible, containing the Old and New Testaments, translated out of the original tongues: being the version set forth A. D. 1611. Compared with the most ancient authorities and revised. Printed for the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, 1885.

The above is the only edition authorized by the American Committee of Revision. Many reprints.

— Other English Versions.

E. T. BARTLETT and J. P. PETERS: Scriptures, Hebrew and Christian. New York: Putnam, 1886-92, 8vo, 3 vols., $5.

Not the entire Bible, nor is the matter arranged as in the English Bible; but the trans. is revised, often very felicitously, and the substance of the Bible is given in eminently readable form.

A new translation of the entire Bible, edited by Paul Haupt, of Johns Hopkins University, is announced. The first part of the Hebrew text from which it will be made, viz.: the Book of Job, edited by Carl Siegfried, with an English translation of its note, by R. E. Brünnow, appeared (Leipzig: Hinrichs; London: D. Nutt; Baltimore: Johns Hopkins Press) 1893.

THE ENGLISH VERSION AND REVISION.

CHAMBERS, T. W.: A Companion to the Revised Old Testament. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1885, 12mo, $1.

EADIE, J.: The English Bible. London and New York: Macmillan, 1876, 2 vols., 8vo, 28s., $8.

MOMBERT, J. I.: A Handbook of the English Version of the Bible. New York: Randolph, 1883, 12mo, $2.50.

SCHAFF, P.: A Companion to the Greek Testament and the English Version. New York: Harpers, 1883, 4th ed., 1892, 12mo, $2.75.

WESTCOTT, B. F.: A General View of the History of the English Bible. London and New York: Macmillan, 1868, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CONCORDANCES TO THE AUTHORIZED VERSION.

CRUDEN, A.: London, 1737.

The reprints are numerous; that published by Dodd & Mead (New York, 4to, $1) is unabridged, and is so far forth to be preferred, but the plates are much worn; the best abridgment is that by John Eadie, and the best edition of that for Americans is published by the American Tract Society (New York, 8vo, $1.50).

STRONG, JAMES: New York: Methodist Book Concern, 1894, 4to, $5.

Announced; aims at remarkable completeness; takes in both the Authorized and Revised Versions.

YOUNG, ROBERT: Edinburgh: G. A. Young & Co. New York: Funk & Wagnalls Co., 7th ed., 1892, $5.

Every word is arranged in alphabetical order, with its Hebrew or Greek original.

CONCORDANCES TO THE REVISED VERSION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

THOMS, J. A.: London: S. P. C. K., 1882, 8vo, 5s.

Embraces the readings preferred by the American Committee.

The Student's Concordance to the Revised Version. London: Bemrose. New York: Appleton, 1882, 4to, 7s. 6d., $2.

American edition includes in an appendix the readings preferred by the American Committee.

COMMENTARIES.

Whole Bible.

Bible Commentary (commonly called The Speaker's Commentary). Ed. by F. C. Cook. London: Murray. New York: Scribners, 1871-81, 10 vols., 8vo, £11 9s., $30. Abridged by J. M. Fuller under the title, The Student's Commentary. London: Murray, 1884-89, 6 vols., cr. 8vo, ea. 7s. 6d. The part on the Apocrypha, ed. by Henry Wace, appeared London: Murray, 1888, 2 vols., 8vo, 50s.

Very concise; no homiletic; aims at explaining all difficulties, and succeeds very well. The name by which it is commonly called came from the fact that the then Speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. J. Evelyn Denison, suggested the preparation of such a commentary as the answer of the Church of England to the views of Colenso and other radical scholars, which were beginning to disturb the conservative public. Consequently it was the work of bishops and other leading clergymen of the Established Church. Needs thorough revision.

Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges. Edited by Dean (now Bishop) J. J. S. Perowne. London: C. J. Clay & Son. New York: Macmillan, 1877-94, 40 vols., f. 8vo.

Bp. Perowne was assisted by 20 scholars, among whom may be mentioned Payne Smith, Lumby, Davidson, Farrar, and G. G. Finlay.

Commentary wholly Biblical. London: Bagster, n. d., 3 vols., 8vo, $12.

Very useful and suggestive; the Bible is made to interpret itself.

ELLICOTT, C. J.: Commentary for English Readers by Various Writers.

London: Cassell. New York: Dutton, 1877-84, 8 vols., 8vo, ea. 21s., $6.

Expositor's Bible. Edited by W. R. Nicoll. London: Hodder. New York: Armstrong, 1887-95, 42 vols., 12mo, ea. 7s. 6d., $1.50.

The dates are those of the appearance of the different vols., which are not, strictly speaking, commentaries, but rather expository lectures. They are by some thirty competent writers; among whom are Marcus Dods, W. G. Blaikie, F. W. Farrar, A. Maclaren, S. Cox, G. A. Smith, G. T. Stokes, R. Rainy, and W. Milligan.

GRAY, J. C.: The Biblical Museum. London: Stock. New York: Randolph, 1871-82, 15 vols., 8vo, ea. 3s. 6d., $1.25 (set for $8).

Does not reprint the text; designed primarily for Sunday-school teachers' use; contains numerous illustrative stories and helpful analyses.

HENRY, MATTHEW, London, 1710, 5 vols., fol. Best mod. ed. Nisbet, 1866, 3 vols., imp. 8vo. 42s. Other eds.

Highly valued for its practical and edifying remarks; contains much wit and more wisdom; is based upon a more critical study than appears. Henry did not live to complete further than the Acts; the remainder is from several hands. Every minister should read Henry for style and matter.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET, and BROWN: Edinburgh: Collins & Co., 1864-71, 6 vols., 8vo, 60s. (Best Am. ed. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1868-70, 6 vols., 8vo, $15. Some eds. omit the Biblical text.)

Those who have used this commentary unite in praising it. It is popular in the best sense.

LANGÉ, J. P.: Eng. trans., edited by Philip Schaff, in connection with American divines of various evangelical denominations. New York: Scribners, 1864-72; n. e. 1880 sqq. 25 vols., 8vo, $75.

Includes vol. on the Apocrypha by E. C. Bissell. Widely used and highly esteemed. The work of 20 European and 50 American divines.

PARKER, JOSEPH: The People's Bible: Discourses upon Holy Scripture. London: Hazell. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1885 sqq. On the O. T. 17 vols., 8vo, ea. 8s., $1.50.

Very remarkable, as coming from one man; abounds in stimulating ideas; very helpful to a preacher.

Pulpit Commentary. Edited by Dean H. D. M. SPENCE and J. S. EXELL. London: Kegan Paul, 1880 sqq., 8vo, ea. about 15s. (New York: Randolph, ea. $2.)

The contributors number upward of one hundred, and the vols. to date number 45. The plan is peculiar, inasmuch as the exegetical and homiletical sections are by different persons. The exegetes are well known.

STRACK u. ZÖCKLER: Kurzgefasster Commentar zu den Schriften des Alten und Neuen Testaments, sowie zu den Apokryphen. München: Beck, 1886-93, 13 vols., 8vo, about 8 marks each.

The best recent German commentary from the orthodox standpoint, the work of a company of scholars. It includes the Apocrypha (commented on by Zöckler himself, 1891, 8 marks).

WHEDON, D. D.: New York: Methodist Book Concern: N. T., 1860-75, 8vo; 2d ed., 1889, 5 vols., ea. $1.50. O. T., 1880-93, 8 vols., ea. $2.

Prepared under Methodist auspices by different scholars.

WORDSWORTH, Bp. CHR.: London: Rivington, N. T. with Greek text, 1856-60, 4 parts, 8vo; 2d ed., 1872, 60s. O. T., 1864-71, 6 vols, 8vo; 2d ed., 1868-72, 120s.

A fine specimen of English patristic scholarship, but more successful as showing what the Fathers thought was the meaning of Scripture than as a commentary for critical and ordinary use.

Commentaries upon the Whole Old Testament.

GEIKIE (pron. gee-kee), C.: Hours with the Bible. London: Hodder, 1880-85, 6 vols., 8vo; ea. 6s. New York: Pott, set $6. (Entirely rewritten edition announced by Jas. Nisbet & Co., London, 1893.)

Not a commentary exactly, yet so closely follows the text as to constitute a readable substitute for one.

KEIL u. DELITZSCH: Leipzig: Dörffling u. Franke, 15 vols., 8vo, various prices. Eng. Trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1864-78, 27 vols., ea. 10s. 6d., or set 142s. New York: Scribners, ea. $3.

The commentary on Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song, and Isaiah is from Delitzsch; the rest from Keil. The work of Delitzsch is of much greater value. Since the above translation was made most of the volumes have appeared in new editions.

Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Alten Testament. Leipzig: Hirzel, 1838-62, 17 parts, 8vo, 20 thaler 17½ gr. Edited by Knobel; n. e. of parts by Dillmann, Bertheau, Thenius, Nowack, Smend, and Steiner.

Perhaps the best purely exegetical and explanatory commentary on the Old Testament ever made. The new editions by Dillmann and others are particularly valuable.

NOWACK, W. (ed.): Hand-Kommentar zum Alten Testament. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck u. Ruprecht, 1892 sqq., 8vo.

To be in some 8 vols. at about 8 marks each.

Commentaries on the New Testament.

ALFORD, HENRY: The Greek Testament. London (6th ed., Vols. I., II., 1868-71, £2 12s.; 5th ed., Vol. III., 1871, 18s.; 4th ed., Vol. IV., 1870, £1 12s.); 4 vols., 8vo.

Retains its place as on the whole the best complete commentary upon the Greek text: utilizes German learning, but not slavishly dependent upon it.

American Commentary. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Soc., 1881 sqq., 12 vols., 8vo, ea. $2. Edited by Alvah Hovey, with competent scholars.

BENGEL, J. A.: Gnomon of the New Testament. Eng. trans. by A. R. Fausset. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark [1857-58], 3 vols., 8vo, 24s. Also by Charlton T. Lewis and M. R. Vincent. Philadelphia: Perkenpine, 7th ed., 1874; 2 vols., 8vo, $9.

A marvel of condensation, point, and spiritual insight; must always remain a classic. Should be read in Latin to appreciate fully its beauties.

LIPSIVS (R. H.), HOLTZMANN (H. J.), SCHMIEDEL (P. W.), and VON SODEN (H.): Handcommentar zum Neuen Testament. Freiburg im Br.: Mohr, 1889-91, 4 vols., 8vo, 2d ed., 1892-93, 33 marks.

Moderately rationalistic, but clear and pointed.

MEYER, H. A. W.: Göttingen: Vandenhoeck u. Ruprecht, 1829 sqq.; latest ed. by himself, 1869-74, 9 parts, 70 marks. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1872-82, 20 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d. Am. ed. by different scholars. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1883-87, 11 vols., 8vo, ea. $3.

Those who desire to know what Meyer says should consult the American edition, which is a great improvement upon the mere English translation. The German new editions of Meyer, by Weiss and others, are radically changed by the editors, who thereby make Meyer the unconscious vehicle of their opinions. It cannot, however, be denied that Weiss and his coadjutors are admirable scholars, and their commentaries, if only they were not called by Meyer's name, would receive unqualified commendation.

PEROWNE, J. J. S. (ed.): The Cambridge Greek Testament for Schools and Colleges. London: C. J. Clay & Son. New York: Macmillan, 1881 sqq.

By such scholars as Maclear, Farrar, and Lumby. Gives a revised Greek text and English notes. To be finished in some 14 vols. 10 are out.

SADLER, M. F.: Church Commentary on the New Testament. London: Bell, 1882-93, 12 vols., ea. 7s. 6d.

Much admired by high Anglicans.

SCHAFF, PHILIP: International Illustrated Commentary. New York: Scribners. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1879-82, new ed., 1892, 4 vols., 8vo, ea. 18s., $6.

By such scholars as Moulton, Milligan, Riddle, Howson, Dykes, and Dods. Illustrated and with maps. Reissued in revised form, and on the basis of the Revised Version, under the title, International Revision Commentary on the New Testament. New York: Scribners, 1882-83, 6 vols., 16mo (Matthew to Romans), $7.

*Commentaries upon Particular Books.

Genesis.

DELITZSCH, FR.: Eng. trans. from 4th Ger. orig. ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1888-89, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s.

MURPHY, J. G.: Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1863, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

Psalms.

CHEYNE, T. K.: The Praises of Israel, a New Translation. London: Kegan Paul, 1888, 8vo, 16s.

Same: Bampton Lectures on the Psalter; same, 1891, 8vo, 16s.

DE WITT, J.: 3d ed. New York: Randolph, 1890, 8vo, $2.

A very successful translation.

PEROWNE, J. J. S.: 6th ed. London: Bell & Son, 1886, 2 vols., 8vo, 34s. The standard.

SPURGEON, C. H. (and others): The Treasury of David. London: Passmore. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1870-85, 7 vols., 56s. $14.

Particularly valuable for its Puritanic lore.

Isaiah.

ALEXANDER, J. A.: n. e. New York: Scribners, 2 vols., 12mo, $4.

CHEYNE, T. K.: 3d ed. London: Kegan Paul, 1884, 2 vols., 8vo, 25s.

Minor Prophets.

PUSEY, E. B.: 3d ed. Oxford: Parker, 1877, 4to, 31s. 6d.

WRIGHT, C. H. H.: Zechariah and his Prophecies. London: Hodder, 1879, 8vo, 14s.

New Testament in general.

VINCENT, M. R.: Word Studies in the New Testament. New York: Scribners, 1887-94, 4 vols., 8vo, $16.

Very valuable; quite original and suggestive; endeavors to put the mere English student of the N. T. on the level of the Greek student.

*The mention of the general commentaries renders it less necessary to go over all the Biblical books. Only a very few of the many excellent special commentaries can be given here.

The best recent commentators unmentioned in the previous lists are JAMES MORISON, on Matthew, 6th ed. London: Hodder, 1890, 8vo, 14s.; Mark, 6th ed., same, 1889, 8vo, 12s.

FR. GODET, on Luke, French orig. 3d ed., 1888-89, 2 vols., 8vo, 20 fr. Eng. trans. from 2d ed. Edinburgh trans. (T. & T. Clark), ed. by John Hall. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1881. John, same, Am. ed. by Timothy Dwight, 1886, 2 vols.; Romans, 2d ed. orig., same, Am. ed. by T. W. Chambers, 1883, ea. $3; First Corinthians, Edinburgh trans. (T. & T. Clark), 1886-87, 2 vols., 21s. $6.

H. P. LIDDON, on Romans. London and New York: Longmans, 1893, pp. 300, 8vo, 14s. $4.

A. P. STANLEY, on Corinthians, 5th ed. London: Murray, 1882, 8vo, 18s.

C. J. ELLICOTT (London and New York: Longmans, 8vo), on First Corinthians, 1887, 16s., $5.50; Galatians, 2d ed., 1859, 8s. 6d., $3; Ephesians, 5th ed., 1884, 8s. 6d., $3; Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon, 5th ed., 1883, 10s. 6d., $3.75; Thessalonians, 4th ed., 1880, 7s. 6d. $2.75; Pastoral Epistles, 5th ed., 1883, 10s. 6d. $3.75.

J. A. BEET (London: Hodder, 8vo), on Romans, 6th ed., 1887, 7s. 6d.; Corinthians, 5th ed., 1885, 10s. 6d.; Galatians, 3d ed., 1891, 5s.; Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon, 1891, 7s. 6d.

J. B. LIGHTFOOT (London and New York: Macmillan, ea. 12s., $3.25), on Galatians, 10th ed., 1890; Philippians, 9th ed., 1886; Colossians and Philemon, 9th ed., 1890.

JOHN EADIE, on Galatians (Glasgow: Maclehose), 1869, 8vo, 10s. 6d. Ephesians, 3d ed., 1883; Philippians, 2d ed., 1884; Colossians, 2d ed., 1884 (the n. e. of these 3 are by W. Young, Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribners, ea. 10s. 6d. $3.75); Thessalonians, posthumous ed. by W. Young (London: Macmillan), 1877, 8vo, 12s. $3.50.

T. C. EDWARDS, on First Corinthians. London: Hodder, 1st and 2d ed., 1885, 8vo, 14s. New York: Armstrong & Son, 2d ed., 1886, $2.50.

BOOK III.—HISTORICAL THEOLOGY.

GENERAL INTRODUCTION TO THE LITERATURE.

A. ALL PERIODS.

BRATKE, E.: Wegweiser zur Quellen und Litteraturkunde der Kirchengeschichte. Gotha: Perthes, 1890, 8vo, 6 marks.

FISHER, J. A.: A Select Bibliography of Ecclesiastical History. Boston: Heath, 1885, 16mo, 25 cts.

NIRSCHL, J.: Propädeutik der Kirchengeschichte. Mainz: Kirchheim, 1888, 8vo, 4.40 marks.

B. MEDIÆVAL PERIOD.

POTHAST, A.: Bibliotheca historica mediæ ævi. Wegweiser durch die Geschichtswerke des europäischen Mittelalters von 375–1500. Berlin: Weber, 1868, 8vo, 6 thaler.

WATTENBACH, W.: Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter bis zur Mitte des 13. Jahrhunderts, 5th ed. Berlin: Hertz, 1886, 2 vols., 8vo, 17 marks.

SOURCES.—TEXTS.

A. BIBLICAL PERIOD.

THE BIBLE (cf. Book II.).

JOSEPHUS: Eng. trans. in Bohn's Library, 5 vols., $5.00; best ed. of orig. text by B. Niese, Berlin: Weidmann, 1885 sqq. (Vol. V., 1892), 8vo; and by I. Bekker, 2d ed., by S. A. Naber, Leipzig: Teubner, 1888 sqq. (Vol. IV., 1893), 8vo.

PHILO: Eng. trans. in Bohn's Library, 4 vols., $6.00; ed. of the orig. text, Leipzig: Teubner, 1851–52, 5 vols., 16mo, ea. 15 gr.

B. PATRISTIC AND MEDIÆVAL PERIOD.

I. CHRISTIAN WRITERS, TO THE MIDDLE AGE.

Corpus scriptorum ecclesiasticorum latinorum. Wien: Gerold's Sohn, 1866 sqq., 8vo, Vol. XXV., 1892, different prices.

MIGNE, J. P.: Patrologia. Petit Montrouge (Paris): Migne, 1844–66; n. e., 1878 sqq. Greek Fathers, 167 vols.; Latin Fathers, 232 vols.; ea. about 10 fr.

Cheap reprints of the great Benedictine and other good editions. Includes the two principal mediæval theologians, Peter Lombard and Thomas Aquinas.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE PATRISTIC SOURCES.

The Ante-Nicene Fathers, ed. by Alexander Roberts and James Donaldson. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1867–71, 24 vols., ea. $3.00. Am. ed. by A. C. Coxe, New York: Christian Literature Co., 1885–87, 9 vols. (including index vol.), 8vo, $31.00.

The Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers. First Series, ed. by Philip Schaff,

New York; same, 1886-89, 14 vols. (Augustin in 8 and Chrysostom in 6 vols.), 8vo, $49.00. Second Series, ed. by Philip Schaff and Henry Wace; same, 1890 sqq. (Vol. I., Eusebius; II., Socrates and Sozomen; III., Theodoret, Jerome, Gennadius, and Rufinus; IV., Athanasius; V., Gregory of Nyssa; VI., Jerome: to be followed by seven more). Each $4.00.

The First Series is a revised reprint of the Clark and Oxford series respectively; the Second Series is largely original, and is remarkably well done.

II. WRITERS OF THE MIDDLE AGE.

HOROY, —: Medii ævi bibliotheca patristica, seu ejusdem temporis Patrologia, ab anno 1216 usque ad Concilii Tridentini tempora. Paris: Bibliothèque ecclésiastique, 1879 sqq., 8vo, ea. 10 fr.

A continuation of the Migne series.

SPECIAL CLASSES OF WRITERS OF THE PATRISTIC PERIOD.

Apostolic Fathers.

V. GEBHARDT, HARNACK, and ZAHN: 2d ed. Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1876, 3 parts, 8vo, 24 50 marks.

HEFELE-FUNK: Tübingen: Laupp, 5th ed., 1888, 2 vols., 8vo, 18 marks.

*LIGHTFOOT, J. B.: London and New York: Macmillan, 1891, 8vo, 16s., $4.00.

With English trans. and notes, ed. by J. R. Harmer.

Same: Clement of Rome, 2d ed.; same, 1890, 2 vols., 8vo, 32s., $10.00.

Same: Ignatius and Polycarp, 2d ed.; same, 1889, 3 vols., 48s., $16.50.

Apologists of the 2d Century.

OTTO, J. C. T. DE: 3d ed. Jena: Fischer, 1876-81, 5 vols., 8vo, 39.50 marks.

C. REFORMATION PERIOD.

LUTHER'S Works: Erlangen and Erfurt: Heyder, 1826-73, 67 German and 33 Latin vols.

The above is the best edition for general use. For scholarly purposes it will be superseded by that edited by J. K. F. Knaake. Weimar: Böhlau, 1883 sqq. (9 vols. in 10 years).

MELANCHTHON'S Works, ed. by Bretschneider and Bindseil. Halle: Schwetschke, 1832-50, 28 vols., 8vo, 112 thaler.

ZWINGLI'S Works, ed. by Schuler and Schulthess. Zürich: Schulthess, 1828-61, 9 vols., 8vo, 17 thaler 27 gr.

CALVIN'S Works, ed. by Baum, Cunitz, and Reuss. Braunschweig: Schwetschke, 1863 sqq., 8vo, ea. 12 marks (Vol. 49, 1893). Eng. trans., Edinburgh: Calvin Trans. Soc., 1842-53, 51 vols., 8vo.

WORKS WRITTEN FROM THE SOURCES.

HISTORY OF ISRAEL.

EWALD, H.: Eng. trans. London: Longman, 1867-87, 8 vols., 8vo, 118s.

Goes down to establishment of Christianity.

GRAETZ, H.: Eng. trans. London: Nutt, 1891-92, 5 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d. Am. reprint, Philadelphia: Jewish Publication Soc., ea. $3.00.

The standard Jewish treatise; goes down to modern times.

HOSMER, J. K.: Story of the Jews. New York: Putnam, 1886, 12mo, $1.50.

- HUNTER, P. H.: After the Exile. London: Oliphant, 1890, 2 vols., 12mo, 10s. (New York: Scribner, $4.00).
- KITTEL, R.: Geschichte der Hebräer. Gotha: Perthes, 1892, 8vo, 13 marks.
Down to Babylonish exile.
- KUENEN, A.: Eng. trans. The Religion of Israel. London: Williams & Norgate, 1874-75, 3 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.
To the fall of Jerusalem. The chief work on the Dutch critical side.
- MILMAN, H. H.: Latest ed. London: Murray, 1883, 3 vols., p. 8vo, 12s.
Scholarly, yet popular; goes down to modern times.
- MORRISON, W. D.: Story of the Jews under Rome. New York: Putnam, 1890, 12mo, $1.50.
- RENAN, E.: Eng. trans. London: Chapman. Boston: Roberts, 1888-94, 4 vols., 8vo, ea. 14s., $2.50.
Sceptical; goes down to Christian era.
- SCHÜRER, E.: History of the Jewish People at the Time of Christ. Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1886-90, 5 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d. (New York: Scribner, $8.00 net).
- STADE, B.: Geschichte des Volkes Israel. Berlin: Grote, 1887-88, 8vo, 2 vols.
Critical; goes down to Christian era.
- STANLEY, A. P.: Latest ed. Murray, 1884, 3 vols., 8vo, ea. 6s.
Brilliant; suggestive; somewhat rationalistic.
- WELLHAUSEN, J.: Prolegomena zur Geschichte Israels. Berlin: 8vo, 1873, 3d ed., 1886. Eng. trans. History of Israel. London: A. & C. Black, 1885, 8vo, 15s.
- Same: Sketch of the History of Israel and Judah. 3d ed; same, 1891, p. 8vo, 5s.
Reprint with additions of his art. in 9th ed. of the Encyclopædia Britannica.
- HISTORY OF NEW TESTAMENT TIMES. (Cf. History of the Apostolic Age.)
- DELITZSCH, F.: Jewish Artisan Life in the Time of Jesus. Eng. trans. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1883, 16mo, 15 cts.—A Day in Capernaum. Eng. trans., by G. H. Schodde. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1887, 12mo, 75 cts.
- DRUMMOND, J.: The Jewish Messiah. London: Longmans, 1877, 8vo, 15s.
- HAUSRATH, A.: Eng. trans. History of New Testament Times. London: Williams & Norgate, 1878-80, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. Orig. München: Basermann, 1868-73, 2d ed. 1873-77, 4 pts, 8vo, 39 marks. Vol. 1. 3d ed., 1879, 10 marks.
- MERRILL, S.: Galilee in the Time of Christ. New York: Whittaker, 1885, cr. 8vo, $1.00.
- SCHÜRER, B.: Eng. trans. History of the Jewish People at the Time of Christ. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1886-90, 5 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d. (New York: Scribner, $8.00 net).
- STANTON, V. H.: The Jewish and Christian Messiah. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1886, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- STAFFER, E.: Eng. trans. Palestine at the Time of Christ. London: Hodder. New York: Armstrong, 1887, 8vo, 9s., $2.50.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST.

English Works:

ANDREWS, S. J.: Wholly rev. ed. New York: Scribner, 1891, 8vo, $2.50.

Very valuable in chronology and topology.

EDERSHEIM, A. (d. 1889): 3d ed. London: Longmans. New York: Randolph, 1886, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s., $6.00.

Particularly full upon rabbinical matters.

FARRAR, F. W.: Popular ed. London: Cassell, 1881, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Rhetorical, but instructive and scholarly.

GEIKIE, C.: New ed. London: Hodder, 1883, 8vo, 7s. 6d.

STALKER, J.: New ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1884, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d. (60 cts.)

Mere outline, but based upon thorough study.

German:

BEYSCHLAG: Halle: Strien, 1886, 2 pts., 8vo, 18 marks.

HASE: Eng. trans. by J. F. Clarke. Boston: American Unitarian Association, 1881, 12mo, 75 cts.

KEIM: Eng. trans. London: Williams & Norgate, 1873-79, 4 vols., 8vo, ea. $4.75.

Reverently rationalistic.

LANGE, J. P.: Eng. trans. New ed. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1864, 6 vols., 8vo, 28s., $11.20.

NEANDER, A.: Eng. trans. In Bohn's Library, $1.00.

STRAUSS, D. F.: Eng. trans. of the popular ed. (that of 1864). London: Temple Co., 1892, 8vo, 2s. 6d.; n. e. of Geo. Eliot's trans. (1846) of the large ed. (that of 1835-36, 2 vols.), London: Sonnenschein, 1893, pp. 806, 8vo, 15s.

Sceptical.

UHLHORN, G.: Das Leben Jesu in seinen neueren Darstellungen. 4th ed. Stuttgart: Gundert, 1892, 12mo, 2 marks.

Review of works of Renan, Strauss, Keim, Delff, Weiss, and Beyschlag.

WEISS, B.: Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1883-84, 3 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d. (New York: Scribner, $9.00).

French:

PRESSENSÉ: Eng. trans. 4th ed. London: Hodder & Stoughton, 1871, cr. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

RENAN, E.: Eng. trans., sev. ed., e. g. London: Trübner, 1887, p. 8vo, 1s.

Sceptical.

MORAL CHARACTER OF CHRIST.

HUGHES, T.: The Manliness of Christ. London: Macmillan, 1880, p. 8vo, 4s. 6d.

SCHAFF, P.: The Person of Christ. 12th ed. New York: Scribner, 1882, $1.00.

SEELEY, J. P.: Ecce Homo. 11th ed. London: Macmillan, 1873, 12mo, 6s.

ULLMANN: Eng. Trans. The Sinlessness of Jesus. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1870, cr. 8vo, 6s. ($2.25).

Also the chapter in H. BUSHNELL'S Nature and the Supernatural (n. e., 1876), separately published under its title, The Character of Jesus forbid-

- ding his Classification with Men.* New ed. New York: Scribner, 1867, 16mo, 60 cts.
- HISTORY OF THE APOSTOLIC AGE. (Cf. History of N. T. Times.)
- EWALD (see § History of Israel).
- FISHER, G. P.: The Beginnings of Christianity. New York: Scribner, 1877, 8vo, $2.50.
- LECHLER, G. V.: Eng. Trans. Apostolic and Post-Apostolic Times. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1886, 3 vols., 8vo, 16s.
- LIGHTFOOT, J. B.: Dissertations on the Apostolic Age. London and New York: Macmillan, 1892, 8vo, $3.50.
- NEANDER, A.: Eng. Trans. First Planting of Christianity. (In Bohn's Library, 2 vols., 12mo, $2.00.)
- RAMSAY, W. M.: The Church in the Roman Empire before A.D. 170. London: Hodder & Stoughton; New York: Putnam, 1893, pp. 494, 8vo, 12s., $3.00.
- RENAN, E.: Eng. Trans. The Apostles. London: Trübner, 1889, p. 8vo, 1s.
- SCHAFF, P.: History of the Apostolic Church. New York: Scribner, 1853. Substantially reproduced in the first vol. of his Church History, 5th rev. ed.; same, 1893, 8vo, $4.00.
- THATCHER, O. J.: A Sketch of the History of the Apostolic Church. Boston: Houghton, 1893, 16mo, $1.25.
- WEIZSÄCKER, C.: Das apostolische Zeitalter der christlichen Kirche. 2d ed. Freiburg im Br., 1889, 8vo, 16 marks.
- On Paul.*
- BAUR: Eng. trans. London: Williams & Norgate, 1873-75, 2 vols., 21s.
- CONYBEARE and HOWSON: New ed. London: Longmans, 1888, p. 8vo, 6s.
- EVERETT, C. C.: The Gospel of Paul. Boston: Houghton, 1893, pp. xiii, 307, 8vo, $1.50.
- Unitarian.
- FARRAR: New ed. London: Cassell, 1884, 8vo, 6s.
- LEWIN, T.: 3d rev. ed. London: Bell, 1875, 2 vols., 4to, 42s.
- STEVENS, G. B.: The Pauline Theology. New York: Scribner, 1892, pp. xi, 383, p. 8vo, $2.00.

SPECIAL TOPICS.

HISTORY OF PERSECUTIONS.

- AUBÉ, B.: Histoire des Persécutions [to close of 3d century]. Paris: Didier et Cie., 1878-85, 3 vols., 12mo, 12 fr.
- MASON, A. J.: The Persecution of Diocletian. London: Bell & Sons, 1876, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- UHLHORN, G.: Eng. trans. The Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism. New York: Scribner, 1879, 8vo, $2.50.

HISTORY OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

- SCHAFF, P.: Progress of Religious Freedom as shown in the History of Toleration Acts. New York: Scribner, 1889, 8vo, $1.50.

HISTORY OF THE ORGANIZATION OF THE EARLY CHURCH.

- HATCH, E.: The Organization of the Early Christian Churches. London: Rivington, 1881; 2d ed., 1888, 8vo, 5s.

HISTORY OF COUNCILS.

- HEFELE, C. J.: Conciliengeschichte [to Council of Trent]. Freiburg im Br.: Herder, 2d ed. rev., 1873-90, 10 vols., 8vo. Eng. trans. [to 451]. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1871-82, 3 vols., 8vo, 36s.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN LIFE.

- BRACE, C. L.: Gesta Christi, or a History of Humane Progress under Christianity. New York: Armstrong, 1882; 5th ed., 1890, 8vo, $2.50.
- UHLHORN, G.: Die christliche Liebesthätigkeit in der alten Kirche; (do.) im Mittelalter; (do.) seit der Reformation. Stuttgart: Gundert, 1881-90, 3 vols., 8vo, 20 marks.

HISTORY OF DOCTRINES AND DOGMAS.

- HAGENBACH, K. R.: Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1880-81, 3 vols., 8vo, ea 10s. 6d. (New York: Scribner, $9.00).
- HARNACK, A.: Eng. trans. of The Outline by E. K. Mitchell. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1893, pp. xii. 567, 8vo, $2.50.
- NEANDER, A.: In Bohn's Library, 2 vols., 8vo, $2.00.
- SHEDD, W. G. T.: New York: Scribner, 1865, 8th ed., 1884, 2 vols., 8vo, $5.00.
- SHELDON, H. C.: New York: Harper, 1886, 2 vols., 8vo, $3.50.

PATRISTIC MANUALS.

- ALZOG, J.: Grundriss der Patristik oder die altchristliche Literaturgeschichte. Freiburg im Br.: Herder, 1866; 4th ed., 1888, 8vo, 8 marks.
The best Roman Catholic manual.
- NIRSCHL, J.: Lehrbuch der Patrologie und Patristic. Mainz: Kirchheim, 1881-85, 3 vols., 8vo, 20.40 marks.
By a Roman Catholic scholar.

PATRISTIC LITERATURE.

- CEILLIER, R.: Histoire générale des Auteurs sacrés et ecclésiastiques. Paris, 1729-63, 23 vols. New ed. Paris: Vivès, 1858-63; Index, 2 vols., 8vo, in all 16 vols., 170 fr.
One of the great Benedictine works; begins with the Old Testament and analyzes all the biblical writings and then the Christian writings down to and including Pope Innocent III. (13th century).
- CRUTTWELL, C. T.: A Literary History of Early Christianity, including the Fathers and the Chief Heretical Writers of the Ante-Nicene Period. London: Griffin. New York: Scribner, 1893, 2 vols., 8vo, pp. 692, 21s., $6.00.
- DONALDSON, J.: Critical History of Christian Literature and Doctrine. London: Macmillan, 1864-66, 3 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.
Out of print, except Vol. I. The Apostolic Fathers, 2d ed., 1874, 7s. 6d., $2.00.
- HARNACK, A.: Geschichte der altchristlichen Litteratur bis Eusebius, 1. Theil, Die Ueberlieferung und der Bestand. Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1893, pp. lxi, 1020, 8vo, 35 marks.

PATRISTIC BIOGRAPHIES.

- FARRAR, F. W.: Lives of the Fathers. London and Edinburgh: Black. New York: Macmillan, 1889, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s., $5.00.
Covers the first four Christian centuries; highly commended.
- Fathers, The, for English Readers*. London: S. P. C. K., 1878-88, 11 vols., ea. 2s.

Scholarly brief biographies and analyses of works.

SCHAFF, P. : St. Chrysostom and St. Augustin. New York : Whittaker, 1891, pp. viii, 158, 12mo, 75 cts.

SMITH, W., and WACE, H. : A Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects, and Doctrines. London : Murray, 1877-87, 4 vols., 8vo, 166s. (Boston : Little, Brown & Co., $24.00).

Covers only first eight Christian centuries, but does so in the most scholarly and satisfactory manner. Should be one of the first purchases of the theological student.

CHRISTIAN ARCHÆOLOGY.

BENNETT, C. W. : Christian Archæology. New York : Phillips & Hunt, 1888, 8vo, $3.50.

A scholarly work by an enthusiastic student.

BINGHAM, J. : The Antiquities of the Christian Church. London : 1708-22, 10 vols., modern ed., e. g. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1855, 10 vols., 8vo, £3 3s. (New York : Macmillan, $16.00).

SMITH, W., and CHEETHAM, S. : A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. London : Murray, 1875-80, 2 vols., 8vo, £3 13s. 6d. (Boston : Little, Brown & Co., $15.00).

Covers only first eight Christian centuries, but does so equally well with its companion the Dictionary of Biography.

THE REFORMATION.

BEARD, C. : The Reformation of the 16th Century in its Relation to Modern Thought and Knowledge. London : Williams & Norgate, 1883 ; 2d ed., 1885, 8vo, 4s. 6d.

BEZOLD, Fr. : Geschichte der deutschen Reformation. Berlin : Grote, 1890, 8vo, 22.50 marks.

Illustrated ; one of the Oncken series.

FISHER, G. P. : The Reformation. New York : Scribner, 1873, cr. 8vo, $2.50.

Comprehensive and eminently readable.

HAGENBACH, K. R. : Eng. trans. History of the Reformation in Germany and Switzerland. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1878-79, 2 vols., 21s. 6d., $6.00.

5th ed. of orig., by F. Nippold. Leipzig : Hirzel, 1887, 8vo, 7 marks.

HARDWICK, C. : ed. by W. Stubbs. The Reformation. London : Macmillan, 1877, 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HÄUSSER, L. : Eng. abridged trans. The Period of the Reformation, 1517-1648. New York : n. e., Am. Tract Soc., 1891, $2.00.

Orig. ed. by Oncken. Berlin : Weidemann, 1888, 8vo, 3 thaler 22½ gr.

JANSEN, J. (R. C.) : Geschichte des deutschen Volkes seit dem Ausgang des Mittelalters. Freiburg im Br. : Herder, 1876-88, 8 vols., 8vo ; 12th ed., 1888, ea. about 6 marks.

RANKE, L. : Deutsche Geschichte im Zeitalter der Reformation. Leipzig : Duncker, 1834-36, 3 vols. ; 6th ed, 1882, 36 marks.

Same : Die römischen Päpste, ihre Kirche und ihr Staat im sechzehnten und siebzehnten Jahrhundert. Same, 1834-39, 3 vols., 8vo ; 5th ed., 1867, 8 thaler. Excellent Eng. trans. by Sarah Austin : History of the Popes of Rome during the 16th and 17th Centuries. 4th ed. London : Murray, 1867, 3 vols., 8vo, 30s.

BIOGRAPHIES OF THE REFORMERS.

Collections.

Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche. Elberfeld: Friderichs, 1857-62, 10 vols., 8vo, 15 thaler.

By different writers, authoritative biographies of Zwingli, Oecolampadius, Myconius, Capito, Butzer, Calvin (by Stähelin), Bullinger, Beza, Peter Martyr, Vermigli, Olevianus, Ursinus, Lasco, Jud, Lambert, Farel, Viret, Vadian, Haller, Blaurer, and Knox.

Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der lutherischen Kirche. Elberfeld: Friderichs, 1861-75, 8 vols., 8vo, 41 marks.

By different writers; authoritative biographies of Luther (by Köstlin), Melancthon, Bugenhagen, Osiander, Brenz, Rhegius, Jonas, Cruciger, Speratus, Spengler, von Amsdorf, Eber, Chemnitz, and Chryträus.

Single Biographies.

LUTHER. By J. Köstlin—Elberfeld: Friderichs, 1875, 2 vols., 8vo; 3d ed., 1883, 18 marks. Abridged ed. Luthers Leben (illustrated). Leipzig: Fries, 1882; 3d ed., 1883, 8vo, 8 marks. Eng. trans. London: Longman. New York: Scribner, 1883, 8vo, 16s., $2.50. (Cf. his Theology, also by Köstlin—Stuttgart: Steinkopf, 2d ed., 1883, 2 vols., 9 marks.)
The authoritative life.

ZWINGLI. By J. C. Mörkofer—Leipzig: Hirzel, 1867-69, 2 vols., 8vo, 2 thaler 15 gr. (Cf. Zwingli's Theology, by A. Baur—Halle: Niemeyer, 1885-89, 2 vols., 8vo, 30 marks.)

CALVIN. By P. Henry—Hamburg: Perthes, 1835-44, 3 vols., 10 thaler 15 gr. Abridged Eng. trans. London: Whittaker, 1849, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s. By E. Stähelin—Elberfeld: Friderichs, 1860-62, 2 vols., 8vo, 3 thaler. By F. W. Kampschulte—1st vol. Leipzig: Duncker, 1869, 8vo, 2 thaler 24 gr. (by a liberal Roman Catholic, unfortunately unfinished).

KNOX. By Thomas McCrie—London: Cadell, 1839. New ed., Nelsons, 1889, p. 8vo, 2s.; and by W. M. Taylor—New York: Armstrong, 1884, 12mo, $1.25.

THE PAPAL COUNTER-REFORMATION.

CREIGHTON, M.: The Papacy during the Period of the Reformation. London and New York: Longman, 1882-87, 4 vols., 8vo, 56s., $18.50.
Covers period from 1378 to 1518.

MAURENBRECHER, W.: Geschichte der katholischen Reformation. Nördlingen: Beck, Vol. I., 1880, 8vo, 8 marks.

PASTOR, L.: Eng. trans. History of the Popes from the Close of the Middle Ages. London: J. Hodges, 1892, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s. net.
Down to the death of Sixtus IV. (1484). Ger. orig.—Freiburg im Br.: Herder, 1886-89, 2 vols., 8vo, ea. 10 marks; 2d ed., Vol. I., 1891.

PHILIPPSON, M.: La contre-révolution religieuse au xvi. siècle. Brussels: C. Muquardt, 1884, 8vo, 10 fr.

WARD, A. W.: The Counter-Reformation. London and New York: Longman, 1889, 12mo, 2s. 6d., $1.00.

CHURCH HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES.

DORCHESTER, D.: Christianity in the United States from the First Settlement down to the Present Time. New York: Phillips & Hunt, 1888, 8vo, $4.50.

NIPPOLD, F.: Amerikanische Kirchengeschichte seit der Unabhängigkeitser- klärung der Vereinigten Staaten. Berlin : Wiegandt u. Schotte, 1892, pp. xi, 272, 8vo, 6.40 marks.

Vol. IV. of his Handbuch der neuesten Kirchengeschichte.

☞ The Christian Literature Company of New York announce that, beginning toward the close of 1893, they will issue a series of twelve or thirteen volumes, edited by a committee of the American Society of Church History, and covering all the denominations in the United States. Separate volumes will be given to the Baptists (Prof. A. H. Newman); Congregationalists (Prof. W. Walker); Lutherans (Prof. H. E. Jacobs); Methodists (Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley); Presbyterians (Prof. R. E. Thompson); Protestant Episcopal (Rev. Dr. C. C. Tiffany); and Roman Catholics (Prof. T. O'Gorman). The series will open with The Religious Census of 1890, prepared by its superintendent, H. K. Carroll, LL.D. Advance subscribers receive the set at $2.00 a volume.

ECCLESIASTICAL MONOGRAPHY.

The great number of these prevents the mention of more than a very few accessible to English readers.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

ANSELM. By F. R. Hasse. Abridged Eng. trans. London : Rivington, 1850, p. 8vo, 6s. (Orig. Leipzig: Engelmann, 1843-52, 2 vols., 8vo, 4 thaler 15 gr.) By Martin Rule. London : Kegan Paul, 1883, 2 vols., 8vo, 32s.

BERNARD. By A. Neander. Eng. trans. London : Rivington, 1843, 8vo, 7s. 6d. By R. S. Storrs. New York : Scribner, 1892, pp. viii, 598, 8vo, $2.50.

CRANMER. By J. Strype. Mod. ed. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1840, 2 vols., 8vo, 11s.

JULIAN, THE EMPEROR. By A. Neander. Eng. trans. London : Parker, 1850, 12mo, 3s. 6d.

WICLIF. By G. V. Lechler. Eng. trans. London: 1878. 2d ed. Religious Tract Soc., 1884, 8vo, 8s.

DOCTRINAL AND DOGMATIC-HISTORICAL.

ALGER, W. R.: Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. Philadelphia : G. W. Childs, 1863. 12th ed.—Boston : Roberts, 1885, 8vo, $3.50.

With the remarkable bibliography on the subject by Ezra Abbot.

BAUR, F. C.: Die Lehre von der Dreieinigkeit und Menschwerdung Gottes in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwicklung. Tübingen : Osiander, 1841-43, 3 vols., 8vo, 13 Thaler.

DORNER, ISAAC A.: Eng. trans. History of the Development of the Doctrine of the Person of Christ. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1868-72, 5 vols., 8vo, £2 12s. 6d.

GENERAL WORKS IN CHURCH HISTORY.

BAUR, F. C.: Leipzig : Fues. 1853-62, 5 vols., 8vo, 13 thaler 4 gr. (Vols. I. and II., 3d ed., 1863, 4 thaler 6 gr.; Vol. III., 2d ed., 1869, 2 thaler 28 gr.; Vol. V., 2d ed., 1877, 10 marks.) Eng. trans. The Church History of the First Three Centuries. London : Williams & Norgate, 1878-79, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. 6d.

The original goes down to 1848.

- GIESELER, J. K. L.: Bonn: Marcus, 1835-55, 6 vols., 8vo, 23 thaler 15 gr. Eng. trans. revised by H. B. Smith. New York: Harpers, 1855-79, 5 vols., 8vo, $10.50.
- HAGENBACH, K. R.: Leipzig: Hirzel, 1869-72, 6 vols., 8vo, 12 marks; n. e., by F. Nippold, Vols. I.-III., 1885-87, 3 vols., 8vo, ea. 7 marks. Partial Eng. trans. History of the Reformation in Germany and Switzerland, by Miss Eveline Moore. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1878-79, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s., $6.00. History of the Church in the 18th and 19th Centuries, by Bp. J. P. Hurst. New York: Scribner, 1869, 2 vols., 8vo, $6.00.
- HASE, K. A. VON: Kirchengeschichte auf der Grundlage akademischer Vorlesungen. Leipzig: Breitkopf, 8vo. 1. Theil—Alte Kirchengeschichte, 1885; 2d ed., 1890, 10 marks. 2. Theil—Mittlere Kirchengeschichte, 1890, 12 marks. 3. Theil—Neuere Kirchengeschichte, ed. by G. Krüger, 1892, 10 marks.
- NEANDER, A.: Hamburg u. Gotha: F. A. Perthes, 1825-52, 6 vols.; 4th ed., 1863-65, 9 vols., ea. 15 gr. Eng. trans. by Joseph Torrey. Boston: Crocker & Brewster, 1854, 5 vols., 8vo; 12th ed. with index vol. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 6 vols., 8vo, $20.00.
Excellent trans.; the index vol. should always be purchased.
- ROBERTSON, J. C.: London: Murray, 1858-73, 4 vols., 8vo; n. e., 1873-75, 8 vols., 8vo, ea. 6s.
Extends to the Reformation.
- SCHAFF, PHILIP: History of the Christian Church. New York: Scribner, 1858-67, 3 vols. (from the Birth of Christ to Gregory the Great, 1-600); 5th ed., thoroughly revised and enlarged. Vol. I., Apostolic Christianity, A.D. 1-100, 1893; Vol. II., Ante-Nicene Christianity, A.D. 100-325, 1884; Vol. III., Nicene and Post-Nicene Christianity, A.D. 311-600, 1884; Vol. IV., Mediæval Christianity, A.D. 590-1073, 1885; Vol. V., Mediæval Christianity, A.D. 1073-1517 (in preparation); Vol. VI., Modern Christianity; The German Reformation, 1517-1530, 1888; Vol. VII., Modern Christianity: The Swiss Reformation, 1892, 8vo, ea. $4.00.
A standard work, which every minister should own and study; written in an attractive style; gives unsurpassed bibliographical information on all points.

MANUALS.

- FISHER, G. P.: History of the Christian Church. New York: Scribner, 1887, 8vo, $3.50.
- HASE, K. A. VON: Lehrbuch der Kirchengeschichte. Leipzig: Weidmann, 1834. 11th ed.—Leipzig: Breitkopf, 1886, 8vo, 10 marks.
Eng. trans. pub. 1855; there should be another, as Hase is a master in painting characters.
- HURST, J. P.: Short History of the Christian Church. New York: Harpers, 1893, pp. xxxv, 672, 8vo, $3.00.
- KURTZ, J. H.: Eng. trans. Church History. London: Hodder. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1888-90, 3 vols., 8vo, ea. 7s. 6d., $2.00.
From the 10th ed. 1st ed.—Mitau: Neumann, 1849. 12th ed.—Leipzig: Neumann, 1893, 16.60 marks. Trans. in need of revision.
- MÖLLER, W.: History of the Christian Church. Trans. from the German by A. Rutherford. London: Sonnenschein. New York: Macmillan, 1892-93, 2 vols., 8vo, 15s., $3.75.

MÜLLER, K. : Kirchengeschichte. Freiburg im Br. : Mohr, 1892-93, 2 vols., 8vo, ea. 9.50 marks.

CHRONOLOGICAL TABLES.

SMITH, H. B. : History of the Church of Christ in Chronological Tables. New York : Scribner, 1859 ; rev. eds., 1869, 1875, 1877, fol., $5.00.

WEINGARTEN, H. : Zeittafeln und Ueberblicke zur Kirchengeschichte. Berlin : Schweigger, 1870 ; 4th ed. by S. M. Deutsch—Leipzig : Hartung, 1891, 8vo, 4.80 marks.

BOOK IV.—SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY.

APOLOGETIC.

- * BRUCE, A. B. : Apologetic ; or Christianity defensively Stated. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark. New York : Scribner, 1892, 8vo, 10s. 6d., $2.50.
- BUTLER, J. : The Analogy of Religion, natural and revealed, to the Constitution and Course of Nature. London : 1736. Many eds., e. g. by Emory and Crooks. New York : Harper, 1852, 12mo, $1.00 (still in print).
- FARRAR, A. S. : Critical History of Free Thought. London : Murray. New York : Appleton, 1862, 8vo, 16s., $2.00.
- STEARNS, L. F. : The Evidence of Christian Experience. New York : Scribner, 1890, 12mo, $2.00.
- Fresh, original ; marks an advance.
- ☞ See also, for additional literature, "Natural Theology" and "Christian Theology and Philosophy."

BIBLICAL THEOLOGY.

OLD TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

- DAVIDSON, A. B. (Announced ; in Salmonds and Briggs's Library.)
- OEHLER, G. F. : Eng. trans., ed. by G. E. Day. New York : Funk & Wagnalls, 1883, 8vo, $3.00.
- PIEPENBRING, CH. Eng. trans. Theology of the Old Testament. New York : Crowell, 1893, pp. xi, 361, 12mo, $1.75.
- SCHULTZ, H. : Eng. trans., by J. A. Paterson. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark. New York : Scribner, 1892-3, 2 vols., pp. x, 435, vi, 470, 8vo, 18s., $6.00.

MESSIANIC PROPHECY.

- BRIGGS, C. A. : New York : Scribner, 1886, 8vo, $2.50.
- DELITZSCH, F. : Eng. trans. by S. I. Curtiss. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1891, p. 8vo, 5s.

☞ See also section "Jewish Religion."

NEW TESTAMENT THEOLOGY.

- BERNARD, T. D. : Progress of Doctrine in the N. T. 4th ed. London : Macmillan, 1878, 8vo, 5s.
- BEYSCHLAG, W. : Halle : Strien, 1891, 8vo, 8 marks.
- VAN OOSTERZEE, J. J. : Eng. trans. New York : Dodd, Mead & Co., 1877, 12mo, $1.50.
- REUSS, E. : Eng. trans. History of the Christian Theology of the Apostolic Age. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1872-74, 2 vols., 8vo, 24s.
- SCHMID, C. F. : Eng. trans. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1871, 8vo, 10s. 6d. New York : Scribner, $3.00.

From the 4th ed. Gotha : Schloessmann, 1868, 8vo, 2 thaler 24 gr. 6th ed.—Gotha : Perthes (in Bibliothek theologischer Klassiker), 1892-93, 3 parts, 8vo, ea. 2.40 marks.

WEISS, B.: Eng. trans. Biblical Theology of the New Testament. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1883, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s., $6.00.

WENDT, H. H.: Eng. trans. The Teaching of Jesus. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1892, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. 6d., $5.00.

DOGMATIC THEOLOGY.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

BERINGTON, J., and KIRK, J.: The Faith of Catholics. 3d ed., by J. Waterworth. London: Dolman, 1846, 3 vols., 8vo, n. e. 1890, 31s. 6d.

GIBBONS, J.: The Faith of our Fathers. Baltimore: Murphy, 1876; 36th rev. ed., 1890, 18mo, $1.00.

LUTHERAN.

MARTENSEN, H.: Eng. trans. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1866, 8vo, 10s. 6d., $3.00

SCHMID, H.: Eng. trans., fr. 5th Ger. ed., by Hay and Jacobs. Philadelphia: Lutheran Pub. Soc., 1876, 8vo, $4.00.

SPRECHER, S.: Philadelphia: Lutheran Pub. Soc., 1879, 8vo, $2.75.

REFORMED AND CALVINISTIC.

CALVIN, J.: Eng. trans. Institutes of the Christian Religion. Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board, 2 vols., 8vo, $2.50.

GERHART, E. V.: New York: Armstrong, 1891 sqq. (to be completed in 2 vols., 8vo); Vol I., $3.00.

HODGE, A. A.: Outlines of Theology. Philadelphia: Pres. Bd., 1878, $3.00.

HODGE, C.: New York: Scribner, 1872, 3 vols., 8vo, with index vol. (1873), set $12.00.

VAN OOSTERZEE: Eng. trans. New York: Scribner, 1874, 2 vols., $5.00.

SHEDD, W. G. T.: New York: Scribner, 1889, 2 vols., 8vo, $7.00.

SMITH, H. B.: New York: Armstrong, 1884; 4th ed., 1890, 8vo, $2.00.

STEARNS, L. F.: New York: Scribner, 1893, pp. xxiv, 568, 8vo, $2.50.

STRONG, A. H.: New York: Armstrong, 1889; 3d ed., 1892, 8vo, $5.00.

ANGLICAN.

BROWNE, E. H.: An Exposition of the XXXIX Articles. Ed. Bp. Williams. New York: Dutton, 1870, 8vo, $4.00.

BUEL, S.: Systematic Theology. New York: Whittaker, 1890, 2 vols., 8vo, $6.00.

BULL, G.: Eng. trans. A Defence of the Nicene Creed. Oxford: Parker, 1851-55, 2 vols., 8vo, 10s.

HOOKER, R.: Ecclesiastical Polity. Ed. J. Keble. Oxford, 1836, 4 vols., 8vo; 3d ed., 1845, 3 vols., 8vo, 31s. 6d.

PEARSON, J.: An Exposition of the Creed. In Bohn's Library. London: Bell. New York: Macmillan, $1.50.

ARMINIAN AND METHODIST.

MILEY, J.: New York: Methodist Book Concern, 1892 sqq., 8vo, Vol. I., $3.00.

POPE, W. B.: London: Wesleyan Conference Office, 1875-76, 3 vols., 8vo; rev. ed., 1879-81, ea. 10s. 6d.

RAYMOND, M.: Cincinnati: Meth. Bk. Concern, 1877-79, 3 vols., 8vo, ea. $3.00.

WATSON, R.: New York: Meth. Bk. Concern, 2 vols., 8vo, $3.50.

WESLEY, J.: Sermons. New York: Meth. Bk. Concern, 2 vols., 8vo, $4.50.

UNITARIAN.

CHANNING, W. E.: Works. Boston: American Unitarian Association, 1875, 1 vol., 8vo, $1.00.

CLARKE, J. F.: Steps of Belief. Boston: Am. Unit. Assoc., 1870; 5th ed., 1874, 16mo, $1.00.

MARTINEAU, J.: A Study of Religion: its Sources and Contents. London and New York: Macmillan, 1888, 2 vols., 12mo, $4.50.

EVANGELICAL UNION.

DORNER, ISAAC A.: Eng. trans. by A. Cave and J. S. Banks. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1880-82, 4 vols., 8vo, 42s., $12.00.

MÜLLER, J.: The Christian Doctrine of Sin. Eng. trans. by W. Urwick. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1868, 2 vols., 21s., $6.00.

RITSCHLIANISM.

RITSCHL, A.: Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung. 2d ed. Bonn: Marcus, 1884, 3 vols., 8vo, 26 marks. Eng. trans. The Christian Doctrine of Justification and Reconciliation. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1872, 8vo, 12s.

SYMBOLIC, POLEMIC, AND IRENIC.

COLLECTED CREEDS.

SCHAFF, P.: The Creeds of Christendom. New York: Harper, 1877, 3 vols., 8vo; 5th ed., 1890, $15.00.

SYMBOLICAL LITERATURE.

HASE, K.: Handbuch der protestantischen Polemik gegen die römisch-katholische Kirche. Leipzig: Breitkopf, 1862; 5th ed., 1890, 8vo, 10 marks.
A model of courteous but incisive polemic.

KATTENBUSCH, F.: Lehrbuch der vergleichenden Confessionskunde. Freiburg im Br.: Mohr, Vol. I., 1892, 8vo, 12 marks.

MÖHLER, J. A.: Eng. trans. Symbolism. London: Dolman, 1847, 2 vols., 8vo, 14s.

The standard on the Roman Catholic side.

WINER, G. B.: Eng. trans. by W. B. Pope. A Comparative View of the Doctrines and Confessions of the Various Communities of Christendom. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1873, 8vo, 10s. 6d., $3.00.

ETHIC.

BOWNE, B. P.: The Principles of Ethics. New York: Harper, 1892, pp. xv, 309, 8vo, $1.75.

CALDERWOOD, H.: Handbook of Moral Philosophy. London: Macmillan, 1872; 14th ed., 1888, p. 8vo, 6s.

DORNER, ISAAC A.: Eng. trans. System of Christian Ethics. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1887, 8vo, 14s.

- JANET, P.: Eng. trans. The Theory of Morals. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1884, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- MARTENSEN, H.: Eng. trans. Christian Ethics. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1873-82, 3 vols., 8vo, ea. 10s. 6d.
- MARTINEAU, J.: Types of Ethical Theory. London and New York: Macmillan, 1885; 3d ed., 1890, 8vo, 10s., $2.60.
- SIDGWICK, H.: The Methods of Ethics. London and New York: Macmillan, 1874; 4th ed., 1890, cr. 8vo, 14s., $3.50.
- SMYTH, NEWMAN: Christian Ethics. New York: Scribner, 1892, pp. ix, 498, 8vo, $2.50.
- WHEWELL, WM.: The Elements of Morality, including Polity. London: Parker, 1845; 4th ed., London: Bell, 1864, 8vo, 15s.
- WUTTKE, A.: Christian Ethics. Boston: Lee & Shepard, 1873, 2 vols., 12mo, $3.50.

SOCIOLOGY.

- BEHREND, A. J. F.: Socialism and Christianity. New York: Baker & Taylor, 1886, 12mo, $1.00.
- Co-operation in Christian Work*. New York: Baker & Taylor, 1888, 16mo, 60 cts.
- GLADDEN, W.: Working People and their Employers. (Boston, 1876.) 2d ed. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1885, 12mo, $1.00.
- Same: Applied Christianity: Moral Aspects of Social Questions. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1886, 16mo, $1.25.
- Same: Parish Problems: Hints and Helps for the People of the Churches. New York: Century Co., 1887, 8vo, $2.00.
- Same: Tools and the Man: Property and Industry under the Christian Law. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1893, pp. vii, 308, 12mo, $1.25.
- LOOMIS, S. L.: Modern Cities and their Religious Problems. New York: Baker & Taylor, 1887, 12mo, $1.00.
- MAGEE, W. C.: The Gospel and the Age: Sermons on Special Occasions. London: Isbister, 1884; 2d ed., 1888, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
- MULFORD, E.: The Nation. New York: Hurd & Houghton, 1872; 9th ed., 1884, 8vo, $2.50.
- PIERSON, A. T.: Evangelistic Work in Principle and Practice. New York: Baker & Taylor, 1887, 16mo, $1.25.
- SPENCER, H.: Descriptive Sociology. London: Williams & Norgate. New York: Appleton, 1873 sqq., 8 parts, 155s., $35.00.
- Same: Principles of Sociology. Same. 1877-82, 2 vols., 12mo, 21s., $4.00.
- STRONG, J.: The New Era; or The Coming Kingdom. New York: Baker & Taylor Co., 1893, pp. xviii, 374, 12mo, 75 cts.
- STUBBS, C. W.: Christ and Economics in the Light of the Sermon on the Mount. London: Isbister, 1893, pp. 290, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- STUCKENBERG, J. H. W.: Christian Sociology. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1880, 12mo, $1.50.
- THOMPSON, R. E.: The Divine Order of Human Society. Philadelphia: J. D. Wattles, 1891, 12mo, pp. vi, 274, $1.00.

BOOK V.—PRACTICAL THEOLOGY.

ECCLESIOLOGY.

BRUCE, A. B.: The Kingdom of God; or, Christ's Teachings according to the Synoptical Gospels. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark; New York: Scribner, 1889, 8vo, 7s. 6d., $2.00.

M'ELHINNEY, J. J.: The Doctrine of the Church: an Historical Monograph; with a Full Bibliography of the Subject. Philadelphia: Claxton, 1871, 8vo, $3.00.

A scholarly book.

MORRIS, E. D.: Ecclesiology: a Treatise on the Church and Kingdom of God on Earth. New York: Scribner, 1885, 12mo, $1.75.

CHURCH LAW.

Collections.

BLUNT, J. H.: The Book of Church Law. London: Rivington, 1872; n. e. by Sir W. G. F. Phillimore, 1888, 8vo, 7s.

BRIGHT, W.: The Canons of the First Four General Councils of Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon: With Notes. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1882; 2d ed., 1892, pp. 292, cr. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

Corpus Juris Canonici, post A. L. RICHTER, rec. ÆM. FRIEDBERG. Leipzig: Tauchnitz, 1882, 2 vols., 4to, 60 marks.

FULTON, J.: Index Canonum. New York: Pott, 1872; 3d ed.—Whittaker (pub.), 1892, pp. 478, p. 8vo, $2.00.

PHILLIMORE, ROBERT: The Principal Ecclesiastical Judgments delivered in the Court of Arches, 1867 to 1875. London: Rivington, 1876, 8vo, 12s. Same: Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England. London: Sweet, 1873-76, 2 vols., 8vo, 30s.

CHURCH LAW.

Treatises.

ALEXANDER, W. A.: Presbyterian Digest. Richmond, Va.: Presbyterian Board, 1887, 8vo, $4 00.

The Digest for the Southern Presbyterian Church.

ANDREWS, J. W.: Church Law: Suggestions on the Law of the P. E. Church in the United States. New York: Whittaker, 1883, 12mo, $1.25.

FRIEDBERG, E.: Lehrbuch des katholischen und evangelischen Kirchenrechts. Leipzig: B. Tauchnitz, 1879; 3d ed., 1889, 8vo, 12 marks.

HINSCHIUS, P.: Das Kirchenrecht der Katholiken und Protestanten in Deutschland. Berlin: Guttentag, 1869-88, 4 vols., 8vo, 92 marks.

HODGE, C.: Discussions in Church Polity. New York: Scribner's Sons, 1873, 8vo, $3.50.

Posthumous, ed. by W. Durant.

- HOFFMAN, MURRAY : The Ritual Law of the Church, with its Application to Communion and Baptismal Offices. New York : Pott, 1872, 8vo, $4.00.
- MOORE, W. E. : Presbyterian Digest. Philadelphia : Pres. Bd., 1873 ; n. e., 1886, 8vo, $2.00.
The Digest for the Northern Presbyterian Church.
- RICHTER, A. L. : Lehrbuch des katholischen und evangelischen Kirchenrechts. Leipzig : B. Tauchnitz, 1842 ; 8th ed., 1886, 8vo, 16.20 marks.
- SCHULTE, J. F. V. (R. C.) : Die Geschichte der Quellen und Literatur des canonischen Rechts, von Gratian bis auf die Gegenwart. Stuttgart : Enke, 1877, 3 vols., 8vo, 66.20 marks.
- Same : Lehrbuch des katholischen und evangelischen Kirchenrechts. Gies- sen : Roth, 4th ed., 1886, 8vo, 12 marks.
- STRONG, W. : Two Lectures upon the Relation of Civil Law to Church Polity, Discipline, and Property. New York : Dodd, Mead & Co., 1875, 12mo, $1.00.
- VERING, F. H. (R. C.) : Lehrbuch des katholischen, orientalischen und protestantischen Kirchenrechtes, mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Deutschland, Oesterreich und die Schweiz. Freiburg im Br. : Herder, 1875 ; 3d ed., 1893, pp. xvi, 1032, 8vo, 14 marks.

CHURCH POLITY.

- DAVIDSON, S. : The Ecclesiastical Polity of the N. T. unfolded, and its Points of Coincidence or Disagreement with Prevailing Systems indicated. London : Jackson & W., 1848 ; 2d ed.—Bohn, 1854, 8vo, 5s.
- DEXTER, H. M. : The Congregationalism of the Last 300 Years, as seen in its Literature. New York : Harpers, 1880, 8vo, $6.00.
With a remarkable bibliography ; the greatest work of the great Congregational historian of America.
- Same : A Handbook of Congregationalism. Boston : Cong. Pub. Soc., 1880, 16mo, $1.00.
- HATCH, E. : The Organization of the Early Christian Churches. London : Rivington, 1881 ; 2d ed., 1888, 8vo, 5s.
Ablly advocates the Greek origin of the early Christian polity ; an important book.
- Same : The Growth of Church Institutions. London : Hodder ; New York : Whittaker, 1887, p. 8vo, 5s., $1.50.
- Same : The Influence of Greek Ideas and Usages upon the Christian Church. London : Williams & Norgate, 8vo, 1890 ; 2d ed., 1891, 10s. 6d., $3.75.
- INNES, A. TAYLOR : The Law of Creeds in Scotland. Edinburgh and London : Blackwood, 1867, 8vo, 15s.
- JACOB, G. A. : The Ecclesiastical Polity of the N. T. London : Daldy, Is- bister, 1872 ; 2d ed., 1878, 12mo, 10s. 6d.
Remarkably candid, considering its source in the Church of England ; advocates very liberal opinions.
- LADD, G. T. : The Principles of Church Polity, illustrated by an Analysis of Modern Congregationalism, and applied to certain Important Practical Questions in the Government of Christian Churches. New York : Scrib- ner, 1882, 8vo, $2.50.
- MCGILL, A. T. : Church Government : a Treatise compiled from his Lec-

- tures in Theological Seminaries.* Philadelphia: Presb. Bd. Pub., 1889, 12mo, $1.50.
- PERRY, W. S.: The General Ecclesiastical Constitution of the American Church. New York: Whittaker, 1891, 12mo, $1.50.
- REYNOLDS, H. R.: (ed.) Ecclesia: Church Problems considered in a Series of Essays [by Congregationalists]. London: Hodder, 1870-71, 2 series, 8vo, 7s. 6d., and 8s. 6d.
- ROSS, A. H.: The Church Kingdom: Lectures on Congregationalism. Boston and Chicago: Cong. S. S. and Pub. Soc., 1888, 8vo, $2.50.
- STANLEY, A. P.: Christian Institutions: Essays on Ecclesiastical Subjects. London: Murray. New York: Scribner, 1881; 3d ed., 1892, cr. 8vo, 6s. (75 cts.).
- Brilliant essays on Baptism, the Eucharist, Absolution, Vestments, the Pope, Roman Catacombs, etc.

CHURCH AND STATE.

- INNES, A. TAYLOR: Church and State: an Historical Handbook. Edinburgh.
- SCHAFF, P.: Church and State in the United States. New York: Putnam, 1888, 8vo, $1.00.

HISTORY OF THE PULPIT.

- BLAIKIE, W. G.: The Preachers of Scotland, from the Sixth to the Nineteenth Centuries. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark. New York: Scribner, 1889, 8vo, 7s. 6d., $3.00.
- BROADUS, J. A.: Lectures on the History of Preaching. New York: Sheldon, 1876, 12mo, $1.50.
- Classic Preachers, The, of the English Church.* London: Murray, 1877-78, 2 series, p. 8vo, ea. 7s. 6d.
- With an introduction by John Edward Kempe.
- SPRAGUE, W. B.: Annals of the American Pulpit. New York: Carter, 1856-69, 10 vols., 8vo, ea. $4.00.
- Vols. I, II, Trinitarian Congregational; Vols. III, IV., Presbyterian; Vol. V., Episcopalian; Vol. VI., Baptist; Vol. VII., Methodist; Vol. VIII., Unitarian; Vol. IX., Lutheran, Reformed Dutch; Vol. X., American Associate, Associate Reformed, Reformed Presbyterian.
- TAYLOR, W. M.: The Scottish Pulpit, from the Reformation to the Present Day. New York: Harper, 1887, 12mo, $1.50.
- The Yale Lectures for 1886.

HOMILETIC.

- BAUTAIN, L. E. M.: The Art of Extempore Speaking. London: Lockwood, 1858; 6th ed., 1878. New York (ed. by a member of the New York bar): Scribner, 1874, 12mo, 3s. 6d., $1.50.
- The classic on the subject. From the French.
- BEECHER, H. W.: Yale Lectures on Preaching. 3 vols. in one. New York: Fords, 1881, $2.00.
- Vol. I. The personal elements which bear an important relation to preaching.
- Vol. II. The social and religious machinery of the Church.
- Vol. III. Methods of using Christian doctrines.
- Characteristic and helpful.
- BEHRENS, A. J. F.: See Yale Lectures, 1890.
- BROADUS, J. A.: The Preparation and Delivery of Sermons. Philadelphia: Smith, English & Co., 1870; 5th ed., 1876, 12mo, $2.00.

- BROOKS, P.: See Yale Lectures, 1877.
- BURGESS, H.: The Art of Preaching and the Composition of Sermons. Edinburgh: 1881, 8vo, 12s.
- DALE, R. W.: See Yale Lectures.
- FISK, F. W.: Manual of Preaching. New York: Armstrong, 1884, 12mo, $1.50.
- HERVEY, G. W.: A System of Christian Rhetoric. New York: Harper, 1873, 8vo, $3.50.
- HOOD, E. PAXTON: Lamps, Pitchers, and Trumpets. London: Jackson, 1867, 8vo, 10s. 6d. New York: Dodd, 1869, $1.75.
Interesting lectures upon the famous preachers, with racy extracts and anecdotes.
- HOPPIN, J. M.: Homiletics. New York: Dodd, 1882, 8vo, $3.50.
Contains a history of preaching. Rather discursive, but good.
- HORTON, R. F.: See Yale Lectures, 1893.
- KIDDER, D. P.: A Treatise on Homiletics. New York: Methodist Book Concern, 1864, 12mo, $1.75.
- MAHAFFY, J. P.: The Decay of Modern Preaching. London and New York: Macmillan, 1882, 8vo, 90 cts.
- PARKER, J.: Ad clerum—Advices to a Young Preacher. London: Hodder, 1870, 8vo, 5s.
Pertinent advice from a born preacher.
- PHELPS, A.: The Theory of Preaching: Lectures on Homiletics. New York: Scribner, 1881, 8vo, $2.50.
- PIERSON, A. T.: The Divine Art of Preaching. New York: Baker & Taylor Co., 1892, 16mo, pp. xiii, 156, 75c.
- SHEDD, W. G. T.: Homiletics and Pastoral Theology. New York: Scribner, 1867; 8th ed., 1884, 8vo, $2.50.
Characterized by cool judgment and elevation of style and thought.
- SPURGEON, C. H.: Lectures to my Students. London: Passmore; New York: Sheldon, 1875-77, 2 series in 1 vol., 8vo, 2s. 6d., $1.25.
Same: Commenting and Commentaries. London: Passmore; New York: Sheldon, 1876, 12mo, 2s. 6d., $1.25.
- STALKER, J.: See Yale Lectures, 1891.
- STORRS, R. S.: Conditions of Success in Preaching Without Notes. New York: Dodd, 1875, 12mo, $1.25.
The author's success is not to be expected, but the hints are valuable.
- TAYLOR, W. M.: See Yale Lectures, 1876 and 1886.
- VINET, A.: Eng. trans. Homiletics. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1853.
Translated by T. H. Skinner. New York: Ivison, 1853, 12mo, $1.75.
Probably the best treatise.
- Yale Lectures on the Lyman Beecher Foundation, Delivered at Yale College, New Haven, Conn.:*
- 1872-4. Henry Ward Beecher: Yale Lectures on Preaching. New York: Fords, 1872-4, 3 vols.; n. e., 3 vols. in 1 vol., 1881, $2.00.
1875. John Hall: God's Word through Preaching. New York: Dodd, 1875, 12mo, $1.50.
1876. William M. Taylor: The Ministry of the Word. New York: Randolph, 1876, 12mo, $1.50.
1877. Phillips Brooks: Lectures on Preaching. New York: Dutton, 1877, 12mo, $1.50.
1878. Robert W. Dale: Nine Lectures on Preaching. London: Hodder, 1877, 6th ed., 1886, p. 8vo, 6s.

1879. Matthew Simpson : Lectures on Preaching. New York : Nelson & Phillips, 1879, 12mo, $1.50.
 1880. Howard Crosby : The Christian Preacher. New York : Randolph, 1880, 12mo, $1.50.
 1881. Joseph T. Duryea. (Appointed.)
 1882. E. G. Robinson : Lectures on Preaching. New York : Holt, 1883, 12mo, $1.25.
 1883. Nathaniel J. Burton (in posthumous vol. Yale Lectures on Preaching and other Writings. New York : C. L. Webster, 1888).
 1885. Henry M. Storrs : The American Preacher at the End of the Nineteenth and the Beginning of the Twentieth Century. (Unpublished.)
 1886. William M. Taylor : The Scottish Pulpit, from the Reformation to the Present Day. New York : Harper, 1887, 12mo, $1.50.
 1887. Washington Gladden. (Published in altered form under title, Tools and the Man. Boston : Houghton, 1893, 16mo, $1.25.)
 1888. H. Clay Trumbull : The Sunday-School, its Origin, Mission, Methods and Auxiliaries. Philadelphia : Wattles, 1888, 8vo, $1.50.
 1889. John A. Broadus. (Unpublished.)
 1890. A. J. F. Behrends : Philosophy of Preaching. New York : Scribner, 1890, 12mo, $1.00.
 1891. James Stalker : The Preacher and his Models. New York : Armstrong, 1891, 12mo, $1.50.
 1892. A. M. Fairbairn. (Unpublished.)
 1893. Robert F. Horton : Verbum Dei. New York : Macmillan, 1893, 12mo, $1.50.

CATECHETIC.

- ALLEN, A. H. : The Church Catechism : its History and Contents. London and New York : Longmans, 1892. Pp. 220, p. 8vo, 3s. 6d., $1.50.
 DENISON, J. E. : Catechizing on the Catechism of the Church of England. London : Sonnenschein, 1889, 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 GOULBURN, E. M. : A Manual of Confirmation. London : Rivington, 1855, 11th ed., 1884, 8vo, 1s. 6d.
 JONES, MISS C. A. : Stories on the Church Catechism. London : Masters, 1879-81, 4 vols.; 2d ed., 1887, 16mo, 10s.
 MACLEAR, G. F. : Class-book of the Catechism of the Church of England. London : Macmillan, 1868 ; 6th ed., 1878, 18mo, 1s. 6d.
 Same : Manual of Instruction for Confirmation and First Communion. Same, 1869, many later edd., 32mo, 2s.
 SHERWOOD, MRS. MARY MARTHA : Stories Explanatory of the Church Catechism. London : Houlston ; New York : Whittaker, 1852, 8vo, 3s. 6d., $1.25.
 STEEL, R. : The Shorter Catechism, with Proofs, Analysis and Illustrative Anecdotes. London : Nelson, 1884, cr. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 WHYTE, A. : The Shorter Catechism. Edinburgh : T. & T. Clark, 1883, cr. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 WORDSWORTH, CHARLES : Catechisis, or Christian Instruction Preparatory to Confirmation and Communion. London : Rivington, 1868 ; 2d ed. 1880, cr. 8vo, 2s.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK.

- GREGORY A. : Robert Ruikes : a History of the Origin of Sunday Schools. London : Hodder & Stoughton, 1877 ; 2d ed., 1880, 8vo, 1s. 6d.
 TRUMBULL, H. C. : Teaching and Teachers ; or the Sunday-School Teacher's Teaching Work, and the other Work of the Sunday-School Teacher. Philadelphia : Wattles, 1885, 12mo, $1.50.
 Same : The Sunday School : its Origin, Mission, Methods, and Auxiliaries. Phila. : Wattles, 1888, 8vo, $1.50.
 VINCENT, J. H. : The Modern Sunday-School. New York : Phillips & Hunt, 1887, 12mo, $1.00.

WATSON, W. H.: First Fifty Years of the Sunday School. London: Sunday School Union, 1872, 8vo, 1s. 4d.

WORDEN, J. A.: The Bible Teacher's Guide; or Methods of Work in the Sabbath School. Philadelphia: Pres. Bd. Pub., 1892, 12mo, 25 cts.

PASTORAL THEOLOGY.

BECK, J. T.: Eng. trans. Pastoral Theology of the New Testament. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, New York: Scribner, 1885, p. 8vo, 6s., $2.25.

BLAIKIE, W. G.: For the Work of the Ministry. London: Nisbet, 1873; 2d ed., 1875, 8vo, 5s.

A good book.

CUYLER, T. L.: How to be a Pastor. New York: Baker & Taylor Co., 1890, 16mo, 75 cts.

FAIRBAIRN, P.: Pastoral Theology. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1875, 8vo, 6s. (New York: Scribner, $2.50.)

One of the best treatises.

HARMS, CLAUS: Pastoraltheologie. In Reden an Theologiestudirende. 5th ed. Gotha: F. A. Perthes, 1892, 2 parts, 4,80 marks.

In "Bibliothek theologischer Klassiker." Under the three divisions the preacher, the priest, and the pastor.

HOPPIN, J. M.: Pastoral Theology. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1884, 8vo, $2.50.

LITTLEJOHN, A. N.: The Christian Ministry at the Close of the Nineteenth Century. New York: Whittaker, 1894, 8vo, $2.50.

M'ALL, S.: The Pastoral Care; or practical Hints on the Constitution, Discipline and Services of Congregational or Independent Churches, and the various Branches of Ministerial Duty in Reference to the same. 2d ed. London: Hodder, 1875, 12mo, 2s. 6d.

Helpful to those outside of English Independency.

VINET, A.: Pastoral Theology, the Theory of a Gospel Ministry, Tr. by T. H. Skinner. New York: Ivison, 1853, 12mo, $1.50.

WELLS, J. D.: The Pastor in the Sick-room. Philadelphia: Pres. Bd., 1893, pp. iv, 128, 16mo, 50 cts.

WILCOX, G. B.: The Pastor amidst His Flock. New York: Am. Tract Soc., 1890, 12mo, $1.00.

LITURGIC.

HAMMOND, C. E.: Ancient Liturgies, Eastern and Western. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1878, cr. 8vo, 10s. 6d. Appendix, 1878, 1s. 6d.

LITTLEDALE, R. F.: Offices from the Service Books of the Eastern Church. London: Williams, 1863; 2d ed., 1867, 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEALE, J. M.: Liturgies of Sts. Mark, James, Clement, Chrysostom, and Church of Malabar. London: Hayes, 1859; 2d ed., 1868, 12mo, 6s.

Same: Essays on Liturgiology and Church History. London: Saunders, 1863, 2d ed., 1867, 8vo, 18s.

Roman Breviary. Trans. by John Marquess of Bute. London: Blackwoods, 1879, 2 vols., p. 8vo, 42s.

SWAINSON, C. A.: The Greek Liturgies. Cambridge University Press, 1884, 4to, 15s.

PRAYER BOOK.

BLUNT, J. H.: Annotated Book of Common Prayer. London: Rivington, 1866, 7th ed., 1883, 4to, 10s. 6d.

- DANIEL, E.: The Prayer-Book: its History, Language, and Contents. London: Wells Gardner, 1877, 16th ed., 1892; cr. 8vo, 6s.
- HUMPHRY, W. G.: Historical and Explanatory Treatise on the Book of Common Prayer. London: Parker & Son, 1853; 7th ed., London & New York: Macmillan, 1892, 16mo, 2s. 6d., 75 cts.
- HUNTINGTON, W. R.: Short History of "The Book of Common Prayer." New York: Whittaker, 1883, pp. iii, 234, 12mo, $1.00.
- PROCTER, F.: History of the Book of Common Prayer. London: Macmillan, 1855; 18th ed., 1889, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

HYMNOLOGY.

- DUFFIELD, S. W.: English Hymns: their Authors and History. New York and London: Funk & Wagnalls, 1886, 8vo, $3.00 net.
- Same: The Latin Hymn Writers and their Hymns. Same: 1889, 8vo, $3.00 net.
Posthumous, ed. by R. E. Thompson.
- HATFIELD, E. F.: The Poets of the Church. New York: Randolph, 1884, 8vo, $1.50.
- JULIAN, J.: Dictionary of Hymnology. London: Murray; New York: Scribner, 1892, 8vo, 42s., $10.00.
At least 10 years in preparation; aims at the same standard character as Murray's other dictionaries.
- MILLER, JOSIAH: Singers and Songs of the Church. London: Longmans, 1866; 2d ed., 1869, p. 8vo, 10s. 6d.
- NUTTER, C. S.: Historic Hymnists. A Portrait Gallery of Great Hymn Writers. Boston: the Author, 1893, pp. 208, 4to, $2.50.
- PARKER, W. H.: The Psalmody of the Church: its Authors, Singers and Uses. New York and Chicago: F. H. Revell & Co., 1892, 4to, $1.50.
- SCHAFF, P.: Christ in Song. New York: Randolph, 1868, sm. 4to, $2.50.
- SELBORNE, EARL: Hymns: their History and Development in the Greek and Latin Churches, Germany and Great Britain. London: Black, 1893, pp. 210, 12mo, 3s. 6d.

MISSIONS.

I. Encyclopædias.

- BLISS, E. M.: Encyclopædia of Missions. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1891, 2 vols., 8vo, $12.00.
Contains maps and a missionary bibliography (Vol. I., 575-661).
- Report of the Centenary Conference on the Protestant Missions of the World, held in Exeter Hall (June 9th-19th), London, 1888*. Ed. by Rev. JAMES JOHNSTON, F.S.S., Secretary of the Conference. London: Nisbet, 1888, 2 vols., 8vo, 7s. 6d.
Is a thesaurus of information.

II. Maps.

- Church Missionary Society Atlas*. London: Ch. Mission House, 7th ed., 1887, 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- GRUNDEMANN, R.: Missionsatlas. Gotha: Perthes, 1867-71, 4to, 30 marks. Kleiner Missionsatlas. Calw u. Stuttgart: Vereinsbuchhandlung, 1883; 2d ed., 1885, 2 marks.

WERNER, O.: Katholischer Missionsatlas. Freiburg im Br.: Herder, 1885; 2d ed., 1885, 4to, 4 marks.

III. General Histories.

- HODDER, E.: Conquests of the Cross. London: Cassell, 1890-91, 3 vols., 8vo, 27s.
- LOWE, J.: Medical Missions: their Place and Power. London: Unwin, 1886; 3d ed., 1891, 2s. 6d. New York: Revell, pp. 292, 12mo, $1.50.
- ROBSON, J.: Outlines of Protestant Missions. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1885, 16mo, 6d.
- SMITH, G.: Short History of Christian Missions. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1884; 2d ed., 1886, 8vo, 2s. 6d.
- SMITH, T.: Mediæval Missions. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark, 1880, 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- STEVENSON, W. F.: The Dawn of the Modern Mission. Edinburgh: Macniven; New York: Armstrong, 1888, 12mo, 2s. 6d., 90 cts.
- TODD, E. S.: Christian Missions in the 19th Century. New York: Hunt & Eaton, 1890, 12mo, 75 cts.
- WARNECK, G.: Eng. trans. Outline of the History of Protestant Missions. Edinburgh: J. Gemmell, 1884, 8vo, 3s. 6d.
- YOUNG, R.: Modern Missions: their Trials and their Triumphs. London and New York: Cassell, 1881; 3d ed., 1886, 12mo, 5s., $2.00.
- Same: Light in Lands of Darkness. Same: 1883; 3d ed., 1884, 12mo, 6s., $2.00.

IV. Special Histories.

- Missions of the American Board. By RUFUS ANDERSON. Boston: Cong. Pub. Soc., 1870-74, 5 vols., 12mo, ea. $1.50.
- of the (Northern) Baptist Church. By S. F. SMITH. Boston: Am. Bap. Union, 1879; n. e., 1883.
- of the (Southern) Baptist Convention. By H. A. TUPPER. Philadelphia: Am. Bap. Pub. Soc., 1880, 8vo, $3.50; continued to 1890. Richmond, Va.: For. Mis. Bd., 1891.
- , Baptist, in Foreign Lands, from Carey to the Present Date. By G. W. HERVEY. St. Louis: Barns, 1884, 8vo, $3.00.
- of the Church Missionary Society (Church of England). By EMILY HEADLAND. London: Nisbet, 1892, p. 8vo. 3s. 6d.
- of the Methodist Episcopal Church. By J. M. REID. New York: Phillips & Hunt, 1879, 2 vols., 12mo, $3.00.
- First Decade of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society M. E. Church. By M. D. WHEELER. New York: Phillips & Hunt, 1881, 12mo, $1.50.
- of the M. E. Church (South). By WILSON. Nashville Pub. Soc., 1884, 8vo.
- of the Moravians. By A. C. THOMPSON. New York: Scribner, 1882, 12mo, $2.00.
- of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. By J. C. LOWRIE. New York: Pres. Bd., 1854; 2d ed., 1868.
- of the Protestant Episcopal Church, U. S. A. By S. D. DENISON. Part I. New York: Bd. of Missions, 1871.

- Missions of the Reformed (Dutch) Church in America. By Mrs. M. E. SANGSTER. New York: Ref. Ch. Bd. Pub., 1887, 8vo.
 ——— of Free Church of Scotland. By GEO. SMITH. Edinburgh, 1879.

V. Collected Biographical Sketches.

- ARNOLD-FORSTER, Mrs. F. E.: Heralds of the Cross; or, the Fulfilling of the Command. London: Hatchards, 1882; 2d ed., 1885, p. 8vo, 5s.
 JAPP, A. H.: Master Missionaries. London: Unwin. New York: Carter, 1880; 3d ed., 1883, 8vo, 3s. 6d., $1.50.
 MURRAY, A. W.: Eminent Workers for Christ. London: Nisbet, 1887, cr. 8vo, 5s.
 PITMAN, Mrs. E. R.: Heroines of the Mission Field. London: Cassell, 1880, 8vo, 5s.
 WALSH, W. P.: Heroes of the Mission Field. London: Hodder. New York: Whittaker, 1879; 3d ed., 1892, pp. 246, p. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 Same: Modern Heroes of the Mission Field. Same: 1882; 3d ed., 1892, pp. 350, p. 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 YONGE, C. M.: Pioneers and Founders; or, Recent Workers in the Mission-field. London: Macmillan, 1871; 2d ed., 1878, 8vo, 6s.

VI. Individual Biographies.

- BURNS, W. C. (China). By Islay Burns. London: Nisbet, 1860; 4th ed., 1870, 8vo, 6s
 BRAINERD, DAVID (North American Indians). By Jonathan Edwards. (Ed. J. M. Sherwood.) New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1884, 12mo, $1.50.
 CAREY, WM. (India). By Geo. Smith. London: Murray, 1885; 2d ed., 1887, 8vo, 7s. 6d.
 DUFF, ALEX. (India). By Geo. Smith. London: Hodder, 1879; 2d ed., 1881, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
 ELLIS, WILLIAM (Madagascar). By John Eimeo Ellis. London: Murray, 1873, 8vo, 10s. 6d.
 GOODELL, WILLIAM (Turkey). By E. D. G. Prime. New York: Carter, 1876; n. e., 1883, 12mo, $1.50.
 HANNINGTON, JAMES (Central Africa). By E. C. Dawson. London: Seeley, 1886; 2d ed., 1888, 2s. 6d.
 Same: Last Journals: Through Palestine in 1834, and Masai Land in 1885. Same, 1888, 3s. 6d.
 JUDSON, ADONIRAM (Burmah). By Edward Judson. New York: Randolph, 1883, 8vo, $2.00.
 KEITH-FALCONER, ION (Arabia). By R. Sinker. London: Bell & Son, 1888, 8vo, 4s.
 LIVINGSTONE, DAVID (Africa). By W. G. Blaikie. London: Murray. New York: Harper, 1881; 3d ed., 1882, 8vo, 15s., $3.50.
 Same: By Robert Smiles. London and New York: Cassell, 1885, 8vo, 1s., 50 cts.
 MARTYN, HENRY (Persia). By Geo. Smith. London: Murray. New York: Revell, 1892, pp. vii, 580, 8vo, 10s. 6d., $3.00.
 MOFFAT, ROBERT and MARY (Africa). By J. S. Moffat. London: Unwin, 1885; 3d ed., 1888, p. 8vo., 3s. 6d.

- NEESIMA, JOSEPH HARDY (Japan). By A. S. Hardy. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1891, pp. vii, 350, 12mo, $2.00.
- PATTESON, JOHN COLERIDGE (South Seas). By C. M. Yonge. London and New York: Macmillan, 1873, 2 vols., 8vo, 30s., $5.00.
- PATON, JOHN G. (South Seas). Autobiography. New York: Carter, 1889-90, 2 parts, 8vo, $3.00.
- SCHAUFFLER, WILLIAM GOTTLIEB (Turkey). Autobiography. New York: Randolph, 1888, 12mo, $1.25.
- WILLIAMS, JOHN (Polynesia). By John Campbell. London: Snow, 1842, n. e., 1866, 12mo, 2s.
- WILLIAMS, SAMUEL WELLS (China). By his son, Frederick Wells Williams. New York: Putnam, 1888, 8vo, $3.00.
- WILSON, JOHN (India). By George Smith. London: Murray, 1878; 2d ed., 1879, 8vo, 9s.
- XAVIER, FRANCIS (R. C.). By H. J. Coleridge. London: Burns & Oates, 1872-73, 2 vols., 8vo, 21s. New ed., 1881, 8vo.
- ZEISBERGER, DAVID (North American Indians). By E. de Schweinitz. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1870, 8vo, $3.50.

VII. Miscellaneous.

- GORDON, A. J.: The Holy Spirit in Missions. New York: Revell, 1893, pp. 241, 12mo, $1.25.
- JOHNSTON, J.: A Century of Christian Progress and Its Lessons. London: Nisbet, 1888; 2d ed., 1889, 8vo, 1s.
- LAURIE, T.: The Ely Volume; or, the Contributions of our Foreign Missions to Science and Human Well-being. Boston: A. B. C. F. M., 1881; 2d ed., 1885, 8vo, $3.00.
- LIGGINS, J.: The Great Value and Success of Foreign Missions. Proved by Distinguished Witnesses. New York: Baker & Taylor Co., 1888, 12mo, 75 cents.
- PATTISON, S. R.: Gospel Ethnology. London: Religious Tract Soc., 1887, 2d ed. Same, New York: Revell, 1891, pp. 224, 12mo, 2s. 6d., $1.00.
- PIERSON, A. T.: The Crisis of Missions; or, the Voice out of the Cloud. New York: Carter, 1886 (now Baker & Taylor Co.), 16mo, $1.25.
- Same: The Divine Enterprise of Missions. New York: Baker & Taylor Co., 1891, pp. 333, 16mo, $1.25.
- Same: The Miracles of Missions. New York: Funk & Wagnalls' Co., 1891, pp. 193, 16mo, $1.00.
- THOMPSON, A. C.: Foreign Missions: their place in the Pastorate, in Prayer, and in Conferences. New York: Scribner, 1889, 12mo, $1.75.
- WARNECK, G.: Eng. trans. Modern Missions and Culture. Edinburgh: J. Gemmell, 1883, cr. 8vo, 4s. 6d.
- Same: Evangelische Missionslehre. Ein missionstheoretischer Versuch. Gotha: Perthes, 1892-3, 2 parts, 8vo, each 5 marks.

SALVATION ARMY.

- BOOTH, MRS. CATHERINE, "The Mother of the Salvation Army," wife of "General" Booth. Life, by Mrs. F. de L. Booth-Tucker (her daughter). London: Salvation Army, 1892, 2 vols., 8vo, 15s.

- BOOTH, MRS. W.: Popular Christianity. London: Salvation Army, 1890, 3d ed. same year, 1s.
- BOOTH, B.: New York's Inferno. New York, 1893.
- BOOTH, MRS. W.: Aggressive Christianity. London: Salvation Army, 1881; 5th ed., 1890, 12mo, 1s.
- BOOTH, W.: In Darkest England, and the Way Out. London: Salvation Army. New York: Funk & Wagnalls, 1890, 8vo, 3s. 6d., $1.50.